AIDS walk hits home for local crusader

Marleen Troutt

Steven St. Julian never thought he would be the man to whom many looked for help.

He left Carbondale more than two decades ago to pursue a law degree in San Francisco, where people accepted his lifestyle. But in the early '90s, his soft house of tolerance became the battle zone of aasting focus against AIDS. He found his place in the world as a hospice counselor and fellow nurse, not in the classroom.

AIDS reached its peak the day after he was diagnosed in 1991. While St. Julian knew friends and co-workers who walked into emaciation and wasted away before their eyes, he seemed invulnerable. "I shared a five-bedroom house with friends and when I left, it was me and my two dogs," St. Julian said.

While St. Julian is coming to grips with what his future may hold, he is determined to go on fighting for his friends. It is his motivation for writing a book, "Where's the Fat Lady?" and "The Consult" to bring the 20th century drama to the opera stage. (See related story, page 13.)

Since Monday, women have bared their emotions through masks, T-shirts and poetry. In celebration of Domestic Violence Awareness Week, which began on Oct. 15 and runs through Oct. 25, survivors of sexual assault and their supporters demonstrated the spirit of resilience.

On Friday, "Take Back the Night" march and rally will conclude the week-long series of supporting those affected by violence while also enhancing the public's consciousness. The march begins at 7 p.m. at the Interfaith Center on the corner of South Illinois and Grand Avenue and will end at the Town Square Pavilion.

"Take Back the Night" originated as an outgrowth of a street and healing type of event, but we broadened it to be about violence against women in general," said Camille Doets, coordinator of Take Back the Night.

At the pavilion, a rally will follow featuring guest speaker Polly Fosko, executive director of the Illinois Coalition Against Sexual Assault. In 1994, Polian received recognition for her exemplary service to victims of crime by former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno.

Victims and survivors of domestic abuse and sexual assault made their voices loud and clear during the night. A march and rally were held as part of a confidence training exercise. See related story, page 13.

 Interruption of the Enrollments

Silent University

University officials are devising plans to handle this year's estimated $15.2 million budget shortfall resulting from a sharp decline in enrollment.

Enrollment dropped 4.2 percent this year, leaving University officials scrambling to figure out where budget cuts will be made. Because the University's enrollment projections were not met, the University allocated $1.5 million more than it earned in tuition this year.

Chancellor Walter V. Wendler organized a budget model committee last month in response to the enrollment shortfall. The committee is investigating areas where budget cuts can be made by developing a model to use as a guideline. The committee will then apply the model to the five units that make up the University: Administration, Academic Affairs, Student Affairs, Institutional Advancement and Athletics.

When budget cuts had to be made in the past, the chancellor would typically trim allocations evenly in all of the units. But Wendler feels this is not always the fairest approach. Instead, the committee will develop a model that weight factors such as excellence in particular programs, contracts and grants, research and scholarship productivity and endowments.

"It's the enrollment that drives the budget and also should drive the allocations to the various units of the college, so we're looking at that very hard," Wendler said.

Interim Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Research Margaret Waters is chairing the committee and said that it is in the preliminary stages of exploring the possible allocation guidelines. Although she would not speculate what departments will be impacted by the cuts, she said the decisions likely will be based in part on performance.

After the committee creates a proposal, it will seek feedback from college deans regarding the suggestions. The chancellor will make the final decision of where the cuts must be made sometime before June 30, the end of the academic year.

In addition to handling the tuition shortfall, the committee will also develop a similar model that the chancellor can use each year when he allocates the University budget.

"I don't want to allocate funds based on feelings and intuition, I want to do it based on these models," Wendler said.

"I need a tool other than 'Well, last year this is what we did, this is what we're going to do this year'. That is just not a good tool for me to make very difficult resource allocations."

Wendler is also concentrating on the amount of money he allocates to fund different events. The chancellor receives dozens of requests for funding each year for things like bringing in guest lecturers and hosting banquets.

"It's just an extra measure of caution...as a number of era, not just the downturn of enrollment, the slowdown of the state's economy, the Sept. 11 issues and the impact they're going to have on the state's economy," Wendler said. "This is not a problem that's going to go away."

"Of course, I don't expect this is going to make a lot of friends out there, but this is what needs to be done."

Welcome with a whistle

GINNY SKALSKI DAILY EDITION

More than 175 people gathered to blow woodchip train whistles at the opening of the Mill Street Underpass Wednesday morning, but most of the noise was drowned out by passing trains.

Like dozens of minutes earlier by city and state officials, the ribbon to open the Mill Street Underpass was cut. The project that has taken nearly two years to complete now joins the east and west sides of Carbondale at the intersection of Illinois Avenue and Mill Street.

Carbondale Police Chief R.T. Finnerty said without the Underpass the police department would split up the police department in half and would have to send police out on foot. Traffic on the west side of Carbondale when a train passes through is just one of the benefits the Underpass brings.

"The Underpass will be an added convenience for motorists and foot traffic, allowing traffic to flow more smoothly and allowing traffic problems and allowing better access to the area," Finnerty said.

Former City Commissioner Larry Briggs voted in favor of building the Underpass and is pleased the new roadway will help people from using the train as an excuse for being late.

Briggs drive through the Underpass after several police officers had already used it as a shortcut after receiving emergency calls.

"It would allow the police department when trains came through, but now we'll have everything together," Finnerty said.

An hour after the ceremony, road blocks were removed and vehicles were allowed to use the underpass. The project that has taken nearly two years to complete now joins the east and west sides of Carbondale together at the intersection of Illinois and Mill Streets.

"It has to either be a book or a function," Petrakis said. "Before that I wrote for fun. Then there's "Days of Vengeance," the first novel I wrote. I didn't get paid for it. Now I can relate to life, and I can't stop now."

"Brass Band," the book that's to be published next year, is about his love for his bedroom paid off. Petrakis eventually found out that he loved to write as much as he loved to read, and did it just as well.

Said the nationally acclaimed writer of 16 books, "When I turned to the Greek, my work gained a certain authenticity," Petrakis said. "Before that I wrote of gangsters, prostitutes and cowboys, because that's what excited me, but I knew nothing of these things."

It's not comfortable being labeled as an eclectic writer, though. He writes about what he knows, and what he knows is Greek life in America. Then, he Shifts and writes about things he feels everyone can relate to.

"You start with what you are familiar with," Petrakis said. "Then you enter the universes of love, loneliness, death, joy — where you move into these areas there should be a certain universality to your work."

If you ask Harry Mark Petrakis what his favorite book is, he can't answer. To him, each book is like a child, each with a distinct personality. "A Dream of Kings," which was made into a movie starring Anthony Quinn and Irene Pappas, was the most fun for Petrakis. He still can't read a chapter of it without laughing. And "Brass Band," his first novel written at the University of Illinois, was the most rigorous.

"I figured, boy, I could just do it and they would probably give me a ticket, but "Days of Vengeance," I was not caught," Petrakis said. "Construction for the $11.5 million project began in June 1999. Several construction problems and bad weather delayed the project from being completed on time."

John Trybus as Mr. Kofner and Richard Gammon rehearse Wednesday night for "The Consul," an opera that will be showing Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Christian Moe Laboratory Theater in the Communications Building.

"The Consul" isn't really an opera snob's cup of hot tea. There are no ancient heroes. No 15-minute arias or elaborate death scenes. It's even being performed in English, for Verdi's sake.

Rather, Gian Carlo Menotti's masterpiece relies on a modern setting, empathetic characters and a personal plot to win audiences' affection.

"The story comes before the symphony. It's such a heart wrenching story," Arnett said. "The story is so intimate that the audience has to be right there."

The opera, which won the Pulitzer Prize for music in 1950, is a tale of political intrigue and desperate love set in a European country during the Cold War. John Sorel, a freedom fighter and fugitive, is forced to flee under the cover of night, leaving his wife Magda to face inquisitive secret police agents.

"It's such a heart wrenching story," Arnett said. "The story is so intimate that the audience has to be right there."

The performance marks Arnett's first directing attempt at SIU — he graduated from Murray State University in 1999 and acted professionally for a year before heading to grad school here — and the opera is his thesis project. As an actor, he portrays light-hearted characters, so he appreciated the opportunity to try his hand at something slightly more dramatic.

There are brief flashes of comic relief, though, largely provided by Myron Elliott in his role as the Magician. Elliott, a junior in theater from East Peoria, is in his first "legit opera" and says audiences should be attracted to the piece's modern tone.

"It's not one of those really old operas about a mythological hero," Elliott said. "It's a lot more relevant."

At the opposite end of the character spectrum is Amy Chambers, who gets to show her nasty side as the consul's secretary, who specializes in tormenting the poor souls desperately seeking the consul.

"You really get to step outside of yourself and explore the darker side of a person," said Chambers, a graduate student in opera and theater from Macomb.

Rehearsals began the second week of the semester, and no one could have known at the time that the play's major theme would come to parallel current national sentiment. But Chambers is optimistic that audiences will be more empathetic than usual to the major players and their story.

"The play is all about struggle, of trying to get free," Chambers said. "There are enough characters that everyone can relate to someone. It's easy to put yourself in the place of the characters."

These words, spoken by Billy Bob Thornton about the seductive Cate Blanchett in the new movie "Bandits," could be a fitting tagline for the film itself. This isn't to imply that Blanchett manages to single-handedly snare this movie into a murky trap — quite the contrary; she shines as a hostage taken by cohorts-in-crime Thornton and Bruce Willis. But tragically, she most unfortunately what makes this film buckle into itself and sink.

It's a classic case of a good movie going bad. While "Bandits" starts out as a light-hearted romp in the spirit of "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," it makes the unfortunate mistake of overextravagant and的重要性 and ends up running a good half-hour too long as a result. None of this is the fault of the three stars or director Barry Levinson — all come from a script that simply doesn't know when to quit. Willis and Thornton play the "sleepover bandits," two bank robbers who take the unique angle of kidnap­ ping bank presidents at their house, staying the night, and then walking into the bank with the president the next morning and capturing the loot. The two earn a charming intrigue through national television and media, but things take an unexpected turn when they are forced to take an unhappily married yuppie hostage and Willis begins to fall for her. Before long, Thornton, too, is struck by her charm.

For a while, this situation is nothing short of hilarious, enough to make you laugh in tears of laughter while watching some extremely well-drawn characters play off each other. Willis, as usual, charms in the role of a gentleman criminal, and Thornton's curmudgeonly sidekick delivers some of the film's funniest moments (a line of his about beavers and ducks may be the silliest one second of film made in the past five years, but you'll have to see it to truly understand it). Blanchett's role as the dual love interest, and Levinson's direction, for the most part, is shot, sweet and to the point.

So it's equally amusing and heartbreaking to watch the whole thing get lost in itself about halfway through. Although the movie never stops being funny (I saw it with the crowd I saw it with and everyone in the theater that I saw it with), it spends too much time dealing on the unlikely love triangle and the final 35 minutes end up being an excruciating exercise in patience. It looks like it's going to end, and it doesn't. It step onto the home stretch again, and then back. This goes on for quite awhile. And each time, it's more frustrating than the time before. This doesn't mean the laughs don't keep coming, though, and a twist ending almost justifies the painful trip. But it's not quite enough to save the whole film, and what could have been a straightforward comedy classic ends up feeling a little too wet and smile. The actors and director all get As for their excellent efforts, but it's unfortunate that they stepped onto a ship that was doomed for failure from the very beginning.

JARRETT O. HIRZOG

Steve Love will literally be rolling into Shryock Auditorium Sunday afternoon. Love, a roller dance enthusiast and CEO of the production firm he started, the New York Express Roller Dance Company, has been appearing on NBC's Today Show and MTV.

"I like working with funny people because they get better chemistry," Love said.

"They always eat better."

The roller company has also made several appearances on foreign television in Japan, Italy and Great Britain. They have also performed in countries including Sweden, Hong Kong and China.

"We have been doing versions on fire content," Love said.

Currently, the New York Express will not spend a lot of time doing music videos because of the September 11 attacks. Love said since the attacks, performing on stage has been strange. In the future Love and his colleagues will be negotiating morts on touring in the United States.

"We do a lot of anti-violence shows," Love said. "We're trying to do something good for our country by performing."

Love said the main reason people should attend the show is because the New York Express Roller Dance Company will provide its audience with a fast and ever-changing performance.

"We play so we have a good old time on the stage," Love said. "There's something for everyone, it doesn't matter if you're nine or 90."

One of the unsung heroes of rock and roll comes to Carbondale Saturday night to play the blues like they're meant to be played.

Johnnie Johnson has been in the professional music business for more than 60 years, but his quiet demeanor and willingness to place himself in the background have caused him to be occasionally overlooked.

The self-taught piano player, Johnson had his first radio gig at a college gym, his buddy and his girlfriend.

Johnson had his first radio gig at a college gym, his buddy and his girlfriend.

Johnson and Berry parted ways in 1956, but they continued to perform together in the 1960s after Johnson was drafted into the military.

"Johnny B. Goode" was written by Berry in honor of his partner and pal.

"Johnson and Berry enjoyed the benefits of their extensive career, the lesser-known Johnson drove a bus for the elderly in St. Louis to make ends meet. He was rediscovered in 1986 by Taylor Hackford and the Rolling Stones' Keith Richards during the making of "Hall of Fame Rock and Roll," a documentary tribute to Berry.

Johnson began recording again on his own in the late 1980s, collaborating with musical heavyweights such as Richards, Eric Clapton and John Lee Hooker. He has recently been recognized with an R&B Foundation Pioneer Award and an induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame this year.

USG seeks increased representation for student trustee

Ben Botkin

A desire for the student trustees of both SIU campuses to have greater voting power was expressed by the Undergraduate Student Government in a meeting approved Wednesday night.

The resolution supports allowing student trustees from SIUC and SIUE to vote every year as well as considering the amount of funding the University receives from tuition and fees paid by students.

The amount of funding revenue the University receives from tuition is a reason why there should be more representation, USG Senator Erek Warrick said.

With nine members on the Board of Trustees, the student trustee only has one-eighth of the voting power, which Warrick said is disproportionate to the amount of funding the University receives from tuition and fees paid by students.

Students provided 59.2 percent of SIUC's revenue through the tuition and fees paid, while government funding accounted for 43.3 percent of the revenue in the fiscal year 2000, according to figures from the Institution of Research. The 56.3 percent figure is a combination of state appropriations and government grants.

SIUC Student Trustee Nathan Stone said the potential change would have benefits. He feels gaining another vote could improve student representation.

"For me, I feel there's a lot of pressure," he said. "We should look at all perspectives.

But, some also added that students are not as knowledgeable as appointed board members about some issues.

The state legislature would have to amend the SIU Management Act for the student trustees to have more voting responsibilities.

State Rep. Mike Bost (R-Murphysboro) said that giving more voting power to the student trustees may lead to potential problems, since student trustees are elected by students who would likely be opposed to tuition increases.

But Warrick disagrees, pointing out that student trustees vote on an intermediate basis. "Most issues that come before the board are not for immediate action," Warrick said. "Most issues that come before the board are not for immediate action."

conf. said he may postpone hiring a new director for business affairs to save money. He said the deficit may relate to student housing issues that influence the flow of resources in and out of the colleges.

"In the end, we will try to create a model to allocate funds next year and the year after that, and some sort of a rational process that takes into account all the various factors that influence the flow of resources in and out of the colleges," said Warrick.

Director of the Student Center, T.J. Rutherford, is in the early stages of figuring out how to conserve Student Center dollars. He does not know yet where contributions are needed but is exploring the different units that comprise housing to see where money can be saved.

"We are trying to cut services if we can help it," Rutherford said. "With our students, we try to provide the things they want."

Victims and survivors of domestic abuse or sexual assault made their voices loud and clear during the annual "Take Back the Night" activities sponsored by the Women's Center and Women's Services in Carbondale.

On Monday and Thursday's Columbus Day, their voices were even louder than heard at Peace Bonnarmy. The project featured hundreds of These T-shirts designed by survivors and friends to trade and sold over sixty sets from several events. The same designs will be displayed at Friday's "Take Back the Night" events.

The T-shirts were primarily designed by the women who worked on the project. The shirts, made by clients of the Women's Center, are intended to raise awareness about the issue of domestic violence.

Students, who were glad to support the cause, sold the shirts for $10 each.

For the people who went able to express their support of the event, they were able to support the cause.

"We've had a lot of support," said one survivor. "It's really important to support the cause and let people know that it's okay to speak out."

WIDB to cover Saluki sports

Fans will be able to follow the home action even when not in Carbondale

BRIAN PEACH
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Today, hard-core Saluki alumni and fans from all over the world can listen to Saluki sports from virtually anywhere with the click of a mouse. After a trial run with baseball coverage last spring, the WIDB student radio station's Evan O'Donnell and Jimmy Michaels are bringing live football coverage to students and Internet users.

With the help of phone lines at the SIU Arena, Abe Martin Field and McKale Stadium, WIDB will also broadcast all home basketball, baseball and football games using specialized equipment. Some equipment allows the broadcasters to tap into phone lines, control volume and translate the phone signal to be routed from their location to the station, where it is broadcast on the WIDB website and to campus students on channel 5.

WIDB tried to get a low-power FM station to broadcast on, but restrictions wouldn't allow it. "The National Association of Broadcasters lobbied to congress that low-power FM will take money away from commercial stations," O'Donnell said.

"WIDB is definitely on its way up. I've seen so much develop in sports broadcasting that it doesn't look like it can go anywhere but up." Evan O'Donnell sports director, WIDB

"WIDB is definitely an up and coming radio station. I was so excited when we started doing sports," Eckerle said. "Eckerle is a horrible last name; he said with a chuckle. Eckerle got coaxed into doing the show with some persuasion from O'Donnell, and so far he's enjoying it. "When I got here from high school, I really didn't want to do on-air work, but he convinced me to do the color-commentary," Eckerle said.

Advertising revenue from 710 Bookstore has helped keep the program running. O'Donnell is hopeful that more radio-television students will come to the WIDB office on the fourth floor of the Student Center to work with them to expand to other sports coverage, get more air time and provide invaluable experience to future people in the radio business. "WIDB is definitely on its way up," Eckerle said. "I've seen so much develop in sports broadcasting that it doesn't look like it can go anywhere but up."

"A lot of the people who died till had one thing in common: no matter how old they were, no matter how much they weighed, when they were dying they all wanted one thing, and that one thing was their moth­er."
He walks to encourage families to stick together.
Many of St. Julian’s departed friends were buried with their children beside them. He determined that the next time his family saw him, it wouldn’t be in the corner of Nigeria.
"Being around the people you love is just as important as the medication, even more important," he said. "Helping SIREA helps people stay in their own community and not have to leave their families."
SIREA and the HIV Consortium provide many of the same services, such as transportation to metropolitan areas with better-equipped hospitals, education and help with obtaining medications that net between $20,000 and $30,000 per year. But the HIV Consortium works with a limited amount of funds from the state. SIREA works from donations and grants to go beyond what the consortium does, offering counseling, a food bank and clothes to victims and their families.
"That’s the wonder of SIREA. It’s the voice of the community allowing people to show how big their heart are to people who have been touched by this disease," St. Julian said. "That’s why we need to boost but he wants to see a terminal when they were doing they all wanted one."

He, 67, had 119 pounds, 60 less than his average. He was so thin he had to carry a pillow with him because it hurt to sit down.
"My face was so gaunt and loose I couldn’t want to look myself in the mirror, because what I saw back was that dead look, I had seen on hundreds of people," he said.
Within five weeks of taking the drugs, his T-cells, his body’s soldier cells that fight off address or injury, died from 12 to 400. This was a die off from a healthy per­son’s 1,000 to 1,500 T-cells, but they were enough to keep Jim alive, and also help him to some semblance of health. Now he has 500 and they are steadily declining.
St. Julian is grateful for his vitality, but he bears a widespread perception that AIDS is no longer a big deal because of the drugs.
"People are not realizing the disease now but he wants to serve as a reminder that prevention is still imperative."
"The danger in thinking the medica­tion are a cure is they are highly toxic," he said. "They take a tremendous toll on your organs, specifically your liver and your kidney, and its especially toxic, even if they are not funded. For him, the most important lesson is a lesson so the community sees that there are many who care.
Though the group supports about 100 families locally, said said that is not enough.

"For all international students and individ­uals, money should not be an issue," Hargreaves said. "We are committed to pay for all those who want to walk.
In many of the consortium international students still hear, citizens cannot access the newer medications the United States uses.
In January of 1996, the FDA approved triple-therapy treatment, which works by hit­ting the disease with three drugs at once. At that time, St. Julian’s 18 month old had shrunk to nine years, but he was hardly alive. He was just 119 pounds, 60 less than his average. He was so thin he had to carry a pillow with him because it hurt to sit down.
"My face was so gaunt and loose I couldn’t want to look myself in the mirror, because what I saw back was that dead look, I had seen on hundreds of people," he said.
ROTC rappels from Necker's

BY BEN BOTWIN
DAILY EDITION

Climb the rope and step to the roof’s edge. Then lean back, facing the sky and get ready to drop more than 50 feet.
"It’s all part of rappelling, an important part of being a well-trained cadet in SCA’s Army ROTC unit. Members of the local Roth ROTC unit practiced rappelling from the roof of Necker Building on Thursday, some for the first time.
Rappelling required confidence. And confidence, they said, is scarier than rappelling.
"You get really scared at the first step down, then it’s a free fall," Anderson said.
Rappelling the second time is a let easier, said John Rechen, a biology science major.
"The second time, you have a good idea of what to expect," he said.
Preparation for the first jump is an absolute must, Anderson said. "They take a tremendous toll on your organs, specifically your liver and you kidney, said John Rechen, a biology science major.

Women's tennis participates at the Louisville Invitational

The SIU women's tennis team travels to Louisville, Ky., Oct. 21-22 to participate in the 18th annual Louisville Invitational.

Saluki head coach Judy Auld refers to the Louisville Invitational as her team's toughest test of the fall season. The match-up of the teams in the tournament are among the nation's elite, including Wisconsin, Xavier, Miami of Ohio and Louisville.

The Invitational will feature three singles flights and two doubles flights, and SIU seniors Erika Ochoa and sophomore Alexandria Blum will participate in flight one. Freshman Kari Streb and sophomore Sandy Swanepoel will step up to flight two singles.

Saluki Basketball Coaching Clinic set for Oct. 26

The Saluki basketball program will host its annual basketball coaching clinic on Oct. 26, starting at 9 a.m. at the SIU Student Recreation Center. Featured speakers will be Dick Carm of Cornell High School, Rick Stansbery of Eastern Illinois University, Ray Harper of Kentucky Wesleyan College and Mark Nelson of Valhalla College.

Registration is $25 in advance and $30 on the day of the clinic. Any men's or women's basketball coach is welcome to attend. For more information, contact the Saluki Basketball office at 653-4667.

Roberson's injury causes uncertainty as quaterback for K-State

SEAN PURCELL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE (KANSAS STATE U.)

MANHATTAN, Kan. (U-WIRE) - Reflecting on the last two weeks, one of many negative memories concerns the lack of production from K-State's offense.

In loss to Colorado on Oct. 4, quarterback Ellis Roberson led a lackluster offensive attack to defeat in a game where fans hoped and called for Mike Davis to come to the game.

People got what they wished for when Dunn showed an unimpressive performance against Texas Tech, a game in which Roberson was sidelined due to an injury he suffered the week before.

So with questions on the offensive coordinator and the probability that Roberson will be healthy for this weekend's game, the coaching staff is left with one question.

Who should start this weekend at quarterback?

Despite all other factors, offensive coordinator Ron Holland said the decision primarily will lie in the health of Ell Roberson.

"This is a major injury, and we hope he can play for us. "We do not know what type of game he is going to play and not to make an excuse, but we mulled it over with the other coaches in the past day or so about injuries in the past."

Roberson's injury and his charges of playing this weekend pose a dilemma for the head coach in Buddy Parker.

"I probably wish we had one quarterback, that doesn't mean it's that way," he said. "But as you have to do is that the bottom line, whether it is at quarterback or any other position."

Dunn said the team has shown a lot of effort the past few weeks, but when it comes down to it, effort hasn't gotten the victory.

"The key is not to dwell on the past," he said. "The key is to do what you have to do. That is the bottom line, whether it is at quarterback or any other position.""

Salukis pick up their drive for a MVC tournament spot

Clint Hartung
Daily Egyptian

A tournament spot is within the grasp of the Saluki volleyball team, as the Salukis sit in seventh place in the Missouri Valley Conference.

SIU's conference matches this weekend against Southwest Missouri State, which SIU played tough in defeat earlier this season, and Wichita State, which SIU swept earlier in the year, offer the Salukis the chance to move up into one of the six spots needed to make the MVC tournament.

SIU, now 8-10 overall and 3-6 in the conference, defeated the Salukis in four games earlier this season.

However, SIU sophomore Kelly Harman is confident that the Salukis can beat the Bears and take a rather optimistic approach to the match.

"We played very well against them," Harman said. "I just know what my team can do on any given night. As long as we show up to play, we will be all right."

Kenny Metallo - Daily Egyptian

Jenny Noel attempts a block last weekend against Evansville at Davies Gymnasium. The Salukis take on Southwest Missouri State tonight.

The Bears, 13-4 overall and 7-2 in the MVC, defeated the Salukis in four games earlier this season.

"Definitely not," said Ca ins. "They are probably pretty upset with us. We made them look pretty bad."

Although the Saluki offense hasn't set the tone for better matchups against teams like the Bears, who are led by senior Ree McIntire, the Salukis will not be given much room for error.

"All around, they are a pretty scrappy defensive team," Ca ins said. "This game will come down to who makes the less errors."

On Saturday, SIU travels to Wichita State. The Salukis swept the Shockers earlier this season, but know that this match will not be a pushover.

"Definitely not," said Ca ins. "They are probably pretty upset with us. We made them look pretty bad."

As it stands, the Salukis are behind Indiana State in the conference standings for the sixth spot. A 2-0 weekend could mix things up for the Salukis, and push them one step closer to their ultimate goal of making it to the postseason.

After this weekend, the Salukis will have just seven league matches remaining to stake their claim to a berth in the Valley tournament.

"We've talked about that quite a bit," Harman said. "We just have to go out and play our game. We can't worry about the team. We just have to win ourselves."
Salukis strive to make mockery of records

SIU intends to make home date with EIU an example of parity in college football

Eastern Illinois has yet to lose a game against a 1-AA opponent and is ranked as a top 10 team in the nation. EIU is 1-4 on the season, with its only victory to date coming against wireless Illinois State.

Major mismatch? Maybe so, if you buy into the school of thought that both teams' coaches are trampling heading into this Saturday's 1:30 p.m. matchup at Murphystadium.

"There is no such thing in Division I-A and I-AA football now that if you're not really nonchalantly, you've just got yourself a 'renter,'" EIU head coach Bob Spoo said.

So, may be on to something. There have been splendid upsets pulled across the nation this season. Aside from an elite handful of dominant teams, nearly every team seems to be a wide gulf in talent separating most teams.

Saluki head coach Jerry Kill continues with Spoo's assertion that the disparity between winning and losing teams is narrowing, pointing to increasing salaries for coaches and more investment from schools in their football programs as factors in the increasing competitiveness.

"We'll beat, think everybody's better," Kill said. "There's more emphasis on it — better weight norms, better coaching and better players. It just down more parity into it, no question."

The Saluks (1-0-1 Gateway) have already demonstrated this year that they're not far removed from beating quality competition. Most recently, SIU was nipped 19-14 by Week 3 highly-regarded Northern Iowa.

The Salukis' improved play since the start of the season has been most clearly influenced by the team's defensive play. SIU has limited opponents to less than 26 points for two straight games for the first time since 1996, although the Salukis have been somewhat erratic on offense and in the kicking game.

Meanwhile, Eastern is coming off a 1-0 home loss to Southeast Missouri State rather than change tradition where college basketball breaks tradition with Mid-day Madness.

Men's and women's basketball teams will be breaking with tradition as they will be having their own version of Midnight Madness this Saturday at 5:30 p.m. at Davies Gymnasium following the SIU football game against Eastern Illinois University.

SIU women's head coach Bruce Weber said the decision to alter tradition came down to finances.

"My thing was if we're going to do it we got to keep making it better and then it comes down to a philosophy, do you want to spend money on something you're not making money on," Weber said.

He said he had been talking about a variety of things to bring the students out to the event, but when it came down to it, it just wasn't sound business to put too much money into something that wasn't going to bring back any returns.

"If it wasn't going to be special, we weren't going to do something extra-special, let's try something different and then maybe go back to it in a few years and add something," Weber said.

While they are not having the traditional Midnight Madness, the Salukis will still have all the traditional elements. There will be a Barnstormers show and the dunk contest. A new wrinkle this year is that fans will be admitted at Saluki basketball is serious business.

At last, serious enough where the Salukis have decided to fringe their usual late night theatrics in the name of getting down to business.

Midnight Madness is a nationwide tradition where college basketball teams put on a extravaganza to show off their talents for the fans. The teams have a scrimmage as well as a 3-point shooting contest and the everpopular slam dunk contest.

SIU has taken part in this tradition along with the rest of the nation. But not this year.
