Bomb blasts Oklahoma federal building

The Washington Post

OKLAHOMA CITY—An apparent terrorist car bomb exploded outside a federal office building here Tuesday, collapsing the north face of the nine-story concrete building, injuring hundreds of workers, and killing at least 26, including 12 children who attended a day-care center on the second floor.

Local officials said they feared that the toll would rise quickly because by early evening more than half of the estimated 550 people who worked in the building were unaccounted for. Rescue workers emerging from the rubble said there were scores of bodies inside.

The bombing, described by authorities as the deadliest terrorist attack ever on U.S. soil, occurred in the most unlikely of targets—this heartland capital city of 440,000 that residents

"Obviously, no amateur did this. Whoever did this was an animal."

Gov. Frank A. Keating (R).

"Obviously, no amateur did this," said Gov. Frank A. Keating (R). "Whoever did this was an animal."

The mysteries surrounding the bombing were not dispelled as the day passed. The death toll was unknown, only certain to go higher, and authorities said they would have to resort to "a process of elimination" to determine who had survived and who had not. Local hospitals were swamped with the injured, many from surrounding offices and businesses who were lacerated with flying glass.

From all over the city, distraught relatives came to find out if their loved ones had survived.

The horror of the event was multiplied by the fact that so many of its first known victims once jokingly described as "the town where nothing much ever happens." It occurred shortly after 9 a.m., at a time when employees were sitting down to their work day at the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building and when the maximum number of people were going in and out of the structure.

The explosion quickly turned the placid, tree-shaded downtown into a scene more reminiscent of the aftermath of bombings in Beirut. Workers staggered out of stairwells, blood dripping into their eyes. A woman moaned on the ground, part of her leg apparently missing from the blast. Employees at buildings blocks away reported being thrown from their chairs, windows were shattered, and residents who live 30 miles from downtown reported feeling the powerful vibrations of the blast. Everywhere around the city, people stood in stunned silence, not believing what they had just seen and heard, not comprehending how anyone could have done such a thing.

New councilman could tip 21 vote

By Shawna Donovan and Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporters

Carbondale City Council action on recommendations to end the Halloween party, tabled last night, may be affected at the next meeting by a new council member.

At the May 2 meeting, councilman John Mills will be replaced by member-elect Michael Neill, who said raising the Carbondale bar-entry age is an important goal for him.

"I will support raising the entry age to 21 and all the other task force recommendations," Neill said.

Halloween task force chairman Patrick Kelley suggested the council delay voting on the recommendations until the May 2 meeting.

Those recommendations are:
■ Close the University for Halloween and the preceding weekend
■ Raise the bar-entry age to 21 year round

Townhouse development planned for Southwest Carbondale.

- Close bars on the strip for Halloween weekend
- Close city parking lots for Halloween weekend
- Ban kegs on Halloween weekend
- Commit city and University resources to positive publicity
- Apply sanctions for criminal behavior

Carbondale City Manager Jeff Doherty said he was not surprised the package was tabled because Tuesday was the first time the council had discussed the recommendations.

Fuller dome may receive restoration

By Dave Mack
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The R. Buckminster Fuller Dome, the former residence of the well-known late Bucky Fuller, is in disrepair and the Carbondale Preservation Commission wants to prevent it from becoming any worse.

Linda Gladson, senior planner for the City of Carbondale, said preservation and restoration of the dome at 407 S. Forest are the commission's priorities.

Thee Bucky Fuller Carbondale Preservation Commission wants to see the Buckminster Fuller Dome placed on the local register of historic places," said Gladson.

Bill Perk, an SIUC lecturer in community development, said the commission would like to have the dome on the register for Fuller's (1895-1993) centennial July 12.

"The commission is interested in what might happen to that historic site since Bucky Fuller is a very important person and his centennial is coming up rapidly," Perk said. "They would like to see it kept in place and restored."

One of Fuller's claims to fame was his development of technology that

Ventilation safety questioned

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An accident last week in the organic chemistry labs in the J.W. Neckers building has raised a concern among students as to the safety of the chemical-fume hood-ventilation systems in Neckers and the rest of campus.

Administrators and professors in the chemistry department say despite the poor condition of the fume hoods, there is no danger to students. However, they agree that the condition of the ventilation system is a concern and needs to be corrected.

Last week, a student in the organic chemistry lab dropped a glass container holding benzyl bromine, a chemical used in lab experiments. Christi Moore, a chemistry student who was in the lab, said she and other student had to evacuate the area because of the accident. She said her eyes began to water.

Moore said she believes the problem was caused by improperly functioning fume hoods, which are designed to pull any potentially harmful fumes out of the room, but did not.

Chemistry Laboratory Director Ami Ruffing said although the fume hoods in the organic chemistry labs are not pulling in the standard 100 square-feet of air per minute, they are working.

Also, she said the chemicals used in undergraduate experiments are not dangerous, toxic or hazardous.

"We've had taken the most dangerous chemicals out of the labs and don't let the undergrads use them," she said. "The chemicals that are used in lab may have irritating qualities, like the benzyl bromine did, but that is the only bad thing about them."

"They present no danger to the students," she said.

The physical reaction students experienced from the benzyl bromine is the same as they would experience if they cut into an onion, Ruffing said.

JAPANESE STATION GASED, FEW INJURIES — YOKOHAMA, Japan—The police were mystified and the populace terrified anew Wednesday after a noxious gas was released at another big Japanese train station — but this time, nobody was seriously hurt. More than 300 people were hospitalized for throat pain, coughing and dizziness just before 1 p.m. after they encountered a sharp, foul odor wafting through the massive central concourse of the train station in Yokohama, Japan's second-largest city. Preliminary diagnoses said the victims showed symptoms of exposure to phosgene, a poison gas used in World War I.

REBELS BLOW UP TWO SRI LANKAN GUNBOATS — NEW DELHI, India—Rebel suicide commandos blew up two Sri Lankan gunboats early Wednesday, killing themselves and 12 sailors, in a fiery end to a three-month truce with the government. Donning sophisticated scuba-diving equipment, the four commandos — two men and two women believed to be members of the Black Tiger suicide squadron of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam — penetrated security at Sri Lanka's largest naval base and apparently used underwater explosives to sink two navy gunboats. Twenty-three people were injured in the blasts, which occurred shortly after midnight.

MEXICAN GOVERNMENT, REBELS HOLD TALKS — SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador.—In this nation, it took a dozen years and 75,000 lives lost before the government and the rebels finally sat down and reached a peace accord three years ago. In Guatemala, it took 33 years and 100,000 deaths before the guerrillas and the government launched their latest round of peace negotiations. In Peru, despite 15 years of combat that has claimed an estimated 30,000 lives, there still is no prospect for discussions of peace between authorities and rebel insurgents. Throughout Latin America, getting governments and guerrillas to the negotiating table has often been a long, bloody process.

CHRYSLER TAKEOVER MET WITH RESISTANCE — A week after Kirk Kerkorian and Lee Iacocca announced plans to take over Chrysler Corp., union leaders, dealers and some big holders of Chrysler stock are publicly opposing it. The two septuagenarians have yet to make a formal proposal or indicate that they have lined up financing for the $2.8 billion deal. But concern continues to mount about the effect of a Kerkorian-Iacocca takeover on Chrysler's long-term health.

LEGAL QUESTIONS FOLLOW RAPPER'S DEATH — The suddenness of Eazy-E's death — he was found to have AIDS after being admitted to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles on Feb. 24, publicly announced it on March 16 and died 10 days later — has created some major legal confrontations involving Ruthless Records, the label he started and for which he had remained president and CEO. There are paternity issues as well. In his March statement, Eazy-E (Eric Wright) admitted to having fathered seven children with six different women. When he was already in the hospital's intensive-care unit, though, he married Tomika Wood, the mother of his year-old son. The day after Eazy-E's death, a suit was filed in Los Angeles Superior Court by Mike Klein, who described himself as Ruthless's director of business affairs and a 50 percent owner of the label.

Survey reveals value of '93 flood outreach

Help in a time of need:
Respondents positive about Project Recovery's value, services, counselors.

By Stephanie Moletti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Flood of 1993 destroyed more than material objects. Many victims experienced a psychological impact, too, as a result of suffering the loss of income, home and community ties when the Mississippi River overflowed its banks.

Survivors were forced to deal with the uncertainty of the future, stress, the problems of adapting to multiple service systems and the mental anguish of evacuation.

In the wake of the flooding, the SIUC School of Social Work has spent the last year assessing the effectiveness of outreach mental health services provided to Illinois victims.

Outreach service delivery provided in the wake of the flood included community education and organization, mental health training, and individual and group counseling.

Hussein Soliman, School of Social Work assistant professor and director of the evaluation for Project Recovery, said the evaluation was done through questionnaires sent to agencies, community members and administrators involved in the project.

Project Recovery, operating under the auspices of the Illinois Department of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities, helped to enhance communities' ability to deal with the flood by providing mental health services to residents of the 39 Illinois counties affected by the '93 flooding.

The flood spread through three states — Illinois, Missouri and Iowa — from May through September, including the Southern Illinois counties of Randolph, Monroe, Jackson, Union and St. Clair.

Soliman said he began field work in the summer of 1993 and received the contract and grant from the mental health department in summer 1994.

The School of Social Work received $63,000 to conduct the evaluation from September 1994 to May 1995.

"The project focused on the mental needs and counseling issues of the survivors," he said.

The three areas of Project Recovery evaluated included services provided to survivors, service providers' perception of the project experience and an evaluation of community education efforts.

The evaluation revealed that survivors indicated the services were helpful in understanding feelings, recognizing the impact of the flood and utilizing services to cope with flood-related conditions, according to Susan Lingle, a graduate student in social work.

She said a majority of the survivors indicated that counselors were sensitive, kind, cooperative, willing to listen and highly empathetic.

The study found that victims felt procedures and regulations were clearly explained to them by outreach counselors.

It also showed that victims rated counselors highly in terms of their ability to facilitate expression of feelings and their knowledge of community resources. The

Groups unite to oppose prison bill

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Democratic and Republican legislators joined Illinois' Union of Correction Employees in a press conference Wednesday to show their opposition to pending legislation that would allow the privatization of future prisons in Illinois.

Included in the conference were Southern Illinois legislators Rep. David D. Phelps, D-Eldorado and

Rep. Larry Wooland, D-Carterville. The legislature is considering two bills that would lift Illinois' moratorium on the privatization of prisons: one is in the House of Representatives and one is in the Senate.

House Bill 554, introduced by Representative Al Salvi, R-Wauconda, would lift the moratorium on privatization and leave the decision of whether to build private prisons up to the Illinois Department of Corrections.

Senate Bill 768, introduced by Sen. Ed. Petka, R-Plainfield, would lift the moratorium and establish a commission to oversee the building and operation of private prisons.

According to Salvi, privatizing prisons in Illinois would cut costs and increase prison security.

"The moratorium handicaps the Department of Corrections," he said. "There is no reason to limit privatization when private companies can

Dawg Days festival to host week of fun

Format changes from '94:
Decreased fees, more free events, children's treasure hunt mark this year's events.

By Dustin Coleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the third annual "Dawg Days of Spring" inches closer to the SIUC campus, students are looking forward to enjoying a variety of art, comedy, music and cinema from local and national artists.

The annual event, sponsored by the Student Programming Council, begins this Saturday and runs through April 29.

The creation of Dawg Days was a reaction to the termination of Springfest in 1992. Paul Mitchell, special events chair at SPC, said the spirit of the Springfest lives on, but in a controlled environment.

"Dawg Days is like Springfest without alcohol, and is spread out over a week-long period," said Mitchell.

A survey conducted by SPC gave the student organization an idea of what needed to be changed this year. Mitchell said although last year's event was a success, new events and a new format have been created to better fit everyone's taste.

"We have tried to fill the week-long event with the best entertainment possible," he said.

"We have organized events to attract target audiences, and have tried to be broad at the same time."

One of the new events for this year's Dawg Days is a treasure hunt for children ages five through nine.

"Events like this one supplies students who are parents with something their children could get involved in," Mitchell said.

In addition to the new events, there are more free events this year, and those events that do charge have a decreased fee, said SPC Films Chair Chris Thomas.

"We, as students also, should recognize students don't always have a lot of money," he said. "Our whole organization is about providing for the students, and not making money."

Thomas said that with the threat of the bar entry age increase, all students should come out to Dawg Days and participate in the festivities.

"When younger students can no longer go to the bars, one of the alternatives they can enjoy is an event like Dawg Days."

Halloween plan too important for delay

ONCE AGAIN, THE CARBONDALE CITY COUNCIL has proven that it lacks the vertebrae needed to put an end to the city's Halloween problems. Scheduled to vote on recommendations of the Mayoral/Presidential Task Force on Halloween at Tuesday night's meeting, the council tabled the issue after members quibbled over a proposal by the task force to raise the bar-entry age to 21.

Implementation of the task force's package depends on passage of all the recommendations. Since the task force has developed what seems to be the most promising Halloween solution yet proposed, the council would, in effect, "throw out the baby with the bath" if members dug in their heels because of one aspect of the many-faceted plan.

THE HALLOWEEN STREET PARTY DIMINISHES the value of students' diplomas, generates a negative image for the city and puts hundreds of people in danger every year. The council is infamous for compromise. Surely the members can give a little now on the bar-entry issue to gain a possible end to a problem that has plagued the city for more than 20 years. Raising the bar-entry age may not be the most popular solution, or even the best solution, but combined with the rest of the package, it could be an effective solution. If the city council members want to solve the problem, it is time for them to stop bickering over details and turn out the lights on the Halloween party so the University and the city can move on to more important issues.

Carr's choice risky; lacks responsibility

IT IS THE STUFF MOVIES ARE MADE OF: SHOW talent in your chosen field, make the right contacts, get your "big break" and head down the road to stardom. For Saluki basketball standout Chris Carr, that dream may become reality ... but at what price? Carr, a junior forward for the Salukis, announced Tuesday that he will forego his senior year at SIUC to make himself eligible for the 1995 NBA draft. One may question the wisdom of Carr's decision. While Carr obviously is a talented athlete, he is taking a big risk — by leaving school before he gets his degree, he basically is working without a net in the uncertain world of professional sports.

While Carr has every right to pursue his dream, his decision brings up issues of accountability. Carr currently is attending SIUC on a full-ride athletic scholarship. It seems unfair to make students and taxpayers cover the cost of Carr's education if he does not hold up his end of the bargain by completing it at SIUC as planned. Perhaps the University should create a provision for future scholarship recipients to pay back their educational costs if they leave school early.

If Carr's luck equals his talent and his courage, he may surprise the critics by achieving enough success to pay back the University many times over with publicity as he realizes his dream. As Saluki fans who have enjoyed watching Carr play and as students with dreams of our own, we can only hope so.

Crime needs curbing in Russia

Los Angeles Times

The official announcement came, appropriately, in the middle of the night: Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin had signed legislation passed by Parliament in late February to greatly broaden the powers of the Federal Security Service, successor to the KGB.

The new law allows warrantless searches, legalizes electronic surveillance and permits personal mail to be opened.

It further grants the security service — its Russian initials are FSB — authority over foreign intelligence gathering. The FSB thus seems to be well on the way to becoming the KGB redux, further weakening Russia's experiment with democracy.

Concerns of democrats and civil libertarians over expanding the state's police powers had little chance of prevailing in an unsettled political climate made all the more volatile by exploding fear over pervasive lawlessness and corruption.

Organized crime controls or parasitically sucks profits from much of the country's private business activities, and the new criminal entrepreneurs flaunt their wealth and power.

Street hoodlums prey on ordinary citizens. Those who denounce criminal gangs may literally pay with their lives. Many, even legislators, have been murdered for daring to oppose spreading criminality.

Violent crime, at least of the non-state variety, was unusual in the Soviet Union, thanks to a pervasive police presence and a readiness to use the most severe measures to repress and punish.

That there is a general readiness to re-empower a potentially highly repressive internal security force indicates how encompassing fears raised by the post-Soviet crime wave have become. Not for the first time in history, a lot of Russians seem ready to trade a large measure of personal liberty for the promise of a more controlled social order.

The virtually automatic response of police organs freed from accountability and restraints is to use power to the fullest. In a country like Russia, where civil liberties have been all but unknown, the temptation to abuse power is strong.

Yet Russia's hopes for democracy — and the West's hopes for a stable and responsible Russia — can succeed only under the rule of law. Crime in Russia unmistakably imperils civil order — but the potential return to police state repression in response to that danger has to be seen as no less a threat to the rule of law and to Russia's democratic evolution.

GOP unfair to Foster, Americans

Los Angeles Times

Bob Dole, the Senate majority leader and candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, has announced that he will not vote to confirm Dr. Henry W. Foster Jr. as U.S. surgeon general, assuming the question ever comes to a floor vote. That's suddenly a big assumption, because Dole is also hinting that if the Foster nomination clears committee he might refuse to let the full Senate decide on the controversial physician's fate.

Dole has the power under Senate rules not to schedule a floor vote. Such a move would block the nomination and force President Clinton to begin searching for a new candidate for the nation's top public health post, presumably one whose professional background — Foster is an obstetrician-gynecologist — would present fewer problems.

Smothering the nomination this way would of course boost Dole's standing among those who are unforgiving toward any doctor who has ever performed abortions, as Foster has. It would also moot the threat by Dole's currently strongest rival for the GOP nomination, Sen. Phil Gramm, to organize a filibuster to prevent a floor vote on the nomination.

All this may be not-unexpected presidential politics, but it's important that Americans not lose sight of the central issue. The central issue is not the nomination prospects of the hopefuls from Kansas or Texas but rather Henry Foster's right — and beyond that the right of the president and of the American people — to have his fitness judged by all 100 members of the Senate, on a recorded vote, as the Constitution intends. To sacrifice that right on the altar of presidential politics may, under Senate rules, be permissible, but it would be neither fair nor responsible. The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee has scheduled hearings on Foster in two weeks' time. Dole suggests the nomination may never make it out of the Republican-dominated committee.

The Administration failed to do its homework and failed to brief Foster adequately on how to handle the inevitable abortion questions. The result was that his credibility quickly was damaged, even though he is yet to testify about his background and beliefs.

He deserves that right, and the full Senate should have the chance to pass on his fitness, whatever the presidential ambitions of Dole and Gramm.

But chemistry student Norberto Quintanar, who was in the lab where the accident occurred, disagreed.

He said he and Moore researched the safety of some of the chemicals they use in their lab experiments by checking Material Safety Data Sheets in Ruffing's office.

Of all the chemicals they researched, Quintanar listed three he felt were the most dangerous: toluene, thionyl chloride, and 2,4-dinitro phenyl hydrazine.

Quintanar said the MSDS listed toluene as a solvent which causes headaches and nausea with prolonged exposure. He said it is also listed as a mutagenic, or a substance which causes mutations.

Thionyl chloride is listed on the MSDS as a poison which may be fatal if inhaled, Quintanar said.

"It is also listed as causing extreme irritation," he said. He said 2,4-dinitro phenyl hydrazine is also listed as a mutagenic if exposure is prolonged.

He also said some of the chemicals' MSDS say the chemicals should not be used outside of a fume hood.

"We do run experiments with these chemicals at our lab station and not at the fume hoods because there are only four spaces at the hood and there are close to 20 students in the class," he said.

College of Science Dean Jack Parker said he has been aware of the fume hood problem since before he became dean. The problem with the hoods in the organic chemistry labs are only a small part of the fume-hood problem on campus, he said.

Moore said she approached Parker after the incident last week, but said she felt he was doing nothing to address the problem.

Parker said, "It's not like if enough students complain, I will go and throw some switch to make all the hoods work. Some 90 percent of the hoods on campus do not meet the standards we would like."

Parker said he has brought the fume-hood problem to as many

Problems with On Campus Fume Hoods

Areas of Concern

1. Fume Hoods pull the fumes of chemicals through the back wall of the hood and up through ducts to the outside of the building.

1. Glass shields are too wide to work around; they are not utilized.
2. Ducts may be corroded, blocked and not conducting air properly.
3. Fan is not strong enough to pull enough air necessary.

people as possible, and he cited a memo he sent to John Yopp, dean of the graduate school, naming the two labs in the organic chemistry department as his top priority.

"This problem is not limited to just Neckers," Parker said. "I've been told by the school's Center for Environmental Safety that the problem will be fixed, but I don't know when."

Julie Kniesey, assistant director for the Center of Environmental Health and Safety, said a lot of the hoods are not working at recommended guidelines, and said she did not have a date when the work will be done.

Kniesey said guidelines say the hoods should pull in 100 feet of air per minute. But she also said that figure was just a guideline.

"Regulations are backed by law, but not guidelines," she said. "The regulation says the hoods should have sufficient air flow, but they do not say what sufficient air flow is, so we follow the guidelines."

Kniesey said the guidelines the school follows are from the American National Standard

Institute, which she said is a group of professionals in many different fields who publish standards for different industries.

Kniesey said the Center for Environmental Health and Safety is responsible for finding any problems with the hoods and setting goals to correct them.

"Our goal is to meet the operating guidelines," she said. "Some of the hoods meet them, and some don't."

A posted inspection report in one of the organic chemistry labs shows that the fume hood in that room is running at 25 square-feet per minute, and previous inspections showed a number as low as 11 square-feet per minute.

Michael Groziak, the chemistry professor who teaches the class the lab accident occurred in, said the low air flow does not affect the experiments and is not dangerous.

"The chemicals we use in the laboratory may not be found on your grocery shelf, but they are safe," Groziak said. "They are very well understood by chemists and medical experts as safe."

were children. They were at play on the second floor of the building when the bomb exploded beneath their day-care center. Broken toys were scattered amid the shards of concrete. Rescue workers feared that as many as 30 children may have been in the day-care center and only two were known to have emerged alive. Most were the children of federal employees who once had been able to take comfort in the thought that their loved ones were nearby. The Murrah Building housed a variety of federal agencies, including the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the Social Security Administration and the Housing and Urban Development.

made possible the construction of Epcot Center, the huge sphere at Walt Disney World in Florida, Perk said. Bill Pauls, the executive director of the Shawnee Free-Net, an on-line service linked to the Internet, is concerned with the dome's future. "We just don't want to see the building lost to deterioration," he said. The uniqueness of the dome is one reason the commission is trying to save it. "I believe it's the only dome here ever lived in," Gladson said. "The commission authorized us to continue working with the owner to get the dome placed on the local register of historic places." Perk said the commission is looking for someone locally who might be interested in living in the dome as its caretaker. It is not meant to attract tourists. However, the property must first be purchased by a non-profit organization before a caretaker could move in, Perk said. "It's going to take a lot more work and funds to purchase the property from (current owner) Mike Mitchell," he said. If the dome is accepted on the local register, the state and national registers would follow, Perk said, at which point the dome would be practically untouchable. Fuller, an SIUC professor from 1958-1970, built the dome in 1960 and lived in it until he left the University. When he left the state in 1970, Fuller sold the dome to Michael Mitchell. Mitchell later moved to California and rented out the house. With an absentee landlord the condition of the dome deteriorated, Perk said. "It has become decrepit," Perk said, and in its current condition, the city will not allow Mitchell to rent out the dome without major repairs. Perk said Fuller planned to tear down the house after 15 years and have it replaced with a more modern design. "That did not happen," he said. "Now we are faced with it in the condition it is in now." Fuller's dome is an efficient technological marvel, said Pauls. "The dome enclosed the largest amount of space with the least amount of resources," he said. Carbondale's dome is the precursor to domes used everywhere throughout the world, Pauls added. Fuller was nominated for a Nobel Prize in 1969 and received the Medal of Freedom in 1983. "He was concerned about living rightly and making the most with the least amount of resources," Pauls said. People interested in more information about Bucky Fuller can contact the Shawnee Free-Net via modem at 549-8448.

agreed on most of the recommendations. Maggie Flanagan and Richard Morris said they feel the council should consider the recommendations separately. Councilman-elect Neill and councilman John Yow are in favor of raising the age to 21, while Flanagan and Morris lean toward keeping it at 19. Mayor Neil Dillard has not taken a specific stand on the entry-age issue, but said the recommendations were intended to be a package, and would be less effective if only some were adopted. Flanagan and Morris said the recommendations should be voted on individually. "I was worried it was all or nothing," Morris said. "If these recommendations are a package, why are we even discussing them separately?" Jean Paratore, vice president for Student Affairs and task force member, said the recommendation package needs to be implemented as a whole, and remain in effect for several years. "University and the city have tried almost everything in the package individually," she said. "Let's do them all at once — it is not going to happen all in one year but in time, hopefully it will be taken care of." Patrick Smith, Graduate and "Professional Student Council president and task force member, said the task force was asked to work quickly under a lot of pressure. "The city is sitting on its hands," Smith said. "The council is taking any action on the party image that is ruining my degree. "At this time, the city council is not part of the solution but is the problem," he said. "They've done nothing, they took the middle of the road and now they will be hit by a car." Doherty said before the next council meeting he will make clarifications on some amendments, and send two new recommendations to the Liquor Advisory Board for study. "The adoption of a 21 year-old bar-entry age should be accompanied by new regulations on the sale and possession of kegs and the age for entry into (restaurants with liquor licenses)," he said.

Environmental groups plan Crab Orchard PCB protest

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Five local environmental groups are sponsoring a motorcade protesting the planned Crab Orchard PCB incinerator this Saturday.

Rose Rowell, chairwoman of the Southern Coalition on Protecting the Environment, said the goal of the protest is to make the community aware of the dangers of the incinerator.

"What we want to do is create a concern for the environment and awareness of the environment," she said. "Our common concern is to stop the Crab Orchard dioxin producing incinerator."

After World War II, four sites at the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge were contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) by industrial dumping.

In 1990, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ordered Schlumberger Environmental Services to clean up the area.

Schlumberger announced in February that Maximilian Inc. of Massachusetts signed a contract to bring a portable rotary-kiln incinerator to the site.

About 50,000 cubic yards of PCB-contaminated soil will be burned in four to six months, an action that will release dioxin into the atmosphere.

Rowell said the dioxin level in the atmosphere is already too high, and the incinerator will not help this.

"The EPA did a reassessment on dioxin," she said. "They found everybody in this nation has a dioxin level at or near the crucial level. Additional dioxin could create cancer and destroy immune systems."

Rowell said she cannot understand how the EPA could carry through with the incinerator after releasing the findings of the reassessment, and said the "potential for irreversible harm is too real."

The motorcade will begin at Herrin City Hall at 11:30 a.m. Saturday, winding its way south to Illinois Route 13 and west to Turkey Park in Carbondale.

Rowell said the procession, made up of cars and trucks, will not be long enough to cause traffic problems.

"We don't have to have a line from (Carbondale) to Marion in order to get our point across," she said.

Since the event coincides with Earth Day 1995, Rowell said all environmental concerns will be represented at the protest.

The sponsoring organizations, in addition to the Southern Coalition on Protecting the Environment, are the Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists, the Student Environmental Center, the SIU Lawyers Guild and Concerned Citizens of Williamson County.

Eye opener

Earth Day observance placed environment on public agenda

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Saturday is the 25th anniversary of the first Earth Day, an effort that successfully brought concerns about the environment to the eyes of the world.

The first stirrings of Earth Day began during President Kennedy's administration in 1963. Former Wisconsin Senator Gaylord Nelson persuaded Kennedy to undertake a nationwide tour addressing the deteriorating condition of the environment.

The tour wound its way through the country, but Nelson said it failed to place the issue on the national political agenda.

In 1969, at the height of activism protesting the Vietnam War, Nelson got the idea for Earth Day from witnessing anti-war teach-ins. He felt the teach-in was an appropriate forum for educating the public on environmental issues.

Nelson quickly began to raise funds for Earth Day, which was planned for the spring of 1970. He wrote letters to the governors of all 50 states and the mayors of many large cities, informing them about Earth Day and requesting them to issue Earth Day proclamations. He also wrote letters to campus newspapers, taking advantage of the hotbeds of activism. He formally announced Earth Day during a speech in September 1969.

Enthusiasm for the idea spread so rapidly, Nelson had to open a clearinghouse in Washington D.C. to disseminate information. He hired Denis Hayes, a Harvard student and leader of Environmental Action, Inc., to coordinate Earth Day efforts and inquiries that were snowballing to almost 3,000 a day.

On April 22, 1970, an estimated 20 million people across the country participated in teach-ins and demonstrations for Earth Day.

Some demonstrators took an active approach, like a group of students from San Francisco who dumped oil into the reflecting pool at the offices of the Standard Oil Co. of California to protest oil slicks.

Carbondale's Earth Day 1995 activities include:

■ A Friday evening performance by environmental singer/songwriter Robert Hoyt at 7 p.m. at Cousin Andy's Coffee House, 402 W. Mill St.

■ The eighth annual Carbondale Spring Cleanup at 8 a.m. Saturday at Turkey Park.

■ A motorcade protesting the Crab Orchard PCB incinerator beginning Saturday at 11:30 a.m. from Herrin City hall to Turkey Park in Carbondale.

■ A presentation to save burial sites at Olcott mounds from destruction Saturday at 5 p.m. at the Interfaith Center, Grand Avenue and Illinois Avenue.

■ A benefit for environmental activist Rob Coronado featuring Las Toalitas and Organic Rain at 10 p.m. Sunday at Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave.

But many staged peaceful protests. Some Bostonians dumped non-recyclable garbage on the lawn of City Hall and marched around the pile while singing "America The Beautiful." They cleaned it all up before leaving.

The number of Earth Day activities sent a message to Congress. The Environmental Protection Agency was created later that year, and the National Environmental Policy Act was passed. The Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act followed in 1977.

Americans also began to change their lifestyles to reflect environmental concerns by insulating homes, recycling and driving more fuel-efficient cars.

In 1990, Hayes saw the need to spread the Earth Day message across the world. The 20th anniversary of Earth Day was celebrated by 200 million people in 141 countries. The Earth Day Network was formed to increase awareness for the need to live in a healthy environment and to promote activities that work toward this goal.

Dance takes on new definition

David Parsons Company puts modern moves, culture together

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Combining sheer athleticism and the art of modern dance with each piece of work echoing present-day culture, David Parsons has turned his dance company into an international phenomenon.

The David Parsons Dance Company, based out of New York, has been on nine tours in Italy and numerous tours in Brazil in the past.

David Parsons Company

Shryock Tonight
8 p.m.

David Parsons used to be a wrestler and gymnast before he realized his desire to create. "I was tired of competing in movement," Parsons said. "I love to construct things in music, to be an artist and an athlete."

With his revelation, Parsons became a choreographer and in 1987 created his own dance company, basing each performance on the art of modern dance.

"We are known as a very physical group," Parsons said. "Combining athletics and dance — we are jocks."

Parsons said modern dance started in the 1940's and is an alternative to the ballet. He said the form can go anywhere because it is a new medium of concert dance based on the American culture.

"Every piece we do, we start with a new vocabulary and concept," Parsons said. "Life is very tedious; we use humanistic concepts to touch people."

Parsons said the show on Thursday is based on everyday occurrences like sleeping, mood swings and the dead-end job of pushing paper.

"We make people look at their own lives," he said. "It's abstract — you're not just giving a plot, it's everyone's own take on the performance."

Parsons said the company has gained international status as being one of the hottest dance groups from America. The group of nine dancers has just returned from a seven-week tour of Italy and surrounding countries; it is also scheduled to return to Brazil.

The group is well known in New York and across the country, but Parsons said the company is popular overseas because of the difference in cultures.

"We are more a culture prone to lack live performances," he said. "Americans tend to watch non-performances (television). People overseas don't watch T.V.; they like the live performance."

Parsons said the company has many connections around the world.

For its opening act in New York later this year, the company is having 60 designers from Italy flown in to make costumes. Parsons said high-fashion designer Donna Karan has designed the current costumes for the company.

"The costumes were designed for the cut of the lines to accentuate movement."

"The original costumes add to the overall performance but Parsons said they are only one aspect of the dance.

"Costumes are a whole other element, along with lights and music," he said. "Making a dance is not just one person, it is a collaboration of many."

Parsons said the company has had a rapid climb to the position they currently hold as an international dance company.

"We are glad to have overseas tours because we are very respected," Parsons said.

"We have the best modern dancers around."

Parsons said the company will grow over the years and become better because it does not depend on the same media attention that professional sports does.

"We don't make as much money because we don't have commercial backing," he said. "We can say what we want!"

For an energetic show that takes on modern dance, The David Parsons Dance Company will perform Thursday night at Shryock for the conclusion of the 1994-95 Celebrity Series.

The show starts at 8 p.m. and tickets are $14.50 and $12.50 with a $4 discount for children 12 and under.

A.C. Reed brings bluesy B.S. to town

By Benjamin Golshahr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A sax man who has played with such bluesmen as B.B. King, Albert Collins, Big Joe Tyler and T-Bone Walker has relocated from Chicago to Carbondale and will open his own night club tonight.

A.C. Reed, a sax musician who has been playing the blues all his life, decided to buy the establishment that used to be Club Paradise, located at 213 E. Main St. Reed has spent several weeks renovating it into a blues bar.

By 4 p.m. today the B.S. Lounge opens its doors to the public. Later in the evening, A.C. Reed and his band The Sparkplugs will hit the stage and deliver the blues all night.

Reed and his band were invited last summer to play one of the Sunset Concert Series shows. It was then that he started to think seriously about buying a club of his own in Carbondale.

"In August I played the school (SIUC) outside, and a couple of girls said 'Why don't you buy a joint here and take over the town?' and I said 'Well find me a joint and I'll buy it.'" Reed said. "That's how I got in the market of getting a club."

Initially, Reed planned to buy T-Birds and even laid some money down on it, but when the former Club Paradise, a larger club with the capacity for 300 people, went on the market, he snatched it up.

"I had to get out of the deal (in buying T-Birds), but I didn't mind it 'cause this is a better club," he said. "This is nice — it's big, got a big stage. I can get my celebrity friends in here and everything."

In the future Reed plans to get present some big names — Koko Taylor will appear in early May. Other blues acts like Bonnie Raitt and Buddy Guy may also find their way to his club — literally.

"I've known Bonnie ever since she was a kid," he said. "She's a nice person and a blues freak. Once she finds out about this club she'll make her way down here one way or another. She'll probably surprise me (and) not tell me she's coming."

A.C. Reed decided to call his club the B.S. Lounge because he says he's full of s—t, as are his band members and all of his friends, he said. He has a message to this effect plastered on the speaker of his amp.

"You see, we play bulls—t music," Reed said. "Back when I was a kid they didn't play blues on the radio — they said it (blues) was s—t. Now I got me a bulls—t lounge."

Reed was born Aaron Corthen Reed in Wardell, Mo., in 1926, where his family worked on a cotton field.

He said that 'old school' blues was born in the cotton fields.

"The older people said blues is a problem-type of music," Reed said. "You know, they had their problems in the olden days when they were out there in the cotton fields playin' the blues and pickin' that cotton," he said.

"And believe me, all of the old blues musicians come out of a cotton field. I was picking cotton when I was six years old down in Missouri. All of them come out of the cotton field and that's where them blues come — from the cotton field."

WIDB brings fresh sound to 25th fest

By Benjamin Golshahr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

In the tradition of other college radio stations, WIDB maintains a commitment to bringing fresh, new music to college audiences.

In honor of their 25th anniversary, WIDB is bringing three bands to play as part of their week-long celebration. Two of these bands are just starting to break into Carbondale's music scene.

"Two of the bands are fairly new," said Stacy Jacobs, WIDB's alumni officer. "This gives them a chance to play out. WIDB has always been open to new music — that's what the station is all about."

The two new bands, Bris, a post-punk band with a heavy rhythm section and Blue Lava, who are influenced by classic rock with a heavy alternative twist, will open for Waxdolls, a groovy-swervey, pop-punk band. The triple bill will play from noon to 3 p.m. today at the South Patio of the Student Center.

All three of the bands play mostly original music, but that is their only common thread.

Named after the Jewish rite of circumcision, Bris is dedicated to

Do you wish the coyote would catch the roadrunner?

Don Gray, a senior in English from Palos Heights.

Tom Nykiel, a junior in pre-major from Orland

"No, I don't, because if he caught the roadrunner, ACME would go out of business."

Rock Alford, a junior in zoology from Peoria.

Walk America

Raising cash for children with needs

By Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The director of communications for the Greater Illinois March of Dimes said thousands of babies will be saved this year because of the 1995 Walk America.

Edward Schultz said close to a million walkers will participate this April in the 25th anniversary of Walk America. He said the March of Dimes has raised $769 million for the prevention of birth defects and infant mortality in the organization's 25-year history.

Teresa Rosenthal, secretary for the Southern Illinois March of Dimes, Carbondale raised more than $6,000 last year.

"Southern Illinois' actual net was $125,000," Rosenthal said.

Rosenthal estimated that 686 walkers from Southern Illinois would participate in Walk America 1995.

Schultz said the money raised from Walk America goes to research programs at hospitals and universities all over the country. He said scientists are currently working on gene-therapy research.

"They are trying to find out the genetic causes of birth defects," said Schultz.

Schultz said in 1990 March of Dimes researchers developed Surfactant, a drug that allows premature and low birth-weight babies to leave the hospital healthy. He said Surfactant promotes growth and development in the lungs.

Iva Dell Clay, community director for the March of Dimes Southern Illinois division, said registration for Walk America begins Sunday at 12:30 p.m. at the Sycamore Shelter in Evergreen Park.

Leslie Ferraro, volunteer for the Jackson Co. March of Dimes Organizing Committee, said the 5-mile walk begins at 1 p.m. She said walkers will cross Pleasant Hill Road, proceed down Douglas Drive and continue around campus. Ferraro said the walk ends in Evergreen Park and will take about two hours to complete.

Ferraro said hot dogs, chips and soda will be offered when the walk is over. She said everyone who participates will receive a bag of goodies. Ferraro said a water bottle is one of this year's free gifts.

Individual walkers and teams may pick up sponsor sheets at the Quality of Life Office, located at 353 S. Lewis Lane, or call 529-2262 and ask for her or Tina Williams, she said. Ferraro also invited everyone to come out and join the walk even if they do not have time to pick up a sponsor sheet and get donations.

"It's not too late for people to pick up sponsor sheets," said Ferraro. "The more walkers we have, the more money we raise."

WIDB sponsors 'The Dating Game'

The right questions: Two couples pair off, win evening on the town in famous game.

By Kellie Huttes
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Love was in the air in the Student Center Roman Room Wednesday afternoon as students posed as contestants in WIDB's rendition of the popular television match-up show, "The Dating Game."

Harry Brooks spent his lunch hour nervously asking questions to three unknown women and Umar Jahi took up his time by sugar-coating answers to questions in hope of winning a free date.

All was done in the name of fun as students tried to win love and prizes.

One bachelor asked questions to a panel of three single women, and a bachelorette asked questions to males. After the questioning, they picked one contestant each to be their dates for a limousine ride and dinner at Carbondale restaurants Alcazar or Cousins. The radio station provided the prizes.

Contestants were picked by questions they submitted to the station and on applications they completed. The contest is in conjunction with WIDB's 25th anniversary.

Vanessa Anderson, WIDB promotions chair, said there were more than 40 contestant applicants.

"It was really hard to narrow the contestants down, but we based the game on their hobbies and compatibility," she said.

Harry Brooks, a junior in health care management from Dixon, was the bachelor who asked questions to three women and said he was surprised to be chosen for the show.

"I got drunk one night and wrote the questions out, and they (WIDB staff) said they liked them," he said. "I guess it wasn't my charm and good looks that got me in."

Brooks chose Laurie Wleklinski, a freshman in finance from Elgin, to be his date because of her answer to his question about concerts.

"She said she liked the Grateful Dead, and I thought that was cool because I like them," Brooks said. "The others liked Green Day and the Beastie Boys, and I don't like them too much."

Brooks and Wleklinski will have dinner at Alcazar.

Nicole Berry, a sophomore in radio and television from Chicago, was the bachelorette who had to choose one of three men for a dream date at Cousins.

Her questions included romantic evening ideas, the sweetest thing a contestant has ever done and what their favorite television show was.

Umar Jahi, a freshman in cinema and photography from Chicago, said his favorite show was "The Dating Game," as he attempted to win Berry's heart.

"I used to sit and wonder if I could ever find my love connection on the show," he said. "I guess that's why I'm here."

Although Jahi tried, Berry picked Amani Conley, a freshman in chemistry from Chicago, because of his love for the cartoon program

"Animaniacs."

Once Conley found he was chosen, he began leaping across the stage.

"I was just being dramatic," he said. "I really want the limo ride. I love limos. I'll have two or three of them when I get older."

Both couples will ride together in the limousine to dinner. Other participants in the contest received Papa John's pizza coupons.

Council approves townhouse development plan

By Michael D. DeFord
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Changing family housing needs is the reason one developer wants to construct townhouses in Southwest Carbondale.

"If there is any one place to build townhouses where no one will be bothered, it's Southwest Carbondale," said Citizens Advisory Committee member, Chairman Robert Harper.

Construction of the townhouses proposed by developer Gary Hill of Murphysboro, targets 10.43 acres at the corner of Tower Road and Chautauqua. The City Council approved the development of the townhouses Tuesday night.

Hill has requested to build 62 townhouses, which are sold individually, for $125,000.

Harper said families are changing and the townhouses would meet today's demands for different housing needs.

"I really think the housing demands of the world have changed," Harper said. "Today there are couples that work and do not have time to take care of a house or do yard work and stuff like that."

"It is those types of families that Hill is attempting to attract."

Harper said there are a number of duplexes on Chautauqua already, designed for lower income families. He said development of new duplexes would be a nice addition to the area.

Hill's zoning request for a similar project was voted down by council members last year. Richard Morris was the only council member to disagree with Hill's current proposal.

Gayle Klam, member of the Carbondale Planning Commission, who lives near the site of the townhouses, said she does not support the proposal.

"I object to it," she said. "I believe that in the long run, the development of the townhouses might slow down the development of single family housing in the area."

Klam said construction of the townhouses would encourage the development of multi-family housing, while at the same time discourage development of single family housing.

Klam said Carbondale has a bigger demand for single family housing than for multi-family housing.

"In the Southern part of Carbondale there is a big demand for single family housing," she said. "The area around Unity Point School is growing by leaps and bounds."

"If you take a look at that area's growth in the last few years, it shows you where the development of single housing should be."

playing original music that is not found in other Carbondale bands, said Josh Wise and Psycho D, two band members of Bris.

Each band member is individually influenced by different types of music, which runs the gamut of My Bloody Valentine, The Replacements and The Melvins. But Wise, guitarist and vocalist of the band, said the music of Bris isn't very much like any one of these bands.

"Our influences aren't on our sleeves — that's what's weird," he said. "The music that we all listen to (individually) doesn't really come out in the stuff we play."

Psycho D, the band's bassist, said the music of Bris is more suited to an urban environment, and their music might not go over very well in Carbondale.

"It seems to me that people down here like bands that remind them of other bands," he said. "The original sounding bands haven't gotten a good response, because there's nothing to compare them to."

Blue Lava, a name which gets its blue because some of their songs are blues influenced, will play their second Carbondale gig since the bands formation nine months ago.

Grant Harp, guitarist and vocalist for Blue Lava, said their music doesn't fit into any hard-and-fast category.

"We just write music that appeals to us — we don't shoot for any one category. We're not trying to be this type of band or that type of band," he said.

The band is influenced by the music of Jimi Hendrix, Black Sabbath, Rush and Led Zeppelin, said Harp, but their sound lies near on the heavy side of alternative.

"We're on the heavy side, not poppy alternative," he said. "We're not ultra-heavy death metal or stuff like that, though."

Waxdolls, the veteran of the three WIDB bands, will wrap up the musical showcase with their alternative pop-punk sound.

Drummer Tim Steep said the band draws influence from old punk-rock bands like the Ramones, Sex Pistols and The Replacements and modern alternative bands like The Lemonheads.

"It's really good grooving music with hooky melodies that's easy to dance to," Steep said. "The thing I really enjoy (about playing live gigs) is to see people smiling, bouncing around, dancing and looking like they're having a good time."

The band plans to go on the road this summer and is currently lining up gigs all over the country, Steep said.

"(We want to) get our music heard throughout the country, rather than just the tri-state area," he said. "This summer we're looking forward to an extensive booking schedule that will include various shows throughout the country."

The showcase is free and open to the public. WIDB will give away free prizes between sets, including CDs. WIDB will also have an information booth set up and will sell 25th anniversary T-shirts for $10.

Broadcasting

"We have started the transition of going commercial by having corporate underwriters for our station, and I'm ready to take the next step," Hargrove said. "The next step is to go to full-fledged advertising on our station."

Lee O'Brien, executive director of broadcasting services of WSIU/WUSI in Carbondale and Olney, said he doesn't think there is a simple solution for his smaller market station.

"There is not a single magic bullet that is going to solve our problems," O'Brien said, referring to the financial woes that lie ahead if federal funding ceases.

O'Brien said even limited advertising is not a viable option because a market as small as Carbondale would not generate sufficient operating funds.

James Fellows, president of the Central Education Network of Chicago, said public broadcasting needs to take a look at which direction PBS will go in the future.

Why successful programs like Sesame Street cannot provide sufficient operating funds is a question that has surfaced in the public funding debate.

"We are making real contributions to the American public and we should be proud of our accomplishments," Fellows said. "But Congress is tired of hearing the 'what about Sesame Street' issue — we need to let them know of the numerous other functions we provide."

Keith Townsend, an attorney for the Federal Communications Commission, said the funding debate for public broadcasting has been going on since the '60s.

"We need to come up with alternatives which fit our needs as a country," Townsend said. "We can't lose sight that this service is supported generically with government funds — there needs to be an alternative."

Initially the government was calling for zero funding for the next fiscal year, but community support for public broadcasting has helped the issue, Hargrove said.

"The calls, letters and complaints that have gone to Congress have made a difference in the size of the cuts that Congress had in mind," Hargrove said.

Overall the impending crisis was seen by panel members as a chance to explore other options.

"We need to transform this crisis into an opportunity," Fellows said. "There clearly is support in public broadcasting, we need to help people understand the services public broadcasting provides for the American public."

counselors' information referrals and awareness of the flood's impact upon the communities were also rated highly by the victims.

The counselors' opinions as to the effectiveness of the project were also solicited in the evaluation.

Amanda Raymon, a graduate student in social work, found that counselors came from varied backgrounds of education, field of study, years of experience and community association. She said the evaluation showed counselors believed follow-up services were effective, and encouraged clients in the areas of locating files, excessive paperwork and caseload.

Victims from each community were also asked to evaluate the level of community education.

Community meetings, word of mouth, pamphlets, brochures and newsletters were found to be the most effective methods of education. On the other hand television, radio, health fairs and youth forums were cited as media which could have been used more frequently and effectively.

Sugandhi Ransquinha, a graduate in social work, said she found that communities were educated on the nature and magnitude of flood damage, symptoms of stress and depression, importance of mental health service and availability of services.

Victims were aware of the project's referral and crisis-intervention activities and anniversary activities.

Project Recovery provided relevant, useful, comprehensive, practical and timely community education, according to the study.

costs and increase prison security.

"The moratorium handcuffs the Department of Corrections," he said. "There is no reason to limit privatization when private companies can produce a better quality product and the cost can be decreased.

"In every state where privatization has occurred, privatization has been expanded, not reduced."

However, Steve Trossman, Director of Communications for American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), said private prisons increase the risk to the public and do not result in substantial savings.

"Even though Illinois' prisons are at 170 percent capacity, and in spite of under staffing, there have only been 10 escapes in Illinois in the past four years," he said. "That's compared to private prisons, where there have been dozens and dozens of escapes.

"In an audit of Tennessee that compared private prisons to state prisons, they found the private prisons saved one percent, or 38 cents per inmate per day. And security in those prisons was much more lax."

Salvi attacked that statement, saying the AFSCME statistics were based on anecdotal information and didn't consider the big picture.

"AFSCME is afraid of the fact that they would no longer be representing the employees in these prisons," he said. "It may be another union, but it would not be AFSCME."

"Overall, the workers are paid as much as they are in state prisons. Overall, these prisons are more effective in reducing gang activity and drugs. Overall, they have a better record on escapes."

Nic Howell, spokesman for The Illinois Department of Corrections, said the department was neutral on both pieces of legislation.

Howell said that stance did not mean the department had no idea whether they would like to see prisons privatized; however, he would not comment on the department's preference.

Salvi stressed the privatization proposed under his bill would not affect prisons currently in operation, but would allow future prisons to be built and operated by private firms.

"I want to extend my assurance that this will not affect existing prisons," he said. "This bill merely takes away an antiquated moratorium on private prisons."

House Bill 554 is on the third reading in the House, which means it could be called for a vote at any time. Both Salvi and Trossman said supporters of the bill did not have enough votes to pass the bill if a vote were called immediately, but that the bill was only four votes away from passage.

Baseball's Opening Day once half-day holiday in league cities

By Steve Gietschier
The Sporting News

When Charles Spink, publisher of The Sporting News, left his office on Thursday afternoon, April 16, 1914, to attend a baseball game, he had no idea that he never would return to work. The game in question was Opening Day for the Federal League, the St. Louis Terriers hosting the Indianapolis Hoosiers. The Sporting News had endorsed the elevation of the Federal League to be a third major league, and Spink wanted to be on hand to support St. Louis Owner Eugene Handlan.

after the game Spink complimented Handlan on his team and his new ballpark. That night, Spink was stricken by an intestinal disorder that hospitalized him and then took his life on April 22. The publisher's mantle thus passed to his son, J.G. Taylor Spink, who had to abbreviate his honeymoon to get to work.

Opening Day was a big deal in baseball by 1914, but it wasn't always so. When the National League kicked off its inaugural season in 1876, home openers were scattered over six dates spread over almost three weeks. As veteran reporter Fred Lieb wrote in TSN on April 13, 1944, "For some reason, Philadelphia and Boston played the first National League game at the Quaker City April 22, three days before any other clubs. Three days later, April 25, New York, Cincinnati and Louisville opened their gates." Boston opened its home season April 29, Hartford on May 1, St. Louis on May 5 and Chicago not until May 10.

Within a few years, as Lieb recounted in 1952, "cities and towns made much more of opening day."

It was an accepted half holiday, with many stores and business houses closing up shop. In New York, it was an annual custom to parade the old Giants up Broadway in tally-hos, with a liveried trumpeter sitting next to the stovepipe hatted manager, Jim Mutrie, and giving long blasts from his horn."

"In Detroit during the '80s," Lieb wrote, "it was an opening-day practice to parade the old National League Detroit and their first game rivals to the old Russell House on Woodward Avenue, and then at a sumptuous mid-day repast stuff the players with turkey, roast beef, ham, Canadian mutton and tankards of beer. A few hours later, these rugged old-timers were ready for the day's fray."

Opening Day in Washington, D.C., took on some added glitter when the president of the United States began to attend the game and throw out the ceremonial first pitch. Historians agree that this tradition began with William Howard Taft in 1910.

Win-now Jets may pass on McNair draft

Newsday

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y.—Let's go back to Jan. 21, back to Ladd Stadium in Mobile, Ala., home of the Senior Bowl. Dick Haley, the New York Jets' player personnel director, is seated in the top row of the bleachers, blending into the crowd of 40,000. It's late in the fourth quarter, and most of the National Football League scouts are long gone, but Haley isn't budging. Steve McNair is in the game.

Haley, eyes locked on the star quarterback from Alcorn State, clearly is impressed. "He has a quick, live arm," Haley tells a reporter. "Great mobility, too ... And a real feel for the position." And then: "It's not often you get a guy with those kind of skills."

Now, here it is, three days before the draft, and there's a good chance McNair will be available to the Jets, who pick ninth. This could be their first legitimate crack at a franchise-caliber quarterback in more than a decade, but the Jets, according to NFL insiders, would pass on McNair.

Has Haley soured on McNair over the last three months? Not at all. Sources believe Haley, who is coordinating the Jets' draft now that general manager Dick Steinberg is batting stomach cancer, would be in favor of choosing McNair. Assistant general manager James Harris, a former NFL quarterback who scouted McNair extensively, also would love to see the Jets grab the most prolific passer in college football history.

Thing is, Rich Kotite, working under a win-now mandate from 80-year-old owner Leon Hess, apparently doesn't want to invest such a high pick on a developmental prospect.

Kotite, who has the final say on the draft, wants someone who can play immediately, preferably a defensive lineman.

Rams move will not disrupt pro football

By Bob Glauber
Sporting News

The Rams' flight from Anaheim, Calif., to the greener financial pastures of St. Louis was finally made official last week, after owner Georgia Frontiere agreed to fork over a few million more in shake-down money ... er, I mean relocation fees. But for all the National Football League's public hand-wringing over the issue, the league's geographical landscape hasn't changed all that much.

Really, Los Angeles still has the same number of pro football teams it had from 1946 through '81. St. Louis once again has a woefully mismanaged franchise—something the city experienced when Bill Bidwill's Cardinals were there from 1960 through '87. And the NFL proved once again it is powerless to impose its will on a team that chooses to pull up stakes and move to another locale.

And in at least one respect, the league is a far more stable place than it was only a few weeks ago. After all, could you have imagined that Los Angeles Raiders Managing General Partner Al Davis would keep his team right where it is and discontinue his flirtations with Baltimore, Oakland, Calif., Sacramento, Calif., or any other city willing to house his team? Or, could you have envisioned Los Angeles getting a sparkling new stadium out of this mess?

Not that all these reasons are enough to salve the wounds of devoted Rams fans in Southern California—yes, some of them are still out there, despite all those empty seats at Anaheim Stadium you saw the last few seasons. This was a staggering blow to a group that for nearly half a century had a team that either teased its faithful with championship near-misses or kept fans home with a series of abysmal performances.

But let's face it. This is not the beginning of the end of the NFL's world as we know it, but merely the continuation of a trend that has affected professional sports franchises throughout the 20th century. The fact is teams come and teams go, whether it's baseball's Dodgers and Giants moving to California from New York, or the Colts leaving Baltimore for Indianapolis.

If the financial climate is right and the owner is willing, the move is made. The Rams are simply the most recent example of this reality, painful as it may be to what's left of the team's fan base in Los Angeles.

And no matter how hard professional leagues attempt to coerce teams into staying put, there's nothing they can do to prevent such moves. You see, in America there's this thing called antitrust law. It says business owners have the right to set up shop wherever they please, be it in Los Angeles, St. Louis or Jackson Hole, Wyo., and that no one—not even a powerful group of football owners—can prevent such a move.

singles flights, respectively.

"Right now, we will need a complete team effort," said Auld. "I don't think any one person can stand out. When one person is down, the others will pick up the slack."

"It's encouraging for me to see the freshmen improve over the year," she said.

"We have a good, competitive group that won't back down, and seems to rise to the occasion. I just told them to 'go out and go for it.' 'Take one match at a time and don't look back.'"

Spots four through eleven on the coaches poll are occupied by Southwest Missouri (78 ballots), Creighton (63), Tulsa (55), Illinois State (50), Evansville (49), Indiana State (40), Bradley (20), and Northern Iowa (12).

Barons back on track since departure of MJ

By Mal Florence
Los Angeles Times

The Birmingham Barons played their first home game Friday night without a certain .200-hitting outfielder named Michael Jordan, who chose to play again in the NBA.

So how are the baseball fans reacting to life after Jordan, who attracted large crowds last year.

"It's not as much a circus atmosphere," said Kevan Kirkpatrick of Tuscaloosa.

John Sanderson, a longtime Barons fan, added his own spin:

"I think Michael is the greatest basketball player, but as far as where baseball meets the pavement, he was a minus to the Barons."

"I feel the Barons were playing with eight players all year."

a run scored. Danny Esplin had three hits and Smith, Mark Russell and Jay Mansavage had two hits apiece.

Callahan said that after the 20 run and 22 hit outburst, coupled with the 16 attack, Wednesday the offense is hot going into this weekend's MVC action at Indiana St.

"I hope we will be going in with some confidence offensively," he said. "We are a very streaky hitting team as sometimes the top of the order is hitting well, while at other times it's the middle or the bottom."

"Hopefully we can take these last two games and build on them offensively."

Dawgs toppled by Indians, 8-6

3-run Arkansas St. 7th does in SIUC

By Doug Durso
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC baseball team came from behind once, but could not do it again as the Salukis fell to Arkansas St. 8-6. Wednesday at Abe Martin Field.

After trailing 4-0 after the first inning, the Dawgs came back in the third to take a 6-4 lead, but fell behind 8-6 after the Indians scored three runs in the seventh.

Saluki baseball coach Dan Callahan said he thought that the SIUC offense did well against Arkansas St.

"We really hit the ball well," he said. "We did a good job of hitting behind runners and not trying to get back all the runs at once."

"I don't know how we didn't score more than six runs, because we hit the ball well."

The Dawgs out-hit Arkansas St. 16-14, but stranded 11 base runners including leaving the bases loaded in the fifth and seventh innings.

After falling behind 4-0 in the first inning the Dawgs strung together eight hits in the third inning for six runs.

The big blow came from center-fielder Jason Smith, who hit an 0-2 pitch to right field for a two-run triple.

The Indians scored a single tally in the fifth inning and then put together three runs off of SIUC starter David Piazza and Mike Blang.

"I had Jason Kline and Danny Davis available, but I told myself I wasn't going to worry about the lefty, lefty percentages," he said.

"It seems that if I ever made the right decision in that situation I would kiel over and die."

Arkansas St. hurler Keith Horn came in seventh inning and pitched two and two-thirds innings and struck out five Saluki batters.

"He (Horn) was just awesome," Callahan said. "I don't know if he is their closer but he came in and just put the game away."

Piazza pitched six and a third innings giving up seven runs on 11 hits to drop his record to 1-2 on the year.

The Dawgs drop to 16-19 on the year, while Arkansas St. improves to 30-13.

Leading the offensive attack for the Salukis was Craig Shelton, who went four-for-four with an RBI and

Women's netters gearing up for MVC tournament

By Cynthia Sheets
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC women's tennis team will have to overcome favorite Wichita State and the historically dominant Drake to capture the Missouri Valley Conference Tournament title on Sunday at the Southwest Missouri State University Tennis Courts in Springfield, Mo.

According to the MVC Women's Tennis Coaches Poll released Wednesday, Wichita State tops the list with 107 votes (7 first place votes), Drake second with 103 votes (3), and SIUC third with 83 ballot.

"Being No. 3 is a good spot for us," said SIUC women's tennis coach Judy Auld. "It will come down to how well we play this weekend."

Wichita State, defending MVC champions, brings freshman Lisa Field into the tourney ranked 100th in the nation according to the Rolex Collegiate Rankings. Field and fellow senior JoEllen Walker combine for a powerful doubles duo, ranking 14th nationally.

With a title each year from 1989 to 1993, the Drake Bulldogs look to recapture the title this year for the sixth time in less than ten years. The Bulldogs have Nikki Lielze, sophomores Lindsay Bell and Meredith Lavelle, and freshman Meredith Motte holding 20 plus wins each for the spring season.

"We had some matches against both Wichita and Drake that could have gone either way," Auld said. "These two teams are the only teams that have beaten us this year."

Coming in at the No. 3 position, Southern boasts the youngest tennis team in school history, although the 11-6 record the Salukis have fashioned for the season does not reflect it.

Since the last MVC title won in 1985, the Saluki netters rest their title hopes this year on the shoulders of several underclassmen.

Sophomore Liz Gardner, from Essex, England, recorded a 13-match winning streak during the middle of spring competition. The lefty also earned respect with a 28-10 mark in the No. 2 singles flight this season.

Freshman Sanem Berksoy proved her worth by earning the MVC Athlete of the Week in late March, following a 5-0 road trip record in Hilton Head, N.C., and captured the most single wins by an SIUC player since 1987. Berksoy goes into the tourney with 29 wins.

Fellow freshmen Molly Card and Helen Johnson also bring over 20 individual wins to tournament action and will be competing in the No. 3 and 5

Men's golf team continues success at Bradley

They must use some special fertilizer up there in Pekin.

What else would explain the SIUC men's golf team's constant success at the Bradley hosted tournament on the Lick Creek Golf Course greens, including a second-place finish Tuesday?

The Salukis' success this week keeps the "success-in-Pekin" streak alive as the team managed a first-place finish out of 20 teams in last spring's visit, and finished fourth in a field of 18 last fall.

Although the slate of teams on the par-72 course does not serve up the stiff competition the Salukis see on other parts of their schedule, SIUC traditionally puts out its best individual performances of the season at the Bradley Invitational.

"There really isn't anything special," Saluki head coach Gene Shaneyfelt said. "We had been fortunate enough to win (the tournament) last year. Any time you have success somewhere in the past, whether you're riding in the Indy 500 or playing the Masters, it eases tension in the mind and in the body."

The Salukis shot a three-round total 939, which was 75 over par, while St. Ambrose (Minn.) finished first at 65 over par.

SIUC junior Quinn McClure produced one of his best outputs of the season by shooting a 78 and a 76 on an overcast windless Monday, and a 76 on Tuesday, when winds were gusting up to 50 m.p.h., to finish the tournament 14 over par, which was fourth best out of 60 individuals.

"He didn't put very well, but he focused well," Shaneyfelt said. "Anyone who broke 80 (Tuesday) played well."

McClure's 76-stroke performance on Tuesday tied him for the best final-round score.

The Salukis shot 25 over par the first round, 21 over par in the second round, and 38 over par in the final round.

St. Ambrose's Chris Wilkins placed had the best tournament finishing 10 over par.

Saluki freshman Greg Goodwin also fared well by finishing in 10th place at 20 over par. Senior Steve Irish finished 23 over par for the Salukis, while freshman Aaron Pieper totaled 26 over par, which was 10 strokes better than his senior brother and teammate Erik.

SIUC will travel to Des Moines and play 54 holes at the Drake Relays Classic at Echo Valley Golf Club Apr. 27-28. The Salukis won the meet last spring.

The Missouri Valley Conference Championships begin May 8. A sight is yet to be announced. The Salukis finished third out the nine-team field last spring. No conference tournament was held last fall.
