Police have no suspects in case

INVESTIGATION:
FBI, local authorities search car for clues.

Police have no suspects in a homicide that occurred Tuesday, but the victim's rental car was found Wednesday just blocks away from where his body was found, Jackson County Sheriff Bill Kilquist says.

Kilquist said Jerome Douglas Townsend's rental car was discovered Wednesday at Brookside Manor, 1200 E. Grand Ave. On Tuesday, Townsend's body was discovered by a passerby at 12:10 p.m. in Snider Hill Cemetery on the southeast side of town, located a few blocks southwest of Brookside Manor apartment complex.

Tuesday's apparent homicide marked the fourth homicide in Carbondale in less than a year. One of the murders, that of Connie Cole-Holmes, also occurred on the southeast side of town in June, and no arrests have been made in that case.

"We don't believe there's any connection (between the deaths of Townsend and Cole-Holmes) at this time," Kilquist said.

Townsend, 40, resided at a trailer at 230 Hanseman St., which is just about six blocks north of the cemetery. Kilquist said police do not know where Townsend was killed, and that he was last seen alive sometime within 12 hours of when his body was found.

An autopsy was conducted Wednesday, but Kilquist said the results most likely will not be released to the public.

"I am not going to try the case in the media," he said. "You know he was murdered. When Nicole Brown Simpson was killed, I didn't need to know she had her throat cut to her spine. "I just needed to know she was killed."

Local media reported Wednesday that Townsend is survived by a 5-year-old daughter, and he was charged in November with two counts of aggravated battery.

Police had asked for the public's assistance in locating Townsend's Plymouth Neon Tuesday, and police located the vehicle at about 12:13 a.m. Wednesday.

Kilquist said the vehicle was secured and moved to the Jackson County Sheriff's Department, where it is being processed by the Illinois State Crime Laboratory.

Investigators from the sheriff's department, FBI and Carbondale and Murphysboro police departments are working on the case.

Kilquist said anyone having any information about the Townsend should call the Jackson County Sheriff's Department at 687-1303.

"We probably have 15 people working on the case, and we've talked to hundreds of citizens so far," Kilquist said. "We've conducted neighborhood canvasses, and we're running down all sorts of leads."

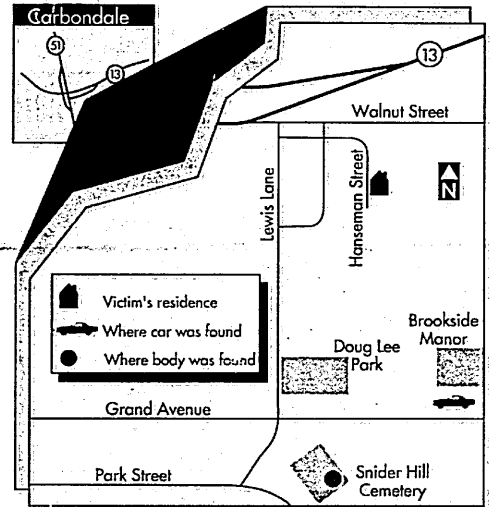

Tuesday's apparent homicide is the fourth homicide in Carbondale since June 1996. In June, Cole-Holmes, a 34-year-old mother of two, died of severe trauma to the head in her home at 402 Walker St. Police ruled the death a homicide, but no arrests have been made.

Union may cost all SIUC faculty

FAIR SHARE: Union administrators to decide if all faculty must pay for representation.

WILLIAM HATFIELD
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

All SIUC faculty who are not members of the faculty union could have money deducted from their pay for services provided by the union if the union and administrators agree to do so, an administrator says.

William Capie, associate vice chancellor for administration and spokesman for SIUC on negotiations with the union, said "fair share" is a fee that charges all faculty for union representation.

"Union dues are voluntary," Capie said, "whereas fair share would be an assessment on an involuntary basis to those non-dues-paying members for the representation they receive."

He said although fair share will not necessarily be a part of the contract, it is a mandatory subject of bargaining and could be imposed on faculty after contract negotiations if both administration and the union agree to impose it during contract negotiations.

"We have to negotiate in good faith by law with the union if they bring this as an issue to the table," Capie said. "It wouldn't come into effect until we had a full, signed agreement."

Contract negotiations are set to begin in March, and they could take up to 18 months.

Capie said administration representatives have not developed a bargaining position on fair share yet because they do not

New safety service to start

NIGHT ESCORTS:
Inexpensive program to be available in fall.

TRAVIS DE NEAL
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Existing SIUC personnel and equipment could be used for a late-night student escort service as soon as next fall, making student government's idea a reality without costing much, an administrator says.

"We're trying to get something started using our current campus safety grad assistant and not spend any big dollars in the process," said Jean Paratore, associate vice chancellor of Student Affairs and dean of students.

When the program is started, it will use the same dispatch service for the Women's Night Transit Service, she said, while the campus safety graduate assistant will coordinate volunteers.

In November, Undergraduate Student Government voted to recommend that SIUC spend $25,000 to hire professionals for student escorts, which senators said was a much-needed service.

Paratore said the proposed program's use of unpaid volunteers, the transit service's dispatch line and Travel Service's communications equipment will keep its costs lower than what USG's proposal called for. Paratore said she did not know an exact cost. Nighttime escort programs have been available at certain housing areas, but the programs never have lasted. Paratore said she anticipates the proposed program will be successful because it would be available to students on all parts of campus, unlike programs in the past.

Tony Earles, Thompson Point coordinator of resident life, said until four years ago, the Safe and Friendly Escorts program sent students to walk other students to and from Thompson Point.

Lack of use and the expense of escorts' background checks caused the service to be discontinued, Earles said.

"We were only getting about 10 to 20 calls per semester," Earles said. "We also received a form telling us we were in a liable position."

TICKLING IVORIES: SIUC associate professor of music Donald Beattie practices Wednesday for Friday's fund-raising concert in the Old Baptist Foundation Chapel Recital Hall.

Playing with heart

BEATTIE'S OPUS: Music professor aims to raise funds with concert.

BRETT WILCOXSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Effective fund raising and 12 hours of enjoyable music will be the goals this Valentine's Day as numerous pianists from the area take part in a concert in the Old Baptist Foundation Chapel Recital Hall from noon until midnight to benefit SIUC School of Music students.

The concert, titled "Mr. Beattie's Opus," is an attempt by Donald Beattie, an SIUC associate professor of music and composer of several published piano works, to raise $12,000 toward the purchase of a new Baldwin keyboard laboratory for the School of Music.

Beattie said the equipment in the current laboratory was purchased around 1974 and is terribly out-of-date.

"We need these instruments," he said. "The old lab is so old that Mozart and Beethoven may have played there."

Beattie said various community members will be performing at the concert. He said there will be SIUC School of Music faculty and students, as well as several of his personal students and several members of the community.

Beattie said there are 88 pianists scheduled to play in the 12-hour concert. He said they plan to play a wide variety of music.

"There'll be a lot of classical music," he said. "There will also be some popular music, like some from The Beatles and even a ragtime piece."

Between 11 p.m. and midnight, Beattie said he plans to treat spectators to a special treat. He said that hour will feature piano music and singing from his published works.

The concert will be an informal event, and Beattie said people are free to come and go anytime. He said donations of any amount will be accepted at the door.

In 1987, Beattie took part in a

Former dean dies

VISIONARY: SIUC men's dean, who helped in growth of University, dies at 79.

DAVE ARMSTRONG
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Isaac Clark Davis, a former SIUC Dean of Men and SIUC professor, died at his Carbondale home Wednesday at the age of 79.

Davis, who served the University in various capacities from 1949 to 1971, was also a 1939 graduate of SIUC. Davis, who was born in Benion, had degrees from both SIUC and Indiana University.

Following an honorable discharge from the military and a job in student affairs at Purdue University, Davis returned to SIUC to serve as Dean of Men in 1949.

The Dean of Men was a position that was in charge of student employment, student loans, student social programs and helping students in violation of academic or social codes. He worked jointly with the Dean of Women.

Davis then served as director of Student Affairs until he was appointed as special assistant to the vice president for student and area service in 1964.

Davis was also a professor in the Department of Higher Education. He retired from teaching in 1976. In 1979 he received the Alumni Achievement award for his distinguished service at SIUC.

His son Robert Davis said he remembers his father as a visionary.

"He was a dreamer, a real dandy," Robert said. "He was instrumental in helping to open Thompson Point, and making sure it was near the lake. He helped ban cars at SIU because he hoped it would make students more equal. He wanted students to meet new people and talk to them as they walked to class, instead of driving by each other."

Vice President for Financial Affairs Don Wilson, a former colleague of Isaac Davis, said he was one of the key men in the growth of SIUC.

"He was one of the people most involved in the University," Wilson said. "He was an outstanding individual, very classy and professional. He helped convert SIUC from a 5,000 student teaching college into the large research university it is today. He simply believed in students."

Jack Graham, a professor emeritus of higher education and personal friend of Davis for 46 years, said he also remembers Davis as a force in the development of the University.

Graham said construction of the House leaders suspend ethics complaints

House Republican and Democratic leaders have agreed to a moratorium on filing ethics complaints until April 11 to give a 12-member task force time to consider changes to the ethics process, strained nearly to the breaking point by the case against House Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.).

Armed and House Minority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., made the announcement Wednesday on the House floor.

Among issues the task force is likely to consider is whether the standards for filing complaints should be changed and whether ethics investigations last too long. The Gingrich case took more than two years.

Lack of Saudi cooperation about bomb concerns FBI

The FBI still has "ongoing and serious concerns" about lack of Saudi cooperation in the June 1996 bombing of a U.S. military housing complex, nearly three weeks after the attorney general and FBI director publicly complained about the problem, a senior FBI official told Congress Wednesday.

Providing the most detailed public account so far of the FBI's frustrations in probing the blast at the Khobar Towers complex in Dhahran, Assistant FBI Director Robert M. Bryant said the Saudi Arabian government has prevented FBI investigators from interviewing any civilians who witnessed or may have been involved in the bombing.

Bryant said that without sufficient data in hand, the question of whether another nation was responsible for the blast — as opposed to a group of Saudi dissidents — is "still an open question."

Talking on cellular phone shown to cause accidents

Talking on a cellular phone while driving may quadruple a person's risk of having a serious auto accident, a new study has found.

The research, reported in Thursday's issue of The New England Journal of Medicine, examined crash reports and telephone billing records of several hundred Canadian drivers with cell phones who had collisions during a 14-month period. Within a few minutes after beginning a call in their cars, drivers were 4.3 times more likely to have an accident than they were when their phones were not in use.

The study does not prove that cell phones cause accidents; it only indicates that use is associated with increased risk.

Local surgeon admits guilt

PENDING: Carbondale doctor to remain on hospital staff during narcotics investigation.

WILLIAM HATFIELD
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A local surgeon, who pled guilty to one count of production of cannabis Friday, will remain on staff at Memorial Hospital of Carbondale, pending an investigation, a hospital official says.

George Maroney, a hospital administrator, said Michael K. Delaney, an ear, nose and throat surgeon at Memorial Hospital of Carbondale, will remain on staff pending the completion of the Illinois Department of Professional Regulation's investigation of the incident.

"I am not going to be an additional judge in this matter," Maroney said. "There have been no problems with his care of his patients, and this still has no impact on his ability to practice medicine."

Maroney said Delaney will remain with the hospital unless the department revokes his medical license or places it on probation making him unable to practice medicine at the hospital.

Maroney said the investigation could be a "very long process."

"It could be a half a year before they act," Maroney said. "There is no way to predict how long the state will take."

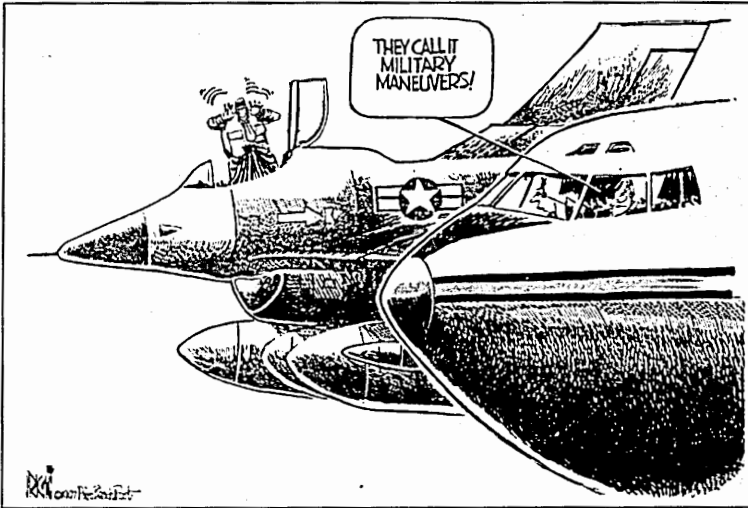

Delaney, 50, of 73 Upper Brush Hill Road, was arrested in September by officers of the Southern Illinois Enforcement Group, a police narcotics unit, after he was observed tending 33 marijuana plants behind his residence.

He pled guilty at Murphysboro Courthouse Friday.

Richard E. White, Delaney's attorney, was unavailable for comment.

Delaney could face a prison sentence of five years or probation of two years and a $10,000 fine.

Jackson County States Attorney Mike Wepsiec said the sentencing hearing likely will be in mid-March.

Being a veg-head not so bad

Sunday marked the start of Vegetarian Awareness Week in Carbondale. From Feb. 9-16, a number of local businesses, restaurants and community groups will be joining with the SIUC Student Environmental Council to help raise awareness on the issues surrounding vegetarianism.

"Our goal is just to get as much information out as possible. We're hoping we can educate people on all the benefits — there are so many benefits to vegetarianism," says Janet Donaghue, one of the main organizers of the week's events.

Benefits include better health and longer life, an environmental-friendly diet, and (believe or not) a greater variety in the meals you eat.

The week kicked off with a dinner and cooking workshop on Sunday and continues with various free films, presentations, slide shows, skits and guest speakers at SIUC. Subjects covered will include cooking, health and environmental issues, as well as spiritual aspects of a meat-free diet. Saturday from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., the Sufi community, in conjunction with the Senior Adult Service Center of Carbondale, will be hosting "Soul of a Rose," a benefit vegetarian dinner at the Unitarian Church, 301 E. Elm St. A chef from New York will prepare the dinner, and live music will accompany the dinner. A donation of $7 is suggested, $5 for students. Tickets are available at the Neighborhood Co-op, Senior Adult Service Center, the School of the Prophets, or at the door. All proceeds will go to the Sufi Park Organic Community Garden on Springer Street.

"I think this is part of a movement towards community wellness," says Donaghue. "In dorms, they've agreed to do a mostly vegetarian menu for the week, which I think is great. They've never done anything like this. Many students don't really have a choice. This week the dorm cafeterias will be serving everything from veggie burgers to vegetarian soups and salads."

Twenty-five local restaurants have also agreed to get in on the act advertising Vegetarian Awareness Week and highlighting their vegetarian dishes. Carbondale restaurants are not alone in recognizing the growing numbers of vegetarian diners walking through their doors. During the last several years, the National Restaurant Association has asked its 150,000 members to feature meatless entrees or to add whole vegetarian sections on their menus. A nationwide Gallup poll reported that one out of every three diners will order vegetarian dishes if available. Eighty-eight percent of those surveyed by Gallup cited health as the main reason for choosing vegetarian meals. One recent survey found that 12.5 million people in the United States are vegetarian.

Vegetarianism is not merely what's left on the plate when the meat is removed. "In actuality, there is a wide variety of vegetarian food, and the choices keep growing," Donaghue says. "When I first became a vegetarian, I leaned toward breads and cheeses, and then I had to realize that I needed a more balanced diet. I've discovered all sorts of interesting food that I didn't even know about. I'm discovering that I like seaweed. It's odd, but I love it."

In addition to letting people sample great-tasting food, Vegetarian Awareness Week is designed to de-bunk various myths about a meat-free diet, including concerns about protein, calcium, iron and various vitamins. All essential diet needs easily can be met, when vegetarians take the time and care to eat consciously, aware of the foods they put into their bodies. People attending the week's events will have a chance to learn about all aspects of vegetarianism, from health to lifestyle issues.

It's human nature — I hope — to want to raise your awareness about certain things. If people say, "Hey, eating meat is bad for your health, it's bad for the environment," I would hope people would want to find out more about it. We're not trying to beat people over the head with it. We're not trying to say, "You should be a vegetarian, and if you're not a vegetarian, you're bad." We're just trying to educate to people to look at their lifestyle and options.

When I became a vegetarian a few years ago, I just felt better — I felt lighter and clearer. I have more energy. I think your attitude toward food completely changes. You have more respect for your food, for life in general. I've had that experience, and I want to share that with others.

Faculty's telemarketing plan could help retention numbers

IT SEEMS EVERYONE IS DOING HIS OR HER part to recruit new students. Students are on task forces that address the issue, and now faculty members are telemarketing potential students.

The novel concept of talking to potential students about coming to campus can be extended to students who are caught in the system and who sometimes can become confused about whether to stay or leave SIUC.

Admissions and Records officials contend that this is not an act of desperation but just a new technique in getting students on campus. But what they are overlooking, once students get here, is a way to keep them.

RETENTION AND RECRUITMENT ARE TWO important areas that Chancellor Don Beggs is focused on, and faculty members should take up the fight as well.

While they talk to students who have expressed interest in coming to campus and into a particular department, maybe faculty members also should spend some time to call or talk to those students in their departments or classes who are not doing so well in their classes or seem unsatisfied with their studies.

MAYBE MORE COMMUNICATION BETWEEN the teachers and the students would help increase retention by communicating problems with students' classes or their campus experiences. Faculty members are not our surrogate parents, and they should not be asked to be counselors, but if a faculty member would convince only one student a semester to stay at SIUC, just think of the increase it would make in retention.

Faculty members are becoming ambassadors for the University and their departments.

Faculty members, essentially, have been recruited to aid in fighting on the front line against decreasing enrollment.

That same idea of attracting students should be applied to keeping students.

"Our Word" represents a consensus of the Daily Egyptian editorial board.

Weight-room etiquette matter of safety as well as manners

Dear Editor:

We are writing to educate those who utilize the Recreation Center weight room about a few points of proper etiquette one should follow while using a weight room. The biggest problem is the blatant disregard for safety and equipment by patrons. By the end of the evening, literally tons of weight-lifting equipment are scattered from one end of the room to the other. Do people not realize how unsafe this is? The Recreation Center has posted several signs addressing this problem to no avail. Not only is this disrespectful, it is outright laziness on the part of the users.

Here is the way we see it. If you are big and bad enough to take a 50- or 100-pound bar/dumbbell to the other side of the room, you are big and bad enough to bring it back and rack it for the next person.

The most outrageous part of the problem is that most people leave equipment on the floor right next to the racks. There are weight racks adjacent to every major piece of equipment in the room. What is so hard about racking your weight after you are done?

The following are also valid points of etiquette. No weights or dumbbells in the weight room (except for bumper plates) were meant to be dropped from any height. Guess what? Dumbbells, bars and plates crack and break easily when dropped on a rubberized floor. Dropping weights reduces the life of the weights and the floor. Also, if you are going to leave two pounds of sweat on a bench, wipe it up for the next person. Finally, before showing someone how to exercise, make sure you know how to exerercise properly.

If anyone has questions about any of this, see us in the weight room. We are the people searching for equipment and mashing dumbbells then putting it away after we use it.

You can also ask the employees who come in to pick up the weights at night.

Condom access important

Dear Editor:

This past Friday night I went to Wal-Mart, and while I was in the pharmacy section, I too, noticed that condoms are being contained in a glass case.

I understand that Wal-Mart believes they must do this to protect their interests, but how many people are not going to be protected because of this new policy?

If people are forced to ask for assistance to buy condoms, many would rather suffer the consequences of not using protection than suffer the embarrassment of having someone get their condoms out of a locked case and carry them to the front of the store for them.

I could argue the point, though, that maybe if someone is too embarrassed to buy condoms, then maybe he or she does not need to be having sex. Unfortunately, that is not practical — they are having sex, and they have the right to be protected when they do.

And what about those who need condoms after 7 p.m. when the pharmacy closes? Do they have to resort to the condom machines in gas station bathrooms? It is common for these machines to have metal bars running through the center of the packages to hold them in place, puncturing the condoms and making them worthless.

By locking up the condoms, it appears Wal-Mart is sending us the message that it does not care about the welfare of the community that supports its store.

Wal-Mart claims it is losing money from the condoms being stolen, but I believe it will lose even more money because of the people who will not be able to buy condoms in the store.

I intend to start a petition to be sent to Wal-Mart to have condoms made available at all times to those who need them when it is convenient for them and not for Wal-Mart. It would be ideal to have the condoms back out in the open so that we who do not steal will have our privacy intact.

Common courtesy dying art

There is a plethora of human acts that totally confuse me. Because I am aware that I am an upright species with inner issues, I try to maintain an open mind and have compassion for those who know no better. However, the lack of my fellow human beings' sense of common courtesy offends me to no end, and so I must unleash my rage.

It seems that either my family is the only one who has stressed to its members the concept of common courtesy, or the majority of those among us just don't give a flying feather bird about common courtesy: things like staying to the right when walking down a corridor where traffic is bi-directional, saying "thank you" when someone holds a door open for you, the concept of a line in places such as McDonald's or saying sorry when you bump a person. But my all-time pet peeve is those who have no concept of the phrase "excuse me."

As I walk down the aisles of grocery stores, I cannot help but notice those who ultimately will knock items off the shelves in an attempt not to face their phobia of the two words "excuse me." These people squeeze into the most obscure places, only missing physical harm by an inch. They will risk being late to an important meeting or class, sullenly walking behind you and trying to get around you, failing but keeping silent. Why? All because the two words "excuse me" have traumatized them so much in the past that the phrase's very echo will cause them to have convulsions.

I know this may seem like a small thing to most people, but I had to add my two cents. If we tried to do the little things that are the epitome of human soul (humanity), then a lot of the senseless acts of violence and outbursts by those fed up with ignorance could be cut down a peg or two.

Again, this may seem like a small thing to many, but I guarantee, if the next time you say "thank you" to someone for holding a door or "excuse me" because you just stepped on someone's corn-ridden toe, they'll be so surprised that they'll forget all about the long stream of obscenities they have on reserve for people just like yourself. So go ahead — practice common courtesy. I promise, it will not hurt.

Catholics observe beginning of Lent

ASH WEDNESDAY: Some students cut back on vices during Catholic holiday.

ANNETTE BARR
DE FEATURES EDITOR

Ash Wednesday is a day when Roman Catholics begin 40 days of repentance, fasting and prayer.

Lent, which begins 40 days before Easter, symbolizes the 40 days Jesus Christ spent in the desert fasting and praying before he began his public ministry.

The Rev. Cecil Pickert, chaplain of the Newman Center, 715 S. Washington St., said Lent historically has been a preparation time for baptism and new life.

"It's really meant to be a time of growth, like spring," Pickert said. "Lent is an old Anglo-Saxon word meaning spring."

During mass on Ash Wednesday, parishioners' foreheads are marked with ashes in the sign of a cross. The ashes are the remains of burnt palms from the previous year's Palm Sunday.

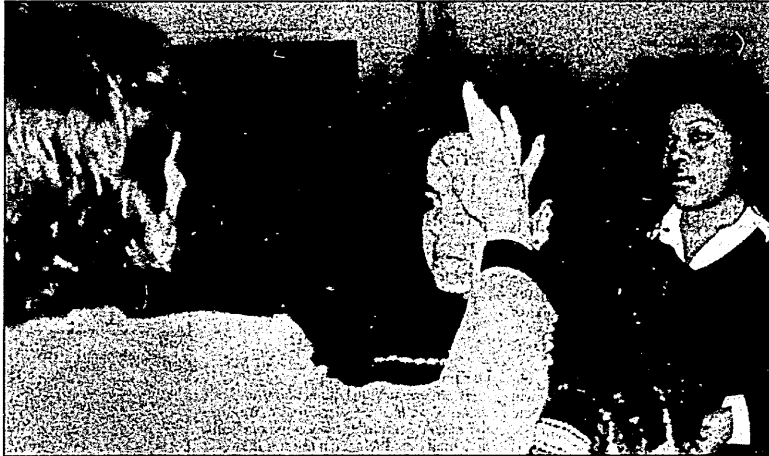

Pickert said ashes have been a universal symbol of repentance pre-dating Christianity.

When the ashes are applied to Roman Catholic's foreheads, Pickert said he recites, "Turn away from sin, and be faithful to the gospel."

Pickert said some people look at Lent differently than others.

"It does mean different things to different people, and to that person it is perfectly valid and legitimate," he said.

John Donahue, a senior in electrical engineering technology from Peru, Ill., said for him, Lent is a time for repentance and forgiveness.

"Lent symbolizes how we came from ashes and how we will return to ashes," Donahue said. "It kind of humbles us."

Pickert said Roman Catholics usually try to cut back on large meals and snacks, as well as abstain from meat on Ash Wednesday and every Friday during Lent.

He said traditionally, people either have tried to give up or cut back on such vices as alcohol and cigarettes, although some people just try to be better people.

Donahue said because he does not have a lot of bad habits, he does not give anything up, but instead tries to be a better person.

"I try to be friendlier and help people out," he said. "I try to be the best I can be."

When Donahue was a child, he said he used to give up candy and cut back on ice cream and afternoon snacks.

"My family and I would take our extra money that we saved from not buying ice cream and candy, put it all together and give it to the church," he said.

Sade Akisanya, a junior in marketing from South Holland, also knows what it is like to give up something she likes.

"I'm giving up pop because I like it a lot," Akisanya said. "Lent is a time for me to ask for mercy from God."

However, Pickert said there is enough stress and tension in modern life that people do not have to look around for something to give up.

"We don't have to go looking for penance," he said. "If we accept what's tossed in our way kindly and patiently, that's enough."

Korean official asks for asylum

RETREAT: Top ranked North Korean official asks to defect to South Korea.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

BEIJING—Hwang Jang Yop, one of North Korea's most senior officials with close political and family connections to the Pyongyang regime, strode into the South Korean consulate here Wednesday and reportedly demanded political asylum.

The apparent defection of Hwang, 72, one of the main architects of the stridently nationalistic North Korean political ideology and a former president of North Korea's leading university, was reported by South Korean envoys in Beijing and created a prickly diplomatic dilemma for the Chinese.

Hwang, married to a niece of the late North Korean dictator Kim Il Sung would be the most senior North Korean leader ever to defect to the south, if he gets there.

South Korea, which has developed important economic stakes in China since it was officially recognized by the Beijing regime in 1992, is expected to ask that Hwang be allowed to travel to Seoul, where he could provide invaluable intelligence on the inner workings of the Pyongyang regime and ruling family.

But North Korea, China's closest Communist ally, has a repatriation agreement with the Beijing government that covers political defectors.

Tensions between the countries developed over North Korea's production of a nuclear weapons program.

know if it will become an issue.

James Sullivan, IEA/NEA faculty union president, also said there has been no official decision to implement fair share.

"As with many other items that will be discussed, for us as an association to go that way is yet to be determined," Sullivan said. "It is a decision the association is far from making."

Capie said generally, the cost of fair share is 90 percent to 95 percent of the cost of union dues. The IEA/NEA dues for an academic year are normally $407, but until the first contract is reached, dues are 50 percent of the annual dues, or about $200.

Capie said the fair share deductions would not make the University a closed shop, a system in which all faculty must join the union.

"You don't have to have any mandatory association with the union (under fair share)," Capie said. "It just says you are going to have to pay for the services the union provides as a member of the unit."

Capie said a fair share agreement is not usually caused by low union membership.

"It doesn't necessarily have to do with the level of membership at all," Capie said. "Sometimes there are fair share agreements where only one person hasn't joined the union, and fair share will be invoked."

Todd Winters, an associate professor of animal science, food and nutrition and a faculty union member, said he thinks fair share will be imposed.

"Every other university that has collective bargaining has done it," Winters said. "The majority voted for this, and they are going to get the benefits if they are members or not."

"If everyone expects to get benefits, then everyone should help out."

Carl Hausler, an associate professor of animal science, food and nutrition, said although the majority of faculty did vote for collective bargaining in November, he does not think those philosophically opposed to the union should have to contribute to it.

"If you vote Republican and the Democrats win, that doesn't mean you have to contribute to the Democrats," Hausler said. "It's not a very good situation when the majority can tell the others what they have to pay and don't have to pay."

Jim Clark, the IEA/NEA representative assigned to the faculty union, said fair share is a common practice.

"It is a legitimate pursuit of public policy to require people who enjoy the benefits of a service to pay for that," Clark said.

He said faculty at John A. Logan Community College in Carterville have had collective bargaining for 25 years and have a fair share policy.

Clark said faculty who object to a fair share payment for political or religious reasons can file an objection with the Illinois Education Labor Relations Board.

He said those who object for political reasons could receive a rebate of some of the money from the board for money used for lobbying and political activities.

Clark said the fair share payment for those who object for religious reasons might be given to a charity agreed upon by administration and the union.

Thomas Schill, a psychology professor, said because the majority of faculty voted for the union, they should pay for its services.

"It costs money for representation, and everyone ought to kick in their fair share."

and we needed to do security checks on all of our escorts.

"To continue the program would have been too much money."

In the 1980s, similar night safety programs existed for students at University Park.

Brush Towers started a program in 1981 that used a volunteer system. In 1984, other halls at University Park began programs that also used volunteer students.

Students requesting an escort telephoned their residence hall escort station when they needed escorts or wrote written requests in advance.

Both programs required the volunteers to wear identifying buttons or bracelets.

Like Safe and Friendly Escorts, those services were not used often and eventually ended.

Paratore said the University is examining escort programs at other universities to prepare for SIUC's program.

"We are checking out other schools to see how their programs work, their procedures, and we are looking at copies of their volunteer-training manuals," Paratore said. "We don't want to reinvent the wheel."

Though the program will not begin until at least fall 1997, the time spent researching the issue will ensure the program's quality, she said.

"We can't just throw it together," she said. "It's not something we can put together in two weeks or a month."

"We need to take the time to do it right so we won't be putting anyone at risk."

Though the cost of background checks for volunteers contributed to the end of the Safe and Friendly Escorts, Paratore said that will not be a problem for the new program.

"(SIUC Police) Sgt. (Nelson) Ferry said his department could help with training the volunteers and performing background checks," she said.

"The campus safety fee board is willing to pay for background checks."

Sgt. Ferry, director of crime prevention for the Department of Public Safety, said three levels of background checks could be performed on potential volunteer escorts.

"There could be a computer check, a name check or a fingerprint check," he said, "or all three or any combination."

On Tuesday, the Faculty Senate voted to support USG's resolution.

Paratore said she is meeting student government representatives next week to discuss the implementation of the new escort service.

Black History Month

Through humorous characters, straightforward social problems and a need for a change in society, the stories of the lives and deaths of thousands of African-American men will come to life at SIUC at 8 tonight in the Student Center Ballrooms.

"Our Young Black Men Are Dying and Nobody Seems to Care," a play by James Chapmyn, which ran 36 consecutive weeks off Broadway and stars three African-American males from different parts of the country, is a look at the struggles of young African Americans into the next century.

The play tells the stories of hope and despair, love and hurt and dreams and disappointments.

Chapmyn said the play addresses problems that many inner-city African Americans have to face.

"The play talks about everything from crack addiction to AIDS, to black-on-black violence to Nat Turner to self-esteem," he said. "The highlight is when the actors do a Chapmyn said that although the play tackles social issues, the art of the theater is not sacrificed.

"Theater does not have to sacrifice its artistic integrity in order to be socially relevant," he said.

Chapmyn said the play is important because people of all races need to sit down and talk about social issues without the media or an agenda.

Chapmyn said he wants to see something positive happen in the black community.

No corruption in Rwanda

INVESTIGATE: United Nations is questioning Rwanda's government.

WASHINGTON POST

UNITED NATIONS—An investigation of the U.N. war crimes tribunal for Rwanda has found widespread mismanagement, waste and incompetence but did not turn up evidence of corruption, the United Nations reported Wednesday.

The findings confront Secretary General Kofi Annan, who took office Jan. 1 promising broad reform, with some sensitive decisions.

Critics in the U.S. Congress believe the world body has an inept bureaucracy badly in need of purging.

But African governments resent suggestions that the largely African staff of the Rwanda tribunal is the place to start.

They are expected to put pressure on Annan, a native of Ghana, not to dismiss personnel, according to diplomats and other observers here.

A 50-page report by Karl Paschke, the U.N.'s equivalent of an inspector general, charged that the tribunal administration functioned chaotically during most of the two years since it was established.

"He was always thinking of the long-range future of the University," Graham said. "He was also a great friend. He was a real encourager of students and faculty. Clark was a dynamic force in the growth period of SIU. He'll certainly be remembered by many students."

Before entering the Navy Isaac Davis taught at the Benton Township High School, and later served as a supervisor in the District Education program of the Works Project Administration.

Isaac Davis served in the U.S. Navy from 1942 to 1946 as a Senior Grade Lieutenant on a patrol ship in the Pacific Ocean.

After leaving the service he worked as a counselor of student activities at Indiana University and then as the assistant to the director of Student Affairs at Purdue University.

In 1946, he married his wife of 51 years, Dorothy Frailey. She lives in Carbondale.

They had three children, Robert Davis, of St. Charles Mo.; Joann Bleyer, of Carbondale; and Marilyn Rickard, of Jefferson City, Mo.

The family has set a visitation for Feb. 19 at 1 p.m. at the First Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), 306 W. Monroe St. A memorial service will follow the visitation.

similar benefit concert that raised thousands of dollars for the purchase of a concert grand piano and seven practice pianos for School of Music students.

"I probably won't do another one for another 10 years," he said.

While he plans to request funding for the laboratory from the University, Beattie said he believes it would mean more if he were able to raise the funds through contributions from members of the community.

"I've found that it's always best if a lot of people contribute a little instead of a few people contributing a lot," he said. "If all the students came to the concert and gave a buck, we'd have the money."

Beattie said there is an sincere reason that the concert is taking place.

"This is something that really needs to be done for the piano students," he said. "We'll be playing from the heart."

The concert will be at the Old Baptist Foundation Chapel Recital Hall from noon until midnight. Beattie said contributions can also be made by mail.

He said checks should be made payable to SIUC and can be mailed to Mr. Beattie's Opus, SIUC School of Music, Carbondale, Ill. For more information, contact Beattie at 453-5822.

The Boys Choir of Harlem

THOSE WHO'VE SEEN THESE GUYS PERFORM ARE STILL SINGING THEIR PRAISE

By TRACY TAYLOR

When you put together a nationally renowned director, talented young men, a philosophy emphasizing academic curriculum and pre-professional music training, you get The Boys Choir of Harlem.

As part of the Black History Month celebration, the graduate chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, along with Shryock Auditorium, will present the Boys Choir of Harlem on Sunday.

The choir, which was founded in 1968 by Walter J. Turnbull, a nationally known conductor, educator and tenor, has performed across the country including dates at the White House, the United Nations and the Statue of Liberty re-dedication.

The boys, who range from age 8 to 18, are carefully selected through an audition process in New York and are trained in singing posture, breathing techniques and basic music vocabulary ability to read simple melodies.

Robert Cerchio, director of Shryock Auditorium, said although this is the choir's first visit to Carbondale, there were plans to bring the choir here two years ago.

"The choir is one of the top choir groups in the world, and we could not afford to bring them," he said.

"This time the money was raised, and we had the opening at Shryock."

Cerchio said although there have been other concert choirs at Shryock, the Boys Choir of Harlem is the most famous.

"The production numbers they do for shows are Las Vegas quality," he said. "The lighting and the sound is amazing."

Cerchio said the Boys Choir of Harlem is not just a gospel choir.

"A lot of people think a boys choir is religious or classical music, but while that is part of it, it is much more than that," he said. "They do Duke Ellington, jazz, showbiz Broadway showtunes, and it's quite an amazing show."

Debra McCoy, president of the graduate chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, said because she has seen the choir perform on television, she has high expectations of the live performance.

"It's a performance that will be memorable," she said. "This is the opportunity of a lifetime for some people, especially for the youth, to see a wonderful performance by a talented group."

The Boys Choir of Harlem, which began as a small community choir, was formed as an alternative to the streets of Harlem. The choir is focused on giving inner-city children the opportunity to realize their creative potential through music. The group estimates that 97 percent of the members fall into a at-risk for high school dropout classification of the U.S.

Department of Education.

The boys choir is open to all children regardless of race, creed, color or sex. Auditions take place in the boy's choir facility, in community settings and local stores.

The children travel year-round and go to school on-site with licensed teachers and tutors and personalized attention.

McCoy said Alpha Kappa Alpha raised the money for the choir's visit through fund-raisers and bazaars.

"We are delighted to present this group to the Southern Illinois region, and we would not have been able to do that without the help of the Southern Illinois people," McCoy said.

Anne Marie Shepherd, a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha, said the choir has about 35 members and the concert lasts about an hour and a half.

"I wanted this group to come to the heartland because I feel our youth could use the motivation," she said. "This choir coming here is a dream come true."

SECOND THAT EMOTION

Most people are prone to analysis, every dime-store theorist picking away at the layers with the dissection of academia, spouting off intellectual whims and cockamamie notions for meaning behind every detail. "The English Patient" defies such Intellectualization — it stirs its meaning from emotion.

The proliferation of special effects, transporting the viewer to another world is readily available. Yet even without them "The English Patient" truly transcends and teleports. Its world is so vibrant and filled with magic from the tapestry it weaves, the viewer cannot help but be enveloped.

Based on the dense bestseller by Michael Ondaatje, the complex story begins with a French nurse (Juliette Binoche) toiling in Tuscany during the midst of World War II. After various traumatic events, she comes to care for a burn victim (Ralph Fiennes) mysteriously shot down. The victim, content in the inevitability of his death, begins to weave the tale of his map-making days in Africa and the torrid, forbidden love affair with his friend's wife (Kristen Scott Thomas).

This description barely scratches the surface of the intricacy, characters and histories that Intertwine within the map maker's tale. Fiennes gives an intense performance as the withdrawn academic giving into his passion. Binoche is subtle in her curious performance, while the always great Willem Dafoe is scene-stealing as a drug-addled former spy. Yet the real discovery is Kristen Scott Thomas. She is an ethereal, almost elegant presence who glides throughout the story like the fragment of a dream. She is innovative and Intelligent — expect great things to come from this amazing actress.

Director Anthony Minghella streamlines the intricate story into something eloquent. The film doesn't clunk along to convention like so many modern love stories, but flows before our eyes like the sprawling sand dunes and Tuscany lands the film presents. The story strikes as if someone combined the structure of J.G. Ballard and the passion of Anais Nin into one cohesive whole.

"The English Patient" sprawls not behind theories or academic dissection, but through the passions and heart of the love story. The actors and filmmakers have embraced this and created a transporting, lyrical film of the soul.

VIDEO PICK: "TWO FOR THE ROAD"

Certainly not as dramatically heavy as "The English Patient," the cross country love story "Two for the Road" stands as one of the best love stories ever filmed as well as the most brilliant film structure akin only to "Citizen Kane."

audrey hepburn

The film shows the birth and decline of love between an effervescent American student (Audrey Hepburn) and a sly, British architect (Albert Finney). Funny and charming, the film engages with joy as well as having the courage to examine the mundane loss of love.

Stanley Donen's direction is complemented by novelist Frederic Raphael's screenplay with a beautiful Henry Mancini score, yet the true genius of the film rests in its almost spastic structure that jumps back and forth in time. The film deserves much of the examination given to other lesser films not just for its form, but its content. Without a doubt, it is the most charming love story ever filmed.

REVIEWER'S CHOICE

"Top Gun"
Original Motion Picture Soundtrack
Columbia Records, 1986

Looking through my music collection, I came upon a lonely dust-covered album that just seemed to look back at me and scream "Review Me!" So in an attempt to appease those irritating voices in my head, I decided I would.

With all the cheesy music that came from the '80s (I won't name any names), it's easy to forget the good stuff. There are so many great tunes from the '80s that does not get to show their abandoned faces at retro parties. This album is full of those songs. I don't believe I have ever heard a soundtrack that more accurately depicted the movie from which it spawned.

Opening with Kenny Loggins' adrenaline-pumping "Danger Zone," this album takes your emotions on a crash-course roller coaster ride. After memories of loves lost are invoked with Berlin's soothing ode to lustful encounters "Take My Breath Away," one is pelted with the uncertainty of the flashdance-type sound of Marietta's "Destination Unknown." And finally, one is overwhelmed with a sense of spiritual achievement and completion by the guitar of the "Top Gun Anthem" by Harold Faltermeyer and Steve Stevens.

Radio Iodine
Radio Iodine
Radioactive Records, 1996

Much like fellow St. Louis band Gravity Kills, Radio Iodine got its big break after having a hit track on one of KPNT's Point Essential releases.

"Point Essential 2" featured the sultry voice of Ellen Parsons singing the iodine's hit "Never Meant to Lie."

The radio station was swamped with requests for the track, and it wore out the air waves.

Someone from Radioactive records heard this track, and the rest is history.

Although Parsons sings the vocals on Radio Iodine's freshman attempt, this album really features the band's musical talent.

Tom Bramer on guitar, drummer Greg Miller and keyboardist Anna Berry lend a very danceable sound that seems to have influences ranging from new wave to industrial.

While this LP is not excitingly fresh, it does at times feature well-written lyrics and a very qualified musical staff.

If you enjoyed hearing them play on The Point, then you will probably be able to tolerate this release.

Elysian Fields
Bleed Your Cedar
Radioactive Records, 1996

With an angelic voice reminiscent of Mazzy Star and Poe, vocalist Chantause Jennifer Charles offers undeniably sexy sounds to tease the ear.

Ed Pastorini's well-placed piano under layering in "Star" relax and soothe the while complementing Charles' sultry voice.

The jazzy vibes of "Anything Like You," gives the album a fun musical variety, while "Jack in the Box" lowers the listener onto a gentle bed of floating notes and riffs.

This release was the New York-based band's debut full-length release, which made its variety of ethereal noise even more surprising.

They really took a creative chance with this album, and it paid off with tracks that will sell.

This release is a undoubtedly a seductive performance that will not go unnoticed by MTV fans everywhere

It definitely is worthwhile to sample these tunes, because we will without a doubt be hearing quite a bit from this band in the future.

60 Ft Dolls
The Big Three
Geffen Records, 1996

In this release, the Sixty Foot Dolls prove that they are capable of making the difficult transition from the British pop-rock market to the American pop-art music industry.

From the fast-paced, in-your-face punk guitar of "Stay" to the pop-rock lyrics and melody of "Buzz," this album is a very viable radio-friendly effort that has mainstream popularity written all over it.

While the lyrics are a lot of fun, the strength of this release without a doubt lies in the musical talent of the three-man crew: With ax-man Richard Parfitt, bassist

Mike Cole and Carl Bevan taking care of the skins, the musical talent shines.

Together they produce a very powerful, tightly knit sound. The only well-known comparable band that comes to mind is the Manic Street Preachers. But while one might say that the Manic Street Preachers relied heavily on their lyrics, the Dolls definitely focus on the scratchy vocal ability of Parfitt and the undeniable musical talent of all its members.

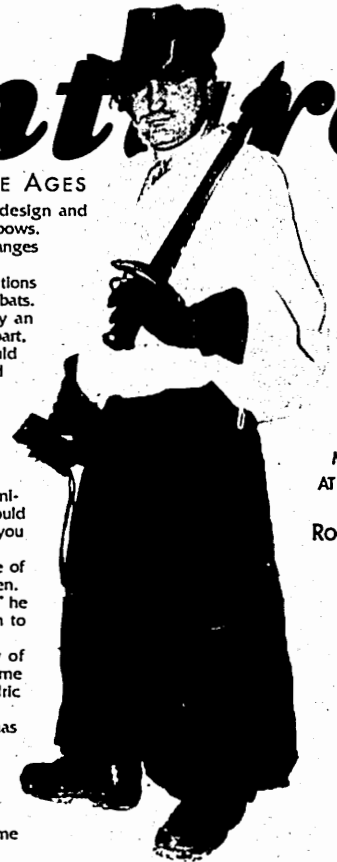

If you like pop, or if you like punk, this album offers 13 tracks that you should at least try on for size.

Recreating Adventure

TODAY'S MEETING IS AT 7 P.M. IN ACTIVITY ROOM D ON THE THIRD FLOOR OF THE STUDENT CENTER.

SOCIETY FOR CREATIVE ANACHRONISM

IMAGINE YOURSELF WELDING A SWORD ON A BLOOD-BATHED MEDIEVAL BATTLEFIELD OR SITTING AROUND A CAMPFIRE SINGING 12TH CENTURY BARDIC SONGS. MEMBERS OF THE LOCAL CHAPTER OF THE SOCIETY FOR CREATIVE ANACHRONISM DO NOT HAVE TO IMAGINE IT, THEY RE-CREATE IT AND EXPERIENCE IT FOR THEMSELVES.

Wes Will, staff adviser for the Registered Student Organization known as The College of St. Michael and all Angels, said that while the group is well-known for its medieval combat re-creations, that is only a small part of what the organization has to offer.

John Day, a freshman in forestry from Evaston, said he has only been in the group for about three months, but he already has learned quite a bit.

"We get together and do everything they did in the middle ages, except for stuff like the black plague," he said.

Will said that members spend much of their time at Morris Library doing research. He said each member chooses a particular geographic area during the Middle Ages and attempts to find out all they can about the customs, dress, weapons and general ways of life of the people.

He said the objective of each member is to understand the daily lives of the people they study, and to create a costume and persona for themselves that is true to that culture.

"The goal is that if you were to go back in time, you could cope with living there."

Although some members strive for this exactness to details, Will said the only necessity for society members is a set of Middle-Age clothing, which new members can make for themselves with the aid of experienced group members.

While the society engages in activities ranging from dancing and poetry to embroidering and cobbling, Will said the flashiest activity is the fighting. He said that in combat, each warrior wields a weapon made of rattan and wears very safe armor. He said the weapons are of medieval design and include swords, maces, axes, spears and even bows. The types of armor worn varies greatly as well. It ranges from leather to chain mail to plate armor.

EXPERIENCES LIFE IN THE MIDDLE AGES

Will said the battles, which take place at conventions all over the United States, are on-your-honor combats. He said when a part of your body is struck by an enemy's weapon, you no longer use that body part, and when you are struck with a blow that would have been fatal in real combat, you are considered dead and out of the combat.

While members could spend hundreds or even thousands of dollars on combat gear, Will said the amount of money they spend varies. He said members who make their own equipment save a lot of money.

"We have been known to take defunct lawn furniture and turn it into weapons," he said. "You could buy a pair of leather gauntlets for $60 a pair, but if you make them, they would only cost $15 or less."

While no one has ever been killed in this type of combat, Will said accidents do occasionally happen.

"A guy got fallen on and got some ribs broken," he said. "You get some good bruises, but you learn to guard what's important to you."

Will said the group began at the University of California at Berkeley about 30 years ago when some students decided they wanted to have a chivalric tournament.

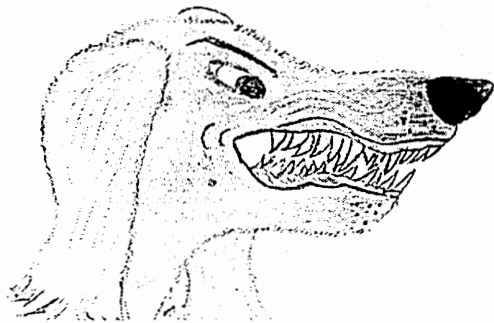

Will said the group meets twice a month and has no fees. He said that anyone who ever got a thrill from the old King Arthur tales or who wondered what it would be like to live in the Middle Ages, should come and check out the group out at one of their two monthly meetings.

"Before you make a judgment, you should come and see this," he said.

Cheyenne

Cheyenne gets up at 7 a.m. to get her son ready for school. She lays out his clothes and makes him breakfast. She takes her son to the bus at 7:45 a.m., and then she begins her day around the house. She does laundry, cleans and then starts some dinner. However, two nights a week after Cheyenne finishes her work at home she goes to work as an exotic dancer.

Female dancers often are subjects of daytime talk shows. They have been looked down upon and talked about, but what most people do not understand is that some dancers make good lives for themselves and their families. Some dancers put themselves through school, and some are able to spend more time with their families because of the job.

Cheyenne, a dancer at a club in Southern Illinois, said she dances because she will be able to pay for her own education and provide for her 9-year-old son.

"I could work seven days a week waiting tables and never get to see my son," she said. "But instead, I choose to dance two nights a week, and I make more money than I would if I were to work a 40-hour job. My son means everything to me, and I know that I will see him more if I dance."

A year ago, Cheyenne was an SIUC student, but had to take two semesters off because she could not afford tuition. Because of the money she has made during her eight months of dancing, she will be able to re-enroll herself in school and major in interior design. She said she will quit dancing once she graduates.

"I was so broke when I was in school," she said. "I was working six days a week, going to school and not making hardly any money. I couldn't give my son everything I wanted, so I had to make a choice. I started dancing."

Even though people may think that dancing for an audience is degrading, Cheyenne said it is what needs to be done for her and her son.

"I don't think that dancing is degrading," she said. "People have their likes and their dislikes. Some people may look down upon it, but those people can stay away from it. I look at it as a fantasy, almost like a movie. No one can touch us. We are just like a picture, but we move."

"My son has a deadbeat dad, and I have to do what I can to support him. I'm going back to school now because I've made enough money to do it. I never would have made enough (money) if I didn't dance." Even though Cheyenne said she dances to raise money for school and to provide for her son, she said her son does not know that she dances.

"It's not that I'm ashamed of what I do; I just want to wait until he's older to explain it to him," she said. "I want him to know, but not right now."

Sammy Jo

The spotlight comes on, and "It's My Party" bops through the speakers. A female in a 1970s prom dress seductively walks onto the stage. Men sit all around. Some of them look longingly at the woman, some hold out money, and some look embarrassed to be seen at the establishment. But all of them came for the same reason — to fulfill a fantasy of some sort.

Sammy Jo, who has been dancing for 13 years, said she has been able to provide for her children and contribute to paying bills in her household, and she said she has no plans of retiring from the job.

"I have four kids, and doing this pays the bills and puts new clothes on my children," said Sammy Jo. "I actually met my husband of eight years while I was dancing. I'm not going to lie; I really make good money doing this. I also like what I do. It's just like any other job. You come in, you work, then you go home. People need to think about it."

It may be hard for people to understand how a woman could dance in front of a large group of people when she is married, but Sammy Jo said she doesn't have a problem with it.

"When you're married, you develop a trust," she said. "My husband had a problem with it at first, but now he realizes what my job really is. When you dance, you have a bunch of lights on you."

"Sometimes you can't even see how many people are in the audience. My husband knows that I'm not trying to pick up anyone. We trust each other."

As far as Sammy Jo's family goes, she said she wants to be honest with her children and financially help her husband.

"All my kids know what their mom does," she said. "They have been to the bar that I dance at. Both my husband and I have jobs, but with four kids, I can't just be a housewife."

Lena

Lena, another dancer, said she never dates any of the men who come into the club where she dances.

"I would feel like I was dating someone I work with. Yes, I take some of my clothes off for these men, but they can't touch me. All they can do is look."

Lena is an SIUC student majoring in biological science. She said she has been dancing for three years and thanks to dancing has never had to take out a student loan or apply for any kind of financial aid.

"I like to dance, and if I can get paid for it that's even better," she said. "I have put myself through school, and I won't have any loans to pay back when I'm through. I won't dance when I get out of college, but it sure as hell got me through school."

The Dangers

With every job comes with negative aspects. With dancing, there always is the chance of being stalked or groped. However, none of the women said they have had any major problems.

Cheyenne said she feels very safe when she dances and when she leaves her workplace.

"The bouncers always take very good care of the girls who work here," she said. "They walk us out to our cars, and while we're dancing, they keep a close eye on the crowd. I feel safe."

Sammy Jo said she always keeps a professional attitude when doing her job. She said that helps keep problems from arising.

"I know that I'm safe," she said. "Like I said before, no one can touch us, so it is not hard to keep professional. I think the reason some strippers get caught up in a lot of trouble is because they don't act professionally. We are a fantasy, and that's all."

"We are not their girlfriends for an hour. We are not prostitutes. If that line gets crossed, that's where the trouble begins."

Real Life

Lena finishes up her homework, Cheyenne tucks her son into bed, and Sammy Jo goes home to her husband. These women are real people. They have lives. They have feelings, and they have jobs. They are supporting their families and themselves.

It may not be as glamorous or well-thought-of job, but exotic dancing is a job, Cheyenne said.

"I love my family, and I love my son. I know that I am a good person, and I will do what I can to better my life. Right now, dancing is what I do."

SERIOUS CASE OF COLD FEET

OASIS' LIAM GALLAGHER CALLED OFF HIS WEDDING recently, reportedly because of the media frenzy surrounding the impending nuptials with fiancée/actress Patsy Kensit. The wedding would have been the first for Liam, 24, and the third for Kensit, 28, who was married to Simple Minds singer Jim Kerr and a member of Big Audio Dynamite.

PUNK ROCK BENEFIT

FORMER PUNKERS HAVE UNITED FOR A new album, "Generations One - A Punk Look At Human Rights", benefiting the Human Rights Action Center (HRAC). Ex-Clash member Joe Strummer contributes the song, "Generations." The compilation features a mix of new and previously unreleased tracks from Green Day, Bad Brains and The John Doe Thing.

LEIGH-VING HOLLYWOOD

DIRECTOR MIKE LEIGH SAID HE CONSIDERS HIS FIVE Oscar nominations for "Secrets & Lies" a shot in the arm for the British film industry. Leigh, 53, said: "I am thrilled and delighted and surprised. The main thing is that Americans are looking beyond Hollywood." "Secrets" tells the tale of a young black woman's search for her natural mother. The film also was nominated as best film, and Brenda Blethyn picked up a best actress nomination.

CLOONEY ON THE LAM

FILM/TELEVISION STAR GEORGE Clooney reportedly will star in the film adaptation of Elmore Leonard's best-selling novel "Out of Sight" for a cool $10 million. Clooney will play bank robber Jack Foley, who escapes from prison and takes a female federal marshal hostage, sources said. In the novel, the robber and the marshal fall in love.

The more people who sign up for Student Programming Council, the less of a chance you have of seeing an ABBA tribute band as the main source of fun for the weekend.

At 3 today, SPC will stop accepting applications for a variety of positions that are responsible for hooking you, the student body, up with entertainment at premium prices. One of the major areas of need for SPC is the concert committee.

The concert committee is responsible for booking six bands, give or take one or two, to play at Shryock Auditorium or the Student Center each year. The committee is the sole source of input about who should play at SIUC. Although SPC has done a good job in the past in landing quality bands like Fugazi and The Reverend Horton Heat, a constant source of musical input is needed to ensure quality bands will not be replaced by musical hacks.

"Right now, we are down to about 10 people (on the concert committee)," said Kelly Throw, SPC concerts director. "At the beginning of the year, the entire room was full — about 30 people.

"Now I am booking for the fall, and the hardest part is being able to guess what the students want. I wish students would come in and say, 'I think we need this kind of show.'"

Despite SIUC being nestled away in Southern Illinois, Throw said the location actually offers a distinct advantage when trying to get bands to play.

"Carbondale is good in some respects because of how close it is to St. Louis," Throw said. "A lot of bands will stop through on their way to St. Louis or on their way back."

On the other hand, St. Louis clubs attract big-name bands, and that can take away from a potential crowd at SIUC. Some students think that a bar atmosphere is the only option for concerts.

Amelia Gregor, a junior in plant and soil science from Macon, Ga., said the bar scene always will draw more people, and more people means a better time.

"People want to smoke and drink, and you can't do that in the ballrooms or Shryock," Gregor said. "They plan on getting drunk on weekends, and other options simply do not exist unless a big-time band is playing."

Open to suggestions

Gregor, a former member of the SPC concert committee, said a lot of planning needs to go into a concert to make it a quality event instead of a flop where only a handful of students show up.

Yet other students said waiting a few extra hours to start pounding beers is not much of a sacrifice to make to see a good band play because good bands seldom play at SIUC.

"I haven't seen a good band on campus since my sophomore year," Matt Williams, a senior in biological science from Rockford, said.

Williams said he went to the Fugazi show in the ballrooms two years ago, back in the days when underage drinking at the bars was a popular hobby in Carbondale.

"It was a great show," he said. "You can always go and get drunk, but a good band in Carbondale is a rare thing, no matter where they play."

Whether your musical taste is punk, rap, funk or clap along, the SPC concert committee is open to your ideas — even to you damn ABBA fans.

The SPC concert committee meets at 5:30 p.m. every Monday in Activity Room D on the third floor of the Student Center. The meetings are open to all students.

Lonely can use Web to get even on Feb. 14

By CHRISTOPHER MILLER

Valentine's Day need not cause emotional distress for those with love-lives on the brink of collapse or those with an inability to express themselves. Here are some Web sites that will help you get even, tell someone how you feel or maybe even help teach yourself a little about love.

<http://www.pacific.net.sg/cards/val/dark.html>

Digital Anti-Valentine Service caters to the cynics who hate Feb. 14 because love-lives are troubled or non-existent. The service offers three designs. The least-charming Valentine asks the recipient, "What the hell is going on?" After selecting a design, senders need only provide their bitter half's e-mail address and type in a few ugly nothings before firing the electronic card away.

<http://www.sacbee.com/smile/luvomatic/>

The Luvomatic creates Valentine's Day messages for the "Cupidsromantically" challenged. The Luvomatic holds the hand of those not eloquent enough to compose their own Valentines. To finish sentences, messengers select groups of words from pull-down menus, so even illiterates can send heartfelt (or twisted) messages. Finished messages from other "Cupidsromantically" challenged Web surfers are displayed on the "Wall O' Luv."

<http://net.indra.com/~karma/letter.html>

The Bitch Letter Generator helps women who have trouble with their boorish male-persons put their feelings in perspective. Site creator Mark Margaretten writes, "The Bitch Letter Generator should smooth the rocky road of life by allowing men to anticipate, evade and privately understand the odd ramblings of women the world over." An apology letter generator for men who receive bitch letters is available at <http://net.indra.com/~karma/formletter.html>

<http://www.xs4all.nl/~kink/love/>

The Love Calculator page claims to be able to determine the feasibility of a relationship even before the first date. Taking only the couple's names, the Love Calculator uses an untold formula to return the probability of a relationship's success.

<http://www.topchoice.com/~psyche/lovetest/>

The Love Test's 68 questions measure love and its dimensions. There are two parts to the test. The first determines what test-takers think love is, while the second part measures the amount of love experienced by those currently in love. After the test, results can be compared to the average scores of the 8,000 people who have taken the test so far.

<http://www.floristnet.com/>

Floristnet makes it possible to send flowers from one's home computer. Those too cheap to spring for real flowers can send a free "virtual bouquet."

Miami police crack down on guns with roadblocks

CHECKPOINT: ACLU steps in when roadblocks are placed in black, Latino neighborhoods.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

MIAMI—In the same week that a national survey revealed that American youngsters are 12 times more likely to die by gunfire than children in the rest of the world, Miami Police Chief Donald Warshaw announced he'd had enough. A 16-year-old ninth-grade girl on Feb. 4 shot a classmate in the head in front of their high school, just days after a 5-year-old was killed by a stray bullet.

Surprise roadblocks would go up in violence-plagued neighborhoods, the chief said, and police would check motorists for illegal weapons.

"Roadblocks are to intimidate," Warshaw said. "We want to intimidate. We're going to make life miserable and difficult if you're riding the streets of Miami with a gun."

Sure, the gun roadblocks were illegal, police later admitted. The roadblocks were really drunk-driving checkpoints at which police simply would ask drivers if they had a gun in the car.

And if they happened to be drunk, or admitted they had a gun, then bingo: They were arrested.

As soon as the first checkpoint went up Feb. 5 in a neighborhood populated mostly by blacks and Latinos, some community activists and the American Civil Liberties Union cried foul. "Police state," said Miami ACLU Chairman Benjamin Waxman.

Others wondered how the city of Miami — already $68 million in debt and under state financial supervision — could afford any extra police efforts.

Even more questions were raised when police disclosed that the first roadblock had produced only two illegal firearms.

No matter, said Warshaw, who insists he has a mandate from the community to stop the handgun slaughter. "It is hard to measure the success of this program on the number of guns seized."

"The weapons are out there," he said. "And we have to change the notion that it is acceptable that everybody is carrying a gun."

"This girl (who wounded her classmate) was carrying a gun in the waistband of her dress, like she was in the Wild West. We have to say it is not OK to carry a gun in Miami."

Officers also were conducting truancy sweeps in areas known as gang hangouts, drug busts, bar checks and gun-shop license inspections.

Toronto residents react to consolidation of cities

CLEARLY UN-CANADIAN: Mayor accuses provincial government of treason.

WASHINGTON POST

TORONTO—Peace, order and good government may be among Canada's touchstone values, but the noisy crowd at Metropolitan United Church was having none of it last week.

Peace and order, they said during the latest in a series of raucous Monday night meetings, became less important when Ontario's provincial government decided to fold six adjoining cities into one big one — without asking local residents first. Protests are being planned, court challenges plotted; posters plastered around in opposition.

As for good government, they say that's what they already have, and their determination to keep it has given rise to an increasingly harsh, veritably un-Canadian popular challenge to government. In the country that showed its disdain for American mob rule by developing a democracy underpinned by faith in government, the people of Toronto are talking tough.

The Ontario government "is staging a nonviolent coup, and its members should be arrested for treason," former Toronto mayor John Sewell told the 1,000-plus, standing-room-only crowd at the church. "This is a way of seizing control ... without our having any say at all."

It has indeed been a combustible few weeks since the government of Ontario Premier Mike Harris made what have come to be called its "mega-week" announcements about how Canada's most populous and richest province will be run.

Little was left untouched. More of the costs of welfare, public transportation and some other programs are to be shifted to the cities. The province is to assume the cost of education. As for metropolitan Toronto, widely acknowledged as one of the world's best functioning urban areas, its six contiguous municipalities would be officially blended into one "megacity" with roughly 2.3 million people. It would still be called Toronto, but governed by a single large council instead of a bunch of smaller ones.

Herrin said the Salukis showed they could compete with the Redbirds.
"They are a very, very good basketball team," Herrin said. "But we did a very good job once we got going with them."
That loss was the second of five straight losses for the Salukis, and losing Tucker for two games left the Salukis undermanned.

But since that time, the Salukis have won five of their last seven games.
However, SIUC is coming off one of its most disappointing losses of the season against Bradley Monday.
The Salukis watched a 17-point lead with nearly six minutes remaining in the second half vanish.
Bradley forward Anthony Parker scored six straight points and made a game-winning, three-point field goal at the buzzer for the win.

Junior guard Troy Hudson said the team was disappointed at first but remained upbeat after Monday's loss.
"We were down the first night," Hudson said.
"But right now, we're up again, and we know we played a good game. We're just looking forward to the next game."
"It's very important, especially since we let that game slip away Monday night. We've just got to look and get the rest of the victories."
SIUC will need to be on top of its game offensively against the Redbirds, Herrin said.

Hudson, who leads the Valley in scoring at 21.3 points per game, could not get on track and scored just 11 points in the first matchup while being shut down defensively by Redbird forward Dan Muller.
Hudson said he will try to play within the offense and not take as many tough shots as he did last time.
"I just want to hit my outside shots," Hudson said. "I want to try to do a little more than just shoot and not force too much. I don't think he can stop me from doing the rest of the things I know how to do well."

Hudson said Tucker's play will be a key to the Salukis' success.
"Rashad will be a lot more effective this time," Hudson said.
"He played three minutes, and that really hurt us a lot. But I think he's looking forward to this game, and he's going to do well tomorrow."
SIUC travels to Normal to battle conference-leader Illinois State at 7:05 tonight.

Salukis look to leash Drake

HOME TURF: SIUC hopes to put a tough road trip behind them.

DONNA COLTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

After an 89-48 thrashing by Drake University Jan. 18, SIUC women's basketball coach Cindy Scott and the Salukis are more worried about winning a game tonight against the Lady Bulldogs than seeking revenge.

"We are certainly not worried about avenging a loss," she said. "That is the least of our worries. We just want to play well and win."
The SIUC women's basketball team is returning home tonight after a four-game road trip to battle Drake with hopes to continue winning ball games.

The Salukis went 1-3 on their road swing, with the only win coming Saturday against the University of Evansville. Two of the losses were at the hands of Missouri Valley Conference members Indiana State University and Illinois State University.
SIUC now finds itself with a 10-10 overall record and a 6-6 mark in conference play. Drake stands at 15-6 overall and 9-4 in the Valley.

third in the Valley's scoring standings.
Freshman center Melaniece Bardley said the team knows Miller and the Lady Bulldogs are a must-win situation for the Salukis.
"They are not unbeatable," she said. "We need to play as a team and work hard together. It was a good win for us at Evansville, and we need to keep going from there."
The Salukis are led by McClendon and junior center Theia Hudson, who are the only two Salukis in double digits.

PER MASHON/DAILY EGYPTIAN

READY FOR THE REMATCH: Sophomore forward Heather Whalin, from Mattoon, looks to pass the ball to any open teammate during practice Tuesday afternoon. The women take on the Drake Bulldogs at 7:05 tonight at SIU Arena.

Scott said despite the win at Evansville, SIUC still is not a confident ball team, and she said the Salukis must stay focused if they want to win against the Lady Bulldogs.
"This will be a hard game for us," she said. "I like to think we can take care of the ball and rebound, and if we can do those things it will help us immensely."
Senior guard and co-captain Kasia McClendon said the Salukis have two items to accomplish if they want a chance to win this crucial game.
"We have to beat them up and down the court," she said. "And we have to stay on (Kiersten) Miller."
The Lady Bulldogs are led by Miller, who pours in a game average 17.5 points, placing her Hudson had a career-high 25 points and 10 rebounds against Evansville, and she averages 15.2 points and 7.1 rebounds per contest.

McClendon poured in 21 points against the Lady Aces while stripping them of the ball five times. The 5-foot-5-inch guard averages 15.2 points, 5.8 rebounds and a nation-high 4.8 steals per game.
Bardley said the Salukis must have the victory against the Lady Bulldogs.
"We want this game," she said. "Everyone on the team wants to win to boost our confidence, which is really low right now."

49ers talk about finding new home

NINERS GO LONG: San Francisco franchise threatens to move.
LOS ANGELES TIMES

Cannen Policy, San Francisco 49er president, met recently with the San Francisco Chronicle's editorial board and said the football team's future in the city would be jeopardized if voters turn down funding for a new stadium.

The 49ers hope for June 3 voter approval of a $535 million stadium/entertainment complex proposal. A key element in the deal is a $100-million lease and revenue bond issue.

"If we don't have a place to play in San Francisco, what can we do? Candlestick Park is not suitable for NFL play after 2006 (when the club's lease there expires)," Polley said.
"If this deal doesn't work, I can't imagine any owner being able to keep an NFL team in San Francisco," he said.

marketing, insists on improving those numbers this year.
"I've gotten a lot stronger, and I feel that I am a much better hitter," he said. "I'm just more confident."
So is his coach, Dan Callahan, who said as early as last season that he will probably not be Hairston's skipper for an entire four years.
"If Jerry makes the natural progression from his freshman to his sophomore season, he should be a solid pro-draft selection," Callahan said.
Unlike Hairston, the possibility of playing professional baseball is much clearer for senior first baseman Aaron Jones.
"That's really my only aspiration right now," Jones said. "Playing professionally has to be my main aspiration in life right now."

Yet Hairston prefers to keep professional baseball second to SIUC and not let the thoughts of the pro ball put any added pressure on this season.
"I don't have to play pro ball after this year," he said. "I still have two years of eligibility left."
"As of right now I really don't know. Some days I feel like I'm going to go, and some days I just want to stay."
While Hairston does feel some pressure concerning a professional career, Callahan said he pressures his third baseman to be successful for the team's goals.
"You get a guy like Jerry, who is draft-eligible, obviously his goal is to play professional ball," Callahan said. "Whatever pressure he puts on himself is self-imposed."
"I put pressure on our team just from the standpoint that we want to be successful."

No matter what lies in store for him, and no matter how much he thinks about playing professionally, Hairston is only sure of one thing.
"If I feel I need to go pro, I'll go," Hairston said. "I'll know when to go."

UCLA Bruins sign Lavin to four-year coaching deal

The UCLA men's basketball team took away the interim part of Steve Lavin's title as head coach Tuesday and signed him to a four-year contract. Financial terms were not disclosed. Lavin was beginning his sixth season as an assistant at UCLA until head coach Jim Harrick was fired Nov. 6. The school cited Harrick with violations of the NCAA ethics code after receiving results of an internal investigation into his expense account and recruiting. The 32-year-old Lavin was named interim coach that day and has guided the team to a 13-7 mark.

"Steve was definitely my number one choice for the job," said UCLA director of athletics Peter Datis. "I had informal discussions with other candidates and I felt Steve was the best choice for this position." Lavin was promoted to a full-time assistant in June 1995 after serving four years as the restricted-earnings coach. The 32-year-old was also a graduate assistant at Purdue from 1988-91.

The attorney for Dallas Cowboys offensive tackle Erik Williams told ESPN that he filed suit Wednesday against KXAS-TV and reporter Marty Griffin for the station's handling of sexual assault charges against Williams that proved to be false. The attorney, Peter Ginsberg, said charges will be filed for defamation of character, fraud and willful blindness. ESPN also has learned that Williams will file a separate federal court action against the Dallas Police Department and against an unidentified individual within the department for civil rights violations against Williams. Williams and teammate Michael Irvin were cleared in the sexual assault investigation last month when Dallas police revealed that the charges had no merit.

Belle admits to gambling

Chicago White Sox slugger Albert Belle admitted he bet on pro football and college basketball games, but his lawyer says a lot of players do it. Neither officials of major league baseball nor the White Sox are commenting on the revelation yet. Belle said he lost up to $40,000 on football and basketball but never wagered on baseball. Betting on baseball can result in a lifetime ban.

Belle signed a five-year, $55 million contract with the White Sox in November after establishing himself as one of the game's best — but most volatile — players while playing for the Cleveland Indians.

The gambling admission came as Belle was questioned by an attorney about a 1995 incident in which he allegedly chased a group of boys who had thrown eggs at his house.

BIRD DAWGS: SIUC hopes Tucker's presence will make the difference against Illinois State tonight.

RYAN KEITH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REWRITER

The Saluki men's basketball team is hoping junior forward Rashad Tucker plays a bigger role this time around when SIUC takes on Illinois State University tonight.

Tucker scored three points in just three minutes of play against the Redbirds in a 76-70 loss at SIU Arena Jan. 12. He then left the team at halftime of the game and was suspended for the team's next two games.

Tucker said he is looking forward to being more of a factor against the Redbirds tonight.

"I hope I wasn't the reason we lost," Tucker said. "But I hope I can make a difference and make something happen this time."

If Tucker is going to make a difference, tonight's game in Normal is the perfect time.

Illinois State leads the Valley with a 10-3 record and is two games ahead of second-place Northern Iowa University, while the Salukis are in seventh place with a 6-7 record. With five conference games remaining, the conference title is in the Redbirds' hands to win or lose.

Herrin said the Salukis will have their work cut out for them against Illinois State.

"Illinois State is the best basketball team in the league," Herrin said. "They've pretty much got the title wrapped up. But we've played pretty good up there in the past."

Not only is tonight's battle with the Redbirds an important conference game, but it also provides the Salukis with a chance for revenge for that home loss to Illinois State, one of the Salukis' lowest moments this season.

Following a difficult loss to Evansville University Jan. 7 that saw the Salukis lose a 10-point lead in the second half, SIUC did not play well against the Redbirds until late in the second half. Illinois State opened up a 20-point lead in the second half and held off a late Saluki run to win by six

Sophomore chooses SIUC vs. major leagues

IN THE BLOOD: The son of a MLB veteran, Jerry Hairston is the Saluki to watch.

MICHAEL DEFORD
DE SPORTS EDITOR

Saluki infielder Jerry Hairston must think about playing professional baseball someday. He has to.

After all, the Saluki third baseman is draft-eligible right now. He spent last summer working with Chicago White Sox players Ray Durham and Dave Martinez.

Hairston's father, Jerry Sr., spent 14 seasons in the major leagues while his uncle, John, played one.

He earned the Missouri Valley Conference Freshman-of-the-Year honors last season while at the same time earning praise from professional scouts.

This season, Hairston is one of three Salukis to earn preseason MVC All-Conference member honors.

He has to think about taking his game to the next level.

"People know I'm draft eligible this year," Hairston said. "I'm not going to lie... I have given professional baseball a lot of thought. But to be totally honest, I really don't know what I'm going to do."

Hairston may not be willing to blow his baseball future up into anything more than just a future goal, but the sophomore does plan to burst onto the Salukis' 1997 campaign, which begins Friday against Arizona State University in Tempe.

1997
Baseball
Outlook

"I feel like I am about to explode," the third baseman said. "I'm really excited to get the season started."

Hairston enters the 1997 season in the same manner he entered the Salukis' 1996 campaign, anchoring the third base position and already has drawn attention to himself without even swinging a bat.

Hairston has been dubbed the "player to watch" this season by Baseball America and Collegiate Baseball, and the Naperville native plans to live up to the honor.

"I feel I have bettered my all-around game," he said. "My defense is a lot better, and I am a much better hitter."

"This year I am looking forward to making a giant step in my career, and hopefully it will lead to bigger and better things for myself."

It's hard to imagine Hairston taking a giant step this season when those he made as a freshman last year were measured in terms of leaps and bounds.

During his first year as a Saluki, Hairston hit .340 and drove in 37 runs to complement a solid defensive effort at the corner.

But Hairston, who plans to major in
