Salukis tip past Panthers

Last-second tip-in keeps Dawgs’ hope alive for NCAA tournament

Jen Deja
Daily Egyptian

Time stood still. The basketball was rolling around the rim. SIU guard Kent Williams and Wisconsin-Milwaukee’s Ronnie Jones stood at the three-point line and anxiously watched.

UW-Milwaukee’s Dylan Page was just landing from a failed block attempt of Darien Brooks’ lay-up try. His teammates Justin Lemsberger and Jesus Frederick stood on the right side of the basket along with Saluki forward 2d Kolin and watched as the ball rolled out.

SIU’s Jermaine Dearman leaped up in the air, but his aim was off and the jam was for naught.

There, the left wing of SIU-Milwaukee, Ben Haiston, rose above the rest of the players and tipped the ball toward the rim with two-tenths of a second remaining on the game clock.

Everyone took a breath as the ball sat on the rim. Everyone knew what seemed like an eternity before it fell and gave the Salukis a 66-64 victory over UW-Milwaukee in Saturday afternoon’s ESPN Bracket Buster Game.

The last-second tip-in helped the Salukis avoid overtime and kept their hopes for an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

Pandemonium ensued as a newly-minted Dawg Pound erupted. Fans rushed the court and surrounded Haiston and the rest of the Salukis. They jumped up and down in front of the ESPNU cameras as they celebrated their team’s nail-biting victory.

The tip-in was Haiston’s only point of the second half, and following the game, he was still in a state of disbelief over how the game ended.

He attributed his head-up play to a simple instinct.

“Just went in there, got in position to try to get a rebound because what if it came out?” Haiston said. “I didn’t know if he was going to make it for sure, and it came off right and I just jumped in there and tipped it in.”

UW-Milwaukee guard Clay Tucker, who was doing a spectacular job of harassing Brooks on the play before a spin move left his behind, said it was hard to take the loss when the Panthers should have won.

He said he all came down to a “tipped shot” in leaving Haiston open on the play and not getting a body on him.

The winning shot was set up by a defensive steal by the Salukis (19-5, 13-2 Missouri Valley Conference) on the other end of the court.

SIU center Sylvester Willis blocked the inbound pass by Tucker, leaving the Panthers (21-6, 9-3 Horizon League) with just three seconds left on the shot clock.

With just more than 20 seconds remaining, Jones was being harassed by a Saluki defender near the baseline when he knew he had to make a move.

No Panther player was in the vicinity but Tucker made a sensational play in climbing down the ball. He signalized to his dad not to avoid being called for an foul and took five seconds left on the shot clock and he rushed in for two.

Smallpox vaccinations off to slow start at hospitals

WASHINGTON — Despite President Bush’s recommendation, hospitals and health care workers are turning down the smallpox vaccine, worried about the inoculation’s side effects and unwarranted that the threat of a bioterror attack justifies the risk.

Federal officials had hoped to inoculate almost 400,000 health care workers in the country’s first major vaccination program this month ending April — the figure is coming in at about 1 percent of that goal.

Some health care officials have urged members to refuse the vaccine until the government can guarantee compensation for anybody injured by the shot.

Bush is not expected to include a second stage of vaccination for as many as 10 million emergency responders and other health care workers.

Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson is “disappointed” by the response.

“It is absolutely imperative we get more people vaccinated against smallpox, and get it as fast as possible,” said a congressional aide for the U.S. House Appropriations Committee.

Officials at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which is running the program, say they need to rapidly vaccinate the total to reach 450,000, because some people have health conditions that make them unsuitable candidates.

They also believe the numbers are likely to rise as hospitals release more information and as federal officials resolve outstanding problems.

Smallpox vaccinations are only given to people deemed at high risk for the disease, but millions of Americans might be naturally immune to the vaccine.

Once inoculation sets in, there is no treatment.

But the vaccine is not safe in a population with a live virus that can infect the body. Experts estimate that to 15 people out of every 1 million vaccinated will catch the smallpox vaccine, which will face life-threatening complications, and one to two will die.

The U.S. smallpox stockpile was established in 1949, and routine vaccinations against the disease ended in the United States in 1972.

Autopsies planned on victim of botched transplant

ALEXANDER, N.C. — Medical examiners will determine what ultimately killed a teenager who suctioned a botched heart-lung transplant but died the next day, according to a set of second set of organs.

An autopsy was planned Monday on the body of Isadora Clark, the state medical examiner’s office said. A lawyer for the 17-year-old’s family said an autopsy was appropriate.

Isadora’s family has made it clear we want to know what the cause of death was,” attorney Kurt Dixon said Sunday. “If there’s going to be legal action down the road, we want to have a definite cause of death. You don’t want to speculate about that.

Family and friends were planning memorial services for the teen Tuesday morning, before he died Saturday morning.

In other news, the state medical examiner’s office said Monday morning that the 17-year-old’s family hadn’t been in contact with the medical examiner’s office on the weekend or made any arrangements for an autopsy.

U.S. to push resolution this week

BEIJING — Secretary of State Colin Powell said Sunday that the Bush administration would be introducing a new resolution in the U.N. Security Council early this week, one that would explicitly condemn Iraq.

Bush is expected to go to war with Saddam Hussein’s Iraq, which he sees as a threat to the region.

The resolution would be a “model” for the Bush administration as it pursues its war on terrorism.

“I believe we can get an affirmative resolution in the security council,” Powell said on ABC’s “This Week.”

Before flying here Sunday, Powell said in Tokyo that the Philippines and the U.S. expected to sign an accord on Monday, ending years of diplomatic wrangling.

Acclaimed filmmaker screening latest work

Steve James shows newest documentary ‘Stevie’

Jesse L. Nelson
Daily Egyptian

After waiting in a long line that snaked past the front door and into the cold rain, more than 100 people packed the Varsity Theatre Saturday to watch the 96-minute length drama film, which screened to enthusiastic applause.

The film is the latest in the critically acclaimed 1995 documentary “Hoop Dreams,” produced by James, which took place in Carbondale for an advance screening of his latest work, “Stevie,” at the second annual Muddy Film Festival, which runs through March 3.

James was a student at SIUC when he directed the film. He is also appearing at the Sundance Film Festival in September and didn’t know what was going to happen to it. He had no prospects,” James said. “I was forced to do something that I’m not comfortable with.

The film is the story of a young man who is forced to make a decision about his life and what he wants to do. The main character, Stevie, is a 15-year-old boy who lives in a Chicago neighborhood and dreams of becoming a professional basketball player.

Stevie is a determined and hardworking young man who has a natural talent for basketball. He is eager to make the most of his opportunities and to achieve his goals.

Stevie’s journey is not an easy one, as he faces numerous challenges along the way. Despite these obstacles, Stevie remains committed to his dreams and continues to work hard to achieve his goals.

Stevie’s story is a testament to the power of determination and the importance of never giving up on one’s dreams. The film is a heartwarming and inspirational story that will resonate with audiences of all ages.

Charles Johnson is teaching young writers the techniques of fiction writing

Carrie Roderick Daily Egyptian

In high school, Charles Johnson dreamed of being an artist. That didn't exactly pan out.

"Discovering the heresy of the rough life of an artist, he decided to get his degree in journalism."

"I was talking to my art teacher in high school and he was talking about just how rough a life as an artist and he thought it would be a good idea for me to get a four-year degree," he said.

He decided on the field of journalism purely because of his experience on his high school paper.

"If I figured if I majored in journalism I’d have an opportunity to draw as well," he said.

And that he did.

Johnson is the author of four novels, 20 screenplays and has published more than 1,000 articles in national publications.

"He came to SIUC in 1964 from New York State University and received his bachelor’s degree in 1971. Johnson went on to get his master’s in philosophy at SIUC in 1973."

"He was an undergraduate, I wasn’t thinking of being a novelist."

"But actually, I want my first novel to be the Good Thing."

"When I was in the philosophy program, he said."

Even as an undergraduate, Johnson was a very passionate about philosophy.

"I think I was just a few credits short of getting a major in philosophy, but I decided I would do it in journalism instead, because it’s a practical degree."

Johnson received the Silas, Wilson and Grace M. Pollock Fellowship for his first novel in 1968 and was named to the faculty of the University of Washington. Johnson went on to get a Ph.D. in philosophy writing. The S. Wilson and Grace M. Pollock Fellowship for philosophy writing.

"When he attended SIUC, he remembered the late ’60s as being a very creatively open period."

"‘SIUC wasn’t like an Ivy League school where there were codes or traditions that prohibited your creativity, he said."

"It was a very creatively open place."

The ’60s were also a time that brought interesting professors to SIUC. Johnson contributed much of his success to his teacher and friend John Gardner. In 1972, Johnson married Gardiner, who had in 1970, a motorcycle accident.

"It was not long after graduation in 1970, however, that Kaykendall became a widow."

Her husband was killed Aug. 11, 1972 when a 17-year-old drug dealer shot and killed her husband during an armed robbery.

"I don’t want anyone to suffer the way that I did," she said. "Long before he pulled the trigger, something in this boy had already died."

This story was her inspiration for her comedy, Invasive Innovations for Kids (fan acronym for her husband’s name, Karel Johnson), which is usually an outlet for her presentations on how we can prevent violence.

"I want to help kids move beyond violence and crime," she said.

Kaykendall also does public work for the juvenile court system to aid children who get in trouble.

"Every child who’s tried to talk to me, she said."

The response is good by her words on the speaking circuit.

"The law is bad when I can’t," she said. "It’s a place where you get the chance, no matter how the outcome. By public speaking is how I make a living.

Her cooperation, Kaykendall, can be found at K. K. Kaykendall, the director of the National Mentoring Partnership, its members and local PTA organizations.

"Her first speech was developing leadership."

"People just ask if I could speak on certain topics, and it just mushroomed," she said.

Kaykendall was appointed one of 20 learning group leaders for the new Black studies program, which paralleled similar drills to those now called teaching assistants.

Kaykendall said that when the demonstrations began, the students did not even know what they were protesting: the riots that gave the University a reputation for being plagued with violence.

"I love Carbunado for what it did for me," she said. "I came to the University in 1968, freshman, but left a 20-year-old, old woman."

Panel discusses language, culture, peace

Four members gather to observe International Mother Language Day

The International Forum presented "Language, Culture & National Identity:Bangladesh's Struggle" Friday in the Student Center. The discussion panel comprised Dr. Fazle Bari Malik, a professor in politics, Rukhsana Ahmed, a doctoral student in political science, Shafiqur Rahman, a doctoral student in journalism, and Reshmi Chowdhury, a graduate student in sociology. The four panel members, all natives of Bangladesh, discussed the history of their home country and its current status.

The discussion was held in observance of Feb. 21, International Mother Language Day. On that day in 1952, Pakistani police killed four Bengali students. The present-day Bangladesh was a part of Pakistan known as East Pakistan at that time. Its people spoke the Bengali language, but the government changed its mind after successful lobbying. Malik said he was surprised when he heard the lobbying had worked.

"It's quite fair to say that love of language was the key to establishing the country," Malik said. "A small nation like Bangladesh was spearheaded by the will of its people."

Chowdhury echoed that sentiment and described the Bangla language as a very vibrant language.

"Bangla is one of the most dynamic languages in the world," Chowdhury said. "My people showed their inherent self-consciousness.

Malik attributes Bangladesh's independence to the Bangla language.

"It's quite fair to say that love of language was the key to establishing the country," Malik said. "A small nation like Bangladesh was spearheaded by the will of its people."

Rahman said, "I was quite shocked." Rahman said that learning other languages opens the door to world peace.

"We have to learn other languages so we can understand other cultures," Rahman said.

"Then we can promote world peace in an era of globalization. If people know something about a foreign culture, they will probably be more favorable to that culture."

BOT needs to make it three

SIU's Board of Trustees makes serious decisions that impact the student population at all of its campuses. It wasn't until 1996, during Gov. Jim Edgar's administration, that students were given a say in board matters at Illinois' universities. It was a well-needed policy change. Now, it's time for the state to rethink the student population as the board table for those trustees (through representation of its students) who represent a multi-campus university.

USG has been trying to do just that for numerous years, and just recently passed a resolution urging that student voting members on the board be proportional to the amount students pay in tuition funds. Currently, there are two student trustees, one from the Edwardsville and Carbondale campus, and only one has voting power. USG is asking for three trustees based upon the uniform representation students pay in relation to SIU's overall budget.

We agree with USG's ambitions, but not its reasoning. USG is basing its proposal on something constantly in flux. Where the University's money comes from. If the organization plan to base representation on such an unstable ratio, there could be many more students on the board that governor-appointed trustees.

Students' say in university matters should not be contingent upon monetary values.

We propose that USG push the following plan: all three student members should have voting rights. One student trustee should be elected from Edwardsville and one from Carbondale campus, one undergraduate and one graduate student. Students at schools such as SIU and the University of Illinois should now be punished because their board member represents more than one campus. Especially now when many of the decisions made specifically address one campus.

For example; if the BOT suggests a tuition increase for Carbondale, the Edwardsville trustees will have voting power, but our voice will not get full representation, just an advisory observation.

We mean no disrespect to our SIU trustees and as Board President Molly D'Esopo pointed out, there are numerous ways to address concerns besides increasing student-voting power. But the power to vote must directly affect students on the respective campuses should not be dismissed.

Students are the very core of this University and a least to the decisions that affect them. Not one single one of our board members are students from Carbondale. The closest one to this campus lives in Marion. One trustee is from Edwardsville and one from Springfield and otherwise, trustee members are scattered throughout the state.

Students who attend school not just for a service and despite common perception, we do get the bigger picture. We are investing dollars with the hope that our voice may be heard by the university.

Trustee members are not students from Carbondale or Springfield. They need a bigger representation from those closest to student concerns.

Three trustees with voting rights is the way to do it, but let's not let fluctuating tuition dollars dictate how it works.

You can save liberty with a roll of duct tape

Matt Pierson
The Maneater

COLUMBIA, Mo. (U-WIRE) — Fear not friends of free-joint! With the country on an orange terror alert level (orange you glad it isn’t higher?) some citizens might panic.

Well, we can all relax because the government has developed a secret weapon that will be sure to give us a technological advantage over the terrorist duct tape. What, you thought the government was going to put an end to crime?

To prevent people from becoming too invasive, the government has suggested you seal yourself in your favorite room using duct tape. That way, if a terrorist declares jihad on you, they’ll be delayed for 30 seconds while unfolding the duct tape on your door. In those 30 seconds, you’ll have ample time to stuff the layers of duct tape to your doorframe.

Simply repeat taping as often as you need until the terrorist gets bored and leaves, or until they kick down the door. When the terrorist kicks down the door, you’ll need to upgrade to code orange (that’s super high alert) and bust out the Sunoco tape.

I’ve developed a common-sense plan of my own to help ward off terror. I bought my plan on the hit Macaulay Culkin film “Home Alone.” Try to imagine the terrorists as two bumbling burglars and America as a lovable, rascal kid who has been left home by his parents.

Our first course of action should be to spray water on our windows at night. When the water freezes to ice, we can be sure that the perpetrator is safe. If a terrorist tries to sneak up on us in our slumber, they will slip and fall repeatedly. Perhaps we should freeze the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, just in case.

Next, we ought to take duct tape cutouts and position them on our doorknobs with duct tape in case so that it looks like America is having one giant party.

The terrorists will realize they are not invited, out they will feel ashamed. If we can’t get enough duct tape, we’ll have to add the nation’s curtain panels and cover with a “Weekend at Bernadid’s” scheme.

If the terrorist should manage to sneak past all of these defenses I’ve got an emergency plan in place. We’ll put paint cans to a string and position them behind every door in the country. When a terrorist tries to open the door (assuming you haven’t properly duct taped it) they’ll receive a surprise.

After their clothes are ruined by massive amounts of paint, they’ll have to go to a laundromat. Mission accomplished.

You should take other precautions to thwart terrorists. In addition to buying duct tape, you might want to buy some glue. If a terrorist breaks into your home, simply glue their feet to the floor until the cows can arise.

Or you could carry gumballs, marmalades and lollipops in your pocket while you proceed with your normal life. If a terrorist chases you, simply throw the gumballs, candies and bananas on the ground behind you, ensuring that you can make a clean and glorious getaway.

Ultimately it’s every citizen’s duty to protect him or herself from a possible terrorist attack. You can either play it safe or be caught unprepared. It’s my self’s going to be logical about this. Now hand me the duct tape. will you?

Their views do not necessarily reflect those of the Daily Egyptian.

Words Overheard

"I look at the flag when I leave home every day, and it’s a small way of reminding me how lucky I am to be living in the United States."

Jay Seydell
Carbondale resident on Mayor Dillard’s declaration of patriotism week.
To the dinner of conservatives everywhere, the Illinois state legislature has put a rather odd bill back on the agenda. The Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) was first passed in Illinois in 1970 due to a constitutional amendment that specified that Illinois could adopt an amendment entitled with 35 state ratifications — the shortest form of becoming a law. With the ERA back in the Illinois legislature, conservatives fear that the state might revisit it, leading to legislation that would be detrimental to women, guaranteeing women the same rights as men. Yet for some, the mother, how can you draft someone’s son? The fear is that the ERA would force women to work in ways (other than their choice) that would be detrimental to them, and perhaps the ERA has the potential to make things fall apart for all women, their first fear might be justified.

The ERA may prove to be liberating the world of women to academics and by their conservative husbands, that they may support the courage in trying for their own happiness and freedom from the stranglehold of their husbands. This could lead to the planning of equal rights of women, which has been greatly desired for many years. It was finally chosen by people that the ERA is an equalizer of women's rights, and perhaps conservative men have a point, but all fear might be justified.

Second to get a shot off. Tucker got the next one in to Page, who got it back to Tucker. He rolled left and fired a decent shot from just outside the three-point line.

The shot went in and out and was blocked out at the three-second line, giving the Salukis the ball with 12 seconds left.

UNA-Demondeer head coach Bruce Pearl was not mad with the shot selection on the last play and said it was the best they could do with the time available.

"With three seconds left on the shot clock and you get the ball in the hands of your best player and he gets an open look, I wasn't unhappy with the shot," Pearl said.

Williams said the Salukis knew they had no realistic chance to win the series and if they did get a shot off, don't let them get the rebound and have an easy put-back for the win.

"We had to say no matter what, don't let them get the rebound," Williams said. "If they made it they make it, but we've got to get a hand in their face. We've got to get our rebound and not give them a chance."

"It was a lot of fun," Williams said. "You get a full house here and you're on ESPN. This is March Madness right here. That's what I live for. If you can't go to a blood pumping NCAA game, at least get some exposure to the game.

SIU's next game will be at home Wednesday night against Evansville. Maybe the committee is looking for excuses not to take you. We can't give them any more excuses."

Water Dawgs take second

A pre-meet coach predicted the Salukis to finish second to the Bears. The results depended on what they were talking about.

The Salukis finished 167 points behind Southwest Missouri State, to take second place at the MVC swimming and diving championships Saturday. This was the first time the Bears won the championship and the first time in six years that it wasn't the Salukis claiming the trophy.

The Water Dawgs were a very young team with only one senior — Amber Mullins. The Bears had six seniors, but Mullins said the youth didn't matter at all. "Mullins said the youth didn't mean that it affected the team at all," Sunday said. "We didn't win, but we came as second. Sad! The years that we won, they went out and did what they needed to do.

SIU head women's coach Jeff Goedl said he wasn't sure if the youth was a factor. "It's hard to say," Goedl said. "I think a lot of young people, this is the first conference situation. I think in the meeting they get a little nervous, but then a night, they are ready. It's not that big a deal.

Big deal or not, the Salukis won only one race Saturday when Mullins finished third in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 20.99. The win did help the Bears clump out of third place to tie for second from Illinois State.

Despite the loss, the Salukis were in good spirits and able to find some of the women's faces. They knew they had tried their best but lost to a better team that coach Michael Brenner said. "It was a great day, we saved our best for last." Mullins said the Salukis were swimming great. "Our girls are swimming great," said Mullins. "They are swimming way better than I would have thought they would do.

"I know that feeling because I've had that feeling the last two years," Goedl said. "I don't want to say anything that we are going to make it but at least he had the right idea to take the team to the nationals."

Even with the Bear's domination of the conference, the Salukis were able to capture a few awards of their own.

Brenner, Andrea Johnson, Amber McCauley, Liz Kassner, Stephanie Hopper, Liz Kassner, Kayla Hoppes and Lauren Hoppes were named to the All-MVC team. Six Salukis also made it to the MVC Scholar-Athlete Team for a minimum 3.0 grade point average and men performance. They were Andrea Hoppes, Stephanie Hopper, Brennely Logan, Johnson, McCauley and Olson.

"Darren can create just as anybody on the team, and he did a good job of getting to the hole," Williams said. "I thought it was going to make it, but at least he had the right idea to take the team to the nationals."

The tip-in was Hairston's first make big phys down the stretch.

"It's been like this all year," Weber said. "Every game we get the lead, we come back and we have to make big plays down the stretch. Our kids have been through big games, but they seem to be more normal.

The victory kept the Salukis' hopes for an at-large bid in the NCAA tournament alive, but may put a damper on UW-Milwaukee's post-season plans. Even with a loss, Panther head coach Bruce Paul said his team had nothing to hang his head about.

"This was a team that gave everything. We put it on our home floor and scored the points out of them. That's See BUSTED, page 14

Of course, the game was not over. But nobody seemed to care.

Hundreds of Saluki fans, most of them students, stormed the court after Darren Hairston ripped in a Darren Brooks shot attempt as time expired, giving SIU what turned out to be the conference against instant replay, a heart-stopping 66-64 victory over Wisconsin-Milwaukee in Saturday's ESPN Bracket Buster game.

"I still don't know what happened," Hairston said with a somewhat satedcatic tone on his face after the game. "I still don't know what happened and I just can't explain the feeling:"

The final play which SIU had only had about seven seconds to work, was designed by coach Keith Williams. But after UW-M Milwaukee's put a defensive blanket on the senior guard, Brooks drove to the basket and missed a layup before Hairston's finger roll just high enough to give the Salukis the victory.

"Darren can create just as anybody on the team, and he did a good job of getting to the hole," Williams said. "I thought it was going to make it, but at least he had the right idea to take the team to the nationals."
