Cubs win stay in realignment

CHICAGO (UPI) — A federal judge Thursday issued a court order temporarily barring baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent from ordering the Chicago Cubs to move from the National League East to the National League West.

U.S. District Judge Suzanne Conlon issued a written opinion on the Cubs' suit challenging the authority of Vincent to order the division switch and "interpreted the league's Constitution, which she construed as supporting the Cubs' position," a court spokesman said.

Vincent "exceeded his authority in ordering the transfer" and his "unprecedented action" violated Article VII of the Major League Agreement, Conlon wrote. "The Chicago Cubs may not be transferred to the Western Division without their consent."

Cubs spokeswoman Sharon Pannoza said the team is "very pleased" with the ruling.

"While the matter is not yet finally resolved, the action today was a good thing for Chicago, the Cubs, their fans and the game of baseball," the team statement said.

Vincent said an immediate appeal would be filed.

"Obviously, I am disappointed by Judge Conlon's decision. We are taking an immediate appeal to the 7th (U.S.) Circuit Court of Appeals and remain confident that

Going for gold

American swimmers poised for medals

BARCELONA, Spain (UPI) — Maybe the American Olympic swim team doesn't want to tempt fate by talking about the success that seems to be just around the corner.

Whatever their reasons, the swimmers seemed unwilling to predict much success for themselves. But the fact remains that the U.S. has arrived at the Barcelona Olympics with what amounts to its most talented team in years. But there is no way to know it from talking to the swimmers themselves.

Traditionally, the American women's squad swam in the shadows of a powerful East German team. With the fall of the Eastern Bloc, however, much has changed. The United States seems poised to take advantage of those changes with a strong team of its own.

"We've got a tough group," said Dara Torres, the 1984 gold medalist in the 4 x 100-meter freestyle relay, and one of the team captains this time. "We should do well here, but it's the Olympics so you can never tell."

That last sentiment is one echoed by most team members. Call it cautious optimism.

The Australian team has improved dramatically over the last four years, helping to fill the void left by the East Germans. Several swimmers pointed out that problems in former East Germany don't necessarily translate into problems for the former East German swimmers.

"We can't take anything for granted in this environment," said team captain Tom Jager, the world record holder in the 50-meters freestyle. "To me, the Germans look as strong as they've ever looked and the rest of the world has gotten better. It's going to be

In-line skating soaring in numbers

By Norm Smyth
Sports Writer

In-line skating is the fastest growing sport in America with 6.2 million skaters hitting the pavement or hardwood.

Hockey enthusiasts and players during the early 1980s were looking for a good way to keep in shape.

During the past year the number of skaters has increased by 45 percent with 45 percent of all skaters being women, according to American Sports Data, Inc.

In-line skates were developed in 1980 by brothers Brennan and Scott Olsen from Minneapolis for use in the summer to keep in shape for hockey season. In-line skates are unlike roller skates in that they use three to five wheels in a straight line to preform like a hockey skate.

The Olsens set up shop in their parents basement and started Rollerblade Inc. with a target market of hockey players.

The market was limited at first to hockey players and the Minneapolis area, but in 1985 the market was targeted for main stream consumers and sales started to increase, said Steve Beyers, customer service representative for Rollerblade.

"Four of the leading in-line skate manufacturers are based in Minneapolis today, but the market for the skates has grown worldwide," Beyers said.

In-line skating is a great form of transportation as well as exercise. In-line skaters recognize the low impact, high aerobic benefits of the sport, said Edmund Burke, Ph.D. in health management.

Fitness studies have shown that in-line skating is a great workout that can burn fat, increase aerobic endurance and provide a more effective workout than even running or

Jumping takes ex-Saluki Plab to great heights

Two-time NCAA champion anticipating professional career

By Jay Reed
Sports Writer

Former SIUC high jump standout Darrin Plab loved to jump as a youngster— not over the high jump bar, but through the air for a slam dunk.

Plab, a two-time NCAA high jump champion and 1992 Olympic qualifier who left SIUC in June to turn professional after the Barcelona Olympic Games, said the sport he loved to play in high school was not track and field, but basketball.

"In high school I was a basketball guy," he said. "I could tell by playing basketball that I had a great ability to jump and dunk. The only reason I went out for track was to get a letter."

Plab's senior year at Mascoutah High School attracted college recruiters from across the country. He jumped 7-2 1/2, the nation's best high school high jump of the year. Plab chose to attend the University of Illinois instead of the University of Arkansas on a track and field scholarship.

Three days before Plab went to Champaign, however, Jerry Clayton, the assistant track and field coach who recruited Plab, resigned to take a coaching position elsewhere. With his coach gone and the U of I's bustling atmosphere, Plab dropped out of the university.

"I was scared of the U of I," he said. "It is a big university and I had a big head, but it did make me take things a lot more serious."

Plab transferred to SIUC following his 30-day stint at the U of I and became eligible to compete in January 1990.

SIUC track and field Coach Bill Cornell said Plab had no problem adjusting to college-level high jumping.

"He got on a more intensified training schedule, started lifting weights and got stronger," Cornell said. "Darrin was very dedicated and had high goals. He did what it took to attain those goals."

One of Plab's 1992 goals was the defending his 1991 NCAA high jump championship. Plab jumped 7-8 to win the competition. From Austin he went to New Orleans for the U.S. Olympic trials, where he jumped his way to the Barcelona Olympics.

Plab tied Hollis Conway for the meet record with a jump of 7-8 1/2, which also was the best jump by an American this year. Plab finished second overall to Conway because Conway attained the height in fewer attempts.

Ed Williams, an SIUC Olympic trials qualifier in the 110-meter hurdles, said Plab is a great athlete and thinks their friendship will last for years.

"He did a hell of a job this year," Williams said. "We are good friends, and we will continue to be good friends even though we are not in the same events."

Plab said Connie Price-Smith, former SIUC track and field standout and 1992 Barcelona Olympic qualifier in the shotput and discus, was like a big sister

Council considers work documents

By Jeremy Finley
Administration Writer

The SIUC Graduate Council is requesting more time to review a working document which lists possible cuts and reallocations at the University.

The council voted Thursday to approve the resolution requesting an extended deadline from the SIUC Board of Trustees.

The resolution is a joint effort of the Faculty Senate and the Graduate Council.

Graduates want more time to review cutbacks

The Faculty Senate approved the resolution July 14.

The working document was requested by the Illinois Board of Higher Education to determine where cuts could be made at the University.

BOT members urged administrators in June to prepare the document in full for presentation at the September Board meeting. The evaluated copy of the form will be sent to the IBHE in October.

Ronald Smith, Graduate Council member, said more time is needed to review the request document.

"We want everyone involved with this," Smith said. "Everyone including faculty and administration."

Jervis Underwood, president of the SIUC Faculty Senate, said at a Senate meeting earlier this month that more time is needed to review the document in full.

"There is not going to be enough time to do this," Underwood said. "There is just simply not enough time to get the form together in full."

Hans Rudnick, member of the Graduate Council, said those at SIUC should be making the final recommendations on the request form, not the IBHE.

"I do not trust the Board," Rudnick said. "We know what is going on here, we know the programs here, they do not know them as well."

SIUC President John C. Guyon said the Council should take action and have the PQP document ready by the September deadline.

"We are in a circle, we keep reviewing and reviewing," Guyon said. "And if we do not break out of this circle we will be in it for too

Trueblood Cafeteria to close on weekends next semester

By Chris Davies
General Assignment Writer

Trueblood Cafeteria will be closed weekends and Saturday breakfasts at residence hall cafeterias will be eliminated because of low attendance in the campus cafeterias on weekends.

The eliminations will take effect in the fall semester.

Officials estimate the eliminations will reduce costs by $166,000 in fiscal year 1993.

Very few students are eating on the weekends said Mary Morgan, SIUC Associate Director of food service.

"According to reports I have received from the three cafeterias on campus only 20 students eat breakfast on the weekends and only 2000 eat dinner as opposed to the usual 3000 students," she said.

"This is a tradition with all colleges," Morgan said. "Very few students make it to Saturday morning breakfast because they sleep in or go home for the weekend," she said.

Bush considers military operation against Iraq, force upon Hussein

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush huddled with his top strategists Thursday to consider a military operation against Iraq that would force President Saddam Hussein to permit U.N. inspections of weapons sites.

The prospect of a military assault to curb Saddam's intransigence seemed nearer Thursday, as U.N. teams remained barred from pursuing inspections and U.S. allies, including France, proposed giving Baghdad an ultimatum suggesting the use of force.

Asked whether Bush had made a decision on the use of force against Iraq, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said: "I won't comment on military decisions. I won't speculate on the decision."

He reiterated the comment he made Wednesday that fueled speculation of a possible military strike when he said, "All options remain open."

Bush had lunch Thursday with his top military and national security officials for 90 minutes to discuss the standoff in Baghdad between loyalists to Saddam and U.N. officials who have tried unsuccessfully to enter the Agriculture Department, which is believed to house information about Iraqi missile sites.

The White House meeting, which Fitzwater said consisted of a "general overview of the situation," included Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft, Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger, Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Robert Gates, director of Central Intelligence.

Secretary of State James Baker, largely expected to join the president's re-election campaign, was in Saudi Arabia Thursday, meeting with top officials about Iraq and the Middle East peace talks. The Saudis have offered once again to host U.S. military operations as they did during the invasion in early 1991.

Fitzwater said Bush "has talked

Officials: Water sample readings questionable

By Rebecca Campbell
General Assignment Writer

Water samples taken from the SIUC carapuz that had lead and copper levels exceeding federal guidelines may not have been realistic readings, said a University official.

James Tyrrell, chairman of University Hazardous Waste

Oversite Advisory Committee, said samples should be taken from the faucet after water has had a chance to sit in the pipes overnight. But the IEPA took the samples in late May after the end of the spring semester. The water samples could have been sitting in the pipes for a week or more, he said.

When water sits in pipes it gets stale and corrosive, absorbing metal from the solder seams and pipes, said Joe Stuart, IEPA engineer with the Division of Public Water Supplies.

"I think a problem could be spotted in anybody's water system if water sat (in the pipes) long enough," Stuart said.

SIUC President John C. Guyon said the samples taken from Evergreen Terrace, University

Terrace, Fulkerson Hall and Mae Smith.

The IEPA released the results of preliminary tests earlier this month that showed five sites on the SIUC campus were above the new IEPA guidelines for lead in water. The sites were the Poultry Center, 179 Evergreen Terrace, 164 Evergreen

Terrace, Fulkerson Hall and Mae Smith.

The new guidelines limit the allowable amount of lead in water to be 15 parts of lead per billion gallons of water. The old guidelines allowed 50 parts per billion, Stuart said.

"Nothing has happened to the

Americans with disabilities to gain from act provision

By Lynelle Marquardt
General Assignment Writer

The second provision of the Americans with Disabilities Act, which requires some businesses to make adjustments to enable employees with disabilities to work, will take effect July 26.

This provision requires businesses with more than 25 employees to make necessary changes, such as adjusting work stations and equipment.

Barbara Stotlar, program director of the Southern Illinois Center for Independent Living, said local businesses probably will not be strongly affected.

"Many of the small businesses in Southern Illinois aren't going to be directly affected immediately," she said. "The smaller businesses have a longer time frame to implement the law."

James Prowell, executive director of the Chamber of Commerce in Carbondale, said the area businesses are prepared for this provision.

"The Carbondale businesses have been gearing up to make absolutely sure that they will conform with the act," he said. "I don't think that it will have any adverse effects at all."

Carbondale has a history of working with people with disabilities and working to be accessible, Prowell said.

"Many of the businesses are going beyond what is required by law," he said.

Businesses are making sure, either in promoting or hiring that the job descriptions and the facilities are accurate, Prowell said.

Another provision of the act, passed in 1991, requires businesses be accessible to people with disabilities, she said.

"The businesses should be accessible by law, but the authors of the law are patient," she said. "We understand that it is going to take some time."

"We are not letting people off—but we're not going to see elevators and heavy equipment right away. Although they should be making every good faith effort to make their businesses accessible."

Stotlar said as the economy turns around, more businesses will be able to make the adjustments.

Businesses in Southern Illinois employ some people with disabilities, but not enough, she said.

"The University has been great and there are other employers in Carbondale. Unfortunately, this is not the case in some of the smaller towns around here."

The Americans with Disabilities Act will benefit Southern Illinois, as the rest of the United States, by increasing the talent and skill base that employers have to choose from, Stotlar said.

In 1994, the third phase of the provision will take effect. This will require businesses with 15 to 24 employees to make the same adjustments for people with disabilities.

Lisa Wolfe, spokeswoman for the Illinois Department of Rehabilitation Services, said the law is set up so small businesses can be prepared.

"Each year the act becomes broader and broader," she said. "It's kind of phased in so smaller employers can prepare for it."

Stotlar said this law will help people with disabilities and also employers.

"I think this law has the potential to create access and to create opportunity for people with disabilities throughout the country," she said. "It will do that only if it is implemented and closely monitored. If not, like any other law it will not do what it is intended to do."

Stotlar said people with disabilities are ready to help the community make the necessary adjustments.

"People with disabilities and their advocates stand ready to assist their local communities, employers, businesses and public agencies in implementing the law," she said.

History professor compiles essays on Civil War

By Vincent Boyd
Student Writer

Original essays by Civil War experts have been compiled and edited in a new book by SIUC history Professor John Y. Simon.

Simon said his book, "The Continuing Civil War: Essays in Honor of The Civil War Round Table of Chicago," released June 12, features the works of two Pulitzer Prize-winning authors.

"James M. McPherson and Mark E. Neely, Jr., past winners of Pulitzers in history, are just two of the writers featured in this book," Simon said.

Barbara Hughett author of "The Civil War Round Table: Fifty Years of Scholarship and Fellowship," and co-editor with Simon, said their book is one of the most credible in publication.

"This compilation of essays is unmatched. We feature two Pulitzer Prize winners and Simon, who is regarded by his peers as the dean of documentarists," Hughett said.

Simon said the essays by McPherson and Neely, are likely to be award winners.

"Lincoln and the Theory of Self-Empowerment" (Neely) and "The Two Cultures and the Civil War" (McPherson) are fascinating and in-depth essays that are going to cause a stir when award time rolls around," Simon said.

Hughett said the book was published in conjunction with the 50th Anniversary of the Civil War Round Table of Chicago in 1990.

"The papers delivered during the anniversary weekend are all in this book," Hughett said.

Bob Younger, the owner of Morningside House, the publisher, said early sales of the book look are looking good.

U.S. should reverse immigration policy

THE AMERICAN POLICY OF blocking visitors and permanent immigrants infected with the AIDS virus from entering the country has come under justifiable attack at the international AIDS conference in the Holland. The legislation is the reason the conference is being held in the European country instead of the scheduled site, Boston. The implementation of the policy does not only put the United States at the bottom of the list of developed nations reacting to the disease, but contributes to the perpetuation of stereotypes and myths about the illness.

The ban has little public health value, and the reasons for its implementation owe more to the politics of homophobia and xenophobia than to any threat posed by people infected with HIV. When the Center for Disease Control recommended one year ago that the ban on infected visitors be lifted, it was the pressure of conservative politicians that made the Bush administration renege on altering the immigration law.

Banning carriers of an infectious disease from entering a country may seem reasonable. Yet in its zeal to protect this nation from the disease, the administration is forgetting that AIDS is not transmitted through casual contact, and that in a nation where an estimated 1.5 million people already are infected, the danger posed by infected visitors is minimal. Besides HIV patients, immigration restrictions only are imposed on people suffering from tuberculosis. There are no laws for carriers of more infectious and easy to spread conditions such as hepatitis. This makes the AIDS imposition unsustainable. In 1991 Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan affirmed there was no scientific rationale behind the ban.

The administration's second argument, that the cost of treating AIDS infected aliens would be too high, is also flawed. If this were the issue the United States would ban all foreigners with cancer and heart disease from entering the country.

IN THE END, THE BAN serves to imply that the danger of AIDS comes from abroad, and that closing the borders to HIV infected people will prevent the spread of the disease. It also contributes to the negative image of the United States in the international community, since no developed nation in the world has a similar policy on AIDS.

The law also is an example of the policy the Reagan and Bush administrations have taken towards the disease. That gay men and intravenous drug users were the principal victims of the illness until a few years ago has been seen as cause for the sluggishness of both administrations in responding to the threat. Stereotyping victims of the disease did not lead only to political apathy in funding AIDS research, but to a confidence of the general population about the illness that many blame for the rapid spread of AIDS. In the political arena, conservative Republicans like presidential candidate Pat Buchanan and Sen. Jesse Helms, R-North Carolina, have openly blamed gay men and Haitian immigrants for the spread of AIDS.

The reversal of the ban would not only help demystify a disease whose victims have been unfairly stigmatized, but would help the United States to join the advanced nations of the world, where medical decisions are made following a scientific rationale, not political pressure.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted directly to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Racial problems in America solvable through education

Race relations between African Americans and European Americans may be the primary cause for racism in America today. In the July 8 Daily Egyptian, I read what I perceived as a very accurate account of how African Americans feel toward this social system. As I read Ms. Eldridge's letter, "Rappers anger is justified," I could not find anything that could not be proven.

The response to this letter, "Angry letter, tantrum in written form," in the July 16 D.E., was a direct reflection on the problem of racism and miseducation which America confronts today. Doug Lambert refers to Ms. Eldridge's letter as a, "display of ignorance." If Mr. Lambert does feel this way, I challenge him or anyone who shares his belief, to research the topics presented. I'm sure after Mr. Lambert has done this, the assumption of ignorance will be reversed.

It is sad, but not unbelievable, that in 1992 we have people in darkness, who cannot understand the feelings of African Americans. European history texts regarding African Americans are usually tagged with negative connotations. One of America's biggest mistakes in its education system is the ignorance of the African Americans' contribution to this country and the world. As a result, many people, black and white, find it hard to understand the social dilemma in America.

As we head into the 21st century it seems race relations are getting worse. The country is losing its domestic war against crime, drugs, unemployment and poverty. I think it is feasible to say the solution to these problems may not lie in the continuation of ridicule, but rather a start in understanding each other. I really wish there was no need for me to write this letter, but because of the negativity the media constantly put on African Americans, it is imperative that myself, as well as other African Americans, begin to combat the negative perceptions.—Leroy J. Wright I, Graduate Student, Higher Education.

Trust necessary to end racial hate

Racial Violence. Who's responsible for it? We all are. Racial tension is present amongst us, but it is often not openly talked about.

There is racial injustice, that is well known, but who keeps "egging" it on? Thursday night, I was at a bar, and someone got right in the middle of a racial disturbance. To make a long story short, some colored people were provoking and challenging any whites to differ in any way.

The colored people who were involved seemed to only be competing against one another to get and racial generalizations out in the open, so to speak. They weren't mad at anyone in particular, they were mad at the white race in general. When is racial tension going to cease to exist?

Both races feel there is a competition between each other. There shouldn't be any hatred, only togetherness. We are all on the same planet, living in the same communities, walking on the same streets, coexisting. There should be no hatred of each other or racial separation amongst us, only respect and trust.

Whites and blacks alike feel each is intruding upon the other. We must realize the importance of coexisting with each other. Both races are here to stay. The boundaries must be broken between the ideologies which forbid the two races from becoming allied as one common people, forming one nation, in the "melting pot" of the world. It's due time that we make some peace, if not for our own good, then for the wellness of this nation.—Dan Presley, Junior, Political Science.

Intervention necessary in Bosnia

Since war is unthinkable in the United States, many Americans, including myself, have not really thought about the Yugoslavian war a half a world away. News reports and casualties are just statistics to a public so protected from war within its boundaries.

Watching the C.N.N. news reports of the children suffering and dying puts the war more in perspective. As a student of history I have studied causes and motivations for war throughout history. The war in Yugoslavia is like most wars, pointless and unnecessary.

C.N.N. showed pictures of children burned and injured. The scene that disturbed me the most was a video tape of an infant with his legs amputated by a shelling attack. The scene showed a baby with a pacifier in his mouth and without a leg. Here was a baby not old enough to speak, much less hate, a victim of "adults" who can't get along with each other because of ethnic identity.

I do not support military actions unless they are absolutely necessary. However, after viewing the pictures of dying children I would support military action by the United Nations. I often side with those who believe that the United States should not play the role of international policeman. However, if this Nation and other peaceful nations stand for the protection of freedom and human rights, I feel they should step in and stop such barbaric actions. It hurts me deeply to see children suffer at the hands of adults, especially when its in the name of such Neanderthal concepts of race superiority or ethnic boundaries.

Studying American history I fully realize that our Nation has blood on its hands from children in past military actions. Despite this, I feel it's time for our military and/or the United Nations to stand up for human rights and come to protect the humans who can't protect themselves the most, the children.—David G. McGraw, Junior, History, Political Science.

Former president of Lebanon dies of pneumonia

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Suleiman Franjeh, the former Lebanese president and Syria's staunch Christian ally whose last days in office witnessed the outbreak of bloody sectarian strife in 1975, died Thursday. He was 82. Franjeh had been admitted to the American University Hospital in Beirut two weeks earlier suffering from severe pneumonia and heart complications.

A presidential eulogy Thursday announced a seven-day national period of mourning during which flags will be flown at half-mast on all public institutions and television and radio stations will only broadcast classical music.

Franjeh was born June 15, 1910, in the village of Zghorta, 39 miles north of Beirut. He inherited his feudal authority from his elder brother, Hamid, who had been Zghorta's representative in parliament since 1932.

In 1957, Hamid Franjeh, as an opposition member of parliament, led a challenge to President Camille Chamoun that touched off fighting among the various clans of Zghorta.

The most serious incident occurred in Miziara in June 1957, when Suleiman Franjeh sought refuge in Syria after reportedly killing 23 people in the village's church.

Suleiman Franjeh took over his brother's leadership when Hamid died of a cerebral hemorrhage in October 1957. He returned to Lebanon following Fouad Shehab's election as president on Sept. 22, 1958.

He was elected to parliament in 1960, representing Zghorta, and stayed a deputy until his election as president.

Franjeh resorted to strong tactics to impose law and order during his first three years as president.

He demanded that the Palestinian Liberation Organization suspend its operations from inside Lebanese territory following repeated Israeli attacks on southern Lebanon in October 1972.

But domestic tranquility in Lebanon became undermined beginning in May 1973.

long." Guyon said the time to take action is now.

"We have talked about it, we can not be bogged down by this," he said. "We need to put this review together and get on with it."

John Haller, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs, said if the Council does not finish the document, the IBHE will do it for them.

The recommendation will be sent to the IBHE for final review.

The Board also discussed scholarships for graduate students.

Harry Daniels, associate dean in the Graduate School, said money for graduate tuition scholarships will be $72,000 less than fiscal year 1992.

The distribution amount for FY93 is $150,000.

Daniels said the scholarships are needed by the graduate students.

"There are students out there worthy for the education, but do not have the money for it," Daniels said.

"Graduate students are less certain about receiving money from financial aid," he said.

Morgan said closing one of the cafeterias is an efficiency issue.

"Closing at least one of the cafeterias cuts labor costs for running cafeterias with no students in them," she said.

"In some of the cafeterias employees had consumed the majority of the meals for the day, because student attendance was so low."

Morgan said the decision was made in May by the Housing Board and agreed on by the Residence Housing Association.

"RHA agreed with the decision of the board to close Trueblood and extend the cafeteria hours from 4:30 to 6p.m. to 4:30 to 6:30 on weekends," she said.

Don Vagner, SIUC Housing Fiscal Department, said his office began work on the budget last October.

"We began putting together cost figures to decide how to reduce the students housing increases and this is one of the best ways to do it," he said.

"We surveyed students for their opinions on the decision to close and they approved," he said. "We then received School Board approval and it will take effect in the fall of 92."

Kevin Hostetler, Trueblood Cafeteria manager, said closing the cafeteria will not have a negative effect on the students.

"Trueblood is very close to Grinnell and the two cafeterias are very similar, so we do not anticipate students having any difficulties getting to eat on the weekends," he said.

Reginald Wiliby, SIUC graduate student, said closing one of the cafeterias makes sense.

"Students usually find things to do during the weekends which get them away from the dorms so they don't eat at the cafeterias," he said. "If one hall can feed the bulk of the students that want to eat in the cafeterias on the weekends then I see no harm in it."

Joe Caston, SIUC senior, said the decision to close Trueblood will not have any negative effects on students.

"I rarely eat in the cafeterias on the weekends," he said. "Not many students do, because the dining halls don't really fit into a weekend schedule as well as it does during the weekdays."

to Baker today." But he quickly added, "I don't know what about."

While the administration toughens its language against Iraq, it appears to be uncertain whether current U.N. resolutions permit the additional use of force, a factor that could delay a military operation.

"We hold the view that U.N. resolutions in existence authorize military force to get compliance with the U.N. resolutions," Fitzwater said.

"However, this matter is under discussion at the U.N. There could be another resolution."

In addition, both Cheney and Powell are said to oppose a military strike, which could have ramifications in the region.

China and Russia are also said to be unenthusiastic about another military invasion against Iraq.

Fitzwater seemed to confirm the existence of some sort of administration split when he said, "I guarantee you that there is, there will be consensus on whatever course we take."

One administration official said that with Baker in the Middle East, it appears unlikely that Bush is poised to launch a military strike.

U.N. weapons inspectors were withdrawn from the Iraqi Agriculture Ministry on Wednesday, ending a standoff with angry demonstrators after an Iraqi tried to stab an inspector.

Saddam has repeatedly played a cat and mouse game with inspectors, holding them at bay until the administrative sharpens its language, before ceding to U.S. and U.N. demands.

water supply," Tyrrell said. Federal EPA experts decided the 1974 standard of 50 parts per billion was too lax, he said, especially where small children, who tend to be affected the most, are concerned.

Also, samples taken under the old regulations were from the source of the water, like a water treatment plant, Tyrrell said. Now the samples are taken from faucets.

Stuart said testing will be done on a routine basis from now on because of the new regulations, so the IEPA will continue to monitor the samples. He also said the levels of lead in the five sites on campus are not harmful.

Mary Taylor, a social work major who lives at Evergreen Terrace, said she had not been informed of the test results, but she is not really worried about the lead in the water.

"Every place we've been in had a problem with the water supply at some time," Taylor said.

Another Evergreen Terrace resident, David Holder, an administration of justice major, also said he had not heard of the test results. The residents should have received notification immediately, he said.

"Some people panic, so they have to be given exact information," he said.

Jeann Paratore, associate vice president of Student Affairs, said a letter explaining the situation to the tenants of Evergreen Terrace will be released by this morning.

Passing trash

Senate moves to approve legislation reducing state garbage

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate moved Thursday toward approval of legislation designed to cut the shipment of municipal waste, garbage and trash from one state to another — a start toward resolving the "pass-the-trash" problem overwhelming some areas.

Under the bill, a governor may ban municipal solid waste imports or cap imports at 1991 or 1992 levels, but only if requested by a local government or a local waste management unit.

Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., fought the bill, saying that a small community should not be able, on its own, to agree to accept out-of-town waste and said the bill would set a precedent when Congress deals with industrial and hazardous waste.

In only four states that accepted more than 1 million tons of municipal solid waste in 1991 — Indiana, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Virginia — can a governor act without a request from the local community.

In those cases, governors can reduce the amount of out-of-state solid waste at a landfill to 20 percent of capacity in 1998 and to 10 percent in the year 2,000.

In the key compromise, reached Wednesday, the Senate approved an amendment that would allow a governor to abrogate a private contract for shipping solid waste in 1999.

The Supreme Court, in several decisions, has said that a state, under the Commerce Clause of the Constitution, cannot act to bar interstate transportation of waste without a federal law — creating the need for the legislation.

Conrad said the Senate made a "serious mistake" Wednesday night by rejecting 60-31 an amendment that would have allowed a governor to ban or cap the importation of municipal solid waste without the concurrence of the local communities.

Conrad said a newspaper in his home state carried a story that General Motors plans to send industrial waste from 100 plants to a landfill in Sawyer, N.D., a town of 319 people.

"There is nothing the state of North Dakota can do about it," Conrad said. "It may not be your problem today, but it may be your nightmare tomorrow."

"Once a contract is signed, there is nothing a governor can do to stop it," he added. "The only ones that can are the big four."

"This bill that is held out as a savior and hope is a sham," Conrad said. "Unless the local community agrees, the governor can do nothing."

In the case of Sawyer, Conrad said that the landfill sits on top of an aquifer that provides water for thousands of people in the area.

But Sen. Max Baucus, D-N.D., said he had just telephoned officials in Sawyer who told him only 2 percent of GM's waste will go to Sawyer and that the landfill will have special liners to protect against leakage.

Sens. John Chafee, R-R.I., Dan Coats, R-Ind., and Baucus fought to keep the bill intact despite Conrad's complaints.

Chafee pointed out that the bill deals with municipal, not industrial waste, noting that the country produces only about 200 million tons of municipal waste a year, but 8 billion tons of industrial waste.

He said if the bill had dealt with industrial waste issues, "we would be getting into all sorts of kinds of problems — problems we don't know about."

Bush meets security officials to discuss Hussein defiance

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush met Thursday with his top military and national security officials on "a wide range of foreign policy" issues, including the continuing defiance from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

The administration warned Wednesday that it may take military action against Iraq after Baghdad refused to allow U.N. inspectors to search the Agriculture Ministry for documents relating to Iraq's missile program.

On Thursday, Bush had a luncheon meeting with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft and Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger.

"They're talking about a wide range of foreign policy and security issues," a White House official said. "Iraq would be on the agenda."

With Secretary of State James Baker in the Middle East, it appears unlikely that Bush is poised to launch a military strike, the White House official said Thursday.

The meeting is probably intended to "set the stage for what comes next," the official said.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters Wednesday, "We are not ruling out any options, including the use of military force."

Fitzwater said, "We are increasingly concerned by the Iraqi regime's continuing defiance of the United Nations. They are stonewalling U.N. inspectors who are trying to identify and destroy Iraq's weapons of mass destruction."

Military strikes against Iraq would not require additional U.N. approval, Fitzwater said.

A U.N. official said Wednesday that U.N. weapons inspectors were withdrawn from the Iraqi agriculture ministry, ending a standoff with angry demonstrators after an Iraqi tried to stab an inspector.

The official said the incident took place before dawn Wednesday in front of the Iraqi Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Saddam has repeatedly played a cat and mouse game with inspectors, holding them at bay until the administration sharpens its language, before ceding to U.S. and U.N. demands.

"We've had two or three experiences where we've reached this kind of point, where it looks like open defiance, some threat to our personnel on the ground and I'd say that this is about as serious as any we've faced," Fitzwater said.

On Tuesday, Bush extended full trade sanctions against Baghdad and a freeze on its government investments held in the United States.

Bush said in a executive order issued Tuesday that "because the government of Iraq has continued its activities hostile to U.S. interests in the Middle East, the national emergency declared on Aug. 2, 1990 ... must continue in effect beyond Aug. 2, 1992," the expiration date.

The White House has said it would not renew normal relations with Iraq unless Saddam is removed from power.

Experts discover virus like AIDS

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (UPI) — AIDS experts called Thursday for an international effort to investigate the possible existence of a new virus that may cause a disease similar to AIDS.

But researchers stressed that it was far from clear that a new virus had been discovered or that it caused disease, and said there was no reason for alarm by the public.

"We do not want to be complacent, but there is certainly no reason to panic," said Dr. Anthony Fauci of the U.S.

National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, speaking at the 8th International Conference on AIDS.

"As it stands now, we can make no definitive conclusions regarding whether we are dealing with something real, whether it is real it is actually causing a disease, or whether or not that disease is communicable," he said.

Sudhir Gupta, an immunologist, announced he discovered what appeared to be a new virus in patients with AIDS-like symptoms.

Clinton speaks during rain; presentation from the heart

HOUSTON (UPI) — Thundershowers failed to dampen the reception Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton received Thursday from hundreds of supporters who got soaked listening to his speech on crime issues.

Flanked by dozens of uniformed police officers on the steps of City Hall, Clinton was endorsed by the International Union of Police Associations AFL-CIO before he spoke.

The Arkansas governor called for better drug education and for early intervention programs to help those who run afoul of the law. He also praised the use of community boot camps rather than prison for youthful offenders.

"We've got to empower people to take their lives back, punish when punishment is appropriate but liberate youth from the scourge of ignorance and addiction so that we can go forward together," Clinton said to applause and cheers.

"What I have said to you today comes from my heart. As you can see, I couldn't read my notes," Clinton said with a grin as he showed the crowd his drenched prepared speech.

Saying he supports the right for citizens to own weapons, Clinton also endorsed the Brady Bill, which calls for a waiting period before someone can purchase a gun. The provision will help protect police officers, he said.

Madrid summit looks at democracy, economics

Leaders celebrate 500th anniversary of Columbus' arrival

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Latin American leaders at the Madrid summit Wednesday extolled the virtues of democracy and economic development, giving a less-than-subtle nudge to Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

The two-day summit, a largely symbolic meeting of Latin American and Iberian leaders to observe the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' arrival in America, was dominated by the absence of the Colombian, Peruvian and Venezuelan presidents, whose inability to attend underlined the challenges democratic institutions are facing in the region.

Since the first summit in Mexico last year, Peru has suspended democratic liberties and Venezuela, traditionally one of the continent's strongest democracies, faced an unsuccessful military rebellion last February.

Colombian President Cesar Gaviria canceled his trip at the last moment following a prison rebellion led by Medellin drug cartel leader Pablo Escobar, while Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori decided to remain in Lima because of the tense situation in his country.

The Venezuelan Senate refused permission for President Carlos Andres Perez to travel to Madrid.

Cuban President Fidel Castro drew the most attention, with many of the 18 other presidents present urging him to follow their example and begin the democratic process in the Caribbean island.

"Free elections, I repeat, free elections, representative government, freedom of the press, equality before the justice system, the supremacy of law and of the fundamental rights of citizens are the great pillars of the democratic system that we have been building slowly but inexorably," Argentine President Carlos Menem told the summit.

Menem, whose country was ruled by a series of military dictatorships for most of the past four decades, has been one of Castro's strongest critics, urging him at every opportunity to institute democratic reforms in Cuba.

Other leaders, including Chilean President Patricio Aylwin and Alfredo Burkard of El Salvador, insisted that the return of their democracy to their countries had brought peace and reconciliation to their lands.

"If democracy had not progressed in El Salvador, the war would still be bloodying our land," Burkard said. "The key to pacification can be expressed in one word — democracy."

Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez, who hosted the meeting alongside King Juan Carlos, also said that the totalitarian systems of the past no longer have a place on the Latin American continent.

"Between us it should be very clear that neither intolerance, authoritarianism, or the call to arms are proper instruments at the dawn of the new millennium," he said. "We want neither political prisoners nor exiles."

When his turn to speak finally came at the end of the day, Castro reserved his wrath for the United States, making no mention of Cuba's internal political situation or of its increasing isolation. Rather, he called for Latin unity and criticized the U.N. Security Council, which he said was dominated by Washington.

Castro said the recent riots in Los Angeles proved that racial violence in the United States was increasingly brutal.

"The rich become richer, the poor become poorer, and discrimination increases against blacks and Hispanics," he said.

The Cuban leader, wearing his usual olive green military uniform, also criticized the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing Washington to carry out kidnappings in foreign countries and called the U.S. embargo of Cuba an "outrage and genocide against humanity."

While hailing the virtues of democracy, a number of presidents emphasized that establishing solid democratic institutions in Latin America would be impossible without economic development.

"The option of liberty without development or development without liberty is a false option," Menem of Argentina said.

His words were echoed by Aylwin of Chile, who said "democracy has to show, as it is doing in many of our countries, that it is the most efficient system to defeat poverty through economic growth and social justice."

Castro sat quietly through it all, listening intently but showing no emotion at the thinly veiled words meant essentially for him. The veteran Cuban leader has heard the warnings before, most recently last year at the summit in Mexico.

The meeting, which ends Friday, was to approve a document pledging increased cooperation in the areas of education, culture, and social problems. Latin diplomats said the goal was to begin with a few, concrete programs that will be expanded in the years to come.

Among the projects are the launching of a satellite to provide educational television programs across Latin America, exchange programs for university students, and scientific cooperation.

Governmental offices report lower budget deficit for 1992

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The federal Office of Management and Budget reduced its forecast of the fiscal 1992 budget deficit by $66.2 billion Thursday, estimating the annual shortfall at $333.5 billion.

The Bush administration in February projected a $399.7 billion budget deficit.

Fiscal year 1992 began last Oct. 1 and ends Sept. 30. On Wednesday, the Treasury said the deficit in the nine months elapsed from October through June stood at $227.74 billion.

In its Mid-Session Review, the OMB estimated the 1992 deficit will run at $341 billion. In February, its estimate was $349.9 billion.

The 1994 deficit was projected Thursday to stand at $274.2 billion.

The OMB explained the reason for the $66.2 billion cut in its election-year forecast on the 1992 deficit.

"The major change is for deposit insurance," the OMB said. "The decline results primarily from congressional inaction on additional funding for the Resolution Trust Corp., although revised estimates for resolving troubled banks have also reduced 1992 outlays."

The RTC was created in 1989 to rescue the ailing savings and loan industry, plagued by fraud and mismanagement.

The OMB's Mid-Session Review tracks how the economy has been doing and what it may do in the next five years.

The 421-page report said developments in the first half of the year have been "generally consistent with the economic projections underlying the February estimates."

The OMB forecast said the government will take in a total of $1.073 trillion in fiscal year 1992. That figure is $2.1 billion lower than the February estimate of $1.075 trillion.

The latest estimate in outlays, or expenses, for 1992 is $1.407 trillion.

Ex-convict admits helping drown mobster Jimmy Hoffa in Lake Michigan

NEW YORK (UPI) — A 70-year-old ex-convict whose identity is being withheld will claim on television that he was one of four hitmen who drowned Teamster boss James Hoffa in Lake Michigan in 1975, it was reported Thursday.

The claim was made on a tape made for Friday broadcast on the syndicated TV show, "A Current Affair" in an interview with the show's star reporter, Steve Dunleavy. The man told Dunleavy he had come forward because he is dying of emphysema and wants to "set the record straight."

The man said he was paid $25,000 for his role in Hoffa's kidnapping and murder. Hoffa's body was never found and his whereabouts became as sensational a mystery as the legendary disappearance of New York Judge Joseph Crater in 1930.

"Obviously anybody can come forward and say they kidnapped Judge Crater, but in this case there was intriguing backup," Dunleavy said, noting that the ex-convict passed a lie detector test by Nat Laurendi, one of the most respected men in the field of polygraphy.

The man said three men kidnapped Hoffa from a Detroit restaurant and delivered him to a junk yard outside Detroit where he was transferred to a van and driven to Chicago.

He said Hoffa was drugged several times by injection and his mouth was taped.

When the van reached Lake Michigan near Chicago, Hoffa was transferred to a yacht which took him, the hitman and his three accomplices to a location offshore.

"When we anchored, Sal (one of the accomplices) said, 'Let's get on with it,'" the man said.

"And then he came back in and ordered us to strip the man (Hoffa) down, bare skin naked. Under the seat were these cast leg pegs... and they were then taped with two-inch tape to the lower legs of Jimmy to be used as weights."

The man said Hoffa's body was dropped over the side of the yacht while he was still alive but unconscious.

"When the bubbles stopped coming up, we upped the anchor, started the motor and went back..."

The man said Hoffa tried to bribe his abductors with $500,000 to call off the hit but was rejected.

"He never begged for his life," the ex-convict said. "He was tough... (he) was a man."

Laurendi was quoted as saying the man made no attempted deception in the course of taking the polygraph test.

"His answers were truthful," Laurendi said. "I don't want to believe him but I have to believe the polygraph results."

Lord threatens to launch drug war

BOGOTA, Colombia (UPI) — Escaped drug lord Pablo Escobar vowed Thursday to launch a new war against the government if President Cesar Gaviria refuses to honor a truce negotiated more than 16 months ago, a report said.

The radio network RCN said officials had intercepted cellular telephone calls by Escobar ordering henchmen to bomb specific targets — possibly military or police headquarters.

According to the report, Escobar, 43, was considering turning over to authorities the nine men who escaped with him from a maximum security prison if the government promised not to move them from the Envigado Prison.

President Gaviria, in a nationally-broadcast speech Wednesday night, appealed to Escobar to surrender, promising his life would be spared and warning the armed forces would not abandon the search for him. Escobar, who started his career as a car thief and built a cocaine empire worth an estimated $2.5 billion, remained 13 months in the mountain-top prison located outside his hometown on the outskirts of Medellin before Wednesday's incident.

He broke out Wednesday when troops freed the deputy justice minister, the national prison chief and two other officials held hostage.

Magazine names Congress expensive legislative body

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress will spend an estimated $2.8 billion on itself this year, making it the most expensive legislative body in the world, a published report said Thursday.

The August issue of Money magazine said that the cost of running Congress — with its 535 members and 38,696-person support staff — has increased 705 percent since 1970.

The personal finance magazine said its two-month investigation shows that the nation's 100 senators and 435 representatives earn at least $129,500 apiece and rank among the top-paid 2 percent of all working Americans.

Other findings by Money: Congressional pay has risen 45 percent from $89,500 since 1988.

—Each lawmaker takes in an extra $38,703 a year from seven key taxpayer-paid perks, which include health insurance, a tax deduction for living in the nation's capital, and free parking on Capitol Hill.

—While the U.S. population has doubled since the 1950s, the direct staff of the Senate and the House has more than quadrupled, rising to 20,362.

—Congress's "franking," or free mail, privilege could cost taxpayers $80 million to $90 million in election-year 1992. The privilege allows congressmen to send constituents mail postage-free.

The House members who used 100 percent or more of their franking allowances last year and their spending on "franked" mail. Money reported, included: Barbara Rose Collins, D-Mich., $164,872; Nick Joe Rahall II, D-W.Va., $172,350; Bill Paxon, R-N.Y., $191,693; Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., $153,641; William Lipinski, D-Ill., $168,807; Charles Wilson, D-Texas, $208,597; and Jim Sensenbrenner, R-Wisconsin.

Exxon, top oil industries suffer decrease in earnings

United Press International

Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company, Thursday reported its second-quarter earnings dropped 8.4 percent and Texaco Inc., ranked third in the U.S. oil industry, announced its profits for the period declined 8.9 percent.

Occidental Petroleum Corp., Sun Co. and Ashland Oil Inc., other large players in the domestic oil industry, also reported lower second-quarter earnings.

A common thread pulling down earnings for many of the nation's top oil companies was a sluggish worldwide economy, hampering oil demand and paring down profit margins on petroleum products.

Exxon, based in Irving, Texas, said its second-quarter earnings fell to $955 million, or 76 cents a share, from $1.125 billion, or 90 cents a share, in the second quarter of 1991.

But the oil giant's second-quarter sales rose to $2.096 billion from $1.997 billion in the year-ago period.

In the first six months, Exxon said its earnings dropped to $2.305 billion, or $1.83 a share, from $3.365 billion, or $2.68 a share, in the opening half of last year. Revenues slid to $55.67 billion from $57.95 billion in the prior years opening half.

"Exxon's second-quarter earnings were heavily influenced by lower petroleum product margins, which were in turn affected by rising crude supply costs, weak economic conditions

New charges released for kidnapping of Exxon executive

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — The former police officer who allegedly abducted an Exxon executive sent a ransom demand threatening Sidney Reso's death a month after he buried Reso in a shallow grave, federal prosecutors said Thursday.

A new indictment was released charging Arthur Seale with traveling out of state to extort money from Exxon.

But U.S. Attorney Michael Chertoff said a federal kidnapping charge would be dropped because there is no proof Reso ever left New Jersey.

Seale, 45, of Lebanon Township also faces state charges that include felony murder and kidnapping.

His wife, Irene Jacqueline

Seale, also 45, has agreed to testify against him and has pleaded guilty to federal charges of extortion and conspiracy.

Reso, 57, president of Exxon Co. International, was abducted April 29 outside his home in Morris Township.

His body was found in late June buried in a desolate stretch of the Pine Barrens.

The new charges include an allegation that Seale called Exxon from Pooler, Ga., referring to a June 4 extortion letter.

"If you choose not to pay, Reso will die within 24 hours," the letter said.

"If you interfere in any way with the (ransom) delivery prior to Reso's release, we will strike at our selected targets. These people will not be seized, but will be treated as soldiers in war.... If you choose not to pay on this basis, we will exhibit Reso's body."

By the time Exxon received that letter, Reso had been dead for more than a month.

Irene Seale told investigators Reso was shot while being abducted and died five days later alone in a rented storage locker.

The new indictment continues to charge Seale with extortion and conspiracy.

The three new counts involve the telephone call from Georgia, mailing a letter from New York to Exxon in Irving, Texas, and using a firearm in a crime of violence.

If convicted on all counts, Seale would face life behind bars.

and soft demand in many markets," said Exxon Chairman Lawrence G. Rawl.

White Plains, N.Y.-based Texaco Inc. said its second-quarter net income fell almost 9 percent from year-earlier levels, while Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum said its second-quarter net income plummeted 49 percent.

Sun, based in Philadelphia, reported its second-quarter earnings dropped 86 percent, while Ashland Oil Inc. had a 52.5 percent decline in results for the period.

Texaco said its second-quarter net income slipped 8.9 percent to $245 million, or 85 cents a share, from $269 million, or 94 cents a share during the same period last year.

Revenues, however, rose to $9.40 billion from $9.03 billion in 1991.

Texaco said for the first six months its net income dropped 34.9 percent to $445 million, or $1.53 a share, from $684 million, or $2.45 a share, during the first half of 1991.

Revenues during the same period fell to $17.96 billion from $19.21 billion.

James W. Kinneer, Texaco's president and chief executive officer, said "continued economic weakness in the United States, Europe and a number of other areas was reflected in similarly weak demand for crude oil and petroleum products throughout the quarter."

Kinneer said "crude oil prices strengthened in mid-May and benefited Texaco's second-quarter upstream results. On the other hand, these higher crude oil costs could not be fully recovered in the product market, particularly in the East and Gulf Coast areas of the United States and in Europe."

He noted "refined product margins remain depressed."

Meanwhile, Occidental Petroleum said its second-quarter net income sank 49 percent to $75 million, or 25 cents a share, from $147 million, or 49 cents a share last year.

Sales eased to $2.2 billion from $2.4 billion during the same period last year.

Occidental noted its 1992 and 1991 results included extraordinary gains of $32 million, or 11 cents a share, and $12 million, or 4 cents a share, respectively, primarily resulting from the income tax benefit arising from the application of a net operating loss carry forward.

For the first six months, Occidental reported its net income fell 39 percent to $173 million, or 57 cents a share, from $283 million, or 94 cents a share, during the same period last year.

Six-month sales fell to $4.3 billion from $5.2 billion last year.

Dr. Ray R. Irani, chairman, president and chief executive officer of Occidental, said "improved earnings in oil and gas and gas transmission were offset by lower earnings in chemicals due to low prices."

Irani noted, however, "we continue to benefit from our program."

U.S. banking on little boxers to bring home most medals

BARCELONA, Spain (UPI) — The small guys must deliver if the United States is to be the big winner in Olympic boxing again.

U.S. Coach Joe Byrd is counting on the lighter weight classes carrying his country to the most boxing medals for the third straight Olympics.

Led by 106-pound gold medal favorite Eric Griffin, 132-pound Oscar de la Hoya and 139-pound Vernon Forrest, the United States has a chance for medals in all six of the lower weight classes. Of the heavier six divisions, super heavyweight Larry Donald and 156-pound Raul Marquez will likely win medals and 178-pound Montell Griffin can surprise.

"We're going to be the team every country has to beat," Byrd said. "This is the one of the strongest teams America has had in quite a while. We strong from 106 through 139."

The United States won 11 medals in 1984 during the Communist-bloc boycott and eight medals in 1988 when Cuba stayed home. To win the most medals in Barcelona, however, the United States will need its strongest team since the 1976 crew took home five gold medals. That team, led by Sugar Ray Leonard, and Michael and Leon Spinks was perhaps the greatest single Olympic boxing squad ever.

With the powerful Cubans competing this year in addition to former Soviet Union, Germany and Bugliara boxers, it is unlikely any nation will win five golds or as many as eight overall medals.

"I believe coming into the Olympics we're the favorites," de la Hoya said, expressing the type of confidence Byrd drilled into his boxers during training camp at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"I think we can handle Cuba pretty well," Byrd said. "The Germans and Russians are the ones we have to beat. We usually don't draw the Cubans early, so we have to beat the Germans and Russians to get to the finals."

Eric Griffin practically guarantees the United States one gold. He is a four-time world champion at 106 pounds and he is 5-0 against the No. 2 boxer in his class — Cuban Rogelio Marcelo.

Griffin rivals Cuban heavyweight Felix Savon as the best pound-for-pound boxers in the tournament.

"There's nobody in the world at 106 pounds today that could beat me," Griffin claims.

De la Hoya is considered right behind Griffin among U.S. boxers, but he faces tough competition. German world champion Marco Rudolph beat de la Hoya in the first round of the world championships last November.

Marie wins 18th Tour stage

TOURS, France (UPI) — Thierry Marie, continuing the strong showing of French riders, Thursday won the 18th stage of the Tour de France, which Spaniard Miguel Indurain looks certain to win.

Marie rode the 131.6-mile stage from Montlucon to Tours in five hours, seven minutes and 15 seconds to become the sixth French rider to win a stage. Marie followed 31-year-old Jean-Claude Colotti who Wednesday won the 17th stage.

But the ultimate prize looks unlikely to end up in French hands with Indurain the defending champion and race favorite.

Indurain, who had maintained a close eye on his only real rival for this year's crown, Claudio Chiappucci, maintained his 1:42 advantage over the Italian.

Marie won the stage after a mass sprint by the leading group. Holland's Jelle Nijdam took second ahead of Johan Museeuw of Belgium.

tough." The U.S. women swimmers should have a less difficult time. There are four world record holders in the group, led by three-time gold medal winner Janet Evans.

"I look for everyone to swim well, we've got a lot of talented swimmers," said Evans, who holds world records in the 400- and 800-meter freestyle. "But there's more pressure on us than there has been in the past. That may work against us. That level of pressure is something the male swimmers have not had to deal with as much."

"I think the women's team has taken a lot of pressure off us, since they're so strong," Jager said. Matt Biondi is the team's best known male swimmer.

He's the world record holder in the 100-meter freestyle, and the winner of seven Olympic medals in 1988. But even Biondi would not go so far as to predict too much American success.

"It used to be that two or three swimmers could dominate an event, but it's not like that any more," he said. "We're good, but the rest of the world has caught up. You're not going to see anyone dominate like you used to."

the (appeals court) will adhere to its previous understanding of the Mayor League Agreement in the Finley case," Vincent said.

In that ruling, U.S. District Judge Frank McGarr upheld the authority of then-Bowie Kuhn to void the sale of outfielder Joe Rudi, relief pitcher Rollie Fingers and pitcher Vida Blue.

Former Oakland Athletics owner Charlie Finley wanted to sell the players, saying he feared he would lose out entirely if the trio became free agents. McGarr upheld Kuhn and the appellate court affirmed the decision in 1978.

The Cubs argued Vincent's decision to move the team to the NL West is "absurd" and "not in the best interests of baseball."

Vincent on July 6 ordered the Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals to move to the NL West and the Cincinnati Reds and Atlanta Braves to the NL East next season. Vincent said he ordered the change to make the two divisions geographically correct.

The judge's decision to issue a preliminary injunction Thursday apparently will delay that change for at least one more season. The suit has held up finalization of next season's schedule for more than a month.

The Cubs and parent the Tribune Co. — which also owns WGN-AM and TV, the Cubs' main broadcast outlet — objected to the change, largely because the move may mean more late-night games on the West Coast and a subsequent drop in advertising revenue.

'Magic' Johnson slam-dumps Converse

NORTH READING, Mass. (UPI) — Converse Inc. expressed surprise and shock that basketball superstar Earvin "Magic" Johnson plans to untie his relationship with the sports equipment maker after the Olympics.

Johnson, in Monte Carlo with the USA Dream Team preparing for next week's Olympics in Spain, said Wednesday he is severing his association with Converse because he is unhappy with the way the company markets basketball stars.

"Converse as a company is stuck in the '60s and '70s," Johnson said. "I've never really been happy with them. Nike and Reebok pour money into advertising. I've been trying to get out for years."

Boston Celtics star Larry Bird, meanwhile, denied reports he would follow Johnson's example, and said he will remain with Converse "until the day I die."

The company, based in North Reading, Mass., issued a statement late Wednesday expressing its disappointment at Johnson's decision.

"Magic's reported announcement from Monte Carlo came as both a surprise and shock to us, considering the tremendous support we have provided him," said Converse President Gib Ford cycling, according to American Sports Data Inc.

"I enjoy the low impact exercise I attain when cruising on my skates or playing hockey with friends in summer leagues in Chicago," said Darrin Russell, senior in Avonics from Chicago.

Russell bought his first pair of skates four years ago and enjoys the exercise he gets from skating.

It is just like ice skating except when stopping, the brake is in the back. Hockey skates have no brakes.

Rick Reeves, owner of Shawnee trails, has been selling in-line skates since they first became popular three years ago in the Carbondale area.

Reeves said it is easier for ice skaters to pick up in-line skating than roller skaters, because of the wide base of roller skates.

"The first pair I sold was to a 70-year-old woman, but the main group of people we sell to are between the ages of 20 through 40," Reeves said.

Shawnee trails sells to all age groups starting at four with prices of skates ranging between $80 to $425.

Safety gear of in-line skaters include helmets, wrist guards, knee and elbow pads.

The National Safety Council report for 1990 show that cycling accounted for seven times as many injuries as in-line skating.

The Consumer Products Safety Commission show that cycling accounted for 15 times as many serious injuries as in-line skating. The commissions stress safety first with the wearing of protective gear and responsible skating.

Susanna Levin of San Francisco said she loves to skate and feel the glide from skating through Golden Gate Park.

"I realized that the pounding my legs were taking from running wasn't helping and the leg strength I gained from skating was better for me because of the low impact," Levin said.

because she played on the SIUC basketball team with Plab's sister DeDe.

"With my sister playing basketball for SIUC, I really felt at home here," he said. "I think from high school to college I really figured things out."

Cornell said Plab is not the only person who thinks he has figured things out.

"(Plab's) done a tremendous job because he believes in himself," Cornell said. "He is an athlete who rises to the occasion at big meets."

Cornell said Plab has been one of the most exciting athletes he has coached in his 26 years.

"Darrin is the most talented high jumper I have ever coached," he said. "He has made some jumps that are unbelievable."

Plab feels his love of jumping propels him forward in pursuit of new heights, he said.

"I love to jump," he said, "and when you are good, you like to display it."
