Degrees lead to high wages

By Aleksandra Macys
Campus Life Reporter

Rather than waiting by the door for a visit from Publisher's Clearinghouse or hoping to "Strike It Rich" in the Illinois Instant Lottery, a recent government report suggests getting a college degree can lead to a road of riches.

A report titled "Educational Attainment in the United States: March 1993 and 1992," released last week by the United States Department of Commerce, said higher education can yield significantly higher earnings.

Robert Kominski, author of the report, said he used a nationally representative population of 60,000 households in the United States.

People with professional degrees can expect to earn $3,010,000 in a lifetime versus the $1,420,000 those with bachelor degrees will earn, Kominski said.

Kominski also found high school graduates had average earnings of $18,737 a year, while people with bachelor's degrees earned an average of $32,629. Professional degree holders earned an average of $48,653.

Kominski said although some blue collar workers, such as construction workers, who have attained high school degrees may earn higher wages, others, such as those working in low-paying service jobs, earn low wages, influencing the average.

Michael Murray, assistant director of University Career Services at SIUC, said graduates from SIUC earn average or above average salaries when compared to graduates from other universities.

A July 1994 report from the College Placement Council, of which UCS is a member, states some average yearly salary offers. The report lists the number of offers from companies and salary highs and lows.

John Dively, principal at Carbondale Community High School, 300 N. Springer St., said the school helps those who want to continue their education.

"A good percent, about 80 percent, of our students express or describe themselves as college-bound," Dively said.

Dively said the school provides "a wealth of information" to students such as scholarships and other college opportunities.

L.A. delayed after strike

By Richard Simon and Nora Zamichow
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—Los Angeles staggered to work Monday, carpooling, hailing cabs, hitch-hiking and even walking on the first day of a bus and train strike that left more than half a million riders searching for other modes of transportation.

The walk-out by the Metropolitan Transit Authority's 1,900 mechanics—honored by 5,000 bus and rail drivers and transit clerks—came after talks on a new contract broke down between the MTA and the mechanics' union late Sunday night. Although unions representing the drivers and clerks reached tentative last-minute contract agreements, they decided to support the mechanics' strike.

It was the first shutdown of the nation's second-largest transit system since 1982, when drivers walked off the job for five days.

In Beverly Hills, three striking drivers attempted to hijack an MTA bus driven by a temporary driver, police said.

The suspects boarded the bus and threatened the driver with physical violence while the sole passenger aboard fled, said Lt. John Dunkin, an LAPD spokesman. Two were arrested while the third escaped.

The full brunt of the strike was not expected to be felt until Tuesday, when more bus and train riders, having more time to plan, turn to cars.

Only about 313 buses—compared to the normal 1,200—rolled on the 30 busiest routes and service was limited from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Student charged with felony

ATM bank card illegally used; over $1,000 stolen

By Stephanie Moletti
Police Reporter

An SIUC student had his first appearance Monday at the Jackson County Courthouse in Murphysboro and was appointed a public defender for felony charges bought against him by a fellow student.

Ersoy Tan Baydede, a sophomore in electrical engineering from Turkey, was charged with one count for a Class IV felony and one count for a Class A misdemeanor.

The preliminary hearing is set for 9 a.m. Aug. 16 at the Jackson County Courthouse.

The felony charge is for allegedly receiving money in violation of the Illinois credit card and debit card act.

Baydede allegedly withdrew $1,287 between May 26 and June 8, when using Christine M. Dawson's, a senior in finance from Chicago, ATM bank card without permission.

The Class A misdemeanor is for theft of allegedly "exercising unauthorized control over the property" of Dawson, with the intent to permanently deprive Dawson of the use of her ATM bank card.

Assistant Illinois State's Attorney, Amanda Robertson, said the worst Baydede could be sentenced to is one to three years in the Illinois Department of Corrections and a $10,000 fine. He could also serve 30 months probation.

Dawson said Baydede lived with her and three other roommates.

"He overheard me telling the number to a friend and remembered it until two and a half weeks later, when I went on vacation," Dawson said.

Dawson said Baydede was in the backseat of a car once when Dawson told her identification number to the driver, Steve Buss, at a drive-through ATM.

Netsch campaigns from bus

By Marc Chase
Special Assignment Reporter

In an effort to push her plan on improving education in Illinois, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Dawn Clark Netsch campaigned in Carbondale Monday as part of a statewide school bus tour.

Netsch said her campaign centers around improving education, and to prove it she is touring the state in a school bus that made its first stop yesterday at Lakeland Elementary School, 925 Giant City Road.

Netsch, who is touring with running mate Penny Severts, said Southern Illinois was chosen as the starting point for her school bus tour because a large number of schools in the region are in need of additional state funding.

She said of the 145 school districts

Rwandan refugees subjected to illness, need U.N. supplies

By Kyle J. Chapman
International Reporter

Julius Thompson, professor of Black American Studies and specialist on modern Africa, said the aid to Rwanda has been slow because of the media perception of African problems.

Rwandan refugees seeking asylum in Goma, Zaire anxiously await the arrival of aid from the United States and the United Nations after being driven from their homeland.

After months of fighting in Rwanda, between 500,000 and one million people have been killed because of the social-political warfare that has escalated since mid-April.

Thompson said the aid is traditionally slow to African nations that are in the midst of conflict or crisis.

"The international relief aid has been insufficient and slow due, I believe, to the African nature of the problem," he said. "We are also dealing with a small country in a peculiar geographical location where, on a blank map of Africa, most people could not locate it."

A wave of U.S. medical aid reached the Rwandan refugees in Zaire last week, but U.N. workers said the camps are too crowded and filthy for any work to get done. They said the refugees need to return to their homeland if the relief effort is to take effect.

Mercel Havyarimana, a student in agriculture from Burundi, a part of the former union Rwanda-Urundi, said the press needs to pay more attention to the problems that go on in other parts of the world.

"There are people in this community who need to know what's happening in the world," he said. "In Burundi, 200,000 people were killed and there was no mention of it in the paper."

Thompson said even though the local community has

ASEAN BEGINS TALKS WITH BURMESE JUNTA — BANGKOK, Thailand—As human rights advocates around the world called on Burma to free Nobel Peace Prize winner Aung San Suu Kyi on the fifth anniversary of her detention last week, Southeast Asian nations were welcoming the Burmese junta's foreign minister to their annual conference for the first time. And while Thai officials praised Burma's new willingness to talk to the United Nations about national reconciliation, human rights and other issues, Burmese troops were raiding a refugee camp on the Thai-Burmese border and driving thousands of ethnic minority women and children from their homes. The behavior of Burma's ruling military junta and neighboring countries' policies of accommodating it lie at the heart of a continuing dispute between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, a six-member regional group known as ASEAN, and its Western dialogue partners, including the United States.

U.N. EMBARGO HAS HARMED POST-WAR IRAQ — BAGHDAD, Iraq—Contemporary Iraq is a country frozen in time. Saddled with a repressive police state, antiquated by a tide of global change and steeped in a silent, wrenching isolation imposed by United Nations sanctions, this Arab nation of 18 million is withering away politically and economically. When the Persian Gulf War ended three years ago, a U.N. report declared that Iraq had been thrust into a "pre-industrial age" by U.S.-led allied bombing. But under President Saddam Hussein, a rapid reconstruction effort using stocks of industrial goods accumulated before the war, hidden cash reserves and materials stolen from Kuwait soon made that U.N. assessment seem exaggerated. However, the postwar spike of improvement is now faltering, and the U.N. embargo imposed nearly four years ago appears to be accomplishing what the bombing did not. With sanctions unlikely to be eased before next year, the government appears unable to halt the national tailspin.

STATE DEPARTMENT TO BEGIN DRUG TESTING — WASHINGTON—If Argentina soccer star Diego Maradona, booted off the team after failing a drug test, had been working at the State Department, he'd still be on the job. While new employees have taken the test, the department, unlike other federal agencies, has not been conducting the random testing required by a 1986 presidential executive order. But word is Foreign Service Director General Genta Hawkins Holmes is readying a memo describing the drill, which could start by Sept. 1. A computer is supposed to randomly select employees and give them two hours to show up. Only people with access to information classified secret or above are going to have the honor of participating.

BARGAINING POWER DEPENDS ON SKILLS — The Washington Post—Here's a trade-union riddle for the 1990s: At a time when organized labor is losing most of its fights around the country, one union—whose members make an average of $1.2 million a year—appears to have management in a chokehold. That union is the Major League Baseball Players Association. And its bargaining clout, at a time when so many other big unions are striking out, illustrates what may be a new trend in collective bargaining. Call it the return of "craft unionism"—the kind that predominated in America before the 1930s and the rise of mass industrial unions such as the steel workers and auto workers. The reality of the '90s is that workers with specialized, irreplaceable skills—whether they involve running computers or hitting baseballs—have power. Workers without such skills, who can easily be replaced by their employers, have little power.

Standing ground: Student activism lives on

By Angela Hyland
Politics Reporter

Some students, when upset about administrative or governmental policies, will complain to friends over lunch. Others will circulate petitions and mail them to elected officials. Still others will march, carrying signs scrawled with slogans.

Political activism has a long history at SIUC, and students have demonstrated about issues ranging from education to international politics.

Some students even have "died" for their beliefs.

In 1985, about 100 students participated in a "die in," sponsored by the Mid-America Peace Project. The students gathered near the Student Center, and when a civil defense siren blew, they pointed to the sky and collapsed to the ground, pretending to have died.

The effort was intended to create awareness of the dangers of nuclear war and to pressure the SIUC Board of Trustees to declare SIUC a nuclear-free zone.

During the Gulf War, the group staged a similar event.

Curt Wilson, former vice president of the organization, said when he took part in the event he knew it would not stop the war, but hoped it would be successful in other ways.

"If it (an event) educates people and empowers them toward some type of action themselves, I'd consider it a success," he said.

Wilson said he believes groups will continue to protest even though there are no guarantees their efforts will change people's views.

"It seems to be one way of expressing ourselves in public about pressing social and political issues," he said. "It may not have anywhere near the impact we would like, but we hope to seize people's minds with ideas toward positive change."

Students also have protested U.S. military involvement and the policies of foreign countries, made trips to Springfield to protest cuts in the state's higher-education budget and traveled to Washington D.C. to take part in nationwide marches.

Students have protested proposed cuts in such programs as

Leaders want time to answer RSO proposals

By Diane Dove
Campus Government Reporter

Time was the main concern expressed Monday at a meeting of presidents of SIUC's registered student organizations as they discussed some controversial proposals which could affect them.

Members of the Presidents Council, a group comprised of the presidents of the University's nearly 500 RSOs gathered in the Ohio Room of the Student Center to discuss a report which features the proposals.

The report titled "Committee to Study the Institutional Relationship with Student Organizations," is currently under consideration by SIUC President John C. Guyon.

Proposals concerning many RSO presidents include: classifying RSOs on three levels, each with a separate set of privileges and responsibilities; changing the allocation of student fees, giving administrative officials more control over the administration of fees; implementing mandatory training and certification for RSO faculty advisors.

Bill Hall, secretary and founder of the council, said he left a message with Guyon's office staff to ask the president to delay a decision on the proposal until fall when more RSO presidents return to school and can study the proposal.

"Most RSO presidents have not had the opportunity to read this proposal," he said. "If this is implemented before fall, most student RSO leaders would be shocked."

Young Democrats organize in Marion

By Angela Hyland

Greg Stettler, vice president of the Williamson County Young Democrats, and Mark Kochan, president of the Williamson County Young Democrats, talk with Nancy Drew Sheehan, Democratic candidate for state treasurer. They were attending a luncheon for Young Democrats at Carpenter's Union Hall in Marion.

Southern Illinois Young Democrats have never had an official meeting, but this weekend supporters gathered for their first convention.

Mark Kochan, president of the Williamson County Young Democrats, said the organization is intended to improve communication and coordinate efforts between counties.

"Every county has a few people who are young and who are involved in the (political) process," he said. "This is a way to try to get more of a formal structure to it."

The convention was June 22 and 23, and attracted about 75 supporters from as far as Chicago.

As about 40 supporters gathered for lunch, they were offered encouragement in their campaigning efforts by state Rep. Larry Woolard, state Sen. James F. Rea and Democratic candidate for state treasurer Nancy Drew Sheehan.

The state election is Nov. 8. Sheehan said she remembers working on political campaigns when she was a college student in the 1960s.

Although the work was similar to efforts of supporters today, she said it currently is more difficult to get people involved in government.

Fewer negative consequences result when people fail to take a stand on issues, she said.

Another change Sheehan said she has noticed is greater involvement of women in politics.

She said twenty years ago, when women worked on campaigns, it usually was office work. Today, women are campaigning and running for office.

While working on the Kennedys' political campaigns, Sheehan said she developed a greater desire to become involved in politics.

"They awakened so much in so many people," she said.

The same excitement is evident in fewer people, but Sheehan said it is evident in supporters at the convention.

"They are willing to do the footwork of the party," she said.

The convention Saturday morning included workshops on how to organize supporters and encourage citizens to vote.

Angie Elliott, treasurer for the Williamson County Young Democrats, said getting more people to vote is an issue she would like to see her organization address.

The project, called "Get Out the Vote," requires volunteers to keep track of people who vote on election day. About 6:30, volunteers

SIUC long distance learning receives grant

By Katarzyna T. Buksa
General Assignment Reporter

Southern Illinois Collegiate Common Market and Southwestern Illinois Higher Education Consortium were recently the recipients of another $15 million dollar state grant for distance learning.

According to a news release, SIUC and other Illinois schools are building high-tech "distance learning" classrooms that will make it possible to deliver university courses to students away from campus.

Kia Malott, telecommunications manager at SIUC telephone service, said the state of Illinois has given a $15 million grant to implement the distance learning program.

Southern Illinois Collegiate Common Market and Southwestern Illinois Higher Education Consortium, two groups working with SIUC, SIUE, John A. Logan and other colleges throughout Southern Illinois, received nearly 20 percent of the $15 million in state funding for distance learning classrooms this past year.

Carolyn A. Snyder, dean of library affairs, said distance learning is used as interactive video technology.

"The reason for distance learning is to make educational opportunities more widely available state wide," Snyder said.

The rural area of Southern Illinois, especially the lower third, is ideal for distance learning because residents can receive a variety of courses in various locations near their homes, Snyder said.

"This program will make more educational opportunities available to the citizens of our state," Snyder said.

According to an SIUC press release, the typical distance learning classroom will contain two video cameras, several 27-inch color TV monitors and a sound system with strategically placed microphones.

"It will change the way higher education is delivered to students in the next century," Malott said. "What is now largely an experience for young people living and learning in a communal setting will become an option for folks of any age virtually anywhere in the world."

Crime on the rise: Carbondale at risk

CARBONDALE IS IN DANGER OF LOSING ITS small town flavor and is beginning to pick up some big city stench.

This month alone, three businesses and two individuals have been robbed by assailants who had guns or were pretending to have guns. Although no one was injured, these crimes are alarming for their severity and their frequency. Another frightening aspect is that in any situation involving weapons, fear and money, it can easily change into a situation involving blood and guts.

SO FAR THIS YEAR, 29 ROBBERIES INVOLVING force have been reported to the Carbondale Police Department. At this time last year, 10 had been reported.

Other crimes on the increase this year are car burglaries, up from 93 to 166; batteries, from 187 to 220 and sexual assaults, from six to 12. These are serious statistics, especially if they continue to multiply in this degree each year.

Statistics show that crime on the SIUC campus is on the decline. According to the 1993 Index Crime Report from the SIUC police, from 1992 to 1993, crimes such as robberies, aggravated assaults, burglaries and auto thefts, decreased 17.4 percent, from 817 in 1992 to 675 in 1993.

COMPARED TO OTHER UNIVERSITIES, SIUC experienced 35.6 percent fewer crimes than the University of Illinois at Chicago and 19 percent more than Northern Illinois University.

To avoid becoming a crime statistic, individuals can take certain precautions, such as self-defense training, walking in groups, locking their doors, and, most obviously, avoiding high-risk situations.

However, when a business is the target of a potentially violent crime, the real victim is the employee of that business. A convenience store clerk working alone late at night is powerless to a robber, particularly when he has a gun to that employee's head.

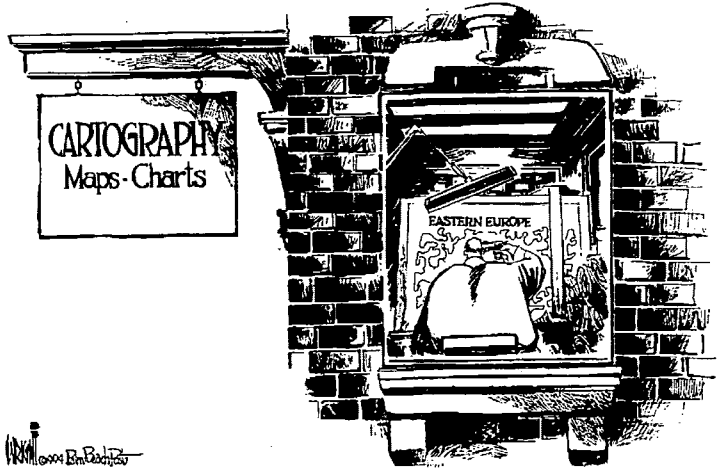

Although no one has been hurt in the recent Carbondale robberies, that could change in the beat of a heart.

A JUSTICE DEPARTMENT STUDY RELEASED Sunday found that the workplace is a very dangerous place to be. One-sixth of all violent crimes in this country occur in the workplace, to the tune of 1 million per year, and more than 100,000 involve handguns.

The government needs to work harder, much harder, to deter crime. Criminals, especially those with prior offenses, should be imprisoned, not just reprimanded, for their crimes.

BUSINESSES NEED TO ASSUME MORE responsibility for their employees' safety with additional security such as surveillance devices and silent alarms. Another simple, obvious solution is not to require employees to work alone, especially at night.

These solutions are not cheap, and business owners may balk at their costs, but something needs to be done before Carbondale pays the greatest cost of all—a life.

Dairy farm cattle give strangers tips on etiquette and social grace

The relationship between humans and other animals recently has been intriguing me. In particular, the fact that strangers are worse than cows is an issue that has been burning in my mind.

It all started with my job between semesters, working at the SIUC Dairy Center. I became Inga the Milkmaid, the glorified heir apparent to Heidi of the Hills. Since I worked crazy hours there, I did not have much free time. But when I did, I liked to go to the movies.

I went to my favorite theater—because they offer discounts to poor students. On this particular occasion, I went with a friend. As we approached the counter, the ever-so-helpful cashier asked what we wanted. When my friend replied two student tickets, the aforesaid cashier rudely demanded our I.D.'s I believe his words were—"Show 'em."

Well, I have been to Mardi Gras, and I have been to the Indy 500, so when he asked me to show 'em I was momentarily confused. Then I recovered from my shock and found my I.D. I know I was in my own little world, and did not act in the most intelligent manner, but when he threw our money at us, I was a little angry. Nice guy.

Now, what reason did this youngster have for being rude to me? Certainly not a good one. No cow that I know would have thrown my change at me—although they might have pooped on my shoes, but certainly not with malicious intent.

If that had been my only recent experience with obnoxious and/or rude strangers, I could have let it go. But in the past few weeks, I have been overwhelmed by mean stranger overload.

My car is dying a slow and painful (for my wallet) death, and after I dropped a chunk of change at the mechanic, it promptly developed another problem, which meant I had to take it back. After I left my auto, I was walking back to work when a lecherous little man walked by me and asked, "Hey, baby, how's it

Viewpoint
By Melissa Edwards

going?"

Well since I was crying and nearly in hysterics—because I like to be original like that when my car breaks down—I am fairly certain he did not want the pleasure of my company. So what did he want? Good question—maybe it was the same thing the two repulsive fellows in the Pinto wanted when they screamed "Hey, nice...(fill in the blank with female body part)" not more than 10 minutes later.

Now, cows may moo on occasion, and they are often quite gross, but when was the last time you were strolling past a field of Holsteins and were deluged by comments that cannot be printed in this fine publication? Cows seem to remember what somebody's Mommy seemingly forgot to tell a vast portion of our society—"If you don't have something nice to say, don't say anything."

And yet, even as I write this, I owe a stranger for my mental health and well being. I was due to visit my parents—insanity runs in my family, by the way—and as usual I was having car trouble, although I was under the false assumption that all had been corrected and my baby would be able to make the four and one half hour trip to Mom and Dad's.

Anyway, a mile from my house, here in Carbondale, my car died in an intersection. I immediately burst into tears—but then a rather magical thing happened. A man I work with saw me stranded, helped me repair what he could on my car, and when it was apparent I would not be going two miles, let alone the 250 to Princeville, he lent me his car for the weekend.

The strangest part about all of this is that he is a virtual stranger to me. I have worked with him twice, and no big shocker, he works at the Dairy Farm. It must be something about being around cows, because Roy is just about the nicest guy I've ever met. Thanks!

Palestinians need bloodshed ended

A few months ago, when I described the peace treaty between the P.L.O. and the Israelis as fragile and impractical to end the long conflict in Palestine (my home land), people accused me of being pessimistic, and that my solutions were unrealistic. It seems to me there are a few ignorant people still arguing that this kind of solution will bring peace and prosperity to the Palestinian people. But the last massacre happened a few days ago in the Gaza Strip which resulted in the killing of three innocent people, two in critical condition, and more than 100 injured. This comes to remind the whole world that the issue of Palestine can't be solved with such fragile solutions, were the Israeli to continue to have the upper hand in the area.

In light of this, is there anyone from the P.L.O., Israel, or the international community who has the courage to reevaluate the situations in Palestine and present a more practical and realistic solution to this unstoppable tragedy where the killing of innocent people continues? Is there anything we could learn from the events occurring in South Africa? Or is the bloodshed of the Palestinians still not enough to bring them real freedom and independence?

THE HEALTH SERVICE Clinic will be closed from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today, for a staff meeting.

SUPPORT GROUP OFFERED for Caregivers of Head-Injured Family Members. The SIUC Support Group is designed to allow those caring for a head-injured family member to meet with others in similar caregiving situations. The group will meet for 1 1/2 hours a week for eight weeks, and will begin as soon as enough interested persons have been identified. Respite services will be available for those who prefer not to leave those for whom they are caring at home while they attend the group. To join the group, or for more information concerning the group, call Kathleen Chwalisz at 457-8513.

A NATIONAL POETRY Competition is open to Carbondale Poets. A total of 52 prizes will be awarded in a national poetry competition sponsored by the International Library of Famous Poets, open free to everyone. The First Place poet from each state and the District of Columbia will be awarded a book prize, with $1,000 Grand Prize going to the winner. Entries must be postmarked by midnight, August 15. To enter, send one poem 20 lines or less; National Poetry Competition, 421 N. Rodeo Dr., Suite 455, Beverly Hills, California 90210.

He said at various times throughout the year representatives from colleges visit the school and talk to students about college opportunities.

Kominski said four-fifths of all adults over 25 have completed high school and over one-fifth have completed a bachelor's degree or more.

"Our country is more educated than ever and the educational level of the adult population has continued to rise," Kominski said.

The report also showed that among people 25 and older, a higher proportion of men had attained a bachelor's degree. While Caucasians had the highest level for high school completion, those other than Caucasians and African Americans, such as Asians and Pacific Islanders, had the highest bachelor's degree completion level.

on the State Board of Education's Financial Watch List, over 84 percent are located in Southern Illinois.

Almost 30 percent of those schools have joined the watch list while Gov. Jim Edgar has been in office, she said.

Netsch said her plan if elected is to provide elementary and secondary education with an additional $1 billion to aid schools in the state.

She said the state will have to face the fact that some taxes will have to be increased to improve education.

"At least the voters can count on one candidate to be honest with them," Netsch said. "Jim Edgar said that he would not raise taxes during his last campaign, but he did anyway."

Saverns, candidate for lieutenant governor, said she and Netsch are taking their ideas on improving education on the road to remind people of unfulfilled promises Edgar made to improve education.

"Thanks to Jim Edgar's broken promises, Illinois ranks 48th in state support for schools, behind even Mississippi," Saverns, who graduated from SIUC, said.

"We cannot give Jim Edgar four more years to shortchange our schools and dump the cost of education on the property tax bills of seniors, farmers and working families in Illinois."

Netsch said by providing more funding at the elementary and secondary levels of education, state universities will also benefit from her plan.

"We have to bite the bullet on secondary and elementary education to indirectly improve higher education," Netsch said.

"If we can get the school system turned around so that students are prepared for college when they leave lower levels of education, then less time and money will be needed at the college level for remedial classes."

Netsch said cuts in academic programs of universities, such as the recent elimination of SIUC's doctoral program in physical education, may be necessary to maintain a productive system of higher education, but she said the decision process on making cuts needs to be looked at more thoroughly.

She said the Illinois Board of Higher Education has had to make difficult decisions in recommending to state universities which programs should be cut.

"Many cuts made in higher education have been necessary because of the cost involved," Netsch said.

"What we really need to do is spend more time in determining which cuts will serve higher education within an institution best."

Netsch said examples of Edgar's neglect in funding for education can be seen in the school system of Charleston, Edgar's hometown.

Due to cuts in state funding, property taxes have increased to make up for the loss in funding for Charleston as well as other towns across the state, she said.

She explained that the Charleston school district was forced to cut 48 sections of classes, eliminate teachers' aides and cut elementary physical education classes.

"Jim Edgar's hometown is one of scores of downstate school districts that have been hurt by Edgar's broken promises," Netsch said.

Among Netsch's supporters accompanying her on the bus trip were officials from the Illinois Education Association, an institution that protects the interests of educators in the state.

Clay Marquardt, executive director for the association, said Netsch is the first Democrat the association has endorsed in 20 years.

"Eighty-four thousand of our members across the state supported Edgar last year," Marquardt said. "This election it is the other way around, and we feel we can make a major difference since there was only an 83,000 vote margin in the last election."

Mark Kochan, SIUC student trustee, said he supports Netsch because she offers a plan to lower property taxes while increasing finances to education.

"Netsch wants to increase funding at the elementary and secondary levels, and that is where it all should start," Kochan said.

"If students don't feel that the state cares about them at lower levels, they won't feel they have the support later either."

Laura Herring, assistant vice president of First National Bank and Trust Co., 509 S. University, said this is the first problem of this type that has come up since she has been with the bank.

Detective Sgt. Paul Echols of the Carbondale Police Department said this is not a common crime.

Baydede did not wish to comment on his charges, but said he lost his job as a doorman at Beach Bumz, 611 S. Illinois Avenue, as a result.

Robertson did not wish to comment on the case prior to the preliminary hearing.

The average American will visit their medical doctor five times in 1994. Migraine or common headache will account for one half of these visits. Over a billion dollars are spent each year on over-the-counter headache remedies.

It appears that we are doing rather poorly in our fight against this seemingly common ailment. It also appears to be a very big business. Is it possible that we have overlooked the obvious remedy? The results Chiropractors are getting in headache cases is nothing short of phenomenal. Buss went to Chicago with Dawson, so she knew he had not made the transactions.

Dawson came to the conclusion that Baydede had taken the card, she said.

Dawson said Baydede was the only person, aside from Buss, who had access to her PIN number.

Dawson said Baydede withdrew $80 the first day and $100 each day during her stay in Chicago, from May 26 to June 8.

However, because several ATM cameras were not on when Baydede withdrew the money, he was not arrested until after she returned and had reported the card stolen to the Carbondale Police Department, Dawson said.

After reporting the incidents to the police, she was told to not inform Baydede she had reported him, in hopes that he would try again, Dawson said.

Baydede tried to withdraw money again on June 8, after Dawson had returned, from the Bank of Carbondale ATM in the Student Center, where his transaction was taped, she said.

Baydede paid Dawson $1,300 plus an additional $300 for the checks Dawson wrote that did not Distance learning will grow and the technology will evolve, and the costs will become less expensive, Malott said.

Snyder said the state has approved another $15 million for distance learning.

"It is my belief that we are on the forefront in distance learning," she said.

Plans for distance learning began in 1994 and the Workforce Education Class offered in Belleville will begin in October. The following semester will possibly offer Japanese and other classes, Snyder said.

SIUC will offer the classes at Morris Library and Pulliam Hall.

when he was a student.

"I think every era has its own dynamics," he said.

Although recent issues may enrage some students, they fail to evoke the level of activism that took place in the '60s and '70s, he said.

"I don't think issues are as clear cut, and I don't think that people feel as outraged by some of the problems," he said.

"People don't feel like issues touch them as personally."

The situation during the 1960s and 1970s differs from that of today, he said.

During that time, some students were angered by what they believed was an unjust war in Vietnam, and this was combined with fears that they could be drafted to serve, he said.

"This tension often carried over into protests, he said.

"That whole era, I believe, was influenced by what happened with the civil rights era: we had bus rides, freedom rides, sit-ins, marches," he said.

"It became, I think, a situation of people imitating what had gone on before. It was a popular thing to do — mass demonstrations."

Today's generation is not as influenced by the efforts involved in fighting for civil rights, he said.

"A few demonstrators will gather, but it's not something that's in vogue," Holmes said.

Protesters sometimes spontaneously get involved in demonstrations because of an interest in joining a group, rather than supporting an issue, he said.

Holmes said this desire to take part in activities other students are excited about may have been part of the reason for the riots which took place May 1970 in Carbondale.

On May 5, five students at Kent State University were killed during a protest of U.S. involvement in Cambodia.

On May 6, SIUC students hurled bricks, garbage cans and buckets through windows of Carbondale businesses and campus buildings to protest the deaths in Vietnam and at Kent State University.

"I think the majority of people in that crowd were not there because of their political convictions or anger about the Kent State killings," he said.

"I think it was just, 'Hey, something is going on — let's join in."

Dan Lane, administrative assistant to the director of the SIUC police department, said the demonstration continued for about a week and forced administrators to close the campus for the remainder of the semester.

Between May 6 and May 18, 543 arrests were made in Carbondale, he said.

During this time, Carbondale had a 7 p.m. curfew and a rule prohibiting people from gathering in groups.

Lane said many of the arrests were for curfew violations and unlawful assembly.

"Three or four thousand people were out every night in the streets," said Lane, who was a Saluki patrolman at the time.

At the peak of the demonstrations, he estimated a crowd of between 5,000 and 6,000 people.

"We haven't had anything comparable since by any stretch of the imagination," Lane said.

Recent protests have included a mass jaywalking effort Sept. 1, 1993 in response to a regulation which would impose a $15 fine on students who were caught not using a designated crosswalk.

About 150 jaywalked several times in front of the Student Center, then sat in the road, blocking traffic.

The crowd then marched to Anthony Hall, where they were met by Vice President of Administration James Tweedy.

He agreed to have SIUC officials and consultants examine the issue with three student representatives present. The regulation was upheld.

On Sept. 3, 1993, about 30 people gathered at a rally in the SIUC Free Forum area to discuss issues involving rental housing. After the rally, the group marched to City Hall to present their concerns.

On October 22, 1993, about 25 students protested in front of businesses on South Illinois Avenue.

The businesses opposed efforts which would have expanded areas in which three or more unrelated people could share a house.

Holmes said although these issues concerned students, they failed to generate the type of response he witnessed in 1970.

Holmes said he remembers

Hall said he was concerned that many student government leaders were also unaware of the proposal, even though the student governments are currently in charge of allocating funds to RSOs.

"If Guyon transferred authority to allocate $500,000 a year in student organizational activity fees from student government to student affairs committee of faculty, staff and students, then elected student government leaders returning in the fall would be taken by surprise," he said.

Undergraduate Student Government President Ed Ho-Sawyer said the USC would like to see the council of RSO members and the would study the proposal and will file a response in the fall.

just to come up with the philosophy behind this," he said.

Hall said he was also concerned that faculty advisors were unaware of how the proposal could affect them.

"I think most RSO faculty advisors are unaware that Guyon is considering requiring them to attend one or more training workshops," he said.

Todd Hillman, interim president of the council, expressed concern about the cost of implementing training workshops.

"They'll have to raise our fees substantially," he said.

Nancy Hanson, PEI director of Student Development, said the cost of the workshop is expected to be minimal.

"I would estimate that it would cost about $5,000 to do everything, and that probably

"I would estimate that it would cost about $5,000 to do everything, and that probably would be classified," Pei said she thought the organizations would be able to make that decision.

The suggestion would be that the individual RSOs would make that decision," he said.

Pei said the document serves as a "think piece" for student government to help them make decisions about the handling of RSOs.

"This document was written originally as a discussion piece and it was thought that USC and Graduate and Professional Student Council would decide how it would be implemented," he said.

Harriet Wilson, Barlow associate director of the Office of Student Development, said OSD would also implement the proposal's various sections in a limited and in any part of the campus.

watching demonstrators as they marched from campus to the old train depot.

The protest began with a few hundred students, but Holmes said by the time the group reached the depot, the crowd had greatly increased.

Officers from the SIUC, Carbondale and State police departments gathered with National Guard members to control the crowd, he said.

When several students sat on the tracks, an order was given for these students to move, but the order was misunderstood, he said.

Officers believed an order had been given to disperse the entire crowd and tear gas was fired, he said.

The students left the area, but Holmes said it was not in a way the police had desired.

"The students went back down

Illinois Avenue and broke out most of the windows in most of the businesses on Illinois Avenue," he said.

Any object that students could throw, they did, he said.

Holmes said he did not take part in these actions.

"It was only after the fact that I knew about all the damage that had been done," he said.

The damage that occurred was not directed at any particular person, but was a result of frustration and anger at a situation they had little control over, he said.

"It was just sort of a reaction that on a campus on the United States of America, young people could be shot down for peacefully demonstrating, could be killed, executed, for demonstrating their dissatisfaction with the involvement of the United States in the war," he said.

Disabilities act put into effect

ADA's implementation will make businesses more accessible

By Heather Burrow
City Reporter

Today, the second half of the Americans with Disabilities Act will be implemented enabling disabled people the chance to work at an additional 500,000 businesses and non-profit establishments without fear of discrimination, Robin Jones, the project director of the Great Lakes Disability and Business Technical Assistance Center, said.

This act was first implemented in 1992. It stated businesses with 25 or more part or full-time employees will not discriminate against disabled individuals in recruiting, hiring, firing, promotion, training, compensation, benefits, job assignments and other conditions of employment.

The second part of the act will cover employees of businesses with 15 or more part or full-time employees, which brings the total number of establishments covered under this act to two million.

To be covered under this act, an individual must have a physical or mental impairment which significantly limits activities such as hearing, seeing, speaking, breathing or walking.

These disabled people must be able to perform the essential job tasks of the position they are applying for, Jones said.

"However, the tasks must be essential to that job," Jones said. "For example, employers tend to ask if the applicant has a valid driver's license even if that is not necessary to do the job. Many disabled people do not have licenses and therefore that would be discrimination and this is covered by the act."

The act includes employers, public and private individuals and telecommunications providers.

Jones said this means employers cannot discriminate against disabled people when hiring, and employers must provide the disabled public with access to their establishments.

"For example, McDonald's may not have disabled people for employees, but may have disabled people who eat there. Therefore, bathrooms and sidewalks need to accommodate these customers," Jones said. "Telecommunication providers encompasses an area where no customers actually come into the building, but disabled employees have to be accommodated for."

According to the President's Committee on Employment of People with Disabilities, 75 percent of all special accommodations, such as acquisition or remodeling of equipment, job restructuring and part-time or modified work hours that have been provided to date for disabled people is less than $1,000.

"Some people with disabilities just need blocks under their desk to accommodate a wheelchair, while others need special equipment," Jones said.

Kathleen Plesko, director of disability support services at SIUC, said what she wants to be clear about is that the law is user friendly.

"Some corrections for disabled people cost as little as $50," Plesko said. "Although this act is widely perceived to be burdensome, I don't think it was the intent or will be the result of this legislation." Plesko also said the major impact will be in the area of attitudes.

"When I was a little girl, people of different races could not sit in a school next to each other. Today people think nothing of sitting next to someone of a different race," Plesko said. "Hopefully, because of acts like this, the public will take people with disabilities as much for granted as people of a different ethnicity."

Lee Smith, personal assistant program coordinator for the Southern Illinois Center for Independent Living, said he thinks this act is a positive step especially in lieu of Southern Illinois' statistics.

"The Illinois Planning Council on Developmental Disabilities did a summary survey on employing people with disabilities in Illinois," Smith said. "This survey ranked Southern Illinois lowest in the state." Jones said the act originated during the civil rights movement in the 1960s.

"This act stems back to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 when disabilities were supposed to be included, but the nation did not see disabled people as part of society," Jones said. "At this time, disabled people were still being institutionalized."

The disability movement did not begin until the 1970s and 1980s, Jones said.

"The ADA was one of George Bush's campaign promises," she said. "Bush saw that people with disabilities were a very formidable group and there was a large turnout to Bush's campaign for his platform for disabilities."

Haute couture shows sober side

By Cathy Horyn
The Washington Post

The perception that haute couture is a degenerate institution propped up by a sycophantic press hasn't changed in the 20 years since Kennedy Fraser first made the observation in the New Yorker.

Designers still compare their studios to laboratories, bringing to mind foaming test tubes of sleeves and bodices. Fashion editors still pant, and occasionally faint, over perfect stitches and minuscule details. And, of course, haute couture still loses heaps of money.

Last week's haute couture showings aren't likely to reverse the fortunes of anyone on the Avenue Montaigne, but they do suggest a reappraisal of glamour.

The fall collections of Gianni Versace and Karl Lagerfeld were conspicuously sober, if one discounts the glam-rock glow of Versace's metallic dresses.

At Chanel, the story was a close-fitting jacket with small shoulders and high armholes that evoked the wasp-waist silhouette of Dior's New Look, circa 1950. This time, however, Karl Lagerfeld paired jackets with wide trousers or short satin poufs for a more modern line.

Voluntary standards may reduce damage from greenhouse gases

By Sam House
Environmental Reporter

Planting a tree or buying an energy-efficient computer may be the right steps in reducing greenhouse gas emissions and avoiding tougher clean air mandates from the federal government for Illinois residents.

The Illinois Task Force on Global Climate Change has produced a series of recommendations to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The goal is to maintain 1990 greenhouse emissions, which were 248 million tons, by the year 2000.

By that time there will be an approximate 10 million ton growth, Dave Baker, policy research manager for the Illinois Department of Energy and Natural Resources, said.

"By the year 2000, we would need to reduce emissions by 10 million tons in order to keep 1990 levels," he said.

A few of the task force's recommendations are to begin energy conservation programs, assist Illinois companies in meeting their federal climate change emissions reduction commitments and expand tree planting and forest management assistance programs, according to a press release.

"By the year 2000, we would need to reduce emissions by 10 million tons in order to keep 1990 levels."

—Dave Baker

Greenhouse gases permit radiation wavelengths to pass through the earth's atmosphere but do not allow the radiation to escape. This contributes to global warming, Dr. Jon Liebman, member of the Illinois Task Force on Global Climate Change, said.

Liebman said the three major greenhouse gases emitted are methane, nitrous oxide and carbon dioxide, which is the most dominant.

Tougher, expensive mandates by the federal government, which include more stringent efficiency standards on automobiles and carbon dioxide scrubbers on power plants, may be implemented if the current voluntary action plan fails to maintain the 1990 levels, Baker said.

"People should strive to meet voluntary standards to avoid heavy handed mandate controls," he said.

Task Force researchers estimate Illinois emission of carbon dioxide may be reduced by 5 million tons through low cost energy efficient and forestry measures, according to a news release. Any further reductions could cost a lot more, Baker said.

Planting a tree or keeping one from getting chopped down, purchasing energy efficient appliances and computers and buying automobiles with good gas mileage ratings are the best ways for people to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, Baker said.

Tobacco smoke seen as danger

By John Schwartz
The Washington Post

The tobacco industry might say secondhand smoke is not hazardous, but some of its top scientific advisers don't seem to agree.

Much of the current debate over smoking and health concerns the effects of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS). Studies over the past three decades have linked "secondhand smoke" to health effects from asthma attacks to lung cancer.

In January 1993, the Environmental Protection Agency published a controversial report designating ETS a carcinogen more dangerous than benzene or radon, and estimated such "passive smoking" was responsible for about 3,000 lung-cancer deaths annually.

The EPA report has come under heavy fire.

Among the critics were representatives of the Congressional Research Service who on May 11 said in Senate testimony that "statistical evidence does not appear to support a conclusion that there are substantial health effects from passive smoking."

For its part, the tobacco industry accused the EPA of playing fast and loose with statistics to justify a political vendetta against tobacco.

The industry has sued the agency to force the report's withdrawal. Last week a federal judge in Winston-Salem, N.C., refused the EPA's request to dismiss the suit.

Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., who is sponsoring a bill to ban smoking in most public buildings nationwide, counter-attacked last week with an "ETS Facts" letter to colleagues and the news media defending the EPA's secondhand-smoke stance and the validity of the studies relied upon by the agency in reaching its conclusions.

Along with the report, Waxman released a survey of science advisers to the industry-funded Center for Indoor Air Research.

The non-profit CIAR was formed in March 1988 by tobacco companies "to sponsor high-quality research on indoor-air issues and to facilitate communication of research findings to the broad scientific community."

Of the nine members of the CIAR advisory board, seven responded to Waxman's inquiry. Only two agreed with the estimate that ETS is responsible for 3,000 lung-cancer deaths a year.

But five agreed with the statement that ETS is a "human lung carcinogen" and six agreed with the statement that ETS presents a "serious and substantial" health threat to children.

Waxman said it was an "incredible situation" that the industry's "handpicked" advisers disagreed with the industry's stance.

ignored the problems in Rwanda, the world at large has an obligation to react to the crisis.

"The world community must respond positively with sufficient aid to help the refugees and the rebuilding of Rwanda because of the human rights of the people in Africa and the need to advance human rights and the oneness of our common humanity," he said.

The United States is expected to continue to send food and medical aid for months using as many as 2,000 soldiers. President Bill Clinton authorized $100 million for airlifts of medicine, food and water bringing the total cost of U.S. aid to $250 million.

Cholera, a deadly bacteria, has spread to one million refugees already and is sure to continue spreading according to health care workers. Those Rwandan refugees who are not affected by cholera are dying from dehydration, malnutrition and other diseases.

Dele Omoseghon, president of the African Student Association, said the world community should not have allowed this to escalate to this level.

"The U.N. has established enough ground operation. It was a little late but never too late to save lives," he said. "The U.N. forces should have intervened to prevent a catastrophe of this size because the refugees cannot continue to live in camps like those in Goma, Zaire."

The refugees, numbering near 1.7 million for the last 10 days, fear returning to their homeland because of the social-political slaughter that took place by members of a neighboring tribe with axes, guns and machetes.

Health care workers said, however, the refugees need to return so the relief process can work more feasibly.

Canada gets apology for blunder

Los Angeles Times

The owner of Las Vegas' Canadian Football League team has apologized to all Canadians after singer Dennis Parks mangled the words and tune of their national anthem.

Posse owner Rick Mileti apologized for Parks turning "O Canada" into "Uh Oh Canada" Saturday night before the first CFL game in Las Vegas, a 22-20 loss to Sacramento.

"By way of explanation, but not excuse, this singer was recommended to us out of Los Angeles as a professional who had sung your anthem many times for the Olympics," Mileti said in a letter to Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien. "Obviously, we were misled."

Add anthem: Vice President Al Gore, in Ottawa for a meeting with Chretien, even mentioned the incident in a speech.

"I was certainly glad to see that the U.S. football players reacted so strongly and better than the singer," Gore told reporters.

Family life: Craig Griffey, younger brother of Ken Jr. and an outfielder with Seattle's Double-A Jacksonville farm team, finds all the attention being paid his big brother amusing.

"It's not a big deal at all to me," Craig told Paul Meyer of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. "I think it's kind of funny. It's weird seeing all the reporters wanting to talk to him. I've known him a long time. I wonder why anybody would want to talk to him."

First hand: Former Los Angeles Raider defensive end Greg Townsend and former Philadelphia Eagle linebacker Jerry Robinson were roommates when Townsend joined the Raiders.

"I'll never forget when I first came in the league and all he ever talked about was Philly this and Philly that," Townsend said after signing a one-year contract with Philadelphia. "Every night, I heard about what a great place Philly was. I guess I'll get to find out for myself."

A little late: An American in England, after purchasing prints of Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus and Old Tom Morris, said he knew where to get Palmer's and Nicklaus' autographs, but asked where he could contact Morris.

Morris won the British Open four times in the 1860s.

Shame on you: Losses are not taken lightly in Great Britain.

After 17-year-old Razvan Sabau of Romania upset Jeremy Bates, Britain's No. 1 player, and then Mark Peichey, to give Romania a 3-2 victory that eliminated Britain in the Davis Cup, the London Daily Express editorialized: "Britain has been shamefully shoved into the basement of world tennis by a boy barely 17 years old."

It's a fact: Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, born Lew Alcindor, weighed 12 pounds at birth.

He can't hide: Simon Hobday, the new U.S. Senior Open champion from South Africa, once had a terrible problem with his putting. At one tournament, he played with a wide-brimmed straw hat.

When he missed a putt that lipped the cut and spun away, he look skyward and said: "Oh, God, I hoped you wouldn't recognize me in this hat."

Trivia answer: Ted Williams, who was 40 in 1958 when he hit .328 for the Boston Red Sox.

Quotebook: Associated Press reporter Jimmy Golden, on Buffalo quarterback Jim Kelly: "At 34, the Bills' quarterback may not be over the hill, but he can see the top of it."

Celtics rebuilding, sign Wilkins

The Hartford Courant

There is a time-tested way to rebuild an NBA team: Putrefaction.

Take the case of the Milwaukee Bucks.

As directed by Coach/General Manager Mike Dunleavy, the Bucks have steadily purified over the past two seasons. They became so good at being bad that some suggested the Bucks were tanking, overtly or otherwise.

Why? To get into primo lottery range, where the Bucks have landed with all four hooves. Last year, they selected University of Hartford center Vin Baker with the No. 8 pick in the draft. Last month, after winning the lottery, they gleefully gobbled up Purdue forward Glenn Robinson. Mobley later in the first round.

So, after smelling the compost bin for three years, fans at the Bradley Center may be on the cusp of seeing something beautiful spring from the hardwood. With a little more tinkering, would anyone be surprised if the Bucks made a run at the NBA title by the turn of the century?

The people who run the Celtics like to conjure images of the Bucks. As Larry Bird, Kevin McHale and Robert Parish neared the end of their long and glorious careers, the Celtics had been forced to think about rebuilding. They considered putrefaction, and decided it was not for them.

The Celtics were 32-50 last season, their first losing season since 1977-78 (32-50). Board chairman Paul Gaston and vice chairman Steve Schram had a mess on their hands.

There was potential for 60 losses in the 1994-95 season, the Celtics' last at Boston Garden. Gaston and Schram must have foreseen an erosion of their season ticket base—their chief form of bread money—and shuddered at the thought of moving into the 18,500-seat Shawmut Center in 1995.

They could not afford to go through putrefaction.

Enter M.L. Carr. Nearly two months ago, Gavitt was named a vice chairman, presumably to direct the team's golf operations.

Carr, the towel-waving former player, was the curious choice to succeed Gavitt as director of basketball operations.

It's not so curious anymore. Carr is running an anti-putrefaction campaign, and he is bent on success. He drove home that message Friday when he signed free agent forward Dominique Wilkins, 34, to a three-year contract worth nearly $11 million.

"Red (Auerbach) always said that you can't look down the road four or five years, you have to look two to three years," said Ford, who signed a contract extension Thursday.

"Does a player have enough to give you for two or three years? If so, you've got to pursue that avenue."

related to his players.

"I can survive (racial) discrimination, but the one that you cannot survive is age discrimination," he said.

Quotebook: Jerry Jones, owner of the Dallas Cowboys: "Comparing Jimmy Johnson to Barry Switzer is like comparing Rambo to Clint Eastwood. Rambo came in with a lot of fire and smoke, explosions and gunfire. That was Jimmy. Barry is more relaxed, laid back. He comes into a town real quiet and then lights it up. Both are big-bang guys."

of his spare time visiting children in hospitals, YMCAs and Boys and Girls clubs. When he's signing autographs, he says kids ask the darndest questions.

"One I hear all the time is, 'What do you do if you have to go to the bathroom during a race?'" Baldwin said. "And a lot of them want to know, 'Is it scary driving fast?' But my favorite is, 'Do you have parties when you win a race?'"

One man's press: As far as Hall of Fame pitcher Whitey Ford is concerned, baseball today is a watered-down version of the game he played decades ago with the New York Yankees.

"It's diluted," he told Ann Liguori during a TV interview for Sharp Sports. "Baseball has 700 players in it and it used to have 400, so there's a lot of guys who don't belong in the big leagues."

Growing old: Former Tennessee State football coach Joe Gilliam Sr. says there is discrimination worse than that based on race.

Gilliam, 67, who is black, was recently fired by school President James Hefner for being too old to Los Alamitos after riding earlier in the day at Prescott Downs in Prescott, Ariz., said Blane Schvaneveldt, the trainer of Ima Dashing Lady. Figueroa made it to the track to ride in the ninth race.

Limon, a veteran rider who began his career in Utah in 1986, had 18 wins at Los Alamitos this year and 205 lifetime wins at the track. He had ridden the third place finisher in the fourth race Saturday.

Schvaneveldt, the leading trainer at Los Alamitos with more than 2,800 wins, said Limon had ridden for him several times.

"We were real good friends," said

Schvaneveldt, a Cypress resident. "We have these accidents very rarely, but when we have them they are very tragic."

Schvaneveldt said Ima Dashing Lady, a 15-1 shot, was running very well on the lead in the 350-yard race, the Governors Cup Futurity Trials. The winner of the race would qualify for the $160,000 Governor's Cup Futurity Aug. 6 at Los Alamitos, Burgart said.

"The horse was winning the race. I have no idea why it happened," Schvaneveldt said.

Ironically, Schvaneveldt was also the trainer of the horse involved in the last fatality at Los Alamitos in May 1983. In that race, jockey Val Tonks died of head injuries when his quarter horse bolted into the inner rail, throwing him over the rail, Burgart said.

Limon won this year's $100,000 California Sires Cup Futurity with Dash of Cider, a horse he was also scheduled to ride Saturday in the eighth race.

Limon is survived by his wife, Rosie, a four-year-old daughter and two children from a previous marriage who live in Fresno, Calif., according to racetrack officials.

Another Watson moves up in ranks

Watson

With the departure of Saluki men's basketball assistant coach Ron Smith to the Alton school district, restricted earnings coach Rodney Watson has been named to assume the full-time assistant basketball coaching job. Watson, who has been with Saluki basketball since 1988, came to Carbondale after a stint at the coaching change of Smith and Watson.

University of Nebraska-Omaha and prior head coaching jobs at the prep level.

Jim Hart, SIUC athletics director, said will benefit

"We were successful in receiving approval for a quick transition due to the urgency of the situation," Hart said. "This is an open recruiting period and all of our basketball coaches are needed to be on the road this weekend. Obviously we hated to see Ron Smith leave us, but we're delighted to have a person with Rodney's experience and professionalism available to step into a more active role." Smith, who coached with head basketball coach Rich Herrin for 13 years, accepted the head basketball coaching job at Alton High School and athletic director for the Alton school district last week. "I've leaned on Smitty for quite a few years, both at Benton and here at SIUC," Herrin said. "This is a great opportunity for him, however, and we know he'll do a good job for them at Alton." Watson said he looks forward to accepting the challenge of being in the assistant coaching position at Saluki basketball. "I'm very happy for Ron and the opportunity he's received at Alton, but I'm even happier for the tremendous opportunity the move has created for myself and my family," Watson said. "I'll welcome the added responsibilities involved in my new position and am looking forward to recruiting off campus as that now will become a major aspect of my job."

'Gateway' city sets records while hosting Olympic fest

By Grant Dandy

The numbers are in on the 1994 U.S. Olympic Festival held earlier this month in St. Louis, and a new precedent has been set. Twenty previous Olyfest records were shattered by the Gateway City that included all-new highs in attendance and ticket sales. Director of U.S. Olympic Festivals, Gary Alexander, said St. Louis can put itself right up there with previous host cities that have put on a great show. "Every city will say it's the best, but there is no question how great this one was," he said. "Operationally outstanding, the sound plan was carried out. Ask the athletes. They loved the housing, the feeding, the competition. It was outstanding." The previous record of $2.67 million in total ticket sales set by Minneapolis in 1990 was exceeded by over $200,000 and the Opening Ceremony crowd under the Arch of 82,000 broke the 1989 Oklahoma City record by over 6,000 fans. "Financially, the business plan was sound," Alexander said. "But the real show, second only to the athletes, is what the community did. Through ticket sales and volunteerism, it was an unbelievable reflection of the support that this city showed for the Olympic movement." Single session event ticket records fell in baseball, canoe/kayak, ice hockey, sailing, tennis, water polo, shooting, synchronized swimming and wrestling, while total Olyfest attendance buried the previous mark also. The sailing and wrestling events were both held in Illinois at Lake Carlyle and Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville. Over 3,500 volunteers helped make the 37-sport extravaganza a success, which caused United States Olympic Committee President Dr. LeRoy Walker to coin the Festival "the greatest ever." "There has been tremendous competition, tremendous volunteer support and tremendous professional effort," Walker said. "All of these things make it the greatest Festival that we ever had."

Freak horse racing accident in Los Alamitos kills jockey

Los Angeles Times

CYPRESS, Calif.—A 35-year-old jockey was thrown and killed during a quarter horse race at Los Alamitos Race Course Saturday night, the second fatality in the 43-year history of the track, authorities said. Juan Limon, a native of Jalisco, Mexico, who lived with his family in Buena Park, Calif., died of massive head injuries. His mount, Ina Dashing Lady, stumbled near the finish while leading the pack, tossed Limon forward on the track and then fell on him, said Ed Burgart, the track announcer. "It was almost like the horse crossed its legs for no apparent reason," Burgart said. "The horse was in front by a head just yards before the (finish) wire. It would either have won or run second." The horse quickly got back to its feet and walked back to the barn, unhurt. Burgart called it a "freak accident."

Immediately after the spill, Limon was taken to Los Alamitos General Hospital, where he was pronounced dead. Limon, the ninth-leading jockey at Los Alamitos this year, was a last minute replacement for another jockey who was late arriving at the track, Burgart said. The accident occurred during the seventh race. The scheduled rider was Roman Figueroa, who was on his way to

Mr. Quotable: Buddy Ryan speaks

Los Angeles Times

Buddy Ryan has been a delight for writers covering the Arizona Cardinals when it comes to "quotability." Ryan recently cut three players with these pithy comments: Offensive tackle Stan Thomas: "He can't play." Free safety Mike Dumas: "He's not a bad player, but he can't play, either." And 5-foot-11 receiver Curtis Duncan: "He's a midget receiver. He caught a bunch of passes, but that was in the chuck-and-duck offense. That offense of his (assistant coach Kevin Gilbride) will get you 400 or 500 yards, one touchdown, five turnovers and a touchdown for the defense on a typical average day." Add Ryan: After Ryan speculated that he might use 6-foot-5, 300-pound defensive tackle Eric Swann as a running back in short-yardage situations, the way the Chicago Bears once used William "Refrigerator" Perry, Houston Chronicle writer John McClain asked Ryan if it is frightening to use a defensive player on offense. "It would be if you're the one or defense," he said. Soccer holiday: School children in Thailand were given the day off last Monday to let them catch up on their sleep after watching the World Cup final from the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif. Live coverage of the game started at 2:35 a.m., Bangkok time. Kid talk: Jack Baldwin drives in Trans-Am races and spends much

Community meets coach on poster tour

Shawn Watson introduced to new, old friends

By Doug Durso
Sports Reporter

Football season is almost here and the Salukis have started drumming up local support through their annual poster tour. Head coach Shawn Watson and marketing representatives traveled into area communities to sign posters and give people information about the upcoming football season over the past week. Watson said the experience was positive because it brought SIUC athletics into the community. "There is no doubt in my mind this was a worth-while experience, not just for myself, but also for the university and the community," Watson said. "Taking athletics into the community helps the university and shows that we care about the people in this area." He said the response from the area was impressive. "Everybody was very enthusiastic about meeting us out in the community," Watson said. "It showed that we take time to go out into the area and meet with people outside the University." Mike Trude, head of Saluki sports marketing, said the tour has been going on for many years to get people ready for the season. "The tour gave away posters, schedules, season ticket information, and three on three basketball flyers as part of the promotion," Trude said.

He said the promotion had added importance this year because of Watson being the new head coach. "He was able to go to area communities to meet the people and let them know what direction the program is going," Trude said. Trude said since Watson is native to this area, so he got to see people he had been associated with before. "The tour was more, 'Hi, I remember you,' instead of, 'Hi, who are you,'" Trude said. "That has really brought a good feeling to the area about Saluki football." Watson said going into the area where he grew up was an ideal situation. "This tour allowed me to get reacquainted with this area," Watson said. "Because of my heavy schedule I don't get a chance to see people I knew before and this promotion allowed me to do that." The tour started last Tuesday and ended Friday with stops in several different towns throughout the Southern Illinois area. Trude said this is the earliest the poster tour has been, because of the new coach and getting the fans involved. "We usually start the tour a couple weeks into August, but we wanted to do it as soon as possible to get fans ready for the season and give people a chance to meet Watson," he said. Trude said there are also basketball and volleyball poster tours before their respective seasons begin.
