Jury still out in Neal murder trial

DELIBERATING:

No decision reached as of press time.

KEVIN WALSH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

As of 12 a.m. today, jury members in the Labron Neal double-murder trial had yet to reach a verdict.

Deliberations began more than 12 hours earlier at noon, following two hours of closing arguments.

More than 25 friends and family of the defendant and victims paced into the earlier morning hours at Jackson County Courthouse in Murphysboro amid a noticeably increased security presence of about 12 law enforcement officials.

The jury began deliberating shortly before noon Wednesday following both sides' closing arguments.

Neal, 18, of Carbondale, is charged with six counts of first-degree murder for shooting two Carbondale High School teens.

At one point during deliberations, the jury asked for the heights of Neal, one of the victims and Reggie Cavitt, a witness whom the defense has maintained is the murderer. Jackson County Circuit Judge William Schwartz denied the request, saying the jury had all the information it was going to get.

Jackson County State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec said early in his closing argument, "the evidence has proven the defendant to be a cold-blooded killer."

Wepsiec reiterated the jigsaw puzzle metaphor he used in his July 15 opening arguments to describe the state's case against Neal.

"When you put the pieces together, you get a picture," Wepsiec said to the jury. "The picture has the defendant shooting Terrance Mitchell in the head, shooting Austin Campbell, chasing him down and shooting him twice in the head."

Wepsiec walked the jury through the events leading up to the Aug. 11 murders; from the phone call Campbell made to Neal the morning of the murders to the phone call police received about a dead body found outside trailer #138 at Carbondale Mobile Homes on Route 51.

During the course of the trial, the prosecution presented 37 witnesses.

Several of those witnesses testified to seeing Cavitt on the porch at the time of the murders. They also testified to seeing Neal return to the trailer several minutes after shots were fired.

Three defense witnesses testified to seeing a man fitting Cavitt's description run after Campbell after shots were fired. One defense witness said he saw both Neal and Cavitt return together minutes after the shots were fired.

"The evidence shows that Reggie Cavitt was not on the porch," Paul Christenson, Neal's attorney, said.

The defense and the prosecution agreed that Campbell and Mitchell went behind trailer #138 between

DEPENDING: After unexpectedly losing her sight, an assistant professor must rely on students, neighbors.

KELLY E. HERTLEIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Rose Mary Carter steps carefully out of an SIUC Transit Service vehicle as she arrives at work.

Moving about without the benefit of sight, she slowly makes her way to her office in Pulliam Hall, where student worker Nancy Patton patiently awaits to read the day's mail to her.

Carter, an assistant professor in workforce education and development for 27 years, recently lost her eyesight. In late June, Carter's right eye sustained sudden, dramatic hemorrhaging. Carter has never had vision in her left eye, and she is now legally blind.

Since last month, Carter has been relying on the help of student employees, friends and neighbors to assist her.

"I can only tell if someone is nearby if I really concentrate, but I do not know what they look like," she said. "The problem with walking around campus is that I haven't been trained to walk with a cane, and I could trip over holes in the sidewalk."

"Several people have been a great help to me. No way could I continue my day-to-day life without the help of the student workers or my neighbors."

Carter said she may attempt to undergo surgery in August. Doctors will try to remove the blood from her right eye and clear some of the arteries in the hope that she will regain partial vision.

Patton, a junior in social work from Equality, is one of the student workers in the office who helps Carter with her daily tasks.

"Whatever she needs done, I try to do," Patton said. "I've typed memos and helped dial the phone because the numbers are very small. I read her mail, and I also help her look for misplaced things in her office."

Patton said she enjoys helping Carter, but believes

House scrutinizes university crime stats, procedures

SECURITY: SIU opposes federally mandated reporting of criminal activity.

KIRK MOTTRAM
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

University crime statistics, police logs, disciplinary procedures, and law enforcement policies are under scrutiny by Congress, as a House committee debates the merits of a new bill designed to provide campus crime information to the public.

The 1997 Accuracy in Campus Crime Reporting Act, sponsored by U.S. Rep. John J. Duncan, Jr., R-Tenn., and Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., was introduced to the House on Feb. 12, and is said to eliminate the existing loopholes in the Student Right-to-Know and Campus Security Act of 1990.

The bill is before the subcommittee on post-secondary education, training, life and long-learning and is expected to move to the House Education and Workforce Committee at the end of the month.

SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs said the University has worked diligently to report campus crime. He said this information is vital to those served by the University.

"The issue is how to respond immediately," Beggs said. "From a safety perspective, it is important to share with individuals this information to make them aware and to protect their well-being."

Garrett Deakin, executive director of government relations, said the SIUC and SIUE administrations are opposed to the bill. He said the two schools are not familiar with the proposed changes and should not have to undertake them.

"We don't think it's proper for the University to get involved with the new procedures," Deakin said. "This isn't a criminal situation here."

In 1986, Jeanne Clery was raped and murdered after someone broke into her dorm room at Lehigh University, Penn. Victims' rights advocates say this scenario would never have unfolded if information concerning the perpetrator of the crime, which the school possessed, would have been divulged.

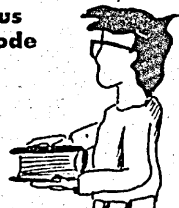

Margaret Jakobson, chief advocate of the Equal Rights Alliance, said universities should be required to adapt to the changes so they may prevent these occurrences in the future.

The bill was drafted by Security on Campus Inc., the Society of Professional Journalists, the Student Press Law Center and various victims' rights advocates.

It specifies five areas in need

Obstacles provide motivation

PERSISTENCE PAYS OFF: Ignoring setback, student returns, gets second masters.

BRIAN EBERS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

While driving to an interview in Milwaukee just three days after earning his first master's degree in environmental biotechnology, Jack Tursman narrowly survived a head-on car collision, leaving him mentally debilitated.

The 1990 auto accident did not quell Tursman's desire for life or for academic success. He soon will be receiving his second master's degree in environmental engineering from SIUC.

Three months after the accident, Tursman underwent neurosurgery for four internal brain lesions. His right ankle, which was shattered, is now held together by six titanium screws and a metal plate.

Tursman's IQ nearly was cut in half, and he suffered a form of permanent amnesia and short-term memory loss.

"My IQ went from 120 to 68," he said, "and I couldn't even remember who my wife was. I still can't remember a thing about my marriage."

"After the operation, my neurosurgeon told my mother I should try to get on as a hotel doorman somewhere in Chicago, and I had a master's degree in environmental biotechnology!"

Instead, his mother transferred him to the Center for Comprehensive Services, Inc., 306 W. Mill St., where he spent 10 months before making a remarkable recovery.

George Mendez, supervisor of nursing services at CCS, was Tursman's nurse when he arrived at the facility.

"When Jack arrived here I thought a full recovery was a stretch based on my experience with other patients with similar injuries," Mendez said. "I remember when Jack began to read books again for the first time at CCS.

"He was so determined, and he had to be. He had to work three times harder than most people because of his injuries."

After exhaustively working for four years to gain his master's degree, Tursman is relieved to almost be done. He plans to work as an environmental engineer for a company when he graduates.

"These four years at SIUC have been the most rewarding and memorable times in my life," he said. "SIUC has always tried to help me, and I'm going to miss it."

But things were different for Tursman when he first arrived in Carbondale. He said even the simplest of tasks were items of monstrous complexity.

Three months after arriving at CCS, Tursman was allowed to audit engineering lectures at SIUC because he had previously earned a master's degree in environmental biotechnology.

SAFE STEPS:

After descending into 11-foot trench at the Carbondale Fire Department's fire range Southern Illinois-area firefighters learn trench rescue techniques.

Kelly Cavanaugh watches and nods his approval as a Carbondale firefighter gingerly moves about an 11-foot trench.

"He's got one safe area right now," he says, motioning toward the relatively even side of dirt on the firefighter's left. The other side of the trench has crumbled and is rough.

"He's got about two feet on each side in total that is safe," Cavanaugh explains. "He can't get a strong hold on that other side. He needs a bigger area of four feet of safe area so that he could get in without endangering a person who is buried underneath in the trench."

Cavanaugh and Chuck Wehrli, both firefighters and instructors from the Fire Service Institute in Champaign, helped train about 35 Southern Illinois firefighters in a three-day trench rescue training course this week.

The training session was organized at the Carbondale Fire Department's fire range, located in the Carbondale countryside.

The 10- to 12-foot hole dug into the earth served as a trench for the firefighters to carefully explore. Taking turns exploring the narrow space, the firefighters used large, flat boards, ropes and expensive air-pressurized equipment to learn how to effectively rescue people buried in trenches.

Cavanaugh says many people do not realize firefighters receive this kind of training.

"Firefighters absolutely need this training if they're going to rescue someone in a trench," Cavanaugh said. "Without it, they could endanger their own lives and the lives of the people they may be sent to rescue."

Bill West, assistant fire chief of the Carbondale Fire Department, said there is a good chance he and other firefighters will put those skills to use because they work in the Southern Illinois region.

"I've been with the department for 27 years and there have been two actual trench rescues, and one occurred before I came here," he said. "Living in an earthquake-prone and tornado-prone area, firefighters could run into a lot of collapsed buildings where they would need the shoring techniques that they are learning here. We could

CONVENIENCE: Extra staff improves service.

TAMEKA L. HICKS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Women seeking routing health exams will find it easier to schedule appointments at SIUC's Student Health Programs because of the recent hiring of four more health care providers.

Student Health Programs has planned a way for women to avoid the waiting time for a yearly pap smear exam appointment, Muriel Narve, clinical services manager, said.

In the fall, appointments for pap smear exams will be made for 8:30 a.m. to noon Tuesdays and 12:30 to 4 p.m. Thursdays every week throughout the school year. Currently, there are no set days for such exams.

Narve said the health service is making these changes for the fall semester: for patients' convenience and the recent availability of more health care providers offering their services.

"This is a more efficient way to offer this service for both students and health services," she said. "We would have liked to have done this sooner, but we did not have enough providers to do it."

The new health care providers are Dale Vorbrich Jr., an emergency medicine physician; Robert Wilt, an internal medicine specialist; Nancy McDonald, a physician assistant for the women's clinic; and Constance Kemp, a general practitioner for the women's clinic.

Shawnee National Forest logging resumes in August

Pine tree harvesting will begin in August in Shawnee National Forest following a court ruling in favor of the U.S. Forest Service this year.

Opportunity Area 6, a 10,000-acre plot of land, was the site where logging activities ceased in 1994 when environmentalists won a lawsuit against the U.S. Forest Service. A recent judgment in favor of the U.S. Forest Service allows them to begin selling the land for logging again.

More than 3,400 acres are available for logging in OA6. The land is being sold on a contract basis. Currently five contracts exist, and one, with 405 available acres, has been sold to a logging company. Of the 405 acres, 203 are being harvested.

Environmentalists fought the sale of the land because they believe removing a vast canopy area is detrimental to the environment.

Elk reintroduction to area delayed for more research

The Department of Natural Resources has decided to wait for further studies on its decision to reintroduce elk into the Southern Illinois area.

DNR Director Brent Manning announced Tuesday that the elk release is not imminent, but it does not mean that elk will never be introduced into the Shawnee National Forest.

The DNR will take the extra time to monitor elk reintroduction programs in Kentucky, Tennessee and Wisconsin. It also will monitor the birth rates among released animals in nearby states.

Elk have been extinct from the Southern Illinois area since the mid-1800s.

Stamp surcharge to benefit breast cancer research

Congress has discovered a new way to raise money for breast cancer research: by selling stamps at more than their face value.

Tuesday, the House directed the U.S. Postal Service to issue a breast cancer stamp that could be sold with a surcharge of up to 8 cents. The extra money would be dedicated to cancer research efforts, and some legislators predicted it would be the first of a series of special stamps to fund research against various diseases.

Postal officials initially objected, fearing it would, as Postmaster General Marvin T. Runyon put it, "open the floodgates to all worthy social causes," each demanding stamps for its cause.

Similar legislation cleared the Senate last week, 83 to 17.

Environmentalists earn victory

Sometimes I love this country. Yes, even in the land of eternal greed, even with the dog-eat-dog mentality that all too often invades our daily lives, sometimes, once in a great while, the Good Guys win.

In this case, the "Good Guys" (and Gals) are the folks down at the Sierra Club and a group of landowners working together to stop the construction of a monstrous project: the construction of a dam on Sugar Creek.

The proposed 4-mile long, half-mile-wide reservoir would flood 1 1/2 square miles of wetlands, woods, fields and farms, and would block up one of the last free-flowing rivers in Southern Illinois and destroy habitat of the bald eagle and two federally protected species of bats. The least brook lamprey and the Indiana crayfish would face local extinction.

All this just to create a water supply for Marion and the Lake of Egypt Water District.

From the get-go, the Army Corps of Engineers has failed to fully explore the many alternatives. There are a host of multiple-source options that haven't even been examined by the Corps in its environmental impact statement.

At first, no alternatives at all were considered. The Corps found that destroying the habitat of two aquatic species, drowning the habitat of the bald eagle and two federally protected bat species, and submerging hundreds of acres of public and private land would have "no significant impact." That "finding" meant no environmental impact statement, and no need to examine alternatives. Thankfully, it didn't take long before Marion's permit to build the lake was taken away by a federal court.

So, the Corps had to conduct an environmental impact statement. A judge told them so. I won't bore you with the details, but the Good Guys won again this month when the Corps' environmental impact statement was rejected in court because it continued to ignore many alternatives.

The U.S. Court of Appeals found that "... By focusing on the single-source idea, the Corps never looked at an entire category of reasonable alternatives and thereby ruined its environmental impact statement."

The city officials of Marion probably will tell you that because they already have spent $3 million on the project, it must be allowed to continue. The only action that should have been taken is the preparation of a valid environmental impact statement, which should only cost about $500,000.

Where did the rest of the money go? Well, according to media accounts, a substantial area of land was illegally clear-cut in preparation for the reservoir's construction. Maybe that's a good place to start looking. Maybe it's all legal fees. The point is this: If the lake never gets built and the city is out $3 million, it's the officials' fault for breaking the rules. It certainly isn't the fault of the affected land-owners, nor is it the fault of the affected species.

The U.S. Court of Appeals said it best in its July 14 decision: "We regret that eight years have passed since the City of Marion first proposed to remedy its water shortage. ... But the specter of further delay cannot in itself justify setting aside the mandate of the law. ... If fault must be found, it lies with those who refused to consider patently reasonable alternatives and who ignored the explicit directions of the federal bench."

I pray that Marion finally will see the light and realize that Sugar Creek Lake should not be built. If not, I would hope that the Corps will conduct a real environmental impact statement this time.

Somehow, I doubt it. Still, for now, the Good Guys have won. Enjoy your victory — you've earned it.

Vague mission

Traditions committee needs more than ideas to improve SIUC's image

EARLIER THIS MONTH, SIUC CHANCELLOR Donald Beggs announced the initiation of a University traditions committee which, in the upcoming months, will gloss the University's image in a superficial sheen.

The body is supposed to identify past University traditions and revive them for future use. It also will evaluate and create new traditions. Traditions that will be examined include those "that mean something to students as well as faculty and staff."

At this point, you might be asking yourself, what exactly is a traditions committee? You're not the only one.

THE PROBLEM IS A LACK OF CLARITY. THE committee's mission statement, as it is spelled out by the administration, is too vague. What are traditions that mean something? And, how does this committee know which traditions "mean something" to the school's various interests? It doesn't.

Another issue is the express effort on the part of the administration to portray SIUC and its history in a positive light. "Portray" is the operative word. It sounds as if the administration is trying to design and concoct its own image of the school. It is unfortunate that we see a need to spin the issue.

WHAT SEPARATES GOOD FROM BAD WITH respect to a university's image is not the nature of the school's traditions — whether or not we have a fun-filled, Halloween weekend or if we can get Pulliam Tower lit — it's how smart the students are; if they can read, argue and conceptualize.

The administration also thinks that by inventing traditions, we may be able to recreate our heritage artificially and people may one day look at SIUC's rich, tradition-laden milieu and say, "Wow, this is something special." Unfortunately, you cannot force a tradition. The Indians and English settlers did not have a meeting after dinner to prescribe Thanksgiving traditions so the rest of us could have an excuse for overeating during the holidays.

But, because the administration deems it necessary to maintain a traditions committee, it might as well do something. If the committee is going to operate, it needs to examine, carefully, why SIUC has the reputation it does, whatever that may be. The members must sit down and analyze why University traditions have dissolved and why SIUC's image has been tarnished.

THE ADMINISTRATION SHOULD BE COM-mended for, through the use of the committee, "trying to understand why it (Halloween) became violent." Halloween was a tradition worth preserving. Interestingly, certain administrative factions who opposed the event are now trying to discuss it.

Ironically perhaps, but, more importantly, the SIUC traditions committee needs to re-define its function. If the same, vague descriptions continue to surface, then maybe it should think about axing itself.

But, hurry up. Students don't care whether a traditions committee is meeting every Thursday over bagels; they want to see some action.

"Our Word" represents the consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board.

NEA deserves funding

Dear Editor:

There are two issues central to the debate surrounding the National Endowment for the Arts: Does the NEA produce cultural benefits worthy of the funding it receives? And if the NEA produces enough to warrant its funding, why do Republicans seek to disband the agency?

This year's allocated funds for the NEA are $99 million. At that rate, the federal budget awards the endowment a mere 38 cents per American. In return, the nonprofit arts generate $37 billion in economic activity and pay $3.4 billion in federal taxes annually.

Benefits produced by the NEA are not limited to the fiscal realm. Rather than being elitist, as Josh Robison suggests in his July 16 column, the NEA democratizes the arts. NEA funding produces many community events that bridge America's diverse ethnic groups. The NEA develops artists from socioeconomic classes who would fall without funding. It also exposes youth to the arts. Participation in the arts builds self-esteem, improves cognitive ability and provides modes of self-expression.

The conservative Republican opposition to the NEA is due, in large part, to the works of two artists who received NEA funding. Robert Mapplethorpe's homo-erotic photography and Andres Serrano's iconoclastic artifacts are almost solely responsible for the decline in support for the NEA. Only 40 of the more than 110,000 grants awarded during the NEA's history have been controversial.

Conservative Republicans used these grants as campaign issues in recent elections. Media sensationalism served to elevate the small number of controversial NEA grants into national issues. Now, the conservative Republicans controlling the House are attempting to make good on their campaign promise of disbanding the NEA. On July 16, the Senate voted to appropriate $175 million to the NEA. It is doubtful the House GOP can deliver on this campaign promise. Visit the NEA Web site at <http://arts.endow.gov>.

Echol Cook, dean of the College of Engineering at West Virginia University, was the associate dean of College of Engineering at SIUC in 1991 when he met Tursman.

"I remember when Jack came to me about auditing my lectures," he said. "I knew he had a brilliant mind but his mental capacities were severely impaired by his traumatic brain injury."

With the help of Cook, Tursman was issued a community listener card at SIUC. The card is available for individuals who wish to listen to lectures but not actively participate in graded assignments.

"I didn't want to let him vegetate in his current state, so I wrote some letters and got him in to listen to my lectures on biological waste water treatment," Cook said. "I hoped if he were to listen to my lectures it might help to bring him back."

Tursman said when he first attended the classes, they did not make much sense. Later, they slowly began to remind him he had earned an engineering degree.

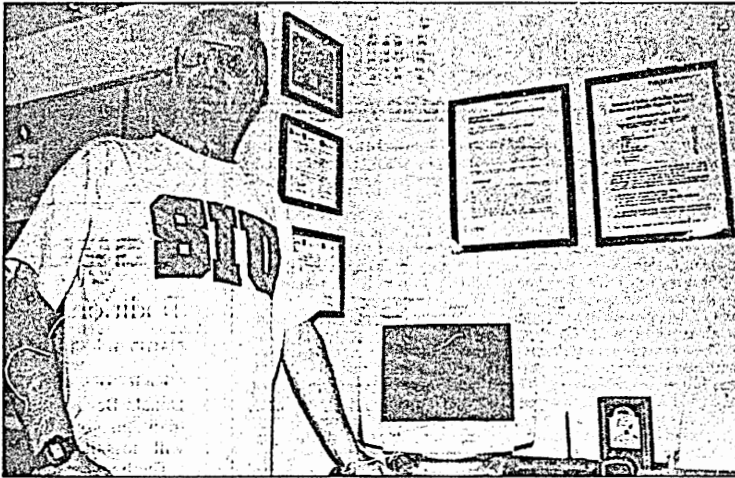

"When I first attended the lectures I didn't even know I was an engineer," he said, "but the more I attended the lectures, certain key words reminded me of who I was."

Kathy Fabhey, science librarian at Morris Library, met Jack Tursman in March 1991.

"Jack came in after his accident during his rehabilitation at CCS," she said. "He spent a tremendous amount of time in the library doing research on head injuries while struggling with a brain injury of his own."

When Tursman was investigating medical journals in the library, he discovered the book "Smart Drugs," by Ward Dean and John Morgenthaler. The book provided him some insight into the realm of self-medication.

"I learned about this drug called choline, which is a neuroactive B vitamin," he said. "Before taking the drugs, I couldn't even tell you what day it was. But three weeks after taking the choline I could easily tell you what day it was."

RECOVERY: Jack Tursman, of Chicago, who has recovered from a traumatic head injury, is about to graduate with his second master's degree in environmental engineering.

Cook could see progress in Tursman's abilities during fall 1991 when he was still auditing his class.

"So many times people have injuries like Jack's and we just want to write them off to a life of collecting Social Security and being vegetables," he said.

"I don't know if it was the choline or if it was Jack's determination. He had a real desire to succeed, he had faith, and his hard work paid off."

After just seven months of taking the choline, Tursman's IQ had risen from 68 to 118. Shortly after, in December, he was released from CCS and returned to Chicago to work for DePaul and Associates, an engineering consulting firm.

Tursman remained with DePaul and Associates until 1992, when he returned to Carbondale to pursue another master's degree. With the help of a University scholarship, Tursman began taking classes at SIUC in spring 1993.

Bill Ray, associate professor of environmental engineering and one of Tursman's professors last semester, expects high standards from his students, and said Tursman's knowledge of environmental engineering is tremendous.

"Jack has done an outstanding literary review related to hazardous liquids in the soil this semester," Ray said. "There are times when Jack forgets things due to his injury, but he has worked very hard to be where he is at."

Tursman has been published in engineering review books five times. His most recent publication, "Subsurface Contaminant Bioremediation Engineering," was in 1992.

Tursman is most famous for his whistle blowing of the company he worked for in 1987, which caused a Chicago incinerator to be shut down for illegal dumping of polychlorinated-biphenyls, or PCB's, into Lake Michigan. The incinerator was owned by Waste Management Inc., the largest disposal company in America, before the incinerator was forced to shut down by the Environmental Protection Agency.

When Tursman was fired from Waste Management Inc., in 1987 he suspected it was because of the whistle blowing. He contacted the EPA and several Chicago newspapers and was ultimately responsible for the shutdown of the incinerator.

Tursman faces a new challenge now as he looks on a future in the environmental engineering field.

"In all of the time I have been here at SIUC, the academic community has been nothing but helpful," Tursman said. "The Engineering Department, CCS, Carbondale and the whole University have always tried to help me."

"They have facilitated my recovery and for that, I am grateful."

she is a strong woman who is capable of dealing with many things on her own.

"I like to help her, and other people, that is why I am in social work," Patton said. "She is pretty resilient anyway; she does really well on her own."

Carter, who has been a professor for SIUC for 27 years, says her classes have always been full. She will be teaching graduate and undergraduate courses in the fall and hopes the University will provide equipment she will need to teach.

"The University is working on getting me a scanner for my computer and providing a reader to help me go through my graduate students' research papers and dissertations," she said.

The additional effort Carter will make to continue her teaching stems from her love of the profession.

"It'll be just a little harder because I use a lot of things like overhead projectors and visual aids to teach," she said. "I've always been a fast reader, and I could go through a 50-60 page research paper in a little under two hours while catching everything wrong with it. My student workers will now have to read them to me."

"But, I love teaching. My grad students are very helpful and compassionate, and I believe they understand."

Carter's home life is more difficult than her tasks at the office. She has noticed that her skills around the house have become limited.

"Day-to-day life is difficult," said Carter, who lives alone. "How do you prepare a meal when you cannot see the stove? I have learned to use the microwave, but I am still afraid of the stove because I cannot tell if it is still on or if it is off."

But Carter does not allow her disability to confine her to her home or office.

"I like to go to movies, and I've gone to see 'George of the Jungle' and 'Men in Black,'" she said. "I can't see the screen, but I can hear and understand most of what's going on. I'm waiting for Harrison Ford's new movie."

Carter says she has found a positive side about her situation. She has learned that people can be caring and are willing to help her in her time of need.

"It's a test of strength; you learn what you can cope with," she said.

"You can't imagine how helpful people have been. I knew people would be helpful, but I never knew who would go the extra mile."

ARCHITECTURE:
Program introduces young people to building design, city construction.

VASSILIS NEMITSAS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Standing in the middle of high school teens, answering questions and helping them with their job in designing a structure on their computers, Jon Davey is having an enjoyable time.

"It's exciting and the hardest teaching I do all year," Davey, an associate professor in architectural studies, said. "Teenagers are very demanding, but they are not intimidated by technology and they are challenging."

Twenty-two high school teens are attending the Kid Architecture program that Davey supervises. The program is sponsored by the Southern Illinois Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, the Franklin County Architects Association and Garrison Jones Architects of Carbondale. It will run through Friday.

The program has been offered on campus since 1989. Davey said the program introduces young people to building design.

"It is my belief that every young person should understand the architect of the cities we live in because it affects our behavior," Davey said.

During the program, the teens are introduced to architectural design and history through lectures. They also build three-dimensional models with plastic pipes and design sketches of houses. The students use 3-D design programs on computers and learn how to build actual models following their computerized plans.

"They deal with the latest computer technology and design construction non-stop," Davey said.

As the teens focus on their computer screens, they search for the best way to make a structure. Davey stands by to answer any questions, and looks for some potential architects, too.

"Eight years ago, I had high school kids who attended this program," he said, "and a few years later they graduated in design from SIUC, University of Illinois and Tulane University."

Potential architect Jessica Fishback said the program can help her with future college decisions.

"I'm learning more about architecture because I work with computers," Fishback, 17, said. "Once I go to college, I won't be afraid."

Davey wants to reach out to teenagers like Fishback and Winthrop to teach more children about architecture.

"I want to teach all of this to disabled and inner-city children," he said, "and also to other children of the world."

RESCUE

use these techniques quite often."

West also said firefighters can apply what they learn from the course to other areas of their dangerous work.

"A lot of the principles that they learn here can be used in a lot of different rescues such as vertical rescues or confined-space rescues," he said.

As the firefighters watched, Cavanaugh pointed at Carbondale firefighter Aaron "Bogie" Hines, who was making his way down into the trench.

Cavanaugh then gestured to the firefighters standing near the top of the crumbling side of the trench. They held the ends of tethered ropes that also were attached to Hines in the trench.

"Firefighters standing on the torn-up area are standing on plywood so that nothing caves in," he said. "The area is unsafe."

The whirl and hum of equipment accompanied Cavanaugh's instructions. Carbondale Fire Chief Cliff Manis said the equipment needed to teach the course effectively was about $5,000.

The Carbondale Fire Department would be unable to supply that necessary equipment without the help of a grant that the SIUC administration helped the department obtain.

"SIUC provided the grant, and we provided the manpower for the training," Manis said. "Our budget constraints don't allow us to purchase all of the equipment that we need. There is about $100,000 worth of equipment here, and there are countless hours of training."

Manis watched the simulated trench rescue, grateful for the University support that helped the training occur.

"Some of our equipment is on permanent loan from the University," he said. "Luckily we have a good working relationship with the University."

NEAL

10 and 11 p.m.

The prosecution insisted that Neal accompanied the two behind the trailer and ultimately killed them. The defense theory placed Cavitt behind the trailer with Campbell and Mitchell, while Neal stayed back at the trailer to smoke marijuana blunts with friends.

"There were two people who knew what happened here," Christenson said. "Labron Neal and Reggie Cavitt."

As Wepsiec showed the jury the coroner's picture of Campbell's face, the photo was visible to Campbell's family sitting in the front row of the court gallery. As they viewed the picture, several family members cried and embraced each other.

The parents of both the defendant and the victims looked on silently, with dignity, and remained composed throughout the closing arguments.

Wepsiec then picked up the .22-caliber Ruger, displayed it to the jury and said, "This was the only murder weapon used."

He turned around, walked over to the defendant's table, pointed emphatically at Neal and said, "That's the man who used it."

Neal glimpsed briefly at Wepsiec and then looked away.

The prosecution argued that Neal stole the gun from Campbell's dresser earlier in the evening when he went to pick Campbell up to go to the party. The prosecution said Neal then killed both teenagers outside of the party.

Wepsiec said there were three eyewitnesses to the murders.

"Two of them are dead, and one of them, the defendant, testified," he said.

The defense argued that Campbell brought the gun to the party, where it was later used by Cavitt to kill both teens.

Neither the defense nor the prosecution established a clear motive for the killings. Theories range from robbery to a drug deal gone bad.

"When they got to the party, Austin Campbell had the gun that Austin Campbell brought to the party," Christenson said.

Christenson described a situation where an accidental shooting was conceivable.

"A 15-year-old brandishes a loaded handgun," Christenson said. "If you add drugs and alcohol to money, guns and 15-year-olds at parties, you have a dangerous situation."

The defense argued that during an altercation between Cavitt and Campbell, the gun went off and a bullet fatally wounded Mitchell in the head.

At one point in Christenson's closing argument, he held the gun in front of the jury and repeatedly cocked the hammer back and pulled the trigger of the weapon in an apparent attempt to illustrate how easy it is to discharge the weapon. The repeated click and snap of the gun made one of the victim's family members cringe as she squirmed to clog her ears with the tips of her fingers.

Wepsiec attempted to discredit the accident theory by reminding the jury about testimony given by a forensic expert who said Mitchell died as a result of a contact gunshot wound to the left temple. Wepsiec pleaded with the jury to draw reasonable inferences from the evidence and testimony. The gunshot wound was no accident, Wepsiec said. "A contact wound to the head requires a conscious effort."

During the police investigation immediately following the discovery of Mitchell's body, Neal did most of the talking and much of what he said was inconsistent, Wepsiec said.

Wepsiec wrapped up his closing argument by reminding the jury that during opening arguments, he said he was going to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Neal committed the murders.

"I kept my end of the bargain, I ask you to keep your bargain," Wepsiec said. "I ask you to find the defendant guilty of two murders."

Christenson's voice, which often thundered indignantly during cross examination of witnesses, simmered to a cool, deliberative tone as he began his closing argument to the jury.

"You are soon going to embark on the most important duty in the American justice system — to decide whether the state has proved its case," Christenson said.

After the soft-spoken introduction, Christenson launched into an assault on the credibility of the state's witnesses. His attack focused on prosecution witness Rome Robinson, who admitted to lying about seeing Neal load the murder weapon before the murders, and Cavitt, who became a hostile witness during the prosecution's case.

"You saw his (Cavitt's) demeanor," Christenson said. "I submit to you, Reggie Cavitt testified like a guilty man."

Christenson insisted that the police investigation of Neal proceeded on false information provided by Robinson, and that investigators refused to consider another suspect.

Christenson again noted that the prosecution presented no forensic or physical evidence linking Neal to the murders.

"The state's case is based on the flimsiest of notions," Christenson said. "There is no confession to the police that he shot these people ... Words of accusation are not evidence of proof."

Neal faces a minimum sentence of 20 years and is eligible for natural life in prison. He is not eligible for the death penalty.

All providers will perform routine exams during the designated times beginning in the fall.

Kemp, who joined the staff in September, said the expanded services for the women's health clinic will be conducted by seven providers, including the four new providers. In addition to setting designated times for pap smear exams, patients will be given breast exams as well as tests for infections including chlamydia, yeast infections and gonorrhea.

"We're trying to cut down on the waiting time for routine pap exams," Kemp said. "And at the same time, it will be a little more efficient."

Kelly Kuipers, a senior in public relations from Danforth, said she sometimes is unable to have her routine exam within the 12-month time frame because of the long wait for an appointment at Health Services.

of each incident reported to their security department. The names of persons charged or cited must be included as well.

The bill also states that campus disciplinary proceedings and records that involve criminal allegations are required to be open and accessible to the public. It specifies that allegation reports are not education records and therefore are not confidential under federal law.

At SIUC, University News Service disseminates information it receives from University Police. Also, student judicial hearings are closed to the public.

Terry Huffman, Student Judicial Affairs coordinator, refused to comment about the ramifications of the bill.

The last portion of the bill includes minimum sanctions for colleges and universities that do not comply with the aforementioned laws. The minimum sanction would be 1 percent of the school's federal funds.

In a letter sent to congressmen and congresswomen of the Illinois Congressional Delegation, SIU President Ted Sanders details the reasoning behind the school's position on ACCRA.

The letter states that requiring all educators and counselors of the institution to report statistics of criminal offenses is inappropriate because they lack the training and experience to determine how these crimes are "defined and codified." It also explains that judicial hearings should not be made public.

"Both of these elements of HR715 (the bill number) will result in students, particularly women who have been victims of sexual abuse or assault, deciding that it is not 'safe' to talk with anyone, even a counselor, about what happened. Women will certainly be inclined to not file charges under a school's conduct code for fear of the incident becoming a public matter. Such a campus climate will undermine campus safety and security."

The letter also states that reporting every alcohol violation and crime occurring on property owned or controlled by the school to

With the new changes, Kuipers will not worry as much about making future appointments.

"I usually wait until the last minute to make an appointment, and I couldn't get in for about a month," Kuipers said. "It was just a big hassle. Now it doesn't worry me as much because I know I can procrastinate."

However, Kuipers said there may be conflicts with some women who are busy during the designated times.

their boundaries.

Jakobson said universities have ulterior motives in opposing the bill.

"We see colleges and universities that don't want to hurt their image," Jakobson said. "They want to keep their enrollment up and keep their fundraising up and maintain this pristine environment."

"This pristine environment may not really be there. It's not fair."

She said universities across the country, knowingly, are misleading their customers by and defiance of federal laws," she said.

Jakobson said the new bill will pressure institutions of higher learning into providing accurate information because administrative activity will be carefully scrutinized and legal loopholes that are exploited currently will be closed.

Jakobson said the most important aspect of the issue is that potential university customers understand what the campus is "really like."

"They have the right to know if somebody's running around with semi-automatic weapons holding people up," she said. "Cheating on your finals, not the same as building bombs in your dorm room."

"ACCRA will take away the little games they (administrators) have been playing."

Samuel Jordan, director of SIUC public safety, said the University consistently has been forthright with all of its crime information. He said critics of university crime policies are too general and lack sufficient foundation.

"It's not fair to make these blanket statements," Jordan said. "Not all universities do that."

"We have been as accurate as we can possibly be."

He said that misleading University customers is harmful to the school and is counterproductive in terms of enrollment and image.

"It doesn't do anything but create distrust," he said. "I don't need to be lying about the things that are going on."

"It all boils down to honesty and integrity: There are those who don't play fairly and play games that ruin the process for the rest of us."

They have the right to know if somebody's running around with semi-automatic weapons holding people up.

MARGARET JAKOBSON
CHIEF ADVOCATE, EQUAL RIGHTS ALLIANCE

the U.S. Department of Education is "burdensome and should not be of interest to the federal government."

"HR715 presumes that we are in the business of law enforcement rather than education. We are educators concerned about the conduct of students within our academic community. We are not in the law enforcement business. This legislation would drastically alter our mission and purpose."

Jakobson disagrees with these statements and said universities must be held accountable for reporting the crimes committed within providing inaccurate crime statistics in their annual reports.

Jakobson provided several examples of these activities. Five schools have been reported to the U.S. Department of Education for purposely altering their crime data. They include Morehead State University, Clemson University, Miami of Ohio, Virginia Tech and University of Pennsylvania.

All of these schools have been found in violation of the 1990 Campus Security Act.

he said. "Thirteen years ago, people said, 'Coach you can't do the job. It can't be done.' Well, I did it. But there is no way you can stay up every year."

Herrin said one reason the team finished 11-18 in 1996 and 13-17 in 1997 was the absence of forward Chris Carr.

"We would have only had one losing season (last season) if Carr was still with us in 1996," Herrin said. "Replacing a guy like that is difficult."

Because his future is uncertain, Herrin said recruiting will be difficult, but the current players have been understanding of the situation.

"It is going to be tough," he said. "The players are very supportive. I have a good relationship with the players."

Senior guard Shane Hawkins said he has a great deal of respect for Herrin and hopes Herrin is able to be successful next season.

"First of all, it puts more pressure on everyone involved," Hawkins said.

...there is no way you can stay up every year.

RICH HERRIN
SIUC MEN'S BASKETBALL COACH

"You don't want to see a guy lose his job."

Hawkins said playing under Herrin has been rewarding the last three years.

"Any time you get a chance to play under someone who is so successful, it is an honor," Hawkins said. "He has accomplished so much in his career, not just in college but also coaching in high school. As someone who wants to get into coaching, I cherish the opportunity."

Herrin's high school and college coaching record is 827-349. He is second on the all-time win list at SIUC with a record of 211-159.

Herrin also has three NCAA appearances and four National Invitational Tournament berths.

While Herrin awaits the coming season, he said he is not losing any sleep over the matter.

"I feel good about the situation, and I am not even down mentally," Herrin said. "I am going to do the best I can with the basketball team. Most of the players know the situation, and they want to have success."

A kinder, gentler Ditka coaches Saints

MELLOWED OUT: Ditka changed man since berating Jim Harbaugh on TV in 1992.

THE BALTIMORE SUN

LA CROSSE, Wis.—The reincarnation of Mike Ditka, living legend and former Chicago Bears coach, continues without incident in this sleepy Wisconsin border town hard by the Mississippi River.

Five days into his first training camp with the New Orleans Saints, there have been no tirades, no threats and little turbulence other than what two-a-day practices normally bring.

Five years after he last coached in the NFL, Ditka is back on the sidelines again, running the woebegone Saints in a manner not at all reminiscent of his fiery final days with the Bears in 1992.

This is a kinder, gentler version of the man they call Iron Mike. Even when Ditka got the first tell-tale glimpse of his new team in contact drills Tuesday against the Minnesota Vikings — and the Saints were an eyesore — he was gracious.

"We get better at something every day," he said. "Every once in a while, we revert to do something kind of silly. That happens with a young, inexperienced team with a new coach."

"But nobody is jumping down anybody's throat. Nobody's doing any browbeating of anybody. It's a matter of, if they do something wrong, we correct them and go on about our business."

Ditka won 112 games, six division titles and one Super Bowl in 11 years as coach of the Bears. Yet, one of the enduring images of that time came in Minnesota in 1992, when he lost his composure and chewed out quarterback Jim Harbaugh on national television as the Bears coughed up a 20-7 lead.

By the end of his reign in Chicago, Ditka was feuding with just about everyone — his players, the media and fans who criticized him on his radio show.

It was that volatile exit, Saints President Bill Kuharich said, that possibly kept Ditka from getting another coaching job until now. Ditka says he's mellowed since then; Kuharich isn't sure.

"I don't know if mellowed is the right word," Kuharich said. "His being away from the game helped him. (But) he hasn't changed. I just don't think he'll go off like he did on Harbaugh in Minnesota. But he's not going to be (a stoic like former Vikings coach) Bud Grant, either."

Kuharich knew what he was getting when he hired Ditka last January to turn around the 3-13 Saints: A proven winner, a motivator, a dominant personality. Even though Kuharich is the youngest team president and general manager in the NFL at age 44, he had no reservations about Ditka's background or age (57).

"He was the right guy for this team," Kuharich said. "It was his track record, his credentials, his ability to motivate."

"This guy is an icon. I'm a 44-year-old general manager in his first year in control of an organization in the NFL. This guy went to the Super Bowl as a player, an assistant coach and a head coach."

"If you're a young general manager, you can't train a young coach. If I was 20 years in the business, like (the San Diego Chargers') Bobby Beathard, I might go for a Kevin Gilbride or a Vic Fangio. But I need to have that experience factor (as coach)."

Kuharich may be Ditka's boss, but the Ditka imprint can be seen throughout the team and its roster. As he did in the early days in Chicago, he is willing to play with young, unproven players. That's in sharp contrast to Jim Mora's coaching era in New Orleans, when veterans were preferred.

Spano charged personal expenses to Islanders

FRAUDULENT: Former owner of New York Islanders billed team for hotels, jets.

NEWSDAY

UNIONDALE, N.Y.—In his brief stint as owner of the New York Islanders, John A. Spano billed the hockey team for $200,000 to $250,000 worth of meals, hotel rooms, chartered jets and other expenses, sources with knowledge of the federal investigation into the Dallas businessman said Tuesday.

National Hockey League sources said Spano once even called the club's general counsel, Bill Skehan, and his chief financial officer, Art McCarthy, in from a golf course to send him money for unspecified expenses.

Sources said the charges are a key part of the federal fraud case against Spano, who remained at large Tuesday but was supposed to turn himself in on Long Island Wednesday and attend an arraignment in Uniondale Wednesday afternoon, according to his attorney, who said Spano would plead not guilty to all charges.

Many of the bills were undocumented, meaning the team officials don't know exactly what he spent the money on, sources said. But some of the bills were charges rung up on the Islanders' account at the Garden City Hotel, whose expensive rooms and restaurants Spano used when he made his frequent trips in New York from Dallas during his three-month stint as owner.

Spano left the sandy beaches and tropical breeze of his $390-a-night Cayman Islands resort Tuesday, flying on commercial flights to Miami. Sources said he then flew on to Dallas. Cayman immigration officials said he flew on a commercial airliner, instead of his usual practice of coming and going on a private jet.

In fact, league sources said, some private-jet trips in April, May and June were paid for by the Islanders. The sources said the team sent Spano to the Caymans because he said he had money there to pay former and present owner John O. Pickett the $16.8 million he owed him for the cable-TV rights to the team — money he never came up with.

Postal inspectors and local police visited his house and office in Dallas Monday in an attempt to serve warrants charging that he obtained and ran the hockey club by fraud.

"Immediately upon learning of the charges, he made arrangements to return," said Nicholas Gravante Jr., Spano's criminal lawyer, who adding that an arraignment was scheduled for Wednesday afternoon. "I'm not giving out the specifics of his travel plans, but he's in the process of returning."

A clerk at the resort where Spano had been staying confirmed that he left Tuesday for an early morning flight. Workers at the complex said he had been renting a place and that he had a couple with him, who also had left. The three-bedroom, three-bath condos on Seven Mile Beach oceanfront has a going rate is $390 per night. They sell for about $1 million, according to resort employees.

Peggy Long, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, declined to comment on their investigation into Spano's dealings. But the U.S. magistrate's office in Uniondale confirmed that an arraignment is scheduled for Wednesday, although the subject was under seal.

Spano relinquished ownership of the Islanders on July 11 after failing on several occasions to come up with the $16.8 million payment to Pickett, the first of five payments he owed for the cable-TV part of the deal. He obtained an $80 million loan from Fleet Bank to purchase the team and was to pay $85 million over several years for the cable part of the package.

Tuesday, representatives of Pickett, the NHL and Fleet Bank of Boston met in an attempt to iron out terms for restructuring the $80 million Fleet loan, and they "reached a conceptual agreement on the terms of the loan," according to sources.

Spano agreed to walk away from team ownership in exchange for Pickett agreeing to assume the loan pending some negotiations on restructuring.

Gagliano ready to kick it in NFL

HANG TIME: Former Saluki punter competing against All-Pro Gardocki for lone punter's spot on Colts roster.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Former Saluki punter Mark Gagliano's experiences at the Indianapolis Colts preseason training camp can be compared to winning a sweepstakes.

"I feel like I just won a trip to somewhere because I'm around all these star football players," Gagliano said.

Gagliano, who played for SIUC from 1993-96, signed a contract with the Colts in late April to guarantee him a spot on the 80-man training camp roster.

The Colts will cut down the number of players to 53 after their final preseason game Aug. 22.

The National Football League, which has 30 teams, allows each team to keep only one punter on the regular season roster.

"The biggest difficulty is that there are only 30 people doing what I am doing," Gagliano said. "There is no such thing as a backup punter."

Gagliano, who is competing against Pro Bowl punter Chris Gardocki for a roster spot, said his future in the NFL will be known shortly.

"I really feel like I will know in the next three weeks," he said. "I'm living day by day and taking it practice by practice. Working with Chris has been awesome. He really has been helping me with my skills."

"Everybody in the organization has been really cool. There hasn't been any nasty competition."

Joe Gagliano, Mark's father, said he will be happy with his son regardless of the outcome.

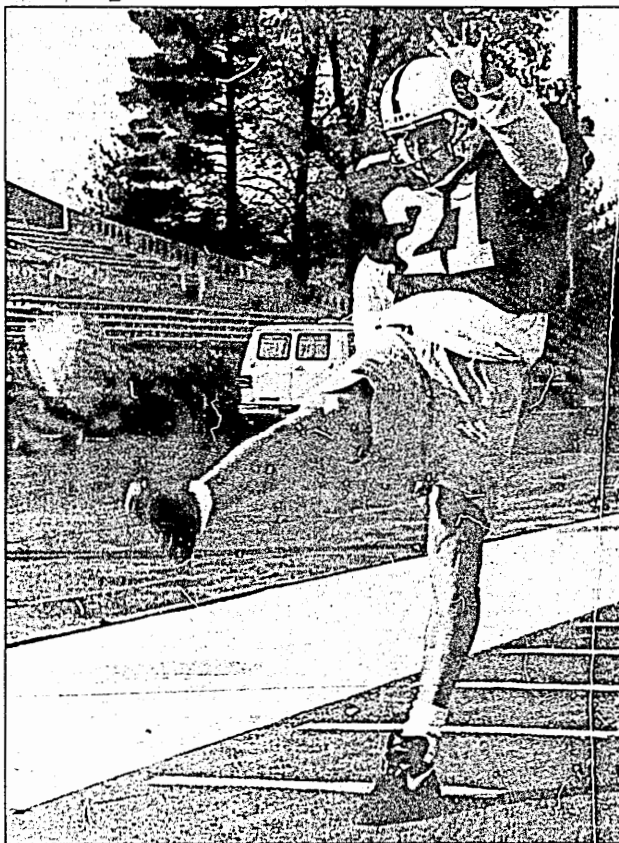

"For a rookie to beat out an All-Pro is just about impossible," Joe said. "I told him to do what he has to do, the best he can do."

While at SIUC, Mark became the first Saluki to be named Division I-AA All-American since Terry Taylor and Donnell Daniels in 1983. For his career, Gagliano accumulated 10,776 yards on 264 punts, and as a senior averaged a nation-best 45 yards per punt.

Since the end of his collegiate career, Gagliano has devoted all of his time to pursuing an NFL career.

"I've been working hard since last January," he said. "I've spent the last seven or eight months totally focusing on football."

While trying to adjust to the professional ranks, Gagliano said he has learned that the NFL is more than just head-to-head physical competition. Punters spend the entire day conditioning, weight training and improving on the hang time of their kicks.

The typical day at training camp goes from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

The day begins with wake up at 7 a.m., and practice starts at 9 a.m. and lasts until noon.

The afternoon session begins at 3 p.m. and runs until 5 p.m. During the afternoon, the players do weight training and conditioning.

At 8 p.m. there is a team meeting. "I don't feel it (NFL) is as demanding on your body as in college," Mark said. "It's five times harder on your mind."

He said because the days are so long, and the coaches' expectations of perfection are so high, camp is hard to endure.

But the camp is a good opportunity to gain experience, and Gagliano will be satisfied with leaving an everlasting impression on the coaches.

"My goal is to impress the coaching staff," he said. "I want the coaches to scratch their heads and think about their decision."

If Gagliano does not make the roster, he will be put on waivers and have several opportunities to join other teams.

"If I don't make it, I'm going to continue working on football," he said. "After working with Chris (Gardocki), I'll be able to come back and make strides next year or the middle of the season."

Joe Gagliano said he expects his son to make it at the next level, but it is going to take some time.

"Personally I don't think he'll have a problem making the league," Joe said. "He's just going to have to let the chips fall."

Declining crowds spark contract talks

ONE MORE-YEAR: Herrin surprised contract reworking was taking place.

TRAVIS AKIN
DE SPORTS EDITOR

The concern for a declining attendance at SIUC men's basketball games and two losing seasons has prompted the University to begin reworking head coach Rich Herrin's contract. SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs said he began to discuss the matter last spring with Athletic Director Jim Hart, and they decided to give Herrin one year to change the program.

"To me, this is an opportunity to turn this program around," Beggs said. "We need to look where this program is going."

But Herrin said he was not aware the discussions were taking place.

"I was really surprised, and I only found out when Chancellor Beggs told me," Herrin said. "Hart never even talked to me, and then he released that release."

Hart released a press release Tuesday afternoon that stated Herrin's current contract no longer will be renewed.

Hart is out of town and could not be reached for comment.

Herrin said he has brought in the money, graduated players and built a large fan base.

"When I came to the University, there were only century club seats (lower level seats directly behind the sidelines) on the east side of the building," he said. "We opened up the west side for century club and almost filled them up. I have promoted and sold tickets. I am a public relations man."

Before Herrin was hired 13 years ago, the most money in ticket sales during a season was in 1979, when the ticket office took in $113,306.

Herrin's first year produced more than $138,000 in ticket sales and has gone up since then. The most money generated was in the 1995 season in which more than $530,000 in ticket sales was generated.

Ticket sales have dropped by about $150,000 during the last two years, but Herrin said the sales are not too bad considering that the team has two losing seasons and still generates more money than any other SIUC sporting events.

Beggs said the University wants to look at the program as a whole. He said money is a factor, but there are no specific criteria for the evaluation of Herrin's performance next season.

"We are not going to be specifically tied down to X records and Y attendance," Beggs said.

But the decision was not an easy one to make.

"I think a great deal of coach Herrin," Beggs said. "This is a hard thing for me to do."

Herrin said he had hoped to have a contract that would allow him to end his career at SIUC.

"I feel very good about what I have done."
