New war spurs home defense debate

Merged government is key, speaker says

WILLIAM ALONSO
DAILY EGYPTIAN

When it comes to homeland defense, Elaine Kamarck recommends incorporating numerous government agencies into one entity.

Kamarck, a faculty member of the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University, spoke about the challenge of homeland defense in the 21st century as part of the Morton-Kenney Lecture Series Thursday evening.

"What we have learned is that after a tragedy the government works pretty well together. We have seen it in a variety of natural disasters, and we have seen it in New York the last month," Kamarck said.

"The greater problem in thinking about homeland defense is the prevention problem."

Kamarck served as senior policy advisor to former Vice President Al Gore before joining Harvard University. She worked directly with Gore to create the National Performance Review designed to reinvent government.

For the prevention of future terrorist acts, Kamarck recommends combining the Consular's Office, which assigns visas for entry into the United States, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, FBI, Coast Guard, Customs Agency, the CIA and the security aspect of the Federal Aviation Administration into the Department of Homeland Defense. The DHD was created by President George Bush shortly after Sept. 11 and is coordinated by Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge.

"We need to move these agencies into a mode of prevention,"

Kamarck said. "The United States is not set up to deal with the problems of the 21st century."

The new threats of the 21st century are the non-state terrorist organizations such as the al Qaeda organization. According to Kamarck, to understand the nature of these threats one needs to look at the Gulf War.

Halloween future still a mystery

JENNIFER WIG
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Despite lingering thoughts of last year's Halloween havoc, the announcement of no fall break next year does not seem to be striking fear in the hearts of University and city officials, much less students.

Chancellor Walter Wendler announced Oct. 9 that SIUC will not take a fall break next year. This year's break, the longest one yet, lasts for one week.

But city officials say they will not decide what to do about next year until after this year's break is complete.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said they will wait until November or December to put the item on the agenda.

"We'll see how things go this year and evaluate it from there," Doherty said.

The bars along the Strip will be closed during the weekend before and the day of Halloween. Unless changed, the code will also be in effect next year, regardless of SIUC's fall calendar.

Doherty said he has faith in the students, but understands there are some who will cause problems.

"That number has gotten smaller than in the past," he said. "I think people are responding to what we're trying to do and are cooperating."

Wendler said he made the decision now because he wants people to think about and understand what no fall break will mean for SIUC and Carbondale.

He expects this year to be calm because of the school vacation and the zero tolerance attitude Carbondale police officers have donned working along the Strip.

"[They] immediately act on situations that are unlawful," Wendler said. "That's part of the problem with Halloween is that there's uncertainty on what was lawful and what wasn't."

Wendler said it is time to rectify the confusion.

"All of us, by and large, obey the law. If the laws are there and they're clear ... nearly all of us accept that," he said.

Wendler also said shifting the attention from Halloween to more important things will improve the University's image.

"As SIUC continues to focus on academic excellence, our reputation is going to get better and better," he said.

SIUC President James Walker was not available for comment.

Chancellor Walter Wendler (right) discusses the newly proposed traffic safety measures with Glen Poshard, vice chancellor of administration, just before a press conference Friday morning. Wendler expressed his concerns for the safety of bicyclists, pedestrians, and motorists on the increasingly populated SIUC campus.

Campus speed limit may drop to 20 mph

Coleman death urges Wendler to improve safety at SIUC

BRETT NAUMAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Chancellor Walter Wendler announced a series of campus traffic changes Friday in response to recent accidents occurring in University crosswalks.

There have been two serious accidents on campus in less than a month. To combat this, Wendler said he will recommend the lowering of the campus speed limit from 25 mph to 20 mph, increasing SIUC Police patrols, repainting some crosswalks and putting up warning signs for pedestrians entering them.

Wendler said he decided to make the changes, which are the second part of his four-phase plan to improve safety at SIUC, after the death of SIUC student Anne Coleman on Sept. 21. Coleman, a senior in dental hygiene, was killed while riding her bicycle through a crosswalk.

The traffic implementations were delivered with an exclamation point after Wednesday's crosswalk collision, which seriously injured SIUC student Lori Thornton. Thornton, a sophomore in cinema and photography, was struck as she was walking through a crosswalk.

Thornton was released from Memorial Hospital of Carbondale Thursday after being treated for a fractured collar bone, a fractured skull and a blood clot, her mother said at the press conference. Thornton, from Lockport, will have to miss at least this week of school and will require 24-hour supervision for the next two weeks because of her injuries.

Wendler assured Thornton's mother after the conference that her daughter's down-time will not affect her academics.

"I know the faculty will be responsive to this as they would with any medical emergency," Wendler said.

In the meantime, students will be experiencing the traffic changes immediately. Wendler said the SIUC Police will be issuing written warnings to drivers and pedestrians who don't comply with the rules. Fines will be assessed beginning Nov. 12. Wendler said the changes aren't merely a measure to police students but an attempt to reduce the risk of injury to pedestrians.

"I would urge anyone, whether they're on foot or on a bicycle, while they have the right of way in crosswalk areas, just make sure, try to make eye contact with a motorist, just exercise extra care," Wendler said.

In addition to the actual changes, Wendler said attempts to educate students about campus traffic rules will be made. Students seeking to purchase vehicle and bicycle stickers will now be educated about the rules and a 15-minute video will be shown about traffic safety.

A shuttle service will also be established, as requested by Undergraduate Student Government, to take students who are forced to park far from campus to their classes. Wendler will also request the city of Carbondale reduce the speed limit on Grand Avenue from 30 mph to 25 mph, because of the high student traffic in front of the Recreation Center.

It is up to the people whether the new changes reduce injuries to students at SIUC. Wendler said he knows it is tempting to speed because of the open roads on campus. Wendler said that most of the accidents that occur aren't necessarily because of "bad drivers" but usually drivers who are "momentarily distracted."

"Every once in a while, I see a fool going over the limit," Wendler said. "The people want to be careful with large."

Powell says: war may end by winter

The U.S. campaign against Afghanistan should be wrapped up by the onset of winter, Secretary of State Colin Powell said Sunday.

In an interview with CNN's "Late Edition," Powell said winter conditions would place constraints on U.S. operations. He also said that any decision on whether to continue the campaign during the Muslim holy month of Ramadan would be based on military, not diplomatic, reasons. Ramadan begins Nov. 17.

But Vice President Dick Cheney said Sunday that the war on terrorism that began Oct. 7 "may never end. At least, not in our lifetimes." Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, agreed with Cheney, saying the anti-terrorism effort may take years, or even decades.

U.S. strikes on Afghanistan continued Sunday, as air raids were reported in Herat and the Oruzgan province in central Afghanistan. Air strikes were also reported in the northern provinces of Samangan and Takhar.

Washington D.C. post offices closed for testing

WASHINGTON — Two mail facilities in the Washington D.C. area are being closed by health officials after an area postal worker was diagnosed with anthrax.

The infected worker moved between both facilities, the Washington Health Department said, and more than 2,000 employees from both buildings will be given a 10-day supply of the Cipro antibiotic as a precautionary measure. Further testing may send workers through the entire 60-day treatment for anthrax exposure.

U.S. attack hits Taliban's front lines

BAGRAM AIR BASE, Afghanistan — U.S. attack planes struck the ruling Taliban's front lines in northern Afghanistan Sunday, in apparent coordination with the opposition Northern Alliance.

Two F/A-18s began strikes against Taliban forces just north of Kabul about 7:45 a.m. EDT. The planes made a total of four passes, striking together and separately, before flying off after about 45 minutes. Taliban troops responded with rofles of anti-aircraft fire.

U.S. forces began targeting Taliban forces in the area last week, after Northern Alliance commanders complained that the U.S.-led strikes have not focused enough on front line positions.

U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld confirmed that the United States had given the Northern Alliance food, ammunition, supplies and even money. Northern Alliance officials said 20 U.S. troops were cooperating with their forces in what a U.S. official in Washington told CNN was a "liaison" mission with the opposition.

Japanese give Bush a gift

SHANGHAI, China — Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi presented U.S. President George Bush with a bow and arrows Saturday, a gift he said is a symbolic weapon in the U.S. fight against terrorism.

One of the arrows was contained in a wooden box that had been hand-painted with calligraphy by the Japanese leader. Koizumi's inscription read "To defeat evil and bring peace on earth."

In return, Bush gave Koizumi, an avid baseball fan, a glove signed by Baltimore Orioles third baseman Cal Ripken.

The gifts were exchanged in the midst of the leader's meeting of the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation group. Bush has been doing the rounds at the leader's summit, soliciting support from APEC's 21 members.

He praised Koizumi for supporting the military campaign in Afghanistan, and Koizumi complimented Bush's "strong leadership to fight terrorism."

More Palestinians killed in West Bank violence

JERUSALEM — Four Palestinians were killed in the West Bank Sunday amid occupation of Israeli troops, the Palestine Red Crescent Society said.

Those dead include a girl who was picking olives in a field and a man in Beit Jala, near Bethlehem. The group said Israeli gunfire is what killed the girl.

Earlier in the day, two Palestinians, including one police officer, were killed in a refugee camp near Bethlehem after exchanging fire with Israeli troops.

Women's march gets attention

'Take Back the Night' fosters collective healing

JANE HUH
DAILY EGYPTIAN

A stretch of glowing candles and rhythmic chants of protest stirred the night's stillness.

Supporters of "Take Back the Night" made their message heard on the streets of Carbondale Friday, as they set off the march from the Interfaith Center and arrived at the Town Square Pavilion 30 minutes later.

The annual march and rally culminated the week-long series in celebrating Women's Safety Week that began on Monday.

Women of all ages and diverse backgrounds united to take a firm stand against domestic and sexual violence.

"I'm here in support of women's rights. I'm really proud of this outreach program and amazed at the turnout," said Denise Harris, a sophomore in sociology.

At the same time, Harris is one of many at the march who was personally compelled to be a part of the march.

"My mother was raped when she was a child and I'm motivated by how she has overcome," Harris said. "Women aren't gonna stand for it anymore. Hopefully, others will witness this."

Even though the disproportionate female attendance outnumbered the men, those who attended shared the same feelings as the women.

Jac DeSoto, a senior in fashion design, marched on behalf of his ex-fiancee who was raped two years ago. DeSoto said the assault left her with long-lasting psychological scars.

"She had a hard time trusting anyone in general, but men especially," DeSoto said. "Not all men are violent. It's men who abuse it too."

Polly Poskin, executive director of the Illinois Coalition Against Sexual Assault, recognizes the toll such an act has on a person.

"Rape becomes a reference point in a woman's life forever," she said.

Poskin added that victims "do heal" and that their "strength and courage does not mean they're separated from the reality" of what happened.

At the rally, the same T-shirts displayed at Faner Breezeway last Thursday encircled the pavilion, giving people an opportunity to observe the firsthand accounts of violence. Piercing words and images on the shirts told the story of victims and survivors.

Kelly Cichy, executive director at the Women's Center in Carbondale, talked about recent progress in the legal realm, which included the state's passing of the Emergency Contraception Bill as of last year. This bill requires hospitals to inform rape victims about the availability of

Costello stresses calm to Carbondale residents

Details House-plan for displaced workers and airline security

MOLLY PARKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

U.S. Rep. Jerry Costello said it is highly unlikely that the people of Carbondale will be targeted with anthrax and stressed 'live your lives' to the people of his district. He was home Thursday after the House shutdown for an environmental sweep.

Congressional leaders ordered the unprecedented shutdown of the House after 31 people tested positive for anthrax in Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle's office. Costello said they did what they felt had to be done despite some criticism that the shutdown was a knee-jerk reaction.

Members of the House were sent home at the end of the day Wednesday so the Congressional halls could undergo a complete environmental assessment.

Costello said the anthrax scare made workers in his office a little jittery. "Frankly, my staff members got very concerned about their possibility of being exposed to anthrax," Costello said.

Traces of anthrax were also found on the House side of Capitol Hill on Wednesday. It was found in an office a few blocks from the capitol on a bundling machine used to process mail for lawmakers, according to The Associated Press. The anthrax was confirmed on Saturday.

All the cases of anthrax seem to be aimed at high profile politicians and media spokesman, Costello said. One person has died from exposure, seven have been sickened, and thousands have undergone preventive treatment.

The House is expected to be out of session until at least Tuesday.

Displaced Workers

Costello said displaced airline workers and others that lost jobs because of the slowing economy may soon receive help from congress.

Although the House and Senate already pushed through a $15 billion bailout plan for the airlines shortly after the Sept. 11 attacks, nothing has been done for those that were left jobless.

Costello, who was one of only a handful of representatives that voted against the bailout plan, said he voted no because the package did not include money for those who were left unemployed.

"It's not good enough just to bail out the aviation industry," he said.

At the time the airline package left the House, Costello was told they would do something for the workers the next week.

"That was four weeks ago," he said.

The stimulus package would provide funds for improving infrastructure. Federal

Anthrax brings fear to Americans

GINNY SKALSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The publicity of anthrax cases reported in the United States has skyrocketed in the past few weeks, instilling a sense of fear in many Americans who wonder if they will contract the disease next.

But anthrax is not a new disease suddenly finding its way into the United States. According to the Journal of the American Medical Association, 242 cases of anthrax have been reported in the United States prior to the most recent cases.

There are three types of anthrax: cutaneous, gastrointestinal and inhalation, which is the most deadly. The AMA has recorded 224 cases of the cutaneous form from 1944 to 1994, 18 cases of inhalation anthrax from 1900 to 1978 and gastrointestinal anthrax is uncommonly reported.

Because seven years have lapsed since the last case of anthrax was reported in the United States, the recent cases have been magnified by the media. One person has died, three people have been diagnosed with inhalation anthrax, seven people have developed the cutaneous form, which affects skin tissue, and 31 have tested positive to exposure to anthrax but have not contracted the disease, according to ABC News.

Although cases of anthrax are continuing to be reported, the disease remains a mystery to many people. One of the most common myths is that the disease is always fatal, but if caught early enough, the cutaneous form can be treated. The inhalation form of anthrax has a mortality rate of 80 to 90 percent but can be treated if discovered

Wendler right to deep-six fall break

SIUC Chancellor Walter Wendler surprised some with his rebuttal to the touchy Halloween situation; this year's fall break would be our last.

However, it is our view that the proper decision was made.

The legendary and infamous Halloween revelry has served Carbondale and SIU with an image that's less than spectacular. The ghosts of Halloween past still loom in many people's minds. The riots in 1994 and 1996 were both shocking and appalling. And when the Carbondale City Council voted to reopen bars on the Strip in 2000, the results (damage to buildings and more than 150 people arrested) confirmed that party-goers could not be trusted to remain civil.

Now, with the bars on the Strip indefinitely closed during Halloween, revoking the fall break of classes that was implemented in 1990 is the next logical step.

Wendler was right in making the statement that our learning should not be suspended because of Carbondale's most egregious tradition.

We would much rather prefer a longer Thanksgiving break to spend time with our families, then the fall break that bows to the Halloween problem instead of facing it head-on.

Although it's a complete turnabout to past administration's solutions to the problem, the canceling of fall break at the very least returns the University to normalcy. Most other major universities do not have a break over Halloween, and while it's nice to have a brief intermission in the middle of our ever stressful autumn studies, the break serves as a constant reminder of our party school image.

In April 2000, interim Chancellor John Jackson recommended the elimination of fall break, saying the break served its purpose and was no longer needed. Now, Chancellor Wendler will make that recommendation a reality and begin the process of change and healing that is necessary for SIU to beat back the ghosts of Halloween's past.

Anthrax is not a laughing matter

My 17-year-old niece is bored. That's bad. A bored teenager is a dangerous thing. Almost worse than a cornered animal.

She has things she could be doing — we own enough video tapes to start our own video rental store — but her boredom centers around the fact we declined an opportunity to have the flavor-of-the-month boyfriend over for the afternoon. So she's helping us regret our rash decision. I suppose it could be worse.

A bored teenager in Palm Coast, Fla., sprinkled a powdered headache remedy on his teacher's desk, hoping it would be mistaken for anthrax and cancel classes. It was and it did. It also garnered him a three-day suspension that could turn into an expulsion, along with a felony arrest. He could find himself stuck with a $10,000 fine and up to 15 years in prison for "planting a hoax of a destructive device."

Two young boys in Sacramento decided to play a prank on their mom by filling an envelope with white powder and leaving it in the house for their mother to find. She did, and apparently added it to the outgoing mail.

Tales from Oz

BY DAVID OSBORNE

oszy@talesfromoz.com

Lacking postage or a delivery address, it ended up on a desk in a mail facility in Citrus Heights, Calif., where it leaked some of the powder.

Unfortunately for the boys, it DID have the correct return address, and police showed up at their door to see if the family was the target of an anthrax hoax.

Where do kids get these ideas? What makes them think this is a joke?

Apparently, we do.

Adults in this country are mailing fake anthrax to each other quite a bit these days.

A New Jersey man was arrested after mailing an envelope of Parmesan cheese to a friend. A television news editor in Seattle crushed up some Lifesavers and left them in an envelope in the newsroom as a joke. A Connecticut man stood by and watched as the state building where he worked was evacuated over an anthrax scare even though he knew it was a hoax. He ended up in federal court and faces five years in prison and $3 million in fines for his little joke.

These jokes are costly, and hardly as funny as they might seem. The $3 million fine the Connecticut prankster faces is based on the $1.5 million it cost the state when the building was evacuated and shutdown.

Anthrax fear is a very real thing in this country. People are scared to death.

A doughnut shop in Florida has quit selling powdered-sugar covered doughnuts because people are afraid to eat them.

Northwest Airlines no longer stocks powdered coffee creamer and sweeteners on their flights due to the anthrax fears associated with white powder. A woman in Douglas County, Kan., called the local sheriff thinking anthrax was dropped on her car from an airplane when she noticed white splotches on the hood. It turned out to be bird poop.

It isn't funny. OK, that last one is a little funny. But the jokes and the scares are furthering the terrorists' aims, and they have to be laughing their butts off as we help them out trying to amuse ourselves.

The building evacuation in Connecticut cost $40,000 in decontamination efforts in addition to the money lost with the building closed. Police, fire and emergency service departments around the country are spending thousands of needless man-hours as they investigate each little "joke." The time tied up with practical jokes takes them away from more pressing, real-life emergencies. It also helps to increase the hysteria that leads to the banning of powdered-sugar covered doughnuts.

Damn, and I really like them things, too.

The courage to speak, the courage to listen

The breezeway outside Phaner Hall was lined with pain, hope, courage and triumph Thursday. T-shirts decorated by and for sexual assault and domestic violence victims made up the Clothesline project, a mixture of art and healing that helps create awareness of women's safety issues.

Like people, each shirt has its own unique personality and emotions. Some are angry and regretful, others are simply sad. Some serve as memorials to those who have lost their lives to abuse. They tell startling and disturbing stories of shame and violation. One shirt carries a message to God asking for the victim's father's hands, penis and heart be cut off. Another was written to a brother, recounting abuse he inflicted on the victim when he was 14 and she was six. The simple message "I survived," followed by a date was scrawled across one shirt.

Guest Column

BY ANNE MARIE TAVELLA

annemarie@hotmail.com

One of the most moving and devastating shirts I saw was one that said "I was a victim of incest and child abuse." The message was written on a shirt that would have fit a small child.

As I walked through the breezeway I found I was reading each shirt with a morbid curiosity. The messages were so personal and blatant that my initial urge was to look away, but like driving by an accident, I couldn't help but look. As I examined the shirts I kept walking, albeit slowly, something about stopping and gawking at these tokens of abuse seemed wrong. That is, until I reached a shirt that made my heart beat in my throat. The message said something like, "when you raped me these weren't the only thing you tore." Attached to the shirt was a pair of flowered underpants, ripped and stained.

As I stood there immobilized by this sight, it occurred to me why I had not wanted to look before. It was not out of respect for the victims. It was because of how I had been raised to think about sex, abuse, incest and assault. In this country we are socialized not to talk about these things. We are taught they are dirty, shameful, and that it's often the victim's fault anyway. We do not like to think about the little girls and women who live in fear of the sun going down. It makes our happy safe worlds darker.

I want to thank all those who contributed to Women's Safety Week and those who bared their stories in an attempt to increase awareness on this campus. Change cannot happen without first acknowledging there is a problem.

And so, as I stood there staring at those little blue flowers stained with brown, I realized that if this woman was brave enough and not ashamed to display such a private article of clothing that represented so much pain, then I should have the courage to look at it.

DEAR EDITOR:

I feel compelled to respond to the op-ed piece on "The real injustice" of Miss Black Ebony" in the Oct. 16 issue of the DAILY EGYPTIAN. I found the author's attempt at black vernacular deeply offensive and his comments a striking example of the neo-racism that pervades white America today. Millions of white Americans would not dream of dragging a black man by the tailgate of their car as a James Byrd, but are quick to censure that African-Americans no longer face prejudice in today's world. These good citizens will gladly assert that the bulk of black America's problems derive from their own lack of good old-fashioned values such as hard work and moral consistency. They staunchly affirm that if black people would stop yelling "victim" and demanding preferential treatment America would be a much better place. Many European-Americans complain about black fraternities and social groups, saying "why can't they be color blind?" They earnestly state that blacks are the racists now, not themselves.

Space does not permit me to detail the myriad of ways that African-Americans still face racism in these United States, but I can not remain silent when a college student who should be trying to expand his understanding of other cultures feels compelled to wrap his myopic views in the rhetoric of reverse racism. African-American fraternities, sororities, social and professional organizations do not restrict their membership to blacks. The true issue is that most white Americans would be exceptionally uncomfortable in any arena where European cultural and values are not predominant. Most are unnerved by the fact that people of color do not want to fully assimilate and accept European standards as the only manifestation of normalcy. Any woman of any color is eligible to try out for the Miss Ebony pageant, but how many All-American blond hair, blue-eyed girls would be willing to give up the privilege of "whiteness" and be judged on afro-centric standards of beauty?

Miss Ebony does not promote racial separatism

DEAR EDITOR:

I usually pay no attention to the gross ignorance that I read in the DAILY EGYPTIAN when it comes time for students to vent their hostilities and share their opinions in letters to the editor. On a normal day, I can even be slightly amused and tickled by the exact notions of my colleague, this is no such day. I read a letter to the editor in which a student called the Miss Ebony pageant a "gross injustice," based on his belief that it promotes racial separatism. A lack of knowledge could easily lead one to this conclusion (especially if one were looking for something to complain about).

Why do people get offended when a group that has been involuntarily (better yet, forcefully) separated accepts their "separateness" and begins to celebrate it? Would you be angry if a hungry family wanted to eat a loaf of bread all by themselves, without sharing it with those who eat steak? It's the same thing. Before I end my tirade, I have but one last question to ask of the Miss Ebony "haters." Have you ever gone to the pageant? Check it out, maybe you'll learn something.

The true story of the Miss Ebony Pageant

DEAR EDITOR:

As I glance through the pages of the DAILY EGYPTIAN, I run across several interesting articles. I was stunned by the letter, "The real injustice" of Miss Black Ebony. There are several unjust assumptions and negative implications in the letter. First and foremost, the title of this pageant is Miss Ebony, not Miss BLACK Ebony. This is not a shot at the letter's author, Mr. Andy Watts, but to everyone who has coined this preposterous "renaming." Now I would like to take the time to educate all misinformed parties concerning what Ebony is truly about.

The Miss Ebony Pageant was founded in 1971, when there was an obvious need for social outlets that catered to African-Americans. Yes, the Ebony pageant was initially founded specifically for women of African descent. This being said, be aware of the fact that this idea was developed due to a lack of coverage for an African-American Homecoming queen who was crowned. What does this all mean? Unity was a must in America and even locally on this campus. For African-Americans enrolled here, there were many injustices that were associated with the early '50s and '60s. Many still exist today, hence, the addition of the Miss Ebony Pageant. Does it still seem unjust to want to honor individuals for accomplishments? Well, it shouldn't.

As to the idea that the pageant promotes racial separatism, this seems outlandish to me. Firstly, the pageant is an official SIUC — not black SIUC — Homecoming event. Why it is not as highly publicized as the Great Tailgate and other Homecoming events is a topic for another discussion. Solicitation for this pageant takes place in the form of information tables set up in various campus areas during the first week of classes. Being one of the individuals who facilitated these tables, I can personally attest to no form of bias. We, as an organization, have more than welcomed the participation of all ethnicities. There was a Latina participant in last year's pageant. Quite astounding, seeing as how this is a pageant intended only for African-American women, huh? Now some may counter that point by offering that she is still considered a minority, but this event is titled the Miss BLACK Ebony Pageant, right?

For those who still have tainted perceptions about this pageant, I would encourage you all to attend. Ignorance is, indeed, bliss. And to answer the questions of Mr. Watts, yes, your "white sista" would be allowed to compete. The performances are not an attempt to promote the black community solely in a positive light, but to simply showcase good talent (be it black or white). If this presents a problem then maybe we should all reevaluate this place that we call home.

MARY COLLIER - DAILY EGYPTIAN

After Friday's press conference on traffic safety, Walter Wendler speaks to the mother of SIUC student Lori Thornton, who was struck by a car while walking across a crosswalk on campus. Wendler assured Thornton's mother that the faculty and staff will do what they can to accommodate the needs of her daughter's situation.

With this new war, the U.S. government has revamped the way it thinks about homeland defense. There are many ideas on how the government should do this being discussed in Washington and elsewhere across America. Not everyone who attended Kamarek's lecture agreed with her ideas.

"Some of the things she spoke of seemed a little far off. This so-called super secret government entity - I don't think it could actually happen," said Eileen Holthaus, an undecided sophomore. "I think we should not create a new agency, but focus on improving the ones we have."

Red, white and blue color fall crafts fair

Recent patriotism surge highlights Arts and Crafts Festival

GEOFFREY RITTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Sharon Rickert knows what sells at the typical fall craft show, and it's usually as simple as a Santa Claus or a couple of turkeys. This year, though, she's been a bit surprised to find people still stuck in the beginning of July.

But she's rushed to meet the demand, and it's created a different kind of feel in the character of her painted wooden decorations, a few that mixes the usual holiday colors in favor of red, white and blue. She's been practicing her art for more than 20 years, and she has become accustomed to churning out the standard Christmas and Thanksgiving decorations, but this year is proving to be dramatically different from any other.

After all, this is the year of Sept. 11. And if we've learned one thing from it, it's that red, white and blue are colors that don't run.

"Lately everyone's been looking for Americana," said Rickert, who works on her pieces four to five times a week. "People aren't usually looking for that kind of thing. It wasn't like this last year."

Rickert is not the only crafter who has adapted to meet the patriotic demand that has followed recent events. At the 7th Annual Arts and Crafts Festival last weekend, spread out over 20,000 square feet inside the SIU Arena, more than 50 area crafters turned out to offer their wares to the public and, in most cases, America was the flavor of the day. From star-spangled blankets to wreaths woven in patriotic colors, most crafters had merchandise that represent the nation's patriotic fervor - and customers were more than happy to buy.

"People are showing their respect," said Dea Ames, a shopper who came from Louisville to check out Sunday's craft selections. Her T-shirt, which she bought two days after last month's attacks, was emblazoned with an American flag and the words "Together We Stand." "I personally hope it lasts a while."

But what is now a well developed trend came as a surprise to craft vendors in the days immediately following the attacks. George Alstalt was at the Murphysboro Applefest the following weekend, selling his usual array of homemade jewelry, when he realized the market for the stars and stripes was about to blossom. So he bought about eight dozen red, white and blue ribbons for people to pin on their chests. He sold out within half an hour.

A feeling of helplessness in the face of crisis, he said, is what has led to the resurgence of patriotism. Now his stand uncharacteristically sells flags, patriotic patches and magnets, among other items.

"What else can we do?" Alstalt asked. "We can worry about our own safety. We can give money to the Red Cross. [Showing the flag] gives people an opportunity to show what they can do."

While the flag may be enjoying a phase of popularity, questions arise as to whether it is here to stay, or if it is just another trend that will disappear with the season. However, Alstalt and other crafters at last weekend's festival said they were optimistic that Americans have found something real and familiar in Old Glory, and that the impact recent events have had cannot be erased any time soon.

Regardless of how long popularity lasts, though, crafters say they will keep the patriotic colors coming as long as people are trying to find them. The reasons, Alstalt said, are simple: the patriotic colors signify a great unity among the American people, and they serve as a reminder of why we are now fighting a war and what we are fighting for.

"If it wasn't for my country," Alstalt said, "I wouldn't be who I am today. The freedoms of speech and the press and religion are what give me the freedom I have. Patriotism has been an assumed thing among many folks, and this is something that really woke people up."

'Concrete' research strengthens structures

Professor works with coal residue to make better foundations

BRIAN PEACH
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Protecting the environment is not one of Sanjeev Kumar's main goals, but with his research working with concrete, landfill waste is put to good use.

Kumar, assistant professor of civil engineering, is conducting research to develop stronger concrete composites made with ash, a by-product of burning coal that would normally fill landfills. Kumar's research has the potential to reduce soil and groundwater contamination through its use of the ash residue.

He said that ash from coal has "cementitious properties" that, when mixed properly, make strong concrete. With land space for construction purposes diminishing everyday, Kumar's field research could be used in constructing multi-story buildings that conserve land space.

"Our goal is to maximize the utilization of coal residue in foundations. We use as much [ash] as possible," Kumar said. "The research is definitely environmentally friendly."

He said the concrete may also be used in making foundations for bridges or other large structures. Structures are kept from sinking into the ground or collapsing with the help of numerous foundation piles in the soil under building support columns.

Kumar said his research is being implemented in various projects but wouldn't comment on some of them. He said his area of study is so competitive that ideas may be stolen.

"We don't want to give out ideas for projects to other researchers," Kumar said.

For some field research, Kumar goes with students and E.D. Simons Contracting Co. to a site in Carterville where foot-thick 25-foot-long concrete piles are made, driven into the ground and analyzed.

"They use an incredible set of equipment to accomplish it," said Linda Helstern, assistant dean in the College of Engineering.

Full-scale load testing of the foundations is conducted when the piles are in the ground. One hundred tons of pressure is applied to the piles with a jack to determine their strength.

"The students get a totally hands-on experience, which some professional engineers have never seen," Kumar said.

George Manyando, professional engineer and senior project manager from URS Corp., a professional advancement corporation Kumar's group consulted, said this is the first time in his 21-year engineering career that he has seen this type of testing in Carbondale.

"Dr. Kumar has already made his mark in geotechnical-earthquake engineering and in the geo-environmental area through his scholarly research activities," Manyando said.

George Swisher, dean of the College of Engineering, said the college is very interested in this type of research because it can be applied now and doesn't take a lot of theoretical work.

"It's really practical," Swisher said. "It doesn't take 10 to 15 years to go through."

Indiana U. trustee nominated for ambassador

GAVIN LESNICK
INDIANA DAILY STUDENT (INDIANA U.)

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (U-WIRE) — President George W. Bush nominated Indiana University Board of Trustees President James T. Morris to serve as ambassador to the United States Mission to the United Nations Agencies in Rome. The position serves to overlook and maintain three particular legs of U.S. involvement in Rome: the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, the U.N. World Food Program and the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

The nomination needs to be confirmed by the Senate before it becomes official. He has been asked by the White House not to comment until the Senate approves his nomination, although he said he is excited at the prospect of the position.

In addition to his work on the board of trustees, Morris is Chairman and chief executive officer of IWC Resources Corporation and Indianapolis Water Company, its principal subsidiary. He is also an active member of the United States Olympic Committee.

A graduate of IU in 1965, Morris has worked on numerous educational and non-profit organizations.

"Jim Morris has an outstanding record of public service and of getting things done," IU President Myles Brand said in a press release. "We have been most pleased that he brought those attributes to our board of trustees, and I am certain he will have a similarly positive impact in this new role."

"I think it's a well-deserved honor for him," said board member Sue Talbot. "He has been one of the leaders in Indiana in philanthropic endeavors for many, many years. They couldn't have had a better candidate for this job. There isn't anyone they could find who'd be a better candidate."

Morris was elected to the board of trustees by alumni in 1996. His term will end June 30.

If all goes well in the Senate, Morris will have to move overseas for the job, thereby losing his position with the board of trustees. The board requires its president live in the United States.

"He can't commute, he has to live in Rome for this position," said WFP Director Joseph Scialise.

In the event Morris has to resign, Frederick Eichhorn, vice president of the board since 1992, would fill the position for the remainder of Morris' term.

"I think it's wonderful, it's a fabulous choice," said trustee Stephen Backer. "If he had to resign (from the board), it'd be a tremendous loss. Jim's been a very good member and a very strong supporter of the University. He'll be an excellent choice."

The FAO works to improve nutritional and standard of living levels by promoting agricultural production in poverty-stricken, rural areas. The WFP receives monetary donations and buys food in malnourished countries. The organization is funding food drops in Afghanistan. The IFAD provides loans to agriculturally and rural underdeveloped countries.

"Generally, it's someone with background in agriculture in emergency situations or in business related to agriculture," Scialise said. "(Morris) role is to represent the United States government, which is a major donor to all three of the agencies in Rome. He'll attend executive meetings for all three organizations and represent U.S. interests there."

funding would go to fixing up things such as railroads, highways and airports that would put people to work immediately, Costello said.

Several tax cuts have also been proposed and Costello, a Democrat, said the Republicans were trying to push a "trickle down" tax cut. This type of tax philosophy, stemming from Ronald Reagan's presidency, gives tax cuts to the rich with the assumption that they will pump the money back into the economy and it will "trickle down" to the average workers.

Costello said it does not work and he wants to give tax cuts directly to the middle and lower class and said the Republicans were using the Sept. 11 attacks to become heroes of the rich.

"They are trying to use this to get permanent tax cuts for the wealthy," Costello said.

Airline Security

The House is also looking at several bills that will tighten security on airlines and make people feel a little better about taking to the skies, Costello said.

He said a bill the House will soon vote on would make the sky marshals program permanent. Fully armed undercover federal agents, known as sky marshals, were used in the '70s and early '80s and eventually cut to save money. The Federal Aviation Administration reinstated them following the attacks. The bill proposed in the House would make sky marshals permanent and they would fly on every third airplane.

Also, Costello supports making airline screeners, whose job it is to monitor metal detectors and check bags, federal employees. Costello called the screener employee conditions "nothing short of shocking." He said their average salary was $6.25 an hour, they had a high turnover rate, many are not U.S. citizens and there is no hope for advancements. These poor conditions often harbor poor working habits, Costello said. The airline industry usually hires these employees by contract, giving the job to the lowest bidder. Costello said they heard some grumbling from the airline industry about making the employees federal, but Costello said it will help the aviation industry in the long run because people will feel more confident with federal employees at the gates.

"If we expect to get back to anywhere close to normal, they have to feel secure," Costello said.

Woman attacked at U. Maryland decries hate crime at rally

CHRISTOPHER ANDERSON
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (U-WIRE) — The woman who was attacked last week in University of Maryland's Lot 1b told hundreds gathered Thursday at a rally to support lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered students and their straight allies that she believed she was targeted because she was perceived to be gay, but she vowed it would not silence her on the issue of gay rights.

Stephanie, a junior kinesiology major who asked that her last name not be printed, spoke at the noon rally at the Nyumburu Amphitheater.

"I am a survivor," said Stephanie, who participates in Pride Alliance activities as a straight ally.

"Everyone is at risk," she said. "The fact that I decided for one day to openly show my support for my gay friends by wearing a button which has a gay flag made me a target for a hate crime. This crime was entirely based on someone perceiving my sexual orientation due to a button on my person."

Stephanie told police she was pushed to the ground and then kicked. Police said they were investigating the attack as a hate crime because the assailant allegedly yelled a sexual orientation slur before hitting Stephanie.

Stephanie suffered a black eye, scratches and bruises from the attack.

University Police spokesman Capt. Paul Dillon addressed the crowd, calling the perpetrator a "coward."

"We'll make an example of him," Dillon said. "He'll be charged criminally. He'll be charged through the university. He might even be charged federally when we find him."

Dillon asked members of the campus community to report any information about the incident. Dillon said he could not release any details, but said two officers are actively investigating the crime.

Campus President C.D. Mote Jr. did not attend the rally, but sent a statement read by Robert Waters, associate vice president for academic affairs and special assistant to the president.

Britton Allen, president of the Pride Alliance, the campus group for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered students and their straight allies that sponsored the rally, said, "Although we may question our sense of safety, the motive for this attack and others like it cannot be questioned."

"The perpetrator of this attack 'wanted to silence us,'" Allen said. "But seeing the number of people here, it is clear they have failed."

Linda Clement, vice president of student affairs, told those at the gathering she was "shocked" by the assault and called on the entire campus to make every office, dorm room and classroom a "safe space" for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered people.

Many speaking at and attending the rally said they were disturbed by other incidents they considered homophobic, including recent challenges around campus opposing gay marriage.

Ed Kenny, a senior government and politics and independent studies major who attended the rally, said he was "pretty shocked" when he read about the incident in The Diamondback.

Iana Sichel, a freshman letters and sciences major, said she wasn't surprised by the violence against gays on the campus.

"The feeling on campus isn't one that is really open. People talk about a liberal arts education, but I don't feel there's that level of comfort and respect for people," she said.

HALLOWEEN

Students appear to have mixed feelings on Halloween break.

Amy Archer, a freshman in physical therapy from Murphysboro, said it's a vacation for her, but whether SIUC has a break does not matter.

"It's one less break we'll have to go through," Archer said. "It's usually aggravating to go through break ... you get used to being off school ... you don't want to go back."

Aaron Weddle, a senior in zoology from Virden, said he plans to hunt every day during fall break.

"We get an extra week to do nothing," Weddle said. "It's a well-needed break for everybody."

Heather Burton, a sophomore in English from Springfield, is not excited about having a break at all. She said although she is going home, she could be in Carbondale working and earning money.

Kendra Brown, a senior in engineering from St. Louis, said although she needs a vacation at this time of year, she understands why Wendler made the decision not to continue the tradition.

"I do agree that if you keep having a break it's promoting [students taking the Strip]," Brown said.

Business owners also seem calm about Halloween break this year and in the future.

Danial Ramirez, owner of La Bamba, 519 S. Illinois Ave., said he is more worried about losing money from a lack of business.

John Vonperbandt, a manager at Pinch Penny Pub, 700 E. Grand Ave., said they will be open this year, but are not expecting much excitement.

"I think this town will be dead," he said. "We're not as affected as businesses on the Strip, but there's always crazy people."

Ken Butler, a manager at Jimmy John's, 519 S. Illinois Ave., said he is also not concerned about this year or next.

"Either way, I think we'll be fine. I have faith in our police department," he said. "They learned a lot from last year."

The residence halls will be open and all cafeterias will be serving meals during Halloween break this year.

in the early stages.

Anthrax is a disease that livestock farmers and the military have long been familiar with. For centuries, anthrax has caused disease in animals around the world, even in wild livestock in the United States. It has been traced as far back to 80 A.D., when it was described to have killed 40,000 horses and 100,000 cattle across Eurasia. In 1945, 1 million sheep died from an anthrax outbreak in Iran. Cattle, sheep, goats and horses are the typical animal hosts of anthrax.

The anthrax bacterium was discovered in 1849 and was the first microorganism identified to cause certain diseases by Robert Koch in 1876. Five years later, French scientist Louis Pasteur developed an anthrax vaccine for use in livestock.

Farmers and workers in various industries that handle potentially contaminated carcasses, hides and even bones have been receiving vaccinations for the disease for years. A vaccine for humans was produced in 1971 by the Michigan Department of Public Health. However, administering the vaccine is a lengthy process involving 18 months worth of injections and only prevents the contraction of cutaneous anthrax, not the more deadly inhalation anthrax.

Cases of anthrax have been reported in 82 countries, with human cases regularly being reported in the Middle East, Africa and Russia.

The threat of anthrax as a bio-terror device developed during World War I. In 1914, a secret German laboratory was found to be based in Baltimore, allegedly studying anthrax as a possible weapon against livestock. And during the Cold War, the former Soviet Union accidentally released anthrax from a military microbiology facility in Sverdlovsk, resulting in the death of 66 of the 77 people diagnosed with the disease. U.S. troops were vaccinated for the disease during the Persian Gulf War, after a biological weapons research facility was discovered in Iraq in 1988.

But while anthrax has been prevalent around the world for centuries, the recent attacks in the United States have aroused concern in many Americans. Last week University and city officials announced their plan to respond to any potential anthrax threats. Anyone concerned that they have been exposed to anthrax is encouraged to call the local police department or SIUC police.

Cichy also noted the growing awareness that the community has shown in the past year. Within the past year, the Women's Center received 12,386 calls from people wanting to help traumatized victims.

According to Poskin, the public has an obligation to support those victimized by these acts of violence.

"It is the most demeaning, degrading and humiliating violation perpetrated by another. Rape is a crime and a crime is an act against the community," she said.

Poskin urged the crowd to "remain committed to stay with it until domestic violence stops."

After Poskin's address, an emotional "Speak Out" segment provided an outlet for survivors to open up to the public about their struggles and how they are coping with it.

"I think we had one of the biggest crowd we've ever had," said Kathy Livingston, coordinator of Rape Crisis Services at the Women's Center. "The courage people had to come up and talk about their experience was amazing and it will work towards healing."

AND YOU THOUGHT IT WAS JUST COFFEE: Left to right: Raphi Rechitskiy, Alyson Newquist, and Julie Sommer, members of the Campus Shawnee Greens, protest outside Barnes and Noble Bookstore in Carbondale on Saturday morning. The members passed out leaflets about Starbucks Coffee, located inside the bookstore, to passers-by for nearly three hours. The members were unhappy about the coffee franchise's ingredients and business practices.

Saluki hoops provides sneak preview

Men's and women's basketball teams show off skills for fans

JENS DEJU
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The SIU men's and women's basketball teams conducted its annual Midnight Madness event this past Saturday except they threw in a new wrinkle. The event started at 5:30 p.m.

The evening started out by introducing the women's squad and then the team scrimmaging against a team of students led by former Saluki center Kristine Abramowski.

The Salukis subbed players about every five minutes and won the 20 minute scrimmage 33-29. SIU women's head coach Lori Opp was not in attendance because of an illness.

Next came the 3-point shoot-out, in which the men's and women's teams competed to come up with a representative for the championship round. In that round freshman Danette Jones of the women's team beat men's guard Darren Brooks 9-7 to claim the Saluki 3-point crown.

The festivities also included the ever-popular slam dunk contest, which was won by Rolan Roberts for the second consecutive year.

Roberts, who had to sit out last season after transferring from Virginia Tech, had an easy time in the championship round as Jermaine Deerman missed his dunk. Deerman and Roberts each had crowd-pleasing dunks in the first round, as each used their teammates as props to jump over, with Roberts using Marcus Belcher and Deerman teaming with Kent Williams.

Deerman was lighthearted afterward about letting Roberts beat him in Senior guard Marcus Belcher takes a three-point shot during the "Midnight Madness" scrimmage at Davies Gymnasium on Saturday night. The annual event kicked off the practice season for the Saluki men's and women's basketball teams. Besides the scrimmage, fans were treated to both a three-point and slam dunk contest.

the contest for the second straight year.

"I was in on a bad wheel. I twisted my ankle [Friday] so I couldn't bring out the dunk that I had," Deerman said. "I was going to jump in the air and take my shoe off and catch it and dunk, but I couldn't pull it off because I was hurt."

The final event of the evening was a men's scrimmage. Deerman led all scorers with 13 points and was followed by Belcher (12), Brad Korn (8), David McGlowin (7) and Roberts (7).

SIU men's head coach Bruce Weber said he was pleased with how his team performed and was proud of the more serious feel than at previous Late Nights.

"It feels good to play in front of people," Weber said. "I think it helps to get game-like conditions. Overall, I think they've done a pretty nice job. They've been intense and we've worked them pretty hard."

Belcher said the week of practice the team has already undergone is part of the reason for the more serious tone and better play at this year's event.

"Last year we had never had a practice or anything before so we just came out here completely raw," Belcher said. "This way we get a little bit put in, come out here and do a few things. It was all right, it felt good."

The only players who didn't participate in the scrimmage were walk-on Jason Ward and senior forward Tyrese Buie, who sat out as a precautionary measure with a minor wrist injury.

Both teams will now head back to regular practice. The men's team will begin its season with an exhibition game on Nov. 4, while the women's team will play an exhibition game on Nov. 7.

All in all, the players enjoyed the opportunity to show their stuff to the nearly full house in Davies Gymnasium and the break from their regular routine.

"It was fun to get out and play a simulation game, when at practice you just go up and down a few times and stop," Williams said. "We get a chance to see how much in shape we are because we all got winded pretty fast, but it was fun."

#14 Northern Iowa 17, #12 Western Illinois 14

Panthers freshman quarterback Tom Pettie threw for 122 yards and a touchdown and ran for another as Northern Iowa improved its record to 6-1 and 4-0 in the Gateway Conference.

Western's Sam Clemons racked up 216 passing yards and two touchdowns as the Leathernecks fell to 4-2, 3-2 in front of a homecoming crowd of 15,637 in Macomb.

UNTs Adam Benge, the conference's third-leading rusher, ran for 110 yards and a touchdown.

#5 Youngstown State 44 Illinois State 30

Youngstown State jumped out to an early 23-9 lead and sailed from there as the Penguins improved their record to 4-1 in the conference and 6-1 overall.

Jerald Burley was the offensive star for Youngstown State, returning three punts for 103 yards, including a 77-yard return for a touchdown. He also caught two passes for 47 yards and a touchdown during the homecoming victory.

Illinois State's Dusty Burk threw for 272 yards and two touchdowns and ran for another one in the losing effort. The Redbirds are now 0-7 on the season and 0-3 in the Gateway.

Indiana State 25 SW Missouri State 19

James Braden only caught three passes Saturday but all of them were for touchdowns, as he helped Indiana State (2-5, 1-2) earn its first conference victory.

Braden totaled 61 yards receiving with touchdown receptions of 37, 14 and 10 yards.

Braden's last two touchdowns came in the fourth quarter as the Sycamores outscored Southwest Missouri State 18-0 in the final quarter to claim the victory.

Southwest's Austin Moherman threw for 293 yards and a touchdown as the Bears (2-5, 0-4) lost their homecoming contest.

#10 Western Kentucky 21 #11 McNeese State 0

Western Kentucky (5-2, 3-1) started the scoring early as Mel Mitchell returned the opening kickoff 99 yards for a touchdown.

The Hilltoppers added two more touchdowns as they improved to 3-1 in the conference and 5-1 overall.

The visiting Cowboys (4-3) came into the game with the top-ranked defense in Division I-AA, allowing only 51.5 rushing yards each game but gave up 227 yards on the ground.

WKU's Keith Brooks was the game's leading rusher, running for 142 yards in the non-conference affair.

Miss. baseball ends fall practice

JONATHAN HILLARD
THE REFLECTOR (MISSISSIPPI STATE U.)

MISSISSIPPI STATE, Miss. (U-WIRE) — With the 2002 baseball season approaching and fall practice coming to an end, the Mississippi State Bulldogs have good reason to look forward to another successful year.

Last year, the 2001 squad won the SEC tournament in Hoover, Ala., and finished the season ranked No. 14 in the nation.

Mississippi State will be returning most of those players this season.

Only six players graduated and will not return in 2002.

Head coach Ron Polk does not seem too worried about the slight loss.

"I think we've got plenty of people to fill the spots," Polk said. "We lost a couple key guys off last year's team as we do every year. Any team does. We've got enough depth right now. We've just got to stay healthy."

As head baseball coach, Polk is also filling a spot this year — one that he held for 22 years until 1998 when he began a brief stint at Georgia.

Upon his return to Mississippi State, Polk has become confident in the team, particularly in the pitching staff.

"We've got some experience in a lot of places, especially on the mound," Polk said. "Our pitching situation should be good enough to keep us in ballgames."

The Bulldogs hold ample skill at the pitching position with aces like Tanner Brock.

Brock went 7-2 last season as a junior and was named All-Conference in the SEC.

Brock also has a positive outlook on the pitching situation for the 2002 team. "We've got a lot of younger guys that are going to step up this year, and we've got a lot of older guys coming back," Brock said. "We didn't really lose much pitching at all last year."

MSU will have a strong defense away from the mound as well, including junior Matthew Maniscalco, who will be playing shortstop again in the spring.

Maniscalco is already an accomplished infielder. As a freshman, he started all 61 games and led the SEC in fielding percentage among shortstops, assuming him a place on the Freshman All-American team.

"We've got our whole infield coming back... That's just more experience," Maniscalco said. "Last year, we were real inexperienced, but we still had a great year defensively... I think we're going to be stronger than we were last year."

Polk views the team's overall defense as its primary strength, but he realizes that they will need to provide some run support in order to win.

"We just need to do a little better job of our approach to hitting by using the whole field," Polk said. "We need to put more pressure on the (opposing) defense by the way we generate our offense."

Since the Bulldogs won the SEC tournament title as a moderate underdog in 2001, other SEC teams might be especially anxious to play them in the upcoming season.

"Everybody in the SEC is very competitive," Polk said. "It's just a typical SEC season coming up. Right now, there's no one team that jumps out at you and says 'I'm the best.'"

Polk, who won the SEC championship last season at Georgia, said he hopes to successfully defend his title at Mississippi State in 2002.

If he gets his wish, the Bulldogs will bring home their first regular season SEC Championship since 1989.

SALUKI SPORTS NOTES

Northern Iowa volleyball winning streak screeches to a halt

The No. 16 ranked Northern Iowa Panthers' winning streak of 69 matches in a row ended Friday night with a five game loss to Bradley University.

The Panthers, who have dominated Missouri Valley Conference volleyball without a loss in three years, now fall to 18-1 overall and 9-1 in the conference.

Bradley improved to 14-6 overall and 7-3 in the conference. BU head coach Scott Luster refers to this victory against the Panthers as being the Braves' biggest victory ever.

"Northern Iowa has dominated the conference and it's just a big win for the program, defeating a ranked team," Luster said in a statement.

Volleyball crushed by conference foes

Team finishes 0-2 over weekend

CLINT HARTING

The Saluki volleyball team played with heart in stretching the Missouri Valley Conference's second place team, Southwest Missouri State, to five games Friday night before falling.

However, the heartbeat stopped Saturday as SIU was swept by eighth place Wichita State, as the Salukis fell to 8-12 overall and 3-8 in the conference.

After dropping game one Friday 30-25 to the Bears, SIU rallied in game two with 21 kills and a spectacular .442 hitting percentage in a 30-27 win. SIU split the next two games with the Bears, forcing a fifth and final game.

Any momentum SIU had going into the final game dissipated quickly, as the Salukis finished with a .000 hitting percentage and lost 15-10.

Saluki head coach Sonya Locke in a statement cited the errors in the final game as being the crusher for SIU.

"Our errors kept us from winning," Locke said. "Especially in the last game when we had as many errors as kills."

Despite the heart-wrenching loss, SIU received outstanding play from junior Kristie Kemner, who finished with 21 kills, 13 digs and a .333 hitting percentage.

Junior Lindsey Schultz made her presence known at the net with 10 blocks in the defeat.

SIU never resuscitated itself from the disappointing loss to the Bears, and was swept by Wichita State Saturday. The Shockers were victimized by the Salukis earlier in the season, as SIU dispatched Wichita State in three games with relative ease at Davies Gymnasium.

However, Saturday it was the Shockers' turn, as they caught a reeling SIU team and avenged their earlier defeat.

SIU could only manage a paltry .074 team hitting percentage and couldn't produce more than 13 kills

"Our errors kept us from winning. Especially in the last game when we had as many errors as kills."

per game. Locke complimented the aggressiveness of the Shockers, despite their eighth place record.

"You can't expect a win on the road in this conference just because someone doesn't have a great record or you beat them earlier," Locke said.

Kemner finished with 14 kills and 11 digs for SIU and sophomore Kelly Harman contributed nine kills in the loss to Wichita State.

The 0-2 conference weekend leaves SIU in a seventh-place tie with the Shockers, and in need of a strong finish if they are to qualify for the conference tournament.

SIU will be in action again tonight with another road match against Big 12 powerhouse Missouri in a non-conference match.

The Salukis lost in the championship match to the Tigers earlier this season at the Saluki/Best Inns Invitational in a closely contested match that went four games.

are not as big or strong as many of the teams they face, which will make competing all the more challenging as the season marches into its later stages.

"What bothered me the most when I looked out there was we looked slow and we looked tired," Kill said.

In addition to Taylor, the Panthers also received a dazzling game from quarterback Tony Romo, who was 15-for-18 passing for 235 yards. Romo also fired three touchdown passes.

SIU's offense couldn't keep up with the Panther barrage, although the Salukis did manage some production behind the two-quarterback system of starter Kevin Kobe and Madi Williams.

Kobe was 13-for-25 passing, highlighted by a second quarter touchdown pass to freshman Justin George. Williams ran for 50 yards, including the game's final score on a 4-yard touchdown scamper in the fourth quarter.

SIU junior running back Tom Koutsos also became the second Saluki ever to reach 3,000 career rushing yards, as his 82 yard outing gave him 3,004 yards.

But for the most part, there was little for SIU to take pleasure in. Defensive end Bryan Archibald is one Saluki senior who took the drubbing personally. He vowed to be more proactive this week in prodding his teammates to practice more purposefully.

"I feel very accountable for the lackadaisical week that we've had all week," Archibald said. "We haven't really had many leaders step up. We have leaders, but they're not taking control of the team, and I think that's one thing I need to start doing."

Eastern (5-1) was the third straight Ohio Valley team to defeat SIU on the season, after Southeast Missouri State and Murray State knocked off the Salukis earlier. Now, SIU will try to recoup its health and locate some rhythm in time for this weekend's Gateway contest at Indiana State.

Kill said that as a first year coach, the temptation is to work his team vigorously during practice because there's so much teaching to do. But after his team's lackluster performance Saturday, he intends to rethink his team's regimen.

"I've got to do a better job of making sure our players got some fresh legs and are ready to play," Kill said

Men's swimming and diving places fourth at Big XII Relays

Saluki swim team wins event against a top ten team

LIZ GUARD
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Despite its fourth-place finish at the Big XII Relays, the Saluki men's swimming and diving team can now say it beat one of the top teams in the country.

Four teams competed in the relay-only event in Columbia, Mo., on Friday. The Salukis came in fourth with 65 points behind first-place finisher Texas A&M, which earned 104 points, followed by the University of Texas (100) and the University of Missouri (70).

The Salukis beat out Texas A&M by .07 seconds to win the 800 individual medley relay. Senior Come Prozesky, sophomore Derek Helvey and freshman Adam Gangl led the Salukis to their lone first-place finish.

Prozesky said the tough competition added excitement to the meet.

"We were really impressed," Prozesky said. "We won one event and swam against Texas A&M and they're one of the top teams in the United States so we were very proud of that."

Rick Walker, head coach of the men's team, said the win against Texas A&M was a boost for his team.

"That was special to win an event here," Walker said. "It was like David beating Goliath."

Some of the Texas A&M swimmers have competed in the Olympics. Both Texas A&M and the University of Texas rank in the top 10, and Missouri is in the top 30.

"It was very hard competition, but it was fun for us to go there," Prozesky said. "It's not individual events, it's relays and we never get to do just that at a normal dual meet."

The Salukis finished second in the 1500 yard freestyle relay, just more than four seconds behind Texas with the help of freshman Brent Menghini, Helvey and Gangl.

Sophomore Edoardo Daelli, Helvey, Menghini and Prozesky led the Salukis to another second-place finish in the 800 freestyle relay.

The women's team did not travel with the men this weekend because the Salukis would have only been allowed to take half of the team. The men and women will both be in action for a dual meet against Drury College Friday at the Dr. Edward J. Shea Natatorium at 2 p.m.

efficiency. The longest drive lasted only five minutes and 53 seconds on 11 plays. The shortest one came in just 42 seconds on two plays as Taylor broke for a 57-yard touchdown run on the second play from scrimmage.

Taylor gave the credit for his big running day to his blockers, as they paved the way for him to have his second straight breakout game.

"Offensive line, fullback, tight ends and receivers blocking downfield, basically that's it," Taylor said. "And the defensive line flew so much that all I had to do was let them go by and then just run in field ... it was pretty much downhill from there."

Saturday's win was just another notch in what's shaping up as a tremendous season for the Panthers, who are now 5-1. Although next week EIU has a key conference battle against No. 15 Tennessee State University, the Panther offense made sure that Saturday's game wouldn't derail the team's momentum.

"Me, personally, I was like a little kid getting ready to come out here and throw the football," Romo said. "I was definitely ready to come and play, ready to come out and kick some ass."

The SIU defense went into Saturday's game against Eastern Illinois University looking to limit its third straight opponent to less than 20 points. That plan didn't even make it out of the first quarter, as the EIU offense posted 21 first quarter points and torched the Salukis all afternoon.

SIU went on to lose 49-21 against a Panther team that came into the game ranked No. 9 in the 1-AA poll and showed they are worthy of that ranking, manhandling a Saluki offense that had been holding its own all season against some of the nation's best.

"They had a hell of a football team," SIU head coach Jerry Kill said. "They really do, and offensively they handed it to us and they handed it to us on defense and the kicking game. Offensively, that's the first time we just had it taken to our tail end. They're good."

EIU's one-two punch of running back J.R. Taylor and quarterback Tony Romo was awesome. Taylor erupted for 170 rushing yards and four touchdowns. He also caught a touchdown to give him five on the day.

Romo rebounded from the previous week's game against Southeast Missouri State University, in which inclement weather made EIU's passing game non-existent. He went 15-for-18 for 235 yards and three touchdowns.

"Our quarterback was on the money [Saturday]," EIU head coach Bob Spoo said. "I don't think he missed very many throws. I don't know what it was, we just came out of the box. We needed this win and it was a big one for us to keep the momentum going."

Despite not throwing a single pass the week before, Romo has enjoyed a solid season, going 76-for-106 for 1,019 yards and 13 touchdowns while throwing only four interceptions.

"His quarterback's a good, good football player and he's kind of brought them back on the map ... he's stepped into their program and you do that with a guy like that," Kill said. "He is an excellent, excellent quarterback and a great leader."

Spoo gave the credit for his team's success to his offensive coaches.

"They do it week-in and week-out and they don't get enough credit," Spoo said. "Our guys, as they prepare our gameplan, look for things that they think they can exploit and it's apparent that we were able to do that, so I'm just really thrilled we won and did so well [Saturday]."

Football sluggish as Eastern rolls

Salukis give weak performance in 49-21 loss

JAY SCHWAB
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The SIU football team has spent much of its season going down fighting.

Saturday, the Salukis just went down.

Eastern Illinois asserted its dominance early and relentlessly over what appeared to be a sluggish SIU team Saturday, handing the Salukis a 49-21 loss in front of 5,150 people at McAndrew Stadium.

"They kicked our butt in every phase," SIU head coach Jerry Kill said. "Man for man, they were a heck of a lot of a better football team than we were [Saturday]."

The Panthers tore into SIU almost immediately. EIU running back J.R. Taylor scored the first of his four rushing touchdowns and five overall on a 57-yard romp on the second play from scrimmage.

After SIU couldn't do anything with its first possession, the Panthers needed just six plays to go up 14-0, as quarterback Tony Romo delivered a 23-yard touchdown pass to Taylor.

Taylor rushed for 170 yards against SIU, and Eastern racked up 467 yards of total offense. The Saluki defense had played well lately — highlighted by an admirable showing in a 19-14 loss at Northern Iowa the week before — but Eastern had little trouble moving the ball on SIU.

"They manhandled us on the line of scrimmage," Kill said. "That's a lonely feeling out there as a coach when you're just getting it taken to you."

The Panthers were up 21-0 at the end of the first quarter and 35-14 at halftime. SIU safety Jeff Morton was disappointed by what he deemed to be a Saluki team short on emotion in the week that preceded Saturday's game, which he said carried over to game day.

"We just didn't want to compete [Saturday] it seems like," Morton said. "It seemed like we came out dead at the beginning and then we finally got up in the second half, but we can't do that. We're a team that has to play flawless."

Kill said his team showed fatigue on Saturday in the aftermath of playing a rugged schedule against several physical teams. The Salukis (1-5)
