Leaders relieved after French 'yes'

Los Angeles Times

ROME—Thank you, France.

Victory may have been narrow, but, mon dieu, was it welcome among European governments wed to a 40-year-old dream of continental unity.

Across Europe Sunday night there were many decision-makers like Italian Prime Minister Giuliano Amato, glued to a television set in his office at the Palazzo Chigi in empty downtown Rome. All dressed up with plenty to say. Waiting for word from Paris.

Exit poll projections were enough. I took Amato exactly 14 minutes after the French polls closed—before a single vote was officially reported—to laud French sagacity on Italian national television.

"I heaved a sigh of relief," Amato said. There are many obstacles to overcome in building Europe, he said, "but had we not overcome today's obstacle, if the French electorate had not voted yes, the work of 40 years would have collapsed, most probably with irreparable damage."

Amato, whose hopes for a re-stabilized lira hinged in the outcome, sounded a theme replayed with variations from government ministries in a dozen nations where lights burned deep through an uncertain autumn weekend.

There were shouts of victory: "The European train can now roll forward," said Klaus Kinkel, German foreign minister, calling the result "a very decisive step forward for Europe."

There were calls for revived decisiveness: "After a sigh of relief for the French 'yes,' we must now better coordinate European policies to lower interest rates," said Carlos Solchaga, Spain's economy minister,

State amendment would guarantee education funding

By John Rezanka
General Assignment Writer

Illinois Comptroller Dawn Clark Natesch said higher education is extremely vulnerable to state budget cuts because many voters place more importance on funding elementary and secondary education.

A state constitutional amendment for education would help guarantee adequate funding for public education programs, Natesch said at SIUC Friday.

Natesch, who campaigned in the Student Center for Democratic state senate candidate Kenneth Buzbee, said cutting elementary and secondary education programs is extremely unpopular with the public.

Higher education programs have less public support so they are easier targets for budget cuts, Natesch said.

Plans for sale of local landfill to waste company approved

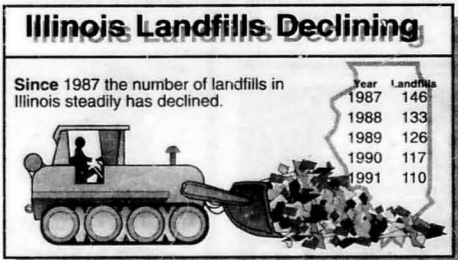

By Jeremy Finley
City Writer

Plans for the sale of the Jackson County landfill will be finalized today by the county board.

The Illinois Environmental Protection Agency agreed to allow Continental Waste Industries of Clark, N.J., to take over management and care of the site Friday morning, a day before the landfill would have been forced to close.

The landfill would have closed if it could not have complied with new state guidelines.

The New Jersey company will take full liability for the landfill, including past and present problems with the landfill. It will comply with the new regulations and will handle contamination problems that the landfill may have because of a lack of proper safety features.

D. Blaney Miller, chairman of the Jackson County Board, said the board will meet today with State's Attorney Chuck Grace to receive final information about the landfill situation.

Larry Aitig, member of the board's solid waste committee, said Jackson County Republican chairman Chris Grissom, Miller and himself made calls on Thursday to Sen. Ralph Dunn, R-

Coach impressed with effort in handling Governors, 37-7

By Jay Reed
Sports Writer

Saluki head coach Bob Smith said that if the defense continues to improve, the Dawgs could be a tough team to handle three or four games down the road.

Smith's impression was solidified Saturday as the Dawgs defense limited Austin Peay to only seven points and 201 yards of total offense in the Salukis 37-7 trashing of the Governors in front of an estimated 12,000 fans at McAndrew Stadium.

The Salukis, who came into the game allowing an average of 448.5 yards of total offense and 36 points a game, did not allow the Governors to score until 11:48 of the fourth quarter, when Austin Peay quarterback David Stooksbury found tight end Charles Woods for a 10-yard touchdown.

The Salukis also did not allow the Governors into Saluki territory in the first half. The Dawgs were aided by four Austin Peay fumbles that resulted in 23 Saluki points.

"At every position we had kids doing one thing that we had not done in previous weeks and that was get off their blocks and make the big plays," defensive coordinator Ralph Young said. "We were able to take away their dive option, and when you take away the option, you force them to change."

Smith said that he was impressed with the way the Salukis maintained the defensive intensity. "For the first time all year we showed some consistency," Smith said. "We had guys out there on their assignments and we could not be more pleased."

Smith was also impressed with the Saluki offensive attack

Volleyball team 5-5 after split

By Norma Wilke
Sports Editor

The SIUC spikers must beat the teams below them and split with the teams above them in the preseason poll to make it to the Missouri Valley Conference Tournament, coach Sonya Locke said.

The Salukis were 1-1 on the weekend, losing to Northern Iowa 15-7, 15-9, 15-4 Friday night and winning against Drake 15-6, 7-15, 15-7, 9-15, 15-13 Saturday in a heated five-game match.

With the split this weekend, SIUC evened its record to 5-5.

The Drake win was important, Locke said.

"Now we're even in the conference (2-2)," Locke said. "We have to win no less than 75 percent of our games. Right now we have to win one more than half on the road because we're down one with the Northern Iowa loss at home and that is not going to be an easy task."

The difference between the two games was ball control, Locke said.

"Volleyball is a game of chain reaction," she said. "We controlled the ball so much better in this game than we did last night. When you can control the ball, you can set to the spiker."

The Salukis had good performances in the Drake match from senior Dana Olden, who had 19 kills, and sophomore Deb Heyne, who had 15 kills and 12 digs. Senior Stacy Snook had three service aces, and freshman Beth Diehl had two service aces and 18 digs.

The spikers saw what Locke called the best performance she has seen all season from freshman Heather Herdes, who had 12 kills. Three of the kills were in the final rally-scored game, where every ball equals a point.

"A lot of pressure is put on the younger players because most of them had very good high school careers," Locke said. "The pressure is greater (at the collegiate level), and the game is faster. Heather did a great job tonight. She had been hesitating a lot before."

Lisa Lupe had 10 kills and six block assists, and Jody Newman had nine kills and eight digs for the Bulldogs.

Northern Iowa coach Iragde Ahrabi-Fard said by midseason the Salukis will surprise some teams in

SIUC loses meet despite recording two fastest times

The Saluki hurriers have five weeks until the Missouri Valley Conference to come together as a team, and more importantly, to win as a team, the men's cross country coach said.

their 8-kilometer meet against arch rival University of Illinois Saturday at the SIUC cross country course, coach Bill Cornell said.

Though SIUC team captain Nick Schwartz and sophomore Garth Akal took first and second place with times of 24:49 and 25:54 respectively, U of I came away with the team victory, 25-34 over SIUC.

Cornell said he was happy with Schwartz and Akal and knew that they were among the best of the MVC athletes.

"We know where we stand as a good one-two punch," Cornell said. "The rest of the team is hurting though."

U of I placed seven runners in the top 10. Sophomore John Taylor of SIUC broke in to the eighth position with a time of 26:17 to avoid a complete overrun.

Cornell said the team needs to find the extra effort needed to endure the perils of a cross country run.

"You are only as strong as your weakest link," Cornell said. "Cross

The SIUC women's cross country team has started 1992 with high profile wins that Coach Don DeNoon hope will continue as the season progresses.

DeNoon said that Salukis had one of their best performances ever in the Midwest Collegiate Cross Country Championships

Saturday, placing second in a field of 26 teams.

DeNoon said the team fared well overall, losing only to host University of Wisconsin-Parkside.

"Considering that Wisconsin is a powerhouse ranked among the Top 5 in the country, we did rather well," DeNoon said. "I do feel that there wasn't enough

OCTOBER EUROPEAN SUMMIT CALLED

British Prime Minister John Major Sunday night announced that an extraordinary European Community summit would be held at the beginning of October. The meeting to be attended by heads of state and government of the 12 E.C. member nations could discuss the consequences of the narrow French "Yes" to the Maastricht Treaty on European Union in Sunday's referendum and Denmark's rejection of the document in its present form.

EGYPT SIGNS CONTRACT FOR REACTOR

Egypt has signed a 45-million dollar contract with an unnamed Argentine company for a nuclear research reactor, the daily Al-Akhbar reported Sunday. Minister of Electricity and Energy Maher Abaza was quoted as saying another 17 million dollars would be needed to install the 20-megawatt reactor, Egypt's second. The reactor, expected to go on stream in five years, will be used for scientific purposes and to develop water and mineral resources.

EGYPT SUPPORTS SECURITY RESOLUTIONS

Egyptian Foreign Amr Mussa said Sunday he supports a Security Council resolution depriving Serbia and Montenegro of the seat of former Yugoslavia at the United Nations' General Assembly. He said one of the former Yugoslav republics should not be allowed to inherit the seat of the country which used to include all the other republics. Mussa said he would support the draft agreement imposing a ban on chemical weapons.

PENTAGON MAY TEST SECRET AIRCRAFT

From the deserts of California to the panhandle of Texas, civilian observers have reported intriguing hints that the Pentagon may be testing one or more super-secret aircraft, including perhaps one with a revolutionary form of propulsion. They say they have photographed contrails shaped like doughnuts on a rope, seen delta-shaped aircraft with unusual lights, and heard engines that pulse with enough force to make walls quiver and sleepers awake.

NEW KING TRIAL HELD IN LOS ANGELES

Defense attorneys for the four police officers indicted in the Rodney King beating said they are satisfied with holding the federal trial in Los Angeles—mostly because of the judge assigned to the case. A change of venue could mean, "they might change judges, and everybody in this case thinks we're pretty well served by having Judge Davies preside over the case," Paul DePasquale, attorney for former Los Angeles Police Officer Timothy Wind, told the Daily News.

CLINTON LAUNCHES NEW CAMPAIGN ADS

Bill Clinton went to the home of the "Reagan Democrats" Sunday to launch an offensive - along with a new round of TV ads - claiming that George Bush had betrayed their trust. Speaking at Macomb Community College in this heavily white, blue collar Detroit suburb, Clinton said Bush had won their allegiance in the past with promises of economic growth that he has broken. Clinton also said he was different from past Democrats they had rejected.

BUSH TO SIGN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

President Bush formally notified Congress on Friday that he plans to sign the free trade agreement with Mexico and Canada, which generally has won the support of the administration's private sector advisory committees. The president's formal notice that he plans to sign the agreement starts the legal timetable that will lead to up-or-down votes in the House and Senate.

OFFICIAL: TAX RAISE WOULD HURT ECONOMY

Any effort to raise taxes would hurt the economy, a top White House official said Sunday, repeating a familiar theme of President Bush's re-election campaign. "I think any tax increase would have a negative effect on the economy," Deputy White House Chief of Staff Robert Zoellick, said in an interview with television journalist John McLaughlin.

Visiting Populist candidate offers solutions to economy

By John McCadd
Politics Writer

Populist presidential candidate James "Bo" Gritz, who is on the ballot in more than 20 states, will bring to SIUC his advocacy for the common man and opposition toward the IRS and the Federal Reserve.

Gritz will explain at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Student Center Ballroom D what his supporters say is the solution to the country's endangered economy.

Judy Orick, a Carbondale Gritz campaign volunteer, said the main issue of the campaign is dismantling control of the government and the Federal Reserve Board, which is responsible for the failed economy and the states' lack of autonomy.

"The Federal Reserve is controlling the economics of this country," Orick said. "They coin money for Congress and charge 10 percent or more for interest, which is why they're $80 billion in debt.

"The (Federal Reserve) is privately owned by 300 shareholders, and everybody thinks they're federal when they're not," she said.

Orick said Gritz opposes the Internal Revenue Service because he theorizes the bulk of income taxes are used to pay off the debt to the Federal Reserve Board.

Gritz also advocates ending foreign aid, instituting work programs instead of welfare and the draft of a governmental balanced budget amendment.

SIUC political science professor David Kenney said the main hindrance toward the Gritz campaign will be the U.S. two-party political system, which adversely affects many third parties.

"Look at the competition Gritz has," Kenney said. "He has to compete with (Democratic candidate Bill) Clinton and (President George) Bush, whom most people will be choosing between. People usually don't like to waste votes on someone who isn't expected to win.

"I'd be surprised if he got 3 percent of the vote," he said.

Orick said thus far, Gritz is endorsed by the National Rifle Association, several labor unions, and other independent candidates who said Gritz had the largest public impact among all of the independent parties.

Illinois Gritz campaign volunteer Terrence Smith said Gritz's strongest following comes from veterans' organizations, farmers, laborers and most often "common men."

"The common man is being hit the hardest right now," Smith said. "Most of the people who won't take a chance on a third party are people who are already financially secure, and think they'll lose everything."

Career Placement Center holds seminar in job-finding potential

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

The Career Placement Center is offering a series of seminars to help students enhance their job-finding potential, a representative for the center said.

Pam Good, a professional placement counselor said students who attend six of 17 programs are eligible to get a Career Planning Certificate.

"The certificate becomes a resume item," Good said. "Employers like to see the initiative the certificate demonstrates."

At least two of the programs must be from the five-part College of Liberal Arts Career Horizons Seminar Series. The seminars, which are scheduled between Sept. 15 and Nov. 10, focus on subjects from applying to graduate school to tapping into the hidden job market, Good said.

"The program on tapping into the hidden job market is a really good program," she said. "Only about 20 percent of open jobs are advertised in the newspaper. How do you find the other 80 percent? This seminar helps people do that."

Good said one seminar helps students fine tune the professional image. "An applicant's image is very important," Good said. "A recruiter makes decisions within the first one minute of the interview and

November 18: Idol, last bit of purity dies

CLARK KENT IS ABOUT TO reach the epitome of his mild-mannered ways—he will be dead.

But it will not be from hard work at the office. As Superman, he will be killed protecting the city of Metropolis from destruction, so saith DC Comics writers.

Various writers from the four titles that star Superman—"Action Comics," "Superman," "Adventures of Superman," and "Superman: Man of Steel"—met for their once-a-year meeting and decided to see what the effect of killing Superman would be to the people of Metropolis.

Metropolis, which annually leads the nation in interplanetary conflicts and natural disasters, became the new home of the man in red and blue when his birth planet of Krypton blew up, killing every inhabitant.

The comic-book city has yet to hear of his demise. So far, it is devastating only to the real Metropolis.

THE REAL METROPOLIS, in Illinois, which holds an annual tribute to Superman in June, already is going through the denial stages of mourning a friend's death. To the city, Superman is alive and well and the people will continue to have the celebration.

Martha Thomases, publicity manager for DC Comics, said DC Comics has been bombarded with telephone calls from fans and reporters regarding the imminent demise of the bullet-proof brother of justice. She discounts the theory that Superman is being killed because of slipping sales, contending that DC Comics would not have four titles of an unpopular character.

But like a soap opera, each season needs to end with a cliff-hanger. In this case, the writers thought a superhero was too safe hanging on the cliff, so they pried his fingers loose and let him fall. His destiny was in their hands, and the writers wanted a dramatic change without considering the effects outside of the imaginary Metropolis.

THOMASES SAID SUPERMAN WILL save the city in a fight with Doomsday, a supervillain, but the fight will end in a draw with both dying. He always said he would die for Metropolis, but no one imagined it ever happening.

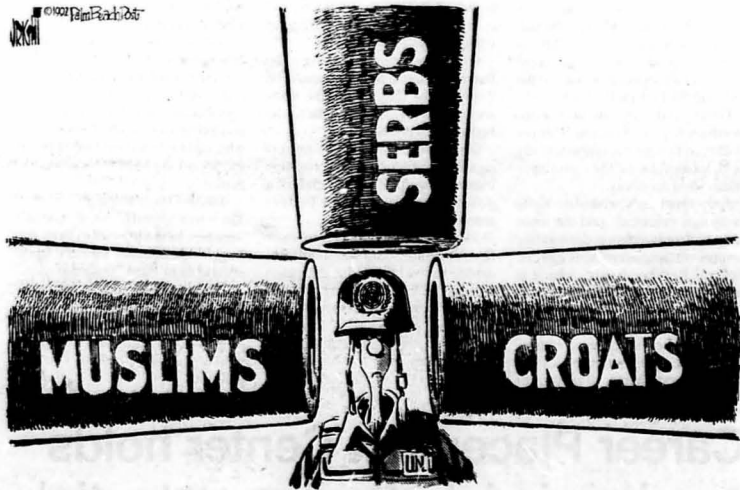

The writers will continue the issues to see how Daily Planet Editor Perry White, and reporters Jimmy Olsen and Lois Lane deal with this super-coincidence of Clark Kent missing and Superman dying—and mourning "their" deaths as well.

Clark Kent, the only reporter who truly got away with causing a news event and then writing about it later, will not have a chance to explain why he and Superman died at the same time. If the writers bring Superman back, it will not take a genius to figure out who is who in Metropolis. The glasses trick is not going to work this time.

But it was not only his life-saving tendencies nor his habitual clothes-changing in public phone booths that caused parents and children alike to love him.

UNDER THAT CLEVER DISGUISE lay the ultimate patriot. His garb complemented that of Old Glory. Often shown forefront to the flag, he was a role model for boys and a hero for girls. Even when fighting bad guys he had the best of manners, never forsaking mom, apple pie or a kitten in a tree. Who could possibly replace him? Spiderman is a reporter with a red and blue outfit, but too wisecracking for All-American heroes. Batman is too rich to identify with the majority of the melting pot, and too mysterious.

Superman may not be at the prime of popularity, but killing him off may be killing the last bastion of purity in American idols, real or not. In whom else is such a deep secret so innocent?

Opinions from Elsewhere

Turnover in Senate, House healthy; voter discontent fuels election year

Baltimore Sun

With the congressional primary elections season all but over, it is now apparent that 1993 should be a record year for newcomers in the House. There will also be a healthy turnover in the Senate.

In the House, a record 19 members lost their primary bids for renomination. Four more lost primaries in which they sought higher office. Nine more won nominations for higher office. Fifty-two representatives are retiring. Two died. And in five races yet to be determined, two incumbents are opposing each other in redrawn districts.

That adds up to 91. This is before a single general election ballot has been cast and counted. Experts on congressional politics estimate that approximately 50 incumbents in the House are vulnerable to November challenges. If anywhere near that many are defeated, it will set a modern record, surpassing the 118-member turnover after the 1948 election.

So far the Democrats have taken the brunt of the voters' assault on incumbents. Sixteen of them lost in primaries, compared to seven Republicans. But this does not necessarily mean Republicans will gain seats in the House in the general election. Many of the incumbents on the endangered species list are R-publicans. If the GOP makes any gains in the House, they are likely to be small.

In the Senate, death, retirements and one primary loss assure there will be nine new members. Polls and other portents suggest there will be more, as several incumbents show signs of weakness. Democrats could gain seats in the Senate.

Party does not seem to be factor in voters' minds. Nor even such specifics as check bouncing. Some representatives who abused the House bank have been defeated, but some have won. There is just a general spirit of anger at incumbents. We think that's healthy.

What isn't healthy is where that anger has turned to disgust with and rejection of the political process. Turnout has been quite low in many states. In a hotly contested, emotionally charged, highly publicized primary in New York this week, less than 30 percent of the Democratic voters cast a ballot.

What is healthy about an occasional voter rebellion against congressional incumbency is that it freshens the air and charges the atmosphere. The new members bring new energy and new perspectives to the institutions involved, and the old members who survive, with a there-but-for-the-grace-of-God sensitivity, change their old ways that produced the voter discontent.

Letter to the Editor

Names of sports teams reflect racist agenda, serve to degrade, shame Native Americans

In Tuesday's paper (9-15-92), there was a letter concerning the use by sports teams of Native American Indian names. The author felt that these names are used to celebrate the "fighting spirit" of the various peoples represented, but was opposed to their use because some Native Americans are offended by them.

I, too, am opposed to the use of names such as "Indians," "Illini," "Redskins," and "Chiefs"; I, too, find them offensive. Whether or not any offense is intended is not the point. The point is that these names serve to further de-humanize the over 200 indigenous cultures that lived and flourished on this continent before the arrival of Europeans.

It is shameful that Native Americans have to grow up in their own lands and be subject to this type of racist abuse.

What our history books, the cowboy and "Indians" movies, and the sports indigenous peoples of this continent into the status of things. This may enable our consciences to avoid even dealing with the 500 years of genocide we have subjected Native Americans to, but it is a pretty sad reflection on us.

The United States has broken every one of the over 300 treaties it has signed with Native American Nations, and at this very moment Native peoples continue to have their lands stolen and their cultures oppressed. We owe it to ourselves to become a people who can honor and respect the other cultures in this world in better ways than by naming our sports teams after them.

The Native American fighting spirit is one that was fighting because its very identity was at stake—quite different from a race fighting for its own deluded sense of supremacy. — Robert W. Johnston, graduate student, philosophy in their budget. The University received $175,372 of the $660,000 that was returned last spring.

Pamela Britton, director of the financial aid office, said officials felt returning a flat dollar amount of the reduction to each student was the most acceptable option.

"We thought it would be fairest for everyone who experienced a reduction to receive a refund," she said.

Brad Cole, Undergraduate Student Government President, said it would have been better in the long run to award the total reduction to the most financially needy students.

But the option University financial aid officials followed was "the fairest to each individual," he said.

Students' reimbursements ranged from $2.56 to $40.63 — about 3.8 percent of the students' original grants.

"Instead of (issuing) a $2 check, maybe putting the money into a pool and giving it to the neediest would have been more beneficial," Cole said.

Cole said he and USG executive staff members met with student government leaders from Eastern Illinois, Western Illinois, Sangamon State and Illinois State universities last weekend in Bloomington.

The student leaders are joining forces to represent students from across the state before governmental bodies such as ISAC, Illinois Board of Higher Education and the state legislature, which make cuts that will affect the universities' missions and goals.

Cole said ISAC has cost the state and the University money by taking funds back last spring.

"It's important for student governments to get together and say to ISAC, 'We can't afford to have you do this,'" he said.

Britton said the commission's miscalculation resulted in a considerable amount of time from staff and administration to make a computer program to get student's accounts credited and to return funds.

The financial aid office also has to report the names of students who sent refunds to ISAC and how much they received on the refund, causing additional paper work for the University.

"I would have liked (ISAC) never to have taken the funds last spring in the first place," she said. "But I'm at least happy they are giving money back now."

ISAC voted in January to cut the annual MAP award offer by 12 percent, forcing University financial aid officers to take back money already awarded to students.

Ruth Slottag, manager of ISAC media relations in Springfield, said the cut was a result of a 3-percent rescission to meet the state's budget problems.

The amount students returned varied. The lowest cut was $18, and the highest was $142.67.

Students who still owe tuition and fees will have the refunds credited to their accounts.

universities and community colleges have increased their reliance on tuition and fee income, according to a report issued by the comptroller's office. Tuition and fees at Illinois public universities have increased 7.4 times since 1982.

The amendment, to be voted on Nov. 3, is an opportunity to ensure the state will pay its fair share for public education, Netsch said.

The state's contribution to educational programs has declined from 48 percent a decade ago to 35 percent in the 1991-92 school year.

Illinois ranks 47th in per capita spending for education.

The amendment says the state would be obligated to contribute 50 percent or more of its funds to educational programs.

"You can't run a school system on nothing," Netsch said. "It is our responsibility to see that an adequate level of funding is there. Educators can't worry about money and how to teach."

The state is responsible for providing adequate funding for educational programs, Netsch said. It is the responsibility of educators to use those funds wisely.

Netsch said if the amendment passes it will break the stranglehold on educational funds in Illinois. If it fails, real reform of educational funding will be dead for a decade or so.

Don Wilson, vice chancellor for financial affairs at SIU, said the proportion of state funds for higher education is dropping and it is unclear if the amendment would benefit higher education.

"The state has serious budget problems and more needs exist for resources than resources to meet the needs," Wilson said.

SIU is affected by the state's budget problems, he said.

"The percentage of funds are going down," he said. "We are down to 38 percent. In 1970 about 71 percent of our funds came from tax dollars."

The reduction in funding has led to budget cuts, tuition increases, reductions in activities and pressure for educators to make do with what they have, Wilson said.

He said the amendment could be good or bad depending on how legislators react to it.

Supporters say the amendment will put stricter language in the constitution and will result in a stronger commitment to educational funding, Wilson said. Opponents say the amendment does not address how educational programs will be funded if it passes.

Legislators could react to the amendment by reallocating existing resources and taking funds away from other programs or raising taxes, he said.

Wilson said the lack of commitment for education funding will have a negative effect on Illinois, he said.

"By not funding educational programs adequately now, we face adverse effects in the future," Wilson said.

A 60-percent vote is required for the amendment to pass.

Du Quain, about the closing, only to find out Friday morning that the landfill would remain open.

"This all blew up in our face; all of a sudden everything changed," he said. "We called Dunn so he was more aware of what was happening. We do know that Dunn is on top of it now."

The state-wide regulations went into effect Friday at midnight and are intended to protect groundwater from liquid contamination caused by some landfills.

Grissom said the landfill had closed, it would have caused great difficulty in the trash hauling.

The trash from Carbondale would have had to be carried away as far as Harrisburg or Fairfield.

Leonard Hopkins, an IEPA manager in Marion, said the new guidelines will have significantly more stringent control over landfills.

"The question now asked by landfill owners and those involved is, 'Do we have everything we need to comply to the new rules, or don't we?'" he said.

Hopkins landfills are monitored for 15 years after they are closed to look for leakage and contamination.

At least eight landfills have been closed in Southern Illinois because of the new guidelines.

A report from the IEPA stated that in 1991, 35 counties were without a landfill as compared to 29 counties in 1990.

The report estimated that in three years, 52 counties will be without a landfill if no new landfills are built.

The report also indicates in 1991, 12.5 million tons of solid waste were landfilled, 1.6 million were recycled, 237,054 tons were incinerated, and 221,513 tons were composted.

There were cautionary tales: Said Italian commentator Arrigo Levi, "This is just one game, not the championship. If Prime Minister (John) Major had his back to the wall, would the English approve a referendum? The French referendum shows that people are still tied to the idea of the nation state; afraid of losing their identity."

The run-up to the French vote was marked by a week of currency turmoil as Italy and Britain withdrew from the European Monetary system, Spain devalued and a number of other currencies came under pressure because of high interest rates in Germany for the powerful deutschemark.

The currency muddle, which will likely ease Monday as markets reflect on the French vote, created strains between some European Community members, particularly Britain, and Germany. But it did not lessen support for French President Francois Mitterrand by German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, a key architect of the Maastricht Treaty approved by a bare majority of French voters.

"The positive result of the French referendum, even if it was narrow, will give the European integration process a new impetus in the remaining member states of the community," Kohl said in a statement. "In the current European and world political phase, we need more than ever a strong, unified Europe."

Spanish Foreign Minister Javier Solana echoed the German view of the vote's impact: "For Spain, it's a great satisfaction that's going to enable all of us — Spaniards and Europeans in general — to continue with the process of European union," Solana said.

Portugal was also pleased, Prime Minister Anibal Cavaco Silva saying the result demonstrated "the will of France to continue to be the mainstay of the construction of Europe."

In the aftermath, what matters most, said Kohl, "is to set the treaty on European unity into motion as foreseen." Kohl said he was confident that the German Parliament would complete the ratification process by the end of the year.

Endeavour successfully concludes experiments

Los Angeles Times

and Japanese scientists.

After making an extra orbit to allow the weather to clear, the space shuttle Endeavour landed back at Florida's Kennedy Space Center Sunday, concluding an eight-day mission devoted to more than 40 scientific experiments and already hailed as "overwhelmingly successful."

Minutes after the orbiter's seven-member crew stepped down to a red-carpet welcome, technicians climbed aboard the spacecraft to collect a host of test subjects and materials for American

The shuttle, carrying a 23-foot-long laboratory called Spacelab-J in its cargo bay, initially was scheduled to land Saturday. But the flight was extended by one day when astronauts found themselves with plenty of fuel and supplies remaining.

With clouds lingering in the landing area at dawn, flight controllers opted for an additional trip around the Earth.

An hour and a half later, at 8:53 a.m. EDT, the aerospace plane knifed across a sky of clear blue, circled over the Atlantic Ocean and made a perfect touchdown. With Endeavour's nose wheel still high off the concrete runway, a red and white drag chute trailed out from the tail to help bring it to a stop.

Kennedy Space Center director Robert Crippen called the mission, the first manned space flight collaboration with Japan, a preview of cooperative research to be conducted aboard the planned space station Freedom.

In Huntsville, Ala., where scientists had monitored the round-the-clock activities aboard Endeavor, mission manager Aubrey King said that "all pre-determined mission objectives have been met. The success of Spacelab-J is evident when you consider that we had over 40 experiments scheduled and we've received data on each one."

In the course of the flight, scientist-astronauts spent much of their days working with a variety of alloys formed in high-temperature furnaces and observing biological test subjects ranging from frogs, fruit flies and Japanese carp to homets, tadpoles and chicken eggs.

As the shuttle circled the Earth, frog eggs fertilized in orbit produced tadpoles, which proved to swim in patterns wholly unlike the siblings hatched on Earth and transported into space.

Besides the first Japanese astronaut, Endeavour's crew included the first married couple in space and the first black woman in space, physician-astronaut Mae Jemison. Mark Lee and Jan Davis wound up on the same mission because they were married after both had been selected for the crew.

A few hours after touchdown, the spacecraft was towed into the Kennedy Space Center's orbiter processing facility.

Hoping for Perot's return, supporters tentatively shift backing to Clinton and the presidential campaign so far.

When Ross Perot shut down his presidential candidacy in July, Yoli Petri felt "betrayed." Bob Lewis was "devastated" and "speechless," and Pamela Lopez wondered, "Gee, maybe he wasn't the guy I thought he was."

Yet these Phoenix-area residents, who were among Perot's most ardent supporters last summer, said they were ready to forgive him and vote for him in November if he became an active candidate. Their willingness to support Perot, they said, was not just a statement about him but also an indictment of President Bush, Democratic nominee Bill Clinton Petri, Lewis and Lopez were among eight Phoenix-area Perot supporters who talked with The Washington Post in July about presidential politics. On Thursday, they sat down again to discuss the sweep of political developments since then—Perot's withdrawal, Clinton's selection of Sen. Albert Gore Jr. as his running mate, the two party conventions, and the possibility that Perot might again become a candidate.

Perot's withdrawal made them members of one of the most courted constituencies of this election campaign, "former Perot supporters." It is this constituency that helped build Clinton's large lead after the Democratic convention, and they may again be in play as Perot resumes his tease of the American electorate over his presidential intentions.

The latest session here was almost all bad news for Bush, whose convention was, in the eyes of these people, a disaster. A family-oriented group, these early Perot backers spontaneously and repeatedly brought up their unhappiness over the Republicans' talk of "family values," which they saw as an empty political slogan and an effort by Republicans to change the subject from what they cared about most—the economy.

Aides may have known of POWs

ignore the fact because they were determined to withdraw from the conflict.

Testimony before a special Senate committee and information emerging from declassified documents strongly indicate that high officials in the Nixon administration knew that some American prisoners were left behind in Southeast Asia when the United States pulled out of the Vietnam War in 1973, but chose to

The new information has apparently produced no fresh evidence that any U.S. prisoners of war are still alive, although Sen. Robert C. Smith, R-N.H., vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs, said he has been persuaded that as recently as 1989 some were alive.

But information "in the documents, testimony and depositions given to the committee appears to confirm that in 1973, when President Richard M. Nixon said that all U.S. prisoners of war had come home, it was not true and that his senior aides knew it, even if he did not.

The Pentagon still lists 2,266 Americans as missing or unaccounted for.

Police Blotter

Carbondale Police reported a forgery and counterfeit bill Saturday at the Bank of Carbondale, 216 E. Main. Bank officials phoned police at 2:25 p.m. and reported a suspected counterfeit $20 bill in their deposits.

Carbondale Police reported damage to Taco Bell, 412 E. Walnut, from a fight early Thursday morning. Larry D. Walters, 24, Taco Bell manager, reported to police that a fight broke out in his restaurant at 2 a.m. During the fight, a 4-by-4 foot glass window was broken. No arrests were made. Damage was estimated at $500.

Carbondale Police reported a theft Thursday at 609 Campus Drive, Apt. 4. Jeffrey D. Willis, 22, reported to police his residence was entered between 1 a.m. and noon Wednesday. A 10-speed bike was reported stolen. Loss was estimated at $400.

Carbondale Police reported an auto burglary that occurred between noon Tuesday and 4 p.m. Thursday at 1100 W. College St. Ronald E. Faureau, 74, reported to police his car was broken into by unknown suspects, who allegedly removed a monie and its case, according to police reports.

Japan economy on the upswing after downturn

The Washington Post

TOKYO — For now, at least, the financial hemorrhaging has stopped. In mid-August, the Japanese financial system was in its worst sinking spell ever.

This raised new fears that Japan's giant banks would suffer such grave losses on both their property loans and their stock portfolios as to cripple the economy for years.

Finally, the bureaucrats at the Finance Ministry decided that enough was enough.

In late August, after months of insisting that the economy's problems were being exaggerated by the media, the government unveiled rescue plans for banks and an $86 billion program to shore up the economy with public works spending and loans to small businesses.

Tokyo stocks promptly soared, and the Nikkei is now hovering at the relatively comfortable 18,000 level.

Freshman video gives advice to first-year college students

The Washington Post

A student's first year in college is often the toughest. To help set a course and make the year easier in many ways, Information Video Inc. has recently released "The College Freshman Survival Guide," a video crammed with good advice and information about pitfalls to avoid.

"The freshman year is when college students encounter new friends, new ideas, new challenges and new freedoms," said writer and producer John Spiropoulos.

"New freedom may be the biggest challenge of all—a freedom to study or not, a freedom to party or not and a freedom to find some kind of balance between academics and activities."

Spiropoulos, a former Washington television newsmen, has produced several personal-finance videos and another on how to buy a car.

Finding that balance between academics and activities is where the video is sharply focused, interviewing freshmen, upperclassmen who have been through the problems of the first year and members of the faculty, who also have an expertise to offer.

Most of all, the video dishes out its advice from a peer point of view, making excellent use of the premise that students will much sooner listen to fellow students than to parents or administrators.

The presentation is divided into sections: 1) making friends and building a support system on campus; 2) managing your free time; 3) evaluating courses and professors; 4) classroom survival tactics (knowing what's worth noting and what's not); 5) successful study techniques; 6) test-taking tips; 7) how to prepare for exams, what to study and how to study; 8) roommate roulette, and getting along with a roommate; 9) party-time pitfalls; 10) mind over money.

In addition, the video (1-800-852-1355, 40 mins., $19.95) covers other problems in the transition from high school, when the student lives at home with parents, to "on-your-own" college life.

There is an excellent segment on the biggest problem on campus, alcohol, as well as discussions of drugs and date rape.

The young people give rapt attention to their fellow upperclass students as they lead especially gripping discussions on drugs, drinking, sex, and date rape. A look at the attention of the young audience to the speakers underscores the purpose and delivery of the entire cassette.

Cubans weather slump

Newsday

MADRUGA, Cuba—With stoicism, inventiveness and national pride, Cubans are struggling through what President Fidel Castro has called their "special period in a time of peace," an era of economic decline that is extraordinarily sharp by Western standards. Increasingly they grumble, but like Perez, they plow forward.

Cuban officials say that with the breakup of Cuba's patron, the Soviet Union, oil imports dropped from 13 million tons in 1989 to 6 million tons expected for this year.

Escobar surrender rumors remind Columbians of earlier escapades

Los Angeles Times

BOGOTA, Colombia—Pablo Escobar, Colombia's notorious cocaine czar now on the lam, first turned himself in to authorities more than a year ago, but only after putting this nation through a spectacle that included the pronouncements by a cryptic priest and a series of surrenders by lesser figures in Escobar's trafficking organization.

To many interested observers here, the signs are pointing again to the start of a new, embarrassing Escobar parade, possibly culminating in the re-surrender of the leader of the Medellin drug cartel.

Just last week, for example, officials took back into custody an underling who surrendered after escaping with Escobar in July, when the drug kingpin fled while being transferred out of his luxury prison near Medellin.

And once again, Father Rafael Garcia Hereros is making elliptical references to "Don Pablo" and his second coming. Asked this week if Escobar planned to surrender to authorities—again—the 83-year-old Catholic priest closed his eyes. After a long pause, he finally whispered, "The country is going to receive a surprise in a few days."

Although Escobar has managed to elude his numerous enemies, including police and a rival cartel based in the city of Cali, Escobar's lawyers again are trumpeting their client's desire to surrender, even as he repeats his old threats against the government.

Garcia, who was widely mocked here for saying Escobar would surrender and then who helped broker the deal that allowed him to do so, is helping to create a sense of national deja vu, convincing many Columbians that Escobar will soon be back in prison or at least some privileged version of it.

A number of journalists are already camped out in Medellin to try to catch the first glimpse of Escobar back behind bars. They have heard rumors that Escobar—so curvy favor with President Cesar Gaviria—will turn himself in before Monday, when the president is scheduled to address the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

Meantime, Colombian officials are fighting the impression that they are repeating history by offering concessions to Escobar to win his surrender. Hours after Jose Avendano, one of Escobar's fellow fugitives, surrendered again on Tuesday, the country's leading prosecutor denied any deal. "This is not a case of arrangements nor agreements of any kind but one of applying the law," Gustavo de Greiff said.

Despite such public protestations that no deals are being cut, many here still agree with the opinion expressed recently by a law enforcement official who warned, "The government could easily fall into a second round of negotiations" with Escobar.

But testy Colombian officials disagree. They note that there are big differences between June 1991, and this time. Chief among them: the ferocious criticism Gaviria has taken for allowing Escobar to control his prison for more than a year, then to escape it. Officials say that Escobar and his men ran their drug-and-criminal enterprise from the jail, while enjoying amenities such as a Jacuzzi and a big-screen television.

"We no longer have any political margin for any kind of concessions, and Escobar knows that," one official close to the president said.

To show they now mean business, officials pledge that when Escobar is caught, he likely will be thrown into the maximum security prison under construction in the Medellin suburb of Itagui.

The prospect of a prison even partially controlled by police would probably be anathema to Escobar, who is accused of ordering a 1990 campaign that left more than 350 officers dead in Medellin and other cities.

Although Escobar is offering signs he wants to surrender, he probably has no intention to do so and may be pursuing a complex strategy to blame the government for intransigence, a breakdown that he then would employ to try to justify a wave of terrorism similar to what the cartel conducted in early 1991, some analysts say.

24-hour science fiction TV

Sci-Fi Channel first round-the-clock science fiction channel

The Washington Post

The Sci-Fi Channel debuts Thursday night with a feature presentation, "Star Wars." The 24-hour basic-cable channel, owned by USA network, is available in about 10 million homes nationally and is expected to be added to many more regional systems.

The "Star Wars" movie will be followed by "Sci-Fi Channel Preview Show," which highlights programming on the new channel.

Some of the classic TV series that will join movies, animated shows, original series and movies on Sci-Fi are "Lost in Space," "Battlestar Galactica," "Dark Shadows" and "Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea."

"NASA Watch" is an original series that will cover news of the space program. Technology and science news will be covered on "Sci-Fi News" as the channel looks ahead to the next century.

—Sunday night on TBS: "National Geographic Explorer" examines the lives, troubles and even tragedies of exotic pets in "Born Wild." Among them: a Texas man's tiger being killed when animal-control officials try to tranquilize her; monkeys abandoned by owners ill-prepared to care for them; a lion found starving and terrified of humans; animal brokers having "canned hunts" of large cats for their pets. Repeats: the sam 'night and Saturday morning. —Sunday on Arts & Entertainment: The opening movie of "The Bowery Boys," a series of classic films based on the Broadway play "Dead End" and starring Huntz Hall, Leo Gorcey, Billy Halop, Bobby Jordan, Gabriel Dell and Bernard Punnsley—the Dead End Kids.

The first movie in this new weekly series is "Live Wires," the 1946 debut of the Bowery Boys. Repeats early Monday. —Monday on Nickelodeon: "Bullwinkle's Moose-A-Rama," offering 10 back-to-back episodes on this week's "Megatoons Mondays." —Wednesday night on USA Network at 9 p.m.: Jane Seymour stars as a mysterious woman traveling through the Arizona desert, supposedly looking for her lost daughter as a trail of victims mounts behind her. The movie, "Sunstroke," also stars Don Ameche, Stephen Meadows and Stephen Railsback. Repeats Sept. 27.

Candidates struggle to get message past media

Los Angeles Times

Getting elected president is harder now than when Ronald Reagan perfected the art of staging events and soundbites for TV.

After more than a decade of feeling they have been used by politicians, the media — particularly the four networks — are endeavoring to just say no to made-for-TV "photo ops." And they are attempting to spend more time analyzing policy positions and the candidates' veracity.

All too aware — and angry — about what is occurring, the candidates are already changing the way they campaign.

When Bill Clinton delivered a major speech on welfare recently, aides also arranged to release a TV advertisement on the subject that day because they feared that otherwise the networks might not carry his message. But the networks mostly ignored the speech and the ad.

When George Bush flew to Detroit to unveil his economic plan a week-and-a-half ago, he went to even greater lengths to get television to convey his message, convinced that the press would not do it for him.

His campaign spent $1 million to buy five minutes of national TV

Media becoming more critical of staged events, soundbites time that night to reprise the speech. He taped additional comments exclusively for local news stations around the country. And campaign aides taped interviews with dozens of local business leaders praising the speech and sent them out via satellite to their hometown stations.

The results were mixed. While ABC offered a straightforward account of the speech, CBS laced its coverage heavily with political analysis and NBC spent most of its time describing the plan as falling far short of its goals.

Some network journalists contend that raising the threshold of what gets on the air is forcing the campaigns to be more substantive. Campaign officials say the new style is just more journalistic impudence.

"I think it is reflective of an extraordinary degree of arrogance that the networks believe what they think is going on in America should be heard rather than what the individuals who are running for president are saying," said James Lake, deputy Bush campaign manager. "But having said that, we have to figure out how to go around that arrogance."

seem more resigned. One key Clinton strategist said the campaign now is "looking for a multiplier effect" every time an event is planned — combining speeches with ads on the same day, for instance — to make the networks consider the message to be more newsworthy.

Political insiders agree that if the presidential race ends up being close, the difference between winning and losing may revolve around which campaign best adapts to the change in the media. After all, in the age of television a key task in winning the White House in modern times has involved learning how the media behaves and then using that to control coverage.

As the 1992 campaign began, the press vowed to do things differently. In part, journalists in both print and broadcast were influenced by criticism that they failed to squarely explore the nation's most pressing issues and for allowing candidates to make charges that distorted the truth.

Al Hunt, the Washington bureau chief of the Wall Street Journal, called the networks "video nry-phomaniacs," unable to resist airing the pretty pictures that candidates arranged, even if they knew the pictures contradicted the facts.

In 1990, the Washington bureau chief of NBC, Timothy J. Russert, called on the networks to use the daily stump appearances as an introduction to examine a candidates' record.

David Broder, veteran political correspondent for The Washington Post, urged the media to press candidates on the issues voters cared most about. Others proposed more aggressive policing of claims made in advertising.

As the primaries progressed, these efforts seemed halting at best. A study conducted by the Shorenstein Barone Center at Harvard concluded that through June, the candidates still largely controlled the pictures that the networks were airing.

But since the general election campaign entered its last leg after Labor Day, the intentions and suggestions expressed last winter seemed to have come to the forefront again.

Two weeks ago, ABC anchorman Peter Jennings announced that his network was taking the most aggressive position to date.

"We're aware that a lot of you are turned off by the political process and that many of you put at least some of the blame on us," Jennings said on the air.

As a result, he said, ABC planned to "only devote time to a candidate's daily routine if it is more than routine."

There will be less attention to staged appearances and sound bites designed exclusively for television.

Instead, the network aimed to focus on how the campaign is being fought and how the candidates respond to issues that voters have told ABC are most important.

Through Election Day, the network intends to devote its long American Agenda segment each night — about 20 percent of its 30-minute evening news broadcast — to the candidates' records and ideas on specific issues.

Jennings will also conduct focus groups with undecided voters that will take the program to different battleground communities and air at length.

The idea, the brainchild of Jennings and executive producer Paul Friedman, amounts to the most aggressive approach any of the evening newscasts has adopted in covering politics.

Retiring Iacocca introduces new line of Chrysler cars as farewell

Newsday

The beginning of the end of an era comes Monday night as the last Chrysler ad starring Lee Iacocca debuts on network TV. In it, Iacocca says goodbye ... sort of.

The ad, to begin on ABC's "Monday Night Football" and "Nightline," will run through Oct. 30. Iacocca introduces a new line of cars and, referring to them and his retirement, effective New Year's Eve, he says: "You know, I gotta tell you, when it's your last turn at bat, it sure is nice to hit a home run." Iacocca will be replaced by former General Motors executive Robert J. Eaton, though he will remain as a member of the board of directors.

After 14 years leading Chrysler, Iacocca, 67, presumably will miss the limelight. But experts on advertising and on the auto industry disagree on just how much Chrysler Corp. will miss having Iacocca as its spokesman.

Although they say it less bluntly, some experts think Iacocca is simply not needed anymore—that his role in restoring confidence in Chrysler Corp. through two financial crises 10 years apart has

"When it's your last at bat, it sure is nice to hit a home run."

—Lee Iacocca

disappeared.

Now, they say, Chrysler's advertising must be centered around its cars, especially the ones Iacocca talks about in his last ad: the much-heralded, and so far well-received, sedans code-named "LH" and scheduled to go on sale Nov. 1 as the Chrysler Concorde, Dodge Intrepid and Eagle Vision.

The LHs might be the most important new models in Chrysler's history and analysts say the company's future hinges on its success, so much so that pundits have claimed that the letters LH stand for "last hope."

"The car's got to be the focus," said Jack Trout, president of Trout and Ries, a marketing consultancy based in Connecticut. "The problem with a celebrity like Iacocca is that he detracts. People look at him; they don't look at the car."

Chrysler dealer Neil Feldstein of Medford, N.Y., said: "I think the public knows that there's a new management in place that's capable and, with the product out on the street now, it's really not essential that he be involved."

Some argue further that the kind of buyers the LHs need to entice are less receptive to the Iacoccashtick — the tough-talking, patriotic, allegedly protectionist and sometimes contentious pitch, as symbolized by advertising tag lines like, "If you can find a better car, buy it."

Macy's in financial trouble

Department store giant hopeful for big Christmas season

Newsday

The saga of the first eight months of the R.H. Macy & Co. bankruptcy reads like the script for an epic disaster film. Its stores and customers were shaken by earthquakes and threatened by riots and fires in California, engulfed by hurricanes in Florida and Louisiana and paralyzed by economic downturns on both coasts.

The chaos in some of Macy's prime selling markets mirrors the turmoil inside the department store giant itself, industry experts contend. Macy's, they say, is a company that hemorrhaged $350 million in less than a year, lost business and many top executives to competitors and still doesn't see the urgency for action.

"Macy's is in free fall," said retail consultant Howard Davidowitz. "While they're studying the questions, they're losing a fortune. I don't know what Macy's is doing, except bleeding."

Co-chairmen Mark S. Handler and Myron E. Ullman, who took over the reins of R.H. Macy & Co. in April, strenuously disagree that the company is out of control. In an extensive interview with Newsday, Ullman and Handler argued that Macy's is still in transition and predicted modest gains would be evident with the Christmas season.

They held out the recently announced, five-year plan, still in development, as a promise of long-term growth. "I assume that most vendors would like to see us be successful for the next five years and not just the next five months," Ullman said.

To retail analysts, Macy's attitude is like hoping for another "Miracle on 34th Street." But optimism is not a new way of thinking for Macy's.

For years, Macy's was as much in the business of public relations as retailing under the leadership of its once seemingly invincible chairman Edward S. Finkelstein, who built the Macy's empire with hype and acquisition. Even Macy's final surrender to the forces of bad debt and bad business, when it filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code Jan. 27, did not bring about a change in Macy's image of itself as the biggest and the best.

Since publicly acknowledging its shortcomings, Handler and Ullman want to show that good things are starting to happen and that the rebuilding of Macy's has begun. Their efforts, they argue, just have not made it into the bottom line yet.

"We've given them (analysts and suppliers) nothing to be happy about at this point," Ullman said. "The question is whether there is something else we should be doing that we are not. I haven't heard a better game plan from anyone else."

Macy's said that consolidation will save it $98 million on an annual basis.

Worldwide economic woes contribute to U.S. problems

Lower interest rates may save Britain's pound

The Washington Post

LONDON — Happiness is a falling pound," said the headline in a London tabloid Saturday morning.

It reflected the widespread hope that the government, having been routed in its attempt to bolster the value of the British currency, will finally throw in the towel and slash interest rates—a step that many analysts believe can help Britain pull out of the longest peacetime recession since the 1930s.

The recession has been longer, and deeper, in Britain than virtually anywhere else. The country has been in recession for two full years, except for a slight upward blip in the third quarter last year.

The Washington Post

TOKYO — Last week it was turmoil in the European currency markets. A month ago, it was a crisis in the Japanese financial system.

To Americans, preoccupied with their nation's sluggish economy and other domestic ills, gyrations in overseas currency and stock markets may seem arcane, remote and irrelevant.

But while there may be little immediate impact in the United States from the recent economic turmoil in Tokyo and European capitals, these developments are symptomatic of a worldwide economic slowdown that is contributing to America's malaise and threatens to undermine progress toward the spread of democracy and capitalism abroad.

As this survey by Washington Post correspondents in key world capitals shows, underlying the financial tensions is a bout of economic stagnation afflicting all three major centers of the industrialized world at once—Europe, North America and Japan. Figures released last week by the International Monetary Fund show how poorly the global economy is performing. After sagging to essentially zero growth in 1991, the world's output of goods and services is expected to increase a paltry 1.1 percent this year. That is "less than half the pace of the slowest postwar recovery," noted Michael Mussa, the IMF's chief economist.

Unemployment in France, Canada and Italy will run at double-digit levels in 1992, the IMF said, and for all of the European Community the jobless rate will average 10 percent in 1993 as well.

Business confidence in Europe is shaky at best; top executives at Carrefour, France's biggest chain of supermarkets, recently halted all expansion plans because they concluded, perhaps overdramatically, that Europe and the rest of the world were heading into a full-blown 1930s-style depression.

In Japan, where labor is in short supply, there is almost no unemployment, but even this one-time economic dynamo will see its growth slow from the 5 percent annual pace of the late 1980s to 2 percent this year, according to the IMF. Losses are spreading among some of Japan Inc.'s biggest names.

10 percent of workers in France without jobs

The Washington Post

PARIS — In Paris, restaurants are still crowded and most couples do not gasp at their $100 dinners. But unemployment in France is high. Nearly 3 million French citizens, or 10 percent of the work force, cannot find jobs.

As a result, many French are encountering rising difficulties in making ends meet. At the lower end of the income scale, many farmers are hovering on the brink of bankruptcy. For months they have been disrupting political gatherings, throwing tomatoes and manure at government ministers to protest the influx of cheaper meat, fruits and vegetables from France's partners.

Even though French farmers get huge subsidies from the European Community's farm program, they are adamantly opposed to the Maastricht treaty on European union because they fear that more open trade will spell their doom. As a result, pressures are growing, in the absence of a global trade deal, for France and the EC to adopt more protectionist policies.

Even more prosperous sectors of the economy are suffering.

Global economic troubles maiming India's economy

The Washington Post

NEW DELHI — The current global recession is hobbling India's struggling economy just as the government is attempting to initiate its greatest economic reforms since independence.

In an effort to push India into the global market place, Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao has launched an ambitious and controversial effort to liberalize the Indian economy and open the xenophobic country to foreign investors. But the slowdown in Europe, North America and Japan is heightening doubts about whether he can succeed.

India, one of the world's poorest nations, has been economically battered by the global political and financial upheavals of the past three years. For decades, India has leaned heavily on a complex barter relationship with the Soviet Union and its satellite nations for most of its foreign exports.

German economy sliding

The Washington Post

While much of the rest of the world struggled with recession, Germany basked in the afterglow of the collapse of communism. Eastern Germans, hungry for the consumer society and flush with hard cash given to them by a generous Chancellor Helmut Kohl, pushed the country's economy into high gear.

Now the bills are coming due. Germany is joining its neighbors and allies in recession as the country realizes it must combat its mounting deficit through some mixture of spending cuts and higher taxes.

Government officials and private sector analysts agree that Germany is heading toward recession, with growth dropping to 2 percent this year.

Unemployment is increasing, as are bankruptcy filings. The strong mark is making it harder for exporters — the heart of Germany's economy — to sell their wares abroad.

The reconstruction of eastern Germany is moving ahead at a remarkable pace: new highways, renovated buildings and bright shops are everywhere. But the Bundesbank, Germany's central bank, last week said "there is no sign of a self-fueling upturn" in the east.

Last week's decision by the Bundesbank to reverse direction and reduce interest rates despite Germany's unusually high inflation rate of 3.5 percent is the first step toward halting the country's slide into recession, according to some analysts. But it is only a first step.

"The danger to stability is not deflected," the Federation of German Banks said last week.

The crucial and considerably more painful step for the Kohl government is deep spending cuts and higher taxes.

Either move would complicate the already precarious position of a government plagued by unemployment of about 40 percent in the east, a wave of anti-foreigner violence, and deep, unresolved questions about Germany's future, and identity.

Japanese economy receives help

The Washington Post

TOKYO — For now, at least, the financial hemorrhaging has stopped.

In mid-August, the Japanese financial system was in its worst sinking spell ever.

The Nikkei stock index, down more than 60 percent from its late 1989 peak, plunged below the 15,000 barrier. The real estate market was so depressed that transactions practically halted altogether. All this raised new fears that Japan's giant banks would suffer such grave losses on both their property loans and their stock portfolios as to cripple the economy for years.

Finally, the bureaucrats at the Finance Ministry decided that enough was enough. In late August, after months of insisting that the economy's problems were being exaggerated by the media, the government unveiled rescue plans for banks and an $86 billion program to shore up the economy with public works spending and loans to small businesses.

African nations finding markets for exports weak

The Washington Post

NAIROBI — The crisis in Europe's financial markets has created barely a ripple here, yet Kenya and other African countries are clearly hurt by the "trickle down" effects of the global recession. They depend on Europe to buy their commodities, and the prices of these exports are down on world markets.

Kenya's major exports, for example, are coffee and tea, both of which are depressed. Other African nations are dependent on copper (Zambia), tobacco (Malawi), cloves, bananas and a host of other raw materials.

The slowdown in Europe is also affecting tourism, which in Kenya has surpassed both coffee and tea as a foreign-exchange earner for the last two years. A Europe in the doldrums means fewer travelers to Africa, and tour operators are recording one of their lowest booking seasons ever.

"The worldwide recession definitely affects Kenya," said an economist in Nairobi. At a time of global slowdown, she said, "Everybody here is talking about the Kenyan recession" in terms of low commodity prices and export earnings.

Study: U.N. impaired by wasteful spending

Ambassador: Egg brochures cracked idea

The Washington Post

The U.S. government had long been leery about U.N. printing expenses. But it took the arrival of some glossy, 24-page brochures to egg Ambassador Thomas Pickering into action. Washington's envoy to the United Nations fired off a cable asking how much it cost to publish them.

Titled "Standard for Eggs-in-Shell," the brochure issued by the United Nations in Geneva was printed last year on high-quality paper with color photographs of good eggs, rotten eggs, cracked eggs, all manner of eggs.

Although it became an object of some derision in diplomatic circles, the publication — nearly 3,000 copies of which were printed in English — was, as Pickering's cable put it, "no yolk."

The Washington Post

The images are familiar: blue-bereted U.N. peace-keepers performing difficult missions in places like Lebanon and Cambodia, humanitarian relief workers fighting poverty and hunger in the Third World, idealistic U.N. employees striving to make the "new world order" a reality. As its new secretary general has observed, "The United Nations has almost too much credibility now."

But behind these images lies an enormous, largely uncontrolled bureaucracy, subject to abuses and deficiencies that impair its effectiveness, a nine-month study of the United Nations by The Washington Post has found.

Interviews with current and former U.N. officials on four continents, review of thousands of pages of documents and visits to U.N. program sites yielded these snapshots:

— Thousands of refugees in Africa have gone hungry or died because of what relief officials describe as mismanagement, negligence and, in some cases, corruption in U.N. agencies or associated governmental bodies. U.N. food aid and other resources have been pilfered for years by governments and armies with impunity.

— Peace-keeping operations, some of which drag on for decades, have become a source of soaring costs with minimal oversight. In a $1.7 billion operation in Cambodia, five times more money is budgeted for newspaper and magazine subscriptions for U.N. troops than for external auditing.

— Reports and publications that serve mainly to justify budgets and employment are printed at enormous cost, contributing to the United Nations' image as a huge paper mill. Among the works are voluminous yearbooks published years out of date and esoteric technical studies that go largely ignored.

— U.N. offices that dot the globe, such as a "regional disarmament center" in Katmandu, Nepal, often seem to have scant value beyond expanding the organization's worldwide presence. Once formed, U.N. entities hardly ever disband.

— Heavy spending on travel and conferences, including Law of the Sea talks in Jamaica in the winter and meetings of the Economic and Social Council in Geneva in the summer, often produce little more than talk and a break from New York weather. Years of negotiation are invested in such endeavors as drafting a "code of conduct" for transnational corporations, without tangible result.

UNSCEAR still active, but need questioned

The Washington Post

When Ronald I. Spiers first came to the United Nations in 1955 as a young officer in the U.S. delegation, he initiated a study on a hot topic of the day. Thus was born the U.N. Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation.

Spiers thought the group would do its study, issue a report and disband. So when he returned to the United Nations in 1989 as an undersecretary general, he was, in his words, both "amused and outraged" to find the committee still in business after 34 years.

Based in Vienna with a small permanent staff and budget, it continues to hold annual conferences of scientists from 21 countries.

"It still issues a report every year, and every year the General Assembly commends its report," Spiers said. "I asked my colleagues what it does, and not one had the slightest idea."

He added, "I never thought it would go on so long. It was just kind of a self-perpetuating thing."

Called UNSCEAR (pronounced "unscare"), the radiation committee essentially summarizes and evaluates reports by U.N. member states and agencies. It defends its relevance and opposes proposals to fold it into the International Atomic Energy Agency, another U.N. agency based in Vienna.

This would "compromise the mandate of UNSCEAR," said Burton Bennett, the committee's secretary. He argues that the IAEA's job is to promote the peaceful use of nuclear energy.

— The heads of specialized U.N. agencies and other top officials operate with few checks and balances in the absence of any U.N. standards for management. The system currently has no inspector general, and a Joint Inspection Unit based in Geneva is made up mostly of retired diplomats.

These examples characterize a U.N. system that has grown into what former Undersecretary

General Brian Urquhart calls "an enormous ramshackle structure ... a most astonishing concoction."

In ways that reform advocates find both absurd and infuriating, the U.N. system appears to have careened out of control.

Many of its programs and activities have become redundant or irrelevant. Their main beneficiaries often are the bureaucrats they employ.

Election to narrow gender gap in U.S. Senate

Newsday

The U.S. Senate's gender gap is about to get narrower.

Political analysts now predict about a half-dozen women will be members of the Senate after the November election, constituting what one called a "critical mass" that could affect the issues considered, the debates conducted, the votes taken and the very face of the nation's highest legislative body and most prestigious political club.

"It's a revolution," Democratic consultant Mark Siegel said. "It has a substantive impact; it has a psychic impact; it has a tremendous impact on women who will run in two, four, six years who never would have thought of running." The evening news will start to be dominated by women senators talking about women's issues. It raises the profile of women all across America."

There are some demurrals, however.

"We're talking about a tiny percentage of the whole body, and we're also talking about members with the lowest seniority," cautioned Harriet Woods, president of the National Women's Political Caucus. "But what I do think we will see is a greater awareness of a woman's perspective on key issues."

A record 11 women have won major-party Senate nominations in this year's 35 races. What makes this different from previous years is not only their number but also their prospects for winning: Four are favored, and another three are given even odds. Half the Senate competes in the nation's 10 biggest states have competitive female candidates.

That does not include New York, where former Rep. Geraldine Ferraro last week apparently lost a hard-fought Democratic primary to state Attorney General Robert Abrams. To the dismay of some women activists, Ferraro saw a lead in the polls evaporate after attacks on her integrity from another woman in the race, New York City Comptroller Elizabeth Holtzman, who finished last behind the Rev. Al Sharpton.

The biggest reason for the strong field of women Senate candidates and the friendly climate they've encountered appears to be the reaction to last year's confirmation hearings of Clarence Thomas, when the all-male Judiciary Committee grilled Anita Hill about her accusations of sexual harassment against the Supreme Court nominee. If the committee had included a woman member or members, some analysts speculate that the hearings might have been conducted differently and even the outcome possibly changed.

"Would a woman senator have stood up and said, 'Wait a minute, boys?'" asked Norman Ornstein, a congressional scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, a moderate Washington think tank. "A Barbara Boxer might have," referring to the California congresswoman now favored to win a Senate seat.

As a group, the likely new crop of female senators are seen as forceful, impatient and generally liberal Democrats.

Hill in demand for speaking engagements

Newsday

Anita Hill, a year ago an unknown law professor teaching contracts at the University of Oklahoma, is obscure no more.

The woman who went public with allegations of sexual harassment during Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas' televised Senate confirmation hearings — and whose story was harshly scrutinized by some senators and not believed by many viewers — has become a political heroine in the campaigns of many women candidates and a sought-after star on the lecture circuit.

Sources say that Hill, now on a paid sabbatical leave from her teaching post at the Oklahoma Law Center, has had more than 1,000 requests to give speeches. She has accepted only a small number, some delivered for free and others for fees of $10,000 or more.

When she does give speeches, the content has not been personal or provocative; instead, her remarks tend to be dry, somewhat academic discourses on sexual or racial harassment or discrimination in the workplace.

She never talks directly about Thomas, whose nomination was confirmed by the Senate.

Hill was asked to speak to the Democratic National Convention, but she declined.

Braun closing in on history in bid for Senate seat

Newsday

Carol Moseley Braun arrived to address the Illinois Chamber of Commerce dinner last week to what has become a typical reception: A British television crew waiting to pose a question. A collection of student journalists from Ireland, Russia and Cameroon gathered in the back to hear her speak. Even the conservative, surf-and-turf munching business leaders applauded lustily.

Pretty heady stuff for the Cook County recorder of deeds, a previously obscure elective office and haven of patronage in the Chicago Democratic machine.

But Carol Moseley Braun seems poised to make history.

Having ousted a two-term incumbent in the Democratic primary, she is favored to become the first black woman ever elected to the U.S. Senate. If she wins in November, she would also be the only black in the Senate.

Dodgers' heaven is something else

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — After delivering a sentimental speech about Dodger pride two months ago in Philadelphia, Fred Claire was walking out of the clubhouse when a player noticed he had forgotten his pen.

The player picked it up and threw it to him.

Claire snatched the pen out of the air, then paused.

"Caught it," he announced. Amid much nervous laughter, Claire, the executive vice president and general manager, had also caught the essence of the 1992 Los Angeles Dodgers.

After a clubhouse speech that might have been made by Branch Rickey and Walter Alston, Claire proved he plays better defense than some of his players by deftly fielding a writing utensil.

This season has not been about Jose Offerman's arm, Darryl Strawberry's back and more than one error per evening.

This season has been about tradition. By desperately clinging to a tradition, the Dodgers have made a mockery of it.

From the Boys of Summer to the Stuntmen of 1988, this franchise has often won for no apparent reason other than that they were the Dodgers. In the past several years, the game and its personalities have changed drastically. But a front-office attitude borne of success had not.

Management has still treated the Dodger uniform as if it were made of magic. As if it could heal the sick and soothe the troubled. Spending more than four months in last place this summer has taught them otherwise.

The uniform could not make Jay Howell sound, or Juan Samuel younger or Kal Daniels care.

It could not coat Mike Scioscia like armor. It could not make Eric Davis play safer. It could not make Jeff Hamilton play harder. And the uniform, no matter how good it looks on him, could not make Darryl Strawberry a leader.

Even Blue Heaven, if not properly maintained and updated, can become hell. Now the Dodgers know.

Only one Dodger team in this century has finished in last place, the 1905 Brooklyn Dodgers, who were 48-104. Soon there probably will be two.

The 1992 Dodgers are not just a last-place team. They are considered by veteran scouts to be one of the worst teams in the National League in the last 25 years.

Redskins hold on, beat Lions 13-10

Zapnews

The Washington Redskins built a 13-3 lead and held on to defeat the Detroit Lions, 13-10, in a rematch of last year's NFC Championship game.

The Lions had a chance to tie the game, but rookie kicker Jason Hanson missed a 49-yard field goal attempt with 1:48 remaining in the fourth quarter. Hanson earlier kicked a 52-yard field goal in the second quarter.

A 67-yard touchdown pass from Rodney Peete to Willie Green with 9:45 left in the final period pulled Detroit within 13-10. A six-yard touchdown run by Washington's Earnest Byner late in the first quarter opened the scoring. Chip Lohmiller kicked a 53 yard field goal with 11 seconds remaining in the first half and added a 27-yard field goal early in the third quarter to give the Redskins a 13-3 lead.

Washington won its second in a row after a season-opening loss to Dallas.

Aikman, Irvin hook up on 3 TDs

Zapnews

Troy Aikman threw three touchdown passes to Michael Irvin to lead the undefeated Dallas Cowboys to a 31-20 victory over the winless Phoenix Cardinals.

The Cowboys have opened the season with three straight victories for the first time since 1983 and have won eight consecutive games for the first time since 1978-79.

The Cardinals (0-3) have lost 11 straight games.

Aikman and Irvin connected for an 87-yard score on the second play of the game and later teamed up on touchdown passes of 41 and four yards. Aikman completed 14 of 21 attempts for 263 yards and Irvin had eight receptions for a career-high 210 yards.

Emmitt Smith carried 26 times for 112 yards and scored on a one-yard touchdown run for the Cowboys. He has gained 341 yards in the first three games of the season.

Cardinals' quarterback Chris Chandler, starting in place of the injured Timm Rosenbach, threw a 34-yard touchdown pass to Randal Hill in the first quarter and completed 28 of 43 passes for 371 yards. Ivory Lee Brown scored on a one-yard run for the Cardinals.

San Francisco wins on pair of touchdowns by Young

Zapnews

Steve Young threw a pair of touchdown passes and ran for another to lead the San Francisco 49ers to a 31-14 thrashing of the winless New York Jets.

Young capped a 59-yard drive on the Niners' opening possession with a five-yard pass to Jerry Rice and scored on a 10-yard run midway through the second quarter to give San Francisco a 14-0 lead.

Young found Jamie Williams with an eight-yard touchdown pass in the final minute of second quarter as the 49ers (2-1) opened up a 24-0 halftime lead. Ricky Waters scored on a two-yard run and Mike Cofer added a 45-yard field goal for San Francisco.

Young completed 15 of 22 passes for 163 yards and ran for another 50 yards. Rice caught five passes for 73 yards.

Ken O'Brien threw two touchdown passes in the fourth quarter for the Jets. O'Brien, who started in place of the injured Browning Nagle, completed 23 of 42 passes for 264 yards with one interception.

New York receiver Terance Mathis recorded his first career 100-yard game. Mathis caught four passes for 111 yards, including a 55-yard touchdown reception from O'Brien.

San Francisco wide receiver John Taylor suffered a broken fibula in his left leg midway through the first quarter when he was hit after making a 19-yard reception.

San Francisco registered its second victory at Giants Stadium this season. The 49ers defeated the New York Giants at Giants Stadium on opening day.

Thigpen gets 200th save as White Sox win

Zapnews

Bobby Thigpen became the youngest pitcher to record 200 saves and Ron Karkovice homered and drove in four runs as the Chicago White Sox defeated the Cleveland Indians, 10-8.

The 29-year-old Thigpen recorded the final four outs for his 22nd save of the season. Thigpen is the 14th pitcher in major league history to reach 200 saves. Mike Dunne (1-0) picked up the win despite allowing three earned runs in four innings.

Cleveland starter Jose Mesa (7-11) surrendered seven runs on 10 hits in five innings.

Boston defeats Tigers as rally in 9th falls short

Zapnews

John Valentin homered and drove in three runs and the Boston Red Sox held off a ninth-inning Detroit rally to defeat the Tigers, 5-4.

Valentin singled to tie the game at 2-2 in the fifth inning and homered to give the Red Sox a 3-2 lead in the seventh. He added another RBI single as Boston padded the lead with two runs in the eighth.

Detroit pulled within a run in the ninth on a wild pitch and Phil Clark's RBI single, but Tony Fossas struck out Scott Livingstone with runners on first and third to end the game.

Frank Viola (12-12) gave up two runs on five hits over seven innings to win for the first time since August 26th and Fossas notched his second save. Detroit starter Bill Gullickson (14-12) lost his fourth straight start.

Gullickson, who has won just once in his last eight outings, allowed five runs and 11 hits in 7 2/3 innings. The victory was only Boston's third in its last 12 games. Nokes and Charlie Hayes had three hits apiece to lead a 16-hit attack.

Royer's first homer lifts Cards to win

Zapnews

Stan Royer hit his first major league homer and drove in four runs and Rod Brewer went 5-for-5 to lead the St. Louis Cardinals to a 16-4 rout of the Chicago Cubs.

The Cardinals pounded out 22 hits off five Chicago pitchers.

The Cardinals scored six runs in the first inning off Chicago starter Shawn Boskie (5-10), who failed to retire any of the seven batters he faced.

Boskie allowed six hits, walked one and was replaced after Geronimo Pena's three-run double. Felix Jose had a two-run single and Royer, who went 4-for-5, added an RBI single. Bryn Smith (2-1) relieved starter Mark Clark in the fourth inning and allowed one run in four innings to earn the win.

Royer hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning off reliever Jeff Hartscock. Royer and Pena had R-B-I singles in St. Louis' three-run eighth inning.

Bien Figueroa's three-run double in the ninth inning completed the scoring for St. Louis. Ryne Sandberg hit his 24th home run of the year for the Cubs.

The Cardinals split a doubleheader with the Cubs Saturday, winning in extra innings in the night cap.

Toronto loses to Texas, 7-5

Jose Guzman outdueled Juan Guzman and Dan Peltier got his first two major league hits and drove in two runs as the Texas Rangers defeated the Toronto Blue Jays, 7-5.

Toronto, which started the day five games ahead of Milwaukee and 5 1/2 ahead of Baltimore in the American League East, had its winning streak snapped at three.

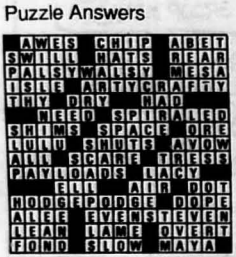

Jose Guzman (15-11) pitched 6 2/3 innings, allowing three runs on five hits with five walks and nine strikeouts.

Toronto threatened in the ninth inning scoring two runs to get within 7-5, but reliever Matt Whiteside got the final two outs for his second save. Juan Guzman (15-4) was touched for seven runs on nine hits in four-plus innings.

Texas scored three runs in the second and four in the fifth to open a 7-0 lead. Peltier was hitless in 13 major-league at-bats before driving in Rafael Palmeiro with a single for the Rangers' first run.

Al Newman and David Hulse added R-B-I singles in the second. Texas chased Juan Guzman in the fifth after Jose Canseco walked with the bases loaded, scoring Chris Colon.

Miami still No. 1 in AP poll

Miami of Florida and Washington remain the top two teams in the latest Associated Press college football poll released Sunday.

Miami (2-0) received 43 first place votes and 1,528 points in voting by a panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. Washington (3-0) received 15 first-place votes and 1,491 points in the latest poll.

Miami cruised to a 38-0 rout of Division I-AA Florida A&M Saturday. Gino Torretta passed for 170 yards and two touchdowns before leaving with a strained left shoulder in the second quarter as the Hurricanes recorded their 20th straight win.

Washington extended its winning streak to 17 games Saturday with a 29-14 triumph over Nebraska.

Napolean Kaufman, who led Washington's rushing attack with 62 yards on 12 carries, scored on a 1-yard run with 1:29 to go in the half to put the Huskies up, 16-7.

Walter Bailey's interception set up Washington at the Cornhuskers' 47-yard line and Billy Joe Hobert connected on a 29-yard scoring pass with Joe Kralik three plays later for a 23-7 halftime lead.

Florida State (3-0) remained at number three after an impressive 34-13 victory at North Carolina State.

Charlie Ward threw three touchdown passes and Cokey Sawyer had three interceptions for the Seminoles.

Michigan (1-0-1) jumped from sixth to fourth in the rankings with a 35-3 rout of Oklahoma State.

Texas A&M (4-0) defeated Missouri, 26-13, and remained at the number five position.

Florida (1-1) slipped from fourth to 13th after suffering a 31-14 loss to Tennessee (3-0). The Volunteers moved from 14th to the number eight position.

Notre Dame (2-0-1) is sixth followed by Alabama (3-0), Tennessee, Penn State (3-0) and Colorado (3-0). Alabama, which defeated Arkansas, 38-11, Saturday, received one first-place vote.

UCLA (2-0) is ranked 11th followed by Ohio State (3-0), Florida, Virginia (3-0), Nebraska (2-1), Clemson (1-1), Syracuse (2-1), Georgia (2-1), Stanford (2-1) and Oklahoma (2-1).

Ohio State beat Syracuse, 35-12, to move from 21st to 12th in the poll while Syracuse slipped from eighth to 17th.

Oklahoma was beaten by Southern California, 20-10, and fell from 13th to 20th.

Saturday as they racked up 480 yards of total offense. Saluki running back Yonel Jourdain rushed for 106 yards on 10 carries, giving him 347 yards for the season. Jourdain scored his only touchdown of the day on a 41-yard touchdown run with 3:56 remaining in the second quarter, giving SIUC a 17-0 lead.

Quarterback Scott Gabbert capped a four play, 37-yard drive with his first rushing touchdown as a Saluki, a four-yard keeper around the left side, which made it 24-0 at the end of the first half. Gabbert ended the day 13 of 18 with 215 yards passing and two touchdowns.

"I was calm in the pocket, and the offensive line did a great job. We ran a couple play actions and crossing routes against their defensive schemes and it worked for us," Gabbert said.

Gabbert threw his second touchdown, a 31-yard pass to Billy Swain in the endzone giving the Salukis a 30-0 lead with 2:26 into the third quarter. On the next Saluki drive, Gabbert escaped the grasp of two rushing Governors defenders to hook up with LaVance Banks on a 24-yard score, putting the Salukis in front 37-0 with five minutes left in the third quarter.

"Scott Gabbert had a superb day throwing the ball, and the things he did are probably not visible in the stats, but he eluded people in the pocket until someone got open," Smith said.

"Billy Swain made a great adjustment to the ball in the endzone, and you have to make those plays to win games."

Swain, who caught five balls for 81 yards Saturday, said that the man-to-man coverage that the Governors played was something the receivers worked on in practice.

"They play a lot of man coverage and we ran a lot of crossing routes to get their defense crossed up," Swain said.

Another key factor in Saturday's contest was the third down conversion success ratio. SIUC converted six of 11 third down conversion attempts, while the Governors were 0 for 10 on third down conversion attempts.

The Dawgs hit the road for the first time this season Saturday as they travel to Jonesboro, Ark., to face Arkansas State at 1:30. Arkansas State is a Division I-A school coached by former Alabama, Tampa Bay and New York Giants coach Ray Perkins. The Indians are 0-3 this year and have been outscored their opponents 141-0.

country is a difficult sport, and one has to endure the pain that comes with the territory."

Schwartz said the younger team members will need a longer time to get their act together.

"I think a lot of it has to do with experience," Schwartz said. "You get less uptight with more experience, and I hope the younger guys improve as we go along the season."

Schwartz said it would take a team effort at the MVC championships and it was important to start by helping each other at practice.

"Everyone is trying hard," Schwartz said.

the conference.

"They have good talent, good leadership and a good coaching staff," he said. "Tonight it wasn't for them, but I think it could have gone either way. It's the best I've seen my team serve this season."

Illinois State and Northern Iowa are ranked No. 1 and 2 in the MVC, respectively, but Ahrabi-Fard said on a given night any of the conference teams could get beat.

"I don't think ISU is that strong, and I don't think my team is that strong," he said.

Ahrabi-Fard said one of the game plans was to shut down Olden, and the Panthers kept her to only six kills for the night.

Natalie Walters had seven kills and two service aces for the Panthers. Dawn Meester and Carrie Shurr contributed three service aces each for UNI. The Panthers had a 18 total block assists compared to SIUC's four.

The spikers play at 7 p.m. Tuesday at Indiana State. Indiana State beat Drake Friday night in three games. Locke said the team will have to perform above what it did in Saturday night's match to beat the Sycamores.

"They have a great and obnoxious home crowd, and it's hard to win there," Locke said. "We've done it in the past, and I hope that's something we can capitalize on."

"They have some great hitters, and they're big in the middle. Our key is that we want to be quicker those types of teams. If they have big middles, we set faster sets."

depth among our athletes in their performance though."

DeNoon also said that finishing ahead of Indiana State, who is SIUC's top conference rival, was an added bonus.

The Salukis were led by junior Cathy Kershaw with a time of 18:13, placing her fifth out of the 260 finishers.

DeNoon said Kershaw shattered her previous best of 18:32 and climbed up the all-time Top 20 list in SIUC.

"Cathy's new record moves her up to 10th place in the all-time list from 17," DeNoon said. "We are all proud and very, very happy for her."

Sophomore Deborah Daehler finished 7th overall with a personal best of 18:16, up from 18:50, and put her mark in the all-time Top 20 list for the first time.

DeNoon said that tough performances were also seen by athletes Dawn Barefoot and Leean Conway-Reed, who finished in 12th and 13th place with times of 18:43 and 18:48 respectively.

"They didn't run their race, but they ran very tough," DeNoon said. "I expect them to run a lot better in future meets based on their times during training sessions."

DeNoon said good, steady performances was turned in by freshman Stacy McCormack over the last two weeks.

"Stacy was placed at 28th position with a time of 19:16," DeNoon said. "I think if she remains consistent, we might see better performances with every meet."

McCormack said she was trying to be consistent at the basics such as training hard at practices.

"I enjoy the hard workouts and the hard training," McCormack said. "Though I wasn't happy with my timing, I was really happy to make the team's lineup."

McCormack said it took a little longer and was a lot tougher than she expected to get used to the rough course at the meet.

"It's a lot different than high school," McCormack said. "I hope to gain more exposure with upcoming meets."

DeNoon said the key in performing well in a meet of this magnitude is in the early part of the race.

"When you get in a race with that many athletes, about 260 in this case, you have to be aggressive from the very start," DeNoon said. "The athlete has to concentrate on the race and not get bogged down in fighting the crowd instead of the run."

Wisconsin, one of the Big Ten colleges and a finisher in the Top 5 in the NCAA last season, beat the Salukis, DeNoon said, but SIUC was right there at the finish line.

Indians pick up pace as season progresses

Newsday

Until an extra-inning loss Thursday to Toronto, no club in the American League East had a better record since the All-Star break than Cleveland. Moreover, dating to May 24, when they were 14-30 with eight players on the disabled list, the Indians have proved they're no joke anymore. They are 56-48 since then, giving Cleveland fans much more to cheer about in that stretch than fans in New York, where the Mets and Yankees have bombed.

"When clubs come into Cleveland, the team they're playing is not a sad-sack unit," General Manager John Hart said. "Clubs don't like playing us. I'm very pleased with the job these kids have done. It's been fun to see the ship leave the shore and go sailing on its own."

Progress in Cleveland is measured in small increments. After all, the team hasn't played a postseason game in 38 years and hasn't finished within 10 games of first place in 33 years (excluding the strike year of 1981). But this team already has improved by 13 victories over last year. And by finishing fourth, it can match the Tribe's highest finish since divisional play began in 1969.

Cleveland has upgraded itself and provided more hope for the future with a core of young, underrated players, including 15-game winner Charles Nagy; center fielder Kenny Lofton, who could become the first rookie since Luis Aparicio to lead the league in stolen bases, and reliever Steve Olin, who hasn't allowed a run on the road all season. Their brightest and most overlooked stars are slugger Albert Belle and second baseman Carlos Baerga, two impact players who could give Cleveland its first pair of 100-RBI players since Larry Doby and Al Rosen of the famous '54 team.

Belle, 26, has hit 59 home runs and driven in 192 runs over the past two seasons. "He's one of the few players in the game capable of carrying a team on its back," Hart said. "He can just dominate."

The 95 RBI by Baerga, 23, are the most by a Cleveland second baseman in 44 years. He is a .305 hitter who has emerged as an equal to his more publicized rival at the position, Roberto Alomar.

"When people talk about second basemen in our league, it's always been Roberto Alomar," Hart said. "I think Carlos Baerga is right there with him. Alomar may have more range but Carlos is superior at making the double play, he has a better arm, he's got better power and he's a better run producer."

It's not easy gaining recognition in Cleveland. As Manager Mike Hargrove said, "We have 40 years of baggage to deal with." But the Indians are serving notice that they are a young team on the rise.
