County withholds tax funds from CCHS...

By Linda Henson
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Jackson County Board of Supervisors has ordered the county treasurer to withhold $11,748 from its final tax settlement with Carbondale Community High School (CCHS) District 165.

Melvin Spence, superintendent of the district, told the CCHS Board of Education at its Wednesday meeting that the district's law firm, Twomey and Doug Diggie, student president (whose status in that office is currently being reviewed by the Campus Judicial Board for Governance), said their organizations needed additional funds to finance their operations for the remainder of the semester.

Swinburne said the student organizations are entitled to $4,000 since the funds were collected from the Student Activity Fees, which finance the organizations.

The money was not allocated to the organizations when the budget for the preceding fiscal year was prepared because the budget is based on anticipated enrollment figures rather than actual enrollment, which was higher than expected this year, Swinburne said.

Swinburne said the University will not know the exact amount of money it collects until May because it has not received funds from the scholarship organizations that finance many students.

The resolution was suggested at a meeting of the statehouse committee to examine the feasibility of channeling the interest money earned by student Activity Fee account back into that account.

The interest money is currently placed into an account opened in 1974 by the discretion of President Warren W. Brooks for general educational purposes.

Swinburne suggested the organizations ask the board for the additional money while the status of the activity fee interest is determined.

University Controller Jack Simmons said he would present the student constituency heads with a financial report from the 1974-75 fiscal year so that they could determine if there is enough interest money accrued by the end of the year.

Carbondale Elementary School District 95 is investigating the possibility of filing suit against the Jackson County Board of Supervisors to receive $11,742 withheld from them for taxes collected in 1974.

Lawrence Martin, superintendent of District 95, told the Carbondale Board of Elementary Education at a meeting Thursday night that the county board had withheld $11,742 from District 95 taxes of the Revenue Year 1974, payable in 1975.

Martin told the elementary school board he felt the county board was acting unconstitutionally in withholding the money and urged the school board to file suit.

According to the 1970 revised Illinois Constitution, counties are prohibited from withholding tax revenues from tax supported agencies to pay for the counties' tax collection costs.

The school board learned in a letter received this week from Shirley Booker, Jackson County treasurer and ex-officio tax collector, that her office had been instructed by the county board to deduct the $11,742 for the tax collection cost.

In 1974 the county sent a bill to the school districts for the cost of the 1973 tax collection process. But in 1975, instead of sending a bill, the county withheld part of the tax money from the school districts.

Carbondale Elementary School District refused to pay the 1973 collection cost.

Martin said he is planning to meet with the District 95 attorney and with officials of other school districts in the county to discuss the possibility of entering into a class action suit against the Jackson County Board of Supervisors and/or the Jackson County treasurer.

"The high school district has had considerably more than this ($11,742) withheld. If we do file suit, I suggest we go all the way," James O'Donnell said.

"The Carbondale Community High School District 165 has had $15,748 withheld for the same purpose," Martin said.

Superintendent Melvin Spence said he made no definite action has been decided by the district, but it is considering filing charges against the county.

James O'Donnell, an elementary school board member, suggested that District 96 file an individual suit if other school districts in the county do not agree to enter into a class action suit.

The school board is also considering filing suit on the issue while the prompt distribution of funds collected from personal property and real estate taxes.

The board claims money payable to them has not been made available to them as the money became available to the county. Martin said the county board has been withholding the money in violation of Illinois law.

IBM System 3 Computer, but it is not equipped to handle the payroll, attendance, daily reports and scheduling. Board member William Coracy said the district will be losing about $13,500 each year if it continues to rent the computer.

"I can see it now. We should have bought it three years ago," Coracy said. "At the time, we did not feel confident to buy the system, the board decided to take bids and shop computer time."

The board approved about $20,000 for an IBM System 3 Computer. Spence recommended that the repairs be done in stages.
Rhodesian official says 'time to change tactics'

LONDON (AP) — Britain, concerned about possible new Angola-type conflicts, on Friday stepped up its campaign of pressure on southern Africa’s white governments to transfer power to black majorities in Rhodesia and Namibia South-West Africa.

In Rhodesia, Ian Smith, prime minister of the rebel white regime, said it was time to "change our tactics" and declared he is prepared to consider British involvement in a political settlement.

The Soviet-Cuban success in Angola has reawakened Western worries about a foreign Communist, in Rhodesia. The British government is already planning raids to disrupt the fighting breaks out. Black nationalist movements there have moral support from the Soviet bloc.

Foreign Secretary James Callaghan and other British foreign office ministers have hammered the theme publicly and privately the past few weeks that the only basis for a settlement in Rhodesia must involve a transfer of power to the blacks by the white minority that 11 years ago renounced British rule.

Callaghan disclosed in London that a breakdown of negotiations with the Smith’s rebel white regime and African nationalist leaders would bring "an intensification of the pressure until there is a settlement, with the possibility of an unprecedented scale."

One implication was that the guerrillas would have Soviet arms.

Callaghan said he informed Smith, that Britain would help in the event of a settlement in Rhodesia only if the rebel white regime is prepared to be flexible.

Callaghan’s approach to Smith, followed soundings with leaders of several African governments and nationalist movements. He also said he had "assured" Smith that he wanted Britain "directly involved in negotiations with the United African National Council.

Smith told the Rhodesian Parliament in Salisbury, "I believe we have traveled a steeplechase of history-this will be necessary to change our tactics. If the blacks in the government are prepared to make a constructive and realistic contribution to the settlement, then I believe we must give this serious consideration."

It was the same Smith expressed willingness to include the British government in his negotiations with black nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo and the African National Council.

The population of six million, a 500,000 hold all government power over the country’s 7 million people.

Smith also attacked what he called "irresponsible" British statements that Britain had been "interfering" with the development of an "open invitation-fête the Russians and Cubans to ‘repeat their Afghan adventure’ and to intervene in the internal affairs of Rhodesia."

Smith was also to be seen in London Thursday that Callaghan’s Deputy Prime Minister, Sir Keith Joseph, said that "No British government... would commit British troops on the continent of Africa in an attempt to bolster the minority against the majority. It would have to do so."

West German U.N. rep: Third World needs aid

By Soled Adkins Daily Press Europa Staff Writer

Trade coupled with oil, not revolution, is the key to economic development, West Germany’s United Nations representative to the United Nations said Thursday.

Speaking in Student Center ballroom to an audience of about 100 persons, Minister for Des Poole, who is a representative of the Southern Illinois United Nations Association, Alexander Count York von Wartenburg said the world has entered a new era of interdependence between the nations.

The new era, he said, was a time to work for full participation of Third World nations. Trade with a gradual, evolutionary process, he said.

Von Wartenburg is the nephew of Helmut Blank, an SIU professor of languages professor.

The U.N. is working to make a nation’s existence a peace-keeping power, he said, the East-West conflict as beer-overshadowed by the economic development. The two African States were U.N. members in 1956 when the U.N. was chartered. Today, there are 45 of the 145 nations in the U.N. today, von Wartenburg said, 111 are Third World countries.

These countries, he said, form a solid economic block that is determined to change economic development.

Von Wartenburg said that while the means of achieving independence are always entirely acceptable, the idea of putting more money into the developing nations is sound.

"Speaking we do not own anybody a living," von Wartenburg said. "We are not guilty of anything and should not have indications."

But, he said, the industrial nations have provided developing countries with needs—doctors, hospitals and food. Developing nations must be treated more as partners that the masters of the markets of tomorrow. These nations, he said, must also be developed in the industrialized nations to the point where they can at least process raw materials in the production stage of the completed product. The transnational companies, he said, have a moral obligation to help develop the countries, and the resulting decline of world poverty, von Wartenburg said, is one of the primary goals of the U.N. today.

Rhodesian official says 'time to change tactics'

CHICAGO (AP) — The head of an activist organization said Friday that Democratic gubernatorial contender Michael J. Howlett is involved in a conflict of interest over a political action committee which paid a former Illinois state senator to lobby in favor of a project proposed by Howlett. He said Kaplan would make hefty profits off sale of the properties for the expenseway.

Kaplan, who heads the conflicting incumbent Gov. Daniel Walker in the March 16 Democratic primary, was paid $15,000 a year by the Steel Co. for 15 years that he served as active state senator in the 1970s.

Survey shows obstacles to handicapped

By Tom Chesser
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer
A Carbondale-wide survey conducted to probe the needs of the city's handicapped will be used to plan future community development.

At a news conference Friday, Janel Taylor of the city's social planning department said she will recommend to the city council that they take action to help eliminate many of the physical barriers interfering with the mobility of handicapped persons in the city.

Survey results list lack of sidewalks, steep curb cuts, and overhanging trees as the most prevalent obstacles. Survey respondents complained about aisles in stores being too narrow for wheelchairs.

Two-thirds of the 119 adult respondents said they have trouble securing transportation. A slightly greater number said they would use public transportation if it were available.

Survey results indicated that less than one-fifth of the physically disabled felt they were discriminated against because they are handicapped. The survey estimated unemployment among the handicapped at 28 per cent.

Taylor said the survey indicates a need for modified housing for the handicapped, with easier wheelchair access to entrances and exits, kitchen and bathroom facilities, beds with rails, mail boxes and closets.

Survey results indicated that 40 per cent of the respondents do not live in modified housing.

Taylor said SIU has 23 modified housing units presently occupied, while the city has none.

Prohibition for Darryl Tipton was continued and he was fined $100 Friday in Jackson County Circuit Court in a petition on a revocation of his probation.

Tipton, 22, was convicted April 25, 1975, on a charge of possession of heroin and acquitted on a charge of sale of heroin. He was sentenced July 18 to three year's probation and fined $1,000.

Jackson County State's Attorney Howard Hood filed the petition on the grounds that Tipton had misrepresented his place of residence and his place and nature of employment to his probation officer and had failed to notify the officer of the changes.

Tipton was employed as a juvenile detention counselor for Sangamon County in Springfield, but was fired July 9 after he failed to report to work for several days, Hood said.

Jackson County probation officer Byron York testified in the hearing that Tipton reported to him in July and August that at both times Tipton had said he was still living and working in Springfield. Tipton signed in each month thereafter and continued to list his address as Springfield, York said.

But at that time, Tipton was living in Carbondale and drawing employment checks from NAICO, a Carbondale drug rehabilitation program which recently lost its funding from the Illinois Department of Mental Health.

Tipton is currently director of Young Americans for Progress, a drug rehabilitation program similar to NAICO.

Tipton, a former drug user turned to his probation after his place of residence and nature of employment. He said the state failed to prove that Tipton wasn't living in Carbondale.

Richman held, however, that sufficient evidence was shown to sustain the allegations that Tipton had failed to report to his probation officer and that he had failed to notify his probation officer about his change in address and employment.

On April 19, 1976, a court-appointed auditor reviewed the accounting records of the organization and found that it had misused $50,000 of its funds.

Swinburne said the additional $5,100, which he said is more than it is in northern climates.

"They have integrated into the Carbondale population and the people here don't look at them as freaks," said Taylor.

Taylor said it is her hope that Carbondale can become a model city for people who are handicapped.

A great deal has been written and published about the shortage of funds in the current public school budget. This is true in the town of Carbondale, Illinois. Gov. Daniel Walker vetoed some $81 million in school aid funds, and inflation has run rampant. But this is only a two-sided problem.

One side of the problem, and probably the most discussed, is the state's responsibility. The argument is, what is the state's responsibility? The Board of Education has been labeled "fiscally irresponsible." A Circuit Court judge mandated a decision that barred Board from boosting meagre state-aid payments. There is also the legislature which passed the bill formula in 1973, and Gov. Walker who signed that bill and vetoed funding for 1976.

The other less discussed side of the coin is the local issue. As the impact of state action filters down to the local level, public debate increases. Perhaps we can begin to set priorities and find a basis on which to start eliminating programs and staff.

That he public is not informed and lacks the knowledge to which to make decisions on such educational issues is an argument sometimes offered by school officials. This is a faulty argument in the present case. If ignorance does exist, it is at least partially the responsibility of those officials to correct that problem. Second, lack of information does not negate the value and validity of public opinion concerning priorities in education.

The drag of the job market is capable of making a decision for other people.

Why should the concept of democracy--of the right of citizens to participate in school board decisions--be so frequently overlooked? If ignorance does exist, it is at least partially the responsibility of those officials to correct that problem. Second, lack of information does not negate the value and validity of public opinion concerning priorities in education.

Town meeting a chance to look ahead

By Mark Raeber

People across the nation are preparing activities to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the American Revolution. How will Carbondalians mark this great event in history? Will they revel in past glories or will they seize the opportunity to work toward one common goal--creating systems to get us through the next 200 years?

In March, the Institute of Cultural Affairs, a not-for-profit research, demonstration and training group from Chicago, will sponsor a town meeting in Carbondale.

The meeting is one of 5,000 one-day community forums to be sponsored by the organization nationwide. The purpose of the program, "Town Meeting '76," is to gather interested citizens in the setting of a traditional town meeting and, through their combined wisdom, create practical proposals for shaping America's destiny for the future.

By participating in "Town Meeting '76," citizens can experience grass-roots democracy the way it was meant to be. They can play an important role in the decision-making process.

Funny skits and singers interspersed with commercials by the "Americans for Cancer Society," and a longer play called "American Linguine," were scheduled entertainment for the opening of the SU Cabaret Dinner Theater Friday and Saturday evening.

Entertainment is provided by the Little Egypt Sanding Players. About 25 people, most of them friends of the cast, watched the performances during a dress rehearsal Thursday evening. The dinner theater, open to open Friday evening, will re-open at 6:30 p.m. Saturday in the Old Main Room, formerly known as the Student Center Dining Room.

The dinner theater feature is divided into two acts. The first opens with "Meet the Man," and is a take-off on the "Meet the Press" series of television. In the skit Jim Belushi, a senior in theater, plays the reporter Danny Roz.Box. He interviews the Ambassador from Karadoc, played by Glenn Sabatka, a junior in radio and television. The ambassador does not speak English and his "language" is verbally his interpreter, played by John Parch, a junior in theater and co-founder of the dinner theater.

The 15-minute skit was well-received by the small audience. It was extremely well-done for a student production.

Feedback: "American Linguine" was a commercial by Belushi on smoking "Bugs" to you by the Americans for Cancer Society." Another commercial on smoking and other equally humorous ad's were used throughout the play.

Barbara Holleck, a professional singer, took the stage with her original numbers. "I've Got Enough On My Mind" and "Harsh Winds" were both bluesy-folk type songs and a good medium for her expressive voice.

The longest skit in the first act was "Mr. Big," and Debby Condon plays a cool called Heather Buble who hires a private detective to find God. Belushi as the detective does an excellent job of being a tough guy private eye who loves "the sweet smell of the green stuff." The search for God includes talking to a rabbi, played by Sabatka, a pool-shark named "Chicago Phil," played by Teri Brown, a graduate in theater and a Catholic Cardinal, also played by Sabatka.

Sabatka, who appears to be a man of many talents, again takes the stage to perform a flash-moving original number for guitar and voice called "Cruella Devil." The song is about the wicked woman in the Walt Disney film, "101 Dalmations." Sabatka may be expected to do two or three more numbers curing the second act.

The second half of the show was devoted almost entirely to "American Linguine," an original play written by Bernard Schwartz, a senior in psychology.

The play is about four 1950's greasers who, although they are 35 years old, still hang out at the laundromat. The greasers are challenged by a group of four Rah Rabs from the local high school, who have just moved to the laundromat.

To decide who gets possession, a drag race "down the strip after the big game Friday night" is planned. The greasers win, but at the loss of their leader, Dino.

The greasers are played by Parch as Dino; Belushi as Crack, who won a contest for wearing his underwear the longest; Sabatka as Igor, who is "little but tough," Teri Brown as Joe, who everyone thought was a guy; and Condon as Angel, who is a stereotyped '50's dumb brunt.

The Rah Rabs, who are dressed in modern clothing, are lead by Charles Beck, a sophomore in theater and co-director of the dinner theater; Steve Rosen, a sophomore in cinema and photography; Carol Poy, a graduate student in theater and Leslie Green, a sophomore in art.

The musical was enhanced by several songs, both solos and group numbers, including "The Laundromat of Life," "American Linguine," "Where Has All the Time Gone" and "He Loves You Baby Caught You Got His Ring." All the music was written by Schwartz, who has been replaced at the piano by Frank Altschuler. Schwartz has dropped from the show for medical reasons.

Also performing during the second act was Archette Blaine, a vocalist and freshman in journalism. Blaine, who has an excellent voice, performed "Yesterday," "I Believe," and "Old Man River." Mike Blank, administrative assistant in the Student Center director's office, said about half of the available 100 tickets have been sold. Tickets for Saturday's performances are available at the door of the dining room. Parking is free for the dinner theater.

Tickets for the show are $3 for students, $5 for seniors, $6 for a current fee statement and $10 for the general public.

Wild goose bound by student band

There was a rare chance to learn "some of the techniques of a wildlife researcher last Saturday when they helped capture and band a pair of geese at the Union County Conservation Area.

Located about 25 miles southwest of Carbondale near Warren, Ill., the Union County Conservation Area is the winter home of about 60,000 wintering wild geese.

Students of Sociology 469, game birds, utilized Lloyd Nelson, a graduate student in sociology, who is conducting a research project.

Nelson has captured and banded over 7,000 Canadian geese over the past two years at Carbondale Lake and at the Union County Conservation Area.

He is developing a new cooperative Wildlife Research Lab on the banding study. The project is sponsored by the Illinois Department of Conservation and the Max McGraw Wildlife Foundation.

Geese are captured in a 20 by 100 foot wire cage called a standing bait trap. The trap is in a pond. Geese swim through funnel-shaped holes in wire to get to the platforms in the cage where corn has been placed.

Nelson and several students with hip boots walked into the cage where about 250 geese had been trapped. They held their hands up to protect their faces from geese flying back at them.

The students drove the flock into a corner of the cage, through a trap door and down a narrow runway into a pen.

The runway has removable doors on top and each student reached in and grabbed a goose firmly at the base of its wings. Some of the students seemed hesitant as the geese hissed and rippled at their hands. Nelson assured them "They bite, but it doesn't hurt."

Nelson showed the students how to determine the age and sex of the geese. He said it was worth the effort for them to determine whether a bird was a juvenile or an adult, but it might be difficult determining sex.

"When seeing the birds it could go either way as far as the juvenile or adult go."

"One student tried so hard to get the sex right, but he never got it right," Nelson said after the students had finished ageing and sexing the birds. "He came back more than any other student. I felt sorry for the guy."

The purpose of the outing was to give students practical experience in capturing, banding and handling wild geese safely and without injury to the birds, said Gary Naim, teaching assistant for the course.

Naim said many of the students had any experience working with wild animals in the field.

"It's fun. Being able to work with something that's not tame, that's the decent thing," said Martha Hunt, a graduate student in sociology.

Avis Kennedy, a senior interested in wildlife research, said she thought the field trip was a good experience.

"I was very interested and I'd like to keep them around for everybody. I'd like to enjoy them," Kennedy said.

While working with the geese, a pair of golden eagles circled overhead. Nelson said eagles are also found at Crab Orchard and Horseshoe Lakes. He said eagles follow the geese in the refuge, preying upon crippled and dead birds.

Gymnastics head for Michigan

By Jerry Tucker

The Saluki women's gymnastics team will be played Saturday in Carbondale.

Sahaki men and women gymnasts headed north Friday toward East Lansing, Michigan, where both teams will meet their Michigan State counterparts Saturday.

For the men, it will be a chance to salvage pride after recent close losses against Iowa State and Indiana State.

For the women, it is an opportunity to win their fourth dual meet in a row and raise their seasonslate to 5-1.

The team will be led by Ali Baxing (Jean-Pierre Coppsaill after Michigan and Prayre. They will have to go out and perform, but probably not good enough.

Squads close out season

The Saluki wheelchair basketball team closed out its 1975-76 season Saturday and Sunday with games in Pullman, Wash. At 7:30 p.m., the Salukis faced the University of Illinois Gizz Kids. SIU lost by 10 points earlier in the season, but SIU Coach Don Campbell feels the teams are more evenly matched than that deficit.

The Saluki women's squash team will be at Southeast Missouri State March 7th.

Tuesday rematch with Southwest

The SIU men faced a team that averages "about 200 or 205," according to Saluki Coach Bill Meade. Southern averages more than 250 points per meet.

Michigan State is coached by Chuck Ehrlich, a former SIU gymnast who was on Meade's first NCAA championship team in 1964.

Ehrlich is national runner-up in the rings. The rings have been the Salukis' Achilles heel this season.

For that reason and others, Meade does not expect the Salukis to be competitive.

"I'm a target for all my former gymnasts who go on to coach against me," Meade smiled.

"Chuck hasn't lost...yet, but this one should be close with the loss of Wallace." Meade said, referring to Gary Wallace, who took a bye last weekend against Indiana State Tuesday and is out for the season.

Meade will again expect solid all-

Wrestlers ‘Ruffin ready’ this year

By Scott Barrascale
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Earlier this week Clyde Ruffin led his fellow wrestlers in layup basketball drills during the running segment of their daily workouts.

Basketball has always been one of Ruffin’s great loves, but the native of Dixon, has been held back in that sport by other events.

One sport Ruffin doesn’t have a lack of skills is wrestling. The 150-pound wrestler has wrestled in every match of the season.

Last Saturday Ruffin won his 23rd match of the year against Western Illinois University. Against those wins is only one loss.

Wrestling Coach Lon Long verbally doffs his cowboy hat to Ruffin. “He’s a superior wrestler. He can play any sport he wants. Ruffin is a good competitor,” Long said.

“Ruffin plays the game as good as anybody I’ve ever had.”

Ruffin represents a minority in wrestling—the black athlete. Very few blacks participate in the sport. Out of all the competitors SIU has faced this year, only about 25 or 30 were black.

“Wrestling is slower than most sports in the black population, much slower than basketball and football. A lot depends on how far he’s advanced. Ruffin had a good coach and a good program, which was in a predominately white school where I grew up,” Long said.

Ruffin did play other sports. As a high school freshman, he was offered scholarships to smaller schools such as Eastern Illinois. However he had more variables in wrestling. In 1973, Ruffin won the state championship at 132 pounds.

Because of his wrestling ability, Ruffin was offered scholarships in other sports. He was already his dream to come to SIU, since one of his teammates wrestled for Long before him.

“Here is where I had the idea about being a star, but it didn’t work out,” Ruffin said. “I got on the mat in the practice room. In high school I was top dog. Ruffin retails with a wide grin.

“For awhile I got discouraged, because I got beat up in the practice room.”

Ruffin got over his period of depression. Now he’s looked up to as a leader by some of the younger wrestlers.

Still with all this respect, Ruffin’s wrestling prowess doesn’t impress many other black athletes on campus.

“Unless they know what wrestling is all about, they don’t relate to the sport. Most of them react like I was stupid for doing it,” Ruffin said.

Ruffin explains the lack of understanding about wrestling in terms of other more noticeable athletic events.

“Basketball gives more chance of glory, and it’s easier to get your name in the paper. It’s also easier to get a scholarship,” Ruffin said.

“My goal is to go back to high school and coach wrestling. My brother will be entering high school at that time along with some other kids in the short term. I think it’s kind of expected that I will go back. My old coach expects me to come back.”

Before Ruffin assumes the coaching

The Regional熱rum is one week away and Ruffin’s thinking about his chances.

“It all depends if I get the breaks in the right places, at the nationals. When everybody hits that level, most of the wrestlers have the same skill levels. It’s who gets the breaks. Ruffin said. “But I’d rather win this year, because if I don’t the pressure will be a lot more next year. Coach always says it’s a lot easier this time, instead of the next.”

Long says Ruffin has a good chance for a national title this year, if he doesn’t make unnecessary mental mistakes.

Before regional time arrives, the Salukis meet Illinois State University and the University of Chicago in Pulliam Gym.

SIU wrestling matches at 7:30 p.m. and 1:30 p.m. and at 7:30 p.m. in between these two matches, SIU and Cincinnati will off in the SIU Arena.

Cagers take leisurely flight across corn belt

By Dave Wieczorek
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa—When the whole team is on a high all the tension of pressure-packed competition seems to ease.

The SIU basketball team was on a high Friday morning—airplane high that is—as they traveled to Drake University for a Valley rematch with the Bulldogs. A come-from-behind victory Thursday night in the Arena had everyone in good spirits as the team flew here in one offensive lift Thursday.

A loss at Bradley last weekend has the team flying high. While it is a win, it was a hard-earned one. When they come down and start to build up again for Saturday.

Saturday night the Salukis will definitely have to win. They have no second chance to lose another Valley contest and expect to stay in the race for the title.

They have already beaten Drake 95-57 in Carbondale, but the Bulldogs have a reputation being tough at home.

Lambert has no doubt that his team is ready even though SIU was sluggish offensively Thursday.

“When you play against that defense (Bradley’s 1-3-1 zone) you tend to stand around,” Lambert said. “I felt that when we executed we didn’t have any trouble. We finally wound up penetrating pretty well.”

Even though the players had a relaxing flight Friday, Lambert made it clear that the team can’t be on a leisure cruise for long.

This time of the year the adenalin has to start flowing all the time, Lambert said.

Drake is 2-5 in conference and 7-0 overall after losing to Wichita State 95-78 Thursday. The Salukis are 7-2 in conference and 13-8 overall.

The game will begin at 7:30 p.m. It can be heard on WUSM-FM and WJPF 1340.

Tankers face Cincinnati

By Mark Kasowski
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

The SIU swimming team may think it has its days mixed up when it meets the University of Cincinnati swimming team at 4 p.m. Saturday in Pulliam Pool.

The Salukis swimmers hosted Wisconsin Friday, and SIU Coach Bob Steele said the Cincinnati team would be similar to Wisconsin’s in that both teams have similar strengths.

Cincinnati boasts five swimmers who were high school All-Americans 2 years ago. In the only other meeting earlier this season in the Saluki Invitational, Cincinnati finished second behind SIU. Steele said the Bearcats have improved since.

SIU senior breaststroker Paul Schultz will not have an easy battle in his last home meet this season. Senior teammate, Krehl’s best time in the event is 2:11.25 while Schultz’s best time before the weekend was 2:12.

So the Bearcats swimming two meets in a row should not have an adverse effect on his team.

Steele said he’s not psychologically or psychologically they have to do it later (NCAA meet), so that’s why we’re doing it now,” he said.

The 400-yard medley relay and the 400-yard freestyle relay could prove to be the most exciting events Saturday. In the medley relay, SIU is less than a second ahead of Cincinnati. In the freestyle relay, the Salukis are slightly more than a second better.

Steele said Greg Porter and Dave Boyd would also have their work cut out for them in the individual medley. The top Bearcat swimmers are only a second and a half better than the SIU talent at the halfway point.

In the backstroke Saluki Mike Salerno is a half second ahead of the best Bearcat.

Steele said he may shuffle the lineup in an attempt to befuddle the visitors from the east. Steele is still experimenting in the events, but the outcome is for both the NCAA championships and the NCAA championship.

The National Independents are March 4 to 6 at Columbia, S.C. The NCAA Championships will be held March 28 to 31 at Providence, R.I.
