Inferno guts apartments of 60

Investigation cites electric blanket origin of destruction

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Sixty SIUC students were displaced Monday morning after their residences at Garden Park Apartments, 607 E. Park St., were engulfed by flames and ultimately destroyed.

Officials blame an electric blanket in apartment 116 for the 4 a.m. blaze at the three-story 100 building of the complex.

Residents of Garden Park Apartments salvage their belongings.

"The conclusion of the investigation, based on evidence collected, the spread of the fire and testimony from the residents is the fire was started by an electric blanket," Assistant Fire Chief John Manis said.

The 100 building is the nearest building to Park Street of the three in the complex. Investigators believe the fire started in apartment 116, the middle apartment on the east side of the building.

The fire was reported to the Carbondale Fire Department at 4:02 a.m. and the first truck arrived on the scene at 4:05 a.m.

Six Carbondale Fire Department vehicles and one Carbondale Township vehicle were needed to extinguish the flames.

No injuries or deaths were reported from the fire.

Manis said fire ladders located on the balconies outside the apartments helped prevent injuries which might have resulted from people jumping to escape the smoke and flames.

"I have to hand it to the landlords for putting the ladders there," he said.

"They certainly saved injuries and may have saved lives."

Blaze victim Ryan Lowthan, a sophomore in liberal arts from Charleston, said the fire spread to the entire building quickly, giving residents little time to evacuate.

"I left my third-floor bedroom and got to the ground (using an emergency ladder)," he said "In two minutes, smoke was already coming out of the third floor above number 116."

Wake-up call rescues tenants from danger

As they stood on a hill of mud looking into the remains of the smoldering apartment complex they lived in, Mike Stark and Dave Yocks shook their heads in disbelief.

"I'm just lookin' in there — and man, everything's gone," Stark said. "The whole structure's just gone."

Stark, a sophomore in engineering, and Yocks, a sophomore in political science, both from Belleville, said they were walking home to Garden Park Apartments, 607 E. Park, at 4 a.m. when they heard screams and a faint beeping noise.

"We were walking up and saw some girls come out of their apartment saying there was smoke and we ran and got the fire extinguisher, but the fire was a little too big," Stark said. "The R.A. was there when we got back and just told us to go knocking on doors and get everybody out."

With the news of a fire spreading, Yocks and Stark began waking residents. Within 10 minutes the KOREAN FREE-TRADE ZONE VENTURES DISCUSSED — BEIJING—A U.S. business delegation is in North Korea trying to negotiate commercial deals with the isolated Communist nation. Members of the group who visited Beijing over the weekend after four days in North Korea said they were warmly received in Pyongyang and had discussed possible ventures in a free-trade zone the North Koreans want to create where their northern border meets Russia and China. However, because of birthday celebrations for North Korean leader Kim Jong Il, the delegation members said they had not yet been allowed to tour the proposed free-trade zone. Instead, the group was shown pictures of the area.

PANEL RULING PLACES PAJARITO IN ARGENTINA — EL CHALTEN, Argentina—After three years of study, 60 hours of oral arguments, and 4,400 pages of evidence, a panel of Latin American jurists ruled 3 to 2 last October that territory including the humble house of Elias Rivera, or Pajarito, is in Argentina, not Chile. The verdict settles a century-old dispute and stands to transform this pristine area, where colonizers for years have struggled to make a home as both countries argued over who should govern them. Vague national borders have been a contentious issue in Latin America since the time of the Spanish Conquest, and the combination of uncharted terrain, nonexistent markers, periodic land grabs and even shifting rivers strain relations to this day.

PRIME MINISTER'S SUCCESSES PLAGUED BY DEBTS — OTTAWA—When President Clinton arrives here Thursday for his first state visit to Canada, he may be tempted to envy the good fortunes of Canada's leader. After 16 months in office, Prime Minister Jean Chretien, 61, is very popular with the Canadian people. But not everyone sees his leadership the same way. It is true that Canada is enjoying a spurt of economic growth, low inflation and declining joblessness. But Canada is plagued by fiscal and currency problems. Canada's dollar, now worth only 71 U.S. cents, has drawn unflattering comparisons to the Mexican peso. A federal debt equivalent to about 75 percent of Canada's gross domestic product has made Canada hostage to international financial markets.

'HARMLESS' RADIUM TREATMENT RE-EVALUATED — BALTIMORE—A radium treatment given to thousands of people from the 1940s to the 1960s and presumed harmless is being restudied to determine the cancer risk that might be associated with it. Pioneered at Johns Hopkins School of Public Health 70 years ago, nasopharyngeal irradiation was prescribed to correct hearing, sinus and adenoid problems in children. The treatment involved inserting radium-tipped rods into the nose to shrink excess adenoid tissue that had caused the ailments.

OFFICIAL DENVER AIRPORT OPENING EXPECTED — DENVER—After years of unpleasant cost overruns and embarrassing false starts, the Denver International Airport is expected to open Feb. 28. With five runways, miles of concrete and the latest in directional lights, the lavish new airport (known as DIA) amounts to a $5 billion gift from this region to the nation's 21st-century air travelers. The airport has been designed to smooth out air traffic across the country and make it easier to get from one point on the continent to another.

FEDERAL AGENCIES TO OFFER FINAL BUYOUTS — WASHINGTON—Interest in early retirement is expected to jump dramatically next month when non-Defense federal agencies, which employ more than half the federal work force, make their last buyout offers. Once the buyout surge is finished, U.S. agencies will be under the gun to slim down without being able to lure senior employees off the payroll with a maximum $25,000 buyout. Congress may make early retirement more attractive by threatening to raise the retirement age later this year.

Incinerator protested

Plans to burn PCBs at Crab Orchard continue

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Several groups opposed to the installation of an incinerator at Crab Orchard Lake gathered at the boat launch Monday to display signs on Illinois Route 13.

About 15 people braved the high winds beneath three fluttering American flags, holding homemade signs bearing messages including "Will you be the one to get cancer? — Or will it be your children?" and "If you like dioxin, you'll love incineration."

Industrial dumping in the area after World War II led to polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) contamination in four locations.

The U.S. Environmental Agency ordered Schlumberger Environmental Services to clean the area in 1990.

Schlumberger contracted the project to Maximilian, Inc. of Massachusetts, which will bring a portable incinerator to Crab Orchard.

Approximately 50,000 cubic yards of PCB-contaminated soil will be burned in four to six months before the incinerator is removed.

Mark Donham, head of Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists (RACE), denies that the incinerator is basically a done deal, as claimed by Guy Lombardo, project manager for Schlumberger Environmental Services.

"All options are being looked at," Donham said. "Our organizations are going to work as hard as we can to stop it."

Officials at Schlumberger Environmental Services could not be reached for comment.

Dave Beals, an undecided sophomore from Tinley Park and a member of the Student Environmental Center, said dioxin released by the incinerator will adversely affect the health of people and wildlife in the area.

"The EPA admits the incinerator is going to emit dioxin," Beals said. "In other studies, they admit the levels of dioxin people already have is close to dangerous levels and anyone could put people at a risk of possible side effects from dioxin."

Beals said some of the side

City Council candidates meet to discuss issues

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Seven of the ten candidates running for Carbondale's city council met Tuesday in a forum designed to air their positions on the campaign's issues.

The Carbondale Kiwanis Club hosted the meeting, and the city's bar-entry age was a hot topic.

Kiwanis member Navreet Kang asked the candidates about raising the city's bar-entry age to 21, and candidate Barbara A. Parrish said she opposed raising the entry age because it would not solve the underage drinking problem.

"If you take the young people out of the bars they will go to parties," she said. "At parties police can't walk through and check for underage drinkers, and there are drugs such as nitrous oxide available."

Candidate Michael G. Neill said raising the bar-entry age would help Carbondale improve its image.

"We will not succeed until we have cleaned up the party image," he said. "The majority of students are here to get an education, and if we change people's perception of Carbondale we can draw more serious students."

"Raising the entry age may not completely solve the problem, but it's the best start."

Candidate Robert A. Stalls said raising the entry age does not get to the root cause of the deeper problem.

"We need to change behavior attitudes," he said. "Parents and citizens need to come together to find ways to educate our young people."

Candidate Richard E. Morris, a council member since 1987, said if the entry age is to be raised the city will have to deal with students who are displaced.

"I think the age will go to 21, but we will have to deal with 10,000 students under 21 who don't have alternatives to bars," he said.

Candidate Roxann V. Hall said the city needs to educate its young people on what alcohol is in order to change their perceptions.

"Young people have the wrong idea about what alcohol is," she said. "Parents have to tell their kids about drinking; we need to teach them what alcohol really is."

The candidates described their plans for economic development in Carbondale, and although some had more to say than others, all agreed development was a high priority.

Candidate Kyle Englert said the city needs to take a more activist role in attracting new industry to Carbondale.

"Most important is the direct route from Carbondale to St. Louis," he said.

Candidate Jeffrey T. Shepard said new development must be stable to be effective.

"We have plenty of businesses like Wal-Mart and the restaurants for the students," he said. "We need stable businesses for the permanent residents."

Candidates also offered several specific suggestions for development, including an ice skating rink, attracting alumni back to the area.

The city council primary election will be held Feb. 28, and the top four vote-getters will go on to the general election April 4.

Halloween task force hones recommendations

By Stephanie Moletti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Carbondale's Halloween street party could be one step closer to elimination with a task force's revised recommendations Monday night.

The Mayor/Presidential Task Force on Halloween will vote by written response on the final report, which is currently in rough draft form, this week. If approved the report will be delivered to Carbondale Mayor Neil Dillard and SIUC President John Guyon early next week.

The recommendations in the report include:

- Closing the University for either a 2 to 3 day period or one week;
- Raising the bar entry age to 21 all year;
- Closing the bars on the strip for Halloween and prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages by restaurants on the Strip during Halloween;
- Closing all downtown city parking lots and requesting First National Bank to close its lot during Halloween;
- Enacting a ban on possession of beer kegs on Halloween; and
- Ask the city and University to commit resources for effective publicity before and after Halloween stating that the party is over and putting events in a more positive light.

The task force amended the rough draft with a recommendation of strict enforcement of the Student Conduct Code for students charged with criminal violations for mob action and violence against another person or property.

The committee also recommended a third option for closing the University.

Robert Gray, representing Our Savior Lutheran Church, proposed asking the University to close for one week for Halloween 1995, because the holiday falls on a Tuesday.

Gray, a member of the task force, said the University could close for a two-day break the following four years, because Halloween falls on Thursday in 1996 and over a week-end in 1997, '98 and '99.

The task force also passed a motion to include in the report that the recommendations are not prioritized and come as a package.

"To do anything less than implementation of all of these recommendations would fall short (of eliminating the party)," Bruce Joseph, a member of the task force, said.

Patrick Kelley, chairman of the task force and an SIU law professor, said he will send the revised reports to members today. Members have the option of sending written approval of the final draft to Kelley.

Kelley said if he receives a majority through written response, the task force will not meet next week.

Members of the task force may attend the City Council and Faculty Senate meetings to answer questions at Guyon and/or Dillard's request.

Student wins Boyz II Men tickets, takes youth to show

By Dustin Coleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

It would be a dream come true for any red-blooded American boy to be asked to a concert by an older female. But for one area youth this was a reality.

Jacob Ference, a fifth grader at Winkler Elementary School, was in the Student Center with his mother on Saturday. While she attended a study group, Jacob went to Bowling and Billiards.

At that time, the SIUC Student Disaster Relief Campaign was holding a bowling contest where contestants could win tickets to the Boyz II Men concert Saturday at the arena.

Jacob said he entered the contest, and was winning with just four minutes left, when a man who had already won tickets beat his score.

"At the time I was just happy to have won second place," Jacob said.

Cynthia Snell, a member of the SIUC Bowling Team, found out that Jacob had been beaten and decided to enter the contest and try to make his dream come true.

"I was wanting to go to the concert, and I felt really bad for Jacob," she said. "I said then that if I won I would ask him to go."

Snell said since the man who had beaten Jacob, had already won tickets, it made her try even harder to win.

"I set out to beat him, and I did," she said.

"I said then that if I won I would ask him to go."

continued throughout the concert. "He was dancing and yelling," she said. "There are many people that would have gone, but I probably still would have had a better time with him."

Jacob said this was his first concert and it was different than he expected.

"It was different because I didn't expect that many people, and Boyz II Men would have such a set up," he said. "I was half deaf after the show was over."

"She (Snell) was really nice," he said. "She brought binoculars so I could see, and bought me Coke. I hope that we can stay in touch and be friends."

After her victory Snell approached Jacob's mother, Teresa Abrams.

"I asked his mom, that if I could break my plans that I had for that night, if it would be all right if Jacob could go to the concert," she said.

Abrams said she talked to Snell and she seemed like a very nice, trustworthy person.

"At first I was worried that Jacob would get lost," she said. "But Cynthia seemed like a responsible person so I didn't worry."

Abrams said her son could not wait for Snell to arrive.

"He couldn't eat, and he didn't talk," saying her son was in a state of shock before Snell came.

Snell said she picked him up from his home and they had a good time from the word go.

"He was very sweet and kind, and he couldn't thank me enough," she said. "He talked my ear off on the way to the show."

Oscar nominations need new process

ALTHOUGH A FILM CREATED BY TWO SIUC alumni was nominated for a Best Editing Oscar, the Motion Picture Academy's failure to nominate the critically acclaimed "Hoop Dreams" for the Best Documentary award has turned the honor into a mixed blessing.

Various groups within the academy nominate and vote on films, depending on the category. For example, while all of the academy's 5,000 members vote on the Best Picture selections, only the 1,300 members of the acting branch determine which nominee will win the acting awards. For some categories, such as foreign-language, documentary and short films, smaller committees choose the winner.

"Hoop Dreams" was evaluated by a 47-member committee that has been notorious for controversy throughout its history.

ACCORDING TO OSCAR EXPERTS, THE documentary committee historically has had a bias against commercially or critically successful films. At $4 million, "Hoop Dreams" is the second highest grossing documentary ever made, according to Chicago Tribune figures. None of the top four commercially successful documentaries ever has been nominated for a Best Documentary Oscar.

It can be argued that achieving commercial and critical success should be its own reward, and the academy simply is giving other films a chance for recognition by refusing to nominate top-grossing documentaries. However, this represents a double standard, since box-office hits such as "Forrest Gump" and "Pulp Fiction" have received top nominations in their categories.

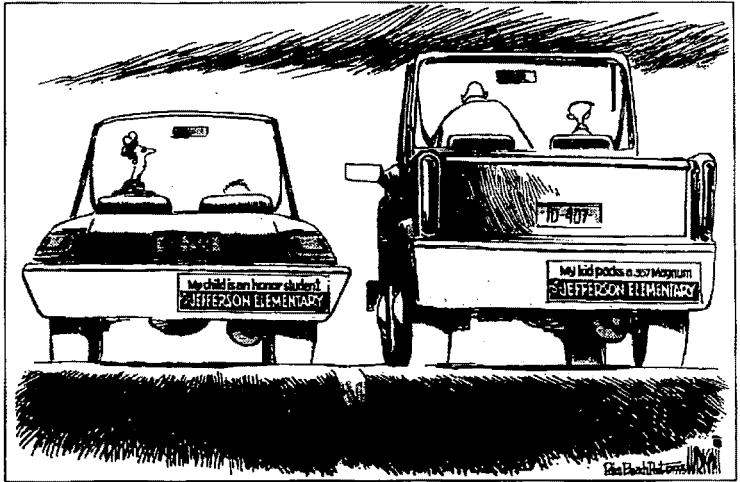

And while there is no way to prove that the documentary committee had any preconceived notions about "Hoop Dreams" — it is possible that the members simply did not like the film — it seems peculiar that one of the judges suggested that the length of the film (three hours) hindered it, yet the much-larger editing branch nominated it for an award in that category.

UNFORTUNATELY, THE SUBJECTIVE NATURE of the nomination process makes it difficult to trace unfair bias. However, the disparity in the number of academy members who vote on particular categories seems to lend itself to insider politics. It is easier for 47 people to play favorites than it is for 1,000, because there are fewer checks and balances.

The people who looked at "Hoop Dreams" were not all documentary experts. Why, then, was the committee limited to only 47 members? This number seems rather arbitrary. If the academy does not require all the judges to be experts in their category, then that category should be expanded to include the entire academy — or at least a larger voting body — to reduce the potential for personal bias. Conversely, if the academy wants to keep the number of judges small, then it should select only experts to vote on each category.

Obviously, highly specialized judges are harder to find than acting or directing experts, since most films include actors and directors, while not all films belong to a specific genre. But finding more experts would be worth the effort if it resulted in more fair decisions and less controversy.

AS LONG AS INDIVIDUALS ARE ASKED TO make subjective decisions about a film's merit, there will be accusations of bias. However, if the academy either expanded its body of voters or demanded more qualified judges for the less-popular categories, it could reduce those accusations, even if the changes did not affect the outcome.

Letter only speaks for Ensor

Andy, Andy, Andy, this is in response to your letter in the DE on Feb. 20.

You may think you were speaking for the school's population when you said that the students of SIUC do not support the closing of the school, but I do feel the school should be closed. You said, "Punish the guilty and leave the rest of us alone."

Well, maybe you should speak for yourself and leave me alone. If you want a fight, let's go, buddy.

The sad fact is, this school is known for Halloween — and for its low bar-entry age. I've heard a lot of people talking, and I've heard a few say that if the bar entry age raises that they will transfer. Call

If you choose your school because of the premise of being able to get into bars before you are 21, then I pity you.

Despite whatever you and other people believe, a lot of underage drinking goes on in the bars, and I find this sad.

Honestly, I feel the city does little to stop it. Why should they? An 18-year-old's money is as green as a 21-year-old's!

As for you running for USG president and this city's mayor — get real! You were a part of USG, and every time you opened your mouth, crap fell out.

Face it, people are sick of Halloween stories, editorials and you!

SIU faculty should unite talents to battle injustice of forest land

A few weeks ago, Southern Illinois residents woke up to the unpleasant smell of local politicians dealing rotten deals.

It took a good stench to knock everyone out of their politically impulsive slumber.

But we got it. Maybe as a trait of our age, civic participation isn't one of our boasting strengths.

Nonetheless, some of us snapped to attention last month, thanks to a couple of groups called the Kinkaid-Reed's Creek Conservancy District in neighboring Murphysboro and the Taylor Investment Company.

Taylor, as you may have heard, is the Minnesota developer who slipped down here five years ago to go land shopping in our back yard.

The conservancy district, for those of us still fuzzy on the vagaries of government machinery, is that six-member board who decided last April to hand over rights to Taylor for 2,500 acres of public land at Lake Kinkaid near Murphysboro. They gave it away.

Taylor, in turn, intends to lease lakefront homesites to builders for $30,000 each.

This raid on public forest land, forest you and I right at this moment are free to walk upon and enjoy in serenity, is termed economic development, the board says.

Bulldozing the hillsides to install thousands of private houses will bring jobs, the board says.

Jobs will bring overall property to the regions, a better tax base, etc., etc. — the check is in the mail and so forth.

We've heard economic fairy tales before.

What bothers those awakened here at SIU, since this deal has surfaced, is the disinterested and irresponsible lack of action taken by our own educated faculty.

At SIU, we are an authoritative resource of notable chemists and engineers, biologists and economists and lawyers, all expertly familiar with the details of nearly everything in America.

When someone needs to know, for instance, how many eggs an Indiana crayfish deposits, they consult a University professor.

We are all experts, and yet all of us are useless.

None of the vast knowledge contained within this University has so far stepped forward to dispute the ecological, economic or legal assumptions made by the developers behind this project.

These efforts, left to the freshmen attempts by protestors armed with little more than belief — a heartfelt conviction that our public land must remain inviolate — will be bound to fail.

Political indifference may be a quality of our times, yet it is deeply discouraging to witness the authorities of doctoral knowledge among this University stand by idly while a dark precedent of injustice dances in our backyard.

POWER airs own talk show

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The daytime talk show medium, which has permeated television screens across the country in the last couple of years, has found its way to SIUC.

The first episode of "Relatively Speaking," styled in the conventional talk show format, debuts Wednesday at 3 p.m. on SPC-TV channel 24 available only on campus.

Communication the key

The hour-long program, taped in the Student Center Auditorium Feb. 5, focused on communication in relationships. The panel of guests, including singles and couples of different sexual orientation, discussed how men and women communicate, said Jennifer Schanzle, the show's host.

"We had singles, couples and two experts we interviewed about communication in relationships and how men and women talk to each other differently and how that affects relationships," Schanzle said.

The two experts were Bryan Crow, an associate professor of speech communication, and Ata Karim, of SIUC's Counseling Center.

Interpersonally speaking

Crow said he covers these topics each semester in the interpersonal communications class he teaches.

"I think it (the talk show) was geared toward young adults and the typical kinds of relationship problems they run into."

"I think it (the talk show) was geared toward young adults and the typical kinds of relationship problems they run into," he said.

Traditional set-up

Like traditional talk shows, the singles and couples discussed their difficulties with communication and the experts responded. About 25 audience members also directed questions to the panel.

Schanzle, a graduate student in curriculum and instruction from Murphysboro, said she had fun being the host.

"It was kind of nerve-wracking to get in front of all those people at first, but we had a real good time," she said.

POWER play

A total of two shows will air this semester, but SPC-TV plans to increase the amount of episodes in the fall, Schanzle said.

"We're looking to do one every two weeks or a month next semester," she said.

"Relatively Speaking" is sponsored by the Peers on Wellness Education Radically (POWER) Program and Students For Health.

Carol Johnson, coordinator of the POWER Program, said Joanne Yantis, University Programming coordinator, approached her with the idea for the talk show last year.

A committee was formed and flyers were distributed. Students For Health recruited the panel members.

"We try to come up with new and different ways to get the health and wellness message across to students," Johnson said.

Airs on SPC-TV

"Relatively Speaking" airs on SPC-TV Wednesdays at 3 p.m., Fridays at 4 p.m. and Saturdays at 11 a.m.

For those off-campus, it can be viewed on the television beneath the escalators on the first floor of the Student Center.

The next episode of "Relatively Speaking" will focus on positive ways to channel stress. It will be taped March 26.

Researchers anticipate move to new labs

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

With the unofficial opening of the new biological sciences building just a week away, researchers from the SIU School of Medicine are looking forward to stretching their scientific arms in larger labs with newer equipment.

Beginning March 1, the anatomy department and half of the physiology department from the School of Medicine will start moving equipment and personnel to the second floor of the new building.

Rhonda Seeber, department business manager and coordinator of the move, said the move will not affect any students because the new space is allocated for research labs only.

"Graduate students will have to move some of their classes over there to new seminar rooms, but other than that, only the research facilities will move," Seeber said. "Since most of the professors will be moving during spring break, the only thing the students will miss out on is helping their professors with the move," she said.

"The labs are going to be better than ever before. (Lindegren Hall) was not built to be a research building ... The new building is built strictly for research."

chair, anatomy department

Large equipment, which will be moved by physical plant employees, will be moved first, with smaller equipment and researchers following on March 6, Seeber said.

"The whole move should take about three weeks," she said. No date has been set for the official opening of the building, according to Allen Haake, physical plant architect, but ceremonies could take place in the fall, after the building is completely occupied.

SIU School of Medicine personnel will occupy the entire second floor of the new building, with three departments of the College of Science occupying the first floor — zoology, plant biology and microbiology. William Muhlach, zoology chair, said he does not know when his researchers will be moving into the new building, but no matter when the work is given, he anticipates no problems.

The researchers cannot wait to get into the new lab space, said Thomas Cox, associate physiology professor.

"The new labs and equipment will enhance many of the research abilities of the researchers moving into the new building."

"The equipment we are getting utilizes new technology," Cox said. "Experiments will now be possible that were not possible before."

Cox said the move will not hamper any research projects running at the time of the move.

But Jaime Estavillo, anatomy chair, said some of the professors in his department are requesting to be moved into the building last because of running experiments that can't be interrupted.

"Several people are asking to move late," he said.

"It's not unusual. It just needs to be done that way because to disrupt the experiments would mean they would have to start over from scratch, and that means time and money.

"The labs are going to be better than ever before," he said. "(Lindegren Hall) was not built to be a research building; it was a teaching building that was transformed into a research facility, and that is a disadvantage.

"The new building is built strictly for research," he said.

National moot court offers law students field practice

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIU School of Law Trial Advocacy Competition Team will match wits in March with top law students from around the country in a national moot court competition.

The competition is scheduled for March 3-5 in Minneapolis, Minn.

Derek K. Hirohata, a second-year law student from Dos Palos, California, and captain of the 14-member team, said the competition allows students to gain invaluable experience in a trial setting.

"It allows us to take students to national competition and act in an actual trial environment," he said.

He said the atmosphere is more like what you see on Perry Mason or in the O. J. Simpson trial. "It is like a chess game," Hirohata said. "You have to constantly be thinking."

Students are graded in three areas: direct-examination skills, cross-examination skills and opening and closing arguments.

Law professor and faculty adviser William Schroeder said he provides the team with strategic advice. Schroeder said the purpose of competing is not really to win, but to gain experience.

"It is to give people trial skills and allow them to go before the court," he said.

Myles Epperson, a second-year law student from Granite City, said the competition gives SIU students the chance to experience how trials are conducted. "By actually doing it we learn more than just reading it in a textbook," he said.

Kendall Ray, a second-year law student from Mt. Vernon, said he was competing to gain experience in trial advocacy.

"Each of us learned the process of trial litigation," he said.

"When we get out in our field of employment, we will know how to litigate in front of a judge," he said.

Election commissioner to be named this week

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Despite delays, the Undergraduate Student Government Election Commission is coming together as an election commissioner will be named this week.

USG President Ed Sawyer said he will announce at Wednesday's meeting a nominee for election commissioner who will help organize the upcoming USG elections.

Sawyer said if the nominee accepts the position, he/she will appoint individuals to the commission.

He also said additional interviews will be conducted Tuesday in case his nominee does not accept.

Sawyer said the Internal Affairs Committee was in charge of selecting the commission by Oct. 15 but missed the deadline which made it the responsibility of the executive officers.

He said he had trouble finding individuals because of the past controversy surrounding the position, which has been accused of being biased.

Carin Musak, USG vice president, said the commission members have to be a diverse, reliable group of people who are available to meet at consistent times.

Jean Paratore, associate vice president of student affairs, said moving this year's USG election has caused some concern because of the limited amount of time before the April 10 election.

"This year's election is coming up sooner which is why I would like to see a commissioner in place," she said.

The commissioner is in charge of preparing the petitions, Paratore, USG faculty advisor, said.

Paratore said the election commission is in charge of the operational functions of the election, such as preparing rules for campaigning and working the polls.

USG senator Katrina Hebert, chairperson for the Internal Affairs Committee, said last year's election commission report on problems encountered will be available for use this year.

"Hopefully, this year's commission won't have that much trouble," she said.

"We expect the candidates will be able to start campaigning before spring break."

Domestic violence is tearing families apart or worse. But whose problem is it anyway?

Some believe that a simple shove and slap is not domestic violence. Hard times, hot tempers, alcohol abuse, and other reasons cause people to become frustrated and mean and strike out at the ones who love them most. Too often domestic violence tears families apart or worse. Who are the victims? How large has the problem become? What is being done? And whose problem is it anyway?

USG's April ballot may offer Halloween closure question

By Amanda Estabrook
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A resolution which would allow students to vote on SIUC President John Guyon's decision whether or not to close the University for Halloween will be proposed Wednesday at the Undergraduate Student Government meeting.

If passed, the resolution would become a referendum question on the April 10 USG ballot.

USG senator Jemal Powell said he authored the resolution because he felt the students had been left out of the decision.

"Two public hearings do not allow for much of a student voice in an issue this big," he said.

"The decision would affect 23,000 students. It's only fair the students get to speak on the issue."

However, Jean Paratore, associate vice-president of student affairs, said all student referendums are non-binding which means Guyon would not have any obligation to go along with the outcome of the referendum.

Paratore, a Halloween Task Force member, said putting the issue on the April 10 ballot may be too late. She said Guyon is expected to make a decision prior to the USG election.

Paratore said closing the University would mean some adjustments to the academic schedule.

"If they are going to close the University a lot of things, as far as the calendar, need to be changed," she said.

Powell, who is running for USG president, said he has not taken a side on the issue.

"There are good and bad points on both sides and I just think all the students should be able to voice their opinion rather than just 17 individuals," he said.

Jason Matthews, Graduate and Professional Student Council vice-president, said it is a good idea for students to vote on things that affect them directly, even if it is only to voice their opinion.

"Basically, there would be no impact other than to say we're displeased with the decision," he said.

In other business senators will decide whether to appoint Robert Ludwig to the vacant West Side senate seat and Troy Johnson to the vacant Evergreen Terrace senate seat. A proposed resolution that would raise the student grant fee will also be discussed.

Poll shows affirmative action programs losing supporters

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Polls suggest that several changes in American public opinion collectively have undermined support for affirmative action programs: Public expression of racist views has become largely unacceptable among white Americans; in part because of that, whites have come to believe that racial discrimination is now a thing of the past; and the percentage of Americans believing that society has a continuing "special obligation" to its black citizens has declined.

The decline in overt expression of racist views has been striking. In 1963, 78 percent of whites told pollsters that if "great numbers" of blacks came to live in their neighborhood, they would move. By 1978, only 51 percent were willing to say that, and by 1990, the proportion had dropped to 26 percent.

That shift, in turn, has helped lead whites—although notably not blacks—to the view that the United States has moved close to the goal of equal opportunity for all.

That result could be seen clearly in a 1991 Los Angeles Times Poll that asked people to compare conditions for blacks 10 years earlier with contemporary conditions regarding housing, jobs and education.

Only 22 percent of whites said in the Times Poll that conditions for blacks had been excellent or good 10 years earlier, but 58 percent said they were excellent or good at the time the poll was taken. Blacks had a sharply different view—22 percent said conditions had been excellent or good 10 years earlier; 25 percent gave that rating to contemporary conditions.

With whites believing that discrimination has faded, public dislike of special programs benefiting minority groups has hardened.

In 1975, for example, the annual social survey by the National Opinion Research Center found that 26 percent of Americans expressed fairly strong agreement with the statement that because blacks had been discriminated against, "the government has a special obligation" to them. By 1983, only 18 percent of Americans expressed a similar level of agreement—a level that has held steady since.

The Times Poll indicates that hardening of attitudes has continued.

In 1991, 24 percent of Americans responding to a Times Poll felt that "affirmative action programs designed to help minorities get better jobs and education go too far these days." By last month, support for that view had increased to 39 percent in a similar Times Poll. Among men, the belief that affirmative action had gone too far had jumped from 27 percent in 1991 to 43 percent this year.

Tough tests await GOP's 'Contract'

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Midway through its first 100 days, the new Republican majority in the House has approved the easier half of the "Contract With America" with dispatch and discipline. But the GOP initiatives have begun to pile up in a slower and more skeptical Senate.

Holding to an intense, five-day schedule that has worn down some lawmakers, unified House Republicans have attracted straying Democrats so often that nearly every GOP bill passed with at least two-thirds support.

"We're approximately halfway done by the 50th day," which falls on Wednesday, House Majority Leader Richard K. Arney, R-Texas, boasted. House Republicans had promised to bring all measures in their contract to a vote within 100 days.

While the House has approved six contract items, the Senate has acted on only two of the least controversial ones. Senators from both parties warn that major initiatives are bound to face more trouble in the Senate than they did in the House.

In both chambers, the real tests are likely to come over bigger issues such as how far Congress will go in cutting taxes and changing welfare. Prospects for term limits for members of Congress remain bleak.

House Republicans, as if making up for time lost during 40 years as a seemingly permanent minority, have churned out a constitutional amendment to require balanced federal budgets, a "line-item veto" expanding presidential powers to control spending, a parliamentary mechanism to discourage unfunded mandates on states, a package of six anti-crime bills and a defense bill. President Clinton has already signed legislation that will require Congress to comply with labor and civil rights laws.

donation is impartial, said Sandra Webster, manager of the Red Cross Little Egypt network of Carterville.

"We prefer people give cash for two reasons," she said. "Number one, it is easier to do an equal distribution of disbursing orders for their (the victims') immediate needs.

"And the most important reason is that it aids in the first step in recovery," Webster said, "and the disbursing orders will make the decisions a little easier."

The students are temporarily being housed at Stevenson Arms, another sophomore-approved residence hall. Clyde Swanson, who manages both residence areas, said the reason is simple: he had the room.

"I am making sure that all of their housing needs are being met, and Stevenson Arms is taking care of their meals," Swanson said.

Gray, who also is a Carbondale police chaplain, said the Lutheran church is accepting clothing, new personal-care items — including toothbrushes, shampoo and soap — and cash donations. He said donations in the form of a check should be made payable to the Our Savior Lutheran Church Fire Victims Fund.

"People can come to the church between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m. to drop off clothes, personal-care items or money," he said. "There are several other places to donate, like Stevenson Arms and the Red Cross, and we are just helping out, too.

The Jackson County Red Cross was the first relief agency to arrive on the scene Monday morning and, according to Webster, the Jackson county network provided breakfast in Carbondale's city council chambers for victims of the fire.

Webster said Red Cross volunteers were at Stevenson Arms to do individual casework with the victims to identify their needs.

"We are here issuing disbursing orders for wherever they want to go shopping for clothing or other needs," she said. "Each case is different, and the amount they will receive depends on a standardized national guide that we follow."

Jim Skiersch, the director of University Bookstore in the Student Center, said he is loaning the students textbooks for the remainder of the semester.

"I don't have a list of all of the names yet, but I expect to by the end of the day," he said. "The victims just need to come in, bring their student identification and we'll write up a list of the books they need, and they can return them at the end of the semester."

People who lost their student identification cards in the fire can get a free replacement card at the ID office in the Student Center.

The SIUC Counseling Center will hold a session for the fire victims at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the first-floor conference room, at Stevenson Arms. Short-term loans are available for the fire victims at the financial aid office in Woody Hall.

The Society for Advancement of Management is sponsoring a clothing and personal-item drive Wednesday from 7 to 8 p.m. in the Mackinaw room on the second floor of the Student Center. Donations may be taken there for distribution to the fire victims via Our Savior Lutheran Church, said SAM president Cary Desmon.

building was engulfed by flames, Yocks said.

"We didn't think it was going to be this big," Yocks said. "But there was nothing anybody could do and by the time we got to the third floor it (the fire) was going strong."

Returning to the scene with their parents yesterday afternoon, Yocks and Stark sifted through their charred belongings.

As television cameras loomed, they stomped through ashes to find melted compact discs, the frame of a television and tattered high school yearbooks.

"It's like a burnt marshmallow," Terry Yocks, Dave Yocks' father said. "There's nothing in there that is salvageable."

Although no possessions were recognizable, all 60 residents were accounted for and uninjured.

Residents are calling Yocks' and Stark's wake-up call a life saver.

Marcy Price, an undecided sophomore from Trenton and her two roommates were sleeping when they heard the knock on their second-floor apartment door.

"When I opened the door I couldn't even see Mike's face, the smoke was so thick," Price said. "If it wasn't for Mike, I might not be alive."

Price said she and her roommates could see smoke seeping through their floor and decided to jump off of their second floor balcony.

Clutching the bruised wrist she fell on, Price lamented her losses.

"I lost stuff that I'll never get back," she said. "I had a teddy bear that I had had since I was two and now it's gone. I slept with it every night."

Kelly Baker, a junior in dietetics from East Peoria and Price's roommate, said her teddy bear was hanging from the balcony when a fireman retrieved it.

"It's all I have left," she said, as her eyes grew red with tears from lack of sleep.

When Elliott Smith, a sophomore in biology from Glen Ellyn, heard knocking on his second-floor door, he thought it was people coming home from the bars.

"When I answered the door the smoke was so thick it made you cough," Smith said. "Those guys saved my life."

Smith, who lost all of his belongings in the fire, said he worries most about his classes and grades.

"I don't have any notes or pens to write with," he said. "I'm worried about continuing schooling, re-application and financial aid. My life would've been better not coming to Southern because I wouldn't have lost everything I own."

Fire

Garden Park, said the ladders were installed following the fatal fire at the Pyramid Apartments in 1992.

Swanson said the building was worth between $500,000 and $750,000 before it was destroyed by the fire.

"It boggles my mind that an electric blanket can cause so much damage," he said. "It is only by the grace of God that no one was hurt."

Fire fighters battled the blaze at Garden Park for more than ten hours, making sure all signs of fire were gone before they left shortly after 2 p.m.

Students displaced by the fire were moved to Stevenson Arms, a freshman-approved facility owned by S & J Enterprises, the owner of Garden Park Apartments.

Students living on the first floor of the building at the time of the fire were allowed back into what was left of the building Monday afternoon to search for the remains of their belongings.

"We have nothing but what we're wearing," Andree Wojcicki, a sophomore in exercise science from Des Plaines, said. "Sometimes you can joke about it, and sometimes it just hits you."

New approaches in fight against AIDS encouraging

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—After a long, cold winter of disappointment, disillusion and discontent, a warmer, more optimistic wind is wafting through the AIDS research community.

Despite a drumbeat of recent reports indicating that AIDS is a more dangerous and aggressive foe than most had believed, many researchers are now increasingly optimistic about the chances of fighting the disease than at any time since the discovery of AZT, the mainstay drug of current AIDS treatment programs.

That optimism—clearly present in Washington earlier this month at a national AIDS meeting—arises, in part, from the discovery that the virus is surprisingly vulnerable to combinations of antiviral agents and to a new class of drugs called protease inhibitors.

But perhaps even more important is a fundamental and dramatic change in researchers' ideas about how the HIV infection should be attacked—what scientists call a paradigm shift.

Clinicians are abandoning the standard model of HIV as a simple infection that can be treated with a single drug in the same way that a bacterial infection is cleared up with an antibiotic.

Instead, they are seeking inspiration in the field of cancer therapy, where a single tumor is aggressively attacked with a "cocktail" of different drugs that each exploit a unique vulnerability of the cancer cells.

Clinicians couldn't adopt this shotgun approach to AIDS before now because they had only five bullets—AZT and two other drugs, all targeting the same viral weakness. But the new discoveries reported at the Second National Conference on Human Retroviruses and Related Infections have suddenly stocked their armory.

Latest Sphinx restoration efforts should be more successful

The Baltimore Sun

GIZA PLATEAU, Egypt—The ancient Sphinx, ailing from its creation and injured through the centuries by quick remedies, finally may be on its way back to health.

Egyptian antiquities experts say they are confident their work now will restore and protect the ancient wonder, twice as old as Christianity. "I think we need less than a year to say to the world, 'it's finished.'" said Abdul Halim Nuredin, secretary-general of the Supreme Council on Antiquities for Egypt. "Since 1991, the restoration is going very well."

The state of the Sphinx, a man-headed lion crouching amid the great Pyramids of Giza, has been an occasional embarrassment to Egyptian officials.

Repairs in the 1980s were badly done. Scientific studies were never completed to choose the best material for patching the stone. Workers were left unsupervised and made slap-dash repairs. They used a gypsum and cement mortar that even at the time was known to be harmful for restoration work. In 1981, venter from the left paw fell off. In 1988, a good chunk of the shoulder of the Sphinx fell off.

Egyptian authorities say they are determined to avoid past mistakes. They have set up teams of experts and specialists who are overseeing the restoration work, and will continue to monitor the condition of the Sphinx through the years.

"We do no restoration work without complete analysis and investigation," said Shawky Nakhla, Egypt's director general of restoration and conservation of antiquities.

The ancient enemies of the Sphinx—wind, sand and moisture—now have co-conspirators in its decline. Modern Cairo brings corrosive pollution in the air, crowding from housing, and vibrations from vehicle traffic.

However, with foreign technical assistance, the Sphinx has been mapped by computer, probed with ultrasound, studded with weather meters, and geologically blueprint-ed.

The restorers are stripping off harmful cement used in previous repairs, and rebricking parts of the body using limestone chemically matched to the "mother" rock.

Saluki Aaron Hagele said that fan support played a big part in the victories.

"This is the first time I've seen fans at our matches," Hagele said. "I think that helps, because the team plays harder for the fans. The problem is that people usually don't know about the competitions."

Mike Verciglio, a club player, said that this was the first all-collegiate tournament this season.

"The competition was pretty good, but we were the best team there," Verciglio said. "We played better at Indiana University about two weeks ago, where out of 30 teams, we finished fifth."

The win against Indiana State gave Southern the No. 1 seeding for the Southern division, giving the team momentum heading into the next tournament, a showdown between the North and South divisions.

"We are looking to win the North/South tournament," Hagele said. "We've played and lost to some teams that will be in competition, and it will be payback time."

weather the storm by slowing down the game, shooting 74 percent from the field, and hitting 14-of-18 from the free throw line down the stretch.

The Salukis, on the other hand, went an ice cold 10-of-30 from the field after the half, while going to the line just eight times.

Herrin said he's surprised his team was able to put so much pressure on Tulsa for the MVC title, but now it will have to concentrate on the remaining two games and getting ready for the Valley tournament. "I thought that halfway through the season, nobody could touch Tulsa. I'm surprised we got as close to them as we did," he said. "We did make a good run at them before we lost these two, but that's just one of those things."

"Now it's just two more ball-games and St. Louis, and that's all it is. We'll just have to knuckle down and get the job done."

Bradley was led by Aaron Zobrist with 20, while Anthony Parker chipped in 18.

Next up for SIUC is a showdown with Evansville Saturday at the Arena on ESPN. Tip-off is at 4 p.m.

Charlotte Smith: North Carolina forward shoots way to stardom

Baltimore Sun

CHAPEL HILL, N.C.—The Shot and The Dunk.

If you've heard or seen nothing else about women's basketball over the past 10 months, chances are you know about the three-pointer at the buzzer of last April's national championship game, which gave North Carolina the NCAA title.

Likewise, you've heard or seen something about the first dunk in a women's game in 10 years, the second overall, which came 17 seconds into the Tar Heels' Dec. 4 game with North Carolina A&T.

The woman responsible for both, Tar Heels senior Charlotte Smith, has been talking about them for a while, and she would just as soon have you stop talking about them.

"I couldn't tell you," Smith said with a weary laugh when asked how many interviews she's done. "Yes (it's tiring), but I understand it's your job and you have to do it."

It's not that Smith, a 6-foot forward from Shelby, isn't happy with the consequences of her actions. Smith's shot from the right wing, launched with seven-tenths of a second on the Richmond (Va.) Coliseum clock, gave North Carolina a 60-59 win over Louisiana Tech and its first women's basketball championship, three years after the Tar Heels were in last place in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

And the dunk, the first in a women's game since Georgeann Wells of West Virginia did it during the 1984-85 season, has helped bring a record number of fans—more than 9,400 for a game against Virginia two weeks ago—into Carmichael Auditorium to see the women play.

It's just that Smith, who had been best known as the niece of North Carolina State legend David Thompson, has become the object of attention, more than she ever dreamed possible.

"After the shot, there was floods

"I've had to make myself versatile because it seems like everybody is after me."

Charlotte Smith
North Carolina forward

and floods of mail. Then, for a while, it died down. The fan mail and media requests sort of tailed off. Then, the dunk happened and there was more fan mail and more media requests," said Smith. "It's fun at first, but with basketball picking up, every minute you have to yourself is so valuable."

It's not the same kind of notice that say, another Tar Heel who wore No. 23, Michael Jordan, would attract, but it's more than the reticent Smith is used to.

But after her brother and some of his friends were rudely turned down for autographs after a Charlotte Hornets game at Charlotte Coliseum, Smith vowed that she would never reject an autograph request, so she has accepted the celebrity as a part of the game.

"From then on out, even though I was just in college, I knew I didn't want to be that way, and I would always try to be polite as possible to people, because they're the ones who get you where you're going," she said.

And the fame does have its positives. Smith won two ESPY awards last week, a video award for the outstanding college basketball play of the year and a second trophy as the outstanding women's college player.

Smith, who leads the 12th-ranked Tar Heels into Cole Field House Tuesday night against Maryland, might be on her way to another ESPY for the 1994-95 season, as well as serious consideration for national Player of the Year honors.

The Tar Heels have lost twice as many games (four) as they did all last season, but not because of Smith, who can move into third and 12th place on the all-time ACC rebounding and scoring lists Tuesday night with seven rebounds and nine points.

She leads the ACC in scoring (18.9) and rebounding (10.3) and is fourth in field-goal percentage (53.6). Smith has 15 games this season with double-figure marks in points and rebounds and has seven straight double-doubles.

It all has come against a steady opposition of double- and triple-teams from defenses that dare her teammates, guard Marion Jones and forward Stephanie Lawrence, to beat them from the outside.

"I've had to make myself versatile because it seems like everybody is after me," said Smith. "I have two and three people guarding me, but with the guards that we have on our team, when I've got two or three people on me, I can kick it out and know that Marion will hit the three or Stephanie will hit the three."

Bullets looking to deal as trade deadline nears

Los Angeles Times

That Washington Bullets General Manager John Nash has been working the phones talking to other GMs is not unusual. But she calls this week bring a certain sense of urgency.

The trading deadline is Thursday, with teams trying to make last-minute deals to better themselves for the rest of the season. The Bullets, despite their blockbuster trade earlier this season that brought in Chris Webber, are no exception.

"We've had discussions with several different parties," Nash said. "Whether we'll be able to make a deal in our best interests remain to be seen."

The two best interests for the Bullets are improvements at center and point guard. Washington would love to move disgruntled center Kevin Duckworth, but it's unlikely they'll find any takers. A rumor involving the swap of Duckworth for Denver Nuggets reserve point guard Robert Pack makes little sense with the salary cap—Duckworth's salary is $2.6 million this season compared to Pack's $1 million.

A story out of Minneapolis had the Bullets and Timberwolves exchanging their first-round picks from a year ago, swapping Calbert Cheaney for Isaiah Rider.

Goldsworthy: Original Star battling AIDS complications

Los Angeles Times

A copy of "The Goldy Shuffle: The Bill Goldsworthy Story" arrived in the mail from Minnesota last week, with a corner chewed off many years ago by our family's dog, Etiole.

L'Etoile du Nord — the full name of this strung-out poodle — was named after the North Stars. And that's all you need to know about the Dillman family.

My father, Dick, was the third employee hired when the Minnesota North Stars were born in 1967, and he stayed with the team as its public relations director through the down years and an appearance in the 1981 Stanley Cup finals until his death in 1988.

"The Goldy Shuffle" once held a prominent spot on the bookshelf of a pre-teen girl, pushing aside "Little Women" and "Anne of Green Gables."

It was published in 1971, cost $2.95 and pictured a sideburned Bill Goldsworthy doing the Goldy Shuffle, a raised knee and slight arm pump.

Compared to NFL end zone celebrations, it almost seems like an innocent display of showmanship now.

Goldsworthy, one of the original North Stars, was the franchise's first genuine star, a charismatic, high-scoring right wing.

His No. 8 is one of the two numbers that were retired by the North Stars, the other being Bill Masterton's No. 19. Goldsworthy's No. 8 once hung from the rafters of

"It's a shocker. You can get over a lot of things, but you can't get over this. All we can do is give him (Goldsworthy) our support. We've gone through a lot together."

Murray Oliver
Vancouver Canucks scout

the Met Center. Sadly, the franchise no longer is in Minnesota and the building the North Stars played in was torn down shortly before Christmas.

When the team moved, North Star employees made sure that No. 8 did not make the trip to Dallas, instead sending the banner to the Hall of Fame.

Very few people would have been familiar with Goldsworthy's accomplishments in Texas. The recent stunning news that the 50-year-old is dying from complications caused by AIDS was worth no more than a few paragraphs in Dallas.

His public revelation, to the St. Paul Pioneer Press, has moved the Minnesota hockey community into action, however.

The North Stars' alumni group is discussing a plan of assistance. Goldsworthy's former roommate, Murray Oliver, now a scout with the Vancouver Canucks, said there may be a charity game to raise money.

Oliver learned of Goldsworthy's illness about a week before it came out in the newspaper. His voice cracked as he discussed his friend at Joe Louis Arena in Detroit last week.

"It's a shocker," Oliver said. "You can get over a lot of things, but you can't get over this. All we can do is give him our support. We've gone through a lot of things together. We're all in our 50s now and still at this game. Time goes by."

"He was single and he fell off the wagon. You get drunk and you do crazy things. Obviously he did some crazy things."

Goldsworthy, who played in Minnesota from 1967-1976, said he believed he was infected through heterosexual sex when he went through a period of heavy drinking after going through a divorce.

"I can live a good life. I can't live a long life," he told the Pioneer Press.

"Every day when I wake up, I know I have one less day to live."

Dawgs dumped at Bradley, 85-68

By Grant Deady
DE Sports Editor

Get out the jumper cables—SIUC's battery is running low.

The Saluki men's basketball squad dropped from first to third place in the Missouri Valley Conference, all in less than 48 hours, as Bradley knocked off the Dawgs 85-68 Monday night in Peoria.

The loss at BU comes on the heels of a Saturday night marathon defeat to Illinois State, where the Dawgs were a 104-98 victim to the Redbirds in double overtime.

And while SIUC (18-8, 11-5) was taking another one on the chops up north, Tulsa (13-3) was at home securing at least a share of the Valley title with a 67-58 win over Wichita State.

Bradley (12-5) is now alone in second place, while Illinois State (11-5) is deadlocked with the Salukis in third. Evansville, at 10-6 in league play, is in fourth.

SIUC held a 37-28 lead at intermission and went up by as many as 12 early in the second half before the Braves unleashed on an offensive rampage.

BU went on a 25-3 run due to massive breakdowns in the Saluki defense that did all but take SIUC out of the game for good.

"I don't have any reason. There was no excuses, I don't believe in making excuses for anybody," Saluki coach Rich Herrin said. "I'm not really faulting anybody totally, but you've got to do a better job of shooting the basketball than we did."

The way SIUC came out at the beginning of the game put any thoughts of a letdown from the ISU game to rest, which is what puzzled Herrin about his team's second half of play.

"We came out mentally tough and we stepped up in the second half and, boy... I thought we were going to stay tough," Herrin said. "But the first thing you know, we relaxed a little bit and they're off and running and we're not getting back and playing defense. It didn't make any difference who we put in the ballgame, nobody ever bothered to step up and do anything."

SIUC did make a run of its own at the Braves just past the midway point of the second half, pulling within five at one point.

However, Bradley was able to

SIUC club volleyball wins MVC tourney

By Cynthia Sheets
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC men's club volleyball squad pulled out a close victory against Indiana State to capture first place in the Missouri Valley Volleyball Conference Tournament at Davies Gym Saturday.

The Salukis beat the Sycamores, 15-11, 15-12 to bring home the title at the round-robin tournament with a record of 2-1.

John Pfaff, assistant to the club, said that the winner of the last game against Indiana would come out on top.

"We could tell as the matches progressed that Indiana State was going to be our toughest competition," Pfaff said.

The club, a University sponsored program, competed with Indiana State, Evansville and Eastern Illinois for the tournament title. The Salukis lost to Eastern in three matches, 15-11, 11-15, 10-15 but beat Evansville, 15-7, 15-7 before the decisive match against the Sycamores.

The title was decided by the team with the best record, but the three-way tie was given to Southern because they were able to beat the opposing team in two sets.

Women's basketball deserves fan support

From the Pressbox

As March Madness approaches, SIUC hoops sits in first place, but this year it is not the men, but the women who own the top spot.

The Saluki women have leaped to the front of the Missouri Valley Conference standings and have a crucial two-game homestand this weekend that could secure the MVC title for SIUC.

Unfortunately, this campus has not caught on to the excitement that the SIUC women's team has been generating.

The crowds at the Arena have been pathetic and that is an understatement.

I cannot hold other people at this University responsible, because I did not attend SIUC women's basketball games before I started covering them as a reporter. Once I started watching them I realized that they play a very exciting brand of basketball.

It is a treat to watch Cari Hassell launch a three or Angenette Sumrall crash the boards for a rebound and putback.

This is a form of entertainment that people associated with SIUC should not miss, and since the team is playing well, now is the time to come out and see.

Everybody knows about Chris Carr's spectacular dunks and Marcus Timmons well-rounded game, but how many people know that Kasia McClendon is nationally ranked in steals, or that Nikki Gilmore was the only sophomore Saluki ever to be named to the MVC's All-Conference team.

The women draw only an average of 525 fans a game while conference power Southwest Missouri State averages 7,129 per contest.

Drake, who is tied with SIUC for first-place, set a new school record averaging 2,355 fans an increase of 822 people per game.

Even though the attendance has been poor, the Salukis are 9-1 in the Arena, but extra fan support will be needed to push SIUC past Drake and Creighton.

The sport's popularity has been on a rise since games have been televised on networks like CBS and ESPN. Southwest Missouri State played host to Creighton on ESPN, Jan. 27 for the MVC's televised game. If SIUC hopes to get this kind national exposure, the team needs fans to come to the game and create an atmosphere that will draw national coverage.

The Saluki women should get the attention they've earned. During head coach Cindy Scott's era, SIUC has posted a sensational 342-171 record, including three conference crowns and, in that span has only finished lower than third only once.

This is the time to show school spirit and give the Saluki women the support they deserve.

Angels three-day attendance: 25

Los Angeles Times

MESA, Ariz.—If fan turnout during the California Angels' first weekend of training camp and exhibition game ticket sales are any indication, replacement baseball is not going to be a big hit in Tempe Diablo Stadium come March.

Only one fan was on hand when the Angels began practice Friday morning and just a handful—no more than 12 each day—trickled through Gene Autry Park Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Kevin Uhlich, the team's vice president of stadium operations, said the Angels have sold about 10,000 tickets for 15 Cactus League games, down from about

"I think people are waiting to see if the strike is resolved."

Kevin Uhlich

15,000 at this point last season. Some 486 spring season tickets have been sold, compared to 586 last year.

The Angels have sold 9,500 season tickets for the regular season, down from 12,300 last year. The Angels, who lost more than $10 million during the strike-shortened 1994 season, according to President Richard Brown, figure to go deeper into the red this spring.

Because replacement players are receiving major league meal money (about $53 a day) and are being housed in a hotel, the cost of this spring training is virtually no different than if major leaguers were here.

Uhlich said the Angels usually recoup most spring training costs during the annual Freeway League series, from which the Los Angeles Dodgers and California Angels retain all revenues from home games.

But because only one game of

Some teams to play on Orioles' terms

Baltimore Sun

SARASOTA, Fla.—Baltimore Oriole general manager Roland Hemond spent part of Sunday calling around Florida, seeking reaction from opposing general managers to his club's stand against replacement players.

Hemond won't say exactly who said what. But he did say that some teams indicated a willingness to play on the Orioles' terms—that is, fielding only players signed to minor-league contracts—while others are inclined to use their players signed to replacement contracts.

"Some of them indicated they didn't think" they would play without replacements, Hemond said, "and they said, 'Get back to us. Let's talk again.'"

Team sources said the St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago White Sox have said they will play the Orioles with minor-league players, which is not a surprise. The Cardinals say they don't have any players with replacement contracts, and the White Sox say they have only one, pitcher Oil Can Boyd.

The Philadelphia Phillies, Pittsburgh Pirates and Texas Rangers, all loaded with replacement players, figure to present more of a problem.

Hemond said he would accept the word of opposing general managers that their teams are replacement-free. "That's good enough for me," Hemond said.

If the Orioles don't actually check whether their opponents are under minor-league or replacement contracts and the opposing teams don't tell, the issue may be avoided altogether.
