She said most people believe a career and a spouse should accompany pregnancy, but she has neither.

"I don't feel short-changed because my desire is much stronger than any obstacle I may have to get through," she said. "I've never been pregnant or married, so this situation surrounding my pregnancy is all I know, and so far it has been wonderful to me.

"Of course there are things I'd like to be different, but that goes for any pregnant woman whether she is in school or working, married or single, young or old."

Desiree Mills, student health programs coordinator, said there is a sexual activity program on campus for counseling women who have had positive pregnancy test results.

She said there is a need for the services the program provides, because of the number of pregnant students who decide to continue their education.

"It is a much more common thing," she said. "It is much more

Ghosts of Valentine’s Day past

LOVE CONQUERS SOME:
Dinner with date’s “ex” haunts one student’s Valentine’s Day.

LAKISHA R. GRAY
DAILY EGYPTIAN STAFF WRITER

Somewhere deep within people’s minds there seems to be buried a concrete definition of the “perfect” Valentine’s Day. This day is judged by people according to whether or not it passes their definitions based on things including how many roses are received, which expensive restaurant is frequented, how much chocolate is given and if people feel compensated for all their troubles.

With this in mind, some SIUC students share their experiences of what they believe to be the most romantic Valentine’s Day imaginable, while others tell of their trips to the shop of “Valentine’s Day horror.”

Heartbreaking
“During my sophomore year, I decided to do something really special for my boyfriend because we’d been together for a while. I went out and bought a sexy outfit, cooked up some steak and rice and had a friend of mine draw a big rose on my wall with a glow-in-the-dark marker. I’d set up the desk in my dorm room for candlelight dinner and had a really romantic setting. I went through all his troubles and my friends helped me out, but he came to my room, looked at everything, kissed me and left because he said he had to study. I was so embarrassed and hurt.” —Anonymous, a senior in education from Houston.

Romantic
“After 13 years of marriage, it’s hard finding new and adventurous ways to romance someone. It can be a challenge, but I always seem to pull it off. Once I cooked a candlelight dinner. I’m not the greatest cook in the world, but it seemed to get the ideal results, and it’s the idea that counts. The idea that love conquers all.” —Mark Gibson, a senior in theater and English from Herrin.

Lonely
“It’s a shame that with all the women on this campus, my Valentine’s Day has always been spent alone. Although I do have plenty of friends, I don’t have that special someone, so my Valentine’s Day is always spent alone and at home. Maybe I’ll rent some movies, have a drink and buy some chocolate for myself because I’m special to me.” —LaShaun Cole, a senior in administration of justice from Chicago.

Horror
“I ordered a dozen roses to be delivered to this particular female, and we were supposed to get out with friends. It had been raining all day and we’d gotten into an argument over some small details. I thought she was going to break up with me.” —Anonymous, a junior in psychology from Herrin.

Dear Editor:

You're absolutely right. A committee dealing with SIU recruitment and retention is not complete without representation from the student body, and your observation is well noted ("Our Word" Daily Egyptian, 2/3).

What you should know is that the Chamber of Commerce committee, with full cooperation of Chancellor Don Beggs and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Harvey Welch, has planned on student representation all along as part of the initial pre-study meetings for organization have taken place, the actual committee makeup is yet be completed with student participation on the committee not anticipated until the spring semester gets underway.

As I write, we're working with Vice Chancellor Welch on finding those students recruited to and interested in serving on the committee. What's really exciting is seeing those possibilities for our students to be active voices in our committee even though your constructive criticism was premature.

That's all right. With the Chamber's theme of "Whatever It Takes," to get things done in '97, a little constructive criticism saves time and energy, so I hope you'll report the progress of the committee, in order to provide a summary of the program and retention is the Carbondale Chamber's No. 1 priority for 1997.

Reinstalling old escort service provides new safety program

THANKS TO THE PERSISTENCE OF THE Undergraduate Student Government and University administrators, SIUC students may never have to walk alone late at night next fall.

In November, USG voted to recommend that SIUC spend $25,000 to hire professionals to serve as escorts for students who do not wish to walk across campus alone after dark.

Now administrators are looking at ways to use existing resources to provide an equally effective service with a much lower price tag.

Through the use of unpaid volunteers, the SIUC Transit Service's dispatch line and Travel Service's walkie-talkies, the University may be able to put a safety escort program into effect as early as fall at little cost.

The University's campus safety graduate assistant will coordinate the volunteers for the program, while the Department of Public Safety trains and runs background checks on those volunteers.

THIS KIND OF COOPERATION AMONG VARIOUS entities on campus is commendable. Not only will it provide the campus with a valuable service that may prevent some students from suffering physical harm, but it also will save money by making efficient use of the resources SIUC already owns.

We often complain about inefficient use of the students' money and ineffective management of the University's resources. However, this proposed escort service is a prime example of cooperation and teamwork we would like to see among administrators and departments more often. The program, if it is successful, could serve as a model for problem-solving efforts in other areas of campus life.

However, the success or failure of this program will depend on more than just the cooperation of campus organizations.

SIUC has had nighttime escort services in some of its housing areas in the past, but these programs have been short-lived, primarily because students have not taken advantage of them.

LAST FALL, AT LEAST THREE SEXUAL assaults or attempted sexual assaults were reported on campus. Just last week, an SIUC student was found guilty of raping a Saluki bus driver on her route.

While these incidents hardly represent an epidemic, they provide a harsh reminder to students — particularly women, who are most frequently the victims of sexual assaults — that they are not in an easy world free from danger and that they may have to be on constant guard. Data for this past fall is not available.

Pop war baffles students

In a subconscious lapse of infancy I started paying attention to some of the things going on around campus, and I realized there seemed to be an increasing concern being placed on the declining enrollment issue at SIUC. Office staffs are looking for reasons why this seems to be the case and are exploring options as to how they are going to reverse this rising trend.

I thought about it, and, Lihkoh, I have gotten in the bottom of this issue and figured out exactly why no one wants to be a student not only here, but anywhere.

(Obviously, this is all overlooking the obvious reasons including that the number of people graduating from high school has gone down, and the cost of tuition and housing is on the continual rise while no one has any money.) No, there are more important issues.

There is no place for 7-up in the 7-up machine! I walked out of the newsroom needing 7-up and could not believe that the machine clearly marked "7-up" had every selection but that. I proceeded to the other Pepsi machines, an 7-up a Pepsi product, and found that even those were empty.

Deciding to try for Sprite, I looked for the Coke machine, another 7-up competitor, and found none, at least not in this section of the Communications Building.

Not being able to settle for Pepsi, and certainly not desperate enough to settle for Coke, I decided to look one more time. I happened to be in one of the few pop cans because I am being more health conscience, and they are caffeine-free and, therefore, better for you. (The caffeine in the peanut M&M’s clenched in my hand did not count though.)

I was walking around, eating them.) Finally, I found 7-up in the Dr. Pepper machine, but it was sold out. I knew I would have to compromise and I decided to just buy a Pepsi from the Pepsi machine, knowing full well it could not taste as good as the picture on the machine looks.

I was just about to put my money in the machine, and I noticed that the last two selections were for Coke and Diet Coke. I looked at the machine, making sure it was a Pepsi machine, and looked at the last two selections again thinking that I was seeing things. But no, there was Coke in the Pepsi machine. This would explain the lack of Coke machines in the area, but, nonetheless, I was off upset.

It is bad enough that Coke has to suffer by being inferior pop, but it is discriminated against by not even having a machine of its own or for any of its products.

It is then that I began to realize that this is the exact reason why few want to continue their education. Prospective students can visit other campuses and notice how noniscriminative it is, which would turn anyone off. From elementary school through high school, emphasis is being placed on the acceptance of all cultures, only for those students to come to college and realize that it is a cruel world where they mix Pepsi and Coke in the same machine.

Sure, they try to say that they are being accepting by putting the two together, but they are just trying to cover up the fact that they are trying to control Coke and hold them back from excelling in today’s world.

Future students are going to stand for this kind of communism, and therefore they do not want to be a part of it.

On the other hand, it could just be that kids today are lazy, pampered, have everything handed to them and do not want to give that up to work their butts off for an education, but I don’t view.

Revamping old escort service provides new safety program

THANKS TO THE PERSISTENCE OF THE Undergraduate Student Government and University administrators, SIUC students may never have to walk alone at night next fall.

In November, USG voted to recommend that SIUC spend $25,000 on 200 college professionals to serve as escorts for students who do not wish to walk across campus alone after dark.

Now administrators are looking at ways to use existing resources to provide an equally effective service with a much lower price tag.

Through the use of unpaid volunteers, the SIUC Transit Service’s dispatch line and Travel Service’s walkie-talkies, the University may be putting a safety escort program into effect as early as fall at little cost. LAST FALL, AT LEAST THREE SEXUAL assaults or attempted sexual assaults were reported on campus. Just last week, an USG student was found guilty of raping a Saluki bus driver on her route.

While these incidents hardly represent an epidemic, they do provide a harsh reminder to students — particularly women, who are most frequently the victims of sexual assault — that they cannot take their safety for granted, even in a relatively secure town such as Carbondale. The University has reacted to the issue of campus safety promptly, responsibly and consistently over the years.

How effective its efforts are depends on how well students respond to the services that are available.

Campus escorts, the Night Safety Transit and the Brightway Path are all good programs that have the potential to keep students safe.

However, these programs can only protect us if we use them.

Ignoring an opportunity to increase your safety at night is like carrying your Mace in your backpack rather than in your hand: By the time you discover you need it, it may be too late for it to do you any good. It is better to plan ahead and try using the resources that can help you to reflect these opportunities and take unnecessary chances with our health, safety and even our lives.

We wholeheartedly applaud the University’s efforts to get this program off the ground, and we urge the students to support those efforts by using the escort service once it is in place.

Dear Editor:
This letter is in reply to Ms. Fiddy's column featured in the Daily Egyptian on Monday. Maybe Ms. Priddy was a bit too young to realize how big a hit "Star Wars" was in 1977, or maybe she is as ignorant as her commentary displayed. Now it is 1997, 20 years later, and the movie is a box-office phenomenon, making more than Othello, Hamlet AND Romeo and Juliet could ever make combined, in its first weekend. Could that be why they chose to show "Star Wars" here in Southern Illinois than ANOTHER movie about Shakespeare's Hamlet? Perhaps they thought it would make a teeny weenie bit more money? If you don't believe me, go look at the lines for "Star Wars" compared to those of Hamlet, Tough choice, but "Star Wars" wins.
As for the "poor acting" in "Star Wars," other than Alec Guinness (who, by the way, acted in Lawrence of Arabia), and Carrie Fisher (daughter of Debbie Reynolds), there were a bunch of nobodies. How well do you think you would have liked Ms. Priddy, working on your first major film that would be destined to make your career? I think you might have acted a little worse than they did. I also have a couple comments about your so-called poll. First, about your hit on James Earl Jones: Did you know that right after "Star Wars" was made, he denied being the voice of Darth Vader because he thought it would hurt his acting career? Turns out he was wrong, remember?
Second, yes, "Star Wars" is 20 years old, but Shakespeare is 500 years old. Talk about your revivals! Maybe Ms. Priddy was desperately trying to be funny, but don't think calling me a hick is very amusing. I was born and raised in Southern Illinois, and I have a life outside of it. Maybe you should get one, too, Ms. Priddy, then you can go to see your precious Shakespeare where it was meant to be performed...on the stage.

True meaning not in candy

Throughout high school, it was a never-ending tradition as you walked down the halls on Feb. 14 to see girls with boxes of chocolates and balloons and countless other things to attract a boy's heart to celebrate what has come to be known as Valentine's Day. For the first few years it irritated me, and I wondered why the other girls were the lucky ones to receive such gifts every year and be able to show them off. I thought it would change in college, but also, the student union is full of the same thing. You see, although I have had boyfriends, I have never had one around long enough to claim as my Valentine. It got so bad to the point where I figured I probably would get married and be divorced from my husband by the time cupid came around to shoot his arrow. I complained and professed my feelings to everyone that I did not consider Valentine's Day a real holiday. After all, unless it comes on a weekend, school and work are still in session. Then, last February something changed. It was 10 days before the big event, and I had a date. A real date. Complete with a man who had a working phone. I got all dolled up, I was ready for my first V-Day where I felt like special as all of the other girls who knew the joy of fresh flowers on this day.
Well, my date showed up with flowers and balloons in hand and took me to a fabulous dinner (well, in Carbondale, Applebees is about as fabulous as it gets). By the time the date ended, I felt the same as I did every other Valentine's Day for the past seven years. I did not feel really special, and I did not have that glow that I thought I would have after being treated so nicely on Valentine's Day. And then it hit me.
What is important on Valentine's Day is not the stuff you get and are able to show off to your friends. It is about the love that you and the person share with one another. I realized that although flowers and candy are nice, what really is important are the emotions behind it, and you can't trade that for chocolate in the world.

Holiday’s influence felt around world

GLOBAL APPEAL: International students share in ideals of Western holiday.

SHARIRI GLATZHOFF DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

While Valentine’s Day in America is celebrated by nearly everyone, Chieko Miyake says that in Japan, it is exclusively a day for women to send gifts to men. The men have their chance to return the courtesy on White Day, March 14, she said. “Everybody knows about it,” said Miyake, a freshman in special education. “Especially the girls.”

Regardless of whether the place you call home is the foot of majestic Mount Fuji or a dorm room on SIUC’s campus, Valentine’s Day spells “love” in any language.

The celebration of this sweethearts’ holiday, is a fairly new practice in most non-Western societies, said Yikan Ma, a graduate student in computer science from China. Ma is just one of SIUC’s international students who said Valentine’s Day is a fairly new concept to him. “It is not celebrated in China, but now they started celebrating it because they have opened the policy of China,” Ma said. Ma, who has been living in the United States for about 10 years, said he was not really aware of the celebration of the holiday in China, and a lot of Chinese know nothing about it.

Although there are some nations, including China, where Valentine’s Day is generally unheard of, other countries do celebrate the holiday in a more passive way than Americans.

Henry Musangi, a sophomore in architecture at SIUC, said Valentine’s Day is a significant and meaningful holiday. He said it is important because it gives people an opportunity to affirm their love and express their desires to continue their good relationships.

Many international students join in the Valentine’s Day celebration in the United States just as the American students do. Ma said he likes Valentine’s Day because it offers a way for friends to communicate their affection for one another. “I feel that it is a lot of fun, but I myself am not personally active,” he said. “I send cards to my wife and daughter.”

It [Valentine’s Day] means not going to school. I am going to spend time with my love.”

YAINA PIRYCH JUNIOR FROM UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

“Valentine’s Day” was a signiﬁcant and meaningful holiday. He said it was not personally active, he said. "I send cards to my wife and daughter." It might come as a surprise to some that the modern version of St. Valentine’s Day has its roots in a pagan tradition of ancient Rome. The details of that tradition are somewhat obscure, but according to one account by Charles Panat, author of ‘Panat’s Extraordinary Origins of Everyday Things,” the holiday was an annual Roman fertility festival known as Lupercalia. The festival included a lamb-making lottery where young men chose the names of young women from a box. The names were painted together for the festival.

The day was also celebrated with dancing and festivities to honor Roman gods and goddesses.

According to the account, in the year 46, the festival was outlawed by Pope Gelasius, and a feast was instituted as an alternative to the pagan practices.

Yabba Pirech, a junior in industrial technology from the United Arab Emirates, Valentine’s Day has a simple meaning. “I feel that it is a lot of fun,” she said. “I’m going to spend time with my love.”

common thing," she said. "It is much more open, and now there are more resources for pregnant women. Their main concern is if they can stay in school.

She said she often advises students on ways to deal with school and their pregnancies.

"Sometimes I give them to take a reduced load (of classes), because if the women I see decide to stay in school but still have concerns," she said.

Mills said some of her concerns are financial worries, finding doctors for pre-natal care and if their partner will stay around.

Michelle Kohler, the assistant program director for traditional student services, said more than 37 percent of the student body is made up of non-traditional students and that includes pregnant women.

"You can't tell somebody they can't go to school because they have children," she said. "They just have other responsibilities to deal with besides their studies that other students who don't have children don't have to deal with.

And every day Granberry said she has to face those extra concerns that other students who don't have children, they just have other responsibilities to deal with besides their studies that other students who don't have children don't have to deal with.

However, Mills said not all pregnant students have a spouse, telling your partner, telling family and friends, figuring out where you'll live and most of all how to support your child.

Adrienne Taylor, a senior in business and administration from Chicago, said she did not allow her second pregnancy to stop her education.

"Because it was her first year in college and the occasional days she needed to take off for her son, she said she worried more about the reactions of her professors.

"I didn't know how my professors would take it, but one was real helpful and he looked out for my best interests," she said. "He saw I was struggling, and he reached out to help me."

"Taylor said she had the unconditional support of her family, her husband and her friends.

HAND THAT FEEDS: Network's founder blames cable providers, politicians for woes.

WASHINGTON POST
WASHINGTON—Brian Lamb is actually a model of reserve when he hosts C-SPAN's public affairs programs. But away from the TV camera, the Dean of cable becomes unimpressed, agitated and even a little angry when he discusses C-SPAN's state of affairs.

"We seem to be getting hit all the time," says Lamb, who founded C-SPAN in 1977 and still serves as its chief executive. "We're being treated like second-class citizens."

The cause of his concern: C-SPAN, the cable network that chronicles the hour-by-hour workings of Congress, is日益 disappearing from TV screens around the nation. In the past four years, the not-for-profit cable network and its companion service, C-SPAN2, have been dropped entirely or reduced to part-time status by cable companies serving about 5.2 million households. C-SPAN remains available full time or in part in nearly 60 million households (and C-SPAN2 in 46 million), but the downward trend troubles Lamb.

The network's problems, he believes, grow from the cable industry in general and Washington policymakers in particular. That's ironic, because the cable industry created C-SPAN and still provides its $3 million annual operating budget. Washington lawmakers, in turn, are effectively C-SPAN's competitors.

Yet a series of new laws, as well as regulatory rulings and the cable industry's bottom-line pressures, appear to have conspired against Washington-based C-SPAN (the acronym stands for Cable-Satellite Public Affairs Network). Indeed, the declining fate of the network says much about the media business in a time of great economic and regulatory upheaval.

Week

Although SIUC is not participating in National Condom Week, Stacia Runge, a graduate student in paralegal studies from Joliet, said participating in National Condom Week, "is a way of promoting condom use and educating couples about safer sex.

"We do not have to have sex to be romantic, but while spreading that love, we must be safe with a condom," she said. "There is a lot of people contracting STD's and HIV every day. Like it or not, people, especially students, are having sex, and they need to know how to protect themselves.

"Even if lovers prefer the traditional box of candy over a box of condoms as a Valentine's Day gift, Runge said students always can use advantage of opportunities to obtain condoms on campus.

"Even though National Condom Week begins on the day people celebrate romance, Runge said couples do not have to have sex to be romantic on Valentine's Day. She said those who do plan to have sex should be sure to talk to their partners about condoms or other forms of birth control.

"There are a hundred ways to make love without sexual intercourse," she said. "But if sex is what you want, then you should be able to communicate with your partner about safer sex. If you can't afford to do that, then you really shouldn't be doing it."

Foster said she realizes Valentine's Day is a day for love, but while spreading that love, she is trying to have sex.

"Valentine's Day is a day for love, but while spreading that love, you can never tell if someone has an STD."

Runners face top competition Saturday

SALUKI INVITE:
SIUC welcomes over 20 teams to compete at Rec Center.

BEAT WEBER
DAILY Egyptian Reporter

Members of the SIUC men's and women's track and field teams will have the rare opportunity to compete as an individual rather than as a team Saturday during the SIUC Track and Field Invitational in Carbondale.

“We just want to win, and try to keep up the good work that we’ve been doing,” junior Nephthys Kalogermen said.

Kalogermen has set high expectations for the team this weekend, and coach Bill Cornell said he just wants the Salukis to get through Saturday’s meet without any sickness and injury.

“We want to be prepared to peak for next week’s Missouri Valley Conference championships,” he said. “We’re on the work load and doing just enough so our legs stay fresh.”

The Salukis will welcome 22 teams to the Recreation Center. Cornell said Indiana State University, Southeast Missouri State University and Murray State University will give the Salukis some tough competition to prepare them for next week’s MVC championships.

Indiana State is the only Valley school attending the competition. In addition to those teams, the Salukis will face off against a few Division II and III schools, plus a few junior college teams.

Cornell said Saturday’s meet is a chance for some of his runners to take the day off, while others will compete in lower distance events.

“Our runners won’t be running their normal events Saturday,” he said. “It’s a chance for some to experience a different form of running.”

Kalogermen, who competes in the high jump, said Saturday’s meet will be a good workout for the team before the conference championships, which begin Feb. 21.

“At the MVC everybody has to rise to the occasion for us to win,” he said. “Indians State and Illinois State University will give us tough competition, so we must start by preparing this week.”

Cornell said the most important thing for his team to do now is to focus on winning the conference championships.

“Next week it’s going to be seven teams bangin’ heads wantin’ to win the championship,” he said. “After those two days are done, it is all over.”

The Salukis’ track and field team won the McDonald’s Invitational Feb. 8, but now the focus of the team is to improve our individual scores Saturday before the MVC championships, coach Don DeNoo said.

“We’re not looking ahead to the championships. Saturday’s meet is just a tune up to get ready for the championships.”

DeNoo said Saturday’s meet will be less competitive than the McDonald’s Invitational, but he is hoping that his team wins more events than the six it did last year.

Kalogermen said the Salukis will be using Saturday’s meet as a non-team show.

“Next week is going to be seven teams bangin’ heads wantin’ to win the championship,” he said. “But our focus is still on the MVC championships.”

DeNoo said Saturday’s meet will be a great non-team show,” she said. “But our focus is still on the MVC championships.”

Kalogermen said the Salukis will be using Saturday’s meet as a non-team show.

“We haven’t had time to peak yet,” she said. “We will be at home and have a great crowd to give us a little extra push.”

The Salukis’ Track and Field Invitational begins at 9 a.m.

SIUC TENNIS
Team begins spring season
The SIUC women's tennis team will compete this weekend, at the Eastern Kentucky University Tournament in Richmond, Ky. The Salukis will compete against Eastern Kentucky, the University of Louisville and Bowling Green University. The tournament, which begins at noon (CST) today and continues through Sunday, opens the Salukis' spring season.

LAST SECOND LOSS:
Drake Bulldogs finish off SIUC with last second buzzer-beater.

Drake University’s Haley Saine nailed a last-second shot from 15 feet out to lift the Lady Bulldogs to a 62-61 win over the SIUC women’s basketball team at SIU Arena Thursday night.

“Tm glad we made it to them,” Saluki coach Cindy Scott said after the game.

“We really made some mistakes in the last minute and didn’t get it done.”

Saine’s last-second shot capped off a 7-0 run by Drake.

Hudson contributed 18 points and 13 rebounds to the Salukis effort, which gave Scott something to be happy about.

Scott said it is important for the Salukis, who only shot 38 percent on the night and 31 percent from the foul line, to win.

“We really can find some solace in knowing we are a better club than we were then,” she said. “They were lucky to win.”

KASIA VS. KEISHA: Saluki guard Kasia McClendon, a senior from Gary, Ind., looks to pass past Drake University guard Keisha Cox during Thursday night’s game against the Bulldogs.

SIUC TENNIS

Senior forward Nikki Washington said despite the loss the team can still win the MVC tournament March 6-8 in Springfield, Mo.

“I don’t know where Drake is in the conference,” she said. “But t (the loss) tells us a lot—that if we play hard we can take the tournaments.”

The Salukis turned the ball over 18 times in the contest and only shot 42 percent from the floor, and junior guard Beth Hulshizer said it is hard to find a positive in the loss.

“We had them,” she said. “But we should have won, and we played well. But it really doesn’t matter if you don’t win.”

SIUC plays Creighton University at SIU Arena at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Devils and Dawgs:
SIUC gets started tonight against the No. 7 Sun Devils.

MICHAEI DEFORD

Saluki baseball coach Dan Callahan cannot think of a better way to begin the season than by taking on a nationally-ranked team.

The Salukis’ 1997 season gets underway tonight at 6 (CST) with a three-game series against No. 7 Arizona State University in Tempe, Ariz.

“I like the idea of playing the big boys. We thought it would be a good way to begin the season,” Callahan said. “On paper it looks like a real long shot, but we’re going out there to do as well as we can.”

My rationale is that we are always going to try to play the best people we can, whenever we can play them.”

The Sun Devils, who are already 6-5, are fresh off a three-game series against Florida State University, where they lost two out of three games.

SIUC heads to Arizona for first pitch

Calahan, now entering his third season as Salukis skipper since 1995-96 record, has never faced ASU before. But he said doing so early on will help prepare SIUC for its Missouri Valley Conference schedule, which gets underway March 5.

“I think it is good preparation for the MVC schedule,” he said. “We are hoping that strong competition early on will help prepare us for the Missouri Valley.”

Last season the Salukis were 14-13 in nonconference action that included the likes of Stetson University and the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.
