Driving Bill Gets Action By Senate

The bill to permit any student to drive his motor vehicle between his residence and the campus will be introduced in the Illinois Senate Education committee sometime this afternoon or this evening, according to Senator John Gilbert, R-Carbondale.

Gilbert said Monday afternoon that though he had not polled other Senators or members of the Education committee on their opinions of the bill, he expected final action to be taken today.

Gilbert has said that he opposes the bill because "... The matter of such regulations should remain with the SIU governing bodies and not the state legislature."

The bill could be tabled or it could be killed today. If the committee should favor it, the bill would go to the Senate for a general vote.

Rep. Gale Williams (R-Murphysboro) introduced the bill to the House of Representatives and was instrumental in its passage Thursday by a vote of 113 to 7.

The bill states that the governing bodies of SIU "shall not enforce any rule or regulation that denies to any student the right to have and use motor vehicles while traveling to or from the University."

However, the SIU administration would not be prohibited from regulating the use of motor vehicles by students once they are on campus.

SIU students circulated numerous petitions asking support of the bill. The petitions were to be sent to area representatives in the state legislature.

House Committee Revises Shapiro's Gun Control Bill

SPRINGFIELD, ILL. (AP) — The Illinois House executive committee approved Monday a watered down version of Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro's gun control bill after defeating the original proposal by a narrow margin earlier.

As approved by the committee, the bill adds to existing state gun control laws the right of municipalities to pass stricter weapons control ordinances if they wish to.

The bill was then sent to the House floor for action, possibly today.

Rep. Paul Elward, D-Chicago, sponsor of the measure interrupted a committee roll call on the original bill when it became apparent it would be defeated and offered the weaker version in its place. It then passed 19-4.

The original bill called for the registration of individual guns as well as owners, but this was stricken from the approved bill.

Detective Chief Michael A. Spiotto of the Chicago police department told the committee members that homicide with firearms rose 87 per cent in Chicago from 194 to 1965 to 315 during 1967.

Spiotto also said that of the 1,294 youths arrested with guns on their person in 1967, 46 were charged with murder, 4 with rape, 125 with armed robbery, 184 with serious assault, 135 with theft and 799 with other violations.

Shootings increased 95 per cent from 1,298 to 2,412 in the city between 1965 and 1967, he said.

Spiotto said a "weapons registration law would greatly help the police in tracing weapons from the manufacturer to the owner and improve the rate of apprehension of gun violators."

Disciplinary Procedure Latest Event in Series Over Campus Recruiting

By Brian Treusch

The recent decision by the University to discipline 11 students for their alleged participation in the May 2 demonstration is only the most recent action in a long and bitter controversy over the use of the University Center by military recruiters.

Last Fall, Gen. Lewis Hershey, director of the National Selective Service System, issued a directive to local boards requesting that "students who protest against the operations of on-campus military recruiters lose their (student) deferments."

In light of Hershey's attitude and decision, a letter, signed by nearly 200 tenured SIU faculty members and dated December 4, was sent to then Vice-president and Acting President, Robert MacVicar, protesting Hershey's decision. The letter was signed by such prominent faculty members as William Simeone, dean of the Graduate School; Lon Shelby, associate dean of the Graduate School; the late Robert Faner, formerly chairman of the Department of English and Willis Moore, chairman of both the Department of Philosophy and the Faculty Council.

The letter concluded by urging that "this University should protect its students by obtaining assurances that protestors will not have their deferments rescinded" before any military recruiters are allowed to return to the campus.

In letters sent to each of the nearly 200 signers of the request, MacVicar said that while he, too, was strongly opposed to the statements of Hershey, he was also opposed to barring the recruiters.

MacVicar, a reserve colonel in the Army, said in the letter that "If I have the privilege of suspending the activities of a duly authorized recruiting team, presumably I have the privilege of suspending other activities likely to arouse controversy. I want an 'open' University in an 'open' society and do not believe that this can be achieved by the restrictive procedures requested by you."

On January 31 of this year, the Student Senate officially thanked the faculty members for their letter urging that military recruiting be stopped and then passed a formal resolution requesting the Student Activities Office be restrained from granting space in the University Center to any non-student group, including recruiters.

The resolution was sent to President Morris, but according to Georgia Bowden, the official Student Senate secretary, no reply was ever given by Morris to the Student Senate's request.

The day before the demonstration against the recruiters, several members of the Southern Illinois Peace Committee had a meeting with Clarence Dougherty, director of the University Center, to request that the recruiters not be allowed continued use of the Center.

According to Paul Atwood, one of the Peace Committee members at that meeting, Dougherty said he was unable to take any action and that the Peace Committee "should go through the established channels," such as the Student Senate to have the recruiting stopped.

After the meeting, Atwood was quoted as saying that the group "would be forced to take appropriate action" in order to dramatically show the University's refusal to even discuss the matter.

A front page picture appearing in the Daily Egyptian on May 3 shows that most of the "identified" 11 students who allegedly participated in the demonstration bear some resemblance to those in the photograph.

University officials have declined to say whether this picture was used to identify the participants.

Ex-SIU Instructor 'Shocked' at Discipline Tactics

By Brian Treusch

The spokesman for the May 2 demonstration against continued use of the University Center by military recruiters said he was "shocked and stunned" when he learned that 11 students were notified by SIU officials that disciplinary action had been taken against them for participation in that protest.

Barry Sanders, a former SIU English instructor presently teaching at UCLA, said, "The issue here is that students have been denied due process by being disciplined for their participation in a political demonstration without having ever had a hearing or even notification of the charges against them."

Sanders said, "These underhanded tactics, while typical for SIU's administration, are directly opposed to the Joint Statement of Rights and Freedoms of Students adopted by the Association of Universities and Colleges," of which SIU is a full member and a participant in the drafting of the Joint Statement.

Regarding the use of the Center by military recruiters, Sanders said, "No other business or firm is allowed to recruit there; why should the military be so privileged?"

Sanders said that on the day of the demonstration, Dean of Students Wilbur Moulton released a letter he had written a week earlier requesting that military recruiting be conducted at the Placement Center with all other organizations and business recruiting teams.

Concerning the May 2-1968 Choir Presenting Vivaldi, Hassler

The Summer University Choir, assisted by the First United Methodist Church Choir and the Summer University Orchestra, will present a concert at 8 p.m. July 31 in the Ballrooms of the University Center.

Under the direction of Charles C. Taylor, associate professor in the Department of Music, the choir will present selections from Vivaldi, Hassler and Macfarlane.

cident, Sanders said that the protesting students and faculty members met before the demonstration and agreed to disband if any University official told them to. He noted that until they were told to break up by Security Chief Leffler, no official told the protestors to stop during the hour and a half the demonstration lasted.

"If the demonstration was against the rules of the University or if the law was being broken, why didn't Moulton say something, and why did the Security Police wait an hour and a half to take any action?" Sanders asked.

Sanders stressed that the recruiters were free to come and go and that other students not in the protesting group talked with the recruiters during the demonstration.

Sanders said that "if anyone was keeping the students away from the recruiters, it was Moulton." Sanders said Moulton was at the demonstration the whole time and never once asked any of the protestors to stop. He said Moulton directed all his energy towards keeping other students away from the demonstration and the recruiters.

Moulton is away on vacation and could not be reached for comment about Sanders' statements.

Sanders stressed that the demonstration was "an act of symbolic speech" taken only to show that "faculty members and students had tried all available channels of communication without any results."

Sanders was especially critical of MacVicar's statement about why he would allow continued use of the Center by Military recruiters. Sanders said the University's decision to bar black power advocate Stokely Carmichael was "a clear reversal of an notion that SIU is an 'open' University in an 'open' society. The whole political spectrum is definitely not present at your school," he said.

Sanders said he spoke with MacVicar before the demonstration and that "MacVicar said he didn't care what the faculty wanted. MacVicar said he wouldn't change his mind if every faculty member on the campus wanted the recruiters removed."

Sanders noted that the late Robert Faner, former chairman of the Department of English, said the letter asking that the recruiting be stopped was the first petition he had signed in 36 years "because he thought the matter was so important."

Sanders said that if any students decide to take legal action against the University he would come to the trial at his own expense to testify in the students' behalf.

Save Redwood Land

It was 50 years ago that the federal government began to take a stand on the California redwoods issue. And it hasn't come very far since.

In 1918 the National Park Service endorsed efforts of the California Save-the-Redwoods League to hold out a piece of redwoods land in the northwest corner of the state. Congress responded 28 years later by acquiring a token 14,000 acres not for a park, but as a national forest land.

Now, another 22 years later, Congress is still hesitating over the decision to authorize a redwoods national park of the size and quality that this extraordinary natural resource merits. The Senate last November passed a bill authorizing a 64,000-acre park in two sites, one along Mill Creek desired by the administration, the other along Redwood Creek (which boasts the world's tallest tree), pushed by a 53-man coalition of congressmen.

At present nearly 300,000 acres of virgin redwood land remain. About 2 1/2 percent of that is now protected by California state measures.

Parking Space Too Small

To the Daily Egyptian:

I am writing in reference to the July 19 front-page picture and related paragraph concerning two cars parked in three parking spaces. I would prefer to have this much space allowed for each car.

I have a new car and I get approximately six new scrapes or dents each week where careless people get in and out of their cars and bang their doors against my car. Why can't these people be more careful -- I certainly have never hit someone else's car with my door, even if it is an old rusty car to begin with.

If parking spaces were spaced farther apart, as seen in the above mentioned picture, there would be less scrapes and I, for one, would be almost pleased to pay an additional parking fee as suggested for the coming year.

Hesitation in Cattle Republic's Holding Pen

By Arthur Hoppe

Scene: A holding pen in the Republic of Cattle. A sign on a post says, "Board 374, Bureau of Meat Inspection."

Three incredibly old bulls lounge behind a long table with a flag at each end. The Board Chairman, a jowly Hereford, is in the center. Flanking him are the two Board members, a skinny old Angus with a hooked nose and an ancient Guernsey with a crumpled horn.

The secretary, an elderly Jersey cow with a large udder and bovine eyes, waits placidly on the other side of the table, chewing her cud.

A young calf enters hesitantly, his ears slightly aback, his tail twitching nervously, a wary expression in his clear, wide eyes.

The Chairman (heartily): Congratulations, son. You're a fine specimen of young calfhood. The medical examiners have found you sound of fetlock, rump and brisket.

The Calf: Thank you, sir. But...

The Chairman: You're a credit to young cattledom. And I'm happy to say this Board has seen fit to classify you A-1 Prime.

The Calf: Thank you, sir, but... (blurring it out) But I don't want to go!

The Old Angus (shocked): You don't want to go! (suspiciously) You one of these young calves that believes in vegetarianism?

The Calf: No, sir. Not exactly, but...

The Ancient Guernsey (sternly): Look it here, son. If you're claiming to be one of these conscientious objectors, you gotta prove you believe in a Sacred Cow. Can you do that?

The Calf: No, sir. I guess not.

The Chairman (to the secretary): Make a note of that, Miss Jersey. (to the calf) What's your excuse then, boy?

The Calf (scuffing a forehoof in the sand): Well, sir, I guess I don't have any real excuse. (bravely) I just don't think it's fair, that's all. Why pick me? I just don't see any sense in it.

The Chairman (after a moment of stunned silence): No sense in it? Why, what if all young calves felt that way? Where do you think this country would be today?

The Old Angus (not unkindly): You don't want to betray the precious heritage of your forebears, son. Think of all the brave young calves before you who have gladly made the supreme sacrifice for all that we cattle hold near and dear.

The Ancient Guernsey: Oh, how we wish we were still in our prime! Oh, what we'd give to be young enough to answer the call!

The Chairman (in fatherly fashion): That's right, son. We're bestowing on you the highest honor—the privilege of serving mankind and insuring the future of generations of cattle yet unborn.

The Calf (lifting his head): Yes, sir. Thank you, sir. I can see my duty clearly now. Which way do I go, sir?

The Chairman: Through that gate there, son. And don't be afraid. Remember, our prayers go with you.

(The calf exits. There is the beginning of a bleat cut off by a thud and followed by the sound of a falling body.)

The Secretary (her eyes moist): Oh, it tears at your heartstrings to see our brave young calves march off to do their duty.

The Chairman (briskly): Come, come, Miss Jersey. No time for emotionalism. We still need 13 more to meet our quota. Next, please.

Writer Raps KA Decision

To the Daily Egyptian:

A letter by John Scharf in the Egyptian last Wednesday had a number of good comments on a previously reprinted article called "Keep the Faith in America," which hailed, in effect, the politics of joy—everything is o.k. in America.

The letter also noted that the Egyptian's editorial policy, being somewhat conservative itself, seems to have been established by Dean Rusk. Perhaps Mr. Scharf should have said Dean Moulton instead, and Chancellor (Unanimous Decision) MacVicar as well, for Egyptian as the only on-campus means of expressing student opinion.

This should not be construed as a limitation on free speech, we are assured—we must simply look to the Egyptian to play KA's role, says the Chancellor. (And he adds that we should have more expression of student opinion on campus.)

Isn't this a little like expecting the views of Ramparts to appear in the Chicago Tribune? Come on, Mr. MacVicar, isn't there anything that really needs to be said; or is Hubert Humphrey right after all?

Yugoslav Workers Say Party Manages Trade Union Life

By Gene Gregory
Copley News Service

BELGRADE-- Yugoslavia's system of workers' management has been frequently cited of late as the ideal form of industrial democracy by new left student militants in the West.

Yet presently throughout Yugoslavia, workers are demanding more of the kind of democracy in municipal, state and federal political life common to parliamentary democracies of the West for which the new left in the United States and Western Europe professes such profound contempt.

While the possibility of replacing the monopoly of Yugoslav Communist Party is a subject of increasing open discussion throughout the country, the advent of a multiparty system remains an exceedingly doubtful prospect.

The immediate concern of the workers is the reform of the trade unions. In recent weeks, at hundreds of trade union meetings held in preparation for the 6th Congress of the Yugoslav Trade Unions, workers have demanded that the unions should stop being merely an instrument of the party; instead, they should become a "healthy opposition" to the government and rally protectors of workers' interests.

While the situation here has little parallel with the stormy labor unrest in France, the party secretary of a large Yugoslav city declared in a recent issue of the Belgrade daily Politika that "the dissatisfaction of our workers has reached the boiling point."

The most interesting views expressed by the workers were published in Borba-- a Belgrade daily which, interestingly, frequently reflects the views of top party leadership--under the title "Trade Unions Have to be Directed Toward Their Members Rather than Toward the Government."

Most of the workers, according to the Borba article, demand that the "trade unions should be reorganized in order to become more independent." They must "respect the views of their members exclusively."

One worker stated the case succinctly and with a note of bitterness: "The trade unions should frequently act as a healthy opposition, to defend the interest of the working people, rather than to allow the workers to feel on their own hides the consequences of the incapability and ignorance of their political and economic leaders."

According to a more militant view, the unions should become "a really fighting sociopolitical force which would resist in a more energetic way all phenomena and tendencies harming and violating the interests of the collectives and direct producers."

Still other complaints indicate a current of dissatisfaction in their present system of workers' self-management and the high rate of unemployment that continues to plague Yugoslavia.

All commercial, financial, industrial and other business concerns in Yugoslavia are managed by workers' councils, elected periodically from among the workers. While on the surface of things this system would appear to be the ideal in industrial democracy, in practice it just doesn't seem to work out that way.

Some workers complain that "political and other factors still, to a great extent, interfere in the self-managing rights of the working people." They contend that what exists, in fact, is a kind of "directed" or manipulated self-management.

Others complain that the entire process of self-management has become "too technical," reflecting one of the basic dilemmas of the system.

Despite advances in mass education in Yugoslavia, industry depends to an increasing degree upon specialization rather than general knowledge. Perforce the workers must cede an increasing amount of decision-making to the technocrats. And since the technocrats have found that they can only manage if they have party and labor union support, they are usually members in good standing of both.

What emerges, therefore, is a kind of natural alliance between enterprise, labor union and party leadership.

Since its creation after World War II the Yugoslav trade union organization has served as an instrument of the party, much as in other Communist countries. From palatial headquarters on Marx and Engels Square in the heart of Belgrade, trade union leaders have loyally transmitted government directives and mobilized mass support for party programs.

Because of their dependence upon the party and its decisions, Yugoslav union officials have lost authority and claim to leadership among the workers. And, ironically, they are not respected in the National Assembly either, "because they have not been in constant contact with trade union members."

In short, though a process of continuing sclerosis Yugoslav trade unions have simply ceased to matter.

When the president of the Yugoslav Trade Unions, Dusan Petrovic, said in an interview that the unions have actually stopped being mere instruments of the League of Communists, he was as much confessing to the impotency of the organization he heads as reflecting a recognition of the need for reform.

Just as in the case of recent student uprisings, there is strong evidence that Marshal Tito is in sympathy with the demands of the workers.

It is an interesting fact that the workers' protests are primarily directed at precisely the same "antisoocial forces"--vestiges of conservative resistance to reform identified with former secret police chief Rankovic and the radical Maoist fringe--as were the protests of the students.

Tito would appear to be taking a leaf from President Alexander Dubcek in Czechoslovakia, forming a new alliance with the students and the workers to push through reforms which party apparatchiks and government bureaucrats have successfully frustrated.

Few Asian Airlines Fall Victim to Hijackers

By Edward Neilan

Copley News Service

HONG KONG--Despite Asia's many tense borders and strained political situations, airborne hijackings are extremely rare.

More than 30 different airlines fly routes in and over Asia, from Pakistan to Japan and destinations in between.

But airline authorities polled in Hong Kong had to scratch their heads to think when the last hijacking attempt was made in Asian skies.

"So far nobody's tried to take an aircraft into Communist China at gunpoint," said a staff member at Kai Tak airport, which serves 22 airlines. "Let's knock on wood that it doesn't happen."

The subject cropped up after the spate of recent hijackings of American aircraft in which gunmen forced planes to Communist Cuba.

In general, customs search is more thorough in Asia--especially in politically sensitive countries--than in the West and this is believed to be some deterrent.

Airlines officials admit, however, that a determined gunman would be hard to stop.

Most airlines in the region have already taken the precautions of requiring that cockpit doors be locked. Some have installed peepholes.

Others, notably the domestic airlines of South Vietnam and South Korea, have armed their crew members.

Airline company security officers acknowledge that arming the crew is not a satisfactory solution.

"We can't afford to have airborne gunfights," said the station manager of a European airline.

He was echoing the comments of William Osmun of the International Air Transport Association (IATA) who said in Washington, D.C., the other day, "These planes are pressurized."

"If you put a bullet hole through the fuselage at 30,000 feet, you can have a major tragedy. We don't need gunplay in the cabin."

Some Asian airports employ fluoroscopes and metal detectors to spot-check baggage. In most cases this is done to detect smuggled gold.

But so far the devices--at least the ones used in this part of the world--are not sophisticated enough to differentiate between tape recorders and guns or between alarm clocks and bombs.

At least one Asian airline is known to include a briefing to new stewards on how to respond if a passenger pulls a gun. Mostly it's common sense: keep calm and notify the pilot.

Code words are employed among crew members and also by the pilot in radioing ahead to the next airport.

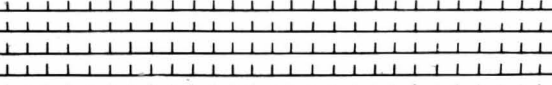

Asia's most spectacular airborne hijacking occurred in 1958 when a Korean Air Lines DC-3 flying from Pusan to Seoul was forced into North Korea.

Several North Korean agents were aboard the plane and forced the American pilot to take the aircraft to the North Korean capital of Pyongyang.

The passengers--except for the agents and a few South Korean politicians who were probably executed--were returned through Panmunjom shortly thereafter.

But the aircraft was never returned. The loss of the plane forced Korean Air Lines into bankruptcy and its owner into suicide.

Pro Golfers May Leave PGA, Form New Tour

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP)—Golf's affluent tournament players and the parent Professional Golfers Association are feuding again, with a break imminent in the fall.

Talk has been renewed that the game's top tourists—perhaps as many as 50 of them—will strike out on their own and form an independent corporation outside the PGA umbrella.

"I haven't heard anything officially on it, only talk, but I wouldn't be surprised," Max Elbin, president of the PGA, said Monday.

"Lawyers of the two sides are trying to work out an agreement that we both can live with. I don't know what will happen.

"I do know that we can't keep facing up to these crises every year. We must reach a permanent understanding or go separate ways. Perhaps it would be good for them to try it on their own for a while to see if it will work."

Mumbings of discontent, jagged nerves and bitter feelings were noted beneath the surface of the PGA championship here last weekend, won by Julius Boros with a 72-hole total of 281.

Jack Nicklaus complained about the over-abundance of club pros compared with touring pros—about 2 to 1—and termed the field "ridiculous." He played indifferently and failed to make the cut.

The open sores were further aggravated by revelation that Robert Creasy had been renamed to a three-year contract as Executive Director. Creasy's removal was one of the demands of a players' group in the threatened 1967 strike.

An uneasy peace was reached at Cleveland in the summer of 1967 with the formation of an appeal body made up of the four top PGA officials, the four-man Players' Committee and a three-man arbitration board to be mutually acceptable to both sides. "This has never worked," a PGA spokesman said. "The players say they don't want any arbitration board telling them what to do."

Independent promoters and men with money are said to be behind the move. The principal demand is that twenty-five players would be guaranteed a minimum of $40,000 a year and another 25 at least $20,000 a year under contract to play in at least 30 tournaments.

What the players want is almost complete autonomy in the conduct of their tour. They want to fix tournaments and set television monies. They request club pros, who make up five-sixths of the PGA membership, telling them what to do.

SIU Freshman 2nd in Relay

FT. LAUDERDALE, Fla.—SIU's Vernon Dasch, a 20-year-old freshman from Pompano, Fla., swimming with the Ft. Lauderdale Swimming Association, finished second Saturday in the 400 meter freestyle relay with a time of 3:45.8 in pre-Olympic trials. Dasch has already qualified in the 100-meter freestyle with a time of :55.7. Qualifying time is :55.8.

His teammate, Bruce Steiner, competed in the pre-Olympic try-outs in Louisville. Steiner, an 18-year-old freshman from Homewood, has already qualified for the 1500-meter with 17:35 and tried for a berth in the 400-meter freestyle.

Scott Conkel, a 20-year-old junior from Pekin, recently qualified in the 100-meter freestyle for the Olympic try-outs but did not make the trip to Louisville.

U-Center's Pool Tables Seldom Without Players

By Jim Greenfield

At times of day when even Morris Library is practically deserted, most of the pool tables in the Olympic Room of the University Center are apt to be occupied.

The game of pool seems to be a big business at SIU, even at the price of 90 cents an hour. "In a three-hour shift, I might take in over $150," said one student attendant.

Identification isn't a problem when it comes to individual players. Often they exhibit characteristics which enable them to be classified as to their method of playing pool.

Usually the "loner" plays by himself at practically any time of the day. He is the sort who occasionally "re-plays" a shot when it goes awry, just to see how the game might have gone otherwise.

Another type is the "show off." He likes to impress his opponents with fancy shots, deep concentration and a general knowledge of the finer points of the game.

Rich and Pam represent another type. Rich, the seasoned veteran, is showing Pam, the novice, how to play the game.

"You're holding the cue wrong."

"It doesn't feel comfortable holding it the way you showed me."

"Hurry up and hit it, will you? People are waiting."

"Don't rush me!"

Pam finally hits—and misses every ball.

Not all the pool players at the Olympic Room tables are SIU students.

The Lusardi's—Bob, his brother Alan and Bob's daughter Vera, all visiting campers from Summit, N.J., made use of the facilities last week.

Seven-year-old Vera has the makings of a future hustler. She plays well and knows the pool language.

"Bank it off the right-hand corner and into the side pocket," she advised her uncle Alan.

While manning to beat her uncle, the youngster finally lost to her father but eagerly accepted his offer for a rematch.

Why do students use the Olympic Room with such frequency?

"It's something to do between classes—a relaxation break, you know," says Brian Kennerly, a junior from Chicago.

Some students may have other reasons for their dedication to the game.

Asked to explain his presence at 9 p.m. on a Saturday night, John Lee, a freshman from Champaign, explained, "Well, I don't have a date, and I really don't feel like studying too much."

Miles Wins Meet

Dave Miles reigned as Champion of the Intramural Tennis Tournament held last weekend on the Carbondale campus.

Miles, an independent, downed John R. Harder for the championship.

Barry Levy of University Park and Steve Vierow were the other two players who made the quarterfinals.

Lynn Hastie Captures Title At Evansville Golf Tourney

EVANSVILLE — SIU's Lynn Hastie, a 21-year-old member of the Women's Recreation Association golf team, turned in a one-under-par 74 performance to capture the Pepsi Tournament played here Saturday at Helfrich Hills.

Lynn held off stiff competition from SIU teammate Paula Smith, defending champ from Belleville who scored a 79 for second place.

Lynn used only 29 putts and had eight one-putt greens in holding off the challenges of the 94 entrants entered in the annual affair open to all Tri-State women.

"I was putting well and had a lot of one putts fall in at the right time," Lynn said. "I was extremely lucky I played here last year, but I'd rather not talk about my score."

The Carterville native was in trouble only once hitting a ball out of bounds on the 12th hole and taking a boggie six for that hole.

"On that hole there was an out-of-bounds on both sides," Lynn added, "I guess I was afraid that I was going to hit it out-of-bounds so I pulled the ball too far to the right and did the same thing."

Lynn, who has been playing golf for the last six years, will be a junior at SIU in the fall. Paula, this year's captain of the WRA team and winner of the consolation title at the Women's National Collegiate Golf Tourney, was graduated this past June.
