Iraq demands removal of U.S. ships

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — Iraq, calling U.S. Navy maneuvers in the Persian Gulf an "imperialist plot," summoned the American ambassador Wednesday to demand removal of U.S. ships. But sources said Iraq also promised Egypt it would not use force in a dispute with neighboring Kuwait.

Oil prices, which had risen over the past week as the dispute between the two OPEC producers was being acted out, fell amid reports of the Iraqi assurances.

Kuwait, meanwhile, denounced

Iraq for attempting "blackmail" by staging Iraqi troops along the Kuwait frontier, as tensions rose over oil production and a longstanding border dispute.

Iraq claims Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates have driven down oil prices through overproduction. OPEC oil ministers, meeting Tuesday in Geneva before a full OPEC session Thursday, indicated they were near a consensus to raise the target oil price from $18 to $20 a barrel. Iraq was pushing for $25 a barrel.

Pentagon sources meanwhile confirmed that U.S.-United Arab Emirates maneuvers were continuing Wednesday, under the name "Ivory Justice."

The maneuvers involve six U.S. warships, as well as two KC-135 tanker aircraft and a C-141 cargo plane carrying support equipment from Europe. Tankers helped UAE fighter jets practice refueling in flight, which extends their range.

An official Iraqi statement denounced the U.S.-UAE naval exercises as "an imperialist plot against the Arab nation."

In Baghdad, President Saddam Hussein summoned U.S. Ambassador April Glaspie and reiterated an Iraqi call for the United States to withdraw its naval force from the gulf, Baghdad Radio reported.

The state-run radio, monitored in Cairo, said Saddam received the U.S. envoy, but gave few details of the talks except to say they took place in the presence of Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz.

It was the first time in recent memory Iraq's leader had summoned a U.S. ambassador, and analysts said the move reflected the seriousness with which Iraq made its position.

Mideast-based U.S. diplomats said they did not expect the Bush administration to announce any naval pullout from the Persian Gulf region, which contains 70 percent of the world's oil reserves. They said that, just as in the eight-year Iran-Iraq war — suspended two

Hospitals offer sign interpreters

By Christen Coriasco
Staff Writer

Three area hospitals offer professional sign language interpreters for the hearing impaired or deaf, but only one offers those services that meet the Illinois Department of Rehabilitation Service's guidelines for manual services for the hearing impaired.

Those services that IDORS considers vital include having a trained interpreter on call 24 hours a day and having a minimum of two telephone communication locations in the hospital, as well as having amplified phone sets available.

Meissa Skilbeck, spokesperson for IDORS, said the sign language interpreter is important because it helps a patient convey his problem to a doctor or nurse.

"In any medical emergency, it is important for people who are hearing impaired to be able to communicate with the doctors. A nurse needs to be able to understand a patient and communicate with that patient," she said.

Skilbeck said the interpreter will help a patient communicate like a hearing person would.

Larry Feil, administrator of Herrin Hospital, said the hospital had sign language interpreters on call all the time. He said they offered different phone systems called TDX and TDY in the emergency room and a TDD phone system in the hospital itself. Those phone systems allow the person that is hearing impaired or deaf to use the phone. Feil said amplified phone systems also were available.

Marion prison comfortable living for Rose

MARION, Ill. (UPI) — Pete Rose will be serving his five-month sentence for filing false income tax returns in surroundings at the Marion Federal Prison Camp that would be considered comfortable and familiar by most Americans.

There are no bars in sight at the Southern Illinois facility and the only fence is in the outfield of the well-groomed softball field.

"Sure he (Rose) will be welcome to play softball—if he can make one of the teams," said John Wilson of Clarksburg, W.Va., servicing a 94-month drug-related sentence. Wilson, 36, oversees an eight-team camp softball league that plays a 95-game schedule between May and October.

"I'm sure there will be high bids to get Rose," added William Haas, 43, a ex-Chicago policeman sentenced to 18 years for extortion and bribery. "But I'd say we have a gentleman playing here who will out-hit Pete Rose."

The S&L contributions included donations from financially sound institutions, troubled thrifts facing a government bailout and insolvent S&Ls. Also included are contributions from the industry trade association.

Republicans, meeting recently in Chicago, sharply criticized Annunzio, saying his committee was in large part responsible for the S&L crisis. Experts have estimated bailouts for failing thrifts will cost taxpayers as much as $500 billion.

"There is an attempt now to blame every S&L and every S&L association for the crimes and misdeeds of a portion of the industry," Annunzio said in response. "We need an S&L industry that will make home loans and I have pushed for that type of industry over the years."

"I have not taken a penny from an S&L that was in trouble at the time of the donation. Nor have I

Local police offer training against fraud

By Leslie Colp
Staff Writer

Southern Illinois has its share of sharks, weasels, and snakes in the grass—people ready to con citizens out of their hard-earned money.

To help prevent these misfortunes, the Illinois Attorney General's Office, the Carbondale Police Department's Crime Prevention Unit and the Greater Egypt Law Enforcement Training Agency are providing a training program called "Operation Scams". "We're targeting senior citizens," said Art Wright, Carbondale Police public information officer. However, Wright stressed that senior citizens are not alone.

"Operation Scams" emphasizes various techniques used to con money, and how to recognize a con in progress. It also will include a video titled "Ripoff", produced by the Mosler Anti-Crime Bureau.

"Ripoff" portrays such classic frauds as "The Bank Examiner" and "The Home Repairman". "The Bank Examiner" will come to a person's home and ask for assistance in catching a dishonest teller. He asks the person to withdraw money and give it to him so he can record the serial numbers. The "Bank Examiner" never returns the money.

"The Home Repairman" works in much the same way. He will come to a home and tell the owner that some kind of repair is needed. The owner then makes a down payment in cash. "The Home Repairman" leaves, never to return to make the repairs.

A training session for bank officials will be conducted from 8:30 to noon, Aug. 1 at the Community Center, 607 E. College St. Training for senior citizens has not yet been scheduled. However, Wright plans to contact the Senior Citizen Center and high rises in Carbondale.

For more information, contact the Carbondale Police at 457-3200.

Payton gaining franchise support

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Investor James Orthwein Tuesday joined the St. Louis NFL Partnership, said Walter Payton, the chairman of the group.

Orthwein's participation comes on the heels of news the NFL will announce officially that it will expand by two teams in time for the 1993 season. Expansion cities are likely to be named in the fall of 1991.

It is estimated the price tag for an NFL expansion franchise will be $100 million.

The top contenders for the new franchises in addition to St. Louis are Baltimore; Charlotte, N.C.; and Memphis, Tenn.

"St. Louis deserves to have a first-class football team, said Orthwein, who is chairman of Huntleigh Asset Partners, a private investment partnership located in suburban Clayton.

"I've lived her my entire life and this effort is one of the most exciting things, for the people of this area, to happen in the last 25 years," he said.

"While I don't pretend to be an expert on the game, I have always been an active sportsman. I am prepared to help in any way possible to bring a team to St. Louis.

"I'm convinced that on the combined strengths of our television market, population base, geographic location, corporate community and the desire of the people in the area, we have as good an opportunity as anyone of being awarded a franchise. I'm ready to stand up and be counted on that score."

While the percentage of ownership held by each of the partners is confidential, Orthwein said his commitment is "substantial."

Orthwein joins former NFL star Payton, St. Louis businessman Jerry Clinton and New England Patriots co-owner Francis Murray, the Reliable Life Insurance Co. and Thomas Holley, president of Gramex Corp., as investors in the partnership.

Orthwein is active in several of the private businesses, including Huntleigh/Byrnes Investment Advisors, an investment advisory business.

He also is a member of the Board of Directors of Anheuser-Busch Cos. Inc., as well as being a major shareholder in the brewery.

Payton, a retired running back with the Chicago Bears and the NFL's all-time leading rusher, is designated to serve as the group's principal representative to the NFL once they are awarded a franchise.

Sweat it out at the Rec Center

By Todd Gardner
Staff Writer

People who want to get in shape and don't know how to start can SWEAT it out in a new program at the Recreation Center.

The Supervised Workout Exercise and Training program provides exercise equipment and guidance that has drawn a lot of people who might not exercise on a regular basis, said Mike Hertz, graduate assistant in Sports Medicine.

"If they see all those people in there (the weight room), they get turned off," he said. "It (the SWEAT program) isn't quite as intimidating."

Sports Medicine has its own equipment so that the number of people can be controlled to where people don't have to wait, making for a more relaxed, comfortable atmosphere, Hertz said.

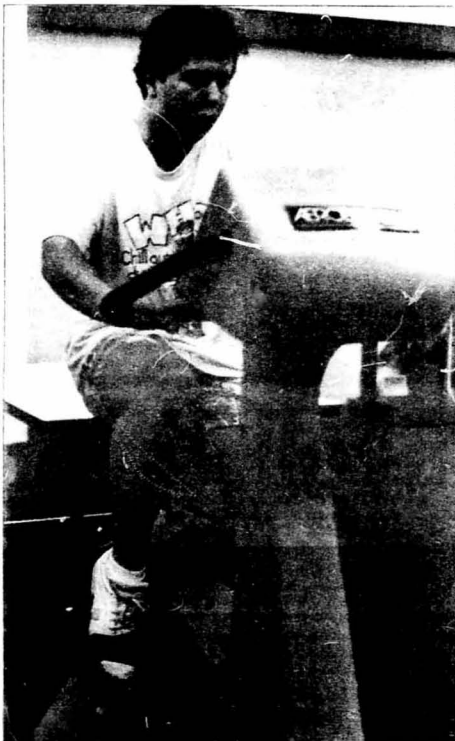

The 12-week program begins with a fitness assessment that measures body-fat percentage, strength, flexibility and aerobic capacity. A tour of the equipment is then given and a program is developed to meet each person's goals.

"They are semi independent from that point on," said Hertz. "But there is one or two people on hand to answer questions and go over techniques for using the machines."

The supervision is something appreciated by most people in SWEAT.

"If you're trying to figure out how to use (an exercise machine) while people are waiting to use it,

Scott nets basketball assistant

SIU-C Sports Information

Jenni Fitzgerald, a skilled adversary of the Southern Illinois University women's basketball the past four years, has changed from Bulldog Blue to Saluki Maroon.

Fitzgerald, who started all 109 games for Drake at point guard and ended her career in the school's all-time Top Ten in five statistical categories, will lend her basketball savvy to SIU-C this season as a graduate assistant for Coach Cindy Scott.

An All-Gateway pick last season, Fitzgerald led the conference in steals (85) and in free throw shooting (.875). She ranked No. 9 nationally in accuracy from the stripe. She also led the Bulldogs in those stats, as well as in assists (112), and was Drake's

No. 2 scorer (14.5 ppg) overall.

Fitzgerald's career stats show her ranking No. 2 all-time at Drake in steals (250), No. 3 in assists (516) and in free throw accuracy (.802), and No. 7 in scoring average (11.1 ppg) with 1212 points.

Fitzgerald always seemed to be at her best against Scott and her Salukis in the cozy Drake Fieldhouse.

As a junior, she had a career-high seven steals in a 68-64 win over SIU-C in Des Moines. As a sophomore, she snagged a career-high nine rebounds to insure a 57-52 overtime victory at home.

"Jenni was always one of my favorites as a player," Scott said. "I thought she was the best point guard in the Gateway the last two years. She's a class person, and a tremendous competitor, who will be involved in all aspects of our program."

Fitzgerald, a 21-year-old native of Davenport, Iowa, attended North Scott High School where she was the Iowa Female Athlete of the Year after earning All-State honors in basketball, softball and volleyball as a senior.

In 1985-86, she was Iowa's "Miss Basketball" and a Converse First Team All American and Academic All American.

Fitzgerald will try to help SIU-C snag a fourth Gateway Conference title and NCAA bid since 1986. The Salukis finished 21-10 last season and return all five starters, including 6-3 forward Amy Rakers (Belleville, Ill.), the 1990 Gateway Player of the Year and Gateway Tournament MVP.

Football banquet set for Saturday

SIU-C Sports Information

Head football coach Bob Smith will host a fundraising banquet for Saturday night at "The Oz," a popular St. Louis-area night club.

Vincent Sauge, co-owner and proprietor of "The Oz," opens the club for the annual social event that has generated thousands of dollars for the Saluki football program in recent years, Smith said.

Admission is set at $25 and runs from 7 p.m. until 10 p.m.

SIU-C director of intercollegiate athletics Jim Hart and many Saluki head coaches plan to attend and visit with the boosters.

"It's a lot of fun," Smith said. "We are going to have a great time like last year. Since we're planning for three hours, it will not be a marathon."

Sauge, a former SIU-C student and avid Saluki fan, opens several hours earlier than usual for the purpose of raising funds for the football program. The club is located at the intersection of Route 3 and Monsanto in Sauge, a Metro-East St. Louis suburb.

"We always have a great time," Sauge said. "We simply have an early opening hour for anyone wanting to help the Saluki football program and we make certain everyone has a good time by providing food and beverages in exchange for a contribution."

Smith said the fund-raiser means a lot for the team in his second season as coach. The money will help pay for the additions to the coaching offices and reception area.

"We bring people in here all the time including other coaches, athletics directors, and parents for recruiting and that takes money," Smith said.

Tickets will be sold at the door for a raffle of Saluki memorabilia.

Tickets are available at the SIU-C football office or at the door Saturday night. Anyone wishing to reserve tickets or request additional information may do so by calling Angie at (618) 274-2990.

Diamond death a possibility

CHICAGO (UPI) — An 11-year-old boy playing second base at a baseball practice is struck in the head by a line drive hit by his coach and is taken to a hospital for X-rays and then released, apparently unharmed. Later, the boy lapses into a coma and is dead within two days.

It's not exactly the heartwarming childhood baseball story we're accustomed to hearing, but it's true.

This year alone, six people have died on the nation's ballfields, Worth Sports Co. President Jess Heald said.

A 1984 study of baseball-related injuries done by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission found 51 baseball-related deaths from 1973 to 1983. In fact, the report said baseball had the most deaths in the 5-14 age group of any sport, and said 86,500 emergency room injuries were reported among players of that age group in 1983 alone.

A common theme emerges from the tables and case studies in the report — the majority of injuries are caused by balls and occur in the head and face.

The same year the report was released, Worth, the Tullahoma, Tenn.-based bat and ball maker, started selling the Reduced Injury Factor baseball. Rather than the traditional yarn-wound core, the RIF ball has a one-piece polyurethane plastic core that compresses on impact, lessening the risk of injury.

The National Operating Committee on Standards for Athletic Equipment tested the ball and found the risk of serious head injury is 2 percent when the ball is travelling 60 mph — compared with an 80 percent risk for traditional baseballs.

Heald, who invented the ball, said it is safer than traditional balls, yet performs just as well.

Heald will demonstrate the same testing process NOSCAE used — which involves firing balls at the head of a dummy — at the upcoming National Sporting Goods Association convention at McCormick Place (July 30-Aug. 4). The demonstration is very convincing, he said.

"That's what fets peoples' attention," Heald said. "You really don't want to get hit upside the head with one of those (traditional balls) going 60 mph."

He said the ball has been approved for use by all of the major youth baseball organizations but is not required and acceptance has been slow.

"It sounds incredible, but the major obstacle preventing the RIF ball's use is coaches' objection to its sound," Heald said.

Instead of the familiar "crack" of ball hitting bat, the RIF ball produces more of a "thunk."

But Heald said sales of the ball increased "dramatically" last year after NOSCAE issued a standard for balls similar to its safety standard for batting helmets.

world/nation Southeast Asian leaders warn Baker on U.S. policies

JAKARTA, Indonesia (UPI) — Southeast Asian foreign ministers said Wednesday Washington's about-face on Cambodia could set back a solution to the 11-year-old conflict and warned Secretary of State James Baker to be ready for a grilling on the abrupt policy shift. The delegates, wrapping up the two-day Association of Southeast Asian Nations ministerial meeting, said they were anxious to hear Baker's explanations for withdrawing diplomatic recognition of the Cambodia guerrilla coalition.

Quebec police accused of violating rights

MONTREAL (UPI) — A Quebec human rights group said police blocked deliveries of food and medication in violation of the human rights of Mohawks and others during a two-week standoff at the Kanasatake Indian reserve. The Quebec Human Rights Commission levelled the accusations late Tuesday after investigating conditions at the reserve and the adjacent town of Oka. "We conclude that fundamental and judicial rights, the right to non-discrimination and non-harassment because of race, are seriously threatened," the commission said.

Kenya frees lawyers accused of subversion

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Kenya freed three prominent lawyers Wednesday who had been accused of subversion and jailed for 20 days in a government crackdown on political opponents seeking a multi-party democracy. Four other detainees were charged before the Nairobi chief magistrate with conspiring to overthrow the government. Attorneys John Khaminwa, Gitobu Imanyara and Mohamed Ibrahim were freed after telling the government they did nothing more than represent clients unpopular with the regime.

Survey shows AIDS worst in Northeast cities

BOSTON (UPI) — The AIDS epidemic shows no signs of waning in the United States but the infection rate varies widely across the nation, with inner cities in the Northeast the hardest hit, a hospital survey showed Wednesday. Dr. Michael St. Louis of the federal Centers for Disease Control said his survey found the problem was the worst in the heart of Northeastern cities, where up to 20 percent of men ages 25 to 44 may be infected with the AIDS-causing HIV virus. HIV rates among these men are higher than previously reported.

Atlantis shuttle grounded again by fuel leak

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — A fuel leak appeared again Wednesday during a test of the grounded shuttle Atlantis, raising the possibility the spaceship may have to be rolled back to the hangar for repairs. A rollback would eliminate any chance of an early August launch. Officials said the test was inconclusive, apparently because a large plastic "baggie" used to trap escaping hydrogen broke shortly after the fueling test began. Given the nature of the results and the time needed to prepare the ship for another test, officials decided to ground the ship.

state Cairo residents want veto of East St. Louis river casino SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — Carrying the crude riverboat model that has become a symbol of their fight for a coveted riverboat gambling license, 100 Cairo residents steamed into the state capitol Wednesday to urge a veto of a bill that guarantees a floating casino for East St. Louis. The delegation from Illinois' southernmost city told state officials they're more deserving of a gaming boat than cash-strapped East St. Louis, which could receive a steamboat license as part of a $30 million bailout from the state.

"Sour on Grapes" is the highlight of the two. A wonderfully satirical comedy, it is witty and fast-paced. The play opens with a dead body on the living room floor and the affluent self-centered Warren family frantically wondering what to do.

Stephanie Crist plays the deceased's egotistical ex-girlfriend, Virginia. Though the boyfriend is dead, she is more worried about her chipped nail.

"It was an accident. I don't see why everyone is making such a big deal," Virginia said.

Timothy Kocher is perfectly cast as the stouching son perpetually lost in space. Sarcasm fills his dialog. One of his many humorous moments is when he throws a handful of Froot Loops cereal into the air and tries to catch them in his mouth.

Hilarious incidents occur when they attempt to hide the body under a couch and in "Mits On," a group of people try to win a used car. In order to win the car, a person must be the last one with his hand or "mitt" on the car.

The play centers on the interactions between different people who otherwise might not come in contact with each other. The extreme characterizations of the play make the interaction so effective.

A Dolly Parton impersonator, two trailer park housewives, a country girl, a college-bound boy, a dumb jock and an old man all vie for the car. A used car dealer wearing a loud plaid suit completes the motley ensemble.

Personality clashes make the play work, particularly between the country girl, Evy, played by Michele DiMaso and the yuppie, Adam, played by Robert Schramm III.

Professor's wildlife service well-known in area

By Amy Cooper

Ask anyone in Southern Illinois about Wetland and Wildlife Reclamation and you will hear the name Willard Klimstra.

"People would know of him personally or know of his work," said Jack Nawrot, associate scientist in SIU-C's Cooperative Wildlife Research Laboratory.

Klimstra, distinguished professor emeritus, was presented with Blackburn College's 1990 distinguished alumnus award this past spring. The award was presented during commencement exercises on May 19 by Nawrot, a 1972 graduate of Blackburn College and one of Klimstra's former graduate students at SIU-C.

Klimstra, who received his associate bachelor's degree from Blackburn in 1939, was chosen for the award for his outstanding achievement and service in his work with wildlife and conservation.

"It is the highest award you can receive from any alumni group," said Klimstra.

Klimstra founded SIU-C's Cooperative Wildlife Research Laboratory in 1951 and was its director until he retired in 1987.

Klimstra also started work on the reclamation project of the Peabody Coal Mine in Williamson County in 1965, Nawrot said. The coal mine, which underwent continued reclamation by Nawrot and other graduate students and researchers from the Laboratory after Klimstra retired, was recently honored by the Secretary of the United States Department of the Interior for outstanding wet-land/wildlife reclamation.

"(Klimstra) would start a project that would seem impossible but would stick with it until it got worked out," Nawrot said.

Klimstra is a member of the Wildlife Society, an international organization of wildlife professionals, and served as vice-president from 1972-73, and as president from 1973-74, Nawrot said. The society also honored Klimstra with the Aldo Leopold medal, the highest award given by the organization.

Klimstra is also responsible for the pioneer work with the Florida Key deer, an endangered subspecies of the deer, Nawrot said. Klimstra is still working in his retirement for the preservation of the deer.

Rock 'n' roll lyrics will not kill your kids

MORAL WATCHDOGS have been trumpeting the evil of rock 'n' roll for the past 35 years.

Elvis Presley could not be filmed below the waist during a 1956 television appearance on "The Ed Sullivan Show" because Sullivan declared his frenzied pelvic thrusts "obscene." "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" by Jerry Lee Lewis was initially banned by radio stations because preachers throughout the South said it was lewd.

These rockers, and their music, are tame by today's standards, and it's laughable to think that the fat old Elvis who wound up singing in Vegas lounges could ever have been a threat to the moral status of our nation's youth.

But there is a lesson to be learned from these examples: history repeats itself.

So we shouldn't be surprised when special interest groups who don't necessarily represent the interests of all American parents criticize a form of music that has not been geared to their age group.

WE REFER specifically to the controversy surrounding the Judas Priest album "Stained Class," which is alleged to have driven two young men to suicide back in 1985.

Rock artists, heavy metal artists in particular, have long been accused of masking subliminal messages in their recordings—and these messages haven't been saying "drink more milk."

But it isn't a laughing matter anymore. The propaganda of watchdog organizations is starting to take effect, with frightening results. Some American parents—the same people who grew up on Elvis and The Beatles—are beginning to pay attention to these moralistic attacks against rock 'n' roll.

Judas Priest and CBS Records have been taken to court, accused of hiding the suicide message, "Do it, do it," on an album, thus causing Raymond Belknap, 18, and James Vance, 20, of Reno, Nev., to shoot themselves.

Never mind that these two men were using drugs and alcohol the night of the shootings and that both had previously exhibited "violent, destructive behavior" toward their friends and family, according to a psychologist testifying at the U.S. District Court trial.

BLAMING MUSIC for the deaths of two troubled youths is not only unjust, it's ludicrous. Even if the album does contain subliminal messages, there is no scientific link that can prove it programmed these two men to take their own lives.

If the parents of the two suicide victims win this suit against Judas Priest, it could set a dangerous precedent, sending a warning to recording artists: "If your music can be interpreted in the wrong way by disturbed minds, you may be held accountable for their mistakes."

Artists like Judas Priest and Ozzy Osbourne, whose album "Suicide Solution" is the target of other court cases, may not produce the most positive messages in American rock 'n' roll, but we must not allow their music to be held accountable for the mistakes of their fans. Such accountability inevitably will lead to censorship.

Those who claim that Judas Priest is responsible for this crime should study a little history themselves. Parents in the 50s and 60s called rock 'n' roll music "anarchic," yet as we can plainly see, the "anarchical ravings" of Elvis and The Rolling Stones have somehow failed to destroy America.

Glancing at the photograph of playwright producers Roseanna Whitlow, Dan Stark and Silvia Baeza in the July 20 Daily Egyptian, I unconsciously assumed that Dan Stark was the main subject of the article. He sat expressionless, while the two women stood on either side and behind him, hands resting on his shoulders, one of them smiling. The article was about all three, talented graduate student producers.

As a doctoral student in marketing who is researching negative male stereotyping in advertising, I decided to discover the basis of my first impressions. I present my findings to photographer Heidi Diedrich.

According to Erving Goffman in his 1979 book, "Gender Advertisements," many small-scale gestures and expressions blend to create gender stereotypes for the viewer.

Relative size and position of models also help to communicate this image. The figures in this photograph are posed like turn-of-the-century families, with the man as central figure, sitting, while the woman stood behind, hand on shoulder as back-up support.

She had the appearance of physically resting on the man for support. Whitlow's smile (while Stark remains expressionless) is another common image of the "helping woman." Baeza looks stronger because she only has one hand on Stark's shoulder and is also expressionless.

You are probably thinking, "Give me a break, this is too picky." I maintain that this photo is an example of the many small inequities that accumulate subconsciously to form overall negative stereotypes of all groups in our culture. This photo shows the woman as subordinate, though equally competent. It might offend some women and certainly seems unfair to the talented women producers.

I do not blame Diedrich for unconsciously creating the image I have described—it is an obvious way to arrange three models in a photograph, and one that has been used frequently in the past.

I hope, however, that this enlightenment will help the Daily Egyptian photographers to give more thought to the images they create.—Judy Jakus, doctoral student in marketing.

Editor's note: DE photo editor Heidi Diedrich did not arrange the people in the above-mentioned photograph, as this letter states. The playwright students requested that they position themselves for the published photo.

Illinois asset forfeiture law could be expensive

Tuesday your editorial staff praised the recent expansion of Illinois' drug war, particularly in asset forfeiture. I have serious reservations about this practice.

When the government funds its operations through prosecution of its citizens, a horrible dilemma pops up. If the government spends time and money to prove its cases properly, the money it recovers may not exceed the money it already paid out. This is especially true for forfeitures under criminal statutes, such as the Illinois law you have praised. The incentive to add a complex financial investigation to an ordinary drug case is lost if the recovered assets will not defray the cost.

If, however, the law enforcement community can convince its legislature to lower the standard of proof to those of civil procedures, it can look forward to a money supply limited only by the number of drug-using citizens it can identify. We have seen this progression from criminal to civil standards before in the evolution of federal forfeiture statutes. If the federal agencies couldn't pay for their cases with the assets of millionaire drug kingpins, why does Illinois think it can use criminal forfeiture against smaller dealers? It will not be practical to ask a police chief to put twice the investigator time into each arrest unless the assets are huge. At that rate, criminal forfeiture in Illinois will not have a major impact on the total drug supply, because it will seldom be used.

The lower standard of proof, civil procedure, is undesirable because it imposes quasi-criminal penalties without the constitutional protections afforded a criminal defendant. When you are brought before the court for civil forfeiture, say of your car, it is the car which is on trial. Your car does not have civil rights. You may be compelled to testify against it, against your interest in the case. Hearsay may be used against you, such as an anonymous tip on 1-800-NARC. Most importantly, the civil standard of proof is called "pre-ponderance of evidence." Whoever has more facts wins. The government goes into the case with the facts it used to establish probable cause, so you have to prove yourself innocent, rather than being shown guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt," as in criminal cases.

I applaud the legislature for leaving pot out of this round of Illinois forfeiture laws, but I caution pot users that federal laws can still be used by state agencies to seize your car for any amount of pot found in the car. The state simply doesn't get as much of the loot.—Drew Hendricks, sophomore, electrical engineering.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board, whose members are the student editor-in-chief, the editorial page editor, the associate editorial page editor, a news staff member, the faculty managing editor and a School of Journalism faculty member.

Letters to the editor must be submitted directly to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 500 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

years ago under a U.N.-brokered cease-fire—Washington's priority would be to ensure the free flow of oil through the strategic waterway.

The dispute erupted last week when oil-dependent Iraq, trying to revive an economy ravaged by nearly eight years of war with Iran, accused Kuwait and the UAE of dumping oil on world markets and forcing crude prices down.

Baghdad also accused Kuwait of stealing some Iraqi oil from a disputed border well. Saddam Wednesday reportedly called on Kuwait to give Baghdad $2.4 billion as compensation.

On Tuesday, the Washington Post reported Iraq, which in the 1970s laid claim to all of Kuwait and was involved in military clashes with the emirate, had massed 30,000 troops on the Iraq-Kuwait border. Kuwait reportedly placed its tiny armed forces on alert and moved Soviet-made missiles to the strategic islands of Warba and Bubiyan.

But Arab diplomatic sources said Wednesday Iraq had assured Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak it would not use military force against Kuwait.

Mubarak made a surprise visit Tuesday to Iraq and Kuwait in an attempt to defuse the crisis. He met with Iraq's Saddam Hussein in Baghdad and Kuwait's Emir Sheikh Jaber al Ahmad al Sabah in Kuwait City.

Iraq, with a 1 million-strong army, Wednesday had appeared to reject Mubarak's mediation. Baghdad Radio quoted an Iraqi spokesman as saying Baghdad would resolve its own differences with Kuwait and the UAE, and that Mubarak's visit only involved bilateral relations, not a gulf crisis.

In Geneva Wednesday, OPEC oil ministers, including those of quarreling Iraq and Kuwait, conducted informal bilateral talks and gathered for a monitoring committee meeting on the eve of a full OPEC conference Thursday.

"We are only talking about oil, not politics," Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aghazadeh said.

Democratic Sen. Paul Simon and Republican Rep. Lynn Martin, locked in a heated battle for Simon's seat, received virtually identical totals from thrift interests. Martin has received $7,524 for her Senate campaign and Simon has received $7,000.

Most of the PAC money went to incumbents, but Republican Manny Hoffman, who is challenging incumbent Democrat George Sangmeister in the 4th Congressional District, received $150 in contributions to nothing for Sangmeister; Republican Paul Eugene Jurgens, who is challenging Democrat Dick Durbin in the 20th, received $100 to Durbin's $3,350, and John W. Hallock Jr., one of the candidates vying for Martin's House seat, received $1,000 to nothing for John W. Cox Jr.

Also receiving money from S&L interests were: Henry Hyde, $5,5180; John Porter, $250; Phil Crane, $250; Harry Fawell, $4,600; Denny Hastert, $1,675; Ed Madigan, 6,250; Terry Bruce, $3,450; Jerry Costello, $625, and Glen Poshard, $500.

Receiving no thrift PAC funds were Sangmeister, Democrats Gus Savage, Charles Hayes, William O. Lipinski, Sidney Yates and Lane Evans. Annunzio's Republican challenger, Walter Dudyecz, also received no S&L contributions.

The inmates here are non-violent, white collar offenders—most serving five years or fewer. The penalty for walking off is an automatic five-year sentence, a $50,000 fine and a transfer to a place that has bars and fences.

"We haven't had anybody walk away in six years, Michael Laird, a case manager at the camp, said Wednesday.

The 100-acre facility is adjacent to but separate from the nation's top maximum-security prison. The U.S. Penitentiary-Marion is the nation's only Level 6 prison and houses inmates other facilities cannot handle like well-known spies and international drug dealers.

The prison camp looks like a resort or summer camp. Well-tended flower boxes dot the lawns. Picnic tables are scattered under tall shade trees. For recreation there's the softball, a weight-training room, handball and tennis courts, a modest basketball facs just a year old, air-conditioned, with 12-foot-by-12-foot sleeping cubes that house two inmates each. The architecture is art deco, the primary color inside is aqua, and the place is hospital-clean.

"I'd say it's like a college dorm or possibly a military barracks," said Randy Davis, executive assistant to the warden. "He (Rose) probably had a living experience like this in the minor leagues."

Lillard Davis, 39, Nashville, serving 21 months on a drug charges, rated the sleeping quarters highly.

interpreters and is looking into the phone system.

"In-house we do have staff member individuals that are sign language interpreters," Mona Kerns, administration spokesperson, said. "We are currently evaluating the phones and recommendations will be made soon."

George Maroney, administrator of Carbondale Memorial Hospital, said they offered only sign language interpreters.

"If a patient comes in that has a problem, we have Social Services that can make arrangements," he said.

Maroney explained the absence of special phone services by saying that people don't really call hospitals in emergency situations like they do police and fire stations or ambulance services.

A recent study by the IDORS Division of Services for the Hearing Impaired found that nearly one-third of Illinois hospitals do not have a system for providing sign language interpreters, even though hospitals that receive federal funds are required to provide the interpreters.

Durenberger denounced by Senate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate voted Wednesday to denounce Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., for "reprehensible" and unethical conduct in yielding to the temptations of greed.

The vote followed a unanimous resolution passed one week ago by the Senate Ethics Committee that recommended the punishment for evading limits on outside income and other violations.

Denunciation is the toughest sanction short of outright expulsion a senator can receive for wrongdoing.

Durenberger did not vote and

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., voted only "present."

In a speech on the Senate floor prior to the vote, Durenberger apologized to his colleagues and vowed to "work even harder than I already have to bring about solutions to our national challenges, by bringing to the Senate the best ideas my state—and my experience—can produce."

"To my colleagues here, who know me and work with me, I would just say how deeply sorry I am for the painful ... experience we've just been through, and for the extra burden my misconduct has placed on each of you," Durenberger said.

In its resolution, the committee said Durenberger used a book deal with a Minneapolis publisher and other financial maneuvers to avoid Senate rules limiting outside income. The scheming—involving more than $100,000—was "reprehensible and has brought the Senate into dishonor and disrepute," the panel said.

It concluded that Durenberger "knowingly and willingly" engaged in conduct that was "in violation of the statutes, rules and Senate standards and acceptable norms of ethical conduct."

In addition to denunciation, the committee recommended Senate Republicans take additional disciplinary action against Durenberger and ordered the third-term senator to reimburse $29,000 plus interest to the Senate and pay $95,000 to charities with which he has no affiliation.

Durenberger, 55, has maintained his misconduct was unintentional and urged committee members in a letter to issue a milder punishment of reprimand, which requires no formal action by the Senate.

Eastern Airlines, employees indicted

NEW YORK (UPI) — Eastern Airlines Inc. and 10 employees, including a former vice president, were indicted Wednesday on 60 criminal charges of falsifying aircraft maintenance records at airports in New York and Atlanta.

Certain aircraft repairs were not performed and records were falsified in a coverup attempt under a "scheme" directed by Eastern's Miami headquarters to avoid costly flight delays and cancellations, U.S. Attorney Andrew Maloney said.

The indictment marks the first time an airline has faced criminal charges stemming from allegations of maintenance violations.

Eastern and the employees face 60 counts of conspiracy, fraud, falsification of facts to the Federal Aviation Administration and obstruction of justice.

Each count carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Eastern, if convicted, would face a maximum fine of $30 million. The charges represent a major setback for the troubled carrier, which has been operating under federal bankruptcy protection and trying to rebuild business since its unions launched a crippling strike in March 1989.

"This case is not about money or fines," Maloney said at a news conference in Brook'lyn. "It's about deterrence in the very important area of public safety."

Between July 1985 and October 1989, as a result of "unreasonable demands, pressure and intimidation put on them by Eastern's upper management to keep the aircraft in flight at all cost, the maintenance personnel failed to perform maintenance work" on aircraft, the indictment said.

One of the most serious incidents involved a process known as surping, used to extract water and other contaminants from fuel tanks, Maloney said.

Exxon Valdez captain loses license for year

LONG BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Exxon Valdez Capt. Joseph Hazelwood lost his mariner's license for a year Monday in a plea bargain with the U.S. Coast Guard.

Under the agreement, made public during a Coast Guard hearing, Hazelwood pleaded no contest to two counts stemming from the worst environmental disaster in U.S. history. The other two charges against him were dropped.

Hazelwood, 43, entered his no-contest pleas—which carry the legal weight of guilty pleas but without the admission of guilt—to charges that he drank alcohol within four hours before performing his duties and that he negligently left the bridge of the tanker while it was headed for Bligh Reef.

While agreeing to the 12-month license suspension, Hazelwood asked the Coast Guard panel to credit him for three months because he has been without his license since he voluntarily surrendered it.

The Coast Guard was expected to rule on the request later in the day after hearing from prosecutors.

The two charges that were dropped alleged that Hazelwood had a blood-alcohol level higher than the legal limit for ship captains of .04 percent and that he turned control of the ship over to an unqualified third mate.

The tanker accident resulted in an 11-million-gallon oil spill in Prince William Sound last year. The spill, which blackened more than 1,000 miles of the environmentally sensitive Alaskan coastline, was the worst environmental disaster ever.

Hazelwood's attorney, Michael Chalos, said the no-contest pleas, were not intended as an admission of any wrongdoing.

Hazelwood proclaimed his desire to return to the sea as soon as a jury in Alaska convicted him of negligence in the Exxon Valdez spill while clearing him of three more serious charges, including reckless endangerment and operating the tanker while intoxicated.

But the Huntington, N.Y., skipper, who was fired by Exxon after the disaster, needs a Coast Guard license to go to sea.

The 987-foot Exxon Valdez, loaded with 53 million gallons of Alaska crude bound for Long Beach, smashed into the underwater rocks and tore open at 12:04 a.m. on March 24, 1989.

Along with fouling the coast of Alaska, the spill killed tens of thousands of animals, devastated an entire commercial fishing season and polluted the pristine wilderness, which is still being cleaned 16 months later.

As a result of his criminal negligence conviction, Hazelwood was sentenced to spend 1,000 hours helping clean up the mess but his sentence was put on hold while he appealed.

The evidence against Hazelwood in the Coast Guard's license hearing was much the same as the evidence against him in his Alaska criminal trial. But several of the charges in the Coast Guard administrative proceeding are different.

Sunset Concert Series finale to showcase '60s Public i

By Rob Coné
Entertainment Editor

You might want to set your wayback machine for the 1960s and take the Nehru jacket out of mothballs before heading to the season finale of the Sunset Concert Series.

Billed as the '60s band for the '90s, Public i (formerly Secret Agent Band) performs at 7 tonight at Lenus Turley Park on West Main Street.

Randy Antlept, Public i's drummer and background vocalist, said besides playing the music of Hendrix, Clapton, Dylan, The Who, The Stones and The Beatles, the copy band also plays Motown, rhythm and blues, and the works of contemporary artists like Elvis Costello, The Cure, The Call and The Pretenders.

On occasion the band has been known to break into a nostalgic segment of '50s and '60s TV theme songs like "Leave It To Beaver," "Bonanza," and "Green Acres."

Antlept said the band's broad play-list of familiar tunes appeals to all audiences. "We let the music stand on its own," he said, adding that the band will take requests.

Since the name change to Public i, Antlept said the band has started to compose original material, most of which is written in a '60s vein.

As Secret Agent Band, from the band's inception in 1987 until 1989, the group has built a following in the Chicago area by playing colleges, clubs and corporate parties and by winning the 1988 Chicago Beatfest sound-a-like contest and the 1988-89 Chicago Park District Talent Searches.

Antlept, a Cubs and Sox beer vendor in his early '30s, said that while he doesn't live in the '60s his music does because even today he remains "a British invasion fan from way back ... ever since I saw the Beatles on Ed Sullivan."

The rest of the baby boomers or wanna-be boomers, all in their 20s or 30s, that make up the band are Gerald McClendon, house painter and lead vocalist, Carlo Basile, encyclopedia salesman and guitarist, Marty Silber, piano bar musician and keyboardist, and Brian Fischer, office worker and bassist.

Local 911 service recommended

By Christina Hall
Staff Writer

A 911 emergency telephone service for Jackson County was recommended to the Jackson County board that would allow Carbondale and Murphysboro to continue to dispatch their own emergency services on 911 calls.

The Emergency Telephone Services board recommended that a 911 primary public service answering point be located in the Jackson County Sheriff's department to receive all incoming calls.

The board also recommended that two secondary public service answering points be located at the Carbondale police and fire department and Murphysboro city hall to receive transferred calls for their area, Sheriff Bill Kilquist said.

The board agreed to recommend a $1.25 service fee to telephone users to pay for the 911 system.

The recommendations will be voted on by the Jackson County board and placed on the referendum for the 1990 general election.

The emergency system should be in place approximately 18 months after the referendum is passed, Kilquist said.

The emergency system will be capable of sending the closest emergency service, said Edward J. Hogan, Carbondale police chief.

The system "is the best of all worlds as far as citizens are concerned. The system will allow cities to maintain control over their dispatchers," Hogan said.

"We will be working with our own personnel who are familiar with our own streets and frequently the people who are calling in," he said.

With the 911 system the dispatching units also will be able to work as back ups for each other, Hogan said.

Experts attending the recent gathering of the Christian Booksellers Association estimated at least 1,000 versions of the Bible are sold on the U.S. market. That figure doesn't include options in binding and covers, which are made in material from fine leather to denim.

Guesses on annual sales in the Bible business began at $250 million.

SIU-C video game expert to be on ABC

University News Service

ABC's "Home" show has invited SIU-C's Nintendo expert, Suzanne M. Keller, to appear on the show live Friday, July 27, to talk about her doctoral research on the popular game.

Keller, a Du Quoin native, said the show's staff has asked her to debate the popular home entertainment system's possible educational merits with another guest. Her son, Dylan, will accompany her and will demonstrate some Nintendo products.

The show will appear locally on WSIL-TV, Channel 3, at 10 a.m. Friday.

Keller says she is the first person in the nation to earn a Ph.D. based on research into Nintendo's educational potential. She received a doctorate from SIU-C in May.

She believes that the skills youngsters perfect while playing various Nintendo games are the same ones they master to learn to read, write, tell time and use maps.

University anthropologists finish salt spring excavation

Current site study explores 900 A.D. Illinoisan Indians

By Karen Radium
Staff Writer

The anthropology department, in conjunction with the Center for Archeological Investigation, has excavated a salt spring near Shawneetown.

Jon David Muller, anthropology professor, and a field school have been working on this project since 1970.

"This particular salt spring is an historically best-known salt production site by the Europeans in the beginning of the nineteenth century, Muller said.

"Our research at the site is looking at Indians during a time of 900 A.D. to historical times," he said.

Muller said that evidence has shown the Illinoisan Indians and others which made up the Mississippi society around the time of 900 A.D. were largely agricultural growing corn as their primary crop. "With production of plant foods, there is a large demand for salt," he said.

A problem that the field school has run into is that a commonly-held political theory suggests that Indians became specialists in whatever trade the environment offered. In other words, people who lived near water were fishing specialists, some were hunting specialists, others were agricultural specialists.

However, this particular site gives no evidence that the people were salt specialists or people who made salt for a living. It is still up in the air, he said.

"We could not find any evidence of economic specialization, everyone was making the same things...There has been no indication of any households who were potters, arrow-makers," Muller said.

The field school has found that the archeological remains of the salt spring site are "transient." In other words, people did not live there year-round.

"Families would go there on a seasonal basis," he said, "when they needed salt." In general, Muller and the field school have been researching everyday life of the Mississippian environment and have found the society to be very sophisticated and the people to be generally well-fed.

This summer's field school will finish next week, but there are several more years to go. The next step is to examine the lives of chiefs compared to ordinary lives and other elite settings, he said.

The field school enables students to actually do the work. "In archeological work, you don't get a second chance," he said, "because digging a site destroys the site."

"We never dig a site just to train students. We have to be involved in a project," Muller said.

The excavation of the site near Shawneetown is run in conjunction with Shawnee National Forest.

For the past twenty years, the field school has received support from a number of sources such as the National Science Foundation, Shawnee National Forest and the U.S. Geological Survey. But, the funding has mostly come from SIU-C, he said.

Research: New link found in Lyme disease arthritis

BOSTON (UPI) — Certain people appear to be genetically susceptible to developing chronic arthritis from Lyme disease that does not respond to treatment, researchers said Wednesday.

A high proportion of people who develop long-term Lyme disease-induced arthritis have substances known as antigens in their blood, which act as genetic markers, labeling them as having a high susceptibility, said Dr. Allen Steere.

"This is the first report of a genetic marker being involved in Lyme disease, specifically in patients with chronic arthritis. It suggests that a person with the marker will have more serious arthritis of longer duration," said Steere, director of the Lyme Disease Clinic at the New England Medical Center in Boston.

In a study of 80 people with Lyme disease arthritis, Steere and his colleagues found that 25 of 28 patients, or 89 percent, whose arthritis had lasted between one year and four years had one or both of the genetic markers known as HLA-DR4 and HLA-DR2.

By contrast, only six of 22 people, or 27 percent, with short-term arthritis of one to five months had the markers, as well as 19 of 30 people, or 63 percent, with moderate duration arthritis lasting between six and 11 months, the scientists reported in The New England Journal of Medicine.

The finding has implications for the chances of developing a vaccine for the disease and may help in furthering understanding of disorders such as rheumatoid arthritis and juvenile diabetes, Steere said.

He said the study suggests that in some people, one or more genes are present that influence the body's response to the invasion of the bacterium that causes Lyme disease, leading their immune systems to attack their own joints.

More than 14,000 cases of Lyme disease have been reported in 43 states since 1980, with most cases occurring in the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic coastal states and Wisconsin, Minnesota, California and Oregon.

The disease is spread by one of several types of tiny deer ticks, which attach themselves to a person's skin and inject an infection-causing bacterium into the bloodstream.

Within a week or so, the infection typically causes flu-like symptoms and a distinctive rash that spreads like a red bull's eye around the bite.

Most people — including those with high genetic susceptibility — can be treated successfully for Lyme disease in its early stages. Treatment generally consists of doses of oral antibiotics such as tetracycline or penicillin, Steere said.

However, if left untreated for two or three years, the disease can lead to arthritis of the joints, meningitis, weakness and memory lapses. It is at this stage that antibiotics are frequently unsuccessful in treating arthritis among those with the genetic markers, Steere said.

Among these people, the best treatment is often surgical removal of affected tissue, which is usually in the knee area, he said.

Study shows homosexual persons are more likely to be left-handed

TORONTO (UPI) — Homosexuals appear more likely to be left-handed than the general population, a Canadian study showed Wednesday.

Researchers at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, studied 38 homosexual men and 32 homosexual women and classified them as left-handed if they performed at least one of 12 simple manual activities such as lighting a match with their left hand.

Among the women, 69 percent were either mixed or left-handed. Among men, 45 percent were "lefthies." In addition, a followup study found an even greater percentage of homosexual men were left-handed, the researchers said.

In the general population, about 10 percent of people write left-handed, while 30 percent favor

A greater prevalence of left-handedness among homosexuals suggests their "brain organization may be different than others," said Dr. Sandra Witelson, co-author of the study.

The study is part of a larger ongoing effort to look at the biological and environmental roots of human behavior.

Witelson speculated that hormonal levels during fetal development may affect brain organization. Lesbians may be exposed to an excess of male hormones when they are in their mother's womb, while the mothers of homosexual men may not produce enough of the same hormones, she said.

Such speculation is supported by studies involving the daughters of women with a medical condition that causes an excess of male hormones. The daughters exhibit more left-handedness and lesbianism than those in the general population, she said.

"There are reasons to suspect homosexuality may have a biological component. There may be environmental ones as well," said Witelson, who said her findings, published in the journal Psychoneuroendocrinology, are similar to those found in a 1987 British study.

Dr. Stanley Coren, a University of British Columbia psychologist who has studied left-handedness for 20 years, said the latest results were welcome but not surprising.

"Different studies have shown a number of psychological disturbances related to left-handedness," said Coren.

University anthropologists finish salt spring excavation

Current site study explores 900 A.D. Illinoisan Indians

49ers need several signatures on dotted line

By Frank Cooney
San Francisco Examiner

ROCKLIN, Calif. — Even as players began showing up for the first day of training camp Wednesday, the 49ers were playing their first big game.

It's the annual National Football League version of the old TV game "What's My Line."

For those who don't recall that program, each segment began with a guest being requested to "Sign in please."

In the NFL version, management is trying to get unsigned players to sign in on a contract. Both sides are trying to calculate where they should draw the line for salary and other benefits.

As the rookies and some veterans were due to check in at the 49ers Sierra College summer headquarters Wednesday there were still eight unsigned rookies, eight unsigned veterans and two more incumbent starters who want their contracts redone in some manner.

All this does not include quarterback Joe Montana, who is in a class by himself, as usual. He's dealing directly with owner Eddie DeBartolo Jr. and team counsel Carmen Policy on a new deal that would give him the highest salary in the NFL.

DeBartolo said he wanted his All-Pro quarterback to have such an honor and Montana refused to argue the point. So they are expected to announce a four-year deal that will put a multi-million dollar nick in DeBartolo's cash supply.

While other negotiations are proving to be a little more difficult, most players without contracts are expected to be signed up by the time the veterans report Saturday.

That includes three rookies who have already reached agreements — fourth-round center Dean Caliguire, eighth-round wide receiver Dwight Pickens and ninth-round defensive lineman Odell Haggins.

Three veterans who are expected to show up with signed deals are guard Jeff Bregel, center Chuck Thomas and linebacker Jim Fahnhorst.

Two others who already have contracts — starting left defensive end Pierce Holt and starting center Jesse Sapolu — have apparently made progress in negotiations. Holt's agent, Leigh Steinberg, says he expects his client to check in on time even if the contract is not completely settled.

And the biggest little newcomer to the team, first-round pick Dexter Carter, a 5-9, 170-pound running back from Florida State, is said to be getting close on a four-year deal worth about $2.5 million.

Other draftees who are not signed include defensive lineman Dennis Brown, a second-round pick from Washington; defensive back Eric Davis, second round, Jacksonville State; wide receiver

Ron Lewis, third round, Florida State; and defensive back Anthony Shelton, 11th round, Tennessee State.

Other veterans still unsigned include offensive left tackle Harris Barton, starting strong safety Chet Brooks, linebacker Charles Haley, defensive end Kevin Fagan and nose tackle Jim Burt.

"We're in just about the same place we usually are, so there's no reason to panic," 49ers general manager John McVay said. "We expect to have most, if not all, players signed by the time camp gets rolling."

The two-a-days begin Thursday. Workouts, that is, not signings.

Soviet baseball has long way to go

TACOMA, Wash. (UPI) — Soviet baseball players must still master the basics.

For example, not one scratched his pants during a two-hour workout at the Goodwill Games this week. Only two or three chewed gum. No one spit tobacco, and the subject of arbitration never surfaced.

They need some work on the nuances, too. Like hitting, throwing, and catching. If one practice means anything, the Soviets can do none of the three.

But does any of this scare them? The thought of playing in a Triple-A ballpark? Against a United States team that will send players to the pros? Before some 8,000 curious Americans?

"It definitely does," said Vladimir Bogatyrev, listed as the coach but more properly described as commissioner of Soviet baseball.

Thursday night, on a field where Jose Canseco played as recently as five years ago, the Soviets will put their droopy stirrups on display. Officials will probably have to invoke the 10-run rule, where the game stops if a slaughter is occurring after the sixth.

Puchkov, Rubanov and Onokhov will never rival Tinker to Evers to Chance. Heck, Soviet infielders don't even know how to smooth the dirt with their spikes.

But they'll learn and improve, just as Soviet basketball and hockey players did. Today, eight years after Bogatyrev saw his first game in Cuba, the Soviet version ranks somewhere between high school and junior college.

As for Thursday, the San Francisco Giants had a better shot at winning last year's World Series than the Soviets do of beating the Americans. And yet there's always that one tiny ...

"I don't even want to think about it," said an American baseball official who had come to watch.

Alexander Buyanov is 25, and played this season for the Vladivostok Tigers. He comes from Leningrad, stands 6-foot-6, bats right and throws left.

A pitcher, he also hit one over the Fruit of the Loom sign in left the other day.

He may start against the Americans. Or it might be Viktor Kamen, the 24-year-old right-hander from Odessa. The coach refuses to say, which means the idea of probable pitchers has yet to hit the USSR.

Stepan Rubanov, 21, resembles Yankee second baseman Steve

Sax. When told as much through an interpreter, he beamed and said, "Spasiba bolsheya," which means, "Thank you very much."

Rubanov said he never heard of Sax's problems in throwing to first base a few years ago.

"I also have some problems with my throwing," he said.

He referred a question about the lineup to his coach, but word is Rubanov will play second and bat second. What will he try to do batting second?

"My main goal is to move the leadoff man up to the next base." Dumb question.

For two hours they worked in their white uniforms with red and yellow trim. The fungo man doesn't hit straight.

The batting practice pitcher can't throw strikes from 45 feet. Hitters swing and miss in the cage. Sounds like the American League East.

But there's hope. One hitter used the bat to knock dirt from his spikes.

There's chatter on the field. Coaches and players watch videos from the big leagues. Who knows, maybe they'll even learn how to spit pumpkin seeds.

"We're not out to reinvent the wheel," Coach Bogatyrev said.

Jordan launches homers during Comiskey practice

CHICAGO (UPI) — Michael Jordan can do everything.

The Chicago Bulls superstar Wednesday fulfilled a childhood dream by taking batting practice at Comiskey Park before the Chicago White Sox-Cleveland Indians game.

During the five-minute session, Jordan hit two home runs, launching a pitch into the first row of the lower deck in left field and hitting another off the upper facade in left.

"This is something I dreamed about as a kid," Jordan said of his youthful aspirations to play major league baseball. "I kind of lost that dream when I started playing basketball. This renewed some of those dreams."

White Sox coach Dave LaRoche was on the mound, the Chicago players lined the outer edge of the infield, and the back of the batting cage was surrounded by television cameras from around the country. When Jordan swings, people take pictures.

"It didn't take me long. After a few swings, I started making good contact," said Jordan, a right-hander who pulled most of his hits to left field.

He didn't miss many, which didn't surprise Bulls and White Sox owner Jerry Reinsdorf who arranged for Jordan's dream to come true.

"I don't think there's anything he can't do," Reinsdorf said. "I've seen him bowl. He threw two strikes and a spare between his legs."

The pre-BP hype centered on the appearance of No. 23, which is both Jordan's and White Sox third baseman Robin Ventura's number.

"I stole the number," Ventura jokingly said.

Can he dunk like Jordan? "From a trampoline maybe," Ventura said.

White Sox Manager Jeff Torborg gave Jordan a few pointers in the ballclub's indoor batting cage before the Bulls' $25 million man walked onto the field, blowing bubblegum bubbles.

"I told him exactly what Walter (Hrniak, hitting coach) wanted to hear — keep your head down," Torborg said.

A pitcher in high school, Jordan also threw strikes in the White Sox bullpen before his hitting display and impressed several of the players with his side arm delivery.

"When he threw sidearm, he threw real well," White Sox pitcher Jack McDowell said. "He threw five balls for balls, then started throwing strikes. That's hard for us to do."

it can be embarrassing," said Karrie Ewers, a graduate of SIU-C participating in the program.

Many people using the program lose weight in addition to getting into shape.

"People starting out often see no change in weight because muscle is replacing fat," said Hertz.

To give people incentive to keep to their routine, participants have to sign a contract where they agree to come in a certain number of times a week.

"The idea is to help participants make a commitment, not necessarily to our program, but to exercise," Hertz said. "Sometimes it helps to have something in writing."
