Growing up a Saluki

BRANDON AUGSBURG

bauggie @siu.edu

My first trip to Carbondale was a freshman year spring break trek with my good friend Mike. We were coming to visit one of my best friends, Ryan, as we were both in the market for a new school.

After just one night at Sidetracks, we both decided to transfer.

I had spent that year at a small private school in northeastern Iowa. On most weekends, though, I was nowhere near Wartburg College. I usually went home to Batavia or drove to Iowa City to visit friends from home and party Big Ten style because Wartburg just never felt like home.

When I moved to Carbondale in the sweltering August heat, it felt different. I had a dorm room, but Ryan gave up half of his room so I could stay at his place whenever I wanted. I spent almost the entire first semester crashing on the spare bed, living with two of my best friends.

For the first time in a long time, I began to feel comfortable. I was really on my own for the first time, and between the guys at 303 and 311, we pretty much owned E. Mill Street that year. We went to Cavefest twice, hit up the Polar Bear party at Pinch, ran rampant through Lewis Park and made dollar night at Hangar 9 every week.

School fell in there somewhere, but attendance was iffy at best. Needless to say, my grades suffered, but I had the "college experience." That was what really mattered about sophomore year.

Somewhere in the midst of the late nights and questionable decision-making, we began to grow up. Ryan renewed his faith and found his professional calling, Mike dove into academics and proved himself the smartest person I know and I switched from whiskey on the rocks to gin and tonic or wine.

Suddenly we were not the snot-nosed eighth graders TP-ing houses on the west side anymore. We were juniors in college and well on our way in our studies and in preparation for whatever came next.

Mike and Ryan showed an amazing ability to rejoice in the quieter side of life once it became evident temperance was the only way to succeed. I did not share their grace in settling down — I am still the rebel of the bunch, but I am more comfortable now with that fact that may never change.

Our collective relationships became strained at times throughout junior year, but I really think that would be the case for most people in our situation. We had known each other for so long and were all blossoming into different people, so the transition was naturally bumpy.

Senior year brought better tidings. I hosted a cookout early in the fall semester and Mike and Ryan joined the fracas. We ate burgers, drank expensive beers and played euchre — our Mill Street game of choice — well into the night. That set off a spurt of semi-regular beer and card nights throughout the year.

After seven years of school in Batavia and three in Carbondale we were back where it all began — hanging out on a Saturday night, listening to music and talking about life.

The topics had changed, but we could still hear the eighth-grader in each other's voices. That same zest for life and anticipation of the future was still there as a subtle reminder of our youth.

Though we each took a different route through campus — Ryan followed his professional passion, Mike grossly overworked his brain and I partied just enough to get by — we all found what we were looking for in Carbondale.

We were all on the edge of the next step when Ryan was killed in a car accident in April.

So much of what I have learned and become at SIUC is because of Ryan. He bought me my first drink on the Strip and got me a job at the DAILY EGYPTIAN. Ryan introduced me to my roommate and good friend Sean and he took me to Little Grand Canyon for the first time.

No matter what I did in Carbondale, Ryan was a part of it — the best and worst memories from my time as a Saluki.

Looking back on one of my fondest memories, I cannot help but smile. Ryan never could fully understand the jack rule in euchre, so Mike and I teamed up to whoop Sean and Ryan for the better part of three years.

The last time the four of us played, Ryan turned the tables. Ryan and Sean recorded a clean sweep of that evening's euchre proceedings for the first time ever. It was a fitting end to our gatherings, especially considering all the grief we gave Ryan at the card table over the years.

He got that last one and I know he smiled about it, so I can too.

And that might be the most important thing I learned growing up a Saluki — it is OK to embrace the tears, as long as you do not forget to smile too.

Augsburg is set to graduate with a degree in journalism.
