Carbondale is rapidly growing into a major international education center. The foreign population in Carbondale has increased more than sixfold since 1963.

More than 1,500 foreigners live in Carbondale compared to less than 200 in 1963, Jared Dorn, assistant director of International Education said Friday. More than 900 international students representing 67 countries are enrolled in elementary, secondary and post-secondary schools in Carbondale. SIU has 900 international students enrolled as undergraduates, graduate students or students registered in SIU's practical training programs, Joseph Chu, director of International Education, said Wednesday.

International Education operates on an annual budget of $16,325 which pays for all international student and faculty activities. “We have a very tight budget,” Chu said.

Chu said the 75 tuition waivers offered annually to needy international students at SIU may be reduced "by as much as two-thirds in 1978."

This decrease was proposed following the evaluation of about 900 tuition waivers granted at SIU for the 1977-78 school year, Bruce Swinburne, vice president of student affairs, said Wednesday.

The majority of SIU's international students speak English as a second language. Those who cannot are required to enroll in the Center for English as a Second Language (CESL), Alice Morris, administrative assistant at CESL, said Thursday.

CESL students cannot enroll at SIU until they pass the CESL proficiency test which evaluates English speaking skills, Morris said.

English language instruction at CESL can range from six to 39 weeks at 50.

Ground contamination possible

Radioactive cloud to cross northern U.S.

By Brian R. King
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Part of a California-size radioactive cloud formed by a Chinese nuclear test probably will reach northern Washington state by 7 a.m. EST Saturday, government officials said Friday.

Ground contamination from the cloud depends chiefly on whether there is any weekend rain to bring radioactive material down from the upper atmosphere, an Environmental Protection Agency spokesman said.

The projections all would be updated publicly through the weekend, he said.

According to a weather forecast, there is a chance of rain in the Northern states at the time the cloud is passing Saturday night, he added.

Even with rain, U.S. officials don't yet know how strong the radiation would be at ground level, or whether it could be harmful, the spokesman said.

An "initial prediction" of the cloud's passage across the United States was posted Friday evening by EPA on the basis of work done by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA).

The central portion of the 16,000-square-mile cloud should travel across this area much later in the week, the projection said. By 7 a.m. EST Sunday, the center of the cloud should be over western Pennsylvania.

At the same time Sunday morning, the projection said, the southern boundary of the debris-filled air mass is expected to be over southeastern Texas, after moving southeasterly from Oregon.

EPA said that the southern boundary of the cloud was expected to cross over the Atlantic Ocean shoreline at South Carolina Sunday night.

The cloud should have crossed over the New Jersey shore late Sunday morning or early Sunday afternoon, it said.

Dr. W. D. Rowe, EPA's deputy assistant administrator for radiation programs, said that "the most potentially critical pathway to man" for radioactive contamination of this kind is through the milk from cows that have eaten grass in a pasture contaminated by rain-deposited debris.

United Fund student donations up in ‘76

By Lydia Gabriel
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Although the 1975 SIU United Fund student drive has been completed, donations from the University are still coming in from president of Student Affairs, Larry Haven, chairman of the Carbondale United Fund Drive, said Thursday.

As of Friday, the faculty-staff donation total had risen to $35,969, said Bob Kline, chairman of the campus drive and director of area services.

The total for students this year, exceeds last year's total, he said.

Haven said a comparison of this year’s and last year’s campus donations would not be accurate at this time because the 1975 campus drive began two weeks earlier than the citywide drive, has not yet been completed.

"Donations are still greatly appreciated and encouraged," Haven said.

City and campus donations together have reached almost $51,000, said Haven. The citywide goal set for this year was $55,000. Although donations were still expected from the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce, Haven said.

Bob Dorn, president of United Fund, said Monday that donations for the 1976 drive will probably surpass last year’s goal of $85,000.

The United Fund Drive divides Carbondale into 30 districts.

"Speaking of donations collected within the division, Haven said, "I'd say the public employees did the most outstanding job.

"I've seen other divisions and sub-divisions which donated more money than last year are the hospital employees, the hospital itself, the doctors and people in insurance, real estate and finance.

The Carbondale United Fund Drive, founded in 1955, consolidates separate fund drives for 15 service agencies in Carbondale. It allocates the donations to the agencies to aid in their self-support to help pay their cost of service.

"The agencies cover just about every facet of the system in Carbondale," Haven said.

Fridge cards can still be sent to Bob Kline at 815 South Longview, SU or to the Carbondale United Fund, P.O. Box 984, Carbondale, Ill. 62901.

Beirat airport opens, ringed tanks troops

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Ringed by tanks and peacekeeping troops, Beirut International Airport reopened for a trickle of civilian traffic Friday and sábado. The arrival and twelfth departure of four jetties from Lebanon’s privately owned national carrier, Middle East Airlines, was hailed by many Lebanese as a significant step toward economic recovery.

"It’s wonderful to be back home," said Camille Rizk, the first passenger to disembark from a 747 jumbo jet that flew from Jeddah, Saudi Arabia.

Bush, Carter discuss CIA’s secret methods

PHILADELPHIA, Ga. (AP)—CIA Director George Bush briefed President-elect Jimmy Carter for nearly six hours Friday on the highly secret methods his agency uses to gather intelligence around the world. As Bush returned to the White House, he was told reports of a CIA mission to Vietnam had been released to the public.

Amphetamine prescriptions may be c barred

WASHINGTON (AP)—Federal officials indicated Friday that doctors soon will be barred from prescribing amphetamines as weight-control pills because of widespread abuse of the drugs. However, such action still would leave doctors free to prescribe the medication for other purposes. These substitutes, like amphetamines, are generally accepted as a legitimate substitute for the original drug.

UAW, Harvester agree on three-year contract

CHICAGO (AP)—Negotiations for both International Harvester and 20,000 striking employees agreed Friday on a three-year contract and a union official said he expects them to be ratified that weekend. "All the home ends are agreed to," said Art Shy, assistant to United Auto Workers Vice President Pat Greathouse. "We’re cleaning up language and we’re getting ahead on everything."

GM, UAW reach tentative agreement

DETROIT (AP)—The United Auto Workers and General Motors reached tentative agreement on a national contract Friday, ending what was hailed as the most profitable year the industry has seen in years. The new agreement sends the two sides back to the bargaining room. The strike followed round-the-clock bargaining that began Thursday. Many were withdrawn at most of the strikepoints early Friday morning.

WASHINGTON (AP)—U.S. District Judge Audrey Robertson denied on Friday a request by two U.S. senators and a Missouri state agency that be declared a federal court order to block the construction of a new St. Louis area airport.

Consumer price rise lowest in seven months

WASHINGTON (AP)—Inflation continued its cooling trend in October with the consumer price index increasing the less than one percent in seven months. The Labor Department, in its price report Friday, said last month’s increase would have been even smaller had it not been for new car prices, which increased 0.6 percent.

The Illinois Liquor Control Commission (ILCC) will hear the liquor license suspension appeals of five Carbondale liquor store owners Monday. The owner, W. Stephen, Thomas and Philip Hoffmann and Robert and Thomas Palmieri, received liquor license suspensions which were later to have been taken effect Aug. 2. The pending appeal has allowed the stores to remain open. W. Stephen and Thomas Hoffmann own Eastside Liquor Mart, Philip Hoffmann owns ABC Liquor Store and the Palmiers own Lee’s Wetzler Liquor Mart.

The appeal will be heard at 2:30 p.m. in Room 101 of the State Office Building in Springfield.

Venezuela president against oil price hike

ROME (AP) - President Carlos Andrés Pérez of Venezuela was quoted as saying Thursday that his country would try to moderate or even halt its own rise in oil prices at next month's meeting of OPEC, the petroleum-exporting nations' cartel.

Pérez met with Italian Prime Minister Craxi on Thursday in Rome. Later, however, Craxi said the Italian leader told him he "had noted the assurances by OPEC to moderate their rise" and that Italy would continue to play its moderating role within OPEC, or the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, to avoid, or at least to limit, an increase in the price of oil.

The Venezuelan president, in an off-the-record meeting with Italian government officials Thursday, said the Italian government, noted that "Venezuela plays a moderating role, which finds its counterpart in the action taken by Italy within the European Common Market."

OPEC is scheduled to meet Dec. 15 in the Persian Gulf sheikdom of Qatar to review oil prices, which have been rising recently. October's price hike of 15 cents a barrel, some other members have called for price hikes of 15 per cent or more.

Saudi Arabia, the largest producer, has said it favors an increase of less than 10 per cent.

Pérez was quoted Thursday as saying an increase of 15 cents per barrel would already be dangerous, but some are talking even of 15 per cent.

The third-largest producer in OPEC, President Giovanni Leone, earlier said in Rome that crude oil prices were "too high" and that crude oil was "no longer a commodity." But some analysts said the comments were aimed at restoring the prices of OPEC and influencing the economic policies of other oil-producing nations.

Carter likes to think he won it himself

By Garry Wills

The inevitable post-election analysis has begun. It will be continued for years by scholars; but now is the time for gathering impressions, while facts are still fresh, from the participants. What do they feel they worked for? Were they right? What were they trying to do? What, given the chance, would they do in a different way?

One of the more important reactions comes from Carter’s bright young polliater, Pat Caddell. Caddell makes two points: the first relates because of his own candidate’s overall success, and the second because he is trying to explain his mistaken babbling about Eastern Europe. But all three cut into the momentum of the Ford team’s careful strategy.

The second remark Caddell had to make on Ford’s campaign was that the choice of Robert Dole hurt him. Caddell’s only poll showed Carter picking up two to three points when his name was linked with Mondale. The thought of Dole as president was enough to send many people out to vote for the other. (I know, my wife and I are in them.)

Caddell’s analysis is a convincing one. But it does not convince Carter. We get some idea of the tension within the Carter camp by measuring the difference between the candidate’s attitude and his polliater’s. Asked about the debates, Carter said they were important because they let the American people get to know him. He does not find their impact merely strategic, but substantive. He “came across” to the American people.

Carter likes to talk about his “personal relationship” with faceless masses—even with the millions who turned on their TV sets for the debates. He believes people only have to see enough of him to love him. Ford’s people wanted to make Carter the issue, while Caddell and others kept trying to make the Ford record the issue—against the resistance of their own candidate.

The other question—that of Dole versus Mondale—brought an equally characteristic response from Carter. Asked if Mondale helped him, or Dole hurt Ford, he told journalists after the election: “When people go into the polls they don’t vote for vice president.” It was the attitude that kept Carter from using Mondale at the end of the campaign, the way Humphrey used Muskie in 1968. Carter wants to do it personally. He has his personal qualities to be the issue. He cannot imagine losing if that is the case.

So Carter agrees with analysts like Richard Rovere, who call his victory “personal in a way that such things seldom are in American politics.” Rovere says Carter won by persuasion rather than organization. It is understandable that Rove should continue to be wrong; but it may be disastrous for Carter to keep thinking such things. Richard Harwood, in one of the best post-election summaries, shows that Carter’s view almost cost him the election. The Democratic organizations turned out, almost in spite of him, to give Carter the victory he first scorned to take from them.

Rove plays down the party victory by saying it was labor rather than the machines that gave Carter his edge. But labor is the principal remaining machine. It takes up where the urban organizations left off, where it does not overlap them. The old ethnic machines have admittedly faded; but Frank Rizzo was very important to Carter.

Rove also points out that Mayor Daley did not deliver Illinois, despite the way Carter “risked his reputation for independence by pleading for” help. He seems to think that such pleading was a mistake, or at least superfluous. But Carter had to pay his dues to Daley if he was to avoid the mistakes of McGovern. Daley did not deliver. But labor and the other mayors would not have rallied around Carter if he had not shown at least the basic deference to Daley and Mayors.

He made it hard enough, for the regulars to stick with him. He would have made it impossible if he had acted like another McGovern in his treatment of Duf Mars. Carter slipped in “with a little help from his friends”—i.e., Daley’s friends, not Carter’s. He does not seem to realize that, even now, which could mean trouble for him in the future, and for us.

Thanksgiving: A focal point

By Eric White

Thanksgiving vacation comes so late in the semester, I’m afraid a lot of students have already dropped their tracks. The rest of us are just thankful for a break. Thanksgiving is my favorite holiday. It’s must be November. Birthdays are less strenuous than Christmas. It’s quieter than the end of July but has a somberness, a Memorial Day. There’s none of the can’t we have to listen to on Veteran’s Day, the thanksgivings we all had at some point.

I graduated before the others, but traveled back to Chicago and did the next couple of years. As the others graduated, the celebration caught up with me in Chicago.

Most of the group has dropped off now, but we still drift in. Patty and Bob have a baby. And I’m a student again. We’ve all turned out to be a little more bourgeois than we planned.

And this year I’ll be later than I planned. Because I forgot to make a reservation on the Pan-American, I will have to take a later train. But I’ll stay a couple of days before I head back south to see my mother.

And we’ll all come back to Carbondale to face all the work I’d planned to catch up on while classes were out. But that’s a long time away.
Randle Wolfe is always willing to lend a hand to a customer who wants a shampoo. A hose and a specially designed trough lets him wash hair right in the barber's chair.

The intimate relationship between a man and his barber is revealed as the moment of truth arrives. The customer who wants a shave puts his trust in the barber's steady hand.

In this shop, time stands still . . . but hair keeps growing

The slow pat-pat-pat of a straight edge razor against a heavy razor strip that hangs from an old cabinet echoes through the barber shop.

Randle Wolfe, known in Flora as "C.L.,” turns from the strip and continues to shave one of his customers. "These strips were used for other things a long time ago,” Wolfe said. "They used to be used to tan a funny in the old days.

Wolfe has been in the barbering business since 1944. During those 53 years, his shop has been located in several different buildings in the southern Illinois town and Wolfe has been partners with several different people.

Wolfe’s Barber Shop has been in its present location, 108 W. N. Ave., for about 30 years. The shop is the oldest business located in Flora’s main drag.

Wolfe said his shop is the only one in town that gives shaves. "Used to be everyone did,” Wolfe said. "Of course almost everyone who came in years ago wanted one. Now you might work everyday and not shave anyone. And, he added, “with the way the long hair styles are, you might work everyday and not even see anyone.”

Essays say radical change needed in social work system

By Karl Grob

"Radical Social Work," edited by E. Bayley and Mike Brake, Free

Social work, a major growth in dustry in the United States and Britain, has become more concentrated with the expanding industry than helping its clients. Bailey and Brake set forth to solve this problem and others in their book,

"Radical Social Work."

The major problems in the welfare state, how the problems came about and solutions are discussed at length in the book. The editors believe this book will be a radical social work, a revolution by both the social workers themselves and those who work in the system. The book's appendix states the beliefs of a group of social workers attempting to change the course of their work in society.

Bailey and Brake point out there are many social workers who now realize there are problems within the welfare program, but these workers fail to do anything to change the situation because there is no easy money to be had and they are afraid of losing their jobs. The editors find that the most effective way to bring about change is through the creation of new social workers.

The problems in existence in the field could have been avoided if there had been some means of self-criticism within the profession. They hope this new collection of essays will help to form a base for such criticism.

"Radical Social Work," containing essays by English social workers, is, given more an international scope with the addition of an introductory chapter by Richard A. Goward and Frances Fox Piven, two American social workers who have long been calling for change within the profession.

"Radical Social Work," which contains the biographies of all contributors as well as a comprehensive list of references, is a critique of the social work profession in every sense of the word. More points of view with the social work profession are discussed without ever coming to the conclusion that there is something wrong about the present system.

The book is rated idealistic in its presentation. While the possible effectiveness and usefulness of changes within the welfare program are examined, there is no doubt about the possibility of a program utilizing these changes.

Although the book does have its shortcomings, the editors and a commendable effort of putting together a useful book on this widening topic.

"Radical Social Work" does indeed establish a base for criticisms and changes within the field of social work.

Howard Hughes’ private life not quite so private anymore

By Linda Bood

Human career shines with aura of mystery and sensation; invisible and stirs human curiosity. That curiosity is intensified when one of the two richest men in the world chooses seclusion for his life.

Howard Robard Hughes Jr. whose fortune, according to Nelson
C. Marden has been estimated to be between $1 billion and $10 billion, did exactly that. Marden, an investigative reporter, traces Hughes’ life from the time Hughes attended an exclusive party in the Bahamas in 1939 (the first time in 15 years he had been seen in public) to his death on April 5, 1976.

Maddux’s book is a colorful, complete account of the billionaire, the scientist, the Hollywood producer, the rumoured lover, the husband, the aviator and the power in high government circles. All of this is sprinkled with a wealth of information on Hughes’ parents and youth.

The book is written clearly and interestingly combined to explain exactly what made Hughes succeed.

In general, the book’s primary source of strength is in Marden’s skill in confirming or refuting, but in such case clearing up, the various myths about Hughes by using well-documented facts.

One way the author achieves his goal is by enabling the reader to see Hughes through detailed description and clear, crisp photographs.

As a result, it is revealed that Hughes did not resemble the bizarre image rumors had created—a def Ore man with nghiệp and tall, eight inches long. Instead he is described as having been, in his prime, a handsome, 6’6”, 140 pound, dark-haired man who, subsequently, had withered to an ematinated, 98 pounder by the time of his death at age 76.

Hence, the reader is given an opportunity to question his thirst of curiosity and disregard the fabricated Hughes image he had no doubt created based on gossans and hearsay.

In addition, the reader is given a chance to hear Hughes through the direct quotes, appearing frequently throughout the book. One quote demonstrates Hughes' awareness of the few stories about him as a result of the mystery his seclusion had created in the minds of the public.

"It is a funny thing, it really is," Hughes said, "in this world you can’t just be neutral or you can’t just go about your business and live the life in which there is something to be a normal way. This just doesn’t seem possible. You apparently have to do certain things and follow a certain type of conduct in order to achieve mistakes.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, the author attempts to help the reader understand Hughes by showing the decision which undoubtedly led to Hughes’ death.

Although a number of expla-inations are cited, the cause of death is Hughes’ hypochondriac fear of germs. Hughes had an extreme case of what doctors refer to as myositis, a mordant fear of contagion. However, the author stated that, according to doctors, a fear of illness was real, but because Hughes was really because hardly anyone in any country, in an environment where health care did not exist.

Basketball Salukis brace for first game

By Rick Knox
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

The Saluki first-stringers looked very impressive in the final preseason intrasquad basketball game Thursday night in Herrin. The White team, composed of the players who will be seeing the most action, came on in the second half to defeat the Maroon team 84-54. With the score 32-30 at halftime in favor of the Maroons, the Whites changed their offense to a high-post, and ran away with the game, outscoring the Maroons 51-24 in the second half.

Five of the six players on the White team scored in double figures with Corky Abrams taking game-high honors with 20 points. Brother Wayne scored 16, freshman Al Grant, 16, Mike Glenn, 14, Richard Ford, 13 and Gary Wilson, 6.

Mel Hughes led the Maroons with 11. Mill Hillman had 10, Dan Harris, 9 and Barry Smith, 8. Nine players played for the Maroon team.

After fighting with a virus much of the season, Grant came on strong in the game and played like the center the Salukis have missed since Joe C. Merriweather graduated 1 1/2 years ago. Grant hit 4 of 12 shots, some from 10 to 15 feet.

For the first time in the preseason, Wayne Abrams had a hot night shooting, hitting eight of 14. Although, he is a guard, he led all players with nine rebounds.

The White squad had a historic 59.1% in the game, while the Maroons hit a poor 34.7.

The tempo of the game was speeded up in the second half when the Whites came on strong. Wayne Abrams usually led the breaks. Many of the White points were scored from inside, something that has been lacking in recent years when SIU would burn the nets from outside.

About the speeded up tempo of the game, Coach said, "I see us having the ball and run, then we'll play fast. We just have to keep doing what we're doing, except do a lot better. During the next week, we have to go back, brush up and polish our game.

"Grant played a lot so that we could see what he could do. We know what we won't get any more from Abrams usually leading the breaks. Many of the White points were scored from inside, something that has been lacking in recent years when SIU would burn the nets from outside.

Throughout the season, Glenn has kept his shooting to a minimum. He has scored 29 of 67 shots in the season. At his sophomore year at SIU, he hit .619 per cent which is believed to be the highest shooting percentage for a guard in NCAA history.

The Salukis open the regular season Friday in the downtown Arena against Missouri, which finished fourth last year in the Missouri Valley Conference. SIU is the only Southeast Missouri team to open against a team that made the NCAA tournament last year.

Prior to the game, the Salukis will hold a meeting to discuss the game. The meeting will be open to the public.

The SIU home season opens Nov. 29 in the Arena, the day after Thanksgiving. Jewell College, Lambert's alma mater.

SIU runners at NCAA finals

By Paul Lambert
SIU multimedia writer

Southern Illinois Cross Country Coach Lew Hartog isn't making any predictions about what the Saluki runners will do Monday at Denton, Texas, in the NCAA cross country national championships. comprising, because actually he doesn't know what to expect from his team, he said.

"Any coach making a prediction going into the NCAA national championships is foolish," said Hartog, a veteran of five SIU cross country seasons. "This season, I've seen too many teams that were supposed to win it all finish..." He was interrupted by a visit from the team's trainer, who told him some of the runners were not feeling well.

Hartog said he would run a team of fresh runners to just try to keep the Salukis in the standings, and other teams who were not picked to finish high do so. "It would be phenomenal, however, if we could get in the top 20."

"The kids are running extremely well right now," added Hartog. "I'm hoping that they will compete Monday as they have in the past two weeks." All the Salukis have done in the past two weeks is win the Valley championship over a highly favored Wichita State team, and finish fifth in the NCAA District Five Meet against the best from the Valley and Big Eight conferences, plus the top independents from the Big Ten.

One thing of which Hartog is relatively sure: sophomore Mike Sawyer will give a good account of himself, even if the team does not finish high.

"I have great hopes for Mike," Hartog said. "I just think that the little guy is ready to run a great race. I wouldn't be surprised if he made the top 25 runners and possibly qualify him as a cross country All-American.

"Regardless of the outcome this weekend, this has been a great cross country season," said Hartog, putting the year in perspective. "The kids deserve what they have gotten."

The Salukis will be running against 30 other teams at Denton. The meet will include 353 individual runners.

Michigan favored over OSU

By Jim Minner
Sports Editor

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) -- Officials of the Orange and Cotton Bowls view the nationally televised Big Ten showdown between fourth-ranked Michigan and sixth-ranked Ohio State today, Saturday, hoping to share the lion's share of the approximately $3 million dollars in royalties generated by the game for the Detroit Athletic Club, organizers of the annual tilt.

The winner automatically qualifies as the Big Ten's delegate against the Pacific-8 champion in the New Year's Day classic in Pasadena, Calif.

If the Wolverines win, they will tie the Ohio State for the conference title, but the Buckeyes have a bid for a spot as the Big Ten champion. Ohio State can win the title outright and the bowl bid with either a victory or a tie against the Wolverines.

The Wolverines are the favorites, Michigan 10 points to 6, according to sports bookies, but the Wolverines haven't won the Big Ten title since 1977.

Despite the home team advantage, Ohio State did not win a Big Ten title in six years until last year when they defeated Michigan 24-15.

A 50th straight Ohio Stadium sellout of more than 80,000 and millions more dollars in national television (ABC-TV) will view the opening kickoff at 12:30 p.m. ET.

The Wolverines may win their first Big Ten crown in five years.

Canadian Club wins IM floor hockey championship

By Jim Minner
Sports Editor

Four players scored goals and goalie Ed Arlington played brilliantly as the Canadian Club defeated Team Canada 4-3 in the SIU men's intramural floor hockey final played Thursday at Pullman Gym.

It marked the fourth consecutive year Canadian Club was the intramural hockey champion. The title also runs the "Canadian" emblem across the blue line the last year period to 22.

Paul Coates, Adam Adams, Ian Munroch and Jim Stapp each scored one goal for Canadian Club. Mark Coates and Mike Marchetti tallied goals for Team Canada.

Each player scored a first-half goal. Both Coates and Team Canada Coach Tom Sidor cited Ed Arlington's game as a deciding factor in the contest.

That's the best game that I've seen Ed play all year," said Coates. "He saved at least 10 shots. At the start and especially at the end, he made some great saves.

"Their goalie played well," said Sidor. "He made some nice saves with his glove hand and leg." Stapp cleared both teams away in the game as center Koster scored after an assist from Adams just about two minutes after the start. Later in the first period Adams scored on a pass by Stapp and Team Canada Coach Tom Sidor cited Ed Arlington's game as a deciding factor in the contest.

Five minutes into the second period Arlington again answered with a powerful shot after a pass from Jim Arlington to make it 5-4.

Stapp scored just seconds before the second period ended when he took a pass from Adams to cap an attempt by Paul Cassidy. Snapp scored Canadian Club's final goal in the round with 2:37 left in the game.

Coats' short-handed goal for Team Canada tied the score at 5, and Coates' goal in the third period was the winner. Coates said that both Canadian Club's offense and defense figured heavily in their win.
