Tamaroa couple sues Foundation

Land mismanagement claimed

By Tony Mancuso
Staff Writer

The SIU Foundation president believes the Foundation has a clear-cut defense in a suit Calvin and Jean Ibandahl have filed against it at the Perry County Courthouse.

Jean Ibandahl said the couple from Tamaroa is suing the Foundation for a minimum of $15,000 because of mismanagement of its 612-acre farmland donation before the 1987 purchase of the farmland by Lester Pitchford. The suit was filed Oct. 10 in Perry County.

Rex Ball, SIU Foundation president, said the land was donated to the University in the spring of 1985 and was sold to Herbert Paesch in the same year. When Paesch declared bankruptcy in December 1985, the Foundation regained control of the property until it was resold to Pitchford.

"We believe the land was not being supervised properly before (Pitchford's purchase)...The foundation sold it to a bankrupt man," Ibandahl said.

"The Ibandahls allege the annual percentage payments they expected weren't enough and that we mismanaged the trust," Ball said. "Our attorney believes our position is correct."

"Anything the Foundation has done was legal and proper," Dan Kimmel, attorney representing the Foundation, said. "If the suit makes it to the courtroom, the Foundation will be vindicated."

Kimmel, of Gilbert, Kimmel, Huffman & Prosser, Ltd., said two trusts were actually set up when the Ibandahls donated the property to the University. He said the first was created when the couple conveyed half of the property to the Foundation Dec. 31, 1984, and the second trust was set up March 1, 1985 when the second half of the property was given over.

"Both of the trusts were unitrusts which were set up for the benefit of the donor. When the Ibandahls donated the property they were taking advantage of a tax situation and providing themselves with a lifetime income. Now they are not satisfied with what they have received," Kimmel said.

"As described by the Internal Revenue Service, a unitrust makes payments based on the net market value of the trust asset, which is evaluated each year," Kimmel said.

He said the unitrust is often confused with an annuity trust, which pays out a fixed sum based on a percentage of the original value of the land.

Ball said the "charitable unitrust" is set up to pay the Ibandahls a yearly percentage of the property value until their deaths, when the money will go to the SIU-C College of Agriculture.

He said as the value of the property fluctuates each year, as well as the amount of money the donors receive.

Flag proposal meets fiery death in Senate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate, in a dramatic showdown Thursday with President Bush, decisively rejected a proposed constitutional amendment to outlaw desecration of the American flag.

The amendment, which would have been the 27th, was once considered almost certain of passage. But grassroots passions cooled, senators feared tinkering with the 200-year old Bill of Rights and Republican co-sponsors defected.

The vote was 51-48 in favor of the amendment, 15 short of the two-thirds majority voting that was required for passage. A vote breakdown showed 33 Republicans and 18 Democrats voting for the amendment, and 37 Democrats and 11 Republicans against.

"In my view, the flag should be at half-mast after this vote," said Senate GOP leader Robert Dole of Kansas.

The American Civil Liberties Union hailed the Senate vote, saying, "Senators demonstrated today that they understand that the right of dissent is a fundamental principle of our society. A majority, no matter how large or impassioned, cannot censor others or dictate how they express their political views."

Homemaker fills board position

By Theresa Livingston
Staff Writer

A former bank officer and homemaker from Winnetka has been named by Gov. James R. Thompson to the SIU Board of Trustees.

Molly D'Esposito was appointed to fill the vacancy created by Carol K. Kimmel, who resigned last week because she had moved out of state.

"The governor feels she is very qualified, with all of her various experiences to fill the position," Mary Frances Fagan, spokeswoman for the governor, said.

D'Esposito's appointment is effective immediately and runs through 1995, but is subject to Senate confirmation. Legislators are scheduled to vote on the appointment Nov. 1.

"From what I know of her, I believe Mrs. D'Esposito will be an outstanding member of our Board of Trustees," Chancellor Lawrence K. Pettit said in a press release. "In addition, she will help to give us more presence in suburban Chicago and her appointment reaffirms that SIU is not just another regional state college, but is a major University with a statewide mission."

D'Esposito brings educational administrative experience to the job, having served a three-year term as a Barat College trustee in the 1970s. She said she looks forward to the appointment and plans to tour the various SIU campuses

Southern Illinois to receive help in fighting elderly abuse

By Jackie Spinner
Staff Writer

The Illinois Department of Aging has targeted Southern Illinois as one of four state areas that need programs to fight elderly abuse.

The Elder Abuse and Neglect Program, designed to combat abuse of the elderly by asking volunteers to report suspected abuse, is being implemented in 13 Southern Illinois counties, including Jackson County, suburban Cook County and eight surrounding counties and nine northwestern Illinois counties.

"Older people don't have to be abused," Margery Kemp, case manager supervisor for Shawnee Alliance for Seniors, said. "They become vulnerable because they are unable to withstand abuse because of failing health."

Susan Patterson, Egyptian Area Agency on Aging field coordinator, said the Illinois Department on Aging did not have enough money to go statewide so the program

Most campus buildings could handle tremor

By Dale Walker
Staff Writer

If an earthquake like the one that struck San Francisco were to hit Carbondale, the brick buildings on campus would have some damage but most other buildings should handle the strain, Allen A. Haake, SIU-C's supervising architect and engineer, said.

"Some of the brick walls on some of the buildings are not reinforced masonry walls and we saw in San Francisco where some of the masonry units, either brick or concrete block, fell from buildings and landed on cars and on people and killed them," Haake said.

Some of the buildings in the Old Main mall area such as Parkinson Laboratory, Anthony Hall, Wheeler Hall and Altgeld Hall, were built before earthquake technology was developed, he said.

"All of our brick buildings would have some damage but fortunately we are 100 miles from the epicenter of the New Madrid fault zone," so if an earthquake struck there it would not be so bad here, Haake said.

"From 1955 to 1970, the buildings built on campus use steel framing, but the masonry walls around the steel frame could possibly crumble," he said.

Buildings made with steel frames, steel reinforced concrete or wood frames would withstand a quake better than masonry constructed buildings, he said.

Buildings constructed in Carbondale since the early 1970s are designed to withstand earthquakes of a magnitude of 6.5 to 7 on the Richter scale without major failure or collapse, in compliance with the Building Officials and Code Administrators code, Bob Swenson, an architect at Swenson Kaha Architects in Carbondale, said.

"When you design a building you try to create a situation where the components of the building won't fall on people,"

Premature explosion ruins attack on Bogota's leaders

BOGOTA, Colombia (UPI) — An alleged hitman apparently planned to attack members of Congress when a grenade he was carrying detonated prematurely outside the Capitol, killing him instantly and wounding four others, police said Thursday. Jaime de Jesus Molina Alvarez, 22, was blown up before a lunch crowd in Bogota's Bolivar Plaza on Wednesday. He was carrying a submachine gun, a two-way radio and the grenade, which was strapped to his abdomen. Authorities said he apparently was hitman for the powerful drug cartels believed responsible for more than 160 bombings and dozens of assassinations.

Debt-rescheduling labeled a step backward

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — Veteran anti-apartheid activist Walter Sisulu said Thursday the campaign for tougher sanctions against South Africa has been forced to take "a step backward" because of a newly approved debt-rescheduling agreement between South Africa and its foreign creditors. South Africa Reserve Bank Gov. Chris Stals announced Wednesday creditor banks had agreed to a 42-month extension of an agreement set to expire in June 1990 that covers repayment terms about $8 billion in foreign debt.

Senate challenges Bush on abortion bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate passed and sent to the White House Thursday a $156.7 billion appropriation bill that would allow federally financed abortions for the poor in cases of rape and incest. The legislation, already passed by the House, was approved 67-31. There was no challenge to the broadened abortion language that formed the basis of Bush's veto threat. The appropriations measure, second only to the Pentagon money bill, would provide fiscal 1990 funds for most of the country's social programs.

Social Security payments rise 4.7 percent

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Social Security benefits for 43 million Americans will of up 4.7 percent next year to cover the increase in the cost of living, the government said Thursday. Along with the higher benefits, there will be higher Social Security taxes, with an individual wage earner's maximum tax bite going up $250. In announcing the changes, Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan said the average monthly check for the 39 million Social Security beneficiaries in the retired worker category will go from $541 to $566.

Toxic waste worse than estimated by EPA

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The nation's toxic waste crisis is vastly larger than the Environmental Protection Agency estimated and may encompass 10,000 sites and require $500 billion to clean up, congressional analysts said Thursday. In a report critical of the EPA's handling of the Superfund program, the Office of Technology Assessment said the agency has wrongly kept hundreds of badly contaminated sites off its priority cleanup list — now 1,200 sites — simply because they are not as badly polluted as others.

Riverboat gambling hinges on Rosemont civic center

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — Republican lawmakers in the Illinois House would climb aboard a riverboat gambling plan if House Democrats agreed to provide state funding for a civic center in suburban Rosemont, Gov. James R. Thompson said Thursday. Supporters of the gambling bill have looked to Thompson to drum up GOP support for the plan. But he said that will be unlikely if Republicans feel they have been stiffed in their efforts to get $10 million for Rosemont civic center.

Comedy Cellar crowd dead for two mediocre comedians

By Doug Toole
Staff Writer

Kathleen Madigan and Steve Pollard performed comedy routines to a dead Big Muddy Room crowd at the Comedy Cellar Wednesday night.

The two entertainers weren't the best comedians that have appeared by far, but the audience was so unresponsive and quiet it felt more like a geology lecture than a comedy show.

A Review

Pollard opened the show with jokes about "Gilligan's Island", the availability of condoms, his ex-girlfriend and faith healers. His style was unusual because he actually told jokes - not observations or one-liners - but the sort of funny stories you could read in a book.

This style apparently wasn't too well-received, because there were actual lulls in the act. At times no one was laughing, he wasn't telling any jokes and the room was absolutely quiet. Pollard even tried at one point to adjust his material by asking what people did for fun in Carbondale, and no one answered. There wasn't even enough enthusiasm in the crowd to heckle him.

Madigan, who had better material, got roughly the same response. Although they weren't as bad, she also suffered from moments of silence and no audience participation.

She commented about talk shows, saying they eventually got to be too brain-dead for her, but noticed that many college students still watched them. "Sorry, I can't make it to physics; Geraldo is on." She joked about being raised Catholic, owning a Yugo, playing golf (she suggested "fore" be changed to "move, honey") and wrestling.

The rest of her material came from her childhood. She recalled discovering she was adopted when she saw a baby picture of herself and Sally Struthers. Madigan said she was the one holding the bowl of rice.

She also made comments about Catholic morality, saying her mother never slept with a man until she was married, but she got married when she was nine.

Madigan was doing well until she tried talking to the audience. Questions like "Is anyone here Catholic?" "Has anyone here been bothered by Jehovah's Witnesses?" "Does anyone here own a Yugo?" and "Are there any smokers here tonight?" drew almost no response at all from the crowd. She received some signs of life when she asked if there were any college students in the audience, but that was about it.

Then she tried to turn her routine against people in the crowd. Unfortunately, everyone she tried to pick on was uninteresting and lifeless and gave her no material to work with.

These comedians weren't that bad, but you wouldn't know it from crowd reaction. Energetic is not a word one could use to describe the Comedy Cellar Wednesday night.

Homecoming overshadows celebration of Sweetest Day

By Doug Toole
Staff Writer

The temperature is getting colder, the leaves are falling and all over the country, lovers are realizing that they have forgotten to buy anything for Sweetest Day.

This may not get you out of hot water with your "significant other," but in Carbondale, Sweetest Day is apparently not as big a deal as one might assume, given all the recent hoopla about it.

Dawn Gladden, a floral designer for Bobby's Flower Company, said there is more rose and carnation business for this holiday than usual, but Valentine's Day is still the bigger of the two. She said it seems that more women are buying things for men than vice versa. "She said the men probably forget to buy something."

At Fiddler's Seafood and Italian Cuisine, this weekend is pushed as a Homecoming celebration, Amy Faken, hostess, said. She said there will probably be more people wanting to celebrate Homecoming than Sweetest Day this year.

Steve Falat, operations manager of WTOA radio (FM 104.9), said his station usually has some sort of promotion for Sweetest Day, but the holiday will be passed up this year. Falat said Sweetest Day was made up by greeting card companies and he planned on getting more involved in Valentine's Day next year. He said the number of song dedications requested hasn't risen significantly in the last few days, and that he is impressed by the number of advertisers who are pushing the holiday.

WCIL radio (FM 101.5) does promotions for Sweetest Day some years, but not others. Tony Waitkus, operations manager, said. He said WCIL's policy is not to take dedications at all, because of the volume of calls it would attract. He said Valentine's Day is emphasized more because he considers Sweetest Day to be a "Hallmark Holiday."

At the Sheri-Dan Hallmark Center, sales clerk Hilda Leslie said the store doesn't do much added business around this holiday. She said more women than men buy things as well, adding that women are "probably more romantic" than men.

710 Bookstore also reports no big increase in sales, according to Lavina Thomas, buyer for the store. Sweetest Day cards are ordered and sold and stuffed animals are also sold more, but she said it is hard to judge whether there is a significant jump in sales for the holiday.

Mike Perschbacher, assistant manager for the University Bookstore, said sales are getting better every year as more people become aware of the holiday. He said there are definitely better sales of cards, stuffed animals, trinkets and "love-type items" around Sweetest Day.

Country Fair's administrative assistant, Sandy Overstreet, said Sweetest Day is the second-biggest holiday at the store.

Opinion & Commentary

Valid survey on acts would help Arena

WHAT YOU get is what you pay for, or what you say you'll pay for.

This seems to be what governs the scheduling of acts at the Arena.

Certain types of acts, such as heavy metal acts, have proved that they can attract enough ticket buyers so that the Arena can break even on the cost of putting on the performance. This is what guides the decisions made by the Arena in choosing who makes a tour stop here and who doesn't.

The Arena does not receive state or University funding to protect itself from losses.

Recently, there has been a degree of displeasure about the types of acts that have performed and will perform at the Arena.

When Michelle Suarez, promotion director of the SIU-C Arena, said she was reluctant to pursue the possibility of Bob Dylan performing at the Arena because he appealed to an over-25 age group, the Arena's logic of scheduling was questioned.

Several people complained that heavy metal groups had banged their heads too many times, and that country groups had stomped their heels enough. Students said there weren't enough college-oriented bands getting booked into the Arena.

But when all the jabs were traded between all the factions one bit of logic couldn't be refuted: The Arena schedules acts that it think will pull in enough ticket sales to at least break even.

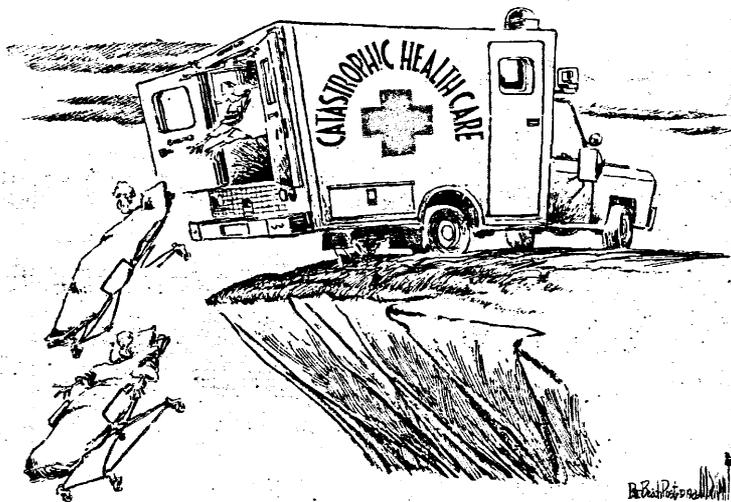

THERE IS another solution that might quiet the angry tribes: Conduct a thorough survey to find out what students and members of the community will pay to see.

This is what the staff at the Arena will have to do to find out what the best possibilities for scheduling will be.

This does not mean setting up tables at the Student Center for a couple of days during the week. It means that the Arena should take the time to find a reputable group to conduct the survey and provide an appraisal of what will work at the Arena.

Students from the marketing department at the University have done surveys and studies in the past, and, if the Arena chooses, it could contact an outside firm and contract it to do the job.

We are sure that the Arena realizes that it will never be able to placate everyone in the diverse community of students and area residents, but by looking into the possibilities, it might discover something that would make the factions a little happier.

Wall Street, Congress' rituals similar because most of us don't understand

On Friday last, when no one was looking, the stock market took a dive. Sly and sneaky are stock markets, especially ours. It had been humming along all day not doing much of anything when, an hour and a half before closing, it saw its chaos and made its move. Down.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which is to greedy people what the Bible is to the pious, fell 190 points. There was a sense it would have fallen further but 190 was all it had time for. Most analysts agreed that the plunge was caused by the failure of the pilots and management of United Airlines to get junk-bond financing for their takeover of the company. (I know that may seem like blaming the 1918 flu epidemic — 20 million dead — on a guy in Philadelphia who coughed without covering his mouth but that's the way stock market analysts are.)

The expectation over the weekend then, was that the market would continue its downward trend come Monday. Everybody on the Street (Wall) started to tool up for a hard day of big losses. The market opened Monday and...

The Dow went up 88 points. Naturally, you want to know what's going on. That's why people like you read columns like this; to know what's going on. I'll answer as simply as I can: I don't know.

I not only don't know, I have this unswerving conviction that nobody else knows either.

On the day after the market's praffall I picked up a copy of the Wall Street Journal, a paper I usually boycott because of its lack of a sports section. It had taken the trouble to ask a lot of experts for their best thoughts on the situation.

Donald Kaul

Tribune Media Services

Elaine Garzarelli, who made her reputation as an analyst by telling her clients to dump their stocks just before the crash of 1987, said Friday was no big deal. "My advice is to buy," she said.

That was reassuring, but Frank Curzo, an analyst who also predicted the October crash of 1987, said everything depended on the Federal Reserve. Unless it cut the discount rate, he said, stocks could go to 2200 (from 2600 where they are now) "very soon."

Joseph Granville, an analyst who was once considered a genius by many but now isn't, said: "If you're a technician, you obey the signals: Right now they're telling me to get the hell out. I see no major support until 2200."

See what I mean? They don't know either. Someone will turn out to be right simply because someone has to be. A normal human being trying to manage an investment portfolio is like a fellow driving a mountain road in a car with his wife, children, parents and in-laws. They all keep yelling different advice at him but when he tries to follow some of it he finds the steering wheel isn't connected to the wheels.

Perhaps the most helpful analysis was offered by economist John Kenneth Galbraith, who told the Journal:

"This is the latest manifestation of the capacity of the financial community for recurrent insanity."

And while all of this is going on in New York, in Washington they were trying to cut the budget (ha ha) deficit, an annual ritual that would be amusing except that it's our money.

Watching Congress try to cut the budget is like watching a kitten play with a ball of electrified barbed wire. The House of Representatives took the first shot at it and its idea of a deficit reduction bill, one that would meet the Gramm-Rudman target of a $110 billion deficit, was a 1,935-page document that would have added dozens of tax breaks to our tax structure, chief among them a cut in the capital gains rate. The Senate, acting with uncharacteristic responsibility, stripped the House bill of most of its goodies. The two versions now go to a joint House-Senate conference where they can fight it out and may the most corrupt side win.

One way or another they eventually will get to the $110 billion figure but it will be a complete fiction. They will lie, cheat, steal and, yes, dissemble to make it look as though they've cut the budget but when they're through we will be spending about $300 billion a year, just as we are now.

You remember that fellow I talked about before, the one with the car that he couldn't steer? I think he's also running out of gas.

Everyone has earthquake story

By Jerry Crasnick

SAN FRANCISCO — Downtown San Francisco attempted to conduct business as usual Wednesday in the aftermath of the earthquake.

A woman in a raincoat walked her dog down O'Farrell Street. Airport buses stopped at the hotels.

And everyone, seemingly, had a story to tell.

At the Nikko Hotel, Herb and Jeanne McGaughy waited for a bus to Reno, Nev. — a three-hour, 30-minute drive away — where they planned to catch a flight to Cleveland.

The McGaughys, from Hudson, Ohio, came to town for a convention. They're cutting their visit short.

"We assumed the airport was jammed up so bad, we couldn't get out," Herb McGaughy said. "If the bus shows up, we're going home."

Added his wife, "And we're never coming back."

Across the street at the Parc 55 Hotel, Clifford and Phyllis Randall waited in the lobby for coffee and doughnuts. At 5:04 p.m. Tuesday, they were watching the World Series pregame show on television when the earthquake struck.

"I was on the 19th floor," Randall said. "The first little tremor hit, and I said, 'What would be causing that?' When the second one hit, I realized it was an earthquake. I made my way to the closet doorway and just hung on. It was really rocking. You could hear the building creaking. I just hoped it would stay together."

Lincoln BaSaign, a doorman at the Parc 55, said visitors appeared more eager to go home than usual.

But as a whole, the downtown area presented few surprises.

Aside from reports of looting in one area, most of the stories were of people banding together.

"There's a family-run pizza place near where I live," BaSaign said. "They didn't charge an arm and a leg, just regular price. But some corner stores were charging $15 for a six-pack, a pack of cigarettes and some candy bars."

Money could be better spent in Carbondale

It is obvious that there are many areas of Carbondale that could use some of the surplus $900,000, that is available to us, that would improve the quality of life for everyone.

My hope for us is, that at least some of this money will go toward youth programs such as matching the $5,000 HUD funds that are available for the children in the projects sports programs.

The City of Carbondale Day Care Center at Eurma Hayes is always in need of funds.

Also the teen-agers of Carbondale deserve some serious consideration if we expect them to feel like an important part of our community.

We need to look at these areas of our development very carefully before we spend more money improving the downtown. — Terry Page, Makanda resident.

State agency helps get disabled people employed

Editor's note: October is National Disability Employment Awareness Month.

By Tim Crosby
Staff Writer

A pioneer employment program in Carbondale is providing disabled people with an environment in which they can best use their abilities, while also providing employers with trained and competent workers.

The Carbondale Holiday Inn employs workers through the Supportive Employment program. The program, begun three years ago, was funded with federal funds through the Illinois Department of Rehabilitative Services. This year the program received state as well as federal funds for the first time.

"This is probably because the program has been so successful," Melissa Skilbeck, spokeswoman for DORS, said. "It has tapped a segment of the population that hasn't been given a chance before."

"IT'S REALLY A good program," Mary Lou Taylor, executive housekeeper at Holiday Inn, said. "The workers are very dependable because they really want to work."

Taylor, who is hearing impaired, said she helped bring the program to the Holiday Inn because she was sensitive to the issue.

"I can understand why this program is needed," Taylor, who is pursuing her masters degree in educational psychology at SIU-C, said.

Prospective employees, which include both mentally and physically disabled people, are referred to the program by DORS. After an interview, the employer and DORS negotiate the percentage of client's salary the state will pay during the client's training.

"TRAINING CAN last as long as eight weeks and the state pays a substantial part of it," Taylor said. "This means there is a whole section of work that the employer doesn't have to worry about." At the end of the training period the employer chooses whether to hire them, she added.

At Holiday Inn, workers perform such tasks as cleaning rooms and figuring time cards. After a participant in the program is hired, DORS continues to provide services to make this time a smooth transition. These services include:

- Providing assistive devices, occupational tools and interpreter services.

- Providing an on-the-job supervisor, called a job coach. As the skills of the new employee grows, the role of the job coach decreases until the person reaches an optimal production level.

- Disability awareness training is provided to company personnel. The training offers information to help integrate workers with disabilities into the work place.

■ DORS also can survey the work place to make sure it will be accessible to disabled workers.

"WE GUARANTEE the quality of the work," Connie Kramer, employment service specialist with DORS, said. "(The job coaches) make sure the job is done right."

Taylor said the coaches train the employees and are ultimately responsible for the quality of their work.

"They spend a certain percentage of time with each client depending on their skill level," Taylor said. "They keep an eye on things to make sure they are getting the job done."

Beth Miller, supervising job coach for Holiday Inn and other supportive employment programs in Carbondale, said coaches teach clients whatever it takes to be competitive.

"BESIDES THE JOB skills, we teach social skills and how to interact with supervisors and the public," Miller said. "They get workers who are already trained when they decide to hire them, plus the state pays for part of their training."

Many of the workers give added independence as a reason they enjoy working.

Kim Watson, 20, said it is her goal to live on her own and holding a job will allow her to eventually do this. "I've never lived by myself. I think I'd be a little bit scared," she said. She indicated that she might be able to move in to her own place by the end of the month.

TAYLOR SAID SHE can see a difference in the person once they are working steadily.

"The increased self-esteem is very noticeable. We joke more and tease each other," she said. "Anybody with a disability has usually developed a sense of humor about it."

Roy Stanford, a houseman at the inn, said he hopes to be working more hours by January. "I've been on my own since I was 18," Stanford, 37, said. "I'd like to make more money. If it wasn't for DORS I don't think I would have found another job."

As a houseman, Stanford cleans public areas and does maintenance work. He has high blood pressure, a condition which Miller and other job coaches are aware.

"The coaches are trained to know how to handle these conditions and medication," Miller said.

"If you put them in the real work place, a lot for the disability and show them how to do the job, you've got a good person" Taylor said.

Blindness doesn't stop this student

By Tim Crosby
Staff Writer

To Susan Fehrenbacher, overcoming blindness to hold a work-study job and graduate from SIU-C is a matter of willpower.

"I want more out of life and I won't get it by sitting at home," she said. "You just do it."

Still, unexpected obstacles are sometimes thrown in her already difficult path. In July of 1988, Fehrenbacher was involved in a dispute with a University Police officer who refused to escort her from the Recreation Center to the Bursar's office to make a deposit. It is standard procedure to have a University Police Officer escort student workers making deposits.

"They said it was a risk to both of us to have me take the money," Fehrenbacher said. "They didn't think I would react to trouble in the right way."

Fehrenbacher said the incident was humiliating and frustrating, but that she doesn't dwell on it.

"He (the officer) wouldn't even talk to me, he talked to my co-workers," she said. "I just want them to know I am capable of going on a Bursar run."

Fehrenbacher, who was diagnosed as having juvenile diabetes at age 10, started at SIU-C in spring 1984. She has worked four years at the Recreation Center and is currently a supervisor at the information center there. "We're kind of the hub of the Rec Center," she said.

"When I went for a job, I wasn't sure what I could do. It was the first job I applied for since going blind," she said. "The people were very helpful though." They said, "tell us what you need."

Her sight gradually worsened, going from legally blind to to totally blind within a few years of coming to SIU-C. But this didn't deter her from advancing her employment record.

"I wasn't getting enough hours one semester so I applied to work at the beach checking IDs," she said.

Fehrenbacher said she would ask

For many people, seeing someone with a disability in a leadership role is an uncommon sight. Paulette Subka likes to do the uncommon.

"People see me in different settings and are surprised, I think," Subka said. "It surprises them to find out people with disabilities like doing the same sorts of things as they do."

In addition to working at the Southern Illinois Center for Independent Living, 780 E. Grand Ave., Subka also is a member of the Coalition of Citizens with Disabilities and founder of a disabled teenager group.

"I guess I'm kind of a catch-all," she said. "I enjoy getting things done."

Subka, who is from the Chicago suburb of Berkeley, moved to Carbondale and attended SIU-C in fall 1978 and earned her degree in special education.

After a short time at Brehm Preparatory School, she was hired by the SICIL as an assistant. Now, as an independent living specialist at the age of 29, she said she enjoys what she is doing.

"I like being a full-time advocate of disabled people," Subka, who uses a wheelchair, said. "I want to make people aware and have an impact."

Her job at the center requires that she play many roles, literally.

The independent living movement, which began 20 years ago, is based on peer counseling and role modeling.

"People can say they know how it feels, but even if they want to they really can't," she said. "The peer counseling gives moral support to people who deal with their disability on a day-to-day basis. We help them with our own experiences."

Her job also demands that she be current on discrimination laws, sources of income for disabled persons and community development projects.

One issue that interests disabled people in Carbondale is the debate over whether to develop a mass transit system. Subka said disabled people would welcome a system.

"It is something we are advocating," she said. "If the city decided to get a system, they would have to make them accessible."

Subka said Carbondale has a reputation of being accessible to disabled people.

"That's why you have students coming to Carbondale and then staying," she said. "You can roll your chair from one end of town to the other."

"Personally, I feel very committed to the rights of disabled people," Subka said.

"After all, everybody has some limitations. Sometimes they are just more obvious, but we all have areas we avoid because we know they aren't as strong points. It's just a question of degree."

Judge drops count; April faces 2 more

By Doug Powell
Staff Writer

The first of three counts of first degree murder charges against Veronica April, a former SIU-C student, was dropped by Circuit Judge David W. Watt Thursday.

Defense attorneys Irv Frazin and Rob Fisher asked Watt to dismiss all three counts of first degree murder against April, but Watt granted a dismissal on the first count only.

The first count of murder stated that April delivered the baby into a toilet bowl with intent to kill, allowing the baby to drown under water.

April now faces two counts of first degree murder for the death of an unnamed female baby she gave birth to on April 7, 1988, delivering the baby into a toilet bowl and allegedly allowing it to die.

Wednesday the state produced a taped interview April gave shortly after her arrest on Aug. 4, 1988, to two Carbondale Police officers.

Watt said Thursday, statements April made on the taped interview were only statements and not a confession to the murder of her newborn infant.

On Wednesday April sat motionless while she listened to the taped interview.

"I stood up, looked and saw the baby move a little and I sat back down," she said in the taped interview. "I sat down for a long time, till I didn't see it move for a long time."

The first count of murder stated that April delivered the baby into a toilet bowl with intent to kill, allowing the baby to drown under water.

The trial will resume today at 9:30 a.m. at the Jackson County Court House.

began in the four areas used for initial demonstration programs.

Patterson said elderly abuse always has existed in Southern Illinois but with public education and awareness it is becoming more apparent.

"There is definitely elderly abuse in Southern Illinois. Some of it rather serious," she said.

The program is aimed toward victims of physical, emotional and sexual abuse, confinement and neglect.

Kemp said 75 percent of the complaints of abuse reported during the initial phase of the project were verified.

Financial exploitation was the most common type of abuse found, she said.

"Children take their older parents' social security checks, wipe out their savings in a joint savings account or misuse the older person's money," Kemp explained.

She said some abusers use the threat of placing the older person in a nursing home to make them turn over money.

Despite what many older people think, Kemp said, "No person can be placed in a nursing home without (his) consent."

Ken Yordy, former Substate Ombudsman for nursing home residents, said most complaints of abuse from older people in the nursing home are not against the facility.

"About 40 percent of the complaints are about problems with residents needing guardianship, controlling money and needing public aid assistance," he said.

Yordy said the Department of Public Health usually investigates complaints against a nursing home by residents since the homes are licensed facilities.

A native of the Chicago area, D'Esposito has a bachelor's degree in economics from Barat College in Lake Forest and a master's degree in business administration from Northwestern University.

After earning her bachelor's degree, D'Esposito won a First Scholar Award from the First National Bank of Chicago. The students in the program are rotated from various bank departments for two years and are awarded full tuition scholarships for their graduate education in business administration.

D'Esposito was retained at the bank after graduation, where worked as a commercial loan officer. She relocated to Springfield in 1977 with her husband, Julian, who was then the Governor's chief legal counsel. They returned to Chicago when he joined a private practice.

D'Esposito said she chose to put her career on hold to start a family, but has been active in a number of volunteer organizations in the Chicago area, including the Junior League of Chicago, the Winnetka Parent Teacher Association and the Volunteer Talent Pool of New Trier Township.

"I have specifically chosen to give up a career because I feel being at home and being a full-time parent is a very important job," she said.

Made it because of potential damage from the New Mexico earthquake, Swenson said.

The BOCA code is a building quality code that all buildings built in Carbondale must comply with, Swenson said.

Some of the buildings built in compliance with this code, which was established in the early 1970s, include Famer Hall, Hiram H. Lear and the State of Illinois Recreation Center and the College of Technical Careers, Haake said.

"When we renovated Davies Gym, the stairwells in the building all included seismic designs to attempt to transmit some of the loads that were put on the building to these stairwells," he said.

"Perhaps we'll have to revisit the constitutional amendment approach, should that ever occur," she said.

Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine, a former federal judge who led the fight against the amendment, said the nation has never tampered with the Bill of Rights in 200 years "despite the worst that fate has hurled at us."

Mitchell said, "Principles which have stood the test of time should not be lightly discarded. Liberties that have seen us through civil wars and world wars should not be tampered with."

Mitchell added that the Senate was being asked "to believe that the flag which neither Hitler nor Stalin could defeat is now threatened by a single misguided person who most Americans never heard of and don't care about."

Mitchell said, "Both our flag and our people are better than that."

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-DeL., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, insisted there never was more than a "scant majority" for the amendment and added, "We saved the flag and we preserved the Constitution."

Chapman's album addresses issues

Stinging verses allow singer to tell story

By Katherine Lydon
Staff Writer

Tracy Chapman does not disappoint her followers with her new album "Crossroads." She boldly addresses issues such as politics, materialism and racism with as much poignancy as she did in "Tracy Chapman."

Chapman's acoustic guitar,

A Review

blues-style voice and stinging verses tell the story of a smart black woman who is full of political anger and not afraid to speak out.

She confronts issues that many shy away from. Her talent allows her to reveal hard facts to which people will listen and pay attention.

Many issues addressed on "Crossroads" are similar to those on "Tracy Chapman," such as naive and rejection during love, racism and hardships of inner-city life, the destructiveness of materialism and the importance of having a sense of self.

"A Hundred Years" tells of a woman whose lover has left. She says, "Here I am. I'm knowing that I'd do most anything to keep our love in me."

"This time I'm gonna keep my heart locked safe inside. This time I'm gonna be my own best friend. This time I'm gonna be the one to win your love, your affection, to hide my fear of rejection" is said while a violin stresses the sadness of the rejection in another song, "This Time."

Racism is addressed in "Material World" as Chapman sings "Call it upward mobility but you've been sold down the river. Just another form of slavery and the whole man-made white world is your master."

Chapman explains the lack of government relief for the poor in "Subcity" and she sings "Please give the president my honest regards for disregarding me."

The importance of believing in oneself is stressed in "All That You Have Is Your Soul" as Chapman sings, "Don't be tempted by the shiny apple. Don't you eat of a bit of fruit. Hunger only for a taste of justice. Hunger only for a bit of truth."

The eye opening lyrics and the mellow folk-blues beat of Chapman's songs not only provide some understanding of the working-class black community, but demonstrate extreme talent and intelligence.

Acclaimed concert organist treats music as a language

By Carrie Pomeroy
Entertainment Editor

Gillian Weir, acclaimed concert organist and recent recipient of the Commander of the British Empire title from Queen Elizabeth, said she approaches music as "the language of the emotions."

"These composers wrote out of passion," she said.

Weir will appear at 8 p.m. tonight at Shryock Auditorium. Admission is $4 for students and $6 for adults.

Weir, who has "always been mad about music," said as much as she adores America, she can't understand the typical American's attitude toward music.

"I'm often surprised that people expect something cultural to be educational," she said.

Weir said many audiences also seem to have misconceptions about the organ as a concert instrument.

"Everybody knows the organ from their Sunday school days and they think it's that thing in the corner that plays hymns," she said with a laugh.

Weir's first introduction to the organ was in a church in her native New Zealand, when she was asked to accompany the choir.

Weir eventually won a scholarship to study music at the Royal College of Music in London and it was there, under the tutelage of renowned teachers Cyril Smith and Ralph Downes, that she learned about the "endless possibilities" of the organ.

She said Downes, an organ designer, taught her much about the structure and history of organs and how differences in organs influenced the course of music.

"The composers exploited the particular characteristics of their organs," Weir said. She said Downes helped her realize that organists must pay close attention to the history and construction of the organ they play. With each concert hall's organ, Weir said she must undertake "a bonding process."

"Organs have their own personality," she said.

Subsequent study in France with Marie-Claire Alain and Anton Heille, helped Weir learn how to "make technique and scholarship serve the music's passion."

Weir, who was the first organist to make a living strictly as a concert performer while also maintaining a teaching position, said she got her start through an international music competition in 1964 at St. Albans Cathedral near London.

She now tours 11 months out of the year to countries all over the world.

"I love touring. It's difficult these days because travel is difficult, but I love it," she said.

She said the response she gets from her audience influences the character of each performance.

"An audience is a cell. It has a group reaction which is very important, indeed, to the performer," she said.

Change of Pace band to play during tailgate

A Change of Pace will get the Homecoming tailgate dancing with its combination of rhythm and blues, rap, top 20 hits and Motown medleys.

The St. Louis-based group's strong point is its versatility, Howard Barrett, Black Togetherness Organization graduate adviser, said. He said five of the band's seven members sing and the band features four keyboard players.

"They're very good. It's very high energy," he said.

Barrett said the 2-year-old band plays original music, as well as songs by such artists as Aretha

Franklin, Sade, Smokey Robinson and Keith Sweat.

Barrett compared the group's original songs, compiled on their recently released cassette "Girls, Girls, Girls," to funk music.

A Change of Pace will perform from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in the Free Forum Area near McAndrew Stadium. The alternate location in the case of rain is the Roman Room in the Student Center. Admission is free.

The show is being co-sponsored by Black Togetherness Organization, Black Affairs Council and the Center for Student Involvement.

Anti-violence rally scheduled tonight

By Sean Hannigan
Staff Writer

For the first time in eight years there will not be a Take Back the Night March in Carbondale to protest violence against women.

Instead, Women's Studies has scheduled a rally from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday in Evergreen Park.

"We wanted to do something different," Janet Morrison, graduate assistant at Women's Studies, said.

Morrison, a member of the Women's Safety Week Committee, said, "We hope this is something that will reinvigorate some passion. We're focusing much of our energy on a strong rally."

"The goal is to protest violence against women and to show an intolerance of this violence," Morrison said. "We don't deserve it and we're not going to take it anymore."

Morrison said the rally will include speakers, poetry readings and live music. Transportation will be provided to and from campus by night transit.

Kathryn B. Ward, Women's Studies coordinator, said the rally hopes to make people aware of the incidents of sexual assault on campus. "We have to keep doing something on violence against women," Ward said.

"Since I've been here there's been a shift from stranger rapes to acquaintance rapes at SIU," Ward said. She said 80 percent of rapes on campus are now acquaintance rapes.

Ward has been going to the dorms and speaking with students during women's safety week.

"Alcohol is usually involved in these rapes. A guy will offer to give a girl a ride home from a party and then assault her," she said.

"We want to tell them to go with a friend and leave with a friend," Ward said. She added that rides should not be accepted unless the driver is well known by the woman.

Morrison said she hopes the rally, the last event of Women's Safety Week, will raise awareness of the attitudes toward women.

"In my opinion the stress should be on women and men," Morrison said. "It is a fact that we do have to live in fear, we have to be aware. I feel men should be changing their attitudes."

Counselor of Hugo victims gives advice to Californians

CHARLESTON, S.C. (UPI) — Talk is cheap, but the emotional payoff of talking is big for victims of natural disasters like the California earthquake, a therapist said Thursday.

Dr. Kevin King of the University of South Carolina Counseling and Human Development Center in Columbia has been counseling victims of last month's Hurricane Hugo that devastated Charleston and produced the same kinds of emotional distress that people in San Francisco suffered as a result of Tuesday's earthquake.

King advised two courses of action for psychological recovery: Talk about it and help others.

"The first advice I give is not to be afraid to talk. There is a common belief that if you don't talk, the problem will go away," King said. "But the reality is it won't go away."

"If you don't talk, you feel less powerful, less in control of what's happening," he said.

"When people feel isolated, it is more difficult to recover. It enhances the feeling of being alone against a powerful force. But the fact is, people are not alone in these disasters."

King said the second course of action he advises is to help someone else.

"I would encourage them, if they are physically able, to volunteer, to help, to do things for other people. That is the easiest path to recovery," the therapist said. "In Charleston, people began pitching in to help out however they could — that helps to decrease the impact."

More than two dozen people were killed by Hugo, and damage estimates range as high as $5 billion.

Disaster officials set California's unofficial death toll at at least 273, but they were unsure how many people were killed when a section of Interstate 880 collapsed.

Increasing the anxiety in California was a wave of aftershocks that rolled through the area Thursday. Hundreds of homes were destroyed and initial property damage estimates exceeded $1 billion from the quake.

King said he witnessed anger among South Carolinians that the nation's interest shifted so quickly to the devastation in California. He said there was fear the drama of the earthquake would divert attention from the suffering of Hugo victims.

"I'm hearing angry reactions," he said, "but I'm sensing people are afraid. They are afraid help will be withdrawn. The recovery in South Carolina is just beginning. I was on the Isle of Palms and Sullivan's Island over the weekend, and houses are still standing in the streets."

"We are a long way from getting started on recovery," the therapist said. "The fear is: Suddenly we will be forgotten because San Francisco is a major city."

"Let's face it — there are more voters in California than in South Carolina."

Nurse on trial in case of injecting lethal drugs

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. (UPI) — A prosecutor Thursday called Richard Angelo "a monster dressed in nurse's whites" who killed four patients under his care at a Long Island hospital by injecting them with paralyzing drugs.

Angelo, called the "Angel of Death" nurse, went on trial in Suffolk County Court on charges he injected the drug Pavulon in patients at Good Samaritan Hospital in West Islip.

Assistant District Attorney John Collins said in his opening statement that Angelo "conducted uncontrolled experiments on totally vulnerable human beings for the sole reason of improving his repulation." Collins referred to a statement by Angelo, 27, that he administered the drug to the patients in hopes of later reviving them, so he could be considered a "hero."

"Mr. Angelo was not content to stop after experimenting with mice and watching them die," Collins said.

"To these unsuspecting patients, he was a monster dressed in nurse's whites."

Collins told the jury, "All of you have had bad dreams where you can't scream or control your breath. Mr. Angelo is a living embodiment of your worst nightmare."

Captain of Exxon tanker files law suit

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (UPI) — The skipper of the oil-spilling Exxon Valdez sued state prosecutors in federal court Thursday to halt his criminal trial on grounds that he is immune from criminal prosecution.

Capt. Joseph Hazelwood, 43, of Huntington, N.Y., filed a seven-page suit against the district attorney and three assistants, also asking that the state be enjoined from prosecuting him on three felony counts of criminal mischief and three misdemeanors: operating the tanker while intoxicated, reckless endangerment and negligent discharge of oil.

The fired Exxon skipper claimed that a federal oil spill reporting law — which makes failure to report a spill a crime and grants immunity to the person who does report it — lets him off the hook criminally.

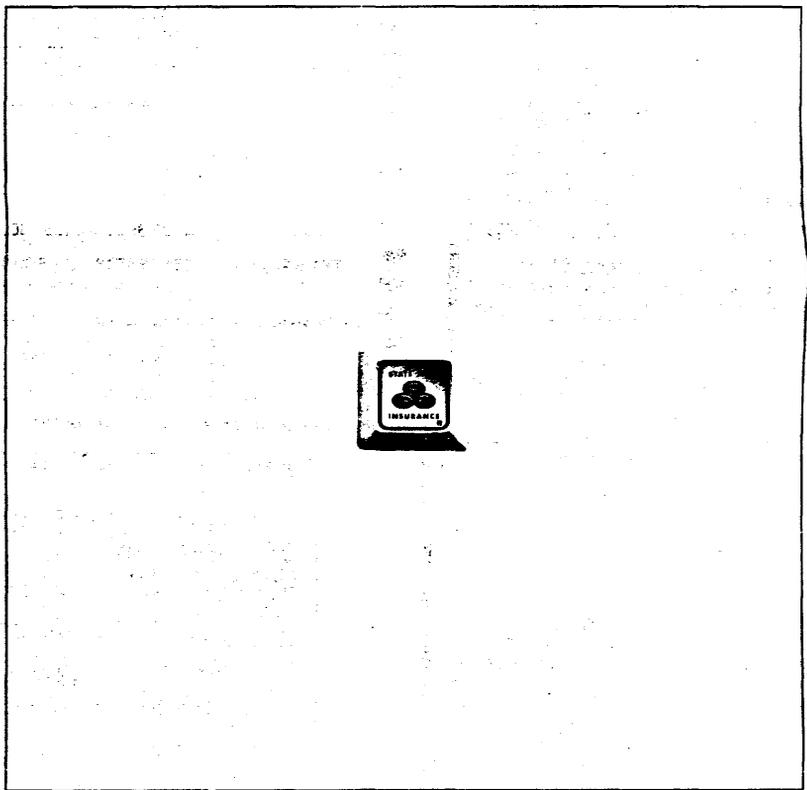

Only if prosecution is based on evidence not volunteered by Hazelwood could the case proceed, said lawyers Rick Friedman and Dick Madson. They said the four prosecutors conspired to deprive Hazelwood of his rights, knowing that federal oil spill reporting requirements granted him immunity.

The complaints focus narrowly on the fact that Hazelwood's statements to the Coast Guard triggered a chain of events used to press criminal charges.

The lawyers said that once Hazelwood was deprived of his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination by being required to report the spill under a threat of criminal action, then he gained immunity from the charges later lodged against him.

Hazelwood's lawyers made the same arguments in the state criminal case when they asked to have the charges dismissed. But before the state superior court judge could rule — in fact, even before the prosecutors could file replies — the lawyers went to federal court for an order halting the state prosecution.

Prosecutors "flagrantly and patently violated Hazelwood's federally granted and constitutionally mandated immunity," Friedman and Madson said.

Financial aid office director honored with award

New aid application process discussed

By Chris Walka
Staff Writer

SIU-C's director of the financial aid office was honored with an award at the Mid-West Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, held Oct. 15 through Oct. 18.

Pamela Britton received the award for her work on a committee that examined legal policy and procedures for the association's group of administrators.

"I'm deeply honored. Any time an SIU individual gets recognition, SIU gets recognition," Britton said.

Britton was presented with a plaque for her efforts by the group.

MASSA is a group of financial aid administrators who meet every year. Composed of eight states: Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, West Virginia, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri and Indiana, the annual council allows administrators from other schools to compare methods of financial aid.

The meeting, held in St. Louis, provided speakers on financial-aid oriented topics.

"The main theme of the conference revolved around representing students," Britton said.

The associate director of financial aid said the federal government has instituted new regulations concerning the design of financial aid forms.

Three other members of the financial aid office attended the conference. They were Dan Mann, associate director of financial aid; Rich Steudle, assistant director of financial aid; and Bea Mueller, Student Information System coordinator.

Dan Mann said one of the biggest issues discussed were new financial aid application processes students will have to go through.

"In one sense it was a disappointment because we were expecting up-to-date information," Mann said.

Mann said the federal government, through requests by the Department of Education, has instituted new regulations concerning the design of financial aid forms. No new information was available about the designs and Mann said this might lead to more student confusion about the process.

Mann also said the meeting could be used by the University to compare its information system with other schools.

SIU-C is in the process of implementing a new information system about financial aid for students, Mann said. He also said the University was ahead of other schools in addressing financial-aid related problems.

The new system, called the Student Information System, will gather all relevant information concerning students under one data base, Bea Mueller, SIS coordinator, said.

Mueller said the financial aid office, admissions and records and the bursar's office will have direct access to the files. Each office will maintain a separate file related to their department, as well as having access to other department's files.

Mueller said the new system will help speed up accessing student information. All other student-related University offices also will have access to the files.

"It's always nice to re-affirm each year that we are addressing issues that other schools are having trouble with," Mann said.

According to Britton, the group has about 1,200 members, but only

Pamela A. Britton

800 attended the meeting.

Britton said each state has its own conference. Illinois' will be held in Champaign April 8 through April 11. The conference is open to junior colleges as well as four-year university administrators, but not students.

GPSC passes two resolutions on fee increases

Increase will benefit campus programs

By Jeanne Bickler
Staff Writer

The Graduate and Professional Student Council passed two unanimous resolutions at its meeting Wednesday night. Both resolutions were in support of fee increases.

GPSC President Charlie Ramsey introduced the campus safety fee increase resolution first.

"The fee has not been increased since fiscal year 1980," Ramsey said.

According to the resolution, the 20 cent increase would be used to pay student workers and graduate assistants who work the night safety transit system.

An additional 10 cent increase was supported by the GPSC if student worker wages rise above the $3.75 hourly level.

The second resolution was introduced to support a 65 cent increase in the student attorney fee.

According to the resolution, this increase is necessary to keep the student attorney's office running at its present service level for the next two, possibly three, years.

"Two years ago there was a fee increase of 35 cents," Ramsey said. "This was supposed to last for three years."

The GPSC discussed a proposal that would prevent the GPSC from granting increases in the health service fee until students are given some type of proof of out-of-area insurance.

SIU-C students currently are not given adequate proof that they are covered by SIU-C's Blue Cross/Blue Shield policy when they are off campus.

"The GPSC has asked for some time now to have proof of out-of-area insurance," Jeff Kramer, vice president for graduate affairs, said.

Some members said they would like to see cards issued to students as proof of their insurance. Some did not wish to vote on this proposal until Sam McVay, director of student health programs, could talk to the GPSC about the possibility and problems with this idea.

The issue was tabled until the next meeting.

City approves plans to enter agreement for transit study

By Lisa Miller
Staff Writer

Plans for the mass transit study began to roll along full speed ahead this week when the City Council approved the execution of the contract with the consulting firm.

Faced with a Nov. 1 deadline from the Illinois Department of Transportation to execute the contract, the council gave city officials the go-ahead to proceed with the signing, Steve Hoffer, city manager, said.

IDOT agreed to give the city a $31,530 grant to help pay for the mass transit feasibility and implementation study.

De Leuw, Cather and Company, a Chicago consulting firm, will conduct the study if the contract is signed by Nov. 1.

The extra time will allow for possible minor adjustments "in the contract language prior to the deadline if IDOT's final review of the contract requires minor changes," Hoffer said. "The actual contract will not be signed until IDOT concurs."

Once the initial contract is approved, the city and IDOT will sign an additional contract executing IDOT's share of the study cost, Hoffer said.

The study is expected to begin immediately after the contracts have been signed, Hoffer said.

Linda Gladson, city planner, said the firm would study the demographics of the city as well as the census to determine whether or not there is a need for a mass transit system in Carbondale.

Tim Hildebrand, Undergraduate Student Government president, said members from USG were willing to help the consulting firm administer the study.

"Why should we just sit around and wait for the study to be completed?" Hildebrand asked. "A few extra hands would probably be a big help to the firm."

Hildebrand said he hoped the study could be completed within four to five months so a $15 student fee increase could be passed by the Board of Trustees.

A survey completed by the USG mass transit committee during the 1988 spring semester showed that 84 percent of the people surveyed would support the fee.

Inspection unopposed, USG official proclaims

By Diana Mivelli
Staff Writer

Rod Hughes, Undergraduate Student Government representative, said he will not write legislation opposing Thomas O. Mitchell's visual inspection procedure for the GEB 202 midterm because the procedure did not seem drastic and students did not complain.

"No students have complained about it. Unless we get a grievance from students, we won't take action," Hughes said.

Mitchell said there was no physical search. He said it was a visual inspection that consisted of the teaching assistants looking at people as they walked into the exam rooms in single-file lines to see what they were carrying.

Students carrying items other than their purse, I.D.s and pencils were told to step aside and directed into another room to take the exam, Mitchell said.

"Students put into a separate room were given extra time to complete the exam if needed, although only one student used extra time," Mitchell said.

They were given more time because they began the exam late after they were placed in a different room.

Because the exam was scheduled from 7 to 9 p.m., Mitchell said students didn't have any classes to get to after the exam.

Students with classes before the exam could leave their books in their cars. Students not driving could leave their backpacks and books at home or in the lockers at the Student Center, he said.

He said they were trying to find ways to improve the exam-taking procedure.

"We found lots of problems before. We were looking for ways to make things neater, faster and cleaner. It was a disorderly and inefficient process before," Mitchell said.

"The process worked very well, but we could not use it in the winter because it's too cold. We were pleased it went so well. Students seemed to get done quicker."

Alum's visit canceled after quake

The effects of the San Francisco earthquake have reached the SIU-C homecoming.

University alumni and San Francisco marketing designer Primo Angeli was forced to cancel his scheduled lecture and homecoming visit as a result of Tuesday's earthquake.

Design professor David Wells said a friend of Angeli's, Herb Meyer, contacted the University with the message that Angeli would be unable to come back to SIU-C due to the confusion present in San Francisco.

Meyer also said Angeli's business was not seriously damaged, but that "everything is in a pile on the floor."

Wells said Angeli does plan to re-schedule but is not sure whether it will be this semester or spring semester.

Religious studies professor switches jobs after 10 years

English department offers professor better environment

By Brian Gross
Staff Writer

After teaching in religious studies at SIU-C for 10 years, A. J. Morey decided to take a chance and start over as an English professor, even though her doctorate degree was in religion ethics.

This unusual decision came about from Morey's dissatisfaction with the University's religious studies department, she said.

"SIU kept trying to eliminate the department," Morey said. "I felt like I was trying to justify my job instead of doing my job. It was a bad academic environment for me."

Morey said she looked around for another job, but there are very few teaching positions available in religious studies across the nation. She said she also wanted to stay because her husband is a graduate student at SIU, she said.

Morey, who received her Ph.D. from the University of Southern California, had specialized in American religion and religious literature, so she decided to apply to SIU-C's English department. "It was a pretty big risk," Morey said, "but my dean was very helpful. In some ways it's like starting over. It means all new teaching. I feel like I have to work really hard to catch up, but it's pretty exciting, too."

Transferring to English involved going through a tenure review again and Morey said she considers herself fortunate that the department hired her.

"Now that I'm here, I've found the job is so perfectly tailored for me," Morey said. "It's far better than I thought it would be. It's a better chance for me to be a good scholar and a good teacher. I enjoy teaching again."

Aside from leaving the religious studies department because of its decline, Morey said she was never able to relate her teaching with her writing, which was a problem.

Morey published her first book in 1982, a book about the American dream titled, "Apples and Ashes." Her second book is completed and going to press. The second book, "Body Language," examines the relationship of religion and sexuality in American fiction.

Morey said the English department is a more constructive environment for her than religious studies had been and that her colleagues have not looked down upon her simply because her doctorate is not in English.

Morey said she had double-majored as an undergraduate in religion and English, which gives her a good English background.

"I've taken a fair number of courses in English," Morey said. "I've always taken a lot of courses in literature."

Originally from Liberty, Mo., Morey returned from California to the Midwest in 1979 to teach in her first full-time job at SIU in the religious studies department.

"The department here has always been very tiny," Morey said. Religious studies had two full-time professors when she came here, and only one remained after she left. Morey said she found the English department to be much larger than religious studies.

"It was like moving from Roostertown to New York City," Morey said.

PRSSA goes for 'sweet' win in competition

By Mario Millikin
Staff Writer

Everybody loves to win. The SIU-C chapter of Public Relations Student Society of America is no exception.

Heading into an eight-week national campaign competition, the University chapter is going for a $2,000 first-place finish.

After being selected as one of 25 chapters to compete in "The College Beat with NutraSweet" campaign, the PRSSA developed a program aimed at the promotion of NutraSweet products at the University and in the Carbondale community.

Chapter will begin campaign with tent at Halloween festival.

"It's really an honor in itself to be selected as one of the 25," Amy Roberts, chapter president, said.

Following specific guidelines established by Burson-Marsteller, the New York public relations agency who will judge the competition, each chapter was given an $800 budget to implement their proposed plans.

The SIU-C chapter will begin their campaign with a game tent at the Halloween Carnival co-sponsored by Pepsi. Other upcoming events include a taste test at Kroger West Nov. 4 through 11 and a shopping cart race also to be held at Kroger West.

"The main purpose of the competition is to give students hands-on public relations experience on a campaign," Roberts said.

The winning chapter will be flown to the NutraSweet company's headquarters to present its campaign.

The University chapter was awarded last year's Outstanding Community Services Award.

Man slits throat at homeless shelter after police are called

By Doug Powell
Staff Writer

A 23-year-old man slit his throat Wednesday around 1 p.m. after Carbondale police attempted to arrest him, Carbondale police said.

Ernest C. Williams, who has no known address, was confronted by police at the Good Samaritan House, 701 S. Marion, where he was seeking a place to stay, police said. After a check, police discovered Williams was wanted on a Jackson County warrant.

A spokeswoman at the Good Samaritan House said Williams came to the facility and asked them to call the police because he wanted to know if he was still wanted on the warrant.

When police arrived and informed Williams he was going to be placed under arrest, he produced a razor blade from his coat pocket and cut the right side of his throat, creating a large gapping wound, police said.

He then ran to another location in the facility and sat on the floor, police said. Williams was convinced by police to discard the razor blade and allowed police to take him to Memorial Hospital in Carbondale.

Williams told police he cut his throat because he didn't want to be placed in jail, police said.

Boy rescued in daring feat on crumpled highway

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — Parish Berumen, like many in San Francisco's East Bay, was greatly concerned when his wife and two children failed to come home Tuesday night after a devastating earthquake rocked the area.

The Richmond construction worker waited as the hours passed. Still there was no word.

So Berumen decided to go to Oakland's Children's Hospital at 7 a.m. Wednesday with a picture of his family, and there he learned they had been on the Cypress Structure of Interstate 880 when its upper roadway collapsed onto the lower level.

His wife, Pety, was dead. His daughter, Cathy, had a severe head injury. His son, Julio, had lost his right leg below the knee.

Julio was listed in stable condition Thursday, having been taken off a respirator, and his sister was in stable condition and said to be improving.

But the condition update does not quite tell the story of Julio's rescue.

The children and their mother were riding home in the family car. The boy was in the back seat; his Julio's left leg was pinned under his crushed seat while his right was hopelessly mangled by the beam.

Dr. James Betts, who rushed to the scene from Children's Hospital, joined a team of rescue workers who crawled under the tons of wreckage looking for survivors.

When they came across the

mother and sister rode in the front. At 5:04 p.m., they were on the Cypress Structure when the earth rocked and the viaduct collapsed.

A freeway crossbeam crumpled their car like a tin can. Pety Berumen died almost instantly, and Berumen car, Betts and his crew jumped into action. Cathy was freed using the "Jaws of Life," a hydraulic device designed to pry apart pieces of metal, widely used by fire rescue crews as a substitute for cutting torches. But Julio was trapped, forcing Betts to make a number of very difficult decisions.

"We had to do what we had to do to get him out," Betts said Thursday at a news conference at Oakland's Children's Hospital.

The rescuers cut Pety Berumen's body in half to reach the boy. Then the boy's right leg had to be removed from below the knee. Betts performed the entire procedure as he lay on his stomach in a cramped space.

"There were two moments of elation," Betts said. "When we freed the left leg from the seat, there was a cheer. After the amputation, there was a cheer."

Julio then was lowered on a stretcher and taken to the hospital, six hours after the quake.

"I don't think he's going to recall much of the trauma," Betts said.

"Accident victims, including children, often develop amnesia to overcome pain."

While Betts downplayed his role, witnesses had high praise for his work.

"If this thing has a hero, it's Jim Betts," Highland Hospital Emergency Chief Patrick Connell said. "Most people in this accident were killed outright. Some are barely recognizable as human. This child was the last salvageable victim."

Betts said Julio has remained sedated and spoken only a little, but he did manage a conversation with his father, in which he learned his mother was dead. The boy has had little reaction so far.

Betts said Julio could be fitted for an artificial leg soon, but no timetable has been set.

Officials criticize San Francisco mayor for uncooperative behavior

WASHINGTON (UPI) — With the damage and death toll mounting, the White House accused San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos on Thursday of deciding "not to cooperate" in ensuring a full federal response to Tuesday's killer earthquake.

Firing back hard at criticism leveled one day earlier at Vice President Dan Quayle, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater alleged Agnos has refused invitations to meetings and telephone calls from the administration.

Asked why Quayle and Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner did not meet with Agnos during a visit Wednesday to the Bay Area, Fitzwater said Agnos was not only invited, but refused an offer of a helicopter to transport him.

In contrast, Fitzwater said, some 75 other area officials who met with Quayle and Skinner "were very appreciative, very cooperative and presented a picture of a very effectively organized group of governmental units there in the San Francisco area."

"Why the mayor there chose to take this attitude, we don't know," Fitzwater added.

The sharp White House retort, the first hint of political recriminations over the disaster and its aftermath, came after a miffed Agnos dismissed Quayle's visit to the area

Wednesday as "a publicity trip" and vented anger that he was not contacted about it.

It also came on the eve of a similar inspection trip by Bush, who will spend about three hours in the area Friday, touring damaged cities by helicopter and meeting with state and local officials.

Fitzwater could not say whether Agnos would be among those meeting with Bush, but told reporters that politics would not deter Bush from including a stop in San Francisco proper on his itinerary.

"We regret very much that the mayor of San Francisco has decided not to cooperate with us in this matter," Fitzwater said.

Aftershocks hit California, none injured

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (UPI) — Sharp aftershocks jolted quake-battered Santa Cruz County Thursday while trains headed into the mountains to check if newly discovered giant cracks in the earth threatened homes in the area.

The aftershocks were more powerful than the hundreds of lesser tremors that usually follow major quakes. The aftershocks frayed already fatigued nerves in the area, south of San Francisco and San Jose, where Tuesday's quake was centered. No new injuries were reported, however.

The worst of the new tremors, at 5:14 a.m., registered 4.6 on the Richter scale in Santa Cruz. The initial shock Tuesday was measured at 6.9.

An earlier aftershock, measuring 4.3 on the Richter scale, hit at 4:54 a.m. near Watsonville, according to the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. A third aftershock at 6:15 a.m. was estimated at about 3.7. Three others ranging from 3.5 to 3.7 followed.

Most of the more than 2,000 Santa Cruz County residents who spent a second night either outside or in the county's seven emergency shelters were shaken from an already nervous sleep by the new tremors, Catherine Boxer of the Santa Cruz County Office of Emergency Services said.

"They were really terrified, but nobody got hurt," she said.

In Watsonville, the violent new shaking opened more cracks in the already quake-damaged steeple of the town's Catholic church and started two fires, which were quickly extinguished.

German leader discusses reforms with workers, church

BERLIN (UPI) — Egon Krenz, the hand-picked successor to East Germany's hard-line communist leader Erich Honecker, met with factory workers and church leaders Thursday to demonstrate his commitment to reform in the wake of massive pro-democracy protests.

Krenz, in first full day as head of the government, also called for "a broad public dialogue" with non-government groups but cautioned East Germans not to expect too much too soon.

"We have no magic wand that solves everything at once," said Krenz, the 52-year-old former security chief who was named Wednesday to replace Honecker, his long-time mentor and ideological soul mate.

Honecker, who guided East Germany for 18 years and secretly planned the Berlin Wall project, resigned in the face of widespread demands for reform and the recent exodus of 60,000 citizens to the West. He cited poor health as his reason for stepping down and asked to be replaced by Krenz.

Although Krenz is seen as an orthodox communist in the Honecker vein, observers in Berlin say he will be forced to make at least some concessions to placate the masses of East Germans clamoring for democratic reforms.

In one of the first signs that significant changes may be imminent, the government announced the East German interior ministry is revising travel regulations for citizens — an indication that restrictions on visits to Western countries may soon be relaxed.

Government-run radio said Krenz also expressed support for reform during a meeting with leading Protestant church officials, including Bishop Werner Leich.

The broadcast said both sides called for the opening of "a new chapter in the constructive cooperation between church and state," and said their common goal would be to "promote changes in society which will make life (here) more attractive and more meaningful."

Krenz specifically proposed reforms in the government-controlled news media in favor of a policy "based on openness and realism, and which is down-to-earth," the radio said.

At a joint news conference after the meeting, Leich said the talks showed "how seriously dialogue is being taken" by the new leadership.

Krenz, described the talks as "open, balanced and constructive."

"I believe the future will prove that our common interests are bigger than our divergences," he said.

Spanish author earns Nobel literature prize

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (UPI) — Spanish author Camilo Jose Cela was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature Thursday for work that included a once-banned book that shocked readers with its violence but is called the widest read Spanish novel since Cervantes' "Don Quixote."

The Swedish Academy said Cela, 73, who fought for dictator Francisco Franco's Nationalists during the Spanish civil war, was honored for a "rich and intensive prose, which with restrained compassion foams a challenging vision of man's vulnerability."

The Swedish Academy said Cela's best known work, "The Family of Pascual Duarte," had an almost "unparalleled impact" despite being censored and banned in Spain a year after its publication in 1942. The novel relates the story of a killer awaiting execution.

"With Cela, we have rewarded the leading figure in Spain's literary renewal during the post-war era," said the academy.

The literature prize wrapped up the 1989 Nobel awards, which each include $460,000 in cash and were presented earlier this month for contributions to peace, medicine, economics, chemistry and physics.

Formal award ceremonies will take place in Stockholm and Oslo, Norway, on Dec. 10, the 93rd anniversary of the death of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish dynamite mogul who established the prizes in his 1895 will.

Cela, the fifth Spaniard to win the Nobel Prize in Literature, wrote some 70 works between 1942 and 1988, including 10 novels, various travel stories, poems and short stories. He has been a candidate for the prize for six years for work the academy called experimental and "provocative."

"I am very happy that this time I was selected despite the fact there are several more deserving among the writers of the Spanish language," Cela told Spanish Radio from his home in Guadalajara, 35 miles northeast of Madrid.

"This prize is for all Spanish literature," he said, adding there were many worthy authors, "especially in Latin America."

"This prize is for all Spanish literature, especially in Latin America."

—Camilo Jose Cela

Other Spanish language authors considered strong candidates for the Nobel in recent years are Ana Maria Matute of Spain and Mexican authors Octavio Paz and Carlos Fuentes.

The last Spanish-language writer awarded the prize was Colombian author Gabriel Garcia Marquez in 1982.

Cela was born in 1916 in the northwestern city of Ira Flavia in the Galicia region to an Anglo-Italian mother and a Spanish father. The academy said, "Cela, with pride, counts both English pirates and Italian politicians among his ancestors."

At age 9, Cela and his family moved to Madrid. He later studied medicine before fighting and being badly wounded in "the cruel 1937-39 Spanish civil war," the academy said, noting that the experience affected his writing.

Gorbachev replaces Pravda editor-in-chief

MOSCOW (UPI) — The editor-in-chief of the Communist Party newspaper Pravda was replaced Thursday by a close adviser to Mikhail Gorbachev amid intensified debate over the role of the press in the Soviet leader's reform drive.

The editor, Viktor Afanasev, had been under fire since Sept. 18 when Pravda reprinted an article from Rome's La Repubblica newspaper that said populist lawmaker Boris Yeltsin drank heavily and spent lavishly during a nine-day tour of the United States.

"The Politburo of the (party's) Central Committee complied with the request of Viktor Afanasev to release him from the post of editor-in-chief of Pravda in connection with his desire to pursue scientific work," the official news agency Tass said. "It expresses its gratitude for his fruitful activities of many years in the party press."

Afanasev's resignation came six days after Gorbachev summoned the country's leading editors and scholars to a Central Committee meeting and criticized them for taking his "glasnost" campaign of increased openness too far.

The Politburo replaced the conservative Afanasev, 66, with Ivan Frolov, 60, the reform-minded editor of the philosophical journal Kommunist who two years ago became Gorbachev's handpicked adviser on ideological issues.

On Oct. 1 liberal lawmakers speaking at a rally attended by thousands of Yeltsin's supporters demanded Afanasev's resignation because of his decision.

Execution halted for convicted killer

ANGOLA, La. (UPI) — A U.S. district court judge Thursday halted the execution of convicted cop-killer Dalton Prejean, who escaped his ninth date with the state's electric chair.

Judge Donald Walter gave no reason for the stay.

"Application for stay of execution is granted," and that petitioner's execution is hereby stayed pending further order of this court," Walter wrote in the order.

Prejean, 30, was scheduled to die Friday for the July 2, 1977, murder of state trooper Donald Cleveland, the first Louisiana trooper to be killed in the line of duty.

Prejean, then 17, his brother, Joseph, and two friends had left a night club in Lafayette Parish in a 1966 Chevy driven by Dalton Prejean after drinking in several bars. Cleveland, who was on his way to work, pulled the car over because the tail lights were not working.

Dalton Prejean, who had no driver's license, switched places with his brother but Cleveland saw the switch and pushed Joseph Prejean up against the car to search him.

Dalton Prejean told his friends, "I don't like the way he's doing my brother." He took a .38 revolver from under the seat, hid it against his leg as he approached Cleveland and shot him twice in the face and chest. The teenagers then raced away.

The shooting was reported to police by a man who gave police a description by CB radio. The quartet was arrested a few hours later.

Prejean had been released from a reform school six months earlier where he had been sent for 30 months for killing a cab driver when he was 14.

He has been on death row 10 years — longer than any other inmate at the Louisiana State Penitentiary.

Efforts by Prejean's attorneys to halt the execution in the oaken electric chair were rebuffed at the state Appeals and Supreme Court levels Wednesday.

Prejean, black, was convicted by an all-white jury. His attorneys tried to argue before the U.S. Supreme Court that he was only 17 at the time of the shooting but the high court refused to hear the appeal.

The court ruled in June it was constitutional for states to execute a 16- or 17-year-old.

The state Pardon Board also was scheduled to meet Thursday to consider a reprieve, said Kay Kirkpatrick, a member of Gov. Buddy Roemer's legal staff.

Roemer, who was in Hawaii Thursday addressing a national educational conference, told Lt. Gov. Paul Hardy he did not want the execution halted if all other appeals failed.

While in the Lafayette Parish jail awaiting trial, Prejean met and married a young girl who bore him a son, Dalton Jr., in April 1980.

Couple accused of soliciting sex in the name of academic research

EUGENE, Ore. (UPI) — Prosecutors will press charges against a New York couple accused of soliciting sex from students at the University of Oregon under the guise of academic research.

Dr. Rodney Wood, 60, an anesthesiologist, and his wife, Nancy, 44, of Southampton, N.Y., are to be arraigned Monday in Lane County Circuit Court.

The prosecution contends the Woods told male college students they would be paid to have sex with Nancy Wood as part of a research project.

The Lane County district attorney's office confirmed the couple will be arraigned Monday but declined to give details of the charges. The couple were arrested Sept. 16 on accusations of prostitution and promoting prostitution.

A grand jury has met to consider the case.

The Woods told police they were conducting legitimate research when Nancy Wood handed out flyers on the UO campus. The flyers offered to pay young men to have sexual research with her, ostensibly to research "the sexual potential of the mature female," while her husband watched.

Eugene police said the Woods paid at least three men, as promised in the flier, to take part in the research during hotel room encounters in Vancouver, B.C., and Eugene. They said Rodney Wood took photos and made tape recordings of the incidents and filled out forms about the men's physical attributes.

The forms led police to a young man who participated in a sexual encounter with Woods at the Eugene Hilton Hotel, where police arrested the couple after an undercover officer posed as a student responding to the flier.

Gospel ensemble to perform in Fest

The Voices of Inspiration, the University's gospel ensemble, will hold its third annual Gospel Fest at 3 p.m. Sunday in Student Center Ballroom D.

Admission is $2.50 in advance and $3 at the door. Children's tickets are $1.50.

Debbie Onyewuchi, the choir's student coordinator, said the program is being held to raise funds for the group to attend the National College Choir workshop in Atlanta, Ga.

Government tests automobile safety

DETROIT (UPI) -- The government said Thursday it has opened investigations for potential safety defects in several vehicle lines including Chrysler Corp.'s popular minivans, as well as child safety seats built by two manufacturers.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, in its Monthly Defect Investigation Report for September, also upgraded two probes into possible safety defects in Ford and Toyota vehicles from a preliminary evaluation to an engineering analysis.

All investigations could possibly lead to NHTSA ordering a recall of those products, although often such probes are closed if no defect trend is found during further study, the agency said.

Highlighted in the latest report are investigations into possible defects in child safety seats from two manufacturers, although NHTSA spokesman Tim Hurd said the agency is not aware of any related injuries.

They include the Fisher-Price model 9100 made in 1988, because of complaints that children could pull the company logo off and possibly swallow it. Also being probed is the Century child seat model numbers 4365 DT and 4366 DH, made from 1987 to 1989. Children could ingest foam rubber padding after pulling it from those seats, according to complaints.

Parents are urged to examine the seats, the Washington agency said, adding that they have notified the manufacturers about the possible problems.

New investigations into possible safety defects on several car and light trucks include:

■ 1984-89 Dodge Caravan and Plymouth Voyager vans from Chrysler, for underdash fires. About 1.5 million vehicles could be involved. NHTSA is aware of 10 reports of fires.

■ 1986-88 Pontiac Bonneville, Oldsmobile 88 and Buick LeSabre cars from GM, for brake failure. About 1.5 million vehicles potentially involved. NHTSA is aware of 35 complaints, including six accidents and three injuries.

■ 1982-88 Chevrolet Camaro and Pontiac Firebird cars from General Motors Corp., for rear axle failure. About 1.2 million vehicles potentially affected, with NHTSA aware of 24 complaints, including six accidents and three injuries possibly related.

■ 1988 Chevrolet Beretta coupes made by GM, for loss of steering control. About 180,000 cars potentially involved. Four complaints including two accidents and one injury.

■ 1988-89 Ford Probe and Mazda MX-6 coupes, for oil transmission leaks. NHTSA said two fires were reported in a Canadian investigation. The number of those cars, built at the same assembly plant, is unknown.

Investigations upgraded by NHTSA in its latest report include:

■ 1985-87 Ford Mustang, Tempo and Mercury Capri, Topaz cars equipped with the optional speed control system that may not properly disengage. About 572,000 cars potentially affected. NHTSA has 55 complaints on record, including two accidents and three injuries.

■ 1984-85 Toyota vans, for steering gears that may break. About 104,100 vehicles potentially affected.

Bears injuries force rookies to pick up slack on defense

CLEVELAND (UPI) — The statistic is just plain hard to believe.

The Chicago Bears, the head-banging team whose eight-man front caused nightmares or opposing offenses, are ranked 27th in the NFL in defense. Only the beleaguered Dallas Cowboys have given up more yards.

In the last two weeks, the Bears, 4-2, have been shelled for 75 points while losing to Tampa Bay and Houston. Even when you see the numbers, it's still difficult to fathom the Chicago Bears playing poorly on defense.

"I see them as a team that's had some big plays made against them in the last few weeks, but they've got all the talent to anytime revert back to the type defense they've always been," said Cleveland coach Bud Carson, who will lead his 3-3 Browns against the Bears Monday night at 9 p.m. EST in Cleveland Stadium.

"I don't think they're in a position where they've completely fallen apart."

Bears' coach Mike Ditka didn't feel that way last weekend. He said after the Houston loss that he didn't think his team would win another game this year, but has since softened that stance.

"What I said very simply is if we play the way we're playing right now, or played the last two weeks, it would be really hard."

Ditka said. "It really would be because there's no reason for the things that are happening to happen. We just are not executing in basic, fundamental areas. It's very unlike us."

Monday night, the Bears defense will take on a Cleveland offense that is better at moving backwards than scoring points.

At least the Bears have a good reason for their slide on defense. They have been hit hard by injuries and will start four rookies against the Browns. Among the missing will be tackle Dan Hampton, safety Shaun Gayle, and linebacker Jim Morrissey.

As a result, young and inexperienced players have been thrust into the lineup, which leads to mistakes.

"We could play the game, at least respectfully, if everybody would pay attention to what the heck is going on."

—Mike Ditka

"We're not the same type of defense we were three years ago," Ditka said. "We're not a dominant defense anymore. We can play the game, at least respectfully, if everybody would pay attention to what the heck is going on."

Carson has similar thoughts about his offense. The Browns, who also have lost two straight, turned the ball over seven times last Sunday in a 17-7 loss to Pittsburgh.

The Browns have scored 47 points in the last four games, and have been penalized 28 times in the last three contests.

"We have to quit beating ourselves," Carson said. "We've got to give ourselves a chance."

The only reason the Browns have had a chance in any game this year is because of their defense, which ranks No. 1 in the AFC and second overall. The Chicago offense, however, poses a stern test for the Browns.

Chicago's Neal Anderson leads the league in rushing and touchdowns, is second in yards from scrimmage, and the former Florida Gator is a threat to score anytime he touches the ball. Former Ohio State star Mike Tomczak will start at quarterback despite throwing four interceptions against Houston.

"They've got a great tailback, probably the best offensive line we've played against," Carson said. "They're a team that is exceptional in ball control. It will be the biggest test this defense has had."

Cleveland quarterback Bernie Kosar also threw four interceptions last week, and missed receivers that were open deep on other occasions. He has promised to work hard this week on footwork and fundamentals.

"Whenever you have a team such as the Cleveland Browns that are not playing well one week, they usually come back and play pretty well," said Chicago linebacker Mike Singletary. "They probably feel the same way about us."

Phoenix seeking replacements; starters injured and suspended

TEMPE, Ariz. (UPI) — In a season marked by injuries and suspensions, even Phoenix Coach Gene Stallings doesn't know where to turn for replacements as the Cardinals prepare to meet the Atlanta Falcons on Sunday.

This week's suspension of center Derek Kennard after his second recent alcohol-related traffic citation brings to 12 the number of Phoenix starters who have missed at least one game.

When asked if he might shake up the lineup in an attempt to end the Cardinals' four-game losing streak, Stallings responded, "Who would you suggest?"

Because of the injuries — eight players currently are on injured reserve — Stallings pointed out that nearly every player on the roster has had his chance at one time or another this season.

"We've got defensive linemen who've played all the spots," Stallings said. "The linebackers have all played. Same way in the secondary. There's really not anybody who hasn't had an opportunity."

Despite the manpower shortage, the Cardinals have been competitive in their last three losses and actually led at halftime in each game.

While the Cardinals did lose Kennard this week, they are expected to regain the services of quarterback Gary Hogeboom, out last week with a sore elbow. That should cut down on the eight turnovers they suffered in the loss to Philadelphia with second-year pro Tom Tupa at the controls.

The Falcons, like Phoenix 2-4 on the season, bring a young and improving offense to Sun Devil Stadium.

Quarterback Chris Miller is in his third year in the league, but has hit on 63 percent of his passes and has the league's best mark in interception percentage.

His two top receivers, rookie Shawn Collins and second-year player Michael Haynes, are even younger. Both come from N.C. State Arizona University.

If there is a fault with Miller, it is that he has failed to get the ball into the end zone consistently. He has only three scoring aerials with Collins and Haynes having one TD reception apiece.

Another rookie who has given Atlanta a boost is Deion Sanders, who got his first start at cornerback last week and has been a star all season in returning punts and kick-offs.

He's had a 68-yard punt return for a touchdown, another 60-yard punt return to set up a score and a 96-yard kickoff return that was nullified by a penalty. At cornerback, the Florida State product has picked off two passes.

"He's an exciting, spirited guy," Falcons' Coach Marion Campbell said.

Marinovich to face No. 1 Fighting Irish

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI) — Topping unbeaten arch-rival Notre Dame from the nation's No. 1 ranking will require the greatest performance in Southern California football history, coach Larry Smith said.

"Our only chance is to play maybe the greatest game this school has ever played," Smith said. "We have to play our greatest game and even then, that may not be enough."

"He has never played in a game as big as this and you never know how a young player is going to respond."

—Larry Smith

The Trojans, led by a freshman quarterback and the nation's best rushing defense, try to snap Notre Dame's 18-game win streak Saturday. Southern Cal (5-1) has lost six straight games to the Irish, the longest streak by either team in the 63-year-old rivalry.

USC quarterback Todd Marinovich, a 6-foot-4 redshirt freshman, has completed 104 of 169 passes for 1,216 yards and 9 touchdowns, while suffering only three interceptions.

"Every game he gets a little more confidence and maturity,"

Smith said. "He has never played in a game as big as this and you never know how a young player is going to respond. They will have to come after him or try and use a lot of formations to confuse him. We expect both."

The Irish (6-0) blitzed more against Southern Cal than in any other game last season, forcing two interceptions and sacking Rodney Peete three times, leaving him with a separated shoulder in a 27-10 victory.

"I'm not too worried about Marinovich," Irish cornerback Todd Lyght said. "We've just got to get ready. We'll play a lot more man-to-man like we did last year."

The Trojans average 236 yards rushing a game, paced by Ricky Ervins' 703 yards and Leroy Holt's 338 yards.

Southern Cal leads the nation in rushing defense, allowing only 36.7 yards a game. The Trojans rank 11th in total defense and 10th in scoring defense, allowing only 12.5 points a game. When teams are forced to pass, they must contend with safety Mark Carrier, who has five interceptions. USC also has 35 sacks for 225 lost yards, but Smith warns that the Irish will be the Trojans' toughest defensive test.

"Our defense has not been challenged," he said. "What we've done against the run you can throw out the window. Our defense is facing its biggest challenge."

Montana and family felt Candlestick shake

By Jim Donaldson
Providence Journal

Joe Montana and his wife Jennifer, who was holding their two-week-old baby, were on an open-air walkway inside Candlestick Park when they heard the noise.

"It started out as a low rumble," Montana said. "It felt and sounded like when people in the stands start stamping their feet because they're anxious for the game to get going."

Usually, when Montana goes to Candlestick Park for a game, it's a business trip. Since 1979 he has been quarterback of the San Francisco 49ers, and has led them to three Super Bowl victories. But Tuesday night he went out to see the first World Series game played in Candlestick Park since 1962.

"All of a sudden," Montana said, "the whole thing started to shake — hard. Then we knew what was happening."

Montana, whose father, mother, sister and brother also were at the game, was talking to Dwight Clark, the 49ers' former All-Pro wide receiver, when the earthquake shook San Francisco.

"When Jennifer and I looked up," Montana said, "we were underneath the overhang of the upper deck and it was moving. Some people came running out and I thought, 'Oh, God, they're going to stampee the place.' The only thing we could think of was to get somewhere we'd be safe if it fell."

The danger seemed to pass quickly, Montana said.

"Most people at the stadium," he said, "felt the game would be played. No one at that time knew the magnitude of what had happened. No one realized the extent of the damage done in the Bay area. They didn't know that the Bay Bridge had collapsed, or that power had been lost."

Afterwards, Montana was grateful the quake had occurred in daylight.

"There would have been panic at the stadium," he said, "if that had happened and the lights had gone out."

It is the suddenness with which an earthquake hits, and the feelings of utter helplessness of those who are there, that make the experience so unnerving.

"It's not like a storm, where you get a warning," Montana said. "It happens out of the blue. It was a great day for a game. The weather was beautiful."

"All of a sudden the whole thing started to shake—hard."

—Joe Montana

As soon as the quake subsided, the Montanas were worried about their two older children — 4-year-old Alexandra and 2-year-old Elizabeth — whom they had left at home.

"We tried to get through on the phone to see if everything was okay," he said, "but everything was down. So we tried to get back to the house as quickly as we could."

The traffic was jammed around the ballpark, but once the Montanas were able to get onto the nearby highway, they reached home easily and found the children safe.

Later in the week, at the 49ers' training complex, Montana said everyone was still buzzing over the shocking events.

"The mood around here is still kind of a frenzy," he said. "Everyone is talking about where they were and what they were doing when it happened. It's a crazy atmosphere."

"Some of the guys who never have been through one of these before are going crazy," he said.

NCAA releases Maryland findings

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) — The University of Maryland athletic director says release of a critical NCAA finding puts his school "one step closer" toward overcoming 3 1/2 years of scandal in the basketball program.

It had been seven months since the NCAA, which oversees the bulk of the nation's college sports, opened its probe into alleged wrongdoing under former coach Bob Wade, who resigned under pressure from school officials in May after three seasons.

"I don't view it as a setback," Athletic Director Lew Perkins said.

"I think any time you get a letter of this type from the NCAA, it's certainly not pleasant," Perkins added. "But I think the fact that we've got the letter, it's just one step further in trying to close this chapter. Please understand how I say this — I'm not happy or pleased about this, but it is positive in the fact that we have it now and we can get it behind us."

School officials Wednesday released a letter from the NCAA citing 13 separate infractions, including allegations Wade lied to investigators and directed his assistants to do so, Wade ordered assistants to give cash and clothing to players and recruits and Wade provided illegal transportation and cash gifts to a former player, Rudy Archer, who still had NCAA eligibility remaining.

Timberwolves gain support from L.A.'s Magic Johnson

By Dan Barreiro
Minneapolis-St. Paul Star Tribune

MINNEAPOLIS — At halftime of the first exhibition game in Minnesota Timberwolves history, a visitor offered free advice to 35,156 fans.

"Support them," Magic Johnson said Wednesday night. "Be patient. And have fun. 'Cuz like they say in the ad, the NBA's fanmastic."

Besides being the best basketball player in the world, Johnson is one of the smartest. The Lakers started James Worthy, A.C. Green, Mychal Thompson, Byron Scott and Johnson. Those five have played in 3,382 NBA games — regular season and playoffs. The Timberwolves started one player who has played in one NBA game

(Tod Murphy) and another who has played in none (Sam Mitchell). Now you know why Johnson said, "Be patient."

I give the Timberwolves credit for their tough, no-doubt-about-it stand on not renegotiating the contracts of Rick Mahorn, Steve Johnson and Tyrone Corbin, their first three selections in the expansion draft.

But after watching the Timberwolves fall to the Lakers 100-90 at the Metrodome, one thing already is clear: Without those three NBA-tested players — or even two of those three — it's going to be ugly around here for a while.

Mighty, mighty ugly. Occasionally, even nuclear ugly. Oh yes, the new local heroes showed signs that they have absorbed coach Bill Musselman's it-ain't-over-till-it's-over philosophy. They did not play well for four quarters, but they played hard. They even got a mostly apathetic crowd to finally get out of its seats when they cut the L.A. lead to six points with 32 seconds left.

But the truth was, there was not a whole lot of atmosphere — and certainly not much for the fans to shout about. Mostly, the fans got to see Johnson put on his nightly clinic on how to win friends and influence basketball games. (The Lakers might look different without that tall bald person who wears goggles. But they still look good.) The T-Wolves, definitely lacking some punch, totaled 58 points after three quarters — and trailed by 20.

his team the way he wanted it. The 1988-89 season started off with a 13-3 record, and although the team went 7-11 the rest of the way, the Salukis captured their most wins since the 1976-77 season.

Herrin has stated on many occasions that it takes a winning program to keep the fans coming back to the Arena.

Average attendance last season at the Arena was 5,762, compared to an average of 3,793 during Van Winkle's last year — an increase of more than 65 percent.

The increase in attendance has garnered record amounts of revenue from ticket sales. Herrin's first year brought in $138,901, an increase of more than $26,000 over the previous year. His second year was marked by a slight decrease in attendance, but an increase in season ticket prices raised revenue to $169,048.

The 1987-88 season saw an increase in attendance and ticket sales. But the biggest increase occurred with last year's attendance hitting the 74,902 mark, which brought in $284,331.

"We actually took more money in during my first year than any other (previous) time," Herrin said. "Each year it has gradually increased a little more."

Herrin said attendance and winning games go hand in hand.

"If we win, attendance goes up," Herrin said. "You have to win to make it exciting. People like to see that you're having a good time out there. If you're working hard and hustling, the game is fun for them and for our players."

Herrin said the fans can be a "sixth man" because they are giving the players extra support.

"One compliments the other," Herrin said. "When we make it fun for the fans, the fans get involved in the game. It gives us more incentive and motivation to play with a little more effort. The fans can be motivators for us."

Saluki coach Patti Hagemeyer said Drake should be easier to play than Northern Iowa, but there is no one in the conference her team can afford to look past.

"They will be on their own home court. I would expect they are just about ready for a win—I just hope they aren't too ready for us," she said.

"Drake is also under a new head coach. Her team is starting to win some games and they are starting to respond to some changes," Hagemeyer said.

The Salukis have had several outstanding team leaders as of late.

Senior Nina Brackins has pounded out 291 kills, which ranks second in the Gateway. Brackins has a hitting percentage of .314, third in the Gateway. Brackins was named Gateway player of the week on Tuesday.

Sophomore middle blocker Debbie Briscoe is right on Brackins' heels with a .163 hitting percentage, and 10 solo blocks with 33 block assists.

The Salukis return home next weekend to face No. 1 ranked Illinois State and the Indiana State Sycamores.

ery" is the key word for this particular game, Smith said.

"We have to make sure we don't stay blocked offensively," Smith said. "If we stay blocked for any length of time, with their quickness, they're by you and down field for a big gain."

Smith said the Bears are the quickest team the Salukis have faced this season.

"They present problems that other teams haven't presented this season," Smith said. "Other than their offensive line, they are probably the smallest team that we've played."

Smith said the Bears depend on their speed on defense when blitzing and covering receivers man-to-man.

"The key to the game is for our receivers to beat man-to-man coverage," Smith said. "This is the first team we've played who is willing to commit over 40 percent of the time to man-to-man defense."

Quarterback Fred Gibson began practicing again this week following knee surgery and may see some action against the Bears. On defense the Salukis again will have the services of leading tackler Kevin Kilgallon who had been out with an ankle injury.

A's to donate some of Series purse to earthquake victims

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The Bay Area's baseball teams tipped back to work Thursday, preparing to resume a World Series jolted into perspective by the Earthquake of '89.

Oakland slugger Jose Canseco said the Athletics have agreed to donate some of their shares to those stricken Tuesday by the biggest U.S. earthquake since 1906. Canseco added he would use his 900 telephone number in fund-raising.

"I'm sure there are going to be many in need," Canseco said. Concern lingered over the safety of Candlestick Park, where some 62,000 fans were preparing to watch Game 3 last Tuesday when the earthquake struck.

"They feel it's safe unless something unforeseen happens between now and Tuesday," San Francisco Giants Manager Roger Craig said.

A person answering the phone at Thornton Anderson Architects would say only that an evaluation was ongoing and that personnel were examining the park

Wednesday afternoon. Oakland holds a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven Series. The earthquake, measured to be at least 6.9 on the Richter scale, struck about a half-hour before the scheduled start of Game 3.

It has caused an estimated $2 billion in damage throughout the Bay Area, with 271 people losing their lives. Aftershocks hit Thursday morning.

Baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent has announced a tentative plan to resume the Series on Tuesday night in Candlestick Park. He scheduled a briefing for 5 p.m. PDT Thursday.

Until Vincent unveiled the plans at a candlelight news conference Wednesday, rumors circulated that the Series might be moved to another site.

"It would have taken a lot away from the game in that the fans in the Bay Area supported these two teams," Giants slugger Will Clark said. "We would have played before fans who didn't even know us."

Any date at Candlestick Park depends on the integrity of the structure, plus the ability of local safety agencies to provide the necessary support.

During the Giants' workout Wednesday, security personnel restricted movement in various areas of the park, including a portion of the upper deck damaged by the quake. People were visible in Section 53, where reports say damage occurred.

Visitors were not allowed to use steps, instead employing an elevator near the players entrance.

"One person is going to make a decision whether the place is safe or not," Giants infielder Matt Williams said. "People are putting their lives together. I don't know if it's long enough or not. We're going to have five days to prepare ourselves to play. If and when we play, we'll be ready."

.669 winning percentage in 12 seasons at the University along with six 20-win seasons. The Salukis won Gateway titles and NCAA bids in 1986 and 1987, and a N.I.T. bid in 1983. Scott said the schedule will be easier this season — a little easier.

"I'm saying it's easier because we're not playing the No. 1 (Tennessee) or No. 4 (Long Beach) teams in the nation this season," Scott said. "But we are playing four teams ranked in the top 20. The schedule will push us. It is competitive and realistic."

The Salukis season opens with the Wahine Classic in Honolulu, Hawaii. They open a 28-game slate against top-seed Virginia in the Classic, Nov. 24-26.

Virginia is one of five 1989 NCAA Tournament teams on the Salukis schedule. The Salukis host Western Kentucky (Dec. 9), Illinois State (Jan. 4), and will travel to Purdue (Dec. 20) and Tennessee Tech (Jan. 15).

A three-game homestand begins the Salukis' 12-game schedule at the Arena on Dec. 2 against Evansville, followed by Creighton (Dec. 4) and WKU.

The Salukis also will play Gateway contests with Drake Jan. 13 and Eastern Illinois Feb. 17. The Salukis finished second in the Gateway with a 16-4 record last season.

Herrin, staff rebuild basketball team

Last coach left in wake of scandal

By Kevin Simpson
Staff Writer

The Saluki men's basketball program has been revived under head coach Rich Herrin.

Herrin and his staff have built a winning program and the athletic program is reaping the benefits.

Herrin came to SIU-C in 1985 with 29 years of high school coaching experience. He took over a program that was 14-14 in the 1984-85 season under former coach Allen Van Winkle.

Van Winkle left the University in the wake of a basketball scandal. Although Van Winkle was not linked to the scandal, he resigned after compiling a 49-62 record over four years.

Reports into the investigation of the scandal reported assistant coach Stafford Stephenson helped arrange payments of $900 a month to former SIU-C center Kenny Perry.

Because of the violations, the University was placed on one year's probation. The sanctions prohibited the Salukis from playing in postseason games, winning the season conference championship, appearing on national or conference televised network games and from sharing in conference basketball revenues generated during the 1985-86 academic year.

To say Herrin had to rebuild the program would be an understatement.

The coach had a minimal amount of experienced talent to work with. His team was built around four players who accounted for only five percent of the previous years scoring total.

Herrin finished his first year with an 8-20 record, followed by 12-16 and 12-17 seasons.

Herrin was finally building

Women's basketball hoping for a post-season tourney

A team that wins 17 of its last 21 games, rallying from a 2-6 start, figures to be invited to post-season play. But the SIU-C women's basketball team found out differently last season.

The Salukis would have received an automatic bid to the 48-team NCAA tourney with a victory over Illinois State in the finals of the Gateway Conference Tournament. But the Redbirds downed the Salukis 70-53. The winner of the conference title automatically gets a bid for the NCAA Tourney.

With 19 wins to their credit and a schedule loaded with nationally-ranked teams, Saluki coach Cindy Scott was hoping her team would at least make the eight-team Women's N.I.T. But the Salukis didn't receive a N.I.T. bid either.

"The schedule is supposed to be part of determining the decision for post-season bids," Scott said. "I don't think our schedule was weighted enough."

Seven of the Salukis losses were to teams that eventually wound up in the NCAA tourney or National Invitational Tournament. This includes a 78-44 loss to second-ranked Tennessee, a 61-53 loss to seventh-ranked Long Beach State and a 69-60 loss to 14th-ranked Purdue. The Salukis were hoping their tough schedule would impress the NCAA committee which selects tournament bids. But things didn't go the Salukis way.

"I think the girls may feel they were snubbed by the tournament selectors last season," Scott said. "They may think they have something to prove this season and that's a healthy attitude to have."

"I think our goals could be a conference title, a 20-win season and a tournament bid somewhere," said Saluki junior guard Alison Smith.

Smith has a 230-114 record and a

Drake match looms ahead for volleyball

The 11-6 Saluki volleyball team swings into Iowa for a pair of conference matches this weekend. After the Salukis take on Northern Iowa Friday, they face a struggling 5-16 Drake team Saturday.

The Drake Bulldogs are in the processes of building a strong team, Bulldogs' coach Martie Larsen said. The Bulldogs have suffered two early conference losses against the Southwest Missouri Bears (15-11, 15-6, 15-0) and the Wichita State Shockers (14-16, 15-3, 15-4, 15-11) to open conference play.

In game three against Southwest Missouri, the Bears' Jackie Francis served all 15 points against the Bulldogs, without rotating. "Opening conference play was interesting," Larsen said.

The Bulldogs had some success with a non-conference win over Kansas State (15-10, 15-13, 12-15, and 15-11) this past weekend. Bulldogs' senior middle blocker Amy Krell is the team's top hitter with a .216 hitting percentage.

Giants' first practice off to shaky start

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The San Francisco Giants stepped softly around their clubhouse Thursday, attempting to reassure each other Candlestick Park was fit for a workout.

"Now I'm wondering why I signed a two-year contract," pitcher Don Robinson said, trying to break the tension on the first day back after Tuesday night's disastrous earthquake, minutes before the scheduled start of Game 3 of the World Series.

Robinson was told he will remain the starter for next Tuesday night's game against the Oakland Athletics. That seemed like a long way off.

"Next week is a good time to start again," the right-hander said. "People will want to take their minds off of what happened. But people are also going to have to be convinced that this ballpark is all right to come in."

Dave Dravecky, the San Francisco pitcher whose inspiring comeback from cancer was tempered by a fractured arm, said he is hopeful the World Series can provide the community with a respite.

"It might be considered as something to help the healing," Dravecky said. "I hope things will be as close to normal as possible. I'm sure there will be some anxiety from the events that occurred."

Salukis face strong offensive team

Dogs need strong block to stop Bears

Southwest Missouri State and the football Salukis have opposite overall records but both will have one goal in common Saturday at McAndrew Stadium — to get back into the win column.

The Bears, 6-1, lost last week to Western Kentucky for the team's first loss of the season. In the Gateway Conference race the Bears are 4-0.

The Salukis, 1-6, have lost their last four games and 11 of the last 12 dating back to last season. They are 1-2 in conference play.

Jesse Branch, Bears' head coach, said he is looking for his team to bounce back against the Salukis. "This game is very important to us," Branch said. "If we win, it will assure us of at least a tie for the conference title. Our long range goals did not go up in smoke with the loss last weekend," Branch said.

Branch said he did not expect his team to be performing this well at this point in the season and said his team will not be looking past the Salukis at the conference title.

Branch said the key to beating the Salukis will be to keep control of the ball with no turnovers while also trying to stop the Saluki passing game.

Saluki head coach Bob Smith said the offense may throw the ball 70 times against the Bears depending on the tempo of the game.

"We are going to put the ball in the air a bunch," Smith said. "We're going to try and make the game as entertaining as we can. It will be a fun football Saturday."

Smith said his team will have to be extremely well prepared for the No. 8 Bears.

"If we're not up for the test, this is one game we could really get blown out big," Smith said.

Defensively, the Salukis will be up against an offense ranked No. 1 on the conference.

Bears' quarterback DeAndre Smith is the focus of the Saluki defense this week, Smith said.

"(DeAndre) is small and has quick feet," Smith said. "He runs the option superbly and is a great ball carrier."

DeAndre Smith has carried the ball 123 times for the Bears. The next closest player on the Bears has carried only 39 times.

"He really is the guy they depend on to move the ball," Coach Smith said. "It's a challenge for us to try and stop him. He's an exciting player and he will be a fun guy for the fans to watch."

For the Saluki defense, "recov-
