USG request for computer upgrades shot down by GPSC

By Wendy J. Allyn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Graduate and Professional Student Council members rejected a proposal by the Undergraduate Student Government asking the council to help fund computer upgrades Wednesday, citing concerns the benefits would not be worth the cost.

The vote followed a presentation to GPSC at this week's council meeting by USG computer systems analyst Mark Collins. Collins said he researched the lowest cost for implementing a local area network within the USG office which would have connected USG and GPSC computers.

"This proposal is the best because USG and GPSC will be sharing the costs of this system and implementing it together instead of one force that I thought would be a very tough proposal," he said.

USG members voted 4-4 on the proposal, with student members voting in favor and USG members voting against. The proposal needed a two-thirds vote to pass.

Cuts to the federally funded direct student loan program are expected to be approved by a U.S. Senate committee this morning, a congressional spokesman says. The program, which is used at 40 percent of universities nationwide including SIUC, allows students to receive loans directly through the mail rather than through banks and college business offices.

David Carle, spokesman for Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., the senator who created the program, said Republicans are proposing to make cuts in the programs funding by about 10 percent. He said if the plan is approved by the Senate, one out of every three loans would be lost.

HOSTAGE CRISIS OVER; TERRORISM NEW FOCUS

MOSSOW—El?e paramilitary groups stormed a bus where gunmen were holding 18 hostages in the volatile Caucasus on Thursday, freeing the captives by firing into the air, three days after their siege began. The assault that killed 15 people and broadened the existing crisis in the region

SYRIAN DOMINANCE OVERSHADOWS ELECTIONS—Two days ago, Sunday, celebrating a historic holiday known as Asara, thousands of Shiite Muslims took to the streets here, radios blaring, horns honking, flags and banners waving from their cars. They had been promising an impressive, oppositional protest to lead and day and night through this city in an aggressive display of their newfound political strength. Their behavior angered moderate Sunni Muslims and led to scattered fights and an exchange of grenades between the two sects in Beirut and Sidon. Religious leaders stepped in quickly to defuse the situation. But the brief crisis was a reminder of how fragile the balance is between Lebanon’s diverse communities—two-thirds of Lebanon’s 3.5 million people are Sunni, one-third Christian—and underscored the importance of two elections Lebanon will hold over the next nine months. Both will take place in the shadow of Syria.

NEW REPUBLIC LETTER ABOUT RACE FINGERS POST

WASHINGTON—The New Republic last week launched a 13,000-word missive on race relations at The Washington Post that deconstructed with maximum force the Post’s newsroom six blocks away. Before the smoke cleared, Executive Editor Leonard Downie Jr. had been back with a blustering letter, accusing author Ruth Shalit of engaging in “big lie prophecies” and “racial McCarthyism.” He also seemed to be saying, “Blacks are indigents; white reporters who offered Shalit anonymous criticism were guilty of cowardice.”

POLITICAL ALLIANCES SHIFT AS PRIMARY NEARS—

The decision of Rep. William J. Jefferson, D, to drop out of the Louisiana gubernatorial race gives a major boost to two other candidates, Rep. Cleo Fields, D, the only African American to remain in the crowded field, and former Gov. Buddy Roemer, a Democrat-turned-Republican who leads almost every public-opinion poll. In Louisiana, with a presidential election underway, candidates are already making calls on the telephone, in an effort to shore up support. Roemer holds a strong lead with 25 and 33 percent of the vote, according to various polls. Lt. Gov. Melinda Schwabot, D, state Treasurer Mary Landrieu, D, and state Sen. Mike Foster, a recent convert to the GOP, remain bunched together in the 8 to 15 percent range. Jefferson had trailed with about 5 percent.

Seven speakers to inform public on preservation of water supply

By Lori D. Clark
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Informing the public on the preservation of water supply is the focus of a conference at SIUC today, the conference coordinator says.

The conference will consist of seven presenters giving 20-minute sessions on various water topics such as the affects of acid rain, stream water quality, well contamination, and managing water quality.

The water conference is in honor of the centennial anniversary of the Illinois State Water Survey in Champaign-Urbana.

The Water Survey provides information to the public about water preservation and collects data for research by engineers, the government and the public, Sally McConkey, of the Water Survey, said. The agency is affiliated with the newly formed Department of Natural Resources.

McConkey, who is coordinator of the conference, said Carbondale is the third in a series of four water conferences. The first two were held in Bloomington and Glocroce and the fourth will be in Champaign sometime in October.

McConkey said she is pleased at the opportunity to present the water conference at SIUC.

"I am very excited. We've had such a response," McConkey said. "I think anyone who attends the conference will come away with a greater appreciation of water in Illinois and the Water Survey's research and service activities."

Mother and daughter facing cocaine charges begin trial

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Facing crack cocaine charges, Dorothy B. Richardson, 37, of Carbondale, had her first appearance in court Wednesday at the federal courthouse in Benton. Richardson and her daughter Tenisa L. Richardson, 18, of Carbondale, have been charged by a federal grand jury. Carbondale have been charged in court Wednesday at the federal courthouse in Benton.

Dorothy Richardson appeared before Magistrate Judge Phillip R. Gilbert Wednesday. Richardson will remain in jail. Her daughter Tenisa was released on $5,000 bail earlier with orders to appear in court.

"The Richardsons' have not plead guilty nor have they been found guilty," said Michael Carr, United States Attorney's Office chief criminal division.

Many people have commented that there are never any alternatives to the bar scene here in Carbondale, but because of the College Drive-In Movie tonight. A full movie screen and six Dolby sound tracks will be set up at the Sam Rinnella Fields between the Towers and the Recreation Center in order to show two full-length films. The first, "Jurassic Park," begins at 9 p.m. and "Die Hard With a Vengeance" will follow at 11:15 p.m.

"Other schools have done this type of thing, and we wanted to do something to appeal to the student here," Jeannie Yantis, University Program Coordinator, said.

Yantis said that other programs of this type may be planned in the future depending on how popular this event is.

"If we have a good turnout, then we will evaluate this program and see how successful it is," she said. "If it goes well, then we will plan other ones in the upcoming semesters."

Mark Collins, director of films for the Student Programming Council, said this is something to do besides going to bars.

"We wanted to plan some kind of alternatives for people who can't get into the bars," he said. "This is a full-length movie screen with high quality surround sound."

The event is free, and Yantis said that people should bring blankets and chairs.

"We'd encourage people to bring their own chairs so they have something to sit on, and they should also bring blankets because of the weather," she said. "The area will be patrolled so that people will feel safe, and the event is free, so people should really take advantage of it."

Alumni helps radio show receive new equipment

By Cynthia Sheets
Daily Egyptian Reporter

One-man bands may be the wave of SIUC's radio future as Digi Dawg, formerly Radioactive, received a contribution from the Alumni Association Thursday to update its radio production equipment.

The Alumni Association donated $330 to Digi Dawg, a student radio/television group, who in turn purchased electronic equipment, including Musical Instrument Digital Interface.

"This equipment will allow us to automate everything," Tracy Powell, former president of Radioactive, said. "It enables one person to do the work of five or six people."

MIDI will allow students to produce their own music, bringing together one type of musical equipment together without having three or four musicians, he said.

Powell said the MIDI program acts as a map, while the instruments are playing, the program draws a grid, recording on the grid the instrument's beats. The MIDI map shows up as a 16-channel grid, and students can rearrange and adjust the rhythm beats as necessary, he said.

THREE CHEERS FOR PINCH PENNY PUB AND its owners who have received the go ahead on adding a microbrewery to the local venue for touring bands and entertainers. The DE gives a hand to the formation of a well-rounded entertainment complex.

Through the responsible management that Pinch Penny has shown over its 23 years of operation it has convinced city council members to welcome an addition to the pub with a red carpet. Because microbrewed beer is associated with an older crowd and less diversifies taste rather than majority consumption it probably helped in the approval process. Microbrewed beer also sells for around $2 to $3 per 16-ounce glass, which would promote less consumption.

Carbondale will benefit with a slight increase in the number of employment opportunities. By adding a game room, microbrewery, a sitting room and the performance hall, the establishment will call for a number of additional employees. Although it will solve the unemployment problem in Carbondale, it will offer some relief. Co-owner, Ann Karayiannis said the microbrewery itself will need a master brewer as well as a few others to help in the production.

THE LOCATION OF PINCH IS IDEAL FOR drawing in bands because Carbondale is at a cross roads between Chicago and Memphis in addition to St.Louis and Nashville. Hopefully, this town will once again become a magnet for up-and-coming rockers, rockabilly and any other variety of musicians that used to frequent Carbondale. Karayiannis said the pub will draw in a variety of musical acts from preventing from becoming a one-style venue. She said, “It’s a small town and it would limit the number of people who go out on particular nights,” if the pub was catering to a certain style of music.

The city must have understood the intentions of Pinch in its speedy approval of the operation. Knowing the track record of a limited amount of underaged drinking violations at Pinch likely weighed in the quick decision. The questions being asked will probably be that the extra space will be done in a responsible manner the majority of the time. Karayiannis said that because microbrew is expensive, it is not something people drink in quantity to get drunk but rather for its flavor. She said it will get a person drunk as any alcoholic beverage will but it is primarily for connoisseurs of beer.

THE DE WELCOMES THE PLANS FOR THE expansion of Pinch Penny Pub because there will be a little bit for everyone there. Sorry, to the underage crowd that won’t be able to attend because of city regulations, but it will be nice for the rest of Carbondale as well as surrounding communities. The wait for the completion of the total project may last until the beginning of next year but it’ll be a worthy one at that. Thanks for attempting to solve the stereotypical one-track entertainment excuse that people believe we’re a well executed plan and what will surely be a job well done when completed.

Letters to the Editor

Alternatives to lumber exist

I am responding to a letter written by Carl Huemann, who apparently believes that this is the time to get it from subdivisions and to plant and soil science at SIU. There is no problem we do when people like this are doing research that supports the increased management of our public lands. If his letter is any indication of how he does his research, all taxpayers should be alarmed. I found it is very interesting how he made a conclusion that he did to either make up “facts” or distort facts to support his conclusion.

I’m not aware of ever meeting this Huemann fellow or of his being at my house or place of business. I do use wood; I have a mandolin and a couple of fiddles and built my cabin with much saw poplar. I also have used a tremendous amount of wood that was taken to be bulldoed or hauledflowed and burned for construction, also many of us live rather Spartan existences compared to an average middle class life style, yet are extremely comfortable and feel fortunate.

As for his comment “without planning, no one has yet proposed an alternative to logging, where has been?" If he would get his head out of his picked pot, plants long enough to fetch the prescribed, he would see what “realists" are coming from. We are not being talked about the mismanagement of our public lands.

There is a place for responsible timber harvesting on private lands and this would supply more than enough wood, especially if we could lessen the waste and greed of our society. Apparently he has never heard REDUCE, REUSE, RECYCLE. There are also many alternative fibers that can replace wood in paper production; kenaf and hemp to name just two.

No, Mr. Huemann, the answer is not waste, greed, excess and business as usual but REDUCE, REUSE, RECYCLE. Spend a half day at the Jackson County landfill or the landfill of your choice and observe what goes in.

Finally, no more commercial logging on our public lands, and that includes the Shawnee National Forest.

William Cronin
Pomona, Ill.

The issue is mismanagement

I recently read a couple of letters referring to environmentalists as hypocrites for using wood, I too live in the house with wood as well as the sun. However, I don’t get my firewood from one of the last biological reserves felt in Illinois; I get it from subdivisions which have already been sensibly bulldozed or from salvaged barns turned into beams for the dump. In fact, my house is built from damaged trees I have cut out from my own land and turned into beams with a chainsaw and rifle with a bandsaw, my hardwood floors and wood trim are from old barns and houses I tore down with the help of Bill Cronin, Joe Glisson and others before they could be bulldozed and you guessed it, in the dump.

My house was made from oil or coal, the extraction of which entails the leveling of extensive tracts of forest, but from the sun. Yes, hypocrisy does abound in our society, but in this case it reeks squarely on the shoulders of those who pretend to be making a better world while they live off the abundance of the past and condemn the future to struggle for every breath and every glass of clean water.

If you believe in the current mismanagement practices, you need only take a short trip to a Forest Service cut done in the last few decades to see that it does not result in oaks and songbirds, but in sumace and ticks. It is not a policy for the future but a rape of our past. We must get all our facts infantile “ne, nan me" attitude and begin to make our forests better before you get to the point.

We all must get more to think about the wasteful policies that have led us to the point of "needng" to log, to get a headful of facts, to cut down a few trees, to cut down a few trees, to cut down a few trees, and have been talking about the mismanagement of our public lands.

The DE is a bastion of ignorance, Jim Wilder-Thomas, Bill Cronin, and other so-called "environmentalists" have already done more to destroy the environmental movement than the precessional group, and their delusional fantasies do not merit response. The DE, however, if any editor bothers a shred of journalistic ethics, should be ashamed of the garbage printed in last Friday’s edition.

Does the DE staff ever check references? Does the term “research” mean anything to you? Or are you the biased flunkies of a publicity-passed group of local buffoons? I dare you to find a single fact to back up your statements. 15,000 acres lost? Did the DE lose them? Since 1990, 10,000 acres have been added to the Shawnee. Untruths! The DE must be touched because 80% of the original purchase units were abandoned, eroded, filled with the “lands nobody wanted” which Nature and the Forest Service brought back to forest. The worst it was the reference to the long-term economics of the Southern Illinois region. Well-managed timber harvesting is a cornerstone to improving regional economic strength and stability. Hopefully your absurd remark was in just to see if readers were paying attention; otherwise it is indicative of blinding idiocy.

From time to time the DE contains errors, thus the accuracy desk. This affair to intelligence promotes intellectual decay, and discards this University. For the sake of SITC, Southern Illinois, and the Shawnee, get out and do something responsible, like covering facts, not fiction photo-writers.

and then suddenly, like the sun after the parking garage. I must voice the plight of the stalker. Because the stalker has been waiting for me, on average, for twenty minutes, honking like crazy and, after parking, gave me a sense of being them for twenty minutes, having a class soon, but that I couldn't just come in and take a spot. "There are people waiting for these spots," she cried. I really did not understand how I could be represented for driving to a parking garage, seeing a spot open, and parking in it. I did not speed around any crazy or cause any near collisions. My parking lot infraction consisted of a rather minor offense.

SiUC computer system impossible to access from home, except at 4:30 a.m.

This may just be me, I don't know. But I've been having a difficult time accessing my SiUC email and computer system from home. It's just a whole thing. Friends have informed me that my computer system has been under attack and that I must access it from home. I have noticed that, according to Mr. Rubinstein, section name, several variations have not gained access, I'm glad on and suddenly, like the sun bursting through on a cloudy day, a car at the end of a row pulled out of a spot. Because the spot was angled away from me (I had to go the wrong way up the row), I reversed maybe 3 feet to take the spot. Now, I would normally not dare to park up the down road, but this car was pulling out of the very last spot. The whole event lasted at most 10 seconds.

The spending vulture started hawking like crazy and, after I parked, gave me a sense of being them for twenty minutes, having a class soon, but that I couldn't just come in and take a spot. Banker said the protesters have the right to appeal the case. She said she is aware of an appeal currently filed in the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals against the logging project.

Wilder-Thompson said an attempt was made Thursday to contact Judge Gilbert, currently in Chicago. She said the protesters are going to try to get another restraining order, but until then, they will stay near the logging site. "We’re going to maintain a presence within close proximity," Wilder-Thompson said, who cried while she was being cited.

Miranda Alvarez, of Missouri, said the logging was "definitely an injustice." "The Forest Service is supposed to be helping the forest. If they really cared, none of this should be happening," Alvarez said.

Environmentalists thought the Forest Service was rushing into the logging without thoroughly considering the decision. "I think they would have waited longer to make their decision," Cathleen Treacy, of the SIUC Student Environmental Central, said. At 2 p.m. on Thursday, Banker said no injuries had been reported to any protesters or loggers.

"I spoke with our team (the loggers) and as far as we can tell, everything is going smoothly," she said.

Jackson County Sheriff officials said police planning to go to Cripps Head would not be allowed to park on Macedonia Road near the area.

Cerle said the vote on cutting, to take place at about 8:30 a.m., is within the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources and is part of the Republican budget proposal. He said the final vote on cutting funds for the program by the entire Senate will probably take place within the next several weeks.

Cerle said there is a good chance the committee will decide to approve the cuts which are being proposed by Republicans, including the current chair, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kansas.

"The odds are that the committee is not going to be moving towards the vote unless they think the Senate Republican votes to pass it," Cerle said.

A spokesperson for Kassebaum could not be reached for comment Thursday.

ANNOUNCEMENT
Southern Illinois University at Carbondale
1996 Outstanding Scholar Award
A $5,000 SIUC Outstanding Scholar Award for 1996 will be awarded to recognize and to promote research and creative endeavors to an SIUC faculty or staff member who has made outstanding contributions to his or her discipline and has thus become widely recognized for these achievements. The award is made solely in recognition of scientific, educational, artistic or literary achievement; the recipient is not required to render future services to the university as a condition to receiving the award.

Eligibility. All SIUC faculty and staff members involved in research and creative activity are eligible for the award. Once nominated, the nominee may remain eligible for consideration for two additional years. This will require a separate submission of relevant supporting documentation, such as curriculum vitae, list of scholarly and creative activities, and special awards.

Nominations. Nominations for the award may be proposed by colleagues, associates, supervisors or subordinates of the nominee. The nomination should be supported by a detailed statement of the nature and importance of the accomplishments sought to be rewarded. A separate submission of relevant supporting documentation, such as curriculum vitae, list of scholarly and creative activities, and special awards will be requested at a later date (see below). The names and addresses and phone number of the nominee extended to the University must also be included in this letter submission as potential contacts by the Committee. The nomination letter and the packet of supporting documentation may be forwarded to the Graduate School Office, Attention: Outstanding Scholar Award Committee.

Deadline Dates: For nominations with statement of nature and importance of accomplishments only is Friday, October 6, 1995.
Keitel's career ripening with six movies in 1995

Newday
NEW YORK—At a certain point in time—about five years ago—it was probably one of the funnier pieces of graffiti ever to decorate a New York City subway station.

On a wall in a station on the Lexington Avenue line hung a poster for the film "One of these Days," a pensive, white-coated Robin Williams waiting on shore while his patient, the less-apatheized Robert De Niro, stands on a rock in the water, stretching his arms evitably over his head.

In a rush hallucination drawn from De Niro's mosh, someone had written the following words:

"Roy, am I glad Harvey Keitel's not in this movie with me!" So droll. So smart. So knowing.

Little did they know.

It's true that until about five years ago, Harvey Keitel had been considered the odd-man-out of the De Niro-Sorboesn downtown New York film collective, the one who made bad choices and bad movies—ten or no movies—and, perhaps, simply didn't have the talent or wisdom to carry them. He's recently completed the Quentin Tarantino-scripted, Robert Rodriguez-directed "Dusk Till Dawn" and spent months in the Balkans working on Theo Angelopoulos' "The Gaze of Ulysses." He acts—performing like a man possessed, which has always been his strength.

Keitel has played psychotics, degenerates and killers so convincingly that he scares people; Ellen Busyn, recalling Keitel's performance in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore," said he "terrified her." His performance in Abel Ferrara's "The Bad Lieutenant," with all its moral squalor and Keitel's obsessive acting style, prompted physical revulsion among some audiences. Likewise, his doomed gangster in Tarantino's "Reservoir Dogs," but the focus he brings to his work seems to abandon him when he has to play himself.

Junior M.A.F.I.A. release, its debut CD. The result is a following rhythm stereotype about Chris Isaak.

The first track, "Baby Did A Bad Thing," reflects Isaak's inability to vocalize piercing howls like ancient blues and rock artists: he sounds like Roy Orbison in blue jeans. Isaak's tone stretches from a low also to a powerful soprano. Simple, slow-tempo guitar ripples into fast riffs when he reaches a vocal peak.

The rest of "Forever Blue" follows a more mellow pace. It is the kind of music you listen to on a slow peak.

"Forever Blue" is made up of seven N.C.S., including one female, Lil' Kim, who is the group's stand-out lyricist. Lyrically, Junior M.A.F.I.A. does not represent quality hip-hop, and the production for "Complicity" is lazy. The first single, "Player's Anthem," displays a lyrical master-piece by Notorious B.I.G., Lil' Ceaser and Lil' Kim. "Get Money" drops Notorious B.I.G. and Lil' Kim's thoughts on CREAM (money). Other notable tracks are "Murder Once," "Oh My Lord" and "Lyrically Wizards." "Complicity" does have some bright spots due to the presence of Notorious B.I.G., Lil' Kim and strong beats, but it is shadowed by unpowful lyrics and confusing story lines. "Complicity" may be back to the lab for practice definitely. (William C. Phillips III)

Jawbreaker — "Dear You" (DGC)

In the wake of Green Day's sextuple-platinum "Dookie," the majors are scrambling to find soundalikes that may net them a back. DGC has been at the head of the chase; Jawbreaker is in its latest investment.

Jawbreaker's bio says the band is based on both coasts, but "Dear You" clearly reflects the left coast more than the right. Blake Schwarzenbach's vocal inflection is reminiscent of Green Day's Billy Joe without being an exact duplicate. Also similar to the technicolor-haired trio is the four-chord structure of the songs, but hey, that's punk rock, ain't it?

While most of the songs have a metalish picking to the guitars, "Oyster" and "Lil,;eer" has a more mellow pace. "Oyster" does stretch from a low howl to the presence of Notorious B.I.G., Lil' Kim and strong beats, but it is shadowed by unpowful lyrics and confusing story lines. "Complicity" may be back to the lab for practice definitely. (William C. Phillips III)

Shalikashvili defends U.S. pledge on troops in Bosnia

The Baltimore Sun
WASHINGTON—Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Thursday defended the Clinton administration's pledge to deploy up to 25,000 U.S. peacekeeping troops in Bosnia, telling members of Congress that the force had to be large enough to avoid being "pushed around."

Shalikashvili said that if the warring parties in Bosnia negotiated a settlement, no more than half the NATO peacekeeping troops would be from the United States. Their mission would be to help prevent renewed fighting.

"It is very important that they are robust enough to take care of themselves, and to ensure the freedom of movement so that they don't get pushed around like the U.N. peacekeeping forces have been," he said.

The U.N. troops in Bosnia frequently have been blocked from fulfilling humanitarian missions. Many have come under fire, and some were taken hostage by the Bosnian Serbs, although they were later released.

The NATO peacekeepers would have one of the Bosnian government forces trained and armed to defend themselves, the general said, and "under no circumstances" would they stay beyond the end of 1996.

NATO officers are still drafting the peacekeeping plan, and Shalikashvili said it has not been decided how many U.S. troops would be involved, but 25,000 was the maximum.

"Setting the stage for a conference with the White House over the next stage of the Bosnian crisis," Republican and Democratic members of Congress demanded Thursday that the administration seek congressional approval before sending troops to Bosnia as part of a NATO peace-implementation force.

Shalikashvili, speaking at hearings on his nomination to a second term as chairman of the Joint Chiefs, said the administration would consult with Congress.

Consultation, however, can stop short of seeking approval, asked whether the administration intended to send peacekeepers regardless of congressional action, State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns replied, "This administration is publicly and privately committed to the parties and to our allies that we will be part of a peace implementation force, yes."

Throughout the war, Clinton—like President Bush—has refused to send U.S. troops to the former Yugoslavia until either peace is declared or the U.N. troops need to be evacuated.

Shalikashvili said he was "deeply concerned" about further U.S. involvement in Bosnia, the Balkans, the Middle East and the former Soviet Union. The United States hopes to set up a peace conference for face-to-face negotiations, but officials say more shuttle diplomacy by American envoys will be needed first.

Two State Department officials, Robert Ortenzio and Chris Hill, will return to the region this weekend.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Karl Rove, from the European Union, will join foreign ministers of Russia, Serbia and Croatia—as well as of Britain, France, Germany and Russia.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON—The federal government reported Thursday that births to teenage girls have declined, and childbearing rates among unmarried women have leveled off following a steady rise for 50 years, according to social trends that have resulted from the American family and contributed to the recent climor of a tougher welfare system.

"Any sign those patterns are reversing is very encouraging," said Stephanie Ventura, a demographer at the National Center for Health Statistics, a research arm of the CDC. At the same time, Ventura and others emphasized that teenage childbearing and out-of-wedlock births remain at historically high levels and that it is too early to say whether long-term increases are reversing.

"Although these findings are encouraging, we clearly still need to do more to reduce teen pregnancy," Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said in a statement. The agencies come as Congress and the Administration are trying to overhaul the nation's welfare system, a process fueled by many politicians by the belief that welfare has contributed to the increase both in childbearing among teenagers and unmarried births generally.

That argument, and the question of whether out-of-wedlock births can be reduced by changing social policy, has been contentious throughout the welfare debate.

Nevertheless, it is clear from research studies that children born in a two-parent family are most likely to stay in school, succeed academically and avoid a host of other problems.

GPSC President William Karrow said he doubted that the council should accept the proposal.

"At this time there are still solid questions about what we’ll get out of this," Karrow said. "The executive board is not necessarily in favor of this."

Collins’ proposal displayed itemized costs of implementing the network and listed the possible benefits for USG and GPSC including storing files electronically, sharing files and common software, 24-hour data server access and network virus control and backup.

The proposal states that the total cost for GPSC would be about $3,000, nearly half of what USG is going to get the council will have to implement the system. Some council members said GPSC’s cost was unfair because the system would benefit USG more than the council.

GPSC member Scott Thorne said he doubted that the council should accept the proposal.

"We don’t see why the COSL~ should be given a head start," Karrow said. "They (GPSC) may have felt they don’t need it, but we have more people here working who will use it,” Sherman said.

Other GPSC business included acceptance of nominations for vice president of administrative affairs. The GPSC constitution states that nominations must be taken at two consecutive meetings and voted upon at the third for such offices.

Acting Vice President Doug Phelan, a third year law student, was nominated at the Sept. 6 meeting to fill the position permanently. No one else was nominated Wednesday. The vote will take place at GPSC’s next meeting on Oct. 4.

USG President Deane Sherman said he feels USG still has a need for the system. The USG Senate will vote on the proposal in the future, he said.

Alleged rape brings review of military legal accord

The Los Angeles Times

TOKYO—Amid an escalating national furor over the alleged rape of a 12-year-old Japanese schoolgirl by three U.S. servicemen, the United States and Japan agreed Thursday to review an accord that grants the American military here special legal status in criminal investigations.

However, in a meeting with Foreign Minister Yohci Kono, U.S. Ambassador to Japan Warren J. McFarlane made clear that the United States did not intend to substantially change the agreement, as a growing number of Japanese are demanding.

The bilateral Status of Forces Agreement gives the U.S. military custody of its personnel accused of committing crimes off-base, until they are indicted by local authorities. Japanese officials now are asking for immediate custody, to which they are entitled in cases involving non-military personnel—Japanese and foreign.

"They should be handed over to us, first of all," Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama told Kyodo News Service.

The alleged rape has fueled heated media coverage, provoked threats of violence against Americans in Japan and could cloud a planned summit between Murayama and President Clinton in November.

Rapes and other violent crimes have occurred before near U.S. bases in Japan—more than 230 since 1980, according to police records. But public outrage over the current case is unrivaled in the 35 years since the agreement took effect.

Analysts attribute the fierce publicity to several factors: the uniqueness of the crime, sharp media criticism over perceived special treatment of U.S. military suspects, and the growing willingness here to question the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty in the post-Cold War world.

The rape occurred on Sept. 4, when the three service members allegedly abducted the elementary-school girl on her way home from a grocery store. They allegedly bound her with adhesive tape and raped her on an isolated beach.

The suspects, Marin Pfe, Rodrico Harp, 21, of Griffin, Ga., Pfe, Kendrick M. Ledet, 20, of Weyomes, Ga., and Navy Service Member D. Gill, 22, of Woodville, Texas, are in custody at a U.S. base. American authorities are turning them over to Japanese police for interrogations that last up to nine hours a day, but the Japanese are pushing for more access.

NEW YORK—Alleged rape brings review of military legal accord

NEW YORK—At long last, Time Warner Inc.'s $11.5 billion deal to take over Turner Broadcasting System Inc. appeared close to completion Thursday night as the boards of both companies met separately in New York to discuss and possibly vote on the $3 billion merger.

A source said the Time Warner board was expected to vote Friday morning, and an announcement could come later in the day.

Todd Turner's wife, actress Jane Fonda, confirmed Thursday afternoon from her Manhattan hotel room that the company's board was meeting in New York and that a news conference was scheduled for 1 p.m. EDT Friday. When asked if Turner was optimistic that the stock deal would be completed, she said, "Ted's always optimistic."

Still, there was the possibility of last-minute hitches, including possible new demands from two cable operators holding small, significant blocks in the agreement, as a growing number of Japanese are demanding.

WASHINGTON—The House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee approved a bill Thursday authorizing more than $590 million for Amtrak passenger train service in the next fiscal year, breaking an impasse between House and Senate Republicans and organized labor that had held up the bill for months.

The committee action still takes away many of labor's current rights, but in ways less onerous to labor than in an earlier proposal by committee Chairman Bud Shuster, R-Pa., or the Senate version. The House and Senate will now negotiate differences over the bill.

The House committee bill eliminates the six years of service required to retire under Amtrak, must pay workers who lose their jobs when routes are eliminated, requires Amtrak to keep up a 254-day negotiating process available for a new collective bargaining agreement if no agreement is reached, unions are free to strike, and Amtrak must impose voluntary layoffs unless it is ready to order a strike.

In addition to $712 million for Amtrak operations, capital improvements and other spending, the bill authorizes $200 million for the "Washington to New York" Long Island railroad corridor and $60 million to continue Amtrak's program of "connecting the Country by Amtrak," a White House-backed initiative in 1993.
Kennedy assassination documents show CIA bugged Soviet Embassy in Mexico

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON—Recently declassified CIA documents pertaining to the 1963 killing of President John F. Kennedy show the agency blocked the release of records to keep from acknowledging the bugging of the Soviet Embassy in Mexico City and other clandestine operations.

The Assassination Records Review Board, in releasing 39 CIA JFK Documents Thursday, said some words and phrases would remain secret and in almost every case found that "the redacted information contains no substantive information about the assassination of President Kennedy or about Lee Harvey Oswald," the man charged with killing the president.

In one case, the CIA postponed releasing one paragraph of a long document that described the CIA’s activities in Mexico City after the assassination because it refers to "the October intercepts of Lee Oswald" and the possible existence of another copy of that "intercept" that was discovered after the assassination.

Oswald’s trip to Mexico City between Sept. 27 and Oct. 3, 1963, and its visit to the Cuban and Soviet embassies there just more than a month before the Kennedy assassination has been a focal point for many conspiracy theories. Although reports have been published that Oswald was overheard talking on the telephone to the Soviet embassy, the CIA has tried to keep secret its wiretap operation—which was carried out with the cooperation of the Mexican government. The agency has argued that disclosing such past activities might endanger similar, ongoing operations, in Mexico City or elsewhere.

Congressional investigators, the media and JFK assassination aficionados have tried to locate the telephone tapes in order to compare them with recognized tapes of Oswald’s voice, particularly since the theory developed that it was a "false Oswald" who went to Mexico. The CIA has in the past said that some tapes were reviewed but the assassination and others could no longer be found.

Among the new documents is a CIA "summary of relevant information" on Oswald conducted at 7 a.m., on Nov. 24, 1963, less than 24 hours after he was arrested and identified as the possible assassin. It declassifies for the first time the first paragraph disclosing that in Mexico City the CIA’s "expert monitor" had reviewed wiretap transcripts and tapes and found several between Sept. 27 and Oct. 3, 1963, identical with those of Oct. 1, 1963, identified as Oswald's.

Student debts higher than ever

WASHINGTON—College students and their families are in debt more than ever before. To pay for tuition they are relying on ever larger loans, bigger loans, and borrowing at a rate that far exceeds the pace in which college costs and personal income are growing nationally.

Those are the central conclusions of a report, to be released Friday, that draws a stark portrait of how difficult it is becoming across the nation for many students and their families to afford college.

The report documents the explosion in student borrowing that has occurred in the past five years, a fact that has been a key part of debate in Congress this year over the future of federally backed student loans. It also details rising anxiety among middle-income families who fear that college could soon be either "out of reach" financially or have a stranglehold influence on their household income.

"This is something we all ought to be very concerned about," said Ted Feigl, the president of the Education Resources Institute, a Boston-based nonprofit group. "This is a staggering issue for many families, and indications are it's only going to get worse."

An unprecedented number of college students now rely on loans to help pay their tuition. About 6.5 million students, nearly half of the nation's college enrollment, have loans and borrowing has reached a record level of $23.8 billion.

Senate student loan proposal angers colleges

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The yearlong battle over education funding has intensified again, this time over a proposal in the Senate to have colleges and universities pay the government a fee based on how much loan money they give to students.

In a move that has enraged both the Education Department and higher education officials, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., the chairwoman of the Senate’s Labor and Human Resources Committee, wants to require colleges and universities to pay an annual 2 percent charge on the volume of student loans they make. That will help achieve the $10 billion in savings Republicans want to cut from federal student loan programs in the next seven years.

Under Kassebaum’s plan, a university that collects $40 million in loan money from students each year would owe the federal government $800,000 annually. Her proposal also forbids universities from paying for the charge by raising tuition and fees. She estimates that it will raise more than $4 billion in seven years.

In a move precisely timed to coincide with the Senate’s return from its summer recess, the idea Wednesday, saying it was “the only choice.” Congress had made it intend to balance the federal budget partly with cuts in college aid, and the committee meeting she had scheduled for Wednesday was postponed instead as Democrats and college officials condemned the idea.

They announced it as a tax that will hit hardest at institutions with the largest numbers of needy students. They also predicted administrators will have no choice but to pass along costs to students, and said the plan could cause some colleges to cut incentives not to access needy students.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., called the proposal a “knife in the ribs of every college student and working family.”

“Today’s announcement is the latest in a series of Republican attempts this year in an effort to cut the size of the federal student loan program. Virtually all of them have been vetoed by the well-organized higher education lobby,” Kassebaum said.

Earlier this year, Kassebaum argued for fewer education cuts, but in the face of a two-term chairwoman, has little choice but to find the $10 billion in cuts the Republican leadership wants. Her committee is scheduled to debate the plan again Friday.

“The unhappy reality is that the fiscal year is over and no overall budget over seven years requires painful choices,” Kassebaum said Wednesday.

Frerotte causing controversy

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON--The list of National Football Conference teams that consider themselves Young, Frerotte, Alman.

First is Steve Young, who won the most Super Bowl rings with the San Francisco 49ers.

Third is Troy Aikman, who won the most Super Bowl rings with the Dallas Cowboys.

Second is Eddie George. All right, if you want to be formal, it's Gus Frerotte of the Washington Redskins and the Ford Cliff, Pat Frerotte.

With his name in such splendoral company, it would be irresponsible not to guess that Frerotte is feeling fine.

But the question barely had been asked when an ugly look appeared on Frerotte's face.

"No, haven't seen it, but people were talking about it," Frerotte said of the statistical list.

"They're like, 'You're up there with Troy Aikman and Steve Young.' I'm like 'That's a fourth week. If I'm up there after the 16th week, I'll feel a little better about it. It's too early to think about that.'"

Frerotte's 100.0 quarterback rating puts him between Young (111.2) and Alman (97.1). Frerotte has completed 45 of 75 passes (60 percent) for 662 yards and five touchdowns, with two interceptions.

In Sunday's 38-31 loss in Denver, he was 16 of 26 for 233 yards and three touchdowns, with one interception on a pass batted at the line of scrimmage.

Sunday in Tampa, Frerotte will start his third game this season and seventh of his two-year NFL career.

The Buccaneers' quarterback is Trent Dilfer, the sixth pick in the 1994 draft. Frerotte, the 197th pick, replaced the third pick, Heath Shuler, when Shuler sprained his shoulder against Arizona in the season opener.

"I have a hard time believing that Heath Shuler is not going to get his job back," Dilfer said Wednesday, knowing first-round draft picks who have received huge signing bonuses are difficult to displace.

Still, Dilfer says, "Right now, the best quarterback that came out of the draft playing-wise has been Gus Frerotte. He's the one that's playing the best."
AL west sight of hottest pennant race in baseball

By Ken Rosenthal
The Baltimore Sun

Bob Costas, calling Billy Costas, Mr. Tradition, Mr. Anti-Wild Card, Mr. Loud Protector of Baseball

Never be another pennant race, Billy?

Well, never sure got here quick.

No one is talking about it, because no one sees up late enough for the West Coast scores, and no one wants to admit baseball is alive.

There's plenty to hate about the game—the lack of a labor agreement, the regionalized postseason TV package, the predetermined home-field advantage.

But lay off the three-division setup.

Leave the wild card alone.

Yes, the California Angels' ethn was just as dramatic and even more perilous under the old setup, with no wild-card safety net.

But it's still awfully meaningful under the new setup, even though naysayers such as Costas predicted that the sky would fall and that there'd never be another meaningful September again.

Tell it to the Mariners, who might have just saved baseball in Seattle by going from 131 games in 1982 to 50 in 1987.

Tell it to the Orioles, who could take the 1971 Chicago Cubs for the fourth-biggest collapse in history, and pull off the most improbable fourth-place finish of all time.

Oh, the Angels wasn't blow 61-game lead with 12 to play, like Mauch's 1964 Philadelphia Phillies, but no team has ever lost this large a lead this late.

The 1978 Boston Red Sox? Their biggest lead (14 games) came on July 15. The Angels had nearly as comfortable a margin a month later.

The 1973 Brooklyn Dodgers? That's comparable, but the Dodgers' charge has occurred even more quickly than the New York Giants', The Dodgers led by 131 games with 42 to play. The Angels led Texas by 91 and Seattle by 121 with 38 left.

Leo Smith, more Ralph Kiner.

Only five teams in major-league history have overcome deficits of 11 games or more. The Mariners would be the sixth, and the wild card might not cushion the Angels' ethn at all.

That's where baseball is lucky—luckily.

If not for the thread poled by the New York Yankees and Kansas City Royals and what's left of the Montreal Expos, the Angels might have been out of contention for Seattle to overtake California.

In fact, the Mariners (or Angels) would have been 18 wins behind finishing second, because the division champi­on would face Cleveland.

This is the biggest part about the playoff format—that the four qual­ifying in each league aren't seeded according to record.

This season, the AL East and AL West champions get home-field advantage. The Indians could finish with the highest winning percentage of any team in 41 years, but it won't matter.

Obviously, this needs to be addressed. And the game needs a TV contract in which every post­season game is broadcast to every part of the country.

Want to see the Columbus Clippers? The minor league round AL series? Forget it.

Every playoff game will start at the same time, under the same rule of the championship series.

Sure, the NBA's $550 million market will see one game, and one game only. Some in Baltimore could miss the entire championship playoff series, and half of the American League’s first-round games.

Give a labor agreement, then maybe the networks will come around. Give a labor agreement, then maybe the fans will rally to the sport again.

There are good and Rogers are seri­ous wild-card contenders, yet they're drawing crowds only in the 12,000-to-15,000 range.

Fans are indifferent, not so much to the wild card, but to the game.

Or the truth is they've got used to the wild card, just as they got used to divisional play in 1969. Both leagues are producing exciting fin­ishes. And the extra playoff round adds drama to the game.

Was the old format so much worse?

Hey, was it even better at all?

Every division would have been decided by more than one game. The AL West, the Red Sox wouldn't be going to the postsea­son. And the NL East leader would be Philadelphia, at 66-68.

Shots recreated during Hall of Fame weekend

By Gene Wojciechowski
The Sporting News

As part of its recent Legends of Duke weekend, Blue Devils of­icials re-created three of the most memorable shots in the school’s history.

With almost all the old Duke players back for the Legends weekend, the former Blue Devils star did what they could, which was to try to duplicate the improbable.

Laettner missed the ball to Brian Davis, who passed it back to Laettner, who... clanged his shot.

And then, in the big finale of the event, Christian Laettner caught a long inbound pass from Grant Hill; pivoted for gramed—and missed the first, jumped, shot and, just as he did that night in the Philadelphia Spectrum, hit nothing but net.

Tulsa almost beat Illinois State.

"There was a lot against the Lady Bears," OSU Coach Diane Daugherty said the team good going into the tournament.

"We’re going up there to shoot some numbers," she said.

Molly Hudgens, Prasse’s team­man, said the Salukis are up to the challenge.

“Tulsa is a great team,” she said. “They come out fast and we have yet to lose to the Golden Hurricane and have a com­manding 7-0 record against Tulsa."

OSU is at No. 9 spot, while Tulsa ranks last in MVC standings.

Despite their records, Locke said she is going to take other team from the No. 9 spot...

Golfer's season three years in making

By Doug Durso
DE Sports Editor

When the Saluki football team hosts Nicholls State Saturday both teams come in to the game with similar situations. Both teams have coaches who are just beginning to place their mark on their respective programs. Durso Locke begins his first season as the Colonels head coach with a 0-3 record, while Saluki head coach Shawn Watson is in his second year and comes in with a 1-2 mark on the season.

Each team is coming off a subpar season as the Colonels from Louisiana went 5-7 last year. The Dawgs are coming off a 1-10 campaign. Watson said he can see parallels in the road teams are taking. "Watching them (Nicholls State) on film I believe they are probably a program like ours, in a transition and building process," he said.

Barber comes out of the high school ranks and is in his first year as a collegiate coach. Watson is impressed by what Barber brings to the game. "Just watching them play against the people they've played against, he's given them unconventional things that you don't see in college football," he said. "Some of the greatest coaches, some of the best minds have been high school coaches and he's going to do well there."

Overall, Watson said Nicholls State is not big, but the Colonels are fast and athletic. "They have a linebacking corps that run very well and a good secondary, he said. "They are not real big on defense, but they're very athletic," Watson said.

On defense the Colonels have giving up 377 total yards a game. The Salukis will try and run the ball behind their 300-plus pound offensive line against a defense that is giving up five yards a carry. "We need to do very well there."

Defensively, Nicholls State runs a 1-0, what Watson said will be unusual and has only been seen in SIUC's victory over Western Kentucky last year. "They run an offense very similar to Western Kentucky's but we faced last year," he said. "They do some unconventional things both offensively and defensively. "It makes you have to prepare a little bit harder because you're not used to seeing those things."

The Colonels are led by quarterback Corey Thomas, who leads the Southland Conference in passing with a 247 second on the squad in rushing. However, Thomas has also thrown four interceptions and five touchdowns. "They have a skilled quarterback, a guy who can run that good backfield," Watson said.

The Salukis are coming off a good effort against Division I-A Arkansas St. and will try to get to the .500 mark before their Gateway Conference season begins next week at Indiana State. Watson said it is important to get a victory in this game to build momentum getting into the conference. "This one has more significance than others," he said. "We need to win this one, especially going into what now is our conference schedule we need this added confidence."

Spikers do everything but win

By Michael Deford
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Consistency is a key ingredient to winning. Unfortunately, that ingredient was lacking in the SIUC women's volleyball team's bid to cook up their sixth straight win.

SIUC lost a five-game match to the University of Memphis Wednesday night, 15-7, 14-16, 15-13, 15-13. SIUC is now 4-0 in Missouri Valley Conference action and 6-3 overall.

Inconsistency has plagued the Spikers all season long, Wednesday night being no exception. Coach Sonya Locke, disappointed with SIUC's up and down style of play, called the match "a war of attrition."

"The match was close, but we were very inconsistent," Locke said. "We did not pass, we did not block. Our defense was good, and it was not good."

Despite the final score and SIUC's below-par performance, Locke said Memphis was not the better team.

"We did not play bad, we just played inconsistent," she said. "The better team lost."

Locke said the loss took a back seat on the team and was forgotten as the team headed back to Carbondale.

"We were tired of talking about it. It's behind us and it's not important" she said. "I would be a lot less disappointed had we won the match. But it's not a conference match and it wouldn't hurt us in the long run."
