Shull claims violations committed

Candidate files list of nine grievances to overturn election

By Marc Chase
General Assignment Reporter

In an effort to appeal the victory of the Undergraduate Student Government presidential candidate Wednesday night, Progressive Party presidential candidate John Shull filed a list of nine grievances Thursday to an election commission.

Edwin Sawyer, Unity Party presidential candidate, received nine more votes than Shull to win the USG presidential race.

But Shull said there is evidence that other parties broke USG election commission campaign rules during the election process.

Shull implicated members of the Triple A party and Unity party in campaigning within polling locations on election day in his list of grievances.

According to USG election commission rules, Shull said this would be illegal because the rules state any campaigning inside a polling location is against commission regulations.

He said members of the two parties were seen carrying hand-bills promoting their party within the confines of the Student Center.

"Myself and other members of my (Progressive) party personally saw Carin Musak carrying flyers openly inside the Student Center," Shull said. "This spoiled the election process because they violated the rules."

Musak said she carried hand-bills into the Student Center without realizing she could be breaking a rule and refrained from bringing them back into the polling location after the election commissioner warned her not to.

"I caught myself on occasion accidentally carrying hand-bills in the Student Center," Musak said. "Craig Leech warned me that grievances could be filed if I continued to do so, so I stopped after the warning."

Sawyer was unavailable for comment. Nathan Tonarelli, campaign manager for the Progressive Party, said other grievances, such as students being turned away from the polls in Lentz Hall, could have cost Shull the small margin of votes he needed to win the election.

"Many things were not done by the book in this campaign," Tonarelli said. "With a nine vote difference (between Shull and Sawyer) some of these rule infractions could have cost John (Shull) a presidential victory."

Tonarelli said he and Shull learned from

Parking meter increase tabled for further review

By Diane Dove
Special Assignment Reporter

SIUC's Traffic and Parking Committee delayed a vote Wednesday on a possible increase in parking meter rates until students and a consulting firm can review the issue.

The committee tabled a Parking Division proposal for the increase in meter rates Wednesday from 25 to 50 cents an hour, and agreed to vote on it at a later date, which has not been scheduled.

A vote will be delayed until the situation is further reviewed by Barton and Aschman, a consulting firm in Evanston, Illinois which made the meter-rate increase recommendation.

The recommendation for the fee increase was made by the firm because the Parking Division spent an average of $100,000 more than it took in during the last three years.

The firm will give a new recommendation after hearing from students and other campus interest groups, as well as reviewing the results of recent parking improvements telephone surveys.

The results of the surveys, which were conducted in February, still are being tabulated.

David Chayer, of the Graduate and Professional Student Council, said a student who parks at a meter three times a week would pay $48 a

Under siege: Bosnian people fall unprotected

By Jamie Madigan
Politics Reporter

The United States should vote to end the arms embargo against Bosnia and give a strong warning to Bosnian Serbs, the president of the American Task Force for Bosnia said Thursday night.

Khaled Saffuri, who formed the task force two years ago to help end the suffering in Bosnia, said Bosnians must have access to arms to defend themselves against the Serbs.

Lecturer says United Nations laws violated while U.S. stands idle

"If we don't want to defend the civilian population of Bosnia, we should at least give them the means to defend themselves," he said.

He said the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate voted to end the arms embargo, but President Clinton has not commented.

In a press conference Wednesday, Clinton called the conflict a civil war, but Saffuri said Bosnia is a separate country and is being invaded by the Serbs.

"(Clinton) called the war a civil war even though everyone agrees it is an outside aggression," he said. "The Bosnians are being killed and still the president is way behind the public. It is not a civil war—it is a massacre."

Saffuri said the Serbs have nearly 800 tanks, unlimited arms and the fourth largest army in the world, while the Bosnian people are using guns left from World War II. Out of the 200,000 Bosnians killed in the last three years, less than 5 percent were Serbs.

He said countries withholding arms are violating laws of the United Nations.

"What we are doing to them violates international law," he said. "The world's still saying 'No, you're not getting any arms; we're not giving you anything.'"

While lifting the embargo will be a significant step toward helping the country, other efforts must be taken, Saffuri said.

"The problem only will be solved when we give a final ultimatum (to the Serbs)," he said. "The negotiating table should be the final solution."

Saffuri called for the United States to take a stronger stand against the Serbs.

"It is really pathetic and sad that we shoot down our own planes in Iraq and don't have the guts to shoot Serbs (in the no-fly zone)," he said. "You can see here a clear double standard."

Phased-in: Recycling to play major role in waste managing

By Stephanie Moletti
Environmental Reporter

Increasing recyclables and decreasing the amount of waste generated is the general theme for "Phase I: Assessment of Municipal Waste Needs for the Greater Egypt Region."

Ike Kirkikis, executive Director of the Greater Egypt Regional Planning and Development Commission presented the report to the citizens of Jackson County.

Thursday night at the Carbondale City Council Chambers.

The report fulfills the requirements of the state's Solid Waste Planning and Recycling Act and the state's planning grant rules. The planning period for the report is from 1992 to 2015.

The first phase consists of an assessment of the volume, weight and amount of waste generated in five counties including: Franklin,

Demby

Take care of your own and do not leave anybody behind was the message a Vietnam veteran told a packed house Thursday night.

Bill Demby, who had both of his legs shot off by a Viet-Cong rocket told students and faculty everyone should break the barriers between physically able and disabled people. He was presenting the annual Guy A.

Renzaglia lecture in the Student Center auditorium.

"We are all in this together, so we need to break the walls that separate us," Demby said. "People should not look at disabilities but our abilities."

Demby, who works as a counselor with people with disabilities and tours the country to share his experiences, said there is a need to change the attitude of SEPARATISM MAY CHANGE QUEBEC'S FUTURE — TORONTO—The leader of Quebec traveled to Washington and New York this week to reassure American investors concerned about the stability of Canada's restive French-speaking province. But Premier Daniel Johnson's visit succeeded only in reminding Americans that Quebec's immediate future—and thus Canada's—is uncertain. Separatist fever is growing once again in Quebec, home to about a quarter of Canadians. Opinion polls indicate that the pro-independence Parti Quebecois would win a governing majority were provincial elections held today. The party has vowed to hold a definitive referendum on separation from Canada within a year of taking power.

FOREIGN SERVICE STRUGGLES WITH DIVERSITY — WASHINGTON—President Clinton's call for a government "that looks like America" is causing controversy in the Foreign Service, with some white males charging that they are victims of reverse discrimination and women and minorities countering that the service's dominant male character remains fundamentally unchanged. The controversy has simmered for years but intensified under this administration, with Secretary of State Warren Christopher insisting on implementing the White House's strictures about diversity.

ALGERIAN ISLAMIC RADICALS GROWING — WASHINGTON—With the Islamic fundamentalist movement in Algeria growing stronger every day, U.S. officials have good reason to be concerned that this important North African country may become the first Arab state to fall to such forces since the Sudan in 1989. "One cannot rule out a collapse (of the present government)," says a high-ranking U.S. official. Another goes so far as to say: "It's not a matter of if but of when." If Islamic radicals seize power in Algeria, the impact will extend to neighboring countries such as Morocco and Tunisia. Even Egypt would in all likelihood be affected.

JURORS TO BE EXTENSIVELY SCRUTINIZED — WASHINGTON—People called for jury duty will be questioned extensively about their experiences, beliefs and attitudes now that the Supreme Court has ruled potential jurors cannot be excluded because of their sex, lawyers and other legal specialists predicted this week. Not only will jurors lose some privacy, but jury selection also could take longer and become more tedious, the lawyers said, especially in cases involving rape, child abuse and sexual harassment. In those types of cases, sex is believed to make a difference in the verdict. Rather than relying on stereotypes, lawyers will be required to show why people being excluded appear to be biased or prejudiced.

FEDERAL BUYOUT PLAN MOVING SLOWLY — WASHINGTON—Operation DeLayer Redundant Management—the unofficial name of the very official White House program to lure thousands of senior civil servants off the payroll—is on track but moving slowly. Most of the buyouts that have been or will be offered this year are for Grade 13 through senior executive workers earning $49,947 to just over $100,000 a year. The slow pace of the buyouts has irked many workers who had hoped Uncle Sam would make them an offer by now.

SIUC graduate takes honor as radio/TV alumnus of year

By Matthew Lamacki
Entertainment Reporter

A graduate of SIUC has made his usual trip back for radio-television week, but this year he returned to receive the department's highest honor.

Tom Blomquist, a 1972 graduate of SIUC, has come for radio-television week the past several years, but this year he will be named as radio-television alumnus of the year.

Blomquist found success as a writer and producer for many TV shows, including "Quantum Leap," "Sequest," "Hardcastle and McCormick" and "The A-Team."

Blomquist's latest writing and producing venture is a family oriented show which he said has been a challenging and rewarding change from the usual action-adventure type shows he usually writes.

Blomquist is currently the supervising producer and co-writer of the new series "Christy," which debuted with a two-hour movie on April 3.

The series is based on Catherine Marshall's 1967 book, which is set in 1912 and follows the life of an 18-year-old woman teaching in an Appalachian missionary school.

The series stars Kellie Martin, formerly of "Life Goes On," in the title role, and four-time Emmy Award-winner Tyne Daly co-stars as Miss Alice, Christy's mentor.

Blomquist, originally from the Chicago area, said he enjoyed his years at SIUC and is very honored to be named alumnus of the year.

Blomquist said he hopes to encourage and inspire young writers while here at SIUC.

"The key to success is to stay focused," he said. "Once you set a goal you should never lose sight of it and always keep your eye on the ball."

A disc jockey with a little magic visited SIUC Thursday to tell Radio and Television majors what they should expect in the broadcast industry.

Marc Clarke, a 1988 Radio and Television graduate from SIUC, is currently a morning co-host on MAJIC 108, KMMJ-St. Louis.

Clarke encouraged participants in the Radio-Television Week to seize the moment and take advantage of the hands-on experience that SIUC offers.

"SIUC students seem to understand the business a little better than other places," he said.

Clarke said he thinks SIUC gives students a tremendous opportunity to gain skills in radio and television through WSUI-FM, WIEB, and the SIU Night Report.

Any of these opportunities gives skills ranging from copywriting to sales and marketing which are very impressive on paper, Clarke said.

Clarke also recommended taking advantage of internships at stations or corporations.

"Saturate the market with yourself," he said. "The key to this whole field is to be aggressive."

Involvement spells skill, success

By Tina McIlrath
General Assignment Reporter

Two SIUC alumni told budding broadcast majors that they must broaden their skills and expectations to succeed in the changing world of communications Thursday afternoon.

At a Radio and Television Department Week presentation, Ralph Becker, president of Saluki Investors and a SIUC alumnus, said students should maximize every opportunity given to them with determination and persistence.

Michael Starr, director of the Radio/Television department, said Becker has donated most of the scholarships offered to radio and television majors as well as given the broadcasting department a $3 million grant for the purchase of equipment.

Becker, who owns 6 radio stations throughout the country and is considering opening a station in St. Petersburg, Russia, said he has been active in the broadcast business for 45 years.

"I was active (in broadcast) when I was two years old," he said.

Becker attributed all the fun he's had in broadcast to his experiences in Southern Illinois and at SIUC.

Chris Wilson, eastern regional manager of Scarborough Research Corporation and alumnus of SIUC, said the University prepared him for various challenges in the broadcast field.

"The education you get here (SIUC) is far superior to most universities," Wilson said.

Scarborough is a qualitative research company which hired Wilson to gather information about local market bases. Wilson said his life is an example of the flexibility required of a broadcast major.

Becker and Wilson encouraged students to leave all options open and look at opportunities on a global perspective.

"You have to have the drive, you have to love the business, you have to take risks, and you have to have contacts," Wilson said.

University's policies penalize servicemen

LATE LAST WEEK GOVERNOR JIM EDGAR ordered the activation of 185 Illinois National Guard members to help fight rising waters in the town of Olive Branch. Another 1000 were alerted for possible duty.

Some of the alerted Guardsmen were SIUC students. Since then though, because of a run of fair weather in the Mississippi Valley, the alert has been called off and most of the activated Guardsmen, who were volunteers, have returned home.

The callup again raises questions relating to the University's policies dealing with students who are called into military service.

THE ALERT IS OF PARTICULAR IMPORTANCE to Illinois National Guard members who are also students. Many of these men and women hold a somewhat precarious position, balancing the demands of school, the guard and often a job against one another.

Last summer about 350 SIUC students were activated to sandbag, guard and other duties by the Illinois National Guard during the Great Flood of '93.

Some of these men and women worked for over a month before returning home and because of the length of duty, most of the students who served during the flood received incompletes for their summer semester classes.

FULFILLING CLASS REQUIREMENTS TO replace an incomplete with a letter grade is a difficult task, but the task is compounded when incompletes are received in two or three classes.

That is exactly what happened last summer. Many of the students were faced with an additional three, six or nine hours of class the following semester and eventually were not able to handle the workload. Thus, having to drop the courses, losing out on a half-semester's work and the tuition paid to the University.

SIUC's policy regarding students called to military duty states a student's tuition may be refunded at the University's discretion only if the student is inducted "into military service for a period of not less than six months." The students who fought the flood were gone only a month or two but still lost hundreds of dollars in non-refunded tuition.

IN RESPONSE TO THE PROBLEMS NATIONAL Guard personnel on flood duty encountered, the Illinois State Legislature passed PA 88-518 last November. The bill provides that "any person in military service will receive full refund or credit for funds paid to any Illinois public University, college, or community college if the person is unable to attend the school for seven or more days. Withdrawal from courses will not impact grade point average."

THE UNIVERSITY NEEDS TO REVISE ITS policies regarding students in the military and bring them in line with those of the state. Students who are serving the state in a time of emergency should not be penalized by the University.

Letters to the Editor

Professor denounces D.E. ad

I have thought hard about whether or not to write regarding the "revisionist" who, on the day of Holocaust remembrance, April 7, paid for a large ad in the DE challenging the Holocaust Memorial Museum's depiction of Nazi death camps.

These people's claims are so fantastic and so morally offensive that my first impulse was to simply scoff and turn my back on them.

However, for most college students, World War II is ancient history; it ended nearly a half century ago, long before they were born and, for most, before their parents were born.

When a person has little direct knowledge of events, it is easy to call even the most well documented actions into question.

The "revisionists" do not present any documentation to support their claims that the Nazis did not do the atrocities so many witnessed; that the Nazis, in their zeal to keep perfect records, documented so well; that is seared into the memories of survivors; and that photographers, filmmakers, lawyers, historians, and a host of others documented so thoroughly.

Rather, they "seek to cast doubt" on the documentary record.

It is easy to cast doubt: Members of the Flat Earth Society cast doubt on claims that the world is a sphere;

I could cast doubt on the existence of the US Civil War; I could cast doubt on whether anyone lived in this hemisphere before Europeans landed. Etc., etc.

Anyone with any shred of historical knowledge would know that I could never support my doubts with facts, but that would not prevent me from trying to "cast doubt" on these amply documented historical events.

That is exactly what the Holocaust "revisionists" are doing, with as much intellectual integrity.

The only difference is that their "doubt casting" is an attempt to cover up one of the greatest crimes of humanity, to say it never happened.

It is comparable to someone trying to deny that slavery existed in the United States, or to deny that Europeans killed off and otherwise removed the peoples who originally inhabited this land.

We can laugh at people who claim the world is flat; people who deny crimes are themselves capable of repeating those crimes.

The lesson of the Holocaust is that never again can humanity be allowed to classify groups of people as non-human and then to annihilate them.

To deny that this occurred is to be complicit with the crime. It must be denounced.

— Jane Adams, associate professor, anthropology

Printing Smith's ad shameful, offensive

I read the April 7th edition of the Daily Egyptian. In the paper I saw a paid advertisement that concerned and offended me. It was a piece written by a fellow named Bradley R. Smith, of the organization "Committee for the Open Debate on the Holocaust."

In it, Smith attempts to debate the truth about the Holocaust. The method he employs is very subtle.

The aim is to have us believe that the Holocaust never happened. He claims there is no proof that the murderous gas chambers ever existed.

The reasoning follows, that if there were no gas chambers, how could the genocide have occurred? Smith's craft is that by making arguments that seem accurate and raising questions that seem legitimate, he makes the event of the Holocaust seem a little less factual.

It is true that many of us either do not know of do not remember our history well. Bradley R. Smith and his group know this, and use it to their advantage.

What he writes sounds reasonable and intelligent, thus, supposedly, worth listening to. In fact, what it is, is just the fabrications of a smooth talking liar who feeds propaganda to the unknowing.

I'll admit that I am no great scholar or history professor. However, I know certain things are true. I have known survivors of the Nazis, I have known children of survivors, and I have known families of people who did not survive.

What they say about the bloody Nazis is true and is more than enough proof.

Maybe the editor of the DE did not know it, but Thursday, April 7th was Yom Hashoa.

Yom Hashoa means "Day of the Holocaust." It is a day designated to memorialize the six-million Jews who died at the hands of the Nazi butchers. To print Smith's ad on this day, of all days, was in bad judgment and poor taste. I believe in the freedoms speech and the press. But, I do not believe these freedoms should allow, or permit, an editor to print what is shameful and offensive lies.

—Daniel Wernick, transfer student, Forestry students that they were turned away from polling places at Lentz Hall in Thompson Point after waiting in line before polls officially closed.

He said since students were in line before polls closed down, they should have been allowed to vote.

Shull received the majority of the votes from Lentz Hall Wednesday night, and he could have won the election if the people who were turned away had been allowed to vote, Tonarelli said.

Also on the list of grievances, SIUC student Chris Deverman is listed as having claimed that poll workers did not run his student identification card through the polling computer.

Shull said if students' cards are not run through the polling computer, they would be able to place multiple votes.

Other grievances filed by Shull against the Unity Party include: placing flyers on a stop sign violating a city ordinance, posting flyers without the Unity Party name included on the paper and Unity Party candidate taking Progressive Party hand-bills out of the hands of students' and throwing the flyers on the ground.

Election commissioner Craig Leech said the commission was not able to comment on the grievances Thursday because it had not yet reviewed them.

school year — not including summer semester. The rate would increase to $96 if doubled.

Vice President for Administration, James Tweedy, said revenue generated by the parking and traffic fund could only be used for Parking Division.

Parking Division is supported by solely revenue from parking decals, fines from traffic and parking tickets, and parking meters.

Tweedy also said the rate would likely stay at 50 cents once raised. "This (increase) should sit for quite some time," he said.

"Now is the time to change, and this should enhance the revenue."

Tweedy said the revenue could be used for street maintenance, street signs, and lighting — all concerns expressed by the crosswalk committee.

The University's meter rates are the lowest of all major universities in the Midwest, Tweedy said.

He also said that 50 cents is a standard rate among Illinois' universities.

"I'm used to paying that rate when I go to other universities," he said.

Chris Reedy, Student Center board representative to the committee, said the University's low-meter rates make SIUC unique, and do not excuse an increase.

"It would be a daily reminder that prices are going up," he said.

Reedy said having to pay 50 cents for parking meters would develop a negative impression of the University.

Merilyn Hogan, coordinator of parking and traffic, said the meter fees have been 25 cents since 1974.

Hogan said a meter-fee increase is needed to meet the increased price of parking lot maintenance and equipment.

"We don't pay the same for concrete, asphalt, and electricity," she said. "Prices aren't based on 1974."

Think of the six women closest to you.

Now guess which one will be raped this year.

One out of six college women will be sexually assaulted this year. But you can change the odds of it happening. Simply by trying to avoid situations that leave you or your friends vulnerable.

For starters, follow security measures. Don't prop residence hall doors open. Walk with a friend after dark. And be aware that date rape is a major problem on college campuses. With many of these rapes involving drinking.

Then share these facts with six of your friends. And maybe none of them will become another statistic.

the way, but with perseverance you can get past them," he said.

Blomquist said writing was a hobby for him and originally he did not plan on making it his career.

"It was probably fate that I got into script-writing," he said.

Blomquist said he was assigned to write for the "Hallmark Hall of Fame" account while working in advertising in Chicago. He left his job in Chicago to become a script-writer and now works in Los Angeles with his wife and daughter.

He said his profession can be rewarding and frustrating at the same time.

"The highs are extremely high and the lows are extremely low," he said. "It really can be a roller coaster ride and you can't let the pressure eat you alive."

Blomquist said he hopes to further his career in movies.

"Every writer that writes for TV wants to write for the movies and maybe someday I will get that opportunity," he said.

Leo Gher, head of marketing and management in Radio and Television, said the week was designed so students could meet professionals and gain insight into the current broadcast industry.

Michele Manning, a senior in Radio and Television, said Clarke's speech better prepared her for entering the job market. Clarke said broadcast majors should prepare for an unstable job market.

"You can be fired," Clarke said. "But don't take it personally and move on."

Clarke started working at WUEM-Springfield in sales. He has also worked for radio stations in Huntsville, Alabama and Charleston, South Carolina. He said his progression through the industry has helped him.

Sufferers combat allergy season using over-counter medications

By Aleksandra Macys
Health Reporter

When SIUC student Allen LaPointe gets itchy, watery eyes, a runny nose and sneezes, he knows it is the onset of seasonal allergies. Whether he has a cold as well, is sometimes a mystery to him.

LaPointe, a senior in zoology from Dalton, knows the torture allergy sufferers endure three months out of the year and says it is difficult to distinguish between an allergy and a cold.

He said he is allergic to pollen, cats, dogs and some perfumes, soaps and detergents.

"With a cold I usually have chest problems and breathing difficulty," LaPointe said.

Chris Labyk, head nurse at the Student Health Assessment Center, said allergies occur when the body's immune system overreacts to a usually harmless substance such as pollen or molds.

The most common type of allergy is hayfever, or allergic rhinitis. Allergies often recur with changing seasons, she said.

In spring months, allergies often are the result of tree pollen. In summer and fall months, allergies usually occur as the result of pollen from grass and ragweed.

Colds, on the other hand, are caused by viruses and typically will go away after 10 to 14 days. A sore throat or cough usually accompanies colds is the body's way of eliminating the virus and healing itself.

Many times, colds are accompanied by a fever or headache, where allergies usually are not, Labyk said.

Labyk said many of the symptoms are similar, but some are different.

"Allergy sufferers usually experience an itchy throat, clear runny nose, itchy and watery eyes and sneezing," Labyk said.

LaPointe said it is difficult to distinguish between the two in early spring, but itchy eyes and sneezing are common signs of hayfever.

"The most annoying symptom is itching on the roof of my mouth and at the back of my throat," he said.

LaPointe said he relieves his allergy symptoms by taking medications which contain Brompheniramine Maleate.

He said products containing the ingredient have helped him the most. But, LaPointe said he is used to the effects of pollen now and is not bothered by symptoms as much.

Antihistamines block the action of histamines, which cause blood vessels to dilate and leak fluid in the body, are used most commonly to treat allergies, Labyk said.

Decongestants, which constrict the blood vessels of mucous membrane linings to reduce swelling and relieve a feeling of stuffiness commonly are used to treat colds, she said.

Using inappropriate medications to treat allergies and colds can cause problems, Labyk said.

"Don't use an antihistamine for a cold because it will dry you out and prevent the body from ridding itself of the virus through excretions," she said.

The SIUC Pharmacy carries over-the-counter medications to treat both colds and allergies. Decongestants, antihistamines and cough medications such as Dimetapp, Tavist-D and Sudafed are available.

Those suffering allergy or cold symptoms can stop by the center, located at the south end of the Student Center, for an evaluation.

Army ROTC commends cadets

By Doug Durso
General Assignment Reporter

Mixing discipline, physical fitness and academic achievement takes dedication and hard work, so SIUC ROTC officials want their cadets to know their hard work does not go unnoticed.

The SIUC Army ROTC honored their top cadets in the annual honors program at the Lesar Law Auditorium Thursday afternoon.

Lt. Col. Gary Rodvelt, professor of military science said the awards ceremony is a way for cadets' hard work to be recognized.

"The program is one of the few things local commanders can do in recognition of particular achievements of cadets," Rodvelt said. "The awards program also serves as motivation and inspirational tools for the cadets."

Capt. Michael Meneghetti, assistant professor of military science, said the awards are based on military performance, academic achievement in the military and other collegiate courses, and citizenship. In addition to awarding the best cadets, the program also motivates freshmen and sophomores to reach the level, Meneghetti said.

Helen Tolbert, a graduate student in workforce education and development from Chesterfield, Mo., received the President's Plaque that is given to the cadet battalion commander.

Tolbert said the ceremony gives a chance for people to see the accomplishments of cadets.

"The program recognizes sacrifices and achievements of cadets, and acts as motivational point for others to try harder the next year," Tolbert said.

Tolbert said the program provides challenges other careers do not have.

"I'm not a person who wants to work in an office. I need to be challenged physically and mentally," Tolbert said.

She said the leadership abilities learned in the ROTC program directly translate into leadership roles in any career field.

Rodvelt said the leadership roles cadets learn in the ROTC help them throughout life no matter what the career they may chose.

"The type of leadership in this program is to achieve goals, not for the incentive of money, so they get more value from their experience," Rodvelt said.

Meneghetti said most people do not know the amount of time the cadets give up to be in the ROTC.

Black president likely conclusion in South Africa

The Washington Post

STANDERTON, South Africa—This is the sort of place where whites still say, "Our blacks won't be a problem."

In small-town South Africa, race relations seem frozen in the confusing civilities of a colonial-era caste system. The white man is still "baas," and he still thinks of "his" blacks as pliant farm hands or factory workers, garden boys or maids.

History is about to turn a page next week, when all South Africans become equal under law and the country that codified racial separation in the notorious policy of apartheid holds an election likely to produce a black president.

Lecture Review

If she could begin her career all over again, actress Lauren Tom would simply want to learn how to remain grounded in reality.

Tom, star of "The Joy Luck Club," performed and lectured Wednesday night in the Student Center Ballrooms as part of Asian-American Awareness month.

"Hollywood is not about human issues, it's about money," she said. "You've got to stay very centered."

Tom, who grew up in Highland Park, performed a sketch where she portrayed her Chinese grandmother, which was a sentimental piece for Tom out of a deep respect for her grandparents.

Afterward, she gave a speech and answered questions from a charmed audience.

Tom has performed characters that have an accent, and said she does not have difficulties doing these roles as long as they are true to life.

However, Tom said she now chooses her roles carefully because she has become a spokesperson for the Asian-American acting community.

After "The Joy Luck Club," Tom

said she found herself thrust into being a role-model.

At first she was unaware of how to handle this new found pressure, but now she has grown to accept and enjoy it, she said.

Now is a very exciting time for Asians in the arts, she said.

"It's in to be Asian," she said. But along with being a minority comes stereotypes. Tom said she is one of many who has been subject to discrimination.

"That's what helps us retain our compassion — everyone's been discriminated against," she said.

The key to overcoming stereotypes is to be so good at what you do people can not help but respect your work, she said.

Tom has been receiving respect from the acting community in the form of better and bigger roles, but one day she hopes to have a starring role which is not dependent upon ethnicity.

She recently shot a pilot for Roseanne and Tom Arnold in which she was cast without regard to her ethnicity, but with the recent break-up of the Arnolds, she is unsure of the show's status.

Regardless of the roles she plays, Tom is proud of her heritage.

She said even the stereotypes Asians often encounter — that they are studious, involved in education, work very hard — all are positive.

Tom is a walking example of breaking these stereotypes — she has even tried to learn Chinese, but said it was too hard.

"(When I visited China) I was so embarrassed I didn't speak Chinese I pretended I was Japanese," she said.

Clinton talks personal with public

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—In an age when politicians can't afford to appear to be remote authority figures, President Clinton has humanized his image by sharing details of his compulsive eating and his less-than-perfect golf, his early family troubles and past marital problems.

Clinton's human side is part of his charm, polls show.

Some warn that the average-man image that allows Clinton to connect with Americans could be too convincing, damaging confidence in his leadership.

While all presidents wrestle with how close to allow the public to get, Clinton and his team decided during his presidential campaign that he would break new ground with his accessibility and informality. One signal event was his decision to don dark glasses and play the saxophone on the late-night "Arsenio Hall Show."

Since the election, Clinton has reached out further by playing talk-show host on TV "town hall" meetings with such skill that Marlin Fitzwater, the former spokesman for President Bush, calls him "the greatest TV president in history."

In the mood: Band plays on

By Heather Burrow
Entertainment Reporter

The band that helped set the musical mood in the movie "Backdraft" and taught Madeleine Stowe to play the violin will get a taste of the Carbondale music scene when they appear at the Hangar 9 at 10 p.m. Saturday.

Although the Drovers have been classified as traditional Irish music with improvisational guitar rock by Billboard magazine, bass player David Callahan said the group is not an Irish band.

However, Callahan said Irish music does influence their music.

Some of the band's influences include the Beatles, Bob Dylan, Led Zeppelin, Black Sabbath, the Cure, Gang of Four and other Chicago bands.

Other members of the band include guitarist Mike Kirkpatrick, violinist Sean Cleland and percussionist Doug Evans. On an individual basis, Kirkpatrick has his own influences.

"Mike finds inspiration from guitarist Richard Thompson and lyrics from Bob Dylan," Callahan said.

"We all have these influences even if we sometimes are not conscious of them."

The band got its start in 1988 when the group started playing bars in Chicago.

"We had revolving musicians for about a year. Sean was the only steady member of the band," Callahan said.

Kirkpatrick joined a year and a half after the original band started. Then Callahan joined when his band Journeymen broke up. The group's first album "World of Monsters" was released in 1992 and they have been together ever since.

The Drovers

The Drovers wrote some of the songs for the movie "Backdraft" and also played in the movie "Blink."

In the original script, Madeleine Stowe was supposed to be a Bohemian coffeehouse poet. However, Stowe wanted to learn how to play the violin and needed someone to teach her and be her backup.

"The director went looking for a band on the funky side with a violin player," Callahan said.

"There aren't many bands in the area that have a violinist except Big Hat, (a Chicago band who has played in Carbondale) and they enjoyed our style."

"The only bad thing was they depicted us as a struggling Chicago bar band and we haven't been a Chicago band in years," Callahan said. "We mainly play colleges and bars in other places now."

"The difference between us and other Irish bands is shown in how we perform our rhythms," Callahan said.

"We work backwards from most bands. We start with an Irish rhythm and make the song conform to that," Callahan said.

"Other groups begin with backbeat of rock and roll and add Irish rhythms. I can't stand Irish rock at all."

The band's new CD, "Kill Mice Elf," was released in February and has diverse rhythms of a ballad, fantasy and tribal melodies.

"Basically, I would say the CD itself presents a snapshot in musical development of our band," Evans said.

"We not only show craftsmanship on the album, but how the songs have taken on a life of their own since taping started."

"When listening to our music take the songs as they are," Evan said.

"We mold the song to the evening because they are different every time that we play."

New power attitude relates, offers better gender equity

By Erica Abeel
Newsday

I have lately picked up heartening-sounding messages from the new wave of feminists.

Writer Naomi Wolf urges women to jettison the old "victim feminism" for a positive, inclusive "power feminism" that will ensure women's true equality with men.

A recent issue of Esquire celebrating "The 21st Century Fox" declares that man-hating is passe. Make way for the "sexual-agency" agitators, "eating their swords into bustiers" and proclaiming women's right to pleasure.

Well, yes. But look a bit closer. Is the new wave of feminism genuinely inclusive? For women who came of age in the convention-bound '50s, Wolf's "power feminism" is an unintended mockery.

The power she envisions is centered on money and work, on economic parity with men. Power feminism is limited to women who embraced careers with the same fire and left the starting gate at the same moment as men; it speaks to today's twentysomethings, who, according to a recent survey, want to be the success, not marry it.

Most women of my generation invested in family, not work; wives shape their lives to accommodate a husband's career, sacrificing their own ambitions and pulling up stakes to further his.

Even today, the attitudes I thought we'd left behind resurface like unquiet ghosts.

On a recent Kathy and Regis show, Jane Fonda allowed as how she'd given up her acting career to become a hearth-hugging wife. She added: "For the first time, I have a real marriage."

As for the new sexual forthrightness celebrated in Esquire—charmingly dubbed "do-me feminism"—I suspect it's limited to a fringe group of riot girls (young women involved with bands or fan magazines) and Drew Barrymore wannabes.

The women quoted appear to equate pleasure with playing bedroom commando, dictating in locker-room language a smorgasbord of sex acts—the point being to seize control.

New therapy aids trauma victims

By Don Oldenburg
The Washington Post

Eric Smith remembers the crack of gunfire clearly now, how the fusill de startled him from light sleep sometime after midnight.

This was Vietnam, north of Saigon, 1968. The phantoms of Vietnam ambushed him day after day as he teetered on the edge of suicide.

Three years of counseling, including a 90-day in-patient stint at a Veterans Administration hospital in 1987, helped him accept that Vietnam was ruling and ruining his life. Put nothing pried loose its stranglehold.

Then, attending a veterans' outreach program in 1988, Smith heard of a California psychologist who needed veterans willing to test a new and unusual therapeutic procedure.

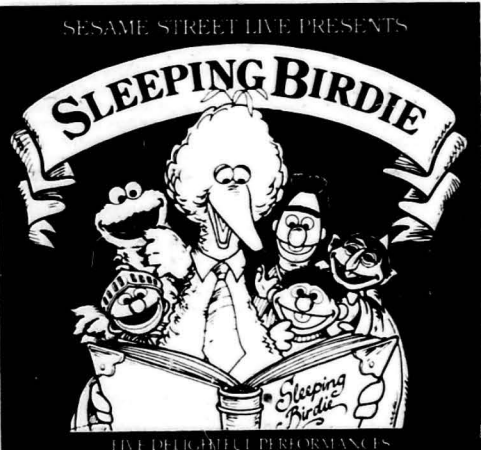

Apparently she was getting remarkable results treating post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), a long-term psychological reaction to trauma characterized by anxiety, depression, sleep disorders, difficulty in concentration, inappropriate guilt, fear and anger. PTSD most commonly has been diagnosed in war veterans who have had difficulty reassimilating into normal life. Survivors of other severe traumas also can suffer PTSD symptoms.

Smith fit the profile. He volunteered.

A week later, having reviewed his case, Francine Shapiro began using on Smith the experimental technique she had developed over the previous year.

Called Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing, it's a finger-waving therapy that appears futuristic—a biopsychological method that seems more suited to Spock aboard the Starship Enterprise than to 20th-century psychology.

Blues band plans to cool campus

By Matthew Lamacki
Entertainment Reporter

It is rare when a blues band becomes an overnight sensation, but Li'l Ed and the Blues Imperials have had the odds.

Li'l Ed Williams and his supporting cast will play from noon to 2:30 p.m. today in the Free Forum area on campus as part of Student Programming Council's "Dawg Days" of spring.

Angela Bridges, chairperson for SPC's Special Events Committee, said there also will be promotional giveaways at the concert.

"We will have a table set up where we will give away Polygram promotional tapes featuring up-and-coming musical groups," she said.

Li'l Ed and the Blues Imperials has been described by the Boston Globe as the world's number one house-rocking blues band.

The Chicago-based band rocketed to the top of blues music with the release of their debut album "Roughhousin'" in September 1986.

Mark Lipkin of Alligator Records said the band has become nationally known and has played internationally.

"The band does over 250 shows a year and has played in places like Europe and Japan," he said.

"Ed is a great talent with his unique 1950s style slide guitar and vocals," he said.

Li'l Ed and the Blues Imperials

"He is very charismatic and each live show is completely different."

Williams' first inspiration was his uncle, slide guitar legend J.B. Hutto. At age 15 Williams learned to play slide guitar, bass and drums under the tutelage of Hutto.

Williams brother, James "Pookie" Young, also learned to play from Hutto and together they make up the backbone of the band.

Williams and his brother received their big break when they caught the attention of Alligator Records president Bruce Iglauer.

"Li'l Ed helped support himself by working in a car wash before he was noticed," Lipkin said.

"Bruce Iglauer asked him to do a few cuts for him one night and he was so impressed that he offered the band a full album contract," he said.

Lipkin said Glauer loved the live show because it felt like a live show.

Li'l Ed and the Blues Imperials currently have three albums, their debut, 1989's "Chicken, Gravy & Biscuits" and the latest "What You See is What You Get."

The current version of the Blues Imperials features founding members Li'l Ed Williams and James "Pookie" Young as well as rhythm guitarist Mike Garrett, drummer Kelly Littleton and tenor saxist Eddie McKinley.

Senate committee questions, complains about CIA director

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—The chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee complained Thursday that CIA Director R. James Woolsey is fostering a "cult of protectiveness" at the agency that allows potential security threats to thrive and could impede reforms needed in the wake of the Aldrich H. Ames spy case. The criticism from Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., and similar views expressed by Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, re-presented an unusual slap at the head of an agency whose chief normally receives special deference on Capitol Hill.

DeConcini, at a breakfast session with reporters, said

Woolsey and lesser CIA officials have been so loathe to share sensitive internal information with the FBI that they should be compelled to do so by legislation.

The FBI, by law, is charged with conducting counterintelligence investigations — routing out U.S. "moles."

As investigations into the spy scandal continue, the criticisms demonstrate that Woolsey has not succeeded in erasing doubts about his handling of security problems, and that Congress will try to legislate reforms at the agency.

The administration is considering an executive order or a legislative proposal of its own to strengthen the FBI's role in handling counterintelligence failures at the CIA, the Los Angeles Times has learned.

Justice act narrowly retained

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—The House Thursday reaffirmed support for the highly controversial Racial Justice Act despite Republican charges that it would effectively nullify the death penalty or produce a racial quota system in executions.

Defenders of the provision, adopted as part of the comprehensive House crime bill, argued that it was a modest step intended to overcome a lingering racial bias in administering the death sentence.

A GOP attempt to remove it from the bill was defeated, 235-192, widening the margin considerably from a showdown Wednesday, when opponents lost by the narrowest of margins, a 212-212 tie vote.

Despite the retention of the Racial Justice Act in the House bill, however, both supporters and opponents predicted that it would not survive a Senate-House conference that will be convened to reconcile Senate and House versions of crime legislation.

The Senate bill did not include any such provision and the Senate rejected similar proposals last year.

Under the House provision, a person convicted of crime and sentenced to death could introduce statistical evidence to support allegations of racial discrimination in the use of the death penalty.

For example, a hypothetical defendant could ask a judge to consider evidence that 100 percent of the death sentences in a judicial circuit were imposed on black defendants, even though blacks make up only 10 percent of those convicted of murder.

"This isn't a black or white issue."

—Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla.

The trial judge then would decide whether the allegation had been proven, by comparing similar cases, and could either dismiss the claim or, upon a finding of racial bias in imposing the death penalty, lower the sentence to life imprisonment.

Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., chief GOP spokesman on the crime bill, argued that the provision would stop states from imposing the death penalty by placing an impossible burden on prosecutors to demonstrate an absence of racial discrimination in procedures for capital punishment.

"This isn't a black and white issue," McCollum said, noting that whites convicted of murder also might use the process to escape execution.

McCollum said the National District Attorneys' Association opposed the provision. He said the language included in the proposal by Rep. Don Edwards D-Calif., would allow death row prisoners to challenge the death sentence retroactively.

Edwards and Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, however, assured the House that they would drop the retroactivity provision in a coming Senate-House conference.

The fight over the Racial Justice Act brought Speaker Thomas S. Foley and Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., into the fray.

Democratic leaders wanted to keep the provision in the final bill, partly to persuade members of the Congressional Black Caucus to vote for the legislation despite their misgivings about its vast expansion of federal crimes subject to the death penalty.

Increased NATO bombing possible

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The United States must escalate bombing in Bosnia partly to boost its own credibility, Secretary of State Warren Christopher said Thursday, as President Clinton's support for broader use of NATO military power produced signs of anxiety and deep division in Congress.

Outlining U.S. interests in Bosnia before a skeptical Senate panel, Christopher went beyond the administration's previous rationale of preventing a broader European conflict, stemming the flow of Bosnian refugees and maintaining NATO's credibility.

Stronger military action is needed, he asserted, to "vindicate United States leadership" and maintain U.S. military credibility.

Christopher's comments raised the stakes of the new military initiative beyond the aim of settling the Bosnian conflict to a test of American will. Credibility as a rationale for escalation has been a matter of controversy since the Vietnam War, when deeper involvement was justified in part to show that U.S. commitments could be trusted.

NATO representatives are due to take up the proposal, first put forward by United Nations Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, at a meeting Friday of the North Atlantic Council in Brussels.

Clinton administration officials Thursday suggested that the council will authorize broader NATO airstrikes to protect the six "safe areas" set up last year for Bosnian Muslims by the U.N. Security Council.

But the council is likely first to consider immediate ways to stop the continuing Serb offensive against Gorazde, the officials said.

Support for increased NATO military action came Thursday from Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the influential chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, who said the United States and its allies must be willing to escalate airstrikes against the Serbs "all the way to Serbia if need be."

He also urged a selective lifting of an international arms embargo against the former Yugoslavia to equip the safe areas with anti-tank weapons.

Jews remember loss

Evidence of mass genocide overwhelming

Revisionists claim the Holocaust never took the lives of six million Jews, but Carbondale resident Robin Gross wants to know what happened to the 70 family members she never had a chance to meet, share their love or their heritage.

For Gross, director of B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, the issue is not one of debate — refuting the argument that it did not occur just gives it status to a claim where status is not due.

The Holocaust was a product of German leader Adolph Hitler's Third Reich during World War II, which began in 1939. During the war in, Hitler began a campaign known as the Final Solution — a plan to exterminate Jews in an effort to create an Aryan race.

After the war ended, six million Jews were murdered in various concentration camps with the largest being Auschwitz in Poland.

A movement known as Revisionism, which started in the early 1950s in France, preaches to those who listen that Jews were not exterminated in gas chambers and mass genocide never occurred — it is all fabricated information.

In an advertisement published April 7 in the Daily Egyptian, revisionist Bradley Smith, director of the Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust, challenged SIUC students to find proof of the existence of gas chambers.

Smith wrote, "The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum displays no convincing proof whatever of homicidal gassing chambers, and no proof that even one individual was 'gassed' in a German program of 'genocide.'"

"The question, then, is not 'Did the Holocaust happen?' The question is: If there were no gas chambers, what was the Holocaust?"

SIUC history professor Donald Detwiler co-edited a series called "The Holocaust," which, in detail, compiles German Third Reich documents of the extermination of Jews.

When debating whether there were gas chambers, Detwiler opens a volume with a documented conversation at Nuernberg, Germany during the post-war trials with Rudolph Hoess, the director of the Auschwitz concentration camp:

Q: "What methods were you going to use?"

Hoess: "I wanted to avoid, in any case, that the persons who came into Auschwitz should know ahead of time that they were going to be gassed."

Q: "How did you plan to avoid that?"

Hoess: "At the beginning, I had to improvise because I didn't have the necessary buildings. Signs were installed reading 'to delousing,' 'to disinfecting,' 'to bath,' 'to showers,' etc. In addition to that, inmates helped the new arrivals with undressing and gave them instructions as to where they were to place their clothing so that they would find them upon their return. It was done in order to avoid exciting them in anyway or to give them an inkling of actually what was going to happen."

Q: "And after the undressing, where did the victims go?"

Hoess: "They went into these rooms."

Q: "What rooms?"

Revisionist questions, 'What was the Holocaust?'

For 50 years, revisionist Bradley Smith believed horror stories about the Holocaust — the gas chambers, the mass genocide of Jews.

Then Smith said he was "thunderstruck" to discover there were questions he could be raise about the existence of gas chambers and in effect, ask "What was the Holocaust?"

Smith, now in his late 60s and director of the Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust, said he is not satisfied with what is considered the truth about the Holocaust.

According to Smith, Revisionism is a movement started by a World War II soldier named Paul Rassenier in the early 1950s in France. Rassenier was captured by the Germans and taken to the concentration camp Buchenwald, until he was released after the war.

Smith said Rassenier read horror stories in the newspapers about mass genocide and Jews who were gassed at concentration camps, but Rassenier said he was there and that was not true.

"I found out the revisionists were right, so I didn't want to be lied to anymore," Smith said.

David Cole, a 25-year-old Jewish revisionist from Long Beach, Calif., said revisionists have three beliefs about the Holocaust: the existence of gas chambers has not been proven; the concept of mass genocide is false because Jews were put into camps, but there was no pre-arranged plan to kill and the figure of six million Jews murdered is incorrect — 700,000 to 1 million were killed.

Smith called the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C. for proof that gas chambers existed, but said the museum had replicas constructed by artists.

"If you want a comic experience, try to have someone at the museum show documentary proof of gas chambers," he said.

Cole said he believed in gas chambers, but changed his mind in 1987 when he met a revisionist.

"I met him (the revisionist) by chance at an atheist meeting and he said something that made perfect sense to me," Cole said. "I was willing to be cynical about anything, but I got mad if my own sacred cow (Jewish belief) was gored — but I could gore someone else's."

Cole said he then researched Jewish and revisionist views of the Holocaust and discovered that much research is still needed on both sides

The picture is part of the prosecution exhibits of the United States of America. (Above) Windows of a Jewish shop in Friedrichstrasse, Berlin had been destroyed after the German Kristallnacht program of November 1938.

"I realized what I thought I knew about the Holocaust was picked up from T.V.," he said.

Cole said he began to get involved deeply in his love for revisionism.

"Revisionism is a fascinating mistress I can't give up," he said. "I don't apply faith in my life and revisionism is based on pure, objective reality — brick and mortar."

Smith said he does not understand why people, especially Jews, are so against open debate of the Holocaust.

"Fear is a strange phenomenon," he said. "The Holocaust story should be open to free inquiry like any other history."

Smith said the Holocaust is the product of black propaganda started by the Soviet Union after the war to make monsters out of the Germans.

Many countries found propaganda useful to promote their own causes, Smith said.

The United States used it to evade its own crime against humanity, the Soviet Union used it as an excuse to occupy Europe's eastern block and Jews used it in their conquest to occupy Palestine, he said.

Smith said he does not deny that the Jews

Professor receives public administration award

By Tina McIlrath
General Assignment Reporter

Ervin

Challenging students to step into the shoes of a public administrator is the key to success for the Masters of Public Administration Distinguished Teacher Award recipient.

Osbin Ervin, a 20-year political science associate professor for the public administration program, was the first person to receive the award, which was voted on by students and established by the Public Administration Student Organization.

Chris Basler, a graduate student in public administration and president of the organization, said the criteria judged teaching excellence, service to the MPA program, and the professional development of MPA students.

"(The award) allows MPA students the opportunity to award faculty who have distinguished themselves in the classroom," Basler said.

As an associate professor of Budgeting and Financial Administration and Municipal Administration, Ervin said he focuses on helping students think critically and solve problems.

"I try to focus on the theory and skills important to the problems they will face as public administrators," Ervin said.

Sheri Olson, a recipient of the organization's student scholarship, said Ervin was one of the founding members of the MPA program and is a wonderful teacher.

"He goes above and beyond what the text tells us about local government," Olson said.

Ervin said he believes the key to good teaching is in his field detailed theory-practice integration.

Student reports become a forum for discussion on everyday issues that public administrators must face.

"He brings in examples of his budgets which brings a real sense of reality and practicality to my budgeting class," Olson said.

Monica Fischer, a graduate assistant for Ervin in public administration, said the students had difficulty choosing the best faculty member. But, Ervin stood out as a leader in the department, she said. "He's an expert," Fischer said. "He's very enthusiastic and makes his students very enthusiastic about public administration."

Marvin Nowicki, a doctoral student in political science and former student of Ervin, said he believes Ervin's role in the community helps him in the classroom.

Ervin serves as executive director of the Southern Illinois Mayor's Association, an organization of mayors from 34 counties. He said his students are able to participate in some of the meetings and ask questions.

"The Mayor's Council brings me into frequent contact with local government administrators," Ervin said. "It also gives our students opportunities to get contacts and internships." Ervin said he also serves as director of the Institute of Local Government Affairs, an organization sponsored by SIUC and the Illinois State Comptroller's Office.

Local governments provide data and examples for Ervin to research. He then issues reports to governments and libraries throughout the state.

"He's not just a professor," Fischer said. "He knows what it's like to practice in the field."

Nowicki said that Ervin is an excellent teacher who is very open and very helpful to his students. "He's a strong asset to the program and the University," Nowicki said. "It doesn't surprise me that he was chosen as the first recipient of the teacher's award."

Thousands of premature deaths could be prevented by ban—EPA

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—A nationwide ban on smoking in most public buildings could save $39 billion to $72 billion and prevent as many as 12,900 premature deaths annually, the Environmental Protection Agency has concluded in a new study.

The results were announced Thursday by EPA Administrator Carol M. Browner and Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., who has sponsored a bill requiring virtually all non-residential buildings—including offices, schools, stores, theaters, restaurants, hotels and bars—to establish smoking areas with separate ventilation or force smokers outside.

Waxman had requested that the agency perform a cost-benefit analysis of the plan.

The report said most of the estimated savings would come from reduced illness and death related to secondhand smoke, particularly in children, the study found. (Another EPA study released in January 1993 classified "environmental tobacco smoke" as a dangerous carcinogen responsible for some 3,000 deaths from lung cancer each year.)

Other presumed savings would come from fewer fires and less-costly building maintenance.

The study set the costs of the national "smoke-out" at $5.5 billion annually, which includes the costs of enforcement and of constructing smoking facilities in the 10 to 20 percent of buildings expected to do so.

"If we care about saving lives or protecting children or even saving money, the Smoke-Free Environment Act makes good sense," Waxman said in an interview.

"The numbers indicate that there's not been anything close to this cost-benefit ratio in any proposal that we've seen in a long, long time—in the environmental or health area."

Browner said, "Cigarettes don't (just) kill people who smoke. They also kill people who choose not to smoke."

Critics of the EPA's original report on secondhand smoke were not impressed with the latest study. Thomas Lauria of the Tobacco Institute called the EPA assumptions "baseless."

Lauria said children are not allowed into many places where Waxman's bill would ban smoking, such as bars and casinos. "Many are exposed at home," he said, "and that's the one place (the Waxman bill) doesn't ban."

Matthew Hoffman, a policy analyst at the Washington-based Competitive Enterprise Institute, said, "You can't put a price on individual liberty."

That is precisely what is diminished in a national smoking ban."

The principal author of the EPA study, economist David H. Mudarri of the agency's Indoor Air Division, said his analysis—which focused on economic impact—was not as thorough on health benefits as a formal risk assessment might have been.

Mudarri said he tried to "err in speculation wherever possible: "When judgments had to be made, I always erred on the side of being conservative."

For example, the American Heart Association estimates 35,000 to 40,000 deaths from heart disease per year are due to secondhand smoke.

Mudarri chose the low end of that range for the upper range of his own estimate, and then cut the figure again to reflect the fact that 27 percent of exposure to secondhand smoke is believed to occur in the home.

Similarly, Browner said in an interview, the report did not take into account any health or economic benefits for people who already smoke, because researchers could not figure out how to quantify the cost and inconvenience to smokers of complying with the law.

"If we couldn't count the costs, we didn't think we should count the benefits," Browner said.

Such caution prompted a prominent anti-smoking activist to claim that the EPA was "erring on the conservative—if not very conservative" side.

John Banzhaf, executive director of the anti-smoking group Action on Smoking and Health, said the agency should have also estimated the number of smokers who would decide to quit if the new law passed and extrapolate the health savings from that.

Banzhaf estimates that health-care costs associated with smoking top $100 billion each year.

At a press conference with Browner, Waxman said his bill would prevent 27,000 operations on children to remove tonsils and adenoids, 144,000 operations to insert tubes in the ears of small children to relieve ear problems, more than 2.5 million childhood ear infections, more than 100,000 instances where childhood asthma is exacerbated and 1,400 new asthma cases annually.

But those estimates are derived by assuming that there are no smoking restrictions in effect now. In fact, the EPA study points out, some 23 percent of the population is already covered by smoking restrictions comparable to the provisions of Waxman's bill.

Taking a 23 percent "baseline" into account would mean lower estimated gains for children.

Nonetheless, Waxman said, "this report indicates there is an enormous benefit at a relatively minimal cost."

Neo-Woodstock ready to go

Newsday

It's official: Woodstock has come full circle.

Festival promoters have announced plans to hold Woodstock 94 on the site they originally wanted for the legendary 1969 concert.

According to music industry sources, the unconfirmed artists' lineup includes Soundgarden, Aerosmith, Guns N' Roses, Nine Inch Nails, Neil Young, Public Enemy, Metallica, Rollins Band, Peter Dinklage, Red Hot Chili Peppers, Alice in Chains, Crosby, Stills and Nash, Cypress Hill, Van Halen, the Spin Doctors and possibly Pearl Jam.

Woodstock 94 will take place at Winston's farm in Saugerties, N.Y., Aug. 13-14, the 25th anniversary of the Woodstock Music and Art fair. The original festival was held at Yasgur's farm in Bethel, 60 miles southeast.

It is expected that the 250,000 tickets will cost $125 apiece for the weekend, and will be sold by lottery and through trip pack-

Childrens' book teaches touch

Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK—For a lot of new parents, the first sign of intelligent life comes when the baby—heretofore a drooling blob—lifts its teeny-weeny finger and lightly touches a furry bunny. (As in: "Judy can pat the bunny. Now Ayoo @ pat the bunny.") Yesssssss! Mom and Dad quietly cheer. Little Precious can @ do something other than eat, poop and sleep.

And what if Little Precious doesn't? More than a few parents have panicked after their 10th suggestion to "Pat the damn bunny!" goes unheeded.

Is it too early to hire a tutor for bunny patting?

This may seem neurotic, but this isn't just any book. After more than 50 years in print, "Pat the Bunny" continues to be an important development touchstone, so to speak, that babies are people too.

Whole generations have cooed as they imitated characters Paul and Judy lifting a piece of blue cloth in a game of peekaboo, peering into a miniature mirror, touching Daddy's scratchy beard (actually a piece of sandpaper) and putting a finger through Mommy's (cardboard) ring.

With 200,024 copies sold last year, "Pat the Bunny" remains a bestseller—second only in all-time sales to "The Tale of Peter Rabbit." Which may have philosophers pondering: What's with rabbits? But really, who cares?

According to a press release from Golden Books, which publishes the perennial "Pat," 2,266 yards of white acrylic fur for the bunny—enough fur to coat and warm about 11 miles of the Alaskan landscape—is used every year in "Pat the Bunny" books.

"Pat the Bunny" has been such a huge success that it has inspired not only imitators but a whole "pat" genre of touch-and-feel books.

The style has been so enduringly popular that '90s publicists have been known to refer to the late Dorothy Kunhardt, author of "Pat the Bunny," as the originator of the "interactive children's book."

Kunhardt, who died in 1979, certainly would have gotten a laugh out of that one, says her daughter, Edith Kunhardt, author of "Pat the Cat," "Pat the Puppy" and 60 other non-pat children's books.

"The genius of 'Pat the Bunny' is that it allows babies to do what they are just discovering they can do—touch, smell, look," says Kunhardt, 57. "I'm not sure it's any more complicated than that."

Dorothy Kunhardt began writing children's books to support her family after her husband lost his job during the Depression. Her first big hit was 1934's "Junket Is Nice," with crazy drawings of people guessing what an old man was eating out of a bowl. It sold a million copies in its first year.

In 1940, Kunhardt wrote a book for her baby Edith, the youngest of her four children. She took paper and pencils and drew the simple figures of Paul and Judy and the itinerant bunny.

In the first edition, Judy could make her doll's ball squeak; in the second edition, Judy could shake Mommy's button box ("Rattle rattle go the buttons"). By the third edition, the squeaker and the buttons were gone and the mirror and flowers had appeared.

Edith Kunhardt had no intention of becoming an author herself—although she was married until 1971 to the son of Lavina Davis, a well-known children's book writer and author of "Hobbyhorse Hill." After her divorce, Kunhardt worked as an editor at Golden Books.

"I considered Mother the writer," she says. "I was the editor."

After writing 20 books for different publishers, Golden Books approached her in 1984 to write a sequel to "Pat the Bunny." At first, she resisted.

Christian group wins praise

Hawaii.

For four days, they blurt out secrets, slug pillows while yelling "Mama, Mama, Mama," and pretend to be aboard a sinking cruise ship that has only one life raft.

They also pray, listen to music from "Beverly Hills, 90210" and—occasionally—claim to hear whisperings from God. By the time it's over, many say that they've never felt closer to Jesus or to other people, and that their lives have been dramatically changed.

The program is called Momentus, a $500 jump-start for the spirit that is raising eyebrows among charismatic and evangelical Christians in California, Texas and Started in a church gymnasium, Momentus is an unusual mix of conservative Christianity and rough-and-tumble psychological techniques. In it, people confess sins, wrestle with past hurts and role play in an attempt to better understand themselves and their relationship to God.

So far, the seminar has won praise from a former co-host of Pat Robertson's "700 Club" TV show, dozens of pastors, a Nicaraguan Contra general and the man who ran the Border Patrol's western headquarters under President Reagan.

But it also has split one church, created a stir at others and come under question for its confrontational approach.

Abstinence taught in class

Sex responsibility forgotten, ignored; morality debated

By Michael Gottlieb
Los Angeles Times

The school board in Vista, Calif., a small town north of San Diego, has adopted a new curriculum on sexual values.

Called Sex Respect, it teaches abstinence and restricts information about birth control, masturbation, abortion and sexually transmitted disease.

It will be implemented this summer in Grade 7, and the board will vote April 21 on whether to extend it through Grade 11.

To their credit, those who advocate this proposed sex-education curriculum believe that human sexuality is a serious issue for educators.

The problem is, Sex Respect does not address the many consequences and responsibilities that come with an active sex life and so leaves our youth woefully uninformed.

The theme of the new curriculum is that men and women should remain chaste before they marry, that sexual relations in any other context are immoral.

As a rabbi and teacher who has worked with countless young people, I feel qualified to offer a different view:

Premarital sex between consenting individuals is not immoral; premarital sex is unholly.

The difference between the two is significant. I do not want people who engage in premarital sex to think that they are committing a grave sin.

The Hebrew Bible is virtually silent on this issue, but it certainly does not label premarital sex a sin.

You will not find explicit reference to relations between unmarried individuals who engage in sex among the prohibitions of the Bible. Sexuality becomes a moral issue when trickery or deceit is employed. Incest, rape and acquaintance rape are indeed sinful. I recoil when a person is described as "moral" because of their chastity.

A far more significant question would ask if that person cheats on income taxes or gossips maliciously or acts in other ways with total disregard for fellow human beings.

At our most basic level, we humans are animals; we have animal impulses and drives.

We communicate, we eat, we relieve ourselves, we tire, we sleep—and we have sex.

Ultimately, what makes us human is our ability to transcend our animal composition. What makes us human is our ability to channel and curb our God-given impulses in such a way that elevates the human spirit.

Sexuality is one in a series of healthy life forces.

When we eat with dignity, when we communicate to each other with respect, when we acknowledge the normal healthy function of our bodies, our animalistic foundation transforms itself and becomes human.

From a religious perspective, sex becomes holy exclusively in the context of marriage.

That is something radically different than labeling it immoral when it is performed out of wedlock.

Abstinence until marriage is an ideal and the basic approach to sexuality that I would advocate as a rabbi.

It is not only by far the best form of birth control, it elevates sexuality and makes it sacred.

But honestly, do we provide a service to the generation growing up in the 1990s when we withhold from them explanation about other forms of birth control or open discussion of masturbation, abortion and sexually transmitted diseases?

What is the motivating force behind the advocates of Sex

Respect? I am curious to know if the issue is age or the sexual act itself rendered outside the context of marriage.

I think we can agree that 13-year-olds who engage in sexual intimacy leave us both pained and bewildered.

But are we faced by the same dilemma when 21-year-olds have a premarital affair?

If we say the issue is age, the inference is that all premarital sexual encounters are equally wrong.

Once we agree to the possibility that some premarital activity is not "sinful," the issue becomes one of moderation and balance.

We render a terrible disservice to our children by withholding vital information on sexuality from them. Concerned adults must push for a curriculum that teaches and empowers adolescent boys and girls, in an age-appropriate way, so they may choose a sex ethic wisely.

Everything in life comes with trade-offs.

By not teaching our children all they need to know about sexuality, in the controlled environment of the classroom, they will learn about sex for themselves in an environment that may be less than ideal, at a time in history when the stakes are great.

Be it through television and movies or magazines, or through uneducated, unprepared encounters on their own, our youth will happen upon expressions of human sexuality.

Therein lies the deficiency of the Sex Respect curriculum. It is inevitable that from the onset of puberty, human beings will discover their own sexuality.

So, while we still play an important role in the development of our children, why not teach them about sex in an open, sensitive way?

Given the gravity of the matter, to do otherwise is both immoral and sinful.

Jackson, Jeffers, Perry and Williamson Counties.

The Illinois Environmental Protection Agency defines municipal waste as "garbage, general household, institutional and commercial waste, industrial lunchroom or office waste, landscape waste and construction or demolition debris."

Kirkikis said the report makes projections for the waste generated in the future and to make these projections increases in population and employment must be taken into consideration.

The study suggests the population of the region will grow from 217,551 in 1992 to 225,866 in 2015. Employment may increase from 79,930 in 1992 to 82,590 in 2015.

In 1992, the region generated an estimated 178,528 tons of municipal waste. Of this amount, 167,459 tons were landfilled, 10,354 tons (six percent) were recycled or composted and 715 tons were incinerated, Kirkikis said.

The state requires a plan that projects 25 percent of generated waste be recycled.

"The amount we are recycling is pitiful to what it should be," Kirkikis said.

Although, the region is within the recycling range of other rural areas with a population under 60,000, he said.

In Jackson County, 4.48 pounds of waste is generated per individual per day and four ounces per capita per day is recycled. To meet state standards the County needs to recycle one pound per capita per day, Kirkikis said.

Phase II planning will be done primarily by consultants, with experience and success in completing approved plans in other areas of the state. However, the commission will create advisory committees comprised of elected officials, landfill operators and the public to help with the decisions made.

Phase II will address the economic issues of waste management, including cost of volume reduction, recycling methods, incineration, transporting waste and alternatives, Kirkikis said.

Public hearings are scheduled at the following locations at 7 p.m.: April 25, Municipal Building West, 200 Potomac Blvd., Mt. Vernon; April 26, West Frankfort City Hall, 201 East Nolan; April 27, Herrin City Hall, 300 North Park; and April 28, Pinckneyville City Hall, 104 South Walnut.

people. "People think that because you have a disability it's contagious," Demby said. "But I never heard of a anybody catching anything from an amputee."

In addition to attitude people also have to stop using negative words when describing the disabled, Demby said.

"We are not handicapped or crippled, we are physically challenged people who can live normal lives," Demby said. "No matter what profession you in do your best and when you reach the top pull someone up with you."

Talking to an audience of primarily rehabilitation students and faculty, Demby said people in the field are vital.

"People don't rehabilitate us they give us a second chance at life," Demby said.

Another step to bridging the gap between people is also to have architectural designs in place for all people. Most of the places in this country do not have access for disabled people.

Carl Flowers, program manager for the region five continuing education program, he was a perfect speaker to give the Renzaglia lecture because the rehabilitation institute is concerned with helping people with disabilities.

"Bill Demby shows a person can be very productive living with a disability," Flowers said.

The lecture was in conjunction with the rehabilitation honors program and the 50th anniversary of the College of Education.

Becker said students need to maximize every day and finish their education.

"This tells employers, I accomplished something, I achieved my goal," Becker said.

After graduating with a bachelor's degree in sales management from SIUC's College of Communication and Fine Arts in 1989, Wils worked as an account executive for KREX Radio in Colorado.

"The key to success in broadcast is to go with the punches," Wilson said.

By keeping his options open, within 5 years he obtained a position in New York City which allows him to participate in the evolution of telecommunications.

"If your waiting for that job opportunity to come to you, it's not going to happen," Wilson said.

Tracy Powell, a Radio-Television major who attended the conference, said it was helpful to see someone successful and find out about their experiences in the job market.

"This week is like a free job fair with no travel," he said.

Second teen sentenced to caning in Singapore spray-painting case

Los Angeles Times

SINGAPORE—As the Singapore government deliberated the fate of an American youth sentenced to a flogging for vandalism, a Hong Kong teen-ager was sentenced Thursday to twice the punishment: 12 strokes of a rattan cane, for his role in the spray-painting case.

Shu Chi Ho, a 17-year-old 10th grader, was also sentenced to eight months in jail and a $967 fine after being convicted of four counts of vandalism.

His lawyer said he would appeal.

An international controversy erupted when the American, Michael Fay of Dayton, Ohio, was sentenced last month to six strokes of the cane and four months in jail in the vandalism case.

Fay received the lesser sentence in a plea bargain with prosecutors in which 56 charges were consolidated into two counts of vandalism, two counts of mischief and one count of possessing stolen property.

Shu, on the other hand, proclaimed his innocence and went to trial.

The caning is carried out by a prison official trained in martial arts and often induces shock. It can cause permanent scarring.

President Clinton has termed the sentence given Fay as "extreme" and the State Department filed a formal diplomatic protest, saying while Fay will be permanently scarred by the caning, the cars were not permanently damaged.

Fay appealed his caning sentence, but the high court turned him down March 31.

On Wednesday, he petitioned President Ong Teng Cheong for clemency.

A spokeswoman for the president said Thursday that no decision had been reached on the issue.

The U.S. government and others maintain that the teen-agers were singled out for special treatment because the vandalism statute, which was enacted in the 1960s to combat political graffiti on public buildings, never before has been used in cases of spray painting private cars.

The Ministry of Home Affairs said Tuesday that such arguments were "absurd."

However, a photograph appeared in the government-controlled Straits Times newspaper Thursday showing a newly spray-painted car.

It quoted a police as saying that the new case had been classified as mischief, a lesser offense than vandalism which has no provisions for caning.

"I'm in a state of shock. This is just unbelievable," said Randy Chan, Fay's mother. "It proves a big point, that this has been unfair. (The caning) is not what's normally done here."

The Hong Kong teen-ager was at the center of the vandalism case because he was among the first two youngsters arrested by police, who had been on a stakeout for vandals. He was with the son of a Thai diplomat, who had diplomatic immunity and was released.

Shu gave police the names of eight other youths, who were later arrested at their high schools.

They included Fay, two Malaysians, and another American, who is going to court next week.

Shu maintained at his trial that his confession had been coerced by policemen who had punched and slapped him. Fay has made similar charges in a letter to his father in Dayton.

Shu's parents are celebrities in Singapore: His father, Shu Chung On, is the drama director for the state-run Singapore Broadcasting Corp. and his mother a well-known actress.

The father provided his son with an alibi, but Judge F.G. Remedios said he found that the "defense is untrue." He said the offenses were committed over two weekends and "obviously committed willfully."

Remedios said he hoped that the jail sentence would help Shu "turn away from crime and re-enter the mainstream of life."

Atlanta changes tune about gays

Los Angeles Times

ATLANTA—In a quest for a little 1996 Olympic gold a Georgia county whose officials last year passed a resolution condemning homosexuality decided Wednesday that gays aren't so bad after all.

Cobb County commissioners did not rescind the earlier resolution — that will "never" happen, the commission chairman vowed — but a proclamation issued Wednesday welcomes everyone to the county regardless of sexual orientation and assures gays that they will not be discriminated against.

The proclamation was approved in an effort to keep the organization that is planning the 1996 Olympic Games from yanking the preliminaries for a volleyball competition and several Olympic training sites out of the conservative county, which is just north of Atlanta.

"I'm delighted to see some progress being made" on the issue, said Billy Payne, president and chief executive officer of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games.

He added, however, that the committee would continue to study whether the events could be moved without causing too much inconvenience to the athletes.

"We're studying all of the ramifications," he said, adding: "I hope that reasonable folks are going to reach reasonable conclusions."

County commissioners caused a firestorm of protest last July when they passed a resolution condemning the "homosexual lifestyle" and cut off all county funding to the arts in response to local production of a play, "Lips Together, Teeth Apart," that contains references to homosexuality.

To pressure the county to rescind the resolution, gay activists began targeting Olympic organizers. After at first steadfastly refusing to become enmeshed in local controversies, Olympic officials — a long with local business people who fear losing the financial windfall Olympic venues will bring — recently began urging Cobb County officials to address the issue.

Western 'Bad Girls' receive boot at box office

By Jack Mathews
Newsday

Deep in the cinematic trash bins of my mind, there is the faded recollection of a Western movie once made with an all-midget cast. With time and luck, the memory of Jonathan Kaplan's "Bad Girls," the adventures of four "parlor girls" in 19th-century Texas, may get lost in there, too.

In the meantime, the images are painfully sharp. There's Drew Barrymore in chaps, with a cigarette dangling from her lips. Andie MacDowell and Mary Stuart Masterson sitting tall in the saddle. Madeleine Stowe glaring at a whiskey-soaked cowboy, daring him to go for his gun and "die like a man."

"Bad Girls," a sort of "Wild Bunch" with pantaloons, is about the silliest thing a Hollywood studio has done in a while.

Cowgirls, women dubbed as 'honky-tonk whores'

The movie combines two commercial trends—the revived Western and the women-on-the-run outlaw film (a la "Thelma & Louise")—and could put an end to both of them right here.

This might have worked as a comedy, a "Blazing Saddles" parody of the mythic Westerns of Sam Peckinpah, John Ford and Sergio Leone. But Kaplan, who took over for Tamra Davis and gets sole blame, is in dead earnest.

Not necessarily to match the feminist statement of his unflinchingly honest "The Accused" a few years back, though the abuse of women is a central theme, but at least to make a conventional Western.

"Bad Girls" has every cliché known to the genre. Backlit silhouettes on the range, runaway wagons, jail breaks, blistering shootouts, sweeping orchestral accompaniment.

The only difference is that the heroes are heroines, honky-tonk whores who take no guff from no man, and who can ride and shoot with the best of them.

The script, by Ken Friedman and Yolande Finch, tells what happens to the four women after Cody Zamara (Stowe) kills a drunk roughing up Anita Crown (Masterson) in their Colorado saloon brothel, and all four ride out of town with a posse and a pair of Pinkerton detectives on their trail.

That night, over a meal of barbecued rattlesnake, they decide to throw in together and start a new life.

They'll go to Texas to pick up the money Cody has been saving in a bank there, then to Oregon to build a sawmill on land left to Anita by her late husband.

"We sold our bodies," Anita says. "We might as well sell some wood."

But while drawing out her money in that Texas bank, Cody runs into homicidal outlaw Kid Jarrett (James Russo), a bitter ex-lover, and it is soon her gang against his. Bet on the babes.

Stowe, despite having some of the worst lines in the movie, plays Cody with admirable sincerity, and is responsible for what few interesting moments there are.

It takes courage for a woman to imitate John Wayne and Clint Eastwood simultaneously, and Stowe is up to it.

Barrymore, her hair a golden blond, acts as if she were playing charades at a party in Malibu (dress: Western casual), and MacDowell, playing a phony New Orleans belle hiding a mundane past, looks as if she'd like to find a place to hide herself.

The men, not surprisingly, come off even worse. Russo is standard-issue Western villain, a cold-blooded killer aching for a painful end. James LeGros, the shy rancher smitten with MacDowell, and Dermot Mulroney, the mysterious stranger smitten with Stowe, barely stand out from the sagebrush.

Hoess: "These chambers. At first there were two old farms before the crematoriums were built. They were made airtight. The windows were shut by cement and air proof doors were constructed and in every chamber there was a small hole through which the gas was blown in."

David Gehrig, member of the Springfield Jewish Federation, said evidence of the Holocaust is so overwhelming, it cannot be refuted.

"The weakest point of the Revisionist argument is that to pull it off (faking the Holocaust), you would need a national conspiracy," Gehrig said. "Testimonies of survivors, trials (Nuremberg), newspaper, newspapers, everything would have to be fabricated."

Anti-Semitism, hate toward Jews, has two common threads: Jews are greedy and there is a Jewish conspiracy to fabricate the Holocaust, he said.

Gehrig said Smith's message comes under the guise of anti-Semitism and hate and attracts ignorant people.

"It (Smith's argument) appeals to people who can't think for themselves for more than 30 seconds at a time," he said. "Anyone who listens for 31 seconds at what Smith has to say will laugh at his ridiculous claims."

"Stupidity comes in different flavors and anti-Semitism is one of them."

Detwiler said part of the potency of the Revisionist message is that it does use some facts, such as a plan to export the Jews to an island off the coast of Africa called Madagascar.

However, the Nazis abandoned the plan and instead raised the Jewish Question as to what to do with the Jews, Detwiler said.

The Final Solution, or the mass genocide of Jews, was the answer.

Smith preaches open debate, a freedom Gehrig believes in strongly, he said.

"The ideas of open debate is very dear to me — that's what college is all about," Gehrig said. "But in a debate, both sides are expected to play fair intellectually and Smith does not."

SIUC law professor Leonard Gross said debating with revisionists is a waste of time because there are not two sides to the issue — the Holocaust happened.

"They're a lunatic fringe group," he said. "Why try to prove anything to bigots? I don't waste my time trying to prove anything to them."

Gross said he is worried about people who are uneducated about the history of the Holocaust because they might be taken in by the revisionist message.

"It concerns me that some people don't know what's going on and accept at face value what is said (by revisionists)," he said.

Rabbi Robert Stemberg, director of the St. Louis Center for Holocaust Studies, said it is necessary to make correct education about the Holocaust available to combat anti-Semitic groups' false claims.

"We have to teach correct history," Stemberg said. "It is important to remember events to understand patterns in history to better human conditions — and make sure this never happens again, to anyone."

Gehrig said anti-Semitism has existed forever and probably always will.

"There is a string of hate — Hitler was one in the string, Smith is another and there will be more," he said. "Hitler didn't get us, Smith won't, no one will."

were put through a terrible ordeal, but he does not believe in the gas chambers or genocide.

"Jews went through a terrible catastrophe — it's seen in the photographic exhibits," he said. "But everyone suffered a catastrophe during World War II and it's ridiculous to recall the suffering of only one group."

Smith said he is not an anti-semitist — yet.

"I get death threats from people with Yiddish accents, threats of killing my wife and children," he said. "So you ask me if I'm anti-semitic and I tell you not yet."

Hip prognosis puts Jets' linebacker in upbeat mood on NFL draft week

Newsdays

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y.—It's pre-draft week in the National Football League, and Marvin Jones is playing the waiting game again. This time, the game is longer and the stakes are greater, but he's not worried about the outcome. Not like last year, which he described as "pure hell."

Even though he was regarded as the top defensive player in the 1993 draft, Jones was nervous as the big day approached. "I was sweating bullets," said the middle linebacker, whose uneasiness faded the moment he was chosen by the New York Jets, fourth overall.

These days, Jones is waiting for his fractured hip to heal, which, by rights, should cause him to sweat more than bullets. Grenades, maybe.

After all, this was a serious injury, one that dredged up comparisons to the one that forced Bo Jackson out of football.

Concerned? Not Jones. He promised to be ready for the 1994 season, as if nothing happened.

"To be perfectly honest, I wasn't really worried," Jones said the other day at Weeb Ewbank Hall. "What was there to worry about?"

Your career, maybe? "It's all part of the game," he said. "Hell, I've probably hurt 10 or 15 people, so one hurt against 10 or 15 ain't that bad."

He smiled. Jones has remained upbeat from the moment of the injury, and now there's plenty of evidence to support his optimism.

Club doctors, encouraged by his progress in rehabilitation, are predicting a full recovery.

they and Faulk are drafted—probably in the first four or five picks—finding primary ballhandlers will become a much more inexact science.

After Faulk, the most highly prized runner might be Florida State fullback William Floyd, a powerful player whose chief drawback may be that he is too much of a competitor. Floyd is also a junior.

Other running backs who could be drafted in the first three rounds include LeShon Johnson of Northern Illinois, Arizona State's Mario Bates, Tennessee's Charlie Garner, Florida's Errict Rhett and Texas A&M's Greg Hill.

Texas Tech's Byron Morris and Auburn's James Bostic, both fullbacks, are also top prospects.

There is a huge drop from Shuler and Dilfer in quarterback talent, as there was a year ago when the New England Patriots picked Drew Bledsoe first and the Seattle Seahawks chose Rick Mirer second. The next quarterback drafted was Billy Joe Hobert by the Los Angeles Raiders with the second pick of the third round.

BC's Glenn Foley, Idaho's Doug Nussmeier, Tulsa's Gus Frerotte and Michigan State's Jim Miller are the best of the rest, but not first-round material.

Somebody will take a chance on Charlie Ward, who quarterbacked the Florida State football and basketball teams.

Ward, who won the Heisman Trophy, has not decided whether he will play pro basketball or football.

the day will not see a whole lot of different looks from the Dawgs, as Watson said scouts from opposing teams will almost assuredly be present.

"What we show in terms of offense and defense will be pretty generic," Watson said. "It's just another chance for our kids to line-up and play some football."

Despite the short time he has been with the program, Watson said he can already see improvements.

"A fan told me he saw more excitement in a two hour practice than he had seen for the last five years," he said. "Now I don't know if that's entirely true, but I do think fans who come out will notice a difference. We still have a long way to go though."

The scrimmage is slated to begin at noon, with the festival taking place immediately after.

win for SIUC after going seven innings. The senior hurler from Woodridge gave up eight earned runs off ten hits, while walking and striking out three.

Adams and Evans each pitched an inning of shut-out baseball, striking out Austin Peay hitters for five of the final six outs of the game.

Schlusser finished the game with eight RBI's, which tied the SIUC record set by former players Barry O'Sullivan and Steve Shartzer.

The Salukis will now head back into Missouri Valley Conference action against Bradley as the Dawgs and Braves are set for a three-game series this weekend at Abe Martin Field.

Bradley boasts the MVC's third-best hitting attack and second-best fielding percentage, but ranks last in the pitching department. Saluki baseball diehards who plan on attending this weekend's series will have a chance to see a new face in the third base coaching box for SIUC.

Associate head coach Ken Henderson will take over the third base coaching responsibilities from Riggleson, who is heading to Bethel College at the conclusion of the 1994 campaign.

The series with Bradley will see one of the hottest Valley hitters, SIUC's Tim Kratochvil, take on the shaky pitching of the Braves.

Kratochvil is eighth in the MVC in hitting with a .423 average.

Bradley's pitching corps ranks last in the league, but the BU staff has been bolstered by solid performances from some young players, most notably by freshman Doug Robertson, whose six victories lead the team. Fellow freshman Kevin Priebe has a 4-3 record and a shining 2.97 mark.

The Braves and Dawgs get underway with a doubleheader on Saturday at noon, and will complete the series with a 1 p.m. start on Sunday.

performers such as Cathy Kershaw and Lecann Conway-Reed, as well as LaTonya Morrison in the 100 and 400 hurdles.

But his prognosis for solid showings does not end there, as DeNoon said good weather and a tuned-up team should result in a lot of positives.

"If we have nice weather I would say that 50% of the team could set personal bests," he said. "I really think it will be a good strong meet for us."

With the season winding to a close, DeNoon said the team has responded well to the outdoor season.

"I think we're better suited to the outdoors because of our depth," DeNoon said. "We're taking a lot of seconds and thirds within the conference and that's good because we can still pick up some points."

While DeNoon said he always has his sights set on the MVC Championships, he also said some individuals on the team have the talent to look beyond that plateau.

"We have some kids with the potential to go to the national level," he said.

The men's track team will be at the Tyson Invitational this weekend in Fayetteville, Ark.

Salukis' offensive power takes pair

Softball team collects 28 hits, Meier wins both, goes to 12-4

By Chris Walker
Sports Reporter

Drake could not beat SIUC, Indiana State could not, and SIUE learned that they could not.

The SIUC softball team stretched their winning streak to six games yesterday with two victories over SIUE. Once again the Salukis bats were alive as they scored 18 runs while banging out 28 hits. And once again Taria Meier was unbeatable on the mound as she came away with both victories.

In the first contest between the two clubs, the Salukis edged the Cougars 9-8.

Trailing 2-1 after two innings, the Salukis exploded for five runs in the bottom of the third as they sent 11 batters to the plate.

Jami Koss started off the fifth with a single and a stolen base. Becky Lis and Jamie Schutteck followed with rbi doubles to give the Salukis the lead. Later in the inning with two outs, Christine Knotts and Mandy Miller added rbi singles to make it a 5-2 game. Maura Hasenstab was walked with the bases loaded to give the Salukis a 6-2 edge which they were unable to keep.

The Cougars knocked around

SIUC starter Buffy Blust for four runs in the fifth to tie the game at five apiece. The Salukis charged back in the sixth on a two-run single by Laurie Wilson to make it an 8-6 game, but again were unable to hold the lead as they allowed SIUE to tie it up in the top of the seventh.

In the seventh, Jenny Klotz walked and Lis singled to put runners on first and second. Meier bunted the runners over, but Pecoraro popped out. The situation was left up to Knotts, who was celebrating her 20th birthday. She delivered by ripping a ball down the left-field line to score pinch-runner Kathryn Hargraves with the winning run.

Meier picked up the victory with 2/3 of an inning of relief work.

In game two, the Salukis jumped ahead early with a four-run outburst in the first.

Koss singled to start things and was bunted over to second. Lis walked and proceeded to pull of a double steal with Koss. Wilson and Schutteck followed with RBI hits and Pecoraro added an RBI groundout. Knotts ended the scoring with a two-out RBI single which put the Salukis ahead 4-0.

The Salukis increased their lead with a three-run fourth. Koss again started off the inning, but this time she hammered a triple down the right field line. She would later score on an error. Schutteck, who has an 11-game hitting streak, supplied the big blow in the inning by blasting a two-run double to score Lis and Wilson.

Maura Hasenstab, a senior from Belleville, put the play on a Cougar runner. The and Jami Koss, a sophomore from Casey, Salukis took a pair from SIUE, 9-8 and 9-1.

In the sixth inning the Salukis put the game away by way of the eight-run rule. Wilson doubled, Schutteck ripped an rbi single, and Knotts ended the slaughter with an rbi single.

Meier again picked up the victory. She went the distance holding the Cougars to five hits while fanning six. The win, her fourth in the Salukis' last four games, improved her record to 12-4.

SIUC head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said the two wins give the team some momentum.

"We'll just have to wait and see what this team is going to do when it's all over," she said. "The group has hung together and is finding ways to win."

Track teams preparing for MVC battles

By Dan Leahy
Sports Editor

The SIUC men's and women's track and field teams will be in separate locations this weekend, but both teams share a common goal—rev it up a notch and prepare for the Missouri Valley Conference Championships in three weeks.

Head coach Don DeNoon will lead the lady tracksters in Terre Haute, Ind., at the Indiana State Invitational. The six team invite includes MVC rivals Indiana State and Illinois State, as well as Wisconsin at Milwaukee, Marquette and Miami of Ohio.

DeNoon said he expects strong performances from distance

Football team opens spring with fan participation festival

By Dan Leahy
Sports Editor

There will be more than the SIUC football team on display at McAndrew Stadium Saturday, as the First Annual SIU Football Fest 1994 will give fans a chance to catch fan/die fever.

The festival will take place after the noon scrimmage for the Dawgs. Fans will be invited on the field to meet the players, snag autographs and participate in various games.

The activities on the field include an obstacle course, a quarterback challenge, punt and kick competition and a 40-yard dash. Participants can register to play all the games all day for just $2. Saluki players and coaches will join in the fun by assisting game players.

The event is being sponsored by Jake's Tires, Lee's Sports, and Star Cross-Blue Shield, with all proceeds going to the Special Olympics.

SIUC head coach Shawn Watson said the event is a chance for past athletes to reclaim some old glory, as well as being a fun family atmosphere.

Marketing and promotions coordinator Tom Davis said he hopes this is a part of a new beginning for Saluki football.

"This is sort of a way to re-introduce football to the area," Davis said. "Shawn wanted to make the spring game a little more than it was and get people involved. There has not been a whole lot to cheer about at McAndrew the next few years, and this is a chance to re-introduce some enthusiasm."

Davis said he is pretty sure this festival will be the beginning of a tradition.

"We're calling it the first annual because we think it will be back next year," he said. "So long as there are people out there and they are having fun that would be success enough for me to want to continue it."

In its first game since the announcement of head coach Sam Riggleman's resignation at the conclusion of the season, the Saluki baseball team broke a seven-game losing streak and beat Austin Peay State, 19-9, Wednesday night.

SIUC was down 7-1 heading into the top of the third inning, but exploded for five runs, fueled by a two-run homer from Braden Gibbs to pull within one, 7-6.

Austin Peay added another run in the fourth to push its lead back up a pair, 8-6, but the Saluki bats

The Governors surged ahead with one run in the bottom of the fifth to go up 9-8, but that would be the end of APSU's offense for the game.

SIUC struck back with three runs in the sixth and four in the seventh off Pete Schlosser grand slam to go ahead by six, 15-9.

Four more insurance runs were added to the Saluki total in the ninth to put the Governors away for good, 19-9.

Saluki starter Brian Isaacson combined with relievers Zac Adams and Chris Evans to blank Austin Peay through the final four frames and preserve the Dawg victory.
