About 150 demonstrators braved Saturday afternoon's cool weather and mounted an anti-gun control protest on Shryock Auditorium's front lawn targeting Lincoln Academy laureate James Brady.

Brady, a gun-control advocate, was inside Shryock being honored along with four other academy laureates in a closed ceremony. Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar presented the awards.

Brady, former press secretary for President Ronald Reagan and a Centralia native, was shot in the head during a 1981 assassination attempt on Reagan. Brady is partially paralyzed and uses a wheelchair.

Since the 1981 shooting Brady and his wife, Sarah, have lobbied for the reform of gun registration and firearm laws. Partly due to their seven-year effort, the Brady Bill was passed and signed into law. The law mandates a five-day waiting period before a handgun purchase may be made.

Tom Shafer, a rally speaker from Springfield, said demonstrators were exercising their First

Gov. Edgar honors five for societal contributions

By Shawna Donovan
DE Governmental Affairs Editor

Gov. Jim Edgar handed the highest state award to five distinguished Illinoisans Saturday at Shryock Auditorium.

James S. Brady, a gun control advocate; William H. Kurtis, a CBS journalist; Dr. Joseph B. Kirsner, from the University of Chicago; Robert H. Malott, a former business executive and civic organizer; and Arnold R. Weber, chancellor at Northwestern University were inducted into the Lincoln Academy for their accomplishments and contributions to society.

Jeanne J. Kirkpatrick, the sixth laureate, was unable to attend the ceremonies due to a family illness, which disqualified her from being eligible to receive the award this year. Academy Chancellor John Trutter said Kirkpatrick will be considered next year.

The five inductees join the company of past laureates such as former President Ronald Reagan, 1980; ABC anchorman Hugh Downs, 1967; and retired Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun, 1990.

Edgar, who is president of the academy, said the individuals have given something back to the community.

"This is a recognition of their achievement in the private and public sector," Edgar said. "This is a typical characteristic of past Lincoln merits."

Trutter introduced the five inductees at a press conference Saturday.

Dr. Kirsner, a chief-of-staff and deputy dean for Medical Affairs at the University of Chicago, shared some of his professional experiences, including giving medical care

Bomb suspects found

Suspicious evidence: Brothers charged with explosives, firearms violations after search.

The Washington Post

Federal sources exploring links between two brothers and the Oklahoma City bombing said they planned to charge both James and Terry Nichols with explosives and firearms violations after extensive searches of their properties. The sources said Terry Nichols also might soon be charged as an accomplice in the bloodiest terrorist act in American history.

Investigators recovered explosive materials at James Nichols's 500-acre farm outside Decker, Mich., and at Terry Nichols's home in Herington, Kan., according to senior law enforcement sources. The evidence was said to closely match the materials used in the bombing, although the sources cautioned that at this point the explosives charges will only be tangentially linked to the larger bombing case.

Membership in USSA unlikely despite vote

By Dean Weaver
Special Assignments Reporter

Undergraduate students who voted April 10 to support a student federal-lobbying group with a 50-cent-per-semester activity-fee increase may never see the increase take effect.

Jean Paratore, associate vice president for student affairs, said Undergraduate Student Government officials never consulted her before placing the fee-increase referendum on the ballot.

There are three barriers to implementing the fee increase that would give about $22,000 to the United States Student Association in Washington, D.C., each year and make SIUC students members of the lobbying organization, Paratore said. USSA is the only higher-education student-lobbying group in the nation's capitol, and Matt Parsons,

HUNDREDS DIE AT RWANDAN REFUGEE CAMP — NAIROBI, Kenya—By late Saturday in southwest Rwanda, a death toll as high as several hundred was reported after 48 hours of chaos at a refugee camp inside the country's borders. The latest spasm of violence occurred near the town of Kibeho, at a refugee camp that has been a growing source of frustration to the new government of Rwanda. The government is dominated by ethnic Tutsis, the primary victims of last spring's genocide by rival Hutus who were then in power. The Hutus lost the war to a rebel Tutsi army later in the year. Many Hutus fled to neighboring countries, but a quarter-million ended up in the southwestern portion of Rwanda, in camps established under protection of the French army and, later, the United Nations.

DOUBTS GROW ABOUT YELTSIN'S BILL OF HEALTH — MOSCOW—Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin missed Russian Orthodox Easter services early Sunday, casting some doubt on a new Kremlin medical report that the 64-year-old leader is generally in good health. Russian news agencies said that Yeltsin, who has appeared in public just once this month, was expected to attend midnight services at a Moscow cathedral. But long after the church had overflowed with worshippers and the five-hour service had begun, Yeltsin was not in the VIP section with Prime Minister Viktor S. Chernomyrdin, Moscow Mayor Yuri M. Luzhkov and other dignitaries.

DISNEYLAND GASSING THREAT DECLARED HOAX — ANAHEIM, Calif.—Federal law enforcement officials Saturday denied that a Japanese cult had planned to release nerve gas at Disneyland during the crowded Easter weekend and said a threat received by park officials was a hoax. Justice Department spokesman Carl Stern said in Washington that the FBI has launched a criminal investigation to determine who was responsible for the threat, which prompted officials to secretly dispatch scientists and an Army chemical warfare team to Disneyland. Disneyland spokesman Tom Brocato said Saturday that the park's security office received a threat April 13 in a letter and videotape that showed a man mixing chemicals.

SURPRISE CHRYSLER BID MAY PROMPT TAKEOVERS — They stocked away big stashes of cash for the proverbial rainy day, exceeded profit projections and cut costs. Now these same companies find themselves sitting ducks for takeover artists and other suitors. As Wall Street digests the recent surprise bid for Chrysler Corp., many companies once praised as prudently run are now considered attractive takeover targets. Industry analysts and investment specialists said there are several industries that may prove fertile hunting ground for takeovers. Financial and retail stocks, for example, have been out of favor for some time and may not reflect the true value of a company's assets and operations.

CLINTONS QUESTIONED ABOUT WHITEWATER — WASHINGTON—President Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton were each questioned under oath for two hours Saturday by Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, according to the White House. The Clintons, accompanied by the president's private attorney and the White House counsel, were interviewed in separate sessions by Starr and his three top assistants. White House Counsel Abner J. Mikva said that at Starr's request, the White House would not describe the areas of questioning or answer any other questions about the session.

Burial mound benefit

Group raises cash for land preservation

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Friends of Native Americans group held a benefit Saturday to raise money for the preservation of Olcott mounds, a Native American burial site southeast of Springfield.

Daniel WolfShadow, the director and spokesman for the Central Illinois chapter of the American Indian Movement, said there are 139 acres of land that once was a thriving Kickapoo village. Olcott mounds is a 40-acre section of the 139 that are confirmed burial grounds of Kickapoo ancestors, he said.

The Kickapoo never signed a release on the land but were forced off by settlers, WolfShadow said.

"These graves are our link to the earth. These burial sites connect us to our ancestors in the circle of life," WolfShadow said. "Grave sites are being molested by the ceremonial pipes, arrowheads and other tools of our ancestors for financial gain of greedy people," he said.

MARTIN C. WEIS — The Daily Egyptian

Daniel WolfShadow (right), director and spokesman of the Central Illinois chapter of the American Indian Movement from Springfield, stands in front of the American Indian flag by the Interfaith Center for a benefit to fund the preservation of Olcott Mounds, a Native American burial site near Springfield.

Pipes are being sold for thousands of dollars when the true purpose of these items is to accompany warriors and others into their next life, WolfShadow said.

"If Native Americans went digging through the graves of white folks, we would be arrested," WolfShadow said. "The goal of our organization is to achieve the rights and respect that every other citizen of this country has."

Now, the Illinois State Museum houses more than 2,000 special storage boxes that create climatic conditions to deter aging of Native American remains that costs taxpayers more than $100 dollars a day each to keep running, WolfShadow said.

"Illinois law states that any Native American remains are property of the state and we have to prove our ownership on paper to obtain items," WolfShadow said. "But the native people didn't leave paper trails, things were passed on by word-of-mouth."

The land was bought by developers that have built a subdivision on 40 acres. Home buyers were not told of the land's spiritual meaning to Native Americans, WolfShadow said.

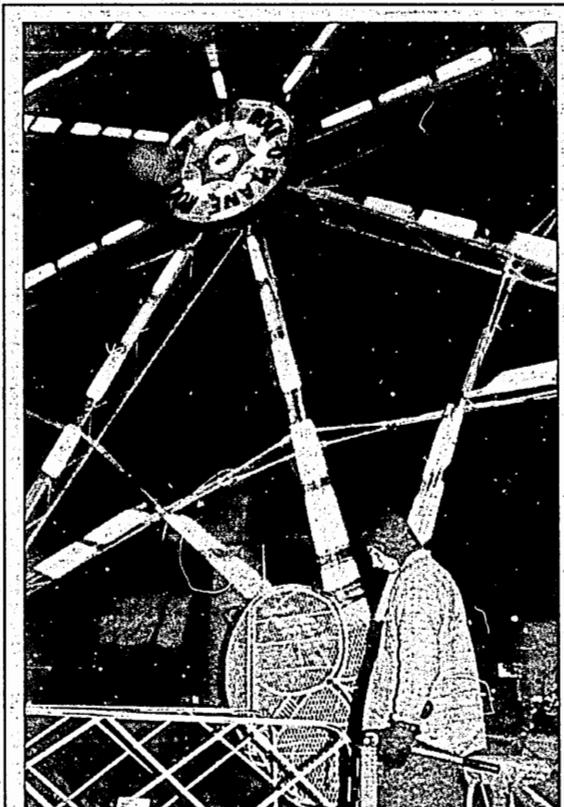

"A few have asked for refunds from the developer for not letting them know about the land's past," WolfShadow said.

Steve Christianson, a member of Friends of Native Americans, said the benefit raised nearly $300.

Marc Denzer, president of Friends of Native Americans, said the group didn't have a specific financial goal in mind but just wanted to do what they could for the cause.

"We sold raffle tickets that people bought extras of and charged $3 for a dinner members of the group prepared," Denzer said. "The money will go to a fund that hopefully will allow for the Native Americans to purchase the land back."

WolfShadow said AIM wants to purchase the land that he says was stolen from the Native American people or have a Native American-run museum where they could discuss the way of life their ancestors had, rather than have artifacts on display.

Panel discusses health care service to rural areas

KIM RAISIS — The Daily Egyptian

John Bennett, administrator for Pinckneyville Community Hospital, speaks about the need for health care reform in Perryville.

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

While the days of community hospitals are not over, a shift toward more generalized medicine is needed for smaller facilities to survive, according six health care experts speaking on campus.

At a rural health care forum Thursday in Lesar Law School Auditorium to promote better rural health services.

John Bennett, an administrator at Pinckneyville Community Hospital, said not every small hospital will survive, but he intends for his hospital to be providing the community with what it wants.

Hospitals need to adapt—experts

"I think a lot of the hospitals used to be dinosaurs — we were big entities in our small communities, but if we do not change rapidly we will be gone like the dinosaur," Bennett said. "I intend to be a cockroach — you cannot get rid of them."

Barbara Dallas, director in rural hospitals services, said even though the organization she works for is based in the city, she lives in a rural area by choice.

"I live what I talk about and I firmly believe in it," Dallas said. She said she believes the small rural hospital should continue to exist. "The small rural hospital will fit and cannot survive in its traditional form," she said.

Dallas said she believes rural governing board members must be the link between individuals and hospitals, but the board members must accept the responsibility of being charged with improving health status of the community.

"Most rural board members are nowhere near prepared to fashion this role for themselves," she said.

Larger urban hospitals often have the resources to lure physicians from rural hospitals, she said.

"If rural hospitals are to compete in the managed care environment, they must have unity among physicians in their communities," Dallas said.

Dallas said the future projection of rural hospitals reflects the needs of the community.

"Changes start at the community level," she said.

Courtland Munroe, an internist at Carbondale Clinic, said physicians are worried because they are not being judged by their quality of care.

"If I were in medical school I would be thinking of going into a high specialty care program or I might not have a job," Munroe said.

Red Cross blood drive underway around SIUC

By Kellie Huttes
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Vivian Ugent sits at her desk amidst a pile of papers with post-it notes everywhere. Her phone will not stop ringing.

"The phones have been ringing constantly so people can see what they can do," she says.

Ugent, the Southern Illinois coordinator for the American Red Cross, said SIUC's annual spring blood drive will begin Sunday and although the blood is needed in this region, some blood may be transported to Oklahoma City to assist the national organization in disaster relief.

She said the national American Red Cross contacted her and requested blood from the Southern Illinois and Missouri region to assist victims of the Oklahoma City federal building bombing that occurred Wednesday.

"The Oklahoma disaster only reinforces our need for blood," she said. "It underscores our need for blood. People need to continue to demonstrate compassion because every day could be a personal tragedy if there is no blood."

SIUC's last blood drive was in February and was designed as a "Blood battle" with Eastern Illinois University. SIUC won

Earth consciousness more than one day

ALTHOUGH EARTH DAY 1995 IS PAST, THE celebration of environmental awareness should continue. In today's society, it would be difficult not to know about the dangers that threaten our environment. Films such as "The Burning Season" and "Medicine Man" remind us of the irresponsible practices that continue to ravage the rainforests of South America and parts of Asia, while fast-food restaurants — some of which have become more environmentally friendly — and ecological organizations warn us of the evils of styrofoam and remind us to recycle the paper and aluminum we use whenever possible. In spite of this constant attention, however, it is easy to neglect our fragile environment in our day-to-day rush.

WHILE MOST OF US CANNOT CHAIN OURSELVES to trees in the Amazon basin or hunt for cancer-fighting ants in the canopy with Sean Connery, there are little things we can do to promote a safer, healthier environment. There are recycling bins in buildings and offices around the campus. Tossing a can into a recycling bin takes no more effort than putting it into the trash, but it reduces garbage and decreases the need to use virgin resources. Earth Day is a wonderful event, but if we are serious about the day's message, we must maintain our efforts beyond the annual tree-planting and litter-gathering activities. Like it or not, we all have to live on this planet, and if we are to survive, every person must do his or her share to protect the environment.

Alumnus' example should be followed

IN RECENT TIMES AT SIUC, THE INTRODUCTION of new programs and activities for students has not seemed possible — unless, according to SIUC administrators, students' fees or tuition are increased. And even with tuition and fee increases, academic programs are not always added or improved. Therefore, an SIUC alumnus is to be congratulated for a financial gift he has given the University which will make possible a new lecture series — without an extra funding burden to students. Jerome Mileur, a political science professor at the University of Massachusetts, finished his doctoral degree in political science at SIUC in 1971, but he has not forgotten his educational roots. Mileur recently donated $270,000 to SIUC in honor of two of his favorite professors who have retired from the school. His gift will allow the University to invite two lecturers per year, one academic speaker and one political leader, to make presentations to students, SIUC employees and Carbondale community members.

MILEUR'S GIFT TO SIUC SHOULD SERVE AS AN example to all the present and future alumni of the University. If we someday have the financial means or other capabilities of putting back into the school what we have taken or will take out of it, we should not hesitate to aid the school. Mileur also provides SIUC administrators and the Board of Trustees with a lesson. Money for existing and additional programs at the University can and should be sought in a larger part from alumni, instead of predominantly seeking funds from students who have not yet been able to develop financial resources from professional careers.

Letters to the Editor

Pornography promotes attitudes that dehumanize men, women in images

This month is Sexual Assault Awareness Month, and SIUC has held several lectures, debates and activities to promote awareness. I find it interesting that the only opinions voiced on this subject through the DE were from males expressing stereotypical chauvinistic views. The ignorance and poor logic displayed by these men makes it obvious that they have never experienced a sexual assault.

The reason why pornography helps perpetuate sexual assault is that it encourages the viewer to see humans as objects. (This applies regardless of the featured gender.)

Protruding buttocks and spread-eagle centerfolds do not stimulate intellectual contemplation of the subject's (object's) feelings; they stimulate thoughts of how she can be used to cause pleasure for the viewer.

Not surprisingly, this is the same

"The reason why pornography helps perpetuate sexual assault is that it encourages the viewer to see humans as objects."

Amy Meier

thought process that a potential or actual rapist goes through — how to use someone to satisfy their own desires. This is where the line between criminals and average people becomes blurred.

Obviously, seeing pictures of beer does work in promoting beer sales. Why else would companies bombard us with beer advertisements? Owning guns does raise the risk of being involved in a gun-related incident; otherwise, no one would need background checks, permits or training. The point is not to ban pornography, but to recognize the frame of mind of those who view it and admit it perpetuates the treatment of humans as objects.

I strongly encourage Mr. Schulze and Mr. Lambert to educate themselves about sexual assault, because it is a reality. It affects one-third of all women and one-seventh of all men. So if you don't consider that fact reason enough for thoughtful discussion, you are part of the problem and not the solution.

Amy Meier
Senior, Art and design

Prayer decision unfair to some

There seems to have been little response to the president's banning of prayer at commencements of the University. In the light of the intended lawsuit by the ACLU, his action is easily understood; however, the underlying principles of eliminating prayer at commencements of SIUC are a little vague. For instance, why have we had the long-standing custom of such prayer? Why, when the subject was discussed thoroughly and counsel taken by the administration with various religious groups on campus some years ago, are these same groups ignored now? Why was having prayer or not having prayer at commencements left to the various colleges of the University since that time? Is there some kind of "political correctness" in the new policy?

It does seem to me, and I suspect,

"The underlying principles of eliminating prayer at commencements of SIUC are a little vague."

Lewis A. Payne
Rector, St. Andrew's Church

a lot of others on our campus, that putting down the Christians, Muslims, Jews and other religious groups by simply eliminating prayer at commencement is neither politically correct nor a way to approach the cultural and religious diversity here. A much fairer way would be to use prayer (or non-prayer in the case of atheists and agnostics) from each of the religious traditions on a rotating basis. Whatever happened to tolerance?

Since the above proposal is likely to be shot down right away (because of the ACLU maliciously lurking in the corners), I propose that all faiths and non-faiths be honored by starting and finishing each commencement ceremony with a short time of silence, thus allowing everyone to pray or not pray as they might choose and meanwhile respecting and tolerating everyone. Or are we too selfish to allow others their beliefs?

Lewis A. Payne
Rector, St. Andrew's Church

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

to the King of Morocco "It was a victory for me to treat the king," Kirsner said. Kurtis, who has covered the Oklahoma City bombing, said the press coverage of the situation has been impressive so far. "Instead of there being 30 to 40 satellite trucks, there were 70. I have never seen so much coverage," Kurtis said. "This has been the best coverage of this type of situation." Malott, chairman and former executive of FMC — Food Machinery and Chemical Corporation; and Weber, an economic expert discussed labor relations in Illinois. Brady, a gun control advocate, said he is currently lobbying against the Conceal and Carry legislation in the Illinois General Assembly.

Brady, who was shot during the 1981 assassination attempt on former President Ronald Reagan and remains partially paralyzed, spoke on the problems of private gun ownership in America. Edgar awarded the inductees in a closed ceremony at Shryock Auditorium on Saturday. The academy, a non-profit and non-partisan organization, awards individuals whose contributions have brought honor to the state.

Demonstration

Amendment rights. Brady said demonstrators follow him around. "I'm followed everywhere I go," Brady said in an earlier press conference. "We spent yesterday in Springfield and protesters were there. "I say if you cannot take the heat, get out of the kitchen," he said. "I'm not ready to get out." The demonstrators, who came from all over the state and picketed with signs that said "Rape This" and "Gun Control Leads to Genocide," listened to speeches and booed every time Sarah Brady's name was mentioned. Glad Hall, a coordinator, said Edgar presenting the award to Brady was despicable. "It is unspeakable that Edgar would present this award to Brady," Hall said. Hall said current legislators are naive regarding gun control, and the liberal ideas of controlling gun laws can be compared to Adolf Hitler's gun control back before WWII. Hall wore a yellow Star of David with the name Gun Owner in the middle, similar to those Jews were forced by the Nazis to wear. Edgar said the demonstration did not interrupt the ceremonies. Sam Jordan, SIUC police chief, said extra security was on hand to direct traffic and monitor the demonstration. "Any time there is a special event such as a concert or program at the Student Center or Shryock, there will be extra security," Jordan said. "We had personnel out and about, and we made arrangements for extra security." Edgar said people with different political viewpoints should be tolerated. But he also said the different viewpoints do not warrant violent actions. "I don't think those individuals are limited to Oklahoma or Michigan," he said in a brief press conference. "I think they're right here in Illinois, Southern Illinois." Currently, the Bradys are lobbying against legislation that would allow handgun owners to carry and conceal their weapons. Edgar said he does not support the Conceal-Carry legislation. "We do not want a vigilante-type of society," he said. SIUC student Mark Motter, a senior in business from Peoria, said he was protesting restricting the Second Amendment right to bear arms. "My right (to have a gun) should not be infringed," Motter said. Gunowners of America, the Illinois chapter of the NRA and the Southern Illinois Patriots Association participated.

physicians are worried because they are not being judged by their quality of care.

"If I were in medical school I would be thinking of going into a high specialty care program or I might not have a job," Munroe said. "Physicians do not have a lot of control over the way things are changing."

Munroe said physicians should be concerned with setting up an HMO instead of letting managed care take money off the top.

"We could use that money and give it back to the community," he said.

Carl Getto, dean of SIU's School of Medicine said, if the state makes Medicaid managed care and if people begin to look at managed care for Medicare, the rural areas will have as much managed care as some urban areas.

"For the future we will need more generalists at the physician level," Getto said. "Physicians, perhaps for the first time in their lives, will have to do standardized operating procedures."

Getto said in the future physicians will be working with other people.

The vast majority of physicians will not be working individually and calling the shots," Getto said. Getto said in the future health care and its providers will change.

"We are in the midst of a major change in what will define who the providers are and what the system will look like in the future," he said.

George O'Neill, an executive director at Shawnee Health Service and Development Corporation, said community health centers are designed primarily to provide care to medically underserved areas.

"This specifically includes seniors, adolescents, the homeless, migrants and HIV victims," O'Neill said.

O'Neill said there is a movement in progress for community health centers in Southern Illinois to consider some form of networking to reduce administrator costs.

"Community health centers have the same economic pressures as physicians and hospitals in the private sectors do," he said.

O'Neill said managed care will make the health centers more patient-focused.

Joanne Chezen, an executive director for Federation Of Community United Services, said the purpose of the task force is to make sure that the billions of dollars being spent on health care are spent in the most effective manner.

"The whole purpose of this effort is to improve the lives of children and families and to improve the delivery system in Illinois," Chezen said.

Chezen said she believes providers cannot create a healthy rural community without looking at the whole picture.

"You have to look at that community and its economics," she said. "The future is integration of state and community and all the entities and individuals that form that community."

Fatherless families have bad effects on kids, study reports

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The proportion of American children growing up in homes without a father has quadrupled since 1950, leaving millions of children in neighborhoods where most families are headed by women, the Annie E. Casey Foundation reported Monday.

The foundation reported that in 1994, 19 million, or 24 percent, of children were living in families without fathers present. In 1950, 6 percent of children were living in mother-only households.

The report said children who grow up without fathers are five times more likely to be poor, twice as likely to drop out of high school and much more likely to end up in foster care or juvenile justice facilities. Girls who are raised in single-parent families are three times more likely to become unwed teen mothers, and boys without fathers at home are much more likely to become incarcerated, unemployed and uninvolved with their own children when they become fathers.

The report comes as Congress decides whether and how to revamp the nation's welfare system, a debate driven to a largely concern over how to reduce the number of children born to single mothers.

chief of staff for USG, said it is worth supporting.

"This group (USSA) helps students by fighting to maintain financial aid," he said.

The first problem is that the Graduate and Professional Student Council executive committee does not support the fee increase.

Patrick Smith, president of GPSC, said only undergraduate students voted to support the fee increase.

"I'm a little leery about the students I represent joining and supporting a group they know nothing about," Smith said.

Another potential blockade to the fee passing is a legal issue.

Paratore said she thinks there might be a state law that prohibits tuition and fee money from being used to support official lobbying organizations.

"I am going to check with the legal counsel in the chancellor's office to see if the board of trustees can even support the fee," she said.

The SIUC Board of Trustees is ultimately responsible for approving all student tuition and fee increases.

Even if the trustees find the fee legally acceptable, Paratore said the students would not have to pay the increase until the fall of 1997.

Parsons said he has not lost hope in the USSA fee increase.

"We (USG staff) are now looking into using ISA (Illinois Student Association) funds to support USSA," he said.

The Illinois Student Association was a state-level student lobbying group that received a 50-cent-per-semester fee from SIUC students.

A few years ago, SIUC student government stopped funding ISA, but each student still pays the 50-cent activity fee each semester.

The money raised by the ISA fee this school year exceeds $22,000, and Smith said about $4,000 of this money is used by GPSC and $18,000 goes to USG.

He said GPSC's portion of the funds goes to registered student organizations and professional developmental activities of graduate and professional students.

He said he does not want this money to be used for USSA.

Parsons said USG does not plan on spending its portion of the funds this school year, but hopes future funds will go to USSA.

As for the legal argument, Parsons said the SIUC administration already contributes thousands of dollars to lobbying organizations around the country so student government should be allowed to do the same.

Paratore denied the University used student money to support any formal lobbying organizations.

authorities that the investigation was "on the right track."

At least four men are believed to be involved in the bombing, including the still-at-large suspect known as John Doe No. 2, the tattooed and square-jawed man who was seen renting the truck used in the bombing in the company of the prime suspect, 27-year-old Timothy James McVeigh, who was arrested last week.

Early Sunday morning, federal agents in California apprehended a man they at first believed might be John Doe No. 2 but later decided was not. He was an Army deserter named David Delgado Iniguez who went AWOL in late August from Fort Riley, Kan., the same military base where McVeigh had been stationed during his stint in the service.

Although ruling out Iniguez as the John Doe suspect, they nonetheless detained him because of his possible connection to McVeigh. Iniguez, who was picked up in a working-class enclave on the edge of San Bernardino, apparently shared McVeigh's interest in paramilitary groups, but their connection beyond that was unclear.

Senior federal law enforcement sources said they had intensified the manhunt for the John Doe accomplice and other possible suspects.

They were working, they said, from a list of men who both fit the John Doe description and were known to have associated with McVeigh, who has been booked on capital charges in connection with the bombing, or with the Nichols brothers.

The central focus of the widespread probe is on men who are believed to have ties to far-right paramilitary groups that share a deep mistrust of the federal government in general and federal law enforcement officials in particular. Agents were concentrating much of their attention on three places: Michigan, where the Nichols brothers lived and associated with the paramilitary Michigan Militia; Kansas, where both McVeigh and Terry Nichols served in the Army and where McVeigh and John Doe No. 2 conducted most of their pre-bombing activities; and Arizona, where McVeigh lived on and off recently and where he associated with a paramilitary group known as the Arizona Patriots.

McVeigh's activities in Arizona seemed especially intriguing to federal officials. For several months in 1994 he lived in a trailer park on the edge of Kingman, a desert town along Route 66 on the western side of the state. The region, according to federal sources, has become a haven for paramilitary groups.

Muslims here reject extremist label, cite media

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Bahjat Qazzaz was in his car when he heard over the radio about the federal building bombing in Oklahoma City. He is an Islamic Palestinian and a graduate computer science student at SIUC.

When he heard the news, he said his reaction was twofold.

"I was shocked," Qazzaz said. "This was a tragic incident, especially since children were killed."

But his reaction did not end at shock. He said it soon turned into anger because he said he knew the media would not hesitate to pin the blame for the bombing on Muslims.

"I was upset all day long about that," he said. "I expected the media to point their finger at us, saying Muslims have committed this act."

At the Islamic Center of Carbondale Sunday, reaction from other Muslims was similar. Abdus Sami, a West Frankfort resident and member of the ICC, said his shock turned to fear.

"I am a former federal employee," he said. "So when I heard about the bombing, I realized the tragic consequences right away. I know how many people work in federal buildings, and I know that in larger cities, they have daycare centers."

He said as Wednesday passed, and he saw the media hinting at the possibility of Islamic or Middle East involvement in the bombing, he started to get scared.

"We knew a backlash might be possible," Sami said. "I was trying to educate my two sons that this act was not something Muslims do and to be careful if someone said something at school."

The media seemed to be saying right from the start that there was some kind of Islamic or Middle East connection, he said, and called the reporting "very irresponsible."

Reaction among other ICC members was very similar. Shock, Disbelief. Then, slowly, fear and anger.

Dr. Mazhar Butt, an ICC trustee, said, "I was outraged. That was not a Muslim act. If a Muslim did do it, then he is not a Muslim." Butt said the true nature of Islam is one of toleration, love and peace, which can be contrary to what Americans believe Islam stands for.

When it was revealed that the suspects in the bombing were not Islamic, Muslim or Middle Eastern, but instead were American and former members of the military, members of the ICC said they felt relief.

"We were relieved," Butt said. "When something like this happens, Muslims all over the nation are on trial."

Qazzaz said, "I relaxed. I hope this sends a message to the government, media and American people that says do not accuse Islamic or Muslims for these terrorist incidents. "Even it happened that one Muslim committed an act such as this, that does not mean it is the true face of Islam."

The negative image of Middle Eastern Islamics could be due to a number of reasons, some ICC members said.

Naser Elthafa, a Carbondale resident originally from Palestine, said people have a picture of a Muslim in their head, and that picture is of a person with a sword ready to strike someone down.

"That is just not true," he said. "Our beliefs are not known, and people are afraid of the unknown. "We want people to know Muslims and Islamics here are Americans," he said. "We are diverse. We are white and black as well as Arab."

Qazzaz said he does not blame Americans for the way they think of Islamics, but he did not hesitate to blame the media.

"There are so many cultures and religions in the world," he said. "Why us?"

Racist book had eerily similar plot to bombing

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—A virulently racist book that fosters hatred of the federal government and depicts a car bombing of FBI headquarters using ammonium nitrate fertilizer—the type of explosive used in the Oklahoma City attack—has circulated among some of the nation's most extreme right-wing groups for almost two decades.

The bombing portrayed in "The Turner Diaries" bears a striking resemblance to what happened in Oklahoma City, according to some experts who study hate groups. For example, in the book—which the FBI has called "a blueprint for revolution"—the bombing takes place at 9:15 a.m., almost precisely the time of day of the Oklahoma City explosion.

In at least one other case, an armed robbery staged by a white supremacist in Seattle a decade ago, FBI officials said they believed the perpetrator had copied some aspects of his crime from the "Turner Diaries" plot.

In that case, Robert J. Mathews was charged in a $500,000 armed robbery and counterfeiting plot that officials said was aimed at financing efforts to overthrow the government. In a formal complaint in the Seattle case, FBI agent Norman D. Stephenson said that Mathews had founded the hate group "White American Bastion" and had closely followed the plot of "The Turner Diaries."

After wounding an FBI agent while escaping from a hotel in Portland, Ore., Mathews burned to death after a 34-hour standoff with FBI agents. The agents accidentally ignited the house Mathews was in with illumination flares.

A specialist in studying hate groups, who declined to be identified, said that a member of one of the groups gave him a copy of the book about two months ago "as something I should read if I wanted to understand the far-right extremists."

"I read it last February; it left me depressed," said the specialist. "It's written as a novel, but it isn't a novel."

The book is intended to create "paranoia and fear" in America, says another expert, Danny Welch, an investigator for Klanwatch of Montgomery, Ala., which monitors hate groups. "The Turner Diaries" has circulated among groups connected with heavily armed separatists who have fought gun battles in recent years with federal agents in several states, including Washington in 1984 and Idaho in 1992.

Many of the organizations have tried to recruit members from the military.

The book's author and publisher, William L. Pierce, is the leader of the neo-Nazi National Alliance, an extremist group that government officials allege advocates violence and crime.

The price of free speech: Bomb-making made easy using Internet directions for devastation

Los Angeles Times

Only hours after the bomb that shook America, someone posted directions for a repeat performance on the Internet.

It was all there—even a diagram: Mix two widely available chemicals, slap on a "booster," attach a detonator and almost anyone can have a bomb like the one being called the deadliest in U.S. history.

"There you go!" boasted the Internet citizen. "Thought that might help some of you."

Perhaps it's the price we pay for freedom of speech: Directions for devastation are widely available at bookstores and on the Internet—where text on terrorism is interactive (ask questions on bomb building and get answers with the click of a mouse). While it's not clear if the suspects in the Oklahoma City case drew from manuals or on-line expertise, some experts say this increasingly abundant information will only serve to arm more fringe groups in the future.

"Democratization and dissemination of the techniques of terrorism," says University of Southern California terrorism expert Richard Hirai Dekmejian, "is going to breed more violence."

Lack of technical expertise is no longer an impediment to terrorism. As The Guardian of London put it, "The West ... faces a new threat from 'amateur terrorists.'"

Wams Dekmejian: "Imagine what someone with a little sophistication can do."

Books on bomb-making can be had almost anywhere, in local bookstores or through the mail. Terrorism expert and author Neil C. Livingstone says he has documented more than 1,600 "mayhem manuals"—books with titles like "The Anarchist Cookbook," "The New Improved Poor Man's James Bond," "How to Kill," and "Exotic and Covert Weapons."

They also can be had on the Internet and through mail-order companies such as Loompanics Unlimited and Palladin Press. Livingstone says he bought one at National Airport in Washington, D.C.

"Only in America," he says. On the Internet, there are several "discussion groups" where information can be traded anonymously via e-mail. There's also an on-line explosives "site"—a virtual manual—known as "The Big Book of Mischief."

On one discussion group recently, tips were traded on the best way to build the kind of bomb used in Oklahoma City, on how to synthesize an explosive known as Thermit and on how to build a pipe bomb.

There also was talk of how to make sarin, the chemical that killed 11 people in last month's Tokyo subway gas attack.

Japanese 'anime' crosses cultural, age barriers

By Kevin Sweeney
College Press Service

Japanese animation used to be the best-kept secret on U.S. television. As kids, few of us had the slightest inkling that some of our favorite cartoon characters — Speed Racer, Astro Boy — came from the very same country as Godzilla and Ghidrah. Can you imagine Kimba the White Lion speaking Japanese? No way!

Today, Speed Racer is a cult favorite, and Kimba and Astro Boy live on in eternal TV syndication. Japanese anime (pronounced "animay") has matured, and it's no longer the province of the after-school, TV-viewing crowd.

For years anime was strictly the secret passion of cyberpunks, Trekkies and other assorted sci-fi nerds. But the genre has broken out of midnight marginalization and caught on in a big way: Anime clubs are springing up on college campuses all over the country, and anime cassettes are jamming the new-release shelves of mainstream video stores.

The anime onslaught coincides with the general breakthrough of East Asian cinema in the West. While the art-house crowd lines up for the provocative historical and contemporary dramas of China's Zhang "Raise the Red Lantern" Yimou, hip and (mostly) young filmgoers are eating up Hong Kong's cutting-edge action films and Japan's vibrant adult cartoons. From the potent nihilism and apocalyptic violence of "Akira" to the lyrical message of hope and redemption in "The Wings of Honneamise," the overall quality and sophistication of anime makes most American "toons seem hopelessly childish and old-hat.

Maybe it's because most anime is, frankly, not for children. "Compared to American cartoons, Japanese and Asian anime is very different and unique," says Carl Chang, a biology major and anime fan at Brown University in Providence, RI. "The stories unfold at a different pace, and the animation itself is hypnotic and very visual."

His enthusiasm is echoed by Mark Johnson, president of the anime club at the University of Texas, Austin. The club increased its membership when members began subtitled their own dubbed anime videos, and they regularly hold animation festivals. "But we stay away from the hardcore violence and sex," Johnson says. "We don't show anything beyond the equivalent of an 'R' rating. The screenings are open to the public, so we can't allow anything that will upset kids or the dean."

Johnson likes anime because "the storylines aren't like U.S. cartoons; the episodes progress, the characters are realistic and three-dimensional — they have problems. And the stories have much causality. Characters we care about can actually die."

That last point is significant to Antonia Levi, a professor of history and Asian studies at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash. "In anime, the possibility of death is a constant reality," she says. "My Japanese history students are fascinated by this, which gives you an indication of how backward our own pop culture is in confronting the issue."

"Anime deals forthrightly with issues like death and love — and gender," Levi adds.

Despite the relative novelty of explicit violence and sex in cartoons, Levi admits some puzzlement over why her students are so nuts for anime. The genre is "uniquely Japanese," or at least uniquely East Asian," she says. "To really understand the plots and characters requires a knowledge of Asian religions and mythologies,

"...the stories aren't like U.S. cartoons; the episodes progress; the characters are realistic and three-dimensional..."

Mark Johnson
pres., anime club, University of Texas

Americans probably don't respond to anime in quite the same way as the Japanese, who these films were designed for."

Of course, that doesn't make the students' responses any less valid, she says. Sci-fi and fantasy buffs enjoy the colorful special effects, and Terminator fans overdose on the cyberpunk action. Hell, even post-modernists dig anime: "Judeo-Christian assumptions are not so much challenged as completely ignored," Levi says. "The anime universe is animistic. Anything in it may get up and speak to you at any time."

Including hardware. Rocketships can turn into robots when they land, or they can sail through space as a three-masted galleon with solar sails.

All this may be a revelation to the West, but the Japanese have been anime-miacs for the last 35 years or so. Animation has been around much longer than that of course (about 80 years). But it wasn't until the early 1960s that anime became an inseparable part of Japanese culture by merging with comic books, writes John Bean in the fall 1994 issue of the magazine "Animato."

The Japanese have long been fascinated by comics, which they call manga (the word translates, literally, as "irresponsible picture"). Manga itself is a $3-billion industry, and accounts for more than 60 percent of all printed materials sold in Japan, according to "Animato."

Japanese of all ages can't get enough of manga, which often deals with relevant social and political issues. (Japan's Foreign Ministry once even published a manga to defend its foreign aid program.) Like anime, adult entertainment manga is frequently laced with strong images of sex and violence.

Since the '60s, almost all popular manga are eventually made into anime, in the form of TV series, feature films and, most recently, OVAs (original video animation created specifically for sales and rental). The first Japanese-produced anime TV series, "Tetsuwan Atom" ("The Mighty Atom"), debuted in 1963 and ran strongly for ten years. Millions of American kids saw it as "Astro Boy."

"In Japan, as in many Asian countries, manga and anime are for everyone — children as well as adults," says Ken Iyadomi, executive vice president of the Chicago-based U.S. division of Manga Entertainment.

Perhaps the Company's most ambitious release to date is "The Wings of Honneamise" (1987), which has received some theatrical play before going to video. A variation on "The Right Stuff," "Wings" is set in a vaguely futuristic society that seems much like the present, except that space travel is still unrealized. The hero, Shiro, is a young knockabout who somehow ends up a cadet in the Royal Space Force school. The film, combines traditional science fiction with a level of spirituality not often seen in American films, let alone cartoons.

"Wings" cost about $8 million, and looks like it was the most expensive anime up to that time. Three thousand animators reportedly worked on the beautifully drawn production, which was written and directed by Hiroyuki Yamaga and scored by superstar composer Ryuichi Sakamoto, who would win an Oscar the following year for "The Last Emperor."

Manga Entertainment also is co-producing a new manga-based anime, "Ghost in the Machine," which will be made in Japan by industry veterans. While Iyadomi says it will not be "Westernized," he acknowledges that Manga Entertainment "recommended some script changes" to increase its accessibility to Westerners. Levi, for one, wonders if the worldwide popularity of anime will lead to its dilution. She points to another popular manga, "Dirty Pair," which will be filmed simultaneously in American and Japanese versions. She also wonders how some of the mixed messages anime sends to Japanese viewers will go over state-side.

She's interested in the U.S. reception to an enormously popular kids' TV series called "Sailor Moon." "It's been a huge hit in Japan with pre-teen girls and dirty old men," she says dryly. The ongoing plot concerns a group of high school girls who are given the power to change into superheroes — when they put on magic makeup. The transformation includes their schoolgirl uniforms, which become noticeably skimpier.

"The girls become empowered and strong — stronger than boys, even their teachers. But they do so only by wearing makeup. Now that's a weird theme," Levi said.

throughout the country.

Forrest, a senior in speech communication from Philo, said members can work directly with other SIUC alumni to increase their number of connections after graduation.

Any student can join the association regardless of academic year and memberships are offered to college graduates as well.

In an effort to increase student membership, the Alumni Association is offering a half-price membership to any senior interested in becoming a member of the association.

The half-price for a one year membership is $15.

In addition to the reduced membership fee offered to seniors, students who join will receive a free T-shirt, all membership benefits and quarterly issues of Alumnus magazine.

Jeanne Byassee, assistant director of member services, said the association is offering the discount to introduce students to the Alumni Association.

"We realize most seniors do not have jobs yet," she said. "We want to offer an affordable program so they can become active in the Alumni Association and utilize its benefits and programs."

Byassee said the Alumni Association members are offered discounts at SIUC as well as discounts for many hotels, car rentals and restaurants.

Greg Scott, assistant director of public relations, said many students are unaware of the opportunities the association can provide.

"We want students to be aware that we are here to serve them," Scott said. "We have a lot of student programs and we welcome the students involvement in our organization."

Scott said the Alumni Association currently has more than 12,000 members.

Byassee said there is a strong emphasis on providing alumni services to students with several universities across the nation.

"We are trying very hard to convey the message that we are here for the alumni as well as the students," she said. "A lot of people think when they graduate, their ties with SIUC are over but that is not true and we are here to benefit those people."

Students interested in becoming a member of the Alumni Association can apply at the Student Alumni Council Office on the second floor of the Student Center. Until April 27, students can join at several locations across campus.

The goal for this drive, titled "Help Can't Wait," is 565 pints, Ugent said. But the goal was set before the bombing.

The blood drive began Sunday and will continue through Friday, April 28. Throughout the week various locations will be set up on campus and off campus to collect the blood, Ugent said.

Josh Turnbull, public relations chair for Pi Kappa Alpha, said this is the first time his fraternity has sponsored a blood drive.

Turnbull, a junior in marketing from Marion, said although the Pi Kappa Alpha house is not located on campus, members have been publicizing their location at area businesses and hope to attract donors with their community location.

He said the house has a goal of 50 pints to be donated by members.

Brandon Stevens, president of Delta Chi, said the house was the first fraternity house to sponsor a blood drive and has been a sponsor for the past three semesters.

"We just want to help the (American) Red Cross out," he

Klan cross case tests speech, religion issue

The Washington Post

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Donnie Carr's grandfather was a Klansman. So Carr, whose family home is in the southeastern Kentucky mountains, said it was natural that he would join the Ku Klux Klan when he moved to Ohio.

"I was looking for an organization that extolled the virtues I hold dear," said Carr, 32, a heavy-set man with long brown hair and a thick goatee.

For more than 100 years, people claiming adherence to the Klan often have espoused bigotry and racial violence while insisting they were practicing Christianity. When Carr, who proclaims himself a believer "in God and family values," and other Klansmen tried to erect a cross on a public square adjoining the state capitol in December 1993, Ohio officials objected and launched a legal battle that will reach the Supreme Court in oral arguments Wednesday.

Ironically, that Klan cross, a symbol often associated with evil, has become the focus of a case that could determine whether governments may erect displays they identify with religious goodness: Christmas creches and Hanukkah menorahs.

The justices' ultimate decision could affect the way states and municipalities nationwide decide what kinds of displays are permitted during religious holidays. The case goes to the core of constitutional requirements for separation of church and state.

The same Ohio officials who tried to block the Klansmen's cross had permitted a Christmas tree and menorah to be displayed at the Capitol square. Allowing the Klan to put up its cross, they said, would violate the constitutional separation of church and state.

Some Ohio officials made plain at the time that they were repulsed by the Klan's activities and did not want to appear to endorse its message by letting it put up the cross in a public place.

Carr makes no secret of his beliefs. "The races should be separated," Carr said. "We believe each of the races was created by God with unique characteristics. We believe intermingling destroys the races."

Despite this unusual context, the case of Capitol Square Review v. Pinette touches one of the most enduring dilemmas in American law. In a passage known as "the Establishment Clause," the Constitution says government "shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." In practice, however, governments constantly are balancing that mandate against the equally potent values of free exercise of religion and free speech.

Separately this week, the court will hear arguments on another hot First Amendment issue: whether the organizers of a St. Patrick's Day parade must allow gay and bisexual Irish-Americans to march.

The Boston case, set for Tuesday, invokes parade organizers' free-speech and expressive-association rights.

Both cases are scheduled to be decided by late June.

In Ohio, after Carr and his fellow Klansmen were denied a permit to put up their cross in front of the Ohio statehouse, they sued in federal court saying their rights of free speech and free exercise of religion were denied.

The state had said the Christmas tree and menorah were allowed because they had a cultural significance beyond religion. The cross, officials said, conveys a purely sectarian message advancing Christianity.

Lower federal courts sided with the Klan and blocked the state from enforcing the permit denial. The Klan put up its cross on Dec. 21, 1993, but it was immediately torn down by vandals.

In a ruling on the merits of the case the following July, the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said a private group's intended display of a religious symbol in a public forum does not violate the Establishment Clause.

Referring to the Klan's being singled out, the appeals court said, "Some speech may be distasteful, unpopular, and outright offensive ... but the protection found in the First Amendment does not depend upon popular opinion."

College campuses conducive to binge drinking

By Marco Buscaglia
College Press Service

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—University of Illinois freshman Andrea Salow says she woke up with a hangover her second day away at school.

"The first night there, a bunch of us ended up in someone's room doing shots of Goldschlager," says Salow, 18. "Nobody knew each other yet, so we just sat around drinking, talking about high school and stuff."

Like many new students, Salow's first campus experience with liquor came before she was fully unpacked.

"I was sick the next two days," she remembers. "It wasn't exactly the way I wanted to start out at school."

Most college freshmen get drunk their first week on campus and begin a steady drinking routine that lasts throughout their stay at the university, according to a recent survey by the Harvard School of Public Health.

"The study indicates that college students drink early and often," says Henry Weschler, author of the study, which is the second part of a survey on binge drinking. "They find a routine and latch onto it rather quickly."

Drawing on the data from the first study, which surveyed 17,592 students from 140 colleges across the nation, Harvard researchers questioned 720 freshmen from the 13 unidentified schools with the strongest levels of binge drinking. According to Weschler, binge drinking is defined as consumption

Additional study results

- more than half of the students said it was "appropriate" to get drunk with friends or at parties.
- 54 percent said they sometimes regret what they do when they get drunk. The same percentage said they sometimes can't remember things they've done after drinking.
- male and female freshmen binge at the same rate.
- 84 percent said alcohol consumption was a problem on campus.

of five or more drinks in a row for men or four or more drinks in a row for women on one or more occasions during a two-week period.

The survey revealed that 68 percent of freshmen went on a drinking binge at some point during their first semester, with 54 percent doing so within the first week of school.

All of the freshmen surveyed said that alcohol was very easy to get on campus, and 96 percent said campus drinking rules had no effect.

"It's pretty easy to get beer or something whenever you want it," said Linda Arlington, a sophomore at Ohio University. "It was easy in high school, and then you had to rely on someone's older brother or something. Here, you just walk down the hall and give someone money."

In addition to academic programs and student opportunities, 54 percent of the freshmen said they considered the social scene of the university when deciding where to go to school.

Ruth Eng, professor of applied health science at Indiana University, says that drinking patterns usually diminish as students get older.

"Freshmen usually drink the most, but as students mature, they cut down on their drinking because they realize the negative effect it can have on their grades as well as their lives," says Eng. "They usually want to do the best they can, and they see that missing tests or even studying time because of what they did the night before can be very costly."

DePaul paper resumes after protest

By Marco Buscaglia
College Press Service

CHICAGO—Student protesters at DePaul University have ended a 10-day sit-in at the school's student newspaper.

As a result, the student newspaper, The DePaulia, resumed publishing on Friday, April 21, after a two-week hiatus.

The Coalition for Concerned Black Students left the "DePaulia" offices late Saturday night, April 15, after agreeing to various concessions offered by the administration.

The group released a statement Monday saying the university had agreed to all but three of their 20 demands, and that two of those demands could be settled within the school's judiciary structure. The administration did not agree to the Coalition's request for an apology from the paper or for the removal of certain staff members.

The sit-in began April 5, when about 30 black students took over the DePaulia's office space to protest a Feb. 17 article about a disturbance at a dance sponsored by Housecall, a black student group. The protesting students said the use of "M-B" and "F-B" to refer to male or female blacks in the story was racist. Students vowed to occupy the office space until the editor of the paper, as well as the reporter who wrote the story, resigned. Coalition leaders also demanded a front-page apology.

Despite offers of newsworm-use from other area colleges, university President Rev. John Minogue announced that publication of the 8,000-circulation weekly would be suspended until an agreement was reached. The move to suspend the paper, which lasted two weeks, was harshly criticized by professors within the school as well as journalists and First Amendment advocates across the nation.

"The university administration has the responsibility to defend freedom of speech, especially with the student media on their campus," says John Herr, communications director of the Individual Rights Foundation in Los Angeles. "When they backed down from people who shut down their paper, they're contributing to censorship. It's as simple as that."

The agreement between the DePaul administration and the Coalition includes:

- an agreement not to discipline the protesters for their actions;
- the hiring of a black journalist to work with the paper's staff;
- the use of facilities and equipment on campus to implement the group's requests;
- and the contribution of stories and editorials by the protesters in the student newspaper's next issue.

The agreement also stipulates that the DePaulia will publish more stories — as well as an annual edition — on the concerns and issues facing black students at the university.

James Doyle, DePaul's vice president for student affairs, says the protest has helped the campus community discuss racial issues.

"Now is a time for us all to work together," Doyle says. "A new dialogue has been created, and we have to address the issues at hand."

Griffey, Thomas: Tools to shine baseball's image

By Steve Zipay
Newsday

Izzy, Hoot, Boots, Scooter, The Duke. For decades, baseball fans have treasured player nicknames. Today, corporate sponsors have embraced only the two hottest ones: Junior and The Big Hurt.

Ken Griffey Jr. and Frank Thomas, the young superstars of the Seattle Mariners and the Chicago White Sox, stand out not only from the pack of fellow major-league sluggers, but they've also emerged from the rubble of the labor war as baseball's brightest marketing hopes.

Griffey, who was on pace to hit more than 60 homers last season, and Thomas, who won his second consecutive American League MVP award, are the Dynamic Duo of a sport that desperately needs an image transfusion.

"Baseball needs those guys to get right back on track," said Brandon Steiner of Steiner Sports Marketing in Manhattan. "Besides carrying quite a bit on their own backs, the companies they're tied in with would immediately get excited again and spur on other companies. These are the guys who can make it happen the fastest."

The Baseball Network used clips of Griffey and Thomas to promote its telecasts last season and certainly will again. Companies also have staked out their turf, from shoe titans Nike (which signed up Griffey) and Reebok (which employs Thomas) to video-game designers to soft drink manufacturers to regional phone companies.

"They are the two future Mickey Mantles in that sport. There is just no third close to them," said David Burns of Burns Celebrity Sports Service in Chicago.

"The two of them have all the ingredients. They have Michael Jordan-type warm personalities, no negatives come through. They're considerate, they're young and keep ringing up all types of records."

The cash registers are ringing as well. Griffey, 25, and Thomas, 27, each have attracted between $1 million and $2 million a year in endorsement deals. That's pocket change for mega-endorsers such as Michael Jordan and Shaquille O'Neal, but sports marketing consultants expect those numbers to multiply.

Griffey, for example, helped design Nike's Air Diamond Fury shoe last year and another model is due in 1996.

His contract with Nintendo, worth $200,000, for "Ken Griffey Jr. Presents Major League Baseball," expired at the end of last year and his representatives are negotiating with Sega.

In between working out and appearing at charity events during the strike, Griffey shot three Nike ads, one directed by Spike Lee and one with Mariners minor leaguer Mac Suzuki, which will air in Japan.

The third seems to be on U.S. TV every night: It features Junior racing cross-country from Yankee Stadium to the California coastline to haul down a drive by Don Mattingly.

In addition, Griffey has a deal with Kellogg's and is expected to land another card company deal, now that Upper Deck's contract expired in 1994.

"The competitiveness is amazing," Burns said. "You're going to see Reebok even more on the attack with innovative ads. And if Frank wins a third straight MVP, look out."

Skins pass on Carter could be opportunity lost

Baltimore Sun

ASHBURN, Va.—The Washington Redskins were wallflowers at the NFL draft trading party Saturday.

While teams were dealing left and right around them, the Redskins passed up a chance to trade for running back Ki-Jana Center and drafted wide receiver Michael Westbrook of Colorado and center Cory Raymer of Wisconsin on the first two rounds.

The Cincinnati Bengals, who were one slot behind the Redskins on the first round, gave up their second-round pick to move up and get Carter.

The Redskins weren't willing to give up their first-round pick, the fourth overall.

So, are they better off with Westbrook and Raymer than Carter?

"For the answer to that one, let's come back in a couple of years. We wanted to keep our second-round draft choice to use it in another area," General Manager Charley Casserly said.

Westbrook likely will step in as a starter to team with veteran Henry Ellard as the main targets for second-year quarterback Heath Shuler.

Raymer will be a backup behind John Gesek this season, but the Redskins project him as a long-term starter.

The Redskins appear to have more pressing needs in the defensive line, at running back and at tight end, but Casserly and Coach Norv Turner said they had Raymer as the highest-rated player on the board in the second round.

"We had to do what you believe is right at the time," Turner said.

"If you try to force things, if you try to create something that isn't there or you don't believe in, just because you have a need there, that's where, in all my experiences, the worst picks have been made."

Turner said a team has an advantage getting caught up in the "emotion of the moment" and saying "Gosh, we need this" and picking by position instead of taking the best player available.

Turner said he also had no second thoughts about having Westbrook and Raymer instead of Carter, rated the best player in the draft.

Cosell

first began to attract national attention, until his bitter departure from ABC television in 1985, Cosell frequently tackled the toughest issues in sport. He initially made his reputation as a staunch defender of boxer Muhammad Ali when the heavyweight champion was stripped of his title in 1967 for refusing to be inducted into the Army during the Vietnam War.

"Howard Cosell was a good man and he lived a good life," Ali told the Associated Press after hearing of Cosell's death. "I have been interviewed by many people, but I enjoyed interviews with Howard the best. I hope to meet him one day in the hereafter. I can hear Howard now saying 'Muhammad, you're not the man you used to be.'"

Cosell was a vocal critic of baseball's reserve clause. He railed over brutality and corruption in boxing, the cheating and academic abuses of college sports, the rampant commercialism and alleged hypocrisy in the Olympic movement. He also wrote four best-selling books.

He was described over the years as a social phenomenon, a broadcaster and crusading journalist who broke the pretty-face, perfect-hair, former-jock mold of network sports personalities with his unique style and delivery. Writer Frank Deford, in a 1983 Sports Illustrated profile, observed:

"He is not the one with the golden locks or the golden tan, but the old one, shaking, sallow and hunched, with a chin whose purpose is not to exist as a chin but only to fade so that his face may, as the bow of a ship, break the waves and not get in the way of that voice."

Cosell reserved his harshest rhetoric—on and off the air—for racism any time he saw it.

Cosell handled a wide variety of sports for ABC, but was particularly renowned for his work as a boxing blow-by-blow announcer and as the pot-stirring third man in the booth on "Monday Night Football" from the inception of the landmark series in 1970 to his departure before the 1984 season, when he claimed the NFL had "become a stagnant bore."

The last fight he worked for ABC was a bloody bout in December 1982 between heavyweight champion Larry Holmes, who savagely whipped challenger Randall "Tex" Cobb. "I am tired of the hypocrisy and sleaziness of the boxing scene," he said at the time, and never did another fight.

In mid-February, he was honored with the Arthur Ashe Award for Courage at the ESPN-sponsored ESPY ceremonies. He did not attend; his friend, comedian Bill Cosby, accepted the award for him.

At the height of his popularity, Cosell may have been the most imitated voice in America, the focus of countless conversations at the office water cooler and a source of material for stand-up comedians coast-to-coast.

17:22, to take first in the 101-runner Eastern Illinois Invitational. She won third out of 117 runners in the NCAA District 5 meet, which tied SIUC's highest finish ever. She was also a four-time MVC Cross Country Athlete of the Week.

• Indoor track: Homer was the first qualifier for nationals since 1989. She successfully defended her MVC title in the mile by taking a conference record, school record and NCAA provisional qualifying time with a 4:48.89 mile time. She won the 1000-meter run in the MVC championship, posting SIUC's second fastest time ever, 2:55.05, to become the meet's MVP. Homer was SIUC's leading scorer during the indoor season with 116 points, winning seven mile races and three 1000-meter events.

• Outdoor track: At the Louisiana State University Relays, Homer won two events and clocked a school record, 4:27.78, in the 1500-meter run. She has the top times this season in the 1500 and 3000 (9:58.00). She won the 1500-meter run at the Saluki Invitational and the 3000-meter run at the SEMO Invitational. At the Kentucky Quad, she broke her own school record and set an MVC mark with an NCAA Qualifying time of 4:25.57 in the 1500.

Baseball

and then Shelton's play to the end the game really saved the day for us."

Jason Kline pitched the whole game giving up six runs on 11 hits and improving to 3-1 on the season. He struck out six batters in the contest.

Kratovich, Shelton, Jason Smith and Brad Cosgrove all had two hit apiece.

Game One- ISU-7, SIUC-1

As SIUC had done in every game during the series, the Salukis jumped out to an early lead when Kratovich scored on Russell's single, but Indiana St. came right back in the bottom of the frame to tie the game, then scored three runs in the fourth to break the contest open.

Indiana State pitcher John Huemmer shut down a Saluki offense that had scored 26 runs in the previous two games. Huemmer did not allow an earned run, giving up only five hits and striking out eight in the complete game.

Russell was the only Saluki to get multiple hits, reaching safely twice.

Mike McConnell took his fourth loss of the season giving up five runs in four and two-thirds innings.

The last game of the series scheduled for 1 p.m., Sunday was postponed.

Golfers

3.89 GPA is the best of the group, Tulsa's Maria Brink and Illinois State's Vicki Appleton as first team members. SIUC begins MVC championship play today and finishes up tomorrow at the par-72 Beaver Hills Country Club course in Cedar Falls, Iowa, which is Northern Iowa's home greens.

Tulsa is the favorite to win the 54-hole tournament. The Golden Hurricane are ranked fourth in the nation.

SIUC may find itself battling for a third consecutive back seat at the MVC Championships. The Salukis finished second to Illinois State in 1993, to Tulsa in 1994, and the Golden Hurricane is most likely out of everybody's reach at this year's event.

Key SIUC golfers will be Elker, who has been the Salukis top finisher in 15 of her last 18 tournaments and has the team's best stroke average at 79.3

Freshman Jamie Smith is next best with an 81.7 average. Hudgins and junior Kristen Oglesby, who each have an 83.6 average, freshman Stacy Skillman, who has an 84 average, and Stefamich, who has an 85.8 average, round out the Salukis that traveled to the tournament.

The first 36 holes will be played today and the final 18 tomorrow.

Track star runs away with award

PAUL MALLORY — The Daily Egyptian

SIUC women's track standout Jennie Horner receives the first DE Athlete of the Year at the Senior banquet Sunday night, which honored all Saluki Senior athletes.

Superior Senior: Jennie Horner earns first ever DE Senior Athlete of the Year award.

By Sean J. Walker,
DE Campus Life Editor

As the end of the semester approaches, many seniors will be receiving their final awards at SIUC, but for one Saluki athlete the award is in its rookie year.

Jennie Horner, a senior in speech communication from Arrington, received the First Annual Daily Egyptian Saluki Senior Athlete of the Year Award at the Senior Banquet Sunday.

"They (the Daily Egyptian reporters) totally gave me tons of recognition," Horner said.

"I can't count the number of people that came up to me and said they saw me in the DE and actually read the stories.

"That made me work even harder."

Horner is a member of the Saluki cross country team, indoor track team and the outdoor track team.

She is in the position of being the first female athlete in SIUC history to qualify for national championships in three sports.

According to Grant Deady, Daily Egyptian Sports Editor, Horner earned and deserved the award.

"This is an award that is long overdue, and giving it to Jennie is a great way to start it off," Deady, a senior in Radio and Television from Homewood, said.

"Several athletes were in the running, but there was just no denying the accomplishments she achieved in her four years here."

Horner said she was not sure how the award was picked, but said she was happy that a female athlete was even considered.

"Things have come a long way in women's athletics," she said. "I think people just don't think women's athletics will be that exciting, so they don't come out and watch it."

"I think that it will make a lot of women coming in work that much harder to win this award. It shows that women's athletics is serious."

According to Deady, there were five categories used to decide who would win the award.

- Must be of senior status.
- Strong academic background.
- Athletic accomplishments at SIUC.
- Active in other organizations on-campus and in the community.
- Positive image of a collegiate student-athlete.

Getting up everyday and going out to run no matter what the weather is like wore on Horner, she said, but it also made her try that much harder.

"You want to call the coach and you think of every excuse to get out of it (daily practices)," she said.

"I did it, but I would have felt guilty if I didn't run and would feel like a wimp if I didn't get out there when everyone else is."

The practices have been hard, but Horner said they have been and will pay off.

"I don't know what I'd do without the free time I'd have without track," she said. "Now my big goal is to be an All-American and make it to the finals."

"So everyday, I get out there and try to be the best. I can't settle for second anymore after finding out that I can do it."

Horner has a long way to go, but said she is going to continue to run in a track club when she finishes college and will try to get to the Olympic trials.

"Right now I don't have what it takes to get to the Olympic trials, but I'm going to keep on running," she said.

Some of Horner's accomplishments include:

- Cross Country: Horner was the first qualifier for nationals since 1987 and was the 1994 Missouri Valley Conference champion. She won five-of-nine meets during the fall 1994 semester. Horner ran the second best time in SIUC history.

Salukis bark up wrong tree, Sycamores win two of three

By Doug Durso,
Daily Egyptian Reporter

When it rains it pours.

For the SIUC baseball team, which is trying to climb out of the Missouri Valley Conference basement, the Salukis need to win as many games as possible. But after losing two of first three to Indiana St., SIUC's hopes are starting to fade.

The Dawgs have lost the last three series to MVC opponents and that string was not snapped in Terre Haute, Ind. over the weekend.

The Salukis fall to 5-12 in league play and 17-21 overall, while Indiana St. improves to 9-12 in conference and 23-17 on the year.

In the final game Saturday, Sycamore hurler Tom Browning pitched a seven-hit, two-run complete game as Indiana State rolled past SIUC to a 7-2 victory in Saturday's second game.

The Salukis got on the board first in the opening inning, but ISU scored two runs in the second and a single tally in the third to effectively put the game away.

Tim Kratochvil showed why he was the first-team MVC catcher selection, going 4-for-4 and one RBI.

Danny Davis dropped to 2-4 on the season going seven and two-thirds innings in the defeat.

Game 2 SIUC-7, ISU-6
SIUC jumped out to a large lead and was able to hold on for a 7-6 victory in the first game of Saturday's doubleheader.

The Dawgs roared out to a 5-0 first inning lead, highlighted by Mike Russell's three-run homer in the first inning.

The Sycamores rallied with two runs in the seventh to close the game to one run, but the Salukis were able to pull out the victory.

SIUC baseball coach Dan Callahan said Russell's home run and a key defensive play by shortstop Craig Shelton in the ninth were confidence-builders for his club.

"Russell's home run in the first got us going in the right direction

Men's tennis wins final MVC match

By Cynthia Sheets,
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Springfield, Mo. was the site of the last Missouri Valley Conference match-up for the Saluki men's tennis team Saturday, as the Dawgs defeated the Bears in a 5-2 final.

SIUC was originally slated to play Drake University after the SMSU match, but the match was canceled due to rainy weather.

At the Hickory Hills Country Club, the doubles pairs of Andre Goransson/Dan Jones and Alf Merchant/Mick Smyth combined for two wins to start the Saluki netters on their way to victory. Both duos completed their matches with 9-7 defeats.

"Our team just got the job done against SMSU," Goransson said. "Most of our guys had a really good day."

The team of Bojan Vuckovic and Jack Oxler were not as successful as their counterparts, losing to Jamie Smith and Tom Igric, 8-2.

After earning the doubles point with a 2-1 edge over its competition, the Salukis went on to capture fights two through five from the Bears.

Sportscaster Cosell dies at age of 77

Washington Post

Howard Cosell, who was one of the first network television sports announcers to, in his own words, "tell it like it is," died Sunday morning at New York University's Hospital for Joint Diseases in New York City. He was 77.

His grandson, Justin Cohane, said Cosell died of a heart embolism, according to the Associated Press. Cosell had been in ill health since he was diagnosed with cancer in 1991. In recent years, he had suffered a series of strokes that weakened his heart, limited his mobility and confined him to his apartment on Manhattan's East Side.

A lawyer by training, Cosell was arguably the best-known, and most controversial sports broadcaster in the history of the medium, attacking the hottest subjects and helping attract a huge audience to ABC's "Monday Night Football." He was a lightning rod for criticism.

From the early 1960s, when he

Women's golfers make the grade Three members named to MVC All-Academic team

By David Vingren,
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC women's golf team may have a difficult time dominating the Missouri Valley Conference Championships during the next two days, but they are second to none when it comes to academics.

Three of the six selections to the 1995 MVC Academic All-MVC Women's Golf Team belong to the Salukis, as Lieschen Eller, Laura Stefanich, and Molly Hudgins were honored as first-team members.

Eller, a senior in psychology from Centralia with a 3.62 grade point average, and Tulsa's Sofie Eriksson were unanimous selections to the first team.

Golfers must be starters or important reserves and hold a GPA above 3.0 to qualify for the team. They must also have sophomore athletic and academic standing and have completed on full academic year at their school, which five SIUC golfers have done.

Saluks Stefanich, a senior in athletic training from Rensselaer, Ind., Laura Stefanich with a 3.48 GPA, and Hudgins, a junior in business from Carbonale with a 3.72 GPA, joined Eller, Eriksson, whose
