Three area hospitals talk integration

By Heather Burrow
City Reporter

Negotiations between Southern Illinois Healthcare Enterprises and St. Joseph's Memorial Hospital in Murphysboro concerning integration with Memorial Hospital of Carbondale and Herrin Hospital remain incomplete, and according to St. Joseph's president the process may take months.

Virgil Hannig, president of St. Joseph's, said the process is ongoing.

"Right now all we have are two parties, SIHE and Adorers of the Blood of Christ who sponsor St. Joseph's, that have expressed interest in integrating," Hannig said. "In 30 to 45 days if there is a proposal, the proposal will go into negotiations and terms decided by December 31. Then, if a final agreement is reached and before the implementation process can even go into effect, legal processes must be considered."

John Buckley, Jr., chief executive officer for SIHE, said discussion has been going on for a couple of months.

"Discussion started in April 1993 to determine what we should be doing in the region to make a continuous model of care," Buckley said.

"We are doing this to simplify life and take care of patients."

Buckley explained what SIHE is trying to accomplish with the possible integration.

"For example, if a patient has a service in Murphysboro and then has to go to Carbondale for another service, the patient will not have to be admitted again and this will eliminate duplicates."

Hannig also said integration would be helpful to reduce competition between hospitals.

"As we prepare for health care reform, this will help us to work with the other hospitals rather than competing," Hannig said.

"In the past 10 years inpatient utilization has declined. As this decline continues, it is more difficult for health care to face the financial challenges ahead of them, and this is particularly true with rural health care facilities."

Each facility will still be operated independently, but there will be benefits with the integration, Hannig said.

"For example, maybe certain surgeries that are only done two or three times a year can be discontinued," he said.

"However, if there was competition from other hospitals, these surgeries would be maintained even if they were expensive to help in competition."

Buckley also said there is power between the two organizations.

"When two organizations come together and help each other, there is tremendous power there," he said.

"I think this is the most exciting thing in Southern Illinois ever."

Greg Yank, president of O'Fallon ASC Health System, said he is looking toward long-term benefits.

"In light of health care, hospitals will benefit from coming at decisions together and this makes more sense to the community," Yank said.

Yank also said it is important to realize that this integration is a vision many citizens share.

"Many of us share a belief about an integrated healthcare delivery system and this integration is consistent with what we believe should happen," Yank said.

"This will be providers coming together to better serve the needs of patients. With this vision for the long term, this integration will be more economical and cost efficient."

Newly appointed

Winters accepts administrative job

By Marc Chase
Administration Reporter

Winters

SIUC Vice President for Academic Affairs and Provost, Benjamin Shepherd, has offered the position of associate vice president for academic affairs in charge of budget and personnel to SIUC linguist and French expert Margaret E. Winters.

Winters, 47, will replace Braja M. Das, who will move to Sacramento, CA., in August as dean of California State University's School of Engineering and Computer Science.

Winters was a candidate for the office of associate vice president for academic affairs in charge of planning in the spring. After the deliberations of a campus search committee, however, Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs, selected Kyle Perkins, who has already been temporarily filling the position.

Shepherd said he is happy Winters accepted this appointment instead and is sure she will work well in the position because of her prior experience as director of the SIUC Department of Foreign Languages.

"I am pleased and honored that she accepted the position," Shepherd said. "Her breadth of administrative experience makes her especially qualified for the position, and her scholarly record is exemplary."

In past positions, she headed the Department of Foreign Languages and Literature from 1987 to 1993 and has served on several committees including the President's Long-Range Planning Committee, the Committee on the Library of the Future and the University

Syrian president hesitates on peace plan, agreement

By Susan Sachs

DAMASCUS, Syria—The formula worked in the cases of Jordan's King Hussein and the PLO's Yasser Arafat: A powerfully symbolic handshake on the White House lawn. Promises of American aid. Then a renunciation of war, with the details to be worked out later.

Syrian President Hafez Assad won't buy it.

In the assessment of veteran diplomats and government officials here, the unflappable Arab strongman is in no great hurry to enlist in the trend toward normalization with Israel. Yet, Assad wants it understood—by his own people as well as the United States — that he is firmly in the peace process, not on its margins.

Wednesday was the fourth and final "chill out" at the Community Life Center on Sunset Drive. Others were held throughout the summer at Tatum Park, Oakdale Park and Attucks Park in Carbondale. During the day the fire department would spray water on area children while watermelon was served by members of the park district. The police were at the park to ensure safety.

HAITI AIMS TO GET U.S. TO EASE SANCTIONS — PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti—The Haitian military, satisfied it has faced down the threat of U.S. military intervention, now expects to maneuver the United States into easing its punishing economic sanctions while keeping President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in exile, Haitian army and political sources say. Interviews with ranking Haitian officers, associates of key military figures, political experts and diplomats provide the outlines of a strategy that aims at making a deal, which the regime believes, the United States won't have the stomach to refuse. "If all goes to plan," said one Haitian civilian supporter of the military, "by the first of the year, (Lt. Gen. Raoul) Cedras will be gone, a new election will be planned and at least some of the sanctions will be lifted. And Aristide will still be in Washington." The idea in broad form is that Cedras will step down — any time from now to the end of January, with many sources looking to October or later. Then, puppet President Emile Jonassaint will propose a national election for early 1995 in which all parties and organizations, including those supporting Aristide, will participate.

BREYER STILL ENMESHED IN LLOYD'S SAGA — WASHINGTON—On June 10, before hearings on his confirmation as a Supreme Court justice began, Stephen Breyer received a chilling letter from his London insurance agency, R.W. Sturge Ltd. "I very much regret to have to confirm that your underwriting ... has resulted in an overall loss," it began. "As previously advised, the deadline for payment of losses to Managing Agents is the 29th July." That makes two deadlines for Breyer this week, when he also faces a scheduled Senate vote on his confirmation. And while that confirmation seems all but assured, following the 18-0 endorsement he received from the Senate Judiciary Committee, the question of Breyer's losses in Lloyd's of London — and his ability to extricate himself from what has become Britain's greatest insurance disaster — continues to spark debate between his supporters and critics. Breyer has been sharply criticized by Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., for his decision to join Lloyd's without realizing the potential for the losses he is incurring. "The fact is," Lugar said this week at a breakfast for reporters, "Judge Breyer could not divest himself. This is somewhat like the Costa Nostra; you can't opt out. The tentacles are in you forever, down to your last button."

NEW TECHNOLOGY TO ALTER WAYS OF WAR — WASHINGTON—Remember the 1991 Persian Gulf War? Precision-guided bombs that were able to fly into a tiny chimney? F-117 Stealth fighters that could penetrate Iraqi airspace undetected? A satellite tracking system that helped pinpoint Iraqi positions? Well, you haven't seen anything yet. Pentagon planners say as a result of such flashy new technology, the world may be on the verge of a full-scale revolution in the way the major powers fight their wars — possibly the biggest such advance in war fighting since World War II. Sparking the revolution is the military's increasing ability to use computer links, communications systems, satellites and sensors to boost dramatically both the range and the accuracy of conventional weapons such as bombs and missiles. This means that U.S. troops increasingly will fight from longer distances, not actually moving into a battle zone until after most of the weapons in the area have been destroyed. That should reduce U.S. casualties. At the Defense Department, five task forces are studying the new ways of warfare. Both the Defense Department and some defense-oriented consulting firms have begun conducting classified war games designed to probe the capabilities of the new technology. Officials predict that within a few years, the military will begin phasing out its current way of war fighting and replacing it with futuristic techniques that would have been inconceivable even at the start of the Persian Gulf War three years ago.

SIUC political organizations rally behind ideas

(above) In March 1993, local United We Stand of America organization rallied in Murphysboro. The rally had information tables and pamphlets as well as Ross Perot campaign memorabilia. SIUC student Whitney O'Daniel remembers chatting with friends at a table the College Republicans had set up to register students to vote, when a person came by who opposed some of the issues the organization stood for.

For several minutes, O'Daniel, president of SIUC's College Republicans, and the young man debated the issue.

A group of students gathered around the table to listen, and O'Daniel said he believed he had to convince not only the student, but also the on-lookers.

O'Daniel said the young man came back after the discussion and acknowledged that some of the points O'Daniel had made were valid, but said he had no plan of joining the organization.

Although O'Daniel made no new converts by professing his ideas, he said he believed his defense of his ideas was valuable.

"If they go home and think about it, I've made a difference," he said. By the time students arrive at SIUC, many already identify with a political party, he said.

The purpose of groups such as the College Republicans is to organize this party support and encourage people to vote for the issues and the people they believe will best help promote their ideas, he said.

Maggie Bednar, president of SIUC College Democrats, said mass mailings and door-to-door campaigns also are good ways to

Student Activism
Third in a series of three educate the public. She said it can be rewarding when campaigners meet people who agree with the issues being worked on, but this does not always occur.

"It's a lot of hard work and sometimes, you get the door slammed in your face," she said.

O'Daniel said much of the work done locally on political campaigns is organized and carried out by volunteers.

Efforts primarily are non-paid and thankless, he said.

Volunteers may gain a sense of accomplishment from their work, but much of the reward comes from the satisfaction of working with people with similar values and beliefs, he said.

The sense of camaraderie and excitement may be most evident at state and national conventions, where volunteers from all across the state or country gather, he said.

Although talking and cheering with thousands of other people is an experience many volunteers enjoy, some SIUC students believe this strong party loyalty can cause problems in Congress and the Illinois General Assembly.

'Movement' to shake at Sunset Concert tonight

By Paul Eisenberg
Entertainment Reporter

Yet another Minneapolis-based band will grace the gazebo at 7 tonight in Turley Park as the 1994 Sunset Concert series draws to a close.

Tina and the B-Side Movement are listed by concert coordinators as a Rhythm and Blues band, but lead singer Tina Schlieske said there is more to their music than that.

"A lot of people have a tendency to get Janis Joplin vibes from it, but it's rooted in rock and roll and R&B," she said. "It's passionate and intense."

Schlieske said the band tours extensively, regularly hitting cities as far apart as New York and

Kansas City. When not on the road the band plays clubs in Minneapolis, where they just performed three sold-out shows for 1,400 people.

The band also just released a compact disc, its second recording.

Schlieske said their first disc, "Young Americans," sold out at 1,400 units.

The new release, "Monster," was produced by Schlieske and guitarist Patrick Tanner, who participated in many recording projects for bands in Los Angeles.

Schlieske said the band originated three years ago in Minneapolis, when the hip music scene there was in its early stages.

"I think we were drawn together by our diversity in tastes," she said. She said the band members were influenced by a wide range of artists, from Aretha Franklin to Frank Zappa.

Tonight's show, however, will consist mainly of original material, although Schlieske said the band may throw in some covers at the end.

"We like to do a few covers sometimes," she said. "Just some stuff we can have fun with, like the Stones, Janis, Aretha. Sometimes we like to just loosen up and have some fun."

She said she writes the band's original songs in a rough form and presents them to the band members, who then devise their own parts.

"That's how we get the feel of the songs," she said.

Center hosts planetary experience

If last week's Jupiter collision has peaked your interest in heavenly happenings, then you may want to attend "Star Voyage," an astronomy program at the Science Center, 611 E. College St. in Carbondale, which will teach participants about the operations of the solar system we live in.

"Star Voyage" is a hands-on family science program that will be conducted by Roger Gardner, an amateur astronomer from Jonesboro, Nancy Peterson, director of The Science Center, said.

"Roger will set up equipment which will allow participants to view the sun and other heavenly objects. Weather permitting, of course," Peterson said.

"Gardner is very well-versed in astronomy and is very entertaining to listen to."

The presentation will be held August 7 at 1:30 p.m. and again at 3 p.m. The charge is $2 which includes admission to the Center's museum.

Gardner said he became involved in astronomy while in sixth grade and has been conducting the astronomy courses for about the last four years.

"I still have the first book on astronomy I got when I was in grade school. From there, I just kept on reading," Gardner said. "Now I speak to the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, church organizations, professors and anyone else who wants to listen to me."

Gardner said he will have a 10-inch reflecting telescope set up inside the Science Center on display for his lecture and a 2.5-inch refracting telescope set up outside to view the sun with after his lecture.

"I will speak for about an hour or so inside the Center. Then we will go outside for awhile," he said. "The telescope set up outside will project its image onto a map so that participants will be able to view features on the sun such as sunspots."

Peterson said the equipment

Gardner will use to view the sun was a gift.

"The telescope was willed to Gardner by someone who knew of his interest in astronomy," said Peterson.

Gardner said the comet collision with Jupiter last week was amazing for him.

"The fact that we were able to witness a comet colliding with a planet in our solar system completely blew me away, it was just an unbelievable event," Gardner said.

"I watched the impacts through my 10-inch telescope and clear as day, you can see the impact marks on the planet's surface. You could fit two Earths inside some of the impact marks."

Gardner said some scientists theorized the impacts could have ignited Jupiter into a very small star.

"Jupiter is composed of three gasses — hydrogen, helium and methane — all flammable," he said. "Could you imagine going out at night and seeing a bright blue sun in the sky?"

'Power' cyclists preaching, traveling through country

By Aleksandra Macys
Campus Life Reporter

Summer is the time when families pack up their cars and campers and hit the open road, but some people choose to make their trips by more difficult means — bicycle.

Wheel Power Christian Cyclists: "Wheel" standing for "Witnessing, Helping, Evangelizing, Encouraging and Loving," are a group of 15 bicyclists who are 20-years old to 75-years old.

The group will arrive in Carbondale today and stay through Saturday morning, after beginning a 56-day trip June 19 from San Francisco Golden Gate Bridge.

They will be staying at the Walnut Street Baptist Church, 218 W. Walnut St.

The purpose of the journey is to share the gospel with people they meet along the way.

Bill Carter, pastor of the church, said at 7 tonight there will be an informal service at the church, and members of the group will lead the service and share their experiences on the road.

He said anyone who would like to attend is welcome, but if people want to meet with members of the group at another time, it is best to call first.

"During the day, they (group members) will probably be out in the community talking to people," Carter said.

Saturday, the group will continue their 3,500 mile trip across the United States, and will finish Aug. 13 in Williamsburg, Va.

Health care reform matter of priorities

HEALTH CARE IS AN ISSUE THAT IS IN everyone's thoughts lately, especially President Clinton's. The U.S. House of Representatives and Senate are thinking about it, too. As four committees, two in the House and two in the Senate, have come up with five different reform plans, the taxpayers' meter continues to tick. Health care reform has gone the same way as the budget—mired in partisan politics by politicians who, in their haste to get their own way, have apparently forgotten that their jobs are to serve as representatives of the people. Assuming the politicians manage to get beyond their in-fighting, they have some other problems looming.

AMERICA HAS ONE OF THE HIGHEST standards of living in the world and its citizens enjoy the benefits of a land of plenty. But when one of those citizens suffers a health emergency and finds himself or herself without insurance for some reason, that standard of living goes right down the tubes.

Statistics show that while 83 percent of Americans are insured, 39 million more Americans are not. There is no question that this country needs some sort of basic health care available and affordable to everyone on an equal basis. Health care costs are zooming out of control. A typical visit to the emergency room easily racks up hundreds of dollars in charges.

ASSUMING ANY OF THE PROPOSED HEALTH care plans ever come to be, how will health care be rationed? Someone is going to have to make some very tough choices about the value of life.

For example, two people arrive at the emergency at the same time. The first patient is an 80-year-old man who has suffered a massive heart attack. The second is a 55-year-old man, also suffering from a heart attack and he is the governor. Who gets treated first and who decides?

A worse scenario: two accident victims, one is a young child hit by a car, the other is an escaped prisoner shot by police. Both are near death. Who is more important?

CLEARLY, PRIORITIES WILL HAVE TO BE established and action needs to be taken now, because if the concept of health care for everyone is a stumbling block, the idea of judging the value of life is a brick wall 100-feet thick.

This is what they need to be talking about right now—not who had which idea and whose idea is best, but how the idea will be executed.

CLINTON AND HIS LITTLE HELPERS IN Washington have a lot of work to do just to make health care reform a reality. The logistics of who pays for what portion and who is going to manage the entire deal are overwhelming.

It is time now to get over the minor differences and get the job done so we can grapple with the more serious moral issues of health care reform.

Opinion

Universal health care obtainable; other countries prove it is possible

Last year, when President Clinton issued details of his plan to provide health care to every American, I had already experienced universal health care.

For seven years, I lived in Australia, a country where all residents are entitled to basic health services.

In Australia, health care is based on a single-payer system, meaning the payment of health benefits through a single entity. The national government controls the health care system, called Medicare, and the state governments administer Medicare.

I found the Australian system far superior overall to that here. Employers had nothing to do with providing benefits, and everybody enjoyed the same basic services. For those with extra income, private health insurance could be purchased to obtain top-notch cover.

The debate here over "universal coverage" and "employer mandate" seems primitive when compared to what occurs in Australia and other industrialized countries. The United States lags behind every other comparable country in providing affordable benefits and universal coverage.

Yet, our leaders always tell us we have the best health care system in the world. In a high-tech sense, perhaps that rings true. Otherwise, that claim to greatness sounds like puffing.

I never gave much thought to our health care system until my first year out of law school. In 1977, as a legal aid attorney in Texas, I encountered the absurdities of U.S. health care.

Several of our clients, none with much income, had received essential services at local hospitals. The hospitals billed the clients, with expenses often totalling thousands of dollars. When the bills became overdue, the hospitals turned them over to a collection agency, which began calling and sending threatening letters to our client.

While our clients had little money with which to pay hospital bills, I also had sympathy for the hospitals. What were the hospitals to do, provide free medical services and then face bankruptcy themselves?

The entire matter became a farce. Seventeen years later, the situation for many remains the same.

With more and more workers finding health benefits either non-existent or shrinking and private insurance exorbitant, something has to give.

Americans surely have the capability to design an affordable, truly universal health care system.

University students have a great stake in any changes to the health care system. Health care may seem irrelevant to students at this time, since their fees cover health services.

However, once they enter the world beyond the university, the pitfalls of the existing hodge-podge will become evident.

Testing for cannabis misleading

Cannabis, although it has been used as a drug since at least 2700 B.C., has come under new criticism by supporters of today's Prohibition. Some of this criticism is aimed at separating the long history of marijuana from any present discussion by labeling today's product "the New Marijuana," variously claimed to be from ten to one thousand times as potent as it was in the 1960's.

In this way, parents who smoked marijuana then can be led to distrust their own experiences, many of which were contrary to the myths of prohibition they were taught.

The "source" for these distortions is a study sponsored by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, which has tested samples from the DEA State Police, and local police departments each year since 1974.

No claim is made in the study that the sampling technique is representative of the marijuana at large, or even of the marijuana in police custody.

In 1975, the base year most often used to compare with the "New Marijuana," only 150 seizures were tested to arrive at the normalized average THC potency of .48%.

U.S. Customs alone made over 17,790 seizures in that year, none of which were included in the study.

The difference in sampling size is significant, since sample size is crucial to obtaining a representative sample. It is important to note that only in 1991 did the weight of seizures tested in the program reach 1% of the total seizures made by DEA and Customs.

The claims made for the "New Marijuana" also ignore the fact that potent pot is safer to smoke than weak ditch weed.

Since marijuana smoke contains carcinogens, it only makes sense to smoke less of it to achieve a high. That is why it has been made into hashish for millennia. Potent marijuana is neither new nor is it a threat. Prohibition is both.

According to Winters' job description, she will work closely with faculty and staff to develop and oversee personnel policies and procedures for academic affairs, assist in equal-opportunity recruiting efforts for University employees and serve as a resource person for the academic community on appointments, tenure, promotion and related issues, such as faculty and staff professional advancement.

She will also interview faculty candidates, approve faculty hiring requests and help resolve grievances.

Winters came to SIUC as a visiting assistant professor in 1977 and is currently a full professor in foreign language and linguistics. Winters said her position as head of the foreign language department helped prepare her for the associate vice president position.

"Assad doesn't want what (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat did in Camp David and Arafat did last year—to agree at the beginning to end the state of war and then fill in the blanks on the rest," said a Western diplomat. "He wants a clear and complete agreement from the start. No normalization first. No linkages."

As King Hussein and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin wrapped up their emotional two-day conciliation visit to Washington Tuesday, Syria's official media ran a full account of the summit.

It was a rare, exceptional and altogether neutral treatment of an Israeli leader.

Rabin's statements, as well as those of Hussein and President Clinton, were run in full in government-controlled newspapers. A photograph of the handshake graced the front pages. The pledge by the two countries to end their state of war and open channels of cooperation was the main headline.

As always, there was a Syrian twist to this unusual treatment of an event that not only excluded Syria, but represented Jordan's break from the Syrian-written script for keeping contacts with Israel at a bare minimum. The coverage distanced Syria from its erstwhile Arab partner in the peace talks while reasserting Damascus' pivotal role in the process and the importance of its rapport with the United States.

"A Black Day in the History of Jordan," trumpeted the government paper Tishreen over a story that blatantly exaggerated the dismal turnout at a Jordanian opposition rally. "Syria Works for a Peace that Preserves Arab Rights and Dignity," read another headline.

All the newspapers, as well as state television, prominently featured a story detailing the secret contacts between King Hussein and Israeli leaders throughout the decades. The clear implication was that the Jordanian monarch had never been a steadfast supporter of a united Arab embargo on dealings with Israel.

All the papers, too, featured as one of their main stories a report that Clinton had called Assad Monday to assure him of full U.S. commitment to a "comprehensive" peace and of Syria's pivotal role in achieving it.

A front-page editorial in Tishreen did not mention Jordan, but contained a hard-hitting denunciation of the Palestine Liberation Organization's self-rule accord with Israel. It's not working, the editorial said, because separate Arab peace accords with Israel are doomed to failure.

"The policy of Syria has been constant and stable," said Tishreen's editor in chief, Mohammed al-Wadi. "Arafat and even King Hussein may sign an accord, but it will not change the Arab-Israeli conflict. We are not going to rush into a bad agreement. ... We lived without (a settlement) for 50 years and we can live like that another 50 years."

Syria's dispute with Israel is centered on the Golan Heights, a two-way gun platform of a plateau that not only looks down on the northern Galilee region of Israel, but juts above the horizon and offers a view of downtown Damascus.

The Golan was captured in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, when Assad was Syria's defense minister and Rabin was the Israeli army chief of staff. The Syrian leader wants the entire plateau back—"no ifs, ands or buts," as a Western diplomat put it—before implementing any peace treaty with Israel.

Israeli officials have said they are willing to return some, perhaps all, of the Golan, but first want a clear commitment as to what Syria means by peace.

A CHINA TOUR GROUP is now forming. Retired faculty members of SIU and their friends are invited to join a group tour to the Peoples' Republic of China scheduled for October, 1994. The trip is scheduled for 16 days and will visit Beijing, Shanghai, Hangzhou, Xian and other sites. Total cost is approximately $2,690. Interested persons should call Dr. Auerbach at 549-6586.

SUPPORT GROUP OFFERED for Caregivers of Head-Injured Family Members. The SIUC Support Group Project is designed to allow those caring for a head-injured family member to meet with others in similar caregiving situations. The group will meet for 1 1/2 hours a week for eight weeks, and will begin as soon as enough interested persons have been identified. Respite services will be available for those who prefer not to leave those for whom they are caring at home while they attend the group. To join the group, or for more information, call Kathleen Chwalisz at 457-8513.

A NATIONAL POETRY Contest is now open to Carbondale Poets. A total of 52 prizes will be awarded in a national poetry competition sponsored by the International Library of Famous Poets, open free to everyone. The first Place poet from each state and the District of Columbia will be awarded a book prize, with a $1,000 Grand Prize. Entries must be postmarked by midnight, August 15. To enter, send one poem 20 lines or less: National Poetry Competition, 421 N. Rodeo Dr., Suite 455, Beverly Hills, CA 90210.

Vermont towns fight Wal-Mart invasions

The Washington Post

ST ALBANS, Vt.—The last time this small New England town saw this much excitement was in 1864, when 22 confederate soldiers rode in on horseback, robbed three banks and shot up Main Street.

Today, 130 years later, St. Albans is fighting a second invasion from the south. The Arkansas-based retailer Wal-Mart has announced plans to build one of its trademark superstores two miles outside of town.

Wal-Mart has done this countless times before, creating over the past 40 years a 2,000-store empire of discount outlets in small towns across North America—often to the consternation of local merchants.

Vermont, however, is different. Wal-Mart has stores in 49 U.S. states.

But, despite years of trying, it has none in Vermont. St. Albans—along with Williston down the road, where Wal-Mart has been trying to open another store—represents America's last stand against oversized shopping carts, computerized inventory and all the other breakthroughs in mall culture that Wal-Mart has brought to American retailing.

Twice in the past four years, attempts by Wal-Mart to win zoning approval for new stores here have gone to the Vermont Supreme Court.

Vermont Gov. Howard Dean (D), flew to Arkansas last October to inquire of the company's president, like some stern father on prom night, as to Wal-Mart's intentions with his state. A protest group called Vermonters against the Wal has staged demonstrations up and down the state.

There are anti-Wal-Mart bumper stickers and posters and petitions and a general air so apocalyptic that, as one letter to the Burlington Free Press recently said, if even one Wal-Mart were to find its way into Vermont, the state might as well make its slogan: "Just like New Jersey, only colder."

"We're not done yet," said John Finn, a former state senator and leader of the anti-Wal-Mart fight in St. Albans. "We're going to keep fighting the buggers."

If Wal-Mart represents the future of American retailing, Vermont may be the last place in the country where the future can be held at bay.

coordinator for United We Stand America/Illinois, said his organization is non-partisan.

"We focus on issues, not on personalities," he said.

The organization forms issue teams to examine topics such as health care and international trade to decide the organization's stand on an issue, he said.

Motter said fiscal responsibility affects all U.S. citizens regardless of their political identity.

Unless politicians place more emphasis on reducing government spending and strengthening the U.S. economy by such methods as voting against international trade treaties, greater problems will occur, he said.

"The country will be bankrupt by the time we get old," Motter said.

Jim Bunton, former president of SIUC College Democrats, said there are two important things to remember in any campaign work.

"When finding a campaign to become involved with, people must look for an area where they can make a difference and find a candidate they believe in," he said.

Bunton said he found when campaigning door-to-door most people were receptive to the information offered.

"We usually knew who we were going to talk to when we went around, but even if we didn't I met people who were appreciative of what we had to say," he said.

"Especially young people who are not that involved with politics seemed to want to know more."

The message they are proclaiming is "Through all the mountains and the valleys of life, God is always with you."

Judy Bowman, founder of the group, said there is a real joy being out in the open and seeing God's creation up-close.

"I can't help but compare life to my bike-riding experiences," Bowman said. "Many times in life we find ourselves gliding along at an easy, even pace. At other times, those mountains seem to jump right out in front of us."

Bowman said she can tackle all the obstacles in life with the help of God.

Bowman has a lot of riding experience to go on.

In April 1991, she set the world record for stationary cycling, riding 3,000 miles in seven days and eight and one-half hours, sleeping only two hours a night.

She also has cycled across the United States on two other occasions — in 1991 from Los Angeles to Boston and in 1992 from Seattle to Williamsburg.

Bowman also teaches bike safety and riding clinics and organizes new Wheel Power cycling clubs across the United States.

More information about the group can be obtained by calling 804-237-5530 or by writing Wheel Power Christian Cyclists, Inc. at P.O. Box 4791, Lynchburg, Va. 24502.

While in Carbondale, the group can be contacted at the church at 457-0479.

Beyond parental advisory: Record label blames artist

By Richard Harrington
The Washington Post

Epic, a division of Sony, has decided the Record Industry Association of America's "Parental Advisory: Explicit Lyrics" sticker is not enough.

In addition to the voluntary sticker, which has been in use since 1989, Epic Street (a new rap subsidiary of Epic) has come up with an additional sticker for "We Come Strapped," the new album by West Coast gangsta rapper MC Eiht. The new one reads: "The lyrical content contained on this album solely expresses the views of the artist."

Funny, we never thought any different.

Perhaps best known for the hit single "Straight Up Menace" from the film "Menace II Society" (in which he also starred), Eiht and his group CMW (Compton's Most Wanted) have released three previous albums through Epic, including "Music to Driveby." Like Snoop Doggy Dogg and Warren G (Dr. Dre's brother and hitmaker in his own right, now with "Regulate ... G Funk Era"), Eiht is part of the soft-core wing of gangsta rap, with explicit lyrics and hard sentiments built upon music that is more groove-driven and seductive than assaultive in the manner of N.W.A. or Ice T.

The culprit, as usual, is a song involving the police. The cut, "Take 2 Wit Me," is a narrative in which a drug dealer kills two policemen in the process of fleeing a bust ("They might get me but (expensive) 'em/I'm a take two wit me").

With the revenge fable "Goin' Out Like Geez" and cuts titled "Niggaz That Kill," "Def Wish III" and "We Come Strapped," the album certainly fits the bill for explicitness, particularly in terms of youth violence. But while many gangsta rap albums contain similar scenarios, critical attention and legal problems continue to focus on lyrics about police.

In a statement explaining its position, Epic noted that "MC Eiht uses powerful imagery which is intense and often graphic. Some may find his views disturbing. We are opposed to censorship, and support MC Eiht's right to express his views.

After discussion with the artist and his manager, all of us agreed on the wording and use of a second sticker. MC Eiht's manager, John Smith, was fully aware of plans for the sticker."

The perception, of course, is that Sony is looking for ways to indemnify itself against possible legal problems such as those faced by Time Warner after 1992's Body Count/"Cop Killer" and Tupac Shakur controversies.

In the latter case, Time Warner and its Intertec label were sued by the family of a slain Texas trooper after the assailant confessed he had been listening to a violent cop-killing scenario on Shakur's "2Pacalypse Now" when he was pulled over in a stolen car, and that the recording had put him a frame of mind to shoot the trooper. A Texas jury rejected the "2Pac-made-me-do-it" defense and sentenced the accused to death. The trooper's widow has filed a civil case against Intertec and Time Warner that remains unheard.

Officials share governing ideas with Bulgarians

By Kyle J. Chapman
International Reporter

For the third time this summer, SIUC has opened its doors for the education of foreign administrators, with the welcoming of 15 Bulgarian government administrators.

As a part of a municipal management training program, which began July 16, the Bulgarian visitors will be at SIUC until Aug. 3. The administrators are examining government theory in the School of Law and in the local Carbondale government.

The Master's of Public Administration program received a grant from the United States Information Agency to sponsor the training program, according to Marvin Nowicki, the assistant director of the MPA program.

Nowicki said the government of Bulgaria is moving away from communism and has to develop the ability to govern on the local level.

Visiting administrators observe practices state-wide

"Now in Bulgaria the communist practice is history, so they are trying to do more things at the local level," he said. "They have to come up with their own revenues and find ways to do things — that is why they are here."

Nowicki said there are many local administrators and staff advising the visiting Bulgarians.

"Professors from the School of Law and political science have discussed with them theory and text book things," he said. "Local mayors from Muphysboro, Carbondale and from all over talked to them about the roles of local government because they are making the transition from communist authority."

Professor Uday Desai, Associate Professor Osbin L. Ervin, Assistant Professor John Hamman and Associate Professor R. Keith Snavelly, all faculty from the SIUC department of political science, visited Bulgaria in early June to conduct workshops for 150 administrators of Bulgaria's transitional government.

"Now in Bulgaria the communist practice is history, so they are trying to do more things at the local level."

—Marvin Nowicki

The professors said the biggest challenge for the Bulgarian administrators will be to transfer the government-owned property to private owners.

The second part of this program includes Bulgarian mayors, regional governors, vice governors and other city administrators number of things, like how to limit the ability of the local government to go into debt and how much power we give to our local governments to regulate land use — they were a lively bunch."

The Bulgarians visited Washington, D.C., before coming here and will take trips to East St. Louis, St. Louis, Paducah, Ky., Clayton, Mo., and Springfield to observe administrators in state and city governments, according to a press release.

A reception for the Bulgarian administrators will be Monday, Aug. 1, at the Lesar Law Building auditorium following a press conference at 3:30 p.m.

SIUC Head Start director attends program at UCLA Anderson School of Management

by Sam House
Staff Reporter

The director of the SIUC Head Start Program was one of 40 participants nation-wide chosen to attend a UCLA training program sponsored by Johnson & Johnson, the health care products manufacturer.

Ijlal N. Haqq, who has directed SIUC's Head Start program for seven years, had to be screened by the Head Start Bureau and approved by the Region Five Head Start office before attending the UCLA program, she said.

To compete for the fellowship, participants must be directors for at least three years and be chosen by the Program Advisory Board, John Juchniewicz, Johnson & Johnson corporate communications department member, said.

The management training program is held at the UCLA Anderson School of Management. It builds both executive and entrepreneurial management skills which enables the directors of Head Start programs to work with the business end of their programs, Juchniewicz said.

"It's like a mini M.B.A.," he said. Marketing finance concepts, computers and information systems, human resource development and development of management skills are some of the topics the program emphasized, Haqq said.

"It was a great experience," she said.

"It's (Johnson & Johnson Management Fellows Program) like a mini M.B.A."

implemented upon return from the program, Juchniewicz said.

Haqq, along with SIUC Head Start's executive director, Seymour Bryson, developed a MIP that created a research unit which would monitor and track gains of Head Start children into public school systems, Haqq said.

Their MIP was one of ten to be presented during the management fellows program and will be implemented on Sept. 9, Haqq said.

"It will be looking at positive long-term effects of children and families in Head Start," she said.

Johnson & Johnson sponsored the program by paying for tuition, faculty development, special events and other academic costs associated with the program. Head Start covered travel and housing expenses, Juchniewicz said.

Head Start is a federally-funded program that gives support to low-income children and their families. Over 13 million families have been aided by Head Start since its beginning in 1965 and is now expanding its services to accommodate over 750,000 more, according to a Johnson & Johnson press release.

Hull not pleased with new coach

Los Angeles Times

ANAHEIM, Calif.—Much of St. Louis is delirious over the arrival of Mike Keenan—as if the Stanley Cup will inevitably follow after he serves a 60-day NHL suspension for jumping from the New York Rangers to the Blues.

But one prominent citizen isn't sure the relationship is going to work: Brett Hull.

Hull said diplomatically Tuesday that hiring Keenan as coach and general manager is "great for the organization," but admitted that he has misgivings about how he will get along with Keenan, who brought the Rangers their first Stanley Cup in 54 years.

"The way I play the game is totally different from the way he would like his players to play the game," said Hull, in Anaheim for a youth hockey camp. "Like, I can't play without smiling out there. I can imagine when he sees me smiling out there in Chicago Stadium or Maple Leaf Gardens, he'd absolutely have a convulsion fit."

"He's a great coach, a great hockey man. But I play the game with a lot of fun and high spirits. And the more serious you try to make the game, the worse I'm going to be. So, to me, I find it hard to believe that my personality and his are going to get along too well. Although he's a great man away from the game, from what I understand about his coaching style, I just can't imagine him enjoying the way I play the game." Hull, a five-time All-Star who has led the NHL in goals three times but is thought by many observers to be a one-dimensional player, has become emblematic of hockey in St. Louis.

"He (Keenan) is a great coach, a great hockey man. But I play the game with a lot of fun and high spirits. And the more serious you try to make the game, the worse I am going to be."

—Brett Hull

However, he has become increasingly disgruntled in recent years because of the trades of linemate Adam Oates in 1992 and close friend Garth Butcher last season. This year, there has been speculation that he, too, might be traded before completing the final two years of his contract. If he were to have any say in it, such a trade would be to the Los Angeles Kings, to play with close friend Wayne Gretzky.

"That's my dream," Hull said. "For a goal-scorer to be able to play with the greatest there ever was, or is ... in L.A. I'd like to play with Wayne. "It's always tough to say, but I think I've traveled my course in St. Louis and it's time for me to move on. ... I love St. Louis and I'll always love it. Right now, at this point in my career, I think I need a spark, something to make the game fun again."

One trade rumor before the June draft had the Kings offering defenseman Darryl Sydor, forward Mike Donnelly and the No. 7 choice to St. Louis for Hull. But the Blues are said to have wanted defenseman Rob Blake instead. Both teams denied to agent Michael Barnett, who represents Hull and Gretzky, that they discussed a deal.

through injuries discovers—that his career can't go on forever. Or perhaps because, at 31 and happily married, he is becoming more realistic about life.

I admired Cunningham's disarming sense of his situation when he said on the first day of training camp that 1994 could be his final season with the Eagles.

"There's a lot of pressure on me this year," says Cunningham, who suffered a broken fibula in an Oct. 3, 1993, game against the New York Jets and missed the remainder of the season.

"This is a big year for us. If we're not successful, there could be some changes. With the salary cap, illegally tape-recorded an act of sexual intercourse with a student from Florida A&M, another Tallahassee college.

Within days, leading rusher Sean Jackson and reserve tight end Kamari Charlton were arrested and charged with indecent exposure and sexual battery, respectively. —A second Sports Illustrated story in the June 6 issue detailed claims that two former Florida State players received pay for summer jobs they never showed up for at a veterinary clinic outside Jacksonville. —Anticipated charges by the NCAA of a lack of institutional control seemed even more likely last week, when Florida State athletic director Bob Goin was placed on paid leave after reports that he received $18,000 worth of gifts and travel from boosters in the past three years and that he used his position to benefit members of his family.

After the report of November's shopping spree, the Florida State administration hired Mike Glazier, a former NCAA investigator whose legal practice specializes in discovering all of the dirt at scandal-ridden college athletic programs.

The NCAA usually accepts Glazier's findings as accurate.

The results of his investigation are expected to be released this week.

At a time when Florida State figured to be cashing in on its national championship, the cleaning bill—including legal fees and revenue lost if the NCAA places it on probation that keeps the Seminoles out of bowls and off television—for this mess could exceed $2 million.

It's not the kind of attention the ACC expected when it brought in Florida State, which figures to win at least 10 games for the eighth consecutive year in 1994. Sentiment within the conference, however, is that abuses by agents and boosters are possible just about anywhere.

"What's going on there could happen to any of us," Maryland coach Mark Duffner said. "Just like Florida State, we don't always know who's contacting our players."

North Carolina State Coach Mike O'Connell said: "The only way you can stop it is to have 24-hour surveillance of the players."

Gene Corrigan, commissioner of the ACC, said heading off illegal benefits isn't a new concern.

"When I was at Notre Dame and Virginia (as athletic director), I used to worry about this all the time," Corrigan said. "Ralph Sampson had to move into Terry Holland's house to live so people couldn't find him."

Corrigan said the ACC, unlike the Pac-10 and its involvement in a similar case involving Washington last year, probably will leave the punishment of Florida State up to the NCAA.

The Pac-10 penalized Washington with a two-year bowl ban and one-year loss of TV revenue.

"I thought when the Pac-10 hit Washington, it really whacked them," Corrigan said. "I just think it would be better if the NCAA took care of that. That becomes a divisive issue in a conference in which people are already wondering who turned us in."

Several of the players involved in the Foot Locker incident gave up their remaining eligibility.

Acting on Bowden's recommendations, Florida State president Sandy D'Alemberte is expected to announce the suspensions of two to five players this week.

Benfley has been on indefinite suspension, but Bowden hinted that he won't be sitting out the entire season.

to the players because the umpire has to make a judgment call.

"The rule is extremely harsh," Henderson said. "How does a umpire know if a pitcher is really throwing at the hitter or the ball just gets away?"

Henderson said there are other ways to deal with pitchers throwing at batters.

"One possible solution is to give a pitcher a warning, and the second time eject him from the game and then the third time suspend the player for a game," Henderson said.

He said because of large pro contracts and threat of injury, pitchers do not pitch inside anymore so when a batter gets hit he charges the pitcher. This has led to the game becoming less aggressive.

"I would like to see baseball go back to pitchers brushing batters off the plate and players taking each other out on the bases and playing aggressively, because that is the way baseball was and should be played," Henderson said.

Even though brawls happen with increasing frequency in the majors, Henderson said fights do not happen as much on the collegiate level.

Sure fights happen but through my years of coaching I haven't been apart of an all-out fight," Henderson said. "We have come out of the dugout and been involved in some arguments, but not a real fight."

The committee also recommended giving a three-game suspension to batters or runners who initiate a fight by charging a pitcher, and a pitcher would receive a three-game suspension for initiating a fight by leaving the pitcher's mound.

If approved the rules would go into affect for the 1995 baseball season.

between the Patterson situation and the manner in which former Benton High School standout Jolo Johnson left the program.

Johnson scored more points (149) for SIUC during the 1992-'93 campaign than any other freshman in Saluki history who never started a game.

After the Patterson signing in '93, it looked as if he and Johnson would be the backcourt of the future for SIUC.

But Johnson said freshman on the Saluki basketball team were not treated as well as the veteran players, which was one of the reasons he chose to leave.

"I think they (coaches) have a hard time at SIU because they just look at their top six or seven players," he said. "They get treated better than the rest of the team. It's like you've got take care of them before they take care of you."

Johnson is now playing for Rend Lake Junior College and hopes to sign on with another Division I program after the upcoming season.

Patterson said, when he was recruited by SIUC he was led to believe more playing time would have been given to him.

"To come in for Paul Lusk so he can get a breather is not what I came here for," he said. "I wasn't told that when I was recruited."

Despite Patterson's bitterness surrounding his Saluki basketball career, he said SIUC was a good experience.

"I loved SIU, it just wasn't the place for me basketball wise," he said.

Ex-Saluki hoops players speak out

Johnson, Patterson express disappointment with team

When Marcus Patterson came to SIUC last year on a basketball scholarship, he was coined as an immediate impact player.

Coming out of Chicago's DeLaSalle High School, the 6' 2" guard was a McDonald's All-American nominee and rated among the top-20 seniors in Illinois by the "Windy City Roundball Review." The "All Star Sports Report" even went as far as naming Patterson to their elite list of the top-500 seniors in the country.

Saluki head basketball coach Rich Herrin said in the 1993 SIUC media guide that, "Marcus is a complete player who should step in and help us quickly."

But Patterson's help was limited in his inaugural season as a Dawg, averaging under five minutes of action per game in a back-up role to junior guard Paul Lusk and senior Chris Lowery.

With Lowery having used up his four years of eligibility, it looked as if Patterson would finally get a shot to prove himself until Herrin said in a press release last Thursday that, "Marcus will not be a member of SIUC's basketball program next season."

Herrin gave no explanation for the departure of his once blue-chip prospect from Chicago, but Patterson confirmed his plans to leave SIUC and said he was not pleased with the way his Saluki basketball future appeared.

"I didn't see my first year here as very promising," he said. "I don't want to play behind Paul Lusk for another year so this is the best choice for me."

Patterson will have to sit out a season if he decides to transfer to another Division I hoops program, which he said makes him wish Herrin would have red-shirted him last fall rather than being allowed such a limited role.

"I thought it would have been better for me to red-shirt, but it's nobody's fault," he said. "I just wasn't happy."

Patterson said he has several options to explore and might be interested in transferring to Northeastern, Lewis, Northern Illinois or the University of Illinois at Chicago.

UIC assistant coach Dennis Willis said Patterson would have to walk-on for the Flames since all of their scholarships are taken for the 1994-95 season.

"He has inquired about coming here, but we don't have a release (from his SIUC scholarship) on him yet," Willis said. "Technically, we are not allowed to speak to him until he receives a release."

NCAA Baseball Rules Committee makes stiff penalties for fighting

By Doug Durso
Sports Reporter

Baseball players who take part in fights on the field could be facing stiff penalties next spring, including being suspended for the rest of the season, in an attempt by the National Collegiate Athletic Association to eliminate fighting from the game.

The NCAA Baseball Rules Committee has recommended team members who leave their position on the field or come onto the field during a fight will be suspended for three games after their first offense and would be suspended for the rest of the season, including post season action, for the second offense.

The committee met earlier this month in Kansas City, Kan. and will send their recommendations to the NCAA Executive Committee for approval at their meeting on Aug. 3-5.

Saluki assistant coach Ken Henderson said he thought the penalties were too harsh.

"I'm all for less fighting but things like that are bound to happen when people are in the heat of competition and missing several games especially the rest of the season is too severe," Henderson said.

Based on reports showing hit batsmen as the cause for most baseball fights, the committee also recommended laws for starting fights because pitchers are throwing at or hitting batters intentionally.

The proposed rule said that pitchers who are ejected for intentionally throwing at a batter will receive a four-game suspension for the first offense, an eight-game suspension for the second offense and will be suspended for the rest of the season for the third offense.

Bill L. Rowe Jr., athletic director at Southwest Missouri State University and chairman of the committee said in an NCAA News article that this would cut down on fights.

"We feel these stiff penalties for pitchers who intentionally throw at hitters will decrease the number of fights and all-out brawls significantly, to the point that we might achieve our goal, which is to eliminate fighting from the game," Rowe said.

However, Henderson said that the punishment is not fair

Cunningham may exit following this season

By Bob Glesner
The Sporting News

Randall Cunningham says and does so many crazy things I sometimes wonder if the Philadelphia Eagles quarterback is living on the same planet.

We're dealing with a man who once said he wants to be buried in a pyramid, who once wore a hat with the word "Eagles" spelled backward on the front and the expression "Let me be me" on the back, who once staged his own minicamp by flying several teammates to his Las Vegas home to see how his surgically repaired knee was progressing.

Somehow, nearly 10 years into a career filled with marvelous athletic gifts but unfulfilled potential, Cunningham is beginning to make sense. Maybe it's because he has missed most of two of the last three seasons and realizes what every athlete who lives

'Foot Locker Scandal' stays with Florida State

By Paul McMullen
The Baltimore Sun

WESLEY CHAPEL, Fla.—"But, anyway, down at the Foot Locker...."

This isn't Lou Holtz or Steve Spurrier taking a potshot at Florida State, the latest crisis zone in college athletics. It's Bobby Bowden himself using gallows humor and his down-home charm in an attempt to defuse what is, thanks to Tonya Harding, America's second-biggest sporting scandal of 1994.

After 28 years as a head coach and 239 victories, Bowden nailed down his first national championship, but a year that began in celebration has become one of explanation. The agent-shepherded shopping spree at a Tallahassee, Fla., mall, the apparently illegal summer jobs, the player arrests for sexual improprieties? What was Bowden to do?

"It ain't like we shot somebody or robbed a store or killed somebody," Bowden said at the Atlantic Coast Conference Football Kickoff last weekend. "Sports Illustrated wants to tie us into it and say we should know about it... I feel like it's been run into the ground... If we hadn't won the national championship, no one ever would've heard of Foot Locker."

Are Florida State's troubles just an example, as Bowden says, of the media's attacking the guy on top, or evidence of a program that is as out of control as Oklahoma's was in 1987? Regardless of the resolution of the Florida State scandal, Bowden's image as one of the good guys in college football has taken a beating in recent months. —Sports Illustrated's cover story May 16 detailed the extent to which unscrupulous agents carried favor with some Florida State players.

Last Nov. 7, the day after the Seminoles beat Maryland at Byrd Stadium and six days before their only 1993 loss, at Notre Dame, at least seven players were taken to the aforementioned Foot Locker at a Tallahassee mall.

"It ain't like we shot somebody or robbed a store or killed somebody. Sports Illustrated wants to tie us into it and say we should know about it... I feel like its been run into the ground... If we hadn't won the national championship, no one ever would've heard of Foot Locker."
