City plans action against Frankie's

By John Kmita
Staff Reporter

Debate of license violation prompted by closure

The Liquor Control Commission decided at a meeting Tuesday night that a hearing by the city attorney was necessary to determine if formal charges should be brought against a local establishment.

City Clerk Janet Vaught said Frankie's Bar and Grill, 204 W. College, has been closed for business since Oct. 18 and never gave the liquor commission notice of why it closed.

Liquor laws mandate that any establishment with a liquor license must notify the commission in advance if the establishment will be closed for periods exceeding 10 days, she said.

If the establishment is closed for more than 60 days, the commission can bring formal liquor law violation charges against the owners of the establishment.

Vaught said the owners of the establishment had not notified the commission of reasons for the closure prior to Tuesday night's meeting.

Also during the liquor commission meeting, member John Mills said the commission

Search for contractor halts refuge cleanup

By Aaron Butler
Staff Reporter

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife service is searching for a new contractor for hazardous metal cleanup in Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge, after the original company discontinued its contract due to the discovery of dioxin in the area.

Cleanup of the Crab Orchard Metals Operative Unit was contracted to Heritage Remediation Industries, Inc. of Indianapolis. This summer Heritage built a landfill shell on the refuge in which 9,000 cubic yards of soil contaminated with arsenic, cadmium, cyanide and lead and would be buried.

Mary Monett, spokesperson for Fish and Wildlife, said the contractor had been unable to continue the job after new tests revealed additional contamination.

"Before excavating the contaminated soil, Heritage Industries discovered low levels of dioxin in the area, and terminated their contract," she said. "Heritage policy prohibits them from working with any level of dioxin, and as a result, the company was forced to drop the project."

Construction of the landfill was completed this summer, and grass was planted before Heritage left. However according to Lee Ann Moore, the project will be delayed at least a year as a result of the change.

"We had planned to complete the project this fall," she said. "Now we've had to delay completion until next fall, so we've lost a year."

Moore, said dioxin, a carcinogenic substance, was found in levels low enough that no change in cleanup procedure is planned, aside from notifying prospective contractors of the additional contamination.

The new contractor will be responsible for excavating the contaminate soil, mixing some of it with a cement—like substance to stabilize it.

The Metals Operable Unit is one of five units of contamination designated by the

USG plans book swap to save students cash

The exchange will take place from Dec. 12-16 between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. in the Student Center's Illinois Room and its hallway.

Duane Sherman, USG senator for the college of Technical Careers and coordinator of the book exchange, said the only aspect of the exchange that is not finished is some paperwork and the computer program which will organize the exchange.

"We're about 95 percent of the way done on the computer system," he said. "That has really come a long way in a short time."

The program is planned to be ready in time for the exchange, and is currently being worked on by four students with the help of William Wright, an SIUC computer science professor.

"I went to him with an idea of what I wanted from the program and he wrote it," Sherman said. "They (the four students) are putting the segments of the program together."

Sherman said the entire exchange will cost about $3,500, and hopes students will support it enough to break even.

"It is definitely important for it to do well," Sherman said. "We need a lot of student participation. If the students come out for it, that's a message to continue the program. With the 10 percent commission, we have to trade about $35,000 worth of books to break even. It sounds like a lot, but it isn't."

USG president Edwin Sawyer said USG is allocating funds for the exchange because of its importance to the students.

"The reason is because it will save students money in the long run. If we lose money, that's part of the experiment. If

SIU plea for review denied

A federal judge has denied a motion by the SIUC Board of Trustees which sought the reconsideration of a $93,030 judgment he previously awarded to an SIUC civil service employee as a result of the University's failure to accommodate the employee's religious practices.

University officials are considering an appeal.

U.S. District Court Judge William L. Beatty, sitting in East St. Louis, issued the order Nov. 25 that refused to alter the previous order he had issued in September. That September judgment found the University unlawfully terminated Jeffrey A. Cloud, an SIUC painter, on the basis of his religion.

BEIJING MAY RESCIND MCDONALD'S LEASE

BEIJING—Beijing is having a Big Mac attack, but not the kind that leaves foreign investors hungering for more. The city government wants to kick McDonald's off prime real estate near Tiananmen Square, just three years into a 20-year lease, to make way for a new high-rise development. When the city gave McDonald's a long-term lease, most investors were shying away from China because of the bloody 1989 crackdown on democracy demonstrators. But now the city has promised the property to Hong Kong tycoon Li Ka-shing, who plans to build an office and commercial complex called Oriental Plaza. The McDonald's spot is only one of several high-profile disputes that many foreign investors say call into question the willingness of the Chinese government and its state-owned entities to live up to the terms of contracts they sign with foreign businesses.

GERMANY CONSIDERS NEW IMMIGRATION LAW

BERLIN—Germany, ever struggling with questions of immigration and national identity, is now wringing its hands over whether to write into law the concept of second-class citizenship for some foreigners. In what seems to be a case of good intentions let astray by compromise, the coalition government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl has transformed a proposal to liberalize citizenship laws into something resembling an awkward gesture of condescension. Under the proposal, German-born children of foreigners would be offered a "trial citizenship" entitling them to a German passport, instead of having to wait until age 16 as they do now. But like all other immigrants, they would still be subject to expulsion along the way. And upon reaching age 18, they could lose their chances for full citizenship by either ending up on welfare, committing a crime or refusing to renounce their original nationality.

STAGE PRODUCTION: GLOBE THEATER REBUILT

LONDON—A soft, wet breeze blows in from the Thames River as the master thatcher lays the Norfolk reed for the first thatched roof built in London in three centuries. The roof will be atop a re-creation of 17th-century London's famed Globe Theater, known around the world as the place where William Shakespeare's "Hamlet," "King Lear," "Othello" and "Macbeth" had their first public performances. The reconstruction was the dream of the expatriate American actor Sam Wanamaker, who died last December as the new Globe was taking shape. A brewery had been built on the site of Shakespeare's Globe, and the only memorial was a small, sooty marker. Wanamaker decided then and there the Globe should be rebuilt. The new Globe rises about 100 yards from where Shakespeare's plays were originally performed.

THIGH CREAMS FLOOD U.S. COSMETIC MARKET

LOS ANGELES—Appearing on national television last winter, Los Angeles physician Bruce M. Frome declared that he had developed an ointment that can, as he put it, remove "as much weight as you want from anywhere you want to lose it." Frome assured celebrity interviewer Larry King that the product would hit the market within five years. But why was King discussing flab with a certified pain specialist and anesthesiologist? Because Frome is the hurricane force behind thigh cream, an asthma medication-laced ointment touted as the cellulite cure women have been waiting for. Thigh creams didn't exist a year ago — and they still have not been proven to work. The federal Food and Drug Administration, concerned that not enough is known about the product's effects, is monitoring thigh cream closely. But thanks in large part to Frome's energetic leg work, Skinny Dip, Slim-Thigh and dozens of other brands have taken cosmetic counters by storm.

RESIDENTS PROTEST NUCLEAR-WASTE DUMP

AIKEN, S.C.—For more than 30 years, South Carolina has hosted the nation's third-largest repository of spent fuel from nuclear reactors. For most of that time, the majority of state residents apparently felt that the jobs and income that flowed into their state along with the radioactive fuel rods made the bargain worthwhile. But now Aiken residents are reacting to the waste issue with skepticism. Since 1963, authorities have stockpiled an estimated 200 metric tons of high-level radioactive waste — mostly from domestic research reactors — at the SRP.

SIUC researcher says new nutritional labels may be too complex

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

New food labels may adequately disclose nutritional and other product information, but an SIUC researcher says they may be too complicated for many senior citizens and others to understand.

Siva Balasubramanian, associate professor of marketing, is examining consumer use of nutritional information on food labels in a study which began in the summer of 1993.

While Balasubramanian conducted two field studies in Carbondale, Catherine Cole, co-investigator and associate professor of marketing at the University of Iowa, is conducting laboratory studies.

Field studies conducted the past two summers placed a research assistant, posing as a store employee taking inventory, in a grocery store cereal aisle to observe people choosing cereal, Balasubramanian said.

Christina Smoczynski, a graduate student in accounting, served as the research assistant in last summer's study.

As research assistant, Smoczynski recorded how much time subjects spent reading the packages, how many boxes they looked at, and how long it took them to select a product. Once they selected a product, she had them fill out a survey reporting their familiarity with the product and their main reason for choosing it.

"It was interesting to see how many people looked at the label," she said. "I was surprised a lot of people didn't know a unit of fat, a unit of potassium."

Balasubramanian said the lab study, which was first conducted last year and is being repeated by Cole, involves subjects working on a computer to select a cereal that fits specific nutritional specifications.

"We presented people with a problem, for example, to choose a cereal that has at least two grams of fiber per serving and less than 200 milligrams of sodium per serving," he said.

The studies, which will be completed early next year, were repeated to test the impact of the new food labels, Balasubramanian said.

"What we are doing is comparing the new and old labels in the field study as well as in the lab study," he said.

Balasubramanian said the studies are also comparing the consumer choices of subjects age 60-89 with younger adults.

"The gerontological and consumer-behavior literature suggest that elderly people may be processing product information differently than young adults do," he said. "The reasoning is that, as people age, the ability to process a lot of information diminishes. We want to demonstrate that in the context of something close to reality, so we chose to work with breakfast cereals."

Results of last year's studies suggest that senior citizens make poorer consumer choices than younger age groups, Balasubramanian said.

"The gist of both the studies is that the elderly make significantly more dysfunctional choices in the sense that they seem to be less efficient than younger adults in processing information," he said. "They frequently deviate from the decision rule that was given to them."

Balasubramanian said the lab study also featured a similar exercise involving paper and pencil — in addition to the computer — to see if subjects could perform better if they had a way to keep track of information.

"The simple paper-and-pencil task did enormously help the elderly people improve their decision-making and product-choice efficiency," he said. "So it seems to us that maybe public policy ought to pay attention

All that jazz: Campus dancers to continue tradition with fall recital

By Kellie Huttes
Senior Reporter

While the Christmas season may conjure up visions of the Nutcracker's sugar plum fairy ballerinas, an SIUC group will be performing modern and jazz pieces for their fall program.

Donna Wilson, artistic director of the Southern Illinois Repertory Dance Theater, said more than 20 students will perform in the 20th annual fall concert, Dance Expresso.

She said the program is a kaleidoscope of seven modern and jazz dance pieces complete with separate costumes and music for each piece.

Wilson said members have been practicing for the program since the third week of the fall semester.

The performances will be on Dec. 2nd and 3rd at 8 p.m. in Furr Auditorium, in Pulliam Hall Room 42.

She said although the program competes with Carbondale's Lights

Fantastic parade, which begins at 6:30 p.m. Dec. 3, and SIUC's production of "A Christmas Carol," at 8 p.m. Dec. 2nd and 3rd, the company is confident they will have a large audience.

Last year 360 people attended two performances.

Lisa McKinley, president of the company, said members have talked about the competition, but she thinks they will still attract a crowd.

"People who come once go again and again," she said. "We get people who come year after year."

Wilson, who has been director of the company since 1986, said the company attracts a younger, more diverse crowd than Shryock's family-oriented dance productions.

"Over the years we have established a reputation of quality that has had a snowball effect," she said.

McKinley, a senior in athletic training from Leaf River, has been dancing with the SIUC company for two years, but first began dancing when she was three years old.

She said the company is like a second family who are all close and feel strongly about dancing.

"The company is an escape for me," she said. "It helps me get away from school and stress, although it's time consuming, it's enjoyable."

McKinley attended a dance college in Oklahoma, but decided against dancing professionally because of the stereotypical ballerina conceptions.

Concert Choir to present worldwide musical journey

By Dave Katzman
Staff Reporter

The SIUC Concert Choir will present a three-tiered performance Wednesday in Shryock Auditorium, featuring music influenced by cultures from all over the world.

Conductor John Mochnick has led the 30-member choir, formerly known as the University Singers, for 11 years. Members are chosen through auditions at the beginning of the year and come from all areas of SIUC.

"Most are vocal majors, but many are from the general college," Mochnick said.

The choir travels throughout Illinois as part of an effort to increase awareness of the vocal programs at SIUC.

"Generally, we do in-state tours," Mochnick said. "Most of them have been recruitment tours to make (high school) students — especially in the northern part of the state — aware of the choral offerings at SIUC."

Mochnick will debut his newest piece, "The Silver Swan," during Wednesday's performance. The piece is based on a popular 16th-century English madrigal originally written by Orlando Gibbons.

"I used the words of the original madrigal and made my own setting," Mochnick said. "The music is written to describe the text."

Mochnick said he has written 26 works; 16 have been published.

Wednesday's performance is divided into three sections. The first, "To Music," features songs that pay tribute to Western music from the Renaissance to the present.

The second section, "Bridges To Other Cultures," highlights

A penny saved: Financial planning encouraged

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

Two researchers from SIUC's finance department say their studies suggest the stock market may be the best investment opportunity to build a secure retirement — but add students who have yet to find a job should begin saving early and often.

"The average person doesn't start saving until age 40," James Musumeci, an assistant professor, said. "And you have to save five or six times as much per year compared to beginning a savings program when you are 20 or 25."

Because of compounded interest, a 20-year-old saving $2,000 annually at an eight-percent interest rate would have accumulated approximately the same amount of money at retirement as a 40-year old saving $11,000 a year at the same interest rate, Musumeci said.

But in addition to saving early, Musumeci said knowing how to invest for retirement is also important.

Musumeci recently received $15,051 from the U.S. Department of Labor to support his continuing study, titled "Pension Fund Investment Decisions Given Fixed Retirement Dates."

Musumeci, who will analyze returns on the stock market and treasury bills from 1926 to the present, said favoring "safer" investments over the stock market may be a mistake when planning for retirement.

"I want to find a way of documenting that what many people do (with investing) is silly," he said. "You're going to be left with a lot more money if you invest in the stock market. But a lot of people perceive the stock market as risky."

Even with the stock market crashes of 1929 and 1987, the market is no more riskier in the long run than bonds, treasury bills and other means of investment, Musumeci said.

But just how long is the long term — and how quickly people should transfer funds from one market to another are questions Musumeci hopes to answer with his study, he said.

Assistant professor Andrew Szakmary said money lost through dips in the stock market can be gained back over time as the market recovers.

"My study shows that after a time horizon of seven years or longer it's actually less risky," he said. "The longer your time horizon, the more heavily your portfolio should be weighted toward equity."

Szakmary reported his findings in a still-unpublished report titled "Auto Correlation, Asset Allocation and the Investment Horizon: Evidence from Capital Market History."

Lack of U.N. action gives Serbs victory

WITH OVER 200,000 DEAD OR MISSING IN THE last three years of fighting in Bosnia, it is time for the United Nations to acknowledge that efforts to make peace are not working.

The conflict between the Serbians and Muslim Croats has exacted a heavy human and material toll on the region, and efforts to negotiate with the Serbs have proven wholly unsuccessful. Whether a U.N. presence serves any purpose there any longer is the question in need of a prompt answer.

If, or more likely when, the Serbs take the city of Bihać they will have a much greater degree of control over the area. Clearly, Serbian troops have established their military might and have no intention of backing down. Current U.N. negotiators have experienced no success finding a middle ground between the Serbs and Croats, with little hope that the Serbians will agree to any land concessions.

THE STALEMATE HAS ALSO PRODUCED A RIFT in relations between allies within NATO. Britain and France, both of which have committed the troops that make up the majority of the 24,000 troops, are leery of any further air strikes by NATO planes. They contend that intensified air operations only create a bigger danger to existing troops on the ground. Regardless of this fact, previous air strikes proved to have a very limited effect on Serbian positions. So, with steadily advancing Serbian troops and disagreement among the "peacekeeping" forces, the situation in Bosnia is not improving.

Meanwhile, the U.S. is being criticized for not playing a more active role in Bosnia and committing more forces. In the aftermath of Somalia, President Clinton is certainly reluctant to further involve U.S. troops. The downside to acting in a multinational force is that the criteria for each participant are different, and no decisive action is taken by anyone. If the fighting is to be stopped in Bosnia the United Nations has to face the fact that to accomplish this, not everyone involved is going to be happy. But, if the end result is the sparing of lives, a compromise by one or both sides seems a small price to pay.

A lack of action by the U.N. and NATO has allowed the pendulum to take a definitive swing in the Serbians' favor. Bosnia is now a war-ravaged region where the civilians suffer on a daily basis. Supplies are dwindling while hospitals overflow with both civilian and military casualties.

THE IDEA OF HAVING A U.N. PEACEKEEPING force to help curb the violence in Bosnia is good in concept, but the results of having one there are less than satisfactory. And, if nothing is being done to help the people of the region, why are U.N. troops' lives being placed in danger to serve no end? If U.N. troops and NATO forces are unable (or not being allowed) to make a difference in Bosnia, they don't need to be there.

Letters to the Editor

Teaching history: We are Americans first

I take exception to the views expressed by professor James Allen (Teaching History: New Balancing Act) in the November 17 issue of the Daily Egyptian. While some of the guidelines in "Goals 2000" are understandable, I strongly disagree with the liberal philosophy of subverting western culture.

What multicultural proponents like Allen really want to do is to brainwash young students with a bunch of feel good, emotionally sensitive junk which does not tell the truth about our nation's past. It's amazing that he actually favors spending less time on American history for a so called "wordly" education, yet he can't understand why conservatives were critical of this way of teaching! By distorting or eliminating essential facts, our students will be shortchanged. We learn from history two essential facts: 1) what made our nation what it is today and 2) what mistakes were made so they are not repeated.

America is one distinct culture. Regardless of ethnic background or country of origin, American citizens are first and foremost Americans. We can't go back and correct past injustices, since no time machine exists. It's future that matters most now, not the past. After all, what are we students doing here at SIUC? I have no problem with ethnic groups learning about their heritage. Where I draw the line is when it comes at the expense of others who are only trying to multiculturalism will only make matters worse, not better.

I've had enough of people who are trying to distort or destroy the things that made this country great. You don't need to destroy our country in order to save it. What we need most in America today are responsible citizens who respect the freedoms and choices of others. Otherwise, the good of our nation will not survive.

—Mark Quesenberry, graduate, manufacturing systems

Veterans supported, military criticized

The report of the ROTC Veteran's Day ceremony in the November 14, 1994 DE aroused a lot of emotion in me. When an SIUC professor says that the military demands qualities that only youth, such as myself, have, and that "our young people are our first and most precious possession," it scares me. Is my life so precious that I should lose it in some hellish war that our nation fights? One speaker at the ROTC ceremony said that the military is needed "to secure the ideas of democracy."

When I look at the U.S. military involvements over the past 30 years, it seems to me that the ideas of democracy are primarily concerned with protecting the interests of large U.S. corporations abroad. There is little concern for human beings, unless they're rich and white. How did the actions of the U.S. military benefit human beings in Vietnam? In Cambodia? Lebanon? Panama? The Persian Gulf? Time after time, the U.S. military kills more people than it benefits. And still our government constantly propagandizes us how fulfilling and virtuous the military is. "Be All You Can Be," we are told.

That sounds nice, but how about letting an Iraqi be all she or he can be? To "be all you can be," to my way of thinking, doesn't involve cutting off the lives of other people. Admittedly, the U.S. military has "humanitarian" operations as well, such as the current operations in Haiti.

While it is possible that a "humanitarian" mission might have some beneficial effects, the great majority of the military missions are destructive. As a participant in the Veteran's Day ceremony said, the sacrifices of veterans are "so we can enjoy the life we lead today." Their sacrifices aren't to let people in other countries live better lives, but to enable American to maintain our standard of living—cheap oil, cheap clothes made with slave labor, cheap and plentiful food, etc.

Yes, it is true that veterans have made tremendous sacrifices. Many soldiers have given part or all of their lives.

But for what? What have these sacrifices accomplished? There is a fear in our country that without a strong military, we Americans wouldn't have the freedoms we have today. We must be able to defend ourselves. But when was the last time the U.S. engaged in a war out of self-defense? Nevertheless, we continue to let our government spend over half of the federal budget on military-related expenditures, and most of the us don't even complain. We should be outraged! But there are very few people that protest. Why? Because the government runs a very effective media campaign that makes us think militarism is honorable. Articles such as the DE report are part of the media promotion.

Undoubtedly, we should support veterans. However, we should not encourage more people to join an organization whose primary purpose is to fight.

—Ruth Woodring, junior, plant and soil science

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

should take a look at how it awards liquor licenses.

Mills said there may be too many bars on South Illinois Avenue, commonly referred to as the Strip, and the commission should attempt to disperse the bars over a larger area than just focusing on that area in the future.

His recommendation was supported by the other commission members present.

Following the liquor control commission meeting the Carbondale City Council met and approved a federally mandated drug testing program for certain city employees.

Sharon Hammer, city attorney, said those tested would be city workers, specifically drivers, who are required to have a commercial driver's license.

The mandate states that employers with 50 or more drivers must have the drug testing.

Currently, the city has more than 50 drivers with commercial driver's licenses, she said.

Those employees work in water and sewer, street maintenance, solid waste, and the cemetery.

The council also approved the increase in fees at Oakland Cemetery and an extra fee for funerals scheduled late in the day.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said the increases are intended to discourage weekend and holiday funerals because of the overtime fees for cemetery workers.

The council also reviewed plans for the proposed City Hall/Civic Center and were updated by Gail White, project architect, on the changes made in plans since the last review.

The council gave Doherty its approval to continue with the project.

CLEANUP, from page 1

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which maintains the Refuge.

Other units on the refuge involve the cleanup of PCB's, munitions, lead-based paints, and areas of miscellaneous contamination.

These five units are on the superfund national priorities list, the common name for projects falling under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, which is the EPA's primary waste cleanup legislation. Moore said three areas in the refuge are being excavated, and the source of the metals contamination is unknown in all of them, although it was probably a result of industrial procedure on the refuge before the full ramifications of dumping hazardous waste were known.

you're willing to take a risk, there is a chance for failure," he said. "It's an outstanding idea that just stopped, and we want to bring it back."

Sherman said the value of textbooks will be determined in the same method as the University Bookstore.

He also said Jim Skiersch, director of University Bookstore, has been helpful and cooperative.

"We're using the same system as the bookstores," Sherman said.

"I've been working with Jim Skiersch, and he's been actually pretty helpful about everything."

Sherman also said John Corker, director of the Student Center, has helped organize space for the exchange.

"He's been really cooperative. I couldn't believe it," Sherman said.

"When I described the computer program to him, he changed his stance. 180 degrees and said to get started."

Sherman said students will be able to exchange books by going to the exchange and filling out the necessary paperwork about classes and books and leaving their books overnight.

"The books will be processed overnight, and the student can come the next day with their voucher to collect their new books and any money we owe them," he said.

"Where they actually save is the books they get from us."

St. Louis University is currently designing an exchange program and has expressed interest in the computer program at SIUC.

"St. Louis is developing a program to trade books," Sherman said.

"They're not coming this semester, but next semester."

Papa John's and Pepsi are sponsoring the book exchange, and Sherman said he hopes to have pizza and Pepsi at the exchange for students.

A raffle will also be held for a free semester's worth of books.

that failure to accommodate Cloud's religious practices is a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Cloud, a member of the Worldwide Church of God, requested leave without pay from his campus job in October of 1990 to attend the Feast of Tabernacles.

The University denied his request, but Cloud attended the observance.

Cloud said he was gone for seven days. He was fired by the University upon his return, and Judge Beatty said since Cloud's absence caused the University no "undue hardship" it should have accommodated his religious beliefs, as required by civil rights law.

Sue Davis, director of University News Service, said the case may not be over, adding SIUC attorneys received a copy of the federal court order yesterday (Monday) and are reviewing it. She said the University has 60 days within which to file an appeal of Beatty's decision.

Shari Rhode, chief trial counsel for SIUC, said she cannot comment on the case, but confirmed SIUC is considering an appeal.

The district court order requires the University to rehire Cloud, offer him retroactive pension benefits, provide $90,030 in back pay and pay court costs.

Cloud said the University rehired him July 25 before the first ruling was handed down.

public policy ought to pay attention to the elderly people, recognize that their information processing abilities are somewhat diminished because of age, and to do everything that is possible to help them out. Many of them are being counseled by nutritionists and we do not know whether they always remember to choose foods that conform to their nutritional guidelines."

Balasubramanian said a system of symbols on product labels may help senior citizens, diabetics and people with hypertension or other kinds of diseases that may require strict diet plans.

songs from various cultures and languages. Songs will be performed in Hebrew and Chinese, and pieces from Jamaica and Canada will also be included.

"Contemporary Part Songs and Madrigals," the last section, includes "The Silver Swan" and other selections by American composers, including "Auction Cries," by John Biggs.

"Auction Cries" is based on a 1950s newspaper advertisement, Mochnick said.

Ann Lutrey, a junior in visual communications from Hinsdale, has been dancing with the company for three semesters and is a little nervous about dancing this weekend.

"Although I've been dancing since I was three, I get a little nervous before each performance," she said.

Lutrey said she enjoys being involved with the group because she has taken ballet, tap and jazz lessons, but in this group she can experiment with and choreograph modern dance pieces.

"Maybe instead of providing all the information in a verbal text, the Congress or FDA should look at ways in which the information can be displayed using symbols of some sort," he said. "A lot of elderly people have difficulty reading and remembering what they read. It would be easier to process if all of this information was somehow visually encapsulated in symbols for them."

Symbols using colors and shapes to indicate things such as number of calories and sugar, fat and sodium levels, could instantly tell people with specific dietary needs whether they should buy the product, Balasubramanian said.

"What we might say is 'Here is a product that is low in sugar but not necessarily low in calories, and is high in dietary fiber,'" he said. "The assumption seems to be that the manufacturers ought to be forced to provide this information to consumers so consumers have a chance to look at it and act intelligently. Our research says you should not only provide the information, but you should also make it easier for the people to observe that information."

"The text was taken from an actual auction ad in the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette," he said.

"It tells you how to get to the place and lists farm implements offered for sale. He (Biggs) took the text of the ad and set it to music."

In addition to vocals, student soloists also will be featured.

Anita Hutton, an SIUC alumna and advisor in the education department, will accompany the choir on piano for some of the selections.

"With these three sections, we cover quite a large span," Mochnick said. "The variety should be interesting to the general public."

The SIUC Concert Choir performs Wednesday night at 8:00 in Shryock Auditorium. Tickets are $3 for the general public and $2 for students, children and senior citizens and are available at the Student Center Central Ticket Office and at the door.

Feds reducing big backlog in new drug tests

WASHINGTON—For years, the Food and Drug Administration has been denounced as a bloated bureaucracy that suppresses innovation through over-regulation. The agency, which oversees products that take up about a quarter's worth of every consumer dollar spent, also has been lambasted for delays in processing applications for new drugs and devices that further harm competitiveness.

But in the last year, by streamlining the process and deputizing reviewers from the ranks of FDA bench scientists until new reviewers could be hired and trained, the center has made impressive progress in chipping away at its backlog.

"The world looks good again," said CDRH head Bruce Burlington, who explained that the average processing time for some paperwork has been slashed.

Stars of the '70s comeback with help from 'Unplugged'

By Paul Eisenberg
Entertainment Editor

Two of the biggest rock 'n' roll draws ever to take the stage recently reunited before an audience of millions. The Eagles and Led Zeppelin (Robert Plant and Jimmy Page) jump-started comebacks with the help of MTV's popular "Unplugged" series. Now both bands are capitalizing on their successful re-debuts with recently released recordings "Hell Freezes Over" and "No Quarter."

While neither band has contributed anything new to the music scene in more than 10 years, and both groups reunited under similar circumstances, the two new recordings are in no way similar.

Eagles members Glenn Frey, Don Henley and Joe Walsh had successful solo careers before returning to the protective umbrella of the Eagles. The question is why they did return.

On "Hell Freezes Over," the Eagles cover some of their greatest hits, and do so with great accuracy.

The problem is that songs like "Hotel California" and "Desperado" have been drastically overplayed on the radio since they were released in the 1970s. When these songs appear on the album, nothing new is offered. Fans might as well just break out their 1976 copy of the album "Hotel California." While Henley and company admirably reproduce the sound the band had 20 years ago, that is no reason to buy this new version. Other tired old songs redone on this album include "Tequila Sunrise," "Take It Easy" and "Wasted Time."

The album contains four new studio recordings, but the only one which is a collaborative effort is the first track, "Get Over It." Like many Eagles classics the song was written by Henley and Frey, but it sounds too much like Frey's 1980s music and not enough like the Eagles. "The Girl From Yesterday," also written by Frey, falls in that same genre — he might as well have laid down the track on his solo album. The best of the new tracks, "Love Will Keep Us Alive," was written by Pete Vale. Traffic mainstay Jim Capaldi and former Squeeze vocalist Paul Carrack.

Strangely left backstage is Joe Walsh, perhaps the most creative member of the group. While he is most noticeable on his classics like "In the City" and "Life in the Fast Lane," he may as well not have been present for the new recordings. Perhaps Walsh should have remained in Ringo Starr's All Star Band where he shared more of the limelight.

Music Review

Eagles

At the start of the live material Frey announces to the crowd, "For the record, we never broke up, we just took a 14-year vacation," and for Eagles fanatics "Hell Freezes Over" may be a good pickup. Others may be disappointed with the lack of originality in this new release.

On the flip side of the coin "No Quarter," the new release from Robert Plant and Jimmy Page, opens up a new page in the book of Led Zeppelin. Page and Plant do not need to ride on their own coattails to produce a successful recording.

Led Zeppelin was actually the first band to present an "Unplugged"-type recording with the release of "Led Zeppelin III" in 1970, nearly 20 years before MTV's first broadcast of that type. "Led Zeppelin III" offered many acoustic songs — a new direction for a band which had been producing hard-rocking blues up until then.

Page and Plant perform several songs from that album on the new effort, including "Friends," "Since I've Been Loving You," "That's the Way" and "Gallows Pole."

What makes these songs more than just a rehash — as is the case with the Eagles — is the addition of the London Metropolitan Orchestra, the Egyptian Ensemble and the Musicians in Marrakech. Also augmenting Led Zeppelin's sound are banjo and mandolin players, as well as female vocalist Najma Akhtar.

The players from the Middle East create an almost spiritual atmosphere and a sound completely different than the old Led Zeppelin ever had, with the possible exception of the song "Kashmir." That song wraps up the disc, and sounds better than ever.

Akhtar really shines on "Battle of Evermore," during which she takes over the high parts where time has compromised Plant's vocal range. But don't fool yourself, Plant is no washout; he displays a far wider range on "No Quarter" than he has in some of his more-recent solo efforts.

While Page does not display the powerhouse guitar work he once did back when John Bonham pummeled the drums, a new understated style suits him well: Page does not need to prove that he is a guitar hero anymore.

While Bonham is missed, drummer Michael Lee — with help from numerous multi-national percussionists — fills in admirably. It's a shame, however, that John-Paul Jones was not involved. His string arrangements played a big part in Led Zeppelin's success, and it would have been nice to see him work with this giant ensemble.

The three new songs, "Yallah," "City Don't Cry" and "Wonderful One," are good songs, but they don't reach the power level of old Led Zeppelin standards. Perhaps they shouldn't, for this is not Led Zeppelin, nor is it fake Led Zeppelin featuring David Coverdale, a group which was mercifully short-lived.

This is "No Quarter," a new chapter in the careers of these musicians.

But the best thing about the album was that "Stairway To Heaven" was not included. Perhaps the Eagles will cover it on their next release.

Doors are open for Santa Fe rail

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Santa Fe Pacific Corp. Tuesday opened its door slightly to a possible acquisition by Union Pacific Corp., but also adopted a policy apparently intended to slam the door shut if the Santa Fe board doesn't like what it sees.

Santa Fe already has a merger agreement with Burlington Northern Corp. to form a giant system to compete with Union Pacific and has been fending off Union Pacific's counteroffers. But Tuesday, Santa Fe announced it would meet with Union Pacific "in an effort to clarify and improve Union Pacific's offer."

A Santa Fe shareholder meeting planned for Friday to vote on the Santa Fe-Burlington Northern merger was postponed until Dec. 16.

"We've been knocking on the door, and someone answered," said Union Pacific spokesman Gary Schuster.

The announcement came the day after the Interstate Commerce Commission approved Union Pacific's plan to use a voting trust to purchase Santa Fe stock. This would give Santa Fe shareholders their money up front, protecting them in case the ICC rejected a Union Pacific-Santa Fe combination.

The two railroads have a number of largely parallel lines and proposed mergers of parallel lines have often been regarded as anticompetitive by the ICC. A Santa Fe-Burlington Northern combination, on the other hand, would have little overlap.

Union Pacific is basing its offer on a higher value offer now valued at $16.93 a share in cash and stock vs. Burlington Northern's $15.98 a share in stock-plus assurances that it will make enough concessions to other railroads to gain ICC approval.

At the same time it agreed to talk to Union Pacific, Santa Fe also adopted a complicated "shareholder rights plan" that appears to be a form of antimerger "poison pill" provision, although Schuster said Union Pacific initially is confused as to exactly what it means.

Jazz to raise money for AIDS

Local musicians unite: Cold Fusion plays for research

By Paul Eisenberg
Entertainment Editor

During the 1970s, jazz fusion was a popular genre, promoted by legendary musicians such as Miles Davis, Sonny Rollins and Al DiMeola. In Carbondale, several clubs featured fusion regularly.

All but killed by the resurgence of pop music in the 1980s, fusion bands were difficult to spot, but tonight musicians from two Southern Illinois jazz bands will unite to play fusion at Cousins, 201 N. Washington, to raise money for AIDS research.

Cold Fusion is a band made up of Southern Illinois stalwarts from several bands.

Keyboardist Joe Liberto and bassist Jim Wall hail from the band Mercy, Wall and percussionist Jack O'Nieva play in Saint Stephen's Blues, and drummer Tom Hensold, performs in the New Arts Jazz Quartet. Guitarist Rick Bowlby earned a music degree from Berkeley before returning to the area.

The band will perform rock, jazz and Latin music, covering the music of Pat Metheny, Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock and the Yellowjackets, among others.

Hensold said this band has been in the works for a year, but because of other commitments, the band has only performed once. That was last April, under the name Full Circle.

Full Circle, according to O'Nieva, has been used by several other bands, so he decided to change the name.

"It reflects our music, and it is easy to remember," he said.

O'Nieva said he enjoys working with this band.

"They're excellent musicians, they can do anything on demand. We plan on making it an ongoing thing," he said.

Wall, who also performs with Four on the Floor, premiered in a fusion band in Carbondale during the late 1970s.

"While I have an interest in all types of music, jazz is right up on the list," he said. "We have to read the music. It's very complex, not something you can pick up off a record and play right away."

"It takes an intense amount of rehearsal. It's intricate stuff, but not really heavy outside stuff, real listenable. It's not Muzak jazz either."

The catalyst for tonight's performance is a benefit in honor of Barry Stewart, an assistant treatment coordinator at the Center for Comprehensive Skills, who had AIDS. Stewart died while plans for the benefit were being made.

The proceeds will go to Southern Illinois Regional Efforts for AIDS at the request of Stewart's family.

Hensold, also an employee at the Center for Comprehensive Skills, said he knew Stewart for more than six years.

"I'm going to miss him," he said.

Cold Fusion will perform tonight at Cousins bar.

The music begins at 9 p.m., and there is a requested donation of at least $1.

Child pornography law unclear

Newsday

WASHINGTON -- The Supreme Court reinstated a key child pornography conviction Tuesday, but in doing so left some conservatives on and off the court unhappy.

The justices, in a 7-2 decision, overturned a ruling by the federal appeals court in San Francisco that the federal child pornography law is unconstitutional because it does not say clearly that a pornography distributor has to know that an actor is underage to be convicted.

The court Tuesday opted for a broader interpretation of the law, saying that it should be construed as requiring knowledge of underage involvement even if that is not the most logical grammatical interpretation. Otherwise, it would be unconstitutional, said the majority opinion by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist.

But Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas said that requiring prosecutors to prove that a distributor knew that an actor in a film was underage will make convictions much more difficult in the future.

"The court today saves a single conviction by putting in place a relatively toothless child-pornography law that Congress did not enact, and by rendering congressional strengthening of that new law more difficult," Scalia said in a dissent that was joined by Thomas.

Some conservative groups said they shared Scalia's concern. "This is a new burden that prosecutors have not had to bear in the past, and its effect certainly could be to make prosecutors even more reticent to bring child pornography prosecutions," said Cathleen Cleaver, who filed a "friend of the court" brief for a coalition of conservative groups.

Patrick Trueman, who headed child pornography prosecution in the Reagan and Bush Justice Departments, said Scalia's concern is misplaced.

Prosecutors have always had to prove that a defendant was aware or should have been aware of an actor's age, he said.

The case involved a Los Angeles pornography distributor, Rubin Gottesman, who sold an undercover policeman 49 videotapes featuring porn star Traci Lords before she turned 18.

Most of Rehnquist's opinion turned on a point of grammar—bad grammar, the chief justice acknowledged.

In most situations, the court has long held, criminal prosecutors must prove that a defendant knew that what he was doing was illegal, and laws must specify that requirement.

The heavily amended child pornography law only uses the crucial word "knowingly" in the first of several sections, one that refers to shipping "visual depictions."

The law goes on in separate subsections to define visual depictions as those involving children and sexually explicit conduct, but does not make clear that "knowingly" applies to those parts as well.

U.N. officials seek settlement in Bosnia

Los Angeles Times

ZAGREB, Croatia—As Serb nationalists plowed through the Bihac "safe area" and harassed hostage peacekeepers, U.N. officials warned Tuesday the future of their paralyzed mission hinges on rebel compliance with "rock-bottom conditions" for a settlement in Sarajevo Wednesday.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali planned a missile-defying flight to the Bosnian capital Wednesday in quest of an unlikely breakthrough in what officials here call an untenable standoff between lightly armed peacekeepers and Bosnian Serb warriors emboldened by Western pleas of helplessness in the conflict.

"These are rock-bottom condi-

Boutros-Ghali to demand cease-fire in 'safe area'

tions for the continuation of UNPROFOR," said Michael Williams, spokesman for the U.N. Protection Force known as UNPROFOR, based in this Croatian capital.

Boutros-Ghali will demand an immediate end to fighting in the U.N.-designated Bihac "safe area," a cease-fire throughout Bosnia-Herzegovina and a halt to all harassment, detention and restriction of U.N. forces, said Williams.

Without assurances from rogue authorities in the Serb rebel stronghold of Pale, just east of Sarajevo, the future of the mission is in doubt, Williams warned.

"Boutros-Ghali's visit comes at a moment of truth for UNPROFOR."

a Western diplomat stated, warning that the security of the entire Balkan region hangs in the balance.

The U.N. chief's intervention in the deteriorating crisis comes as the U.N. mission has begun serious preparations for a pullout because of the campaign of harassment and humiliation to which the U.N. troops have been subjected.

Bosnian Serb gunmen loyal to nationalist leader Radovan Karadzic have taken 500 peacekeepers hostage for use as human shields in the event NATO again attempts air strikes against the rebels to force their compliance with U.N. resolutions.

Both Bosnian and Croatian Serbs have continued to shell and burn their way deep into the refugee-thronged safe area delineated around Bihac for Bosnian Muslims who are the targets of the long-running Serb nationalist siege.

Serb gunmen also have blocked humanitarian aid convoys into other embattled Muslim enclaves, mined roads to peacekeeping bases and positioned sophisticated surface-to-air missiles around Bihac and around the U.N.-controlled airport at Sarajevo.

"The Bosnian Serb army has made a number of very threatening remarks in regard to the airport in recent days," Williams said, expressing concern over Boutros-Ghali's trip to the Bosnian capital.

Diplomats of the five-nation Contact Group traveled to Sarajevo Tuesday despite Serb refusals to give routine assurances for their safety. During their discussions with officials of the Muslim-led Bosnian government, the mediators from the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Germany said they planned no new "incentives" to entice the dominant Serb rebels to make peace.

U.N. and U.S. sources had said a day earlier that U.S. officials capitulated to pressures from other Contact Group countries to allow the Bosnian Serbs to form a confederation with rump Yugoslavia, which would effectively endorse the creation of a Greater Serbia by allowing the rebels to annex their conquered Bosnian territory with that of their nationalist sponsors in Belgrade.

Retailers find airport market

Los Angeles Times

With more than 800 flights commuting across California under his belt, Assemblyman Gil Ferguson has encountered more than his share of second-rate airport food.

"You were sure the Sacramento airport was open 24 hours a day because whatever it was that they were serving you looked like it was 24 hours old," the Newport Beach Republican said. "You slid your tray down the line, they'd give you something, and you'd wonder what it was. My advice for most airports is: Don't eat."

The politician's ruminations will ring true for frequent fliers who have braved an airport cafeteria line — or paid too much for a paperback novel at an airport newsstand as well.

But poor food and overpriced souvenir stands gradually are giving way to attractively decorated restaurant and retail operations that use competitive pricing and service to win sales.

Changes are being driven by the growing realization that travelers generally have both time and money on their hands, a combination that's "the magic formula for retailing," according to Monica Nassif, a spokeswoman for Miami-based Sun Glass Hut, which operates 11 stores at airports.

Airport executives and retailers say that truly competitive pricing is the key to success.

Pittsburgh's innovative "air mall" is the acknowledged leader in airport retail operations. The 2-year-old terminal is home to more than 80 restaurants and retail shops, including TGI Fridays, Nature Company, the Body Shop, Upper Deck Antiquated and Sun Glass Hut.

Pittsburgh officials offer a simple measure of the mall's success: Sales per boarded passenger have soared to nearly $7, up from just $2.40 per visit before the new airport terminal opened.

Another gauge of its popularity is that up to 5 percent of monthly sales at the airport mall go to local residents who view the airport as an alternate shopping center.

Pittsburgh's successful experiment with "street pricing" has prompted the Dallas-Fort Worth airport and others to adopt rules that require retailers and restaurants to charge prices equivalent to those at off-airport sites.

But Los Angeles International Airport is instead banking on competition to keep prices low.

Russian authorities detain exiled Turkmen dissidents

The Washington Post

MOSCOW—Russian authorities have detained two Turkmen dissidents living in exile here, both regular contributors to U.S.-government-funded Radio Liberty, at the request of Turkmenistan's authoritarian government, officials acknowledged Tuesday.

Human-rights groups here protested the arrests and are now lobbying to keep Russia from deporting the dissidents to Turkmenistan, a former Soviet republic. The human-rights groups depict Turkmenistan's request as part of a larger campaign by President Saparmurat Niyazov to eradicate all democratic opposition to his one-man rule.

The Russian government, while promising to protect human rights that are routinely ignored in the former Soviet republics of Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan, nonetheless has been reluctant to offend the rulers of those Central Asian states. Many Russian politicians view Central Asia as a geopolitical battleground where Moscow faces off against Turkey, China, Islamic fundamentalists and the West.

Turkmenistan, a gas-rich desert republic bordering Iran and Afghanistan, is a particularly valuable prize.

Healthy tips for the holidays

Preparing for the hazards of travel through winter wonderland

By Joe Baker

Student Health Programs

Southern Illinois is known for its capricious weather, and with winter just around the corner, anything can happen. Holiday travel always presents additional hazards for motorists due to the heavy traffic, people leaving on the trips already tired from doing those last minute things, and of course, everyone seems to be in a tremendous hurry to get to wherever they are going.

Driving in the winter means not only snow, but also sleet and ice that can lead to slower traffic, hazardous road conditions, hot tires and unforeseen dangers.

To help you make it safely through the holiday season, the National Safety Council suggests driving defensively and being prepared for an emergency.

Hazardous travel situations on the highway can arise at any time, and you must be prepared.

Before the winter season begins, have your car's engine tuned up and put the following items in your trunk:

- a properly inflated spare tire, a

To Your Health

wheel wrench and tripod type jack

- a shovel
- jumper cables
- tow and tire chains

- a bag of salt or cat litter to sprinkle under tires to improve traction

- a basic tool kit

- a basic first aid kit including cold weather equipment, blankets, candles, emergency food and a flashlight

Remember that the driver is the most important part of the car. Here are some important points to remember while driving:

- Listen to the weather before starting out.

- Reduce your speed and increase your following distance from other cars.

- Try not to accelerate or brake suddenly. If you do find yourself in a skid, remain calm, ease your foot off the gas and carefully steer in the direction you want the front of the car to go. "Steering into the skid" brings the back end of your car in line with the front.

- Bridges and overpasses can be slippery. Drive carefully over these areas.

- Don't drive when you are too tired. When you do feel yourself nodding off, pull off to find a restaurant or a place to rest. Keep your window cracked open for air and play lively music on the radio until you can pull over. Regular stretching can also help reduce your feeling of fatigue.

- Coffee or other caffeinated products, can temporarily increase your alertness. However, there is no substitute for sleep.

- Don't drink and drive and never ride as a passenger with someone who has had too much to drink.

How you take care of yourself, how you prepare and plan ahead and how you react can mean the difference between slip-sliding into danger or walking away from a potential accident. Call Student Health Programs at 453-4364 for further information about holiday safety. Winter travel tips courtesy of the National Safety Council:

Light exercise during illness can relieve certain symptoms

By Chris Labyk

Student Health Programs

Exercise provides many invisible health benefits.

Regular moderate exercise, such as walking for example, can aid digestion, relieve depression, lower cholesterol and boost the immune system.

Persons who do regular, moderate exercise suffer fewer upper respiratory infections a year than non-exercisers.

On the occasions when illness does strike, it may be necessary to alter an exercise routine by either suspending the workout for a few days or doing a lighter, shorter workout.

Sitting in a dry sauna is not advisable if a fever is present because the body may have difficulty regulating its temperature which could possibly lead to severe complications.

Also, if lung congestion is present, the dry heat makes it more difficult for the body to rid itself of the excess mucus. Warm, steamy showers help to loosen congestion and to liquefy the secretions so the body can more readily expel the excess mucus.

Light exercise during a typical cold with some congestion, but no fever, may help to open the nasal passages and the bronchial tubes relieving some of the congestion. During an illness the body works hard to get rid of the organism causing the symptoms, so it is natural to feel tired. It may take several days before the body is ready to do a full workout.

Any prolonged period away from an exercise routine requires that the activity be restarted at a level of less intensity than when the routine was interrupted. Starting back at the same level may lead to physical injuries.

For more information on working out when ill, contact the Student Health Program Wellness Center at 536-4441, the Sports Medicine office in the Recreation Center at 453-1292, or the Student Health Assessment Center in the Student Center at 453-5238.

Poaching sting nets $1 million bonanza

NEW DELHI—It began when a man who described himself as a buyer for duty-free shops in the Persian Gulf met in a posh Katmandu hotel with a scruffy Kashmiri trader. They sized each other up and talked prices, the Kashmiri offering small but enticing samples of the exotic animal furs he could deliver if they became partners.

Two weeks later in Srinagar, the war-torn summer capital, of Kashmir, the trader laid out furs and garments made from 1,366 of the world's most endangered cats, including tigers, snow leopards and clouded leopards. One Bengal tiger skin was more than 14 feet long.

The buyer left, saying he was going to get money. But when he returned, it was in his true role as an undercover investigator, leading 36 police officers on one of India's largest anti-poaching sting operations.

"People were celebrating and congratulating and thanking me, but it was a sad sight," the investigator said of the haul, worth more than $1 million on the international market.

The Nov. 5 raid was the latest evidence that poaching, which had been curtailed in India in recent decades, has returned with a vengeance and threatens some of the world's most beautiful and exotic animals. Conservationists warn that the estimated 5,000 tigers left in the wild around the world could be gone, in a few years, victims of a booming market for wildlife products that is second only to narcotics as the contraband of choice for international smugglers.

"Unless we take immediate and drastic action, I don't believe there will be any tigers left in the world in three to five years," said Belinda Wright, head of the Wildlife Protection Society of India.

Revolutionary Rubin harbinger of change

Nowaday

He was the outrageous, '60s scallawag who flattened war toys with a steamroller and pushed a frosted cake into the puss of H-bomb inventor Edward Teller.

As an exponent of loopy provocation and absurdist street theater, few could match Jerry Rubin, the former newspaper reporter who became a counterculture icon—and then transformed himself into a respectable entrepreneur.

When he died Monday at the UCLA Medical Center after a traffic accident two weeks earlier, Rubin, 56, was marketing a nutritional drink whose name, Wow, oddly echoed the fractious times that made him famous.

Many saw Rubin's evolution from radical leader of the Yippie Party to establishmentarian as a sad statement on the protest movement, but Rubin seemed pleased about the direction of his life.

He once told an interviewer that he missed the "righteous anger" of the old days. "But," said Rubin, "I'm much healthier than I was then." William Kunstler, who defended the Chicago Seven, said Rubin had no reason to apologize.

"The guy paid his dues," Kunstler said in a telephone interview. "He did great work by introducing burlesque and humor into American politics. He essentially gave up his youth to become a revolutionary."

Baseball players' strike may reach impasse

The Washington Post

The Major League Baseball Players' Association has decided it will not offer a counterproposal this week to the taxation system proposed by the team owners 12 days ago, sources close to the situation said Monday night.

The prospects of the union and the owners reaching a settlement to end the players' 3-month-old strike and ensure that next season begins on time are as bleak as ever. The union's decision not to present a counterproposal this week virtually ensures that the owners will decide to declare an impasse in negotiations and unilaterally impose a salary cap system when they meet next Monday in Chicago. The union apparently believes that this bitter labor war will be played out in court and on Capitol Hill thereafter.

Representatives of the players and owners gathered Monday at a conference center near Leesburg, Va. Talks are scheduled to resume Tuesday, and special mediator William J. Utery is urging the two sides to make a frantic final push toward a settlement. But privately, principals on both sides of the dispute remained pessimistic Monday, saying they expect this set of meetings to break up after a day or two.

Richard Ravitch, the owners' chief labor executive, has a contract that expires Dec. 31, and the owners apparently don't expect him to remain on the job beyond then. But acting commissioner Bud Selig said Monday that Ravitch has given no indications about his intentions. At

"If you're (the baseball players' union) not ready to bargain now, when are you going to be ready to bargain?"

—Stan Kasten

Utery's urging, the owners recently made Boston Red Sox General Partner John Harrington their chief spokesman both inside and outside the negotiating room.

The players' executive board is scheduled to meet in Atlanta beginning next Monday, and sources said the union does not plan to make a counterproposal before then. Ownership representatives said Monday they're hopeful of receiving a counterproposal from the players this week, but management sources acknowledged they don't expect that to happen.

Asked whether that makes it inevitable that the owners will decide next week to unilaterally impose a salary cap system, one management source said: "I don't think (the players) are going to leave us with any choice." The source added, however, that negotiations could continue if the union makes a counterproposal following the implementation of a salary cap.

Said Atlanta Braves President Stan Kasten, a member of the owners' negotiating committee: "We're 100-some days into a strike, and that really doesn't give us much of an option if they won't come to us with a counterproposal. If you're not ready to bargain now, when are you going to be ready to bargain? ... If we came here under the pretext of negotiations and didn't even get a proposal, that would be distressing and would almost dictate what we have to do. That would pretty much tell us the state of negotiations."

Gene Orza, the union's second-ranking official, said Monday he expects the owners to decide next week to impose a salary cap. "My feeling is that they'll implement coming out of those meetings" in Chicago, Orza said.

Orza would not say definitively whether the Players Association will make a counterproposal this week, but hinted that it won't. "By no means is it a certainty we'll make a counterproposal before these meetings conclude," Orza said. "Certainly there's a big tug in that direction" to wait until after next week's players' meetings to make an official response.

Union chief Donald Fehr declined to comment on the matter.

The players went on strike on Aug. 12 in an attempt to force the owners to negotiate a new collective bargaining agreement. Union officials feared all along that the owners merely were stalling and trying to reach a point at which they could declare an impasse in negotiations and unilaterally impose their salary cap proposal. The owners, meanwhile, feared that the union had no intention of negotiating a settlement and that the players wanted to pursue the matter through litigation and attempt to get the owners' exemption from federal antitrust laws repealed by Congress.

The owners made a salary cap proposal to the players in June, and amended it 12 days ago — presumably to make the proposal ready for implementation. The owners made a taxation proposal along with their amended salary cap proposal, but the union considers the tax plan a salary cap in disguise.

Nyuk, nyuk: Bowe punches Larry at press conference before fight

Los Angeles Times

INGLEWOOD, Calif.—In what was the best combination he has thrown in more than a year, former heavyweight champion Riddick Bowe rocked a Monday news conference at the Forum when he landed two solid punches to the face of Larry Donald, his opponent in Saturday night's non-title fight at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas.

The altercation broke out as the fighters were fielding questions from reporters.

Standing shoulder to shoulder at a lectern in the Forum Club, Donald and Bowe were mumbling to each other in what appeared to be typical prefight hype.

Suddenly, though, Bowe surprised Donald with what he later called his "hook-cross" to Donald's jaw.

Both punches, a left hook followed by a crossing right, landed flush on Donald's face. The punches appeared to stun Donald, who did not retaliate. Later, he bled slightly from the mouth.

The fighters were quickly separated. Veteran fight observers said they had never seen such an incident at a news conference.

"A typical cowardly move by someone who's desperate," Robert Mittleman, one of Donald's managers, screamed as Bowe was escorted out of the conference room.

"You ain't going to intimidate Larry. Bowe's in for the beating of his life."

Donald would not comment on the incident.

"I'll do all my talking Saturday," he said.

Janks Morton, Donald's trainer, blasted Bowe's manager, Rock Newman.

"That should've never happened," Morton screamed at Newman. "You provoked it."

Newman said the incident was unfortunate, adding, "You never know what's going to happen when emotions run high."

Bowe would not apologize.

"He was taunting me," Bowe said. "I told you guys I'm ready to fight. He squared off at me, that's why he got popped."

If Donald did square off and face Bowe, no one else saw it.

Bowe said he had not struck Donald with full force.

"If I'd hit him like I wanted to, he'd be out," he said. "He'd be at the hospital."

Later, Bowe blamed the incident on the frustration that has plagued him since losing his heavyweight title to Evander Holyfield on Nov. 7, 1993.

Hampered by injuries, Bowe has fought only once since, last Aug. 13 against Buster Mathis Jr.

That fight was deemed "no contest" when the New Jersey Athletic Commission ruled a late hit by Bowe had been intentional.

Rich Rose, vice president of Caesars World, said Monday's altercation probably would not lead to the cancellation of the fight.

"The only way it would be in jeopardy is if he was cut in the nose or something like that," Rose said. "It was just two guys with bad intentions. What's going to be the one thing that puts you over the top? That was it."

Giants' chances at playoffs 'slim'

Team still has shot at postseason play

The Hartford Courant

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J.—After the New York Giants' 21-19 victory over the Washington Redskins on Sunday, someone began asking defensive tackle Erik Howard about "the last four games" of the season.

The question was not finished. "Uh, you mean the upcoming four games, don't you?" Howard said.

Yes, having won two games after losing four in a row, the Giants (5-7) allowed the thought of postseason games to drift back into the locker room.

"One thing my career in the NFL has taught me is that anything can happen," said Howard, with the Giants since 1986.

When a team is presumed dead in the water, any bubble or splash will do.

It would take a series of improbabilities, starting with an upset of the Browns (9-3) in Cleveland on Sunday, for the Giants to make it. But impossible?

This is a crazy season. If the season ended today, a 6-6 team — the Green Bay Packers, Detroit Lions or Atlanta Falcons — would be in the NFC playoffs.

The Philadelphia Eagles (7-5) and Minnesota Vikings (7-5) have each lost three in a row, loosening their grips on the first two wild card berths.

"I don't think it's ever over until it's over," Coach Dan Reeves said Monday, after the team returned to Giants Stadium.

"I've seen strange things happen. When you look at our schedule and where we are, you'd have to say our chances are slim and none. But slim is still there."

A dejected Reeves read the Giants out of the playoff race after they fell to 3-6 with a 38-10 loss to Dallas on Nov. 7.

Though the soft part of the schedule was coming, Reeves talked of evaluating talent for next season, and many of his players followed suit.

Pippen could score more, follow Malone's example

By Mal Florence
Los Angeles Times

Late in the fourth quarter of Utah's 124-94 rout of the Chicago Bulls Friday night in Salt Lake City, Jazz forward Karl Malone returned to the game.

Chicago Coach Phil Jackson yelled, "Hey, Mailman! Aren't you padding your (scoring) average a little bit?"

Replied Malone, "No. When my coach tells me to go in, I go in."

Scottie Pippen overheard the exchange and his ears must have been burning.

Menacing snake: Ernie Els, the U.S. Open champion, encountered an unconventional hazard on the tee of the 16th hole of the Nashua Wild Coast Challenge tournament Sunday in Wild Coast, South Africa.

As Els stepped off the tee, a three-foot night adder appeared out of the long grass and headed in his direction. The South African star player stepped to the side and moved quickly in the opposite direction. Good thinking.

Escape: Horace Graet, the former Chicago Bull forward, has found happiness with the Orlando Magic.

"I've never been more relaxed in my life," he said. "It was never like this in Chicago. (General Manager Jerry) Krause made it impossible."

Clip and save: Bob Jacobson in the Arizona Republic: "Mark this down. The Los Angeles Clippers will not win 10 games this season."

the refuge, and Mabery expects the same amount for second season. Of the 606 tags issued, 363 deer were harvested and there were more than twice as many bucks taken as does.

Bill Smith, a local hunter and storekeeper at The Wildlife Refuge at 1130 E. Main in Carbondale, said the second season will be about average, but there will be more does killed than first season.

"Usually anybody who held out for a buck first season will kill a doe second season in order to fill his tag," Smith said.

Second season runs from Dec. 1 to Dec. 4. The hunting day extends from a half hour before sunrise to sunset each day.

Mabery said the second season hunters can expect to see fewer deer than first season because the mating season is coming to an end.

"I expect to see lower numbers second season," he said. "The fact is that there are fewer deer on the refuge, and it is toward the tail-end of rut."

"With the mating season tapering off, the male deer aren't quite as active or foolish as they were during rut and first season."

Philadelphia story: Frank Lawlor in the Philadelphia Inquirer: "Shawn Bradley, the ex-missionary man and the swizzle-stick center of the 76ers, is the latest major focus of the venerable Philadelphia custom known as boozing."

"During player introductions on opening night, he was booed the moment his reddish head popped through the tunnel entrance."

"He hadn't even played for nine months, so basically he was getting booed for having been injured twice."

honorable mention along with junior strong safety Darnell Hendricks.

Watson said he found it hard to believe Hendricks' name was left off the first-team list after the Los Angeles, Calif. native tied for second in the Gateway with four interceptions and racked up nearly 100 tackles.

"I was very disappointed that Darnell Hendricks was not a first-team player," Watson said. "He was one of two big play safeties in our league."

The Gateway offensive player of the year was Western Illinois quarterback Rob St. Sauver, while Northern Iowa linebacker Andre Allen ran away with the top defensive honor.

UNI's Terry Allen was named the coach of the year.

outfielder from South Suburban College, hit .350 with nine home runs and 39 RBIs last season.

"Tim might have as much power as anyone in junior college," Callahan said. "He hits really well and will be able to pick up the slack in the power area for us."

Jamold Little, a former draftee of the Milwaukee Brewers who was also signed hit .450 in the fall for Southeastern Illinois College and

NHL dispute talks delayed

Newsday

Management officials fear there will be little hard bargaining between the NHL and the locked out Players' Association before Wayne Gretzky's Scandinavian tour ends Dec. 12.

According to a source, the owners believe that union executive director Bob Goodenow is "going to let the owners stew for a couple of weeks."

Union officials and players, however, say the current lull in collective bargaining agreement negotiations is needed for players to study the latest management offer.

A two-week break would put both sides up against the unofficial Dec. 15 deadline for salvaging a season. The league already has cut 24 games from the 84-game schedule. A further reduction, possibly of six games, is expected this week. Most observers feel Jan. 1 is the latest a 54-game season could begin.

The union has given its blessing to the "Gretzky and Friends '94 Tour" that begins Saturday in Helsinki but union spokesman Steve McAllister said the tour will have no impact on the talks.

"Wayne has known all along that if the season starts he'd have to scrap the tour," McAllister said. "It's not a factor in whether we'll get a deal done."

The NHL and the union met six times in a 10-day span in Boston before recessing last Saturday.

Saluki baseball recruits six juniors

Baseball player Tim Kratochvil, a junior in social studies from Mount Olive, lifts weights as part of his off-season training Tuesday afternoon in the baseball clubhouse weight room.

Skills expected to aid team

By Doug Durso
Senior Reporter

The first recruits of the Callahan baseball era have signed to fill specific needs and give the SIUC baseball team added depth as the Salukis inked six recruits to national letters-of-intent during the NCAA early signing period last week.

Saluki baseball coach Dan Callahan said he is excited about his first recruiting class.

"I'm very happy about what transpired during the early-signing period," he said. "It shows we did a good job busting our tails the two months before signing them."

All six recruits are junior college ballplayers, which Callahan said was not a planned strategy.

"We always go out to find the best players, who have an interest in our program. It just so happened they were all junior college players this time," he said.

Out of the six recruits two are pitchers, two outfielders, a catcher and a shortstop.

Chris Honeycutt is a right-handed pitcher from Southeastern Illinois College, who was 8-3 last year and has been recruited by Western Kentucky, Middle Tennessee, Murray State and Kentucky.

Callahan said Honeycutt has a chance to make an immediate impact on the club.

"He has the capability of being one of our four top pitchers," he said. "He is not overpowering, but is consistent."

Tory Hatton, a right-handed hurler from Illinois Central College was his team's Most Valuable Player with a 6-1 record and 2.14 earned run average. He received second-team JUCO All-American honors.

"I saw him for the first time this fall and he caught the eye of some professional scouts," Callahan said. "He should be able to be a front-line pitcher for us."

Brian Voglar will help out the Salukis in the outfield and at the plate after hitting .352 as a freshman for Mineral Area Junior College.

"Brian runs well, swings the bat well and from the team he played on you know he strong fundamentally," Callahan said.

All-Conference pick Gill makes first-team

At 6-5, 270-pounds, Saluki football offensive tackle Jeff Gill is not hard for fans to spot on the football field. And after putting together his finest season in four years on the gridiron for SIUC, it was not hard for the Gateway All-Conference voters to find Gill either.

A product of Routh High School in Jacksonville, Gill was a unanimous choice to the 1994 Gateway All-Conference first-team.

"Jeff was a unanimous pick and there were only a handful of those," Saluki football head coach Shawn Watson said. "The respect that he received from the coaches and media is worthy of his dedication to the task. I'll take 110 Jeff Gill's every year because that attitude is what you need to win."

Gill was the only Saluki player to be named to the first-team, but SIUC tight end Damon Jones found his way onto the All-Conference second-team.

Jones, a 6-6, 255-pound sophomore transfer from Michigan joined the Saluki squad just days before the opening game on Sept. 3 and ended up leading SIUC in receiving with 31 catches for 509 yards.

Watson said Jones should have been a member of the first-team, but the voters tend to lean towards players whose team's have better records.

"There's a lot of political stuff in that (voting), but the kid that won it (Matt Harken from Northern Iowa) was a good tight end," he said. "There's not a player more dominating at a position from tackle to tight end than Damon Jones in our league. Now he has some fuel for next year."

Despite boasting the Gateway's second and third leading tacklers in linebackers Tony Seman and Brian Tranchiella, SIUC punter Mark Gagliano was the only player named the leagues all-defensive second team.

Gagliano, a sophomore from Collierville, Tenn. averaged just over 41 yards-per-punt attempt and was twice named the Gateway's special teams player of the week.

"We knew he had the leg to be this good, but it was Mark who went home and put in the strength work to improve," Watson said.

Final shotgun deer season opens

By Sean Walker
Staff Reporter

The second and final 1994 shotgun deer season opens Thursday and hunters who did not fill their tags during the first season will be out in droves trying to get the one that got away opening weekend.

The deer harvest for the first weekend showed that there were a large number deer that did escape hunters' sights. The overall numbers for Johnson, Jackson, Williamson and Union counties showed a decrease in the harvest from last year, but Paul Shelton, the wildlife program manager at the Illinois Department of Conservation, said to compare the harvest this year with last year is not fair because the total deer population has dropped.

"Last year's first firearm season was extraordinary," he said. "The weather was right and there was a large number of deer in the area."

Shelton said in the 1991-1992 seasons, hunters only harvested roughly 60 percent of the deer, so there was a stockpile of deer in the '93 season. Last year the ratio between the first and second season was about 75 to 25 percent. According to Shelton, the ratio this year is more likely to be 60 to 40 percent.

Shelton said even though the numbers are down now, the hunters easily will make up the difference in the second season.

"At this point in the season, many of the counties' harvests will close about the same if not above what it was last year," he said. "I think it is a little premature to guess at the harvest before the second season, because the numbers will even out after this weekend."

"Many of the counties will close about the same if not above what they were last year."

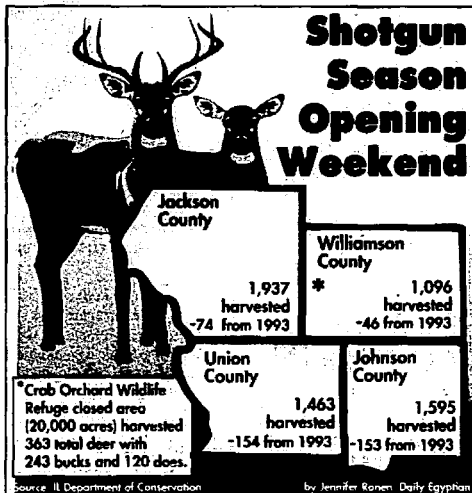

John Mabery, a wildlife biologist at the Crab Orchard Wildlife Refuge, said the refuge is having a problem controlling the number of does because hunters go for the males rather than the females.

"The hunters want a buck," Mabery said. "This throws the sex ratio out of balance for the deer population to 10 females to every one male on the refuge."

"This is really bringing the deer population up on the refuge and is causing problems here and throughout Illinois. We are encouraging hunters to kill does rather than bucks second season."

The Illinois Department of Conservation issued 606 deer tags for first season in the closed area of
