Contributions reach all-time high mark

Private funds, donations reach $13 million

Valerie N. Donnells
vdonnells@advancenet.net

Money contributions to SIUC reached record levels in fiscal year 2003, bringing in about $13 million for the University. Contributions in fiscal year 2003, which ended June 30, increased more than $1 million from the previous year.

Chancellor Walter Wendler said the increase in donations is a good indication for the future of the University.

"We had the best year we've ever had in the history of the University this year," Wendler said. "We feel good about it because these are not just financial contributions, but we're stepping up. That's a good sign.""""

Wendler, vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement, attributed the increase to five primary causes.

"We are doing a better job of getting out and making a case for private support for institutions," McCurry said. "Another part is we're also finding that people are more and more aware of the shrinking resources that are coming from the state and federal government and that private support has to play a greater role than it has in the past."

He also said he thinks alumni are more willing to invest in the institution due to Wendler's leadership initiatives in creating Southern at 350 and recent successes in athletics and academics, which create a positive image of the University.

McCully said monetary contributions were higher than ever, but total contributions, which include gifts as well as endowed funds, were down in 2003.

Three years ago, gift donations, which had a monetary value of more than $18 million, made the total contributions about $29 million.

Council changes time for Sunday liquor sales

City Council changes alcohol code with 4-3 vote

Nicole Sack
nsack@dailyeolian.com

Carbondale now has a new liquor code for the sale of Sunday liquor sales. After hearing numerous citizens comments about the concerns of changing the code, the Carbondale City Council unanimously voted 4-3 to pass the new ordinance.

Sunday liquor sales in Carbondale will now begin at 11 a.m. instead of the previous 1 p.m. time.

Before voting, Councilman Steven Hayes gave the council reasons why the code should not be changed. He said the change in liquor sales will not make or break any business in Carbondale.

He expressed concerns of the black communities of northeast Carbondale and Tarum Heights that we are extremely close to liquor stores now being able to start selling alcohol earlier.

"I do believe this has the potential to have a severe effect on the African-American community," Hayes said.

Hayes, who voted against the ordinance, added playing down the party image of Carbondale is something the city has worked hard to change and is another reason why he did not support the code change.

Councilwoman Corene McDaniel, who also voted against the ordinance, told the council prior to the vote, she had received a great number of communications from the public, which had a monetary value of more than $18 million, made the total contributions about $29 million.

Civil service association to discuss arbitration at meeting

kdavis@dailyeolian.com

The Association of Civil Service Employees at SIUC only has three days left to file paperwork requesting arbitration against University administrative actions for raises given to employees at SIUC. At the end of Sept. 12, because of 2-percent raises allotted to non-union SIU-Edwardsville employees in July, Ruth Pommerin, ACE president, said under the current contracts union employees are not guaranteed equal raises to those granted to non-instructional staff on campus.

Pommerin said since the contract is with the Board of Trustees and not the University chancellor, it extends beyond the campus is the system as a whole.

But the chancellor was denied last month because the board did not require raises to be given to employees on the Edwardsville and Carbondale campuses.

She said the chancellor has the option to give raises if funds were available.

"That's all there is to say about it," Wendler said.

"We have the resources to do everything right now that we would like to do, but we don't," he said. "We're making difficult decisions." Pommerin said the goal is to discuss the possibility of arbitration as a means of union members.

The executive committee voted in an emergency meeting Oct. 7 to send the issue to arbitration.

Pommerin said the response to the proposal has been overwhelmingly supportive of SIUC's paper, which is already completed, but it wants more feedback.

"I'm calling for input," she said.

"The paperwork is set and ready to go, but if there is not extensive opposition, of course we will rethink it."

"We need much more from members than dues — we need active involvement. When we forward, I want to make sure we have a solid backing behind me."

- Ruth Pommerin, ACE president

Association of Civil Service Employees raises to all faculty this year after resolving a dispute with the Faculty Association, which represents about half of SIUC's faculty.

"We have a plan and it's there, and not many people like it," Wendler said.

"And I understand that, but we are methodically working toward it.

State Treasurer Topinka to speak in Student Center

First woman treasurer to give two presentations

Andy Horony
ahorony@dailyEgyptian.com

Breaking the mold is nothing new to Illinois State Treasurer Judy Baar Topinka. She is the first woman in state history elected to her present post and also the first woman to be unanimously selected chairwoman of the Illinois State Republican Party. And in a 2002 general election that saw Democrats sweep every other statewide office, Topinka was the only Republican standing.

She will share her history-making insights Thursday with SUC in two separate, free events at the Student Center. At noon, Topinka will discuss persistent women’s issues in “Juggling a Three-Ring Circus: Men, Manager and Politician,” a presentation sponsored by University Women’s Professional Association.

Later in the day, she will switch gears during a 4 p.m. appearance as part of the Public Policy Institute’s “What I Have Learned” series, where she will touch on various aspects of her varied political career.

A 1966 graduate of Northwestern University’s Medill School of Journalism, Topinka has covered a large portion of her early discussion to depicting how she was able to maintain a successful political career while also raising a family.

“Juggling her professional career with being a mother quite successfully,” Russell said. “She’s been able to do both while continuing to climb the ladder.”

While she has remained active in promoting women’s issues throughout her tenure as state treasurer, Topinka has also earned the respect of both parties. Baughman said.

“Topinka has been a trailblazer that has been the first to do so many things,” Baughman said. “She’s the first Republican to be elected state treasurer in 32 years, not to mention being the first woman elected to that office. She is looking to do good for the people. She is looking to do good for the people. She has also been a great outside the elected office. In May 2002, she launched the Treasurer’s Advisory Board for Women’s Issues, comprised of experts in business, education, finance, law and advocacy. Topinka works along with the board in developing programs and policies to enhance the power of women as they strive to achieve their goals.

Visit Russell of University Women’s Professional Association said she expects Topinka to devote a large portion of her easy discussion to depicting how she was able to maintain a successful political career while also raising a family.

“She has been able to juggle her professional career with being a mother quite successfully,” Russell said. “She’s been able to do both while continuing to climb the ladder.”

Southern Illinois University Student Center Auditorium

On November 8, 1994, Judy Baar Topinka was elected Illinois State Treasurer—becoming the first woman in Illinois history to hold this post. She also became the first Republican to be elected State Treasurer in 32 years.

Topinka made history again in November 1998, as she won a second term as State Treasurer—becoming the first woman to be re-elected to a statewide office. Winning re-election to a third term as Illinois State Treasurer in 2002, Topinka became the first State Treasurer to win three consecutive terms.

Topinka, who served four years in the Illinois House of Representatives and 10 years in the Illinois Senate, is currently the Chair of the Illinois Republican Party. She is the first woman to lead a major party in our state. A graduate of the Northwestern University Medill School of Journalism, Topinka established herself as an accomplished journalist in the Cook County suburb, including eleven years as a reporter and editor for several award-winning community newspapers.

Two people shot in Murphysboro Monday

Both victims stable; police have suspects

Two people were found shot Monday night in two different Murphysboro residences near Bridgewood Lane.

According to the Murphysboro Police Department, both victims are in stable condition, and the preliminary investigation has resulted in several suspects.

Murphysboro Police Chief Jeffery Bock said the department received a phone call around 8:30 p.m. that someone had been shot in the hand at a home in the 700 block of Bridgewood Lane.

When officers arrived at the residence, they found Murphysboro resident Latricia Jones shot through the window area and floor through her hand. Bock said he believes Jones, 21, was struck by a single shot that went through her residence.

Upon further inspection, officers discovered a person who had been shot at a second residence behind the Bridgewood Lane home.

Obelisk is back!

MCMA, DE team up to bring back SIUC yearbook

Rachel Lindsay
refsd@dailyEgyptian.com

For the past 15 years, students at SIUC have had yearbooks and yearbook staff to record their memories of college life. Major events even went unrecorded because students were unassured that their college lives would be chronicled at all. All that is about to change.

Administrators for the College of Media, Arts and Communication, and representatives from Taylor Publishing, one of the largest yearbook publishers in the United States, signed a contract Oct. 10 to bring back the Obelisk, the University's yearbook.

"Too optimistic and very pleased that everyone came together in the end," said Walter Tregard, director of the School of Journalism. "I think this is going to be a good thing for SIU and a good thing for our School of Journalism."

Jim Hawkinson, the representative from Taylor Publishing, said that under the Alumni Program, a new strategy for SIU, the yearbook would return to SIU's campus. Taylor Publishing indicated they would take on the cost of creating a yearbook on campus if the interest was there.

Hawkinson, a two-degree alum from SIUC, said when the campus became a university for on-campus students to take the program, the school would cease work on the yearbook. This year, HCMA and the Daily Egyptian will supply the space, the advertising, the workers, and the pay.

"I think there will be a tremendous opportunity for our students," said Hawkkinson.

Hawkinson said Taylor Publishing believes it is necessary to bring the yearbook proposal to the alma mater. Taylor Publishing believes there is a need and a want for a yearbook, but because of the financial obligation,

"This is another one of those outside-the-classroom learning opportunities."

Manganath Pendakur
dean, College of Mass Communications and Media Arts

The Obelisk is the yearbook of Southern Illinois University that was last published in 1986. This year, The Obelisk will return to SIU as a part of the Daily Egyptian.

They represent populations who have been traditionally disfranchised mainstream society. Clubs such as the Black Student Association, Hispanic Student Association, and the African Student Council all pride themselves on providing a forum for groups of students. They are also communities that have been traditionally disfranchised. All Lisa McClellan, a 15-year-old from Oakley, said she wanted to be a group of her own. McClellan, who worked to get the issue of race and ethnicity included in the daily life of the school, was never published, and the yearbook was divided, intimidated, or cut, meaning there have been multiple attempts to revive the yearbook but to no avail.

Larry Davis, vice chancellor for Student Affairs and Enrollment Management, said although his office was the former sponsor of the yearbook, it is not interested in creating another yearbook. Student Affairs is now acting as a resource to provide student information on marketing purposes.

Lawrence, general manager of the Daily Egyptian, said the yearbook would provide for one year, estimated at 15 to 20 staff members. One extra person will be hired in advertising. According to Hawkkinson, the book will be unassuming.

"In the same way the DE students determine what's in the DE, every day, the staff of the yearbook, the Obelisk, will be making those editorial and design decisions," Hawkkinson said.

Pendakur said students should have an opportunity to learn a different style of writing and be involved in new graphics, advertising, and marketing opportunities.

"This is another one of those outside-the-classroom learning opportunities," Pendakur said.

I think that this is overall a very good project that would serve our students really well because it produces a learning opportunity outside the classroom and academic that they could use as part of their portfolio when they try to get a job," Pendakur said.

"I see this as a project positive for both the school as well as the Taylor Publishing company."

A week of lifetime found with externships

Externship application deadline set for Nov. 14
Drew Stevens dstevens@dailyEgyptian.com

Amanda Bradley did not spend her spring vacation last year sleeping in late and waking up in the afternoon. She spent her break at an extern, gaining valuable experience about her future career.

Bradley, a sophomore in social studies from Marion, shadowed a student teacher at Marion High School, where she graduated a year and a half ago.

"It was nice to be back and see what things have changed in the short time I had been gone," Bradley said. "I was able to observe a student teacher and learn first-hand what it was like to run a classroom."

The University's award-winning Extern Program matches juniors and seniors with alumni and friends in professional environments nationwide during spring break, March 8 to 12.

The deadline for extern applications must be turned in by 4 p.m. Nov. 14 to the Alumni Association or 815 South Main St., second floor of the Student Center.

Since 1984, the Alumni Association and Student Alumni Council, in collaboration with the SIUC undergraduate colleges, have provided students with hands-on learning experience in their chosen fields.

Students observe and learn about their career field, apply skills learned in the classroom in a professional work environment and make valuable career contacts.

Eric Fowler, a senior in automotive technology from Belleville, said he had a great experience during his externship at American Honda Motor Training Center in Troy, Ohio.

Fowler shadowed Tim Jones, the training center coordinator.

"I learned some values of the company and how professional people interact with other co-workers throughout the day," Fowler said. "I saw what Tim does on a daily basis was great."

The Council for the Advancement and Support of Education has awarded Fowler said his externship was unique because Honda paid for all of his expenses including a hotel suite, food and airfare.

"The extern application also requires participants to specify their desired geographic area, and participants should consider next when choosing the location of their externship."

Prospective applicants must meet a minimum grade point average requirement, be enrolled at SIUC for both fall and spring semesters, satisfy an externship deadline set for Nov. 14.

The University's award-winning Extern Program matches juniors and seniors with alumni and friends in professional environments nationwide during spring break, March 8 to 12. More than 2,000 students total have participated in the externship program.

Linsey Maughan lmaughan@dailyEgyptian.com

On Thursday, all SIUC agriculture students and agriculture alumni will have the opportunity to meet with a variety of employers and may even walk away with a Friday interview.

The annual College of Agricultural Sciences 2003 Career Fair will be from 8:30 a.m. until 3 p.m. Thursday in the Student Center ballrooms.

The event, which is sponsored by the College of Agricultural Sciences and the Agriculture Student Council, intends to inform students of the jobs available now, primarily in Illinois.

"Students should dress in their most 'employable' look, bring their resume and be ready to apply for a job," said Julia Weststein, assistant dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences, who is the 2003 Career Fair coordinator.

"Any time is a good time to work on one's resume, practice interviewing skills and take a look at potential jobs that are available. Students should take every opportunity to make contact with that right job market."

Weststein said the career fair helps students in the college connect in person with regional employers in agriculture-related businesses.

"Agriculture means a lot of different things to different people, from trucking and financing to research to landscape design and greenhouse management," Weststein said. "It's pretty diverse."

Raise admission standards

The prospective students of Fall 2005 may face tougher standards of admission to SIUC if a proposal drawn up by Admissions and Records is approved.

Currently, incoming freshmen must have an ACT score of 21 or higher or be in the top half of their graduating class and have an ACT score of 18 or above. If Chancellor Walter Wendel expects future students to graduate and then dropped out, "[The educated differ from the uneducated] as much as some people away from the University, but SIUCs Center for Basic Skills or junior colleges are always standard, But as time goes on, the University as a whole will benefit from this change. After all, top-notch faculty and a standard of admission to SIUC is a necessary and proper step to raise the University's embarrassingly low graduation rates.

Earlier this year, the DAILY EGYPTIAN reported the SIUC graduation rate was 39 percent—a whopping 20 percent below the national average.

We realize raising the admission standards will turn some people away from the University, but SIUCs Center for Basic Skills or junior colleges are always available.

According to Wendel, the center helps students ill prepared for college. In fact, one fifth of the current freshman class is enrolled in the center. However, they would also see a change in its policy, further limiting students. Currently, an ACT score of 20 or below and in the bottom half of their graduating class is the basis for entering it. Under the new plan, the Center for Basic Skills would require an ACT score of 18 to 20 or 21 to 23 and class rank in the 25 percentile to 49 percentile. If students don't have the scores to match either criteria, then a junior college is probably the best option for them. Many times, these students don't have the skills needed to make it in the university atmosphere. These students are among those who have been let in through the liberal admission standards and then dropped out, causing the graduation rate to steadily decline. Their purposes would be best served if they attended a junior college and then transferred. The University shouldn't worry about losing such students because if they truly wanted to come to SIUC for an education, it will still be here when they are looking to transfer.

And for those of us already here, if and when the reputation of the University increases, it could make a marketable improvement to the value of our educations in the eyes of possible employers.

If Wendel expects SIUC to become a national research institution by 2019, the bar must be raised.

When the economy goes sour, enrollment may go down at first: "While the University in the midst of a budget crisis, this may not seem to be the prime time to make changes. But as time goes on, the University as a whole will benefit from this change. After all, top-notch faculty and a state-of-the-art library are not enough to make SIUC "Southern at 150" if we don't have a higher caliber of students as well."
It's the great void
Charlie Brown

As I flipped through a pile of magazines this other day, I started to feel Halloween coming on strong. I saw all sorts of great ideas for spooky deocrations. I read how to bake an adorable pumpkin cake covered with little marzipan squishes and leaves that only takes 42 hours to prepare!

Halloween fun! I started at pictures of little kids dressed in costumes and sheets standing outside someone's festive door, waiting for their candy bars and pop- corn balls. I started to miss the excitement of October memories from years gone by. Watching Charlie Brown's Halloween exploits on TV, trick-or- treating in the neighborhood, dressing up for the school parade and getting to eat more candy in three hours than was allowed the rest of the year combined! What a wonderful holiday!

But what saddens me so much is that these cute little kids in the picture standing outside the neighborhood's ghoul-lined porch probably have little idea what's going on. The networks stopped airing "The Great Pumpkin" years ago, and it's been even harder to find any trick-or-treaters at the door. And I guess it makes sense. Their parents don't know me. How do they know I'm not running a crystal meth lab out of my basement and just waiting for these silly little kids to come visit me?

And there's absolutely no such thing as Halloween parades at school anymore, either. TV's won't generate the chance ofamarins and buzz around the playground on their-- broomsticks. After all, if the schools were taught encouraging a pagan-inspired holiday, there's no telling how many more silly little witch Masons might start blooming in 4th classrooms. All in all, I'd say the holiday's just about had it. And it's really sort of sad, especially when you go back to those early years. We celebrated Memorial Day like the good upstanding little church kids used to do, and zoom around the playground on their broomsticks. But what saddens me so much is that these cute little kids in the picture probably have little idea what's going on. The networks stopped airing "The Great Pumpkin" years ago, and it's been even harder to find any trick-or-treaters at the door.

Is it possible that most of us don't have a clue where Memorial Day came from. And like we are that way. If someone- one were to tell us it was started by a group of pagans, or by Christians, or by Muslims, we'd probably all jump to the same conclusion of opinion about spirituality, you can be sure we'd be changing that in a second. Or else we'd start calling it a "pagan holiday" so no one would be offended.

I believe classrooms should be of religious bias, and if Halloween goes against the grain, maybe we do need to mix it. Perhaps, the more we start to separate church and state and weed out the bad influences, the more we need to encourage kids' lives with something more. We all see right now is a celebration of individuality and a generation of kids with nothing to get excited about. Meanwhile, I'm headed to the kitchen to see if I can't duplicate that popcorn ball recipe from the magazine. I'm sure it's wrong of me, but I'm really looking forward to seeing if any little gobins show up to do our dancing this year. After all, if we can't celebrate anything else next weekend, we can at least continue on for some strange reason every October. Tooie Raddi still go out big time. That's good enough for me.

We are so afraid of the unknown that there was a point in time when the great minds of the era were persecuted and excommunicated for displaying this potential. Now we have to use it to fight off the insidious potential that is almost non-existent. The great minds are given their freedom to express their considered alternative art, kind of like a side dish at a nice restaurant. They are pushed from their soapboxes and moved in cable and late-night HBO specials where the majority of the captive audience is falling to a naive sleep. American volunteers teach culture to international students

More than 200 volunteers work in on-campus programs

jros@dailyEgyptian.com

Similar to many students, English Action volunteers meet with international students to take a walk around the area, go shopping or sip coffee. Not only does the program give international students a chance to make new friends, but it also helps participants to improve their speaking skills during their one-on-one time with an American student.

The English in Action program has been going on for more than 20 years on campus and is designed to help international students meet American students and perfect their English skills. Students are paired up through International Programs and Services, located in the Northwest Annex. Students are paired up with their major and similar interests and are expected to meet at least one hour a week over the course of a semester. The program enables students to participate in any activities that interest both people as long as it improves speaking skills.

IN GEAR is another program entered to inform others about each student’s participation in English in Action.

The student matches can visit local neighborhoods, international students can help them learn about culture on their level, and domestic students can learn about their country, and uncovers English in Action for five years and participated in many activities while he was here. Tong said people want to sound stupid when Tong notices many differences between American and Singaporean cultures and allow interaction on campus and in the community. CHAMPAIGN (U-WIRE) - While most people benefit from websites that offer high school and college degrees through the Internet for little or no work, others -- including the University of Illinois professor and a member of the IN GEAR program, among other activities. Tong said he goes to high schools to talk about his culture, Singapore's history, lifestyle and food through the IN GEAR program. Tong said that the program was first brought to him in the form of pop-up Internet window. Gollin learned that he could buy a diploma for a second degree from this company for a couple of thousand dollars. They would also provide letters of recommendation and a transcript. Gollin was concerned by this and decided to research University of Illinois and other unaccredited universities.

DONATIONS

Wendler said alumni and friend contributions comprise the smallest of four streams of income for the University, since they contribute to less than 4 percent of the overall budget. It would be unrealistic to expect the additional funds to make a large impact on the current deficit at SIUC.

"But every percent we pick up in donations and gifts and so on helps us make up for shortfalls from state and federal appropriations," he said.

Other Illinois universities have noticed a similar trend in donations.

Jill Niles, vice president for External Relations at Eastern Illinois University, said donations to the university increased more than 20 percent from $21.8 million in fiscal year 2002, to $25.6 million in fiscal year 2003.

Niles said she could not speak for other universities but conceded the increase to the generosity of alumni and friends who have continued to support them throughout the years.

The University of Illinois has also seen a "steady increase, about 10 million" each year for the past five years, according to Jim Godbold, communications officer for the U of I Foundation.

"We work hard at it (fund raising)," Godbold said. "That's the number one reason, and we try to get more and more people involved. Our donors are very loyal to the university.

"The funds raised in fiscal year 2003 totaled $168 million, actually a decrease of more than 20 percent from the 2002 numbers, which were a record for the university at $219.6 million. Godbold said a few unapprised largesse gifts were the reason for the drastic increase from $147 million in fiscal year 2001.

Wendler said SIUC is gearing up to launch a capital campaign to bring in more funds, but it is still in the planning stage.

"We're working diligently to try to strengthen this string of income to be able to meet the goals of the University," said Wendler at a press conference at Southern Illinois University 150," Wendler said.

McCurry said in spite of recent success, his office is constantly working to contact alumni and "bring in more funds for the University."

"I'm pleased that we are headed in the right direction," McCurry said, "but there is a lot more to be done."

Anti-abortion legislation sent to White House

James Ruhmenn
Archie Kiddler Newspapers

WASHINGTON (K.Rl) — Anti-abortion provisions rejected Tuesday as the Senate sent to President Bush legislation that would outline a specific procedure to terminate pregnancies, and that will be the first federal law restricting abortions since the Supreme Court's landmark Roe v. Wade ruling three decades ago.

The White House immediately vowed to perform the procedure, which opposes current "partial-birth abortion," procedures which could face fines or prison terms, and certain family members could sue doctors for damages. Congress has stated it opposes abortion.

"This is Congress criminalizing physician judgment," said Gloria Feldt, president of Planned Parenthood. "Our interest is to be in court before the ink dries on this provision."

Anti-abortion groups hailed the 66-34 vote as the elimination of years of effort to restrict abortions. The House of Representatives had already approved the measure. Congress twice saw similar legislation to former President Bill Clinton, vetoed it, according to Anto.

"The only difference this time is that we have a president who has said he is willing to sign this legislation," said Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., the lead sponsor of the bill.

The ban would focus on a specific technique in which a fetus is partially delivered, then killed.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists says the procedure is a "rare variant" of the dilation and evacuation procedure common in midtrimester abortions. The group opposes the ban.

The only exception to the ban would be if the procedure were performed to save the life of the woman. The ban would be the final step in a series of attacks by the Republican-controlled Congress on abortion rights. The ban would be between the last trimester and the 24th week.

The American Medical Association last year declared the method "medically safe and effective, and a reasonable approach to terminating pregnancies." The American Medical Association says the procedure is medically safe and effective, and a reasonable approach to terminating pregnancies.

Steven Haynes, city councilman of Carbondale, voices his opinions on why the hours of liquor sales should not be moved to 11 a.m.

calls and letters from members of the community wishing not to see the change.

McDavid had not made her decision on the vote until Sunday, when she realized the change in code would affect all liquor establishments.

Carbondale alderman William Benz approached the council to make his comments against the ordinance. He said he was concerned that changing the liquor time would encroach on time that is important to the American family—early Sunday mornings.

He later made reference to Carbondale Officer Jeff Gill who was awarded the American Legion's award of Metal of Honor earlier in the night.

"Remember what Officer Gill was awarded for tonight," Benz said. "He was awarded for picking up drunks. Officer Gill was recognized by the American Legion for having the highest number of arrests of drunk drivers in the area. The American Legion also honored Officer Christine Cammer with its Police Officer of the Year Award. Cammer assisted the FBI with a stolen car investigation that took her to Mississippi to uncover evidence.

Second Commander Patrick Neklek of the Carbondale Chapter of the American Legion presented the awards to Gill and Cammer. He said the actions of the two officers reflected a great credit to themselves, their communities and to the nation.

Commander Sheila Simon reminded the council that Deputy Chief Steve Odom, who is on the Liquor Advisory Board and made recommendations for the change, had not seen the earlier start time on Sundays as a safety issue.

Simon, who said she had experience processing drivers under the influence, said DUIs are not a problem on Sunday mornings. She said the problem with intoxicated drivers that needs to be addressed is what time establishments stop selling liquor.

Daily Horoscope

By Linda C. Black

Today's Birthday (Oct. 22). There's way too much so be done, but don't let that slow you down. Check items off your to-do list this year, one at a time. Leave room in your schedule for minutes.

To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging. Valid: March 1-April 17. Today is 6 - A project that's been stalled will finally start moving forward. However, there may be short delays. Continue to proceed with caution.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today is an 8 - An assignment or promotion you've been waiting for could finally come through. Don't spend the check before you get it, though. It could take a while. Gemini (May 21-June 21) - Today is 6 - Finish up the discussions on what you'd create if you could. Those conversations are fun, but they're only the first step. Start (and soon) comes the harder and more fulfilling part.

Cancer (June 22-July 22) - Today is a 7 - Continue to exercise caution as you push forward. You may not be able to speed up a bit, but eventually you'll be faster.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) - Today is a 7 - By using skills you've gained through pain, you can increase your wealth. It's not easy, so don't squander or make light of your achievements.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) - Today is a 7 - New revelations require a decision and perhaps an expenditure. Don't let it bother you - you can afford it. Take care of the most important first.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - Today is a 6 - Luckily, you're good at taking your wins out of otherwise difficult situations. Someone who believes in you wants to listen and may have some good advice.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Today is a 7 - Financial constraints don't have to force you to abort your plans. This could be exactly what you need to unleash your creative talents.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is a 5 - Proceed with caution. You'll encounter more resistance than usual. It won't be that way forever, of course. Continue to watch and learn.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Today is a 7 - Riches that seemed like fantasy soon start to materialize. Don't make too big a deal out of a setback. Success is on the way.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) - Today is a 5 - Something still don't quite compute. A revision is required. Go over the numbers again until everything comes out right.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - Today is a 6 - Don't risk everything quite yet. That would be premature. This is one of those valuable learning experiences.

DAILY EAGLE
Kill not leaving anytime soon

By JENI PULLIAM

USI volleyball staying confident and realistic that you have reached the next level of success. You have finally achieved a goal that you worked hard to attain.

There is also the eagerness to meet the other freshmen on the team, the bond that we share with one another, both on and off the court.

The future for Saluki volleyball is very promising. Even though we are deemed as "young and inexperienced" and "the worst volleyball team in Saluki history," we do not allow these negative outlooks to diminish our dreams and aspirations. We are committed to the program and are constantly improving.

Speaking for the other 10 freshmen on the team, we all have experienced countless things here — both good and bad. We have grown so much as people, students, and athletes. I have learned from each experience and look forward to what is in store for me for the next few years.

Every day I am creating memories for the future, and I am happy that these memories include playing volleyball and attending Saluki school at SIU.

It was destiny

By JENE' PULLIAM

GUEST COMMENTARY

Deep thoughts.

From the first time I visited this campus, I realized that I would be a future Saluki. At the age of 17, most things in life were not definite, but for me, my college choice was already made. I fell in love with the campus, coaches and everything that encompassed Southern Illinois University. Not once have I regretted my decision to attend SIU, and I do not anticipate I ever will.

Looking back on the road to selecting SIU, I can only attribute my decision to God. On my final visit to each school, I was prepared to make my college decision. The choice was out of my hands as I prayed that God would deliver a sign to me, where I wanted to attend college. SIU was my first visit, and God answered my prayer.

Before the volleyball match, the coaches and team joined together and prepared for the upcoming match with God. Through technique, they all came together and took time out to read a devotion. The contents of this devotion were what I needed to know.

In the devotion, it declared how each and every person in the circle was destined to be there and was essential to the success of the team. Clearly, God had provided my sign.

In the months leading to my arrival, the nerves began to kick in as I considered how different my life would be. College is a big step for anyone, especially for an athlete.

College athletics are a completely new experience for all freshmen. There is a lot of pressure; you feel as if you have to go in and prove yourself to your coaches and fellow teammates. You need to show up to practice and meetings, but you also need to go to classes and do your schoolwork.

The team is like a family. While you are working hard to win games, you also need to focus on your schoolwork and the team dynamics.

I anticipated every aspect of being a student-athlete. The true meaning of the term "full ride" not only applies to the scholarships you receive; it also applies to the full schedule of games, full practices, mandatory study sessions, and the "typical college experiences, long bus rides and an off-season that is a season."

I would not change a thing. The key is...
Northern Illinois gets QB of future

Frank Rusnak
Northern Illinois (Chicago) 11-20-03

Northern Illinois might have one of the best quarterbacks in the country in the near few years, Huskies wide receiver Shane Powers said.

On Thursday, NIU received a verbal commitment from Riverdale-Broadfield High School quarterback Britt Davis, who is rated as one of the top players in the state.

Riverdale-Broadfield, a national recruiting website, states the 6-4, 215-pound Davis is "the most protential and ability to make an impact on the college level."

Britt also runs a 4.35-yard dash, quicker than any current NIU player.

"I will be a redshirt back and will be the starting QB next year," said Britt.

Although it's a shame for Brian Horner, who finished two under par and one stroke of the pack. Freshman Kyle Hosick finished with a six over par 222.

The tournament is SIU's 34th of the fall season.

Chuck Flynn commits to Dartmouth

The Indianapolis Star has reported that Chuck Flynn, a 6-foot-6 forward from Indianapolis (Ind.) Cathedral High School, has verbally committed to Dartmouth.

He was reportedly being recruited by the Ivy League. Flynn averaged 14.3 points and 6.6 rebounds per game last season, his junior campaign in high school. He was named All-State and also selected to the Indiana Junior All-Star Team last summer.

Northern Illinois gets QB of future

DEAKE (E-VIRE) - Despite this being the final season running back Michael Turner, Northern Illinois might have one of the best offensives in the county in the next few years, Huskies wide receiver Shateau Powers said.

On Thursday, NU received a verbal commitment from Riverside-Brookfield High School quarterback Britt Davis, who is ranked as one of the top players in the state.

Rivals.com, a national recruiting website, stores the 6-foot, 185-pound Davis is expected to move to quarterback soon to be second place at the Southwest Missouri State and Prairie View A&M, Mo.

The Solihulls were led by junior college transfer Brian Horner, who finished second in the entire state at the 3A level. Powerhouse Kyle Hawk finished eighth with a score over 202.

The tournament is NU's last of the fall season.

Chuck Flynn commits to Dartmouth
The Indianapolis Star has reported that Chuck Flynn, a 6-foot-6 forward from Indianapolis (Ind) Cathedral High School, has verbally committed to Dartmouth.

He was reportedly recruited by Flynn averaged 14.3 points and 6.6 rebounds per game last season, his senior campaign in high school. He was named all-area and also selected to the Indiana Junior All-Star Team last summer.

and looks to professional sports - not faculty members in education philosophy - for its traditions, attitudes and ethos," Shateau said. "Colleges currently do an excellent job of preparing their students for the industry, but they can often find itself somewhat of a burden on the student's degree on the profession.

"It's a different world we live in now," Kendzierski said.

In the past, the emphasis had been primarily on "teaching, coaching, or doing 66 all about winning." I think, and I think in some ways that's a sad state of affairs. Kendzierski said he can see coaches who possessed the mindset that coaches could be found in both victory and defeat, which he thinks is "not the case in today's coaching world."

"I think of myself as being as competitive as anyone, and I certainly don't like to lose," Kendzierski said. "But I also think there are a lot of values that can be learned at any level."

Shateau said he hopes to eventually see intercollegiate athletics restored to the same level as educational purposes but doesn't think it will be up to coaches and athletic directors to enforce that action.

"I think presidents have to lead the movement in recognizing that athletic programs are best conducted in the same way we conduct our theater, music and dance programs," Shateau said. "Athletics should be integrated within the curriculum the way the theater was done more commonly before the business of making physical art had been stripped away from physical education requirements."

Shateau's basketball head coach Mark Painter said it would be great for his profession if teaching were a viable option, but he doesn't see it as a realistic option. With the way men's basketball's financial structure is designed, Painter said there is no other way to ensure job performance if coaches are not evaluated by their success rate.

"If we were eligible for tenure, you could go 10 years, and then the administration wouldn't have no way of kicking us out," Painter said. "Sure, for coaches it would be great, but it is really realistic? I think not."

Painter is all alone in his deregulation, Wichita State University Athletic Director Jim Schaus said he has heard little talk of allowing coaches to receive tenure but doesn't think it would help curb the amount of pressure already taxed on coaches.

"There is a lot of pressure on coaches now than ever before," Schaus said. "And most of it comes from external areas, especially the higher revenue sports like football and basketball. With pressure from the media and fans, coaches are really under the gun."

"In the recent decreed to education in college world, think it would help curb the absorption of the 1970s, physical education competitive sports. Prior to the decreed sports "I think of myself as being as competitive as anyone, and I certainly don't like to lose," Kendzierski said. "But I also think there are a lot of values that can be learned at any level."

Coaches debate tenure issue

Some coaches calling for a return to ways of past

Andy Heronzy
sherone@dailyegyptian.com

For most of the 20th century, college coaches were nearly as well known for their exploits in the classroom as for their feats on the playing field. But since the early 1970s, as athletic programs began transitioning from an educational model to a professional sports model, the academic responsibilities of college coaches has fallen by the wayside.

Some critics say the rise of television sports is to blame for the erosion of the partnership between athletics and education. Gone are the days of the teacher-coach, where luminaries such as Knute Rockne and John Wooden molded minds on and off the field. Today's coaches no longer possess the job security of their predecessors, who were able to coach and teach without fear of losing their position.

One solution that has been proposed by several pundits is the possibility of universities making coaches accountable for tenure. Tenured professors are allowed the freedom to teach controversial material without fear of censure. Peter Slavinski, track and field head coach at Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine, is one of the more outspoken defenders of the absence of tenure for college coaches.

Slavinski recently authored a column in The Chronicle of Higher Education in which he bemoaned college presidents should offer coaches the same job protection as professors as a means of restoring the academic traditions of intercollegiate athletics. Slavinski argued that in order to compete on the field, coaches and college presidents should consider offering coaches the same job security as professors as a means of restoring the academic traditions of intercollegiate athletics.

Salukis look to run away with Valley

SIU answers several questions during fall practice

Todd Merchant

There will be four falls flying out of Abe Martin Field this spring, but with the team Dan Callahan has assembled, it may not matter.

Callahan, who is entering his 10th season as head coach of the SIU baseball team, will have to rely on speed and defense this year if he hopes to reach his Salukis to the Missouri Valley Conference championship game.

The team leader in 2002 was Callahan's son, who will once again return to the starting lineup for the Dawgs. Callahan has had a little power, picked up some team speed; I think we've got more speed here,he said. "So with that attitude, hopefully we can get some sweeps and see how far we can take it."
