Student Loan Program escapes Senate ax

By David R. Kazak
DE Government/Politics Editor

The Direct Student Loan Program, created by Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., and touted by President Bill Clinton as essential to education's future, escaped the GOP budget-cutting ax Friday, when a Senate committee voted to retain the program.

However, Simon said the program still faces a participation cap, which could affect SIUC students who receive direct student loans.

The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee voted 9-7 against a proposal to eliminate the program from the federal budget, which is facing a $10 billion cut in educational loan programs.

Two Republican senators, including the Senate Education Subcommittee Chair Sen. James Jeffords, R-Vt., voted with Democrats against the proposal.

Eric Smulson, a spokesman for Jeffords, said the senator voted with the Democrats because although he is cautious about the program, he does think it is a good idea.

"In theory, the senator thinks it is a good program," he said. "He wants to give it time to play out. So far, we've done the easy part of giving out the money, and that has gone well. Now we need to see what happens when we try and collect it."

Jeffords' motivation for his vote was the fact that he is the chair of the Education Subcommittee, Smulson said.

"Obviously he will do all he can do to save education," Smulson said.

But Simon said along with the survival of the program comes the possibility of a cap on the program, which would limit the number of schools that will be allowed to take part in the program.

Simon, who is a member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, said the proposed 20-percent participation cap could mean SIUC may have to drop out of the program because the cap is lower than the current level of university participation in the program. The proposal will be voted on Tuesday.

"It looks like they have the votes for that," Simon said after Friday's vote. "It is not fair because colleges should have a choice whether they want to participate in the program."

Simon spokesman David Carle

said if the 20-percent cap gets added to the budget proposals, at least one out of every three schools which now participate in the program would be forced out.

Simon said banks and guarantee agencies have made a lot of money off the Guaranteed Student Loan Program in the past, and said the Republican-backed cap will only be good for those agencies.

"Even with (Friday's) vote, the cap would be nothing but a lift for the banks," Simon said. He also said he is working on a way to try and sway the vote against the cap proposal, but did not have specific

Cripps Bend appeals just keep coming

By Lori D. Clark and Marc Chase
Daily Egyptian Reporters

Another appeal will be filed in federal court Tuesday to try to stop logging in the Shawnee National Forest, despite the failure of a similar appeal earlier this month, a local environmentalist says.

Bill Cronin, a local environmentalist, said he plans to refile an appeal which states that logging in the Cripps Bend area of the forest, located near Paimona, may disrupt the habitat of the Indiana bat.

Cronin said if the appeal is filed, then the logging will cease on a seven-acre region of Cripps Bend until the judge is able to review the case more thoroughly.

The same appeal, which states that the U.S. Forest Service has not adequately determined that logging will not harm the bat, a federally endangered species, was filed earlier this month.

MILOSEVIC TRANSFORMED INTO PEACE PARTNER

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia—Among the military and political transformations in the Balkan conflict this summer, one of the more striking has been the diplomatic partnership between the United States and Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic. After years in which Washington condemned Milosevic as a prime instigator of the brutal warfare in the former Yugoslavia, he is playing a key role in the Clinton administration's six-week-old diplomatic push to end the war. Some U.S. policy-makers have long argued for a policy of ostracizing Milosevic for his support of the Serb rebels in Bosnia, whom Western governments have condemned as the most brutal military force in the war. But now U.S. policy regards him as the only person capable of controlling the Bosnian Serbs.

BOLIVIANS FIGHT FOR RIGHT TO GROW COCA

COCHABAMBA, Bolivia—Peasant farmers who grow coca in the hot and humid lowlands here are engaged in a high-stakes battle of wits with the mighty United States. Guess who's winning? Washington has spent a fortune in Bolivia's tropical Chapare region to slash production of coca leaves, the raw material of cocaine. And coca growers, called "cocaleros," have gladly accepted millions of dollars in Yankee aid. But by official U.S. calculations, Chapare coca fields increased from 83,000 acres in 1991 to 83,700 acres in 1994. It seems the cocaleros have snookered Uncle Sam. Pressed by Washington, successive Bolivian administrations have promised to eradicate coca from the Chapare, but the cocaleros have prevailed, relying on a powerful combination of public sympathy, political power—and the threat of violence.

THREE ARRESTED IN SLAYING OF THREE-YEAR-OLD

LOS ANGELES—Police Saturday announced the arrests of three suspects in the shooting death of a 3-year-old girl whose killing as she rode in a car abruptly escalated into a national symbol of senseless urban violence. The suspects, whom police refused to identify, were arrested late Friday and booked on suspicion of murder in connection with the ambush-style shooting last Sunday that resulted in the death of Stephanie Kuhlen and minor gunshot wounds to her 2-year-old brother and the family friend who was driving the vehicle. Meanwhile, police said a 12-year-old Whittier boy became another victim of an unprovoked attack on a motorist when he was shot in the head late Friday while riding home on a freeway after seeing a Los Angeles Dodgers game with a cousin and a friend. Richard Andrew Bautista was listed in critical but stable condition Saturday after undergoing surgery.

GOP REVERTING TO "AMERICA FIRST" POLICIES

WASHINGTON—After four decades as a bastion of support for free trade and internationalism, the Republican Party is showing signs of reverting to some of the go-it-alone policies that prevailed in its ranks during the Depression and World War II. In what could be the beginning of an epic shift, most candidates for next year's Republican presidential nomination have, in one way or another, voiced hostility toward the United Nations and other international organizations. As the campaign continues, the "America First" theme being voiced by former commentator Patrick J. Buchanan seems to be setting the tone of foreign policy discussion among Republicans, forcing even such avowed internationalists as Sens. Bob Dole of Kansas and Phil Gramm of Texas to edge in Buchanan's direction.

COCHRAN PRAISED BY CROWD AT BLACK CAUCUS

WASHINGTON—He entered to a rousing standing ovation, drew the Congressional Black Caucus audience to its feet two more times, was besieged by fans afterward who thrust their prayer breakfast programs up toward the dais seeking his autograph, and moved through the Washington Convention Center in a brisk flying-wedge cordon of hangers-on and security guards. No—it was not Colin L. Powell, the retired general, best-selling author and award-receiving guest of honor at Saturday night's banquet, nor was it that other fellow who dropped by to deliver the main speech, President Clinton. This was the star of the nation's most famous daytime drama, Johnnie L. Cochran Jr., defense lawyer for O.J. Simpson, who caught the red-eye from the West Coast to arrive in town on time to participate in a black caucus panel discussion.

Extra funds still needed for Late Nite Programming

By Wendy J. Allyn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Members of the SIUC Late Nite Programming Committee say the program is off to a successful start, but adequate funding will determine whether students will continue to have alternative entertainment to the bars.

The committee, which was created to provide an alternative to Carbondale's bar scene, has planned events beyond this fall, but is still uncertain where funding will come from. Jean Paratore, associate vice president of student affairs and dean of students, said the committee is meeting at the end of this week to discuss its plans and possible sources of funding.

Paratore said so far the committee has received funding from a variety of groups and organizations but is still seeking more funds.

"The City of Carbondale contributed to one event, USG funded one outdoor concert, the Residence Hall Association contributed toward the Late Nite of Comedy," Paratore said. "We got some money from the chamber of commerce, some of which will go to the drive-in movie, and SPC has contributed significant funds."

University Programming Office Coordinator Joanne Yantis said she is happy with the sponsorship the program has received.

"We have got really good support so far, not to say we're not still in need of money," Yantis said. "I've been really pleased that people have pulled together for this."

The program budget called for $30,000 to cover events planned during the fall semester. Yantis said the committee still needs $6,000.

"I don't know what we're going to do for next semester," she said. "We'll have to brainstorm some new ways to raise some money. I hate to go back to the same people and say, 'can you do it again?'"

After this week's meeting, committee members should know better who will pay for activities next semester, Paul Mitchell, Student Programming Council chair, said. He said SPC wants to continue the program for the next several years.

Late Nite events so far have included two outdoor concerts on campus, a comedy act at the Student Center, and the Great College Drive-In Movie, held this past Friday at the Sam Rinella Fields.

Attendance at the Great College Drive-In Movie this weekend was low because of the recent drop in weather temperature, Yantis said. Only about 70 people attended the first movie, "Jurassic Park," and about 100 showed up for "Die Hard With A Vengeance."

"We didn't have as many as we expected because of the weather," Yantis said. "A lot of students said it was a good idea, though."

Scott Pfeiffer, Undergraduate Student Government chief of staff, said he is optimistic, however, about the continued success of the Late Nite program.

"We're all working together for one cause, and because of that it will succeed," Pfeiffer said.

Mitchell said the first Late Nite event, an outdoor concert which featured punk/alternative bands from St. Louis, went well even though the committee was not sure what kind of turnout to expect.

The Late Nite of Comedy drew a crowd of more than 600 people, according to Mitchell. One is scheduled for this weekend and one for parent's weekend in October.

Yantis said the program is likely to continue because of the type of entertainment it offers. Late Nite activities are not solely to target students who can't go to bars, she said, but to provide entertainment that is not found anywhere else.

Yantis said Intramural Recreational Sports is helping to sponsor an evening of novelty games at the Rec Center on Nov. 3. The games will include airball volleyball, trampoline bungee, and computerized golf.

"We look at it as alternative entertainment," she said. "It's not just for 18-year-old students. Everyone is welcome."

The next Late Nite event will be a Late Nite of Comedy on Friday, Sept. 29 in the Student Center Ballroom from 9:30 to midnight.

Brothers innocent of murder

By Carey Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Three Carbondale brothers were found not guilty on charges of first degree murder and aggravated discharge of a firearm after more than seven hours of jury deliberation Thursday.

Charlie Pugh, 35, Ray Pugh, 27, and James Pugh, 34, were charged with first degree murder and aggravated discharge of a firearm. They pleaded not guilty to the charges and said their gunshots were a means of self-defense.

The jury returned with the verdict of not guilty at around 11 p.m. Thursday.

Last week, defense attorney Paul Christenson said there was no evidence to prove the charges against the Pughs and there was no question that the jury reached the correct verdict.

The three brothers spent last week fighting charges in connection with a 1992 shooting. The incident occurred on the 200 block of North Washington Street.

Stanley Schauf, 23, was shot and killed during the incident. Gerald L. Armour, 30, who said he was friends with Schauf, is serving 15 years in prison for firing the shot that killed Schauf.

Armour took the stand last week and said he felt Schauf's death was a result of the Pughs' actions. He said it was Charlie Pugh who fired the first shot which led to a volley of gunfire and Schauf's death.

Prosecuting attorneys, Patrick Daly and Mark Hanumrock, said the primary focus of the state attorney's case was murder. They said the minimum prison sentence the brothers would have received if found guilty would have been 20 years.

Saluki Express exceeds expectations

By Alan Schnepf
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Saluki Express mass transit system finished its first month of operation recently and administrators say that although it has not been problem-free, the bus system is working better than they had anticipated.

Jeffrey Duke, assistant administrator for the mass transit system, said ridership has already exceeded administrators' expectations even though cold winter weather has not arrived. He expects ridership to grow as the climate outside becomes less comfortable. He also said non-student ridership is strong. The system is even doing well when compared with mass-transit systems from other college towns, Duke said.

With its successful start Duke said he believes the Saluki Express is here to stay. He said he attributes the success to a strong awareness students and Carbondale residents have for the system.

"The word got out," he said. "Students definitely know about it." Duke also said the popularity of the business loop prompted officials to add another bus to the route which runs 30 minutes behind the existing bus.

The business loop connects the SIUC campus with University Mall, Wal-Mart and the Mardale Shopping Center. The addition was necessary because one bus did not meet the demand for the route, Duke said.

"We'd have 50 or 60 people waiting outside the Student Center for that route," he said.

The buses have a 35-person capacity plus enough room for two wheelchairs, Duke said.

However, the system is not without problems, Duke said. He said the mechanical lifts that make the buses accessible to many disabled people still have a few bugs in them.

He said the time taken by drivers to operate the lifts sometimes results in late buses. This problem is diminishing with time, Duke said; because the drivers are getting better at using the lifts with practice.

SIUC professor to teach in Poland as Fulbright scholar

By Jeremy Griggs
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Economics Professor Paul B. Trescott, recent recipient of a Fulbright Scholar Award to teach in Poland, says the award will benefit SIUC by establishing communication between students and faculty of both countries.

Because of the award, Trescott will teach money and banking and micro economics theory courses at the Technical University of Czestochowa, Poland during the spring semester. There he also plans to do research on the monetary conditions in Poland.

"Presumably, the SIUC Economics Department will benefit from the research and lectures I can give upon my return," Trescott said. "More than that, going to Poland will establish contact between the students and faculty on both campuses."

This is Trescott's second Fulbright Scholar Award. His previous award allowed him to teach in China in 1983.

Computer proposal should be rejected

LAST WEDNESDAY, THE GRADUATE AND Professional Student Council voted by an overwhelming majority to reject a proposal asking them to cough up more than $3,000 of student money in exchange for shared access to a proposed $6,852.32 computer system in the Undergraduate Student Government office. Members of the council said GPSC does not need the system, pointing out that it was a large expense to simplify the lives of a small number of computer users in the organization. The DE believes the same criticism applies to the benefits USG would receive from the system, especially now that USG's cost will be higher without GPSC participation.

USG President Duane Sherman has said he intends to ask the USG Senate to foot the bill for the whole system now that GPSC has voted against it. We strongly urge every senator to examine the proposal carefully, and weigh the benefits, the costs and the alternatives carefully. If they do so, we are confident they will vote against the proposal.

EVEN IF THEY FUNDED THE SYSTEM, IT WOULD not provide access to enough people. Dan Piper, USG governmental affairs commissioner, said the primary cause for the current shortcomings of the USG system is the lack of computers. Right now, there is a computer in the office of Sherman, Chief of Staff Scott Pfeiffer and Vice President Kim Clemens. Access for everyone else is limited to two terminals — one at the receptionist's desk and one in the back room of the USG office. Piper said two, three, or even four more computers would be needed to provide access for everyone who wants it.

But according to documentation provided by Mark Collins, who has been contracted to research the costs and benefits of the system for USG, the proposal would only add one $2,700 computer to USG's system, and that computer would replace the one in Sherman's office. While this would free up Sherman's old computer for shared use in the office, it would not be enough to provide access for everyone.

SO WHAT DO THEY NEED THE SYSTEM FOR, anyway? The answer is unclear. In the proposal presented to GPSC, Collins said the system would allow USG to have direct access to the Campus-Wide Information System at every terminal. However, if there are not enough terminals for every senator to access the system, this benefit mainly applies to Sherman, Clemens and Pfeiffer, being the only ones with constant access to a computer. And it would only reduce the time they have to wait to connect to the system — they already can access the system by dialing 453-3500.

The system also would store files electronically and allow more than one user to access those files at the same time. Again, this would make life easier for a small number of people. And it could make life more difficult for senators competing for the use of a computer terminal by restricting their access to files, rather than enhancing it. If they cannot get time on a computer, they cannot read computerized files. Is this worth thousands of dollars? We don't think so.

THE USG SENATE HAS A RESPONSIBILITY TO ensure that student money is spent in the most efficient and wise manner possible. The current proposal just doesn't make sense and seems wasteful. Rejecting it is the most responsible option the senate has.

Letters to the Editor

Christian Right are powermongers

Is anyone noticing the extreme lack of ethics of the Christian Right's politics? They use every unethical trick in the book and have been doing so for thousands of years. They use censorship, they falsely claim they represent the highest authority in the universe and they play the dirtiest politics, especially slanting statistics. Still I think we must note that it is not the average Christian doing this. Most Christians are good people. It is not the Christians but the Christian leaders that are the problem. They are the ones seeking power and money. They organize for power. We have seen this for two thousand years. Catholics even changed the Bible so they could manipulate for power and money. Tell evangelists send large amounts of money to dictators in the Third World and gain political power and influence through doing so.

From what I can gather about a true Christian, he would give to the needy but these pastors and priests take money from the needy. Religious leaders have usually been greed goblins who manipulate and control their flock for their own benefit. I know that there have often been exceptions, but the majority seem to be true greed goblins seeking power and control. It is the leadership positions that they are after, not the glory of God. Most of us feel pity towards the Christians who get taken advantage of by the wolf who runs the flock. Get wise folks. We can praise God without church leaders or the Bible that they have altered so they can better exercise unethical power over the flock. I believe if they get the power they seek there will be a modern inquisition because they remain the same unethical force seeking the same power they always have sought, and that has nothing to do with Christ at all. I apologize to the few honest pastors and priests that are out there but again I say few.

Non-Traditionals invisible at SIUC

I seem to be the invisible student and it seems I am not alone. I have been signed into the Non-Traditional Student Organization for one year now, and I fail to see any efforts on their part to help me, or others like me, with any means to get together. This Fall semester I have talked with many students (age 30+) who have just enrolled at SIUC for the first time. They all have the same complaint. Where are all the other non-traditional students? Why is there no forum for us? Even the course curriculum here at the University is not geared for us. The traditional incoming freshman have the resident advisors to help them with the transition of coming to a major university; why not us? The non-traditional students I talked with said that many times they considered dropping out because they felt all alone and "invisible". We make up a third of the total student population and I feel there should be more programs and services geared toward making our transition to this university easier. Why are there no get-to-know-you brunches or potluck dinners to bring us together?

The Student Programming Council seems not to notice we are here either. When they program functions for students such as concerts and movies, we may attend, but they are not specifically geared for us. Personally, I am 40 years old, and I love my children, who attend college here, but sometimes I would like to talk to people my own age. It would be interesting to meet people with the same concerns, problems, and life experiences that I have had. It seems that the Non-Traditional Students Organization is non-functioning in this regard. I think it's a shame that the only time I get to meet students my own age is when we "invisibly" bump into each other in class. I would just ask the Non-Traditional Students Organization to keep us in mind; we're still around, even if you can't see us.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 350 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

How to submit a letter to the editor:

What is and isn't TV violence

The Washington Post.

WASHINGTON—Observers may be forgiven a certain skepticism at the appearance of a study paid for by the TV networks and showing that the level of violence in network TV programming is down. Despite this convenient conclusion, though, the first installment of the "Television Violence Monitoring Report" from the University of California at Los Angeles—the first from a three-year project—contains plenty to distress the networks. More important, it could help their viewers sort through the argument about what the networks actually produce.

The UCLA scholars actually took on the project not at the networks' behest but at that of Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who insisted two years ago that violent programming be dealt with and that efforts to do so be tracked by an independent party if the networks wished to avoid hands-on government regulation. Such regulation is closer to reality than before because of bills mandating the violence-screening "v-chip," but the need for decent analysis of what's being done remains. The UCLA report, which walled itself off from network involvement beyond the financial, takes account of the networks' favorite argument against the v-chip—that it's oh so difficult to classify what constitutes "violence" or whether it's "gratuitous"—and then goes on to analyze at great length the various ways this classification can be done.

It's these new kinds of analysis that can most benefit parents and other viewers, who more than anything these days need tools to figure out what's on the tube so they can avail themselves of the on-off option or its more sophisticated recent successors (like home-programmable scanners and blockers). The researchers looked at thousands of hours of network (not cable) prime-time and Saturday morning TV and asked whether violent actions were there for a traditional fictional reason (such as to show viewers that someone's a villain), whether they were shown sanitized or with consequences, whether the camera lingered on explicit sequences as if to savor them ("Some of the shows monitored this season showed throats slowly slit or spikes being driven into knees or eyes, but (this) added nothing important to the story") and whether the most violent moments of a show were played again and again in promotional spots.

For instance, they found "eight Saturday morning shows that fell into the category of sinister combat violence," defined as "violence for the sake of violence. It rarely couches the violent acts in any suitable context. The message is: fight."

Some of the questions being posed here sound a bit like the old Hays Code, much referred to but rarely read, that used to govern the matter with no appeals possible ("The technique of murder shall not be presented in such a way as to inspire imitation. . . . Revenge in modern times shall not be justified."). The code is itself reproduced in the introduction to the report, but you can easily be against enforcing such codes through an outside authority, as the Hays board did, while still seeing their usefulness as ways to think about existing programs when making choices for oneself and one's kids.

Unlike, say, the fight over the psychological effects on kids of the new violent video games—which the Senate sought to regulate two years ago on a laughably thin base of research or information of any kind—arguments about TV violence have been going on since the medium's inception and have reached no more of a consensus than arguments over whether pornography causes violence against women. We probably don't need more studies of what TV is doing to viewers. But parents, and others, can probably benefit from help in figuring out what TV is doing when, how often, how gratuitously and on what channel.

Federal Judge Phil Gilbert ruled against the initial appeal, stating that Cronin did not supply significant evidence that the Indiana bat's habitat would be disrupted. Gilbert's ruling stated that the Forest Service had done an adequate job in determining that the bat would not be harmed by the logging.

Cronin said part of the reason the judge denied the earlier appeal was because it did not follow a set time limit for appeals to be filed. He said such appeals need to be filed after a 60-day notice of intent to sue. The 60-day period expires on Tuesday, allowing the appeal to be refilled, Cronin said.

Cronin said protecting the Indiana bat is just as much a concern for him as preventing the logging of Cripps Bend trees.

"The bats are a major deal," Cronin said. "They are a federally endangered species. Let's do some legitimate surveys — some mist netting."

Mist netting is a process where nets are hung in trees which capture bats to determine if the animal is present in a particular area.

Forest Service officials said they used sonar to detect if bats were in the region and said mist netting was not necessary. Using sonar meets the requirements for the terrain of the Cripps Bend area, the officials said.

Cronin said the Forest Service had no desire to detect bats in Cripps Bend.

"They didn't want to find any bats in here (Cripps Bend). God forbid, they couldn't cut the trees then," he said.

After Gilbert ruled in favor of the Forest Service, Carbondale Veneer, a logging company, moved into the area last Thursday to resume the cutting.

Environmentalists protesting the logging have been camped near Cripps Bend since Sept. 13.

Protesters said they have morning prayer vigils in front of the restricted area where loggers are cutting trees.

"That's all we can do. We're here on a peaceful mission," Kenneth Graff, a logging protester from Murphysboro, said.

Graff said his father is in the logging business and is against the cut.

"My father would be the first to tell you we don't need the Shawnee National Forest for the logging industry," Graff said. "If they need, they can work where it's (the forest) has already been cut."

Since logging began, three protesters have been arrested, but no injuries have been reported.

No logging was completed on Saturday or Sunday.

"I guess they (the loggers) let us have it (Cripps Bend) for the weekend," Jan Wilder-Thomas, a protester, said.

Thomas said she is not optimistic that Gilbert will rule in favor of the upcoming appeal.

"Judge Gilbert has already demonstrated that he doesn't care about the forest."

Stan Curtis, owner of Carbondale Veneer, said Sunday that he would not comment on the logging project until Monday.

Halloween

fall recess over Halloween weekend. Residence Life has decided to keep residence hall visits restricted to on-campus students during the Halloween break, and the administration is asking resident assistants and head residents to stay on duty over the recess.

"The main thing we're trying not to do is sneak up on the students with these changes," Kirk said. "Since we had the problems last year, the decision to do this was really made late last spring."

"We sent out flyers over the summer to explain to the students and the parents about the new policy for this year concerning Halloween, and we'll be posting flyers all over campus to let students know that it is coming up."

Fall recess officially starts at 7 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 27 and ends at 7 a.m. Thursday, Nov. 2.

According to Residence Life policy, during this time, anyone not living on-campus cannot visit dorm residents except for those with a compelling need, such as personal care attendants for disabled students.

The administration is hoping to keep students from being hurt this year, Kirk said.

"Last year, we restricted visits to the residence halls," Kirk said. "This year, there are going to be a lot of different policies — both through the campus and the city — to keep people from being hurt or seeing cars overturned and set on fire."

Original plans for fall recess were quite a bit different and very unpopular, Kirk said.

"Our initial thought last year was to not have any visitation, but we modified that to let students have visitors from other on-campus residents," Kirk said.

"What we are specifically concerned with is out-of-town visitors."

During the past, the main problem with the Halloween party on the Strip has been people coming into Carbondale who do not care what they do since they do not have to live here, Kirk said.

"When Halloween got out of control in the past, it was not really SIU students, but anonymous people who came from outside Carbondale," Kirk said.

"What we are trying to do with this policy is to keep these people from staying in the residence halls."

Over the years, people have been hurt on South Illinois Ave. by objects being thrown and other incidents.

Although some SIUC students were involved, those who came to Carbondale just for Halloween caused most of the problems that have made the city and University implement these new policies, Kirk said.

"Only a minority of the people were causing problems, but those problems had an ugly flavor," Kirk said.

"The University closed for three years and the party seemed to die out. After that, we relaxed a little and that is when Halloween seemed to be building up again."

However, when the restrictions seemed to no longer be necessary, the party-goers returned, Kirk said.

"That is when the city and campus got together out of fear of more negative things happening," Kirk said.

"Lots of ideas have been brought to us in good faith in hopes of keeping the celebration, but it's more a 'been there, done that' situation now."

sway the vote against the cap proposal, but did not have specific details to offer.

Many other proposals will be voted on Tuesday including a student loan charge, which Democrats are calling a tax. The charge could be as much as two percent, but Simulson said other proposals on the table call for charges a little as .8 percent.

The charge would be applied to the overall amount of student loans universities give to students. With a two percent charge, a school that distributes $100 million in student loans would have to pay $2 million back to the government.

An SIUC financial aid study, which examined student loan figures for fiscal year 1994, shows the University distributed more than $40 million in federally subsidized and unsubsidized loans to 11,250 students.

Study linking women's health and weight criticized

The Los Angeles Times

At 5 feet, 7 inches and 127 pounds, Sarah Cooper is so thin that co-workers nicknamed her Olive Oyl. Naturally, then, she was startled to discover that according to a study released this month, her risk of dying is 20 percent higher than that of a woman the same age and height who is a few pounds lighter.

"Wow, it's pretty amusing that even I bombed out," Cooper said, referring to the scale of mortality and weight developed by the researchers.

The 37-year-old La Habra, Calif., resident was not alone in her dismay at the heavily publicized Harvard Medical School study of more than 100,000 middle-aged female nurses, which included the zinger that the "lowest mortality rate was observed among women who weighed at least 15 percent less than the U.S. average."

Reacting to that news, many women expressed frustration that the ideal weight appears to be an ever-receding goal, about as attainable as the pot at the end of a rainbow. And given American culture's sometimes dangerous and often inane idealization of slimmness, it seemed that for Harvard physicians to promote the same image was to heap insult upon injury.

Although many experts said the study was perfectly sound and much welcome, especially because one in three Americans is obese, some researchers criticized the study outright, even saying it was irresponsible for not paying more attention to body shape and the ratio of fat to muscle.

They cite previous work suggesting that lower body fat in "pear-shaped" people is less dangerous than upper body fat, not to mention muscular, physically active people who may be above the ideal weight but are probably healthier than most.

"Not all fat is equal," said Judith S. Stern, a University of California, Davis, nutritionist who headed an Institute of Medicine study of obesity that was released last spring. "If your weight was lower-body weight, and you had no family history of heart disease, you may not need to focus so much" on the study's optimum weights.

Kelly Brownell, a psychologist and director of the Yale Center for Eating and Weight Disorders, doesn't criticize the study, but is concerned that some people may take a "be skinny at all costs" message from it. "In some ways, it's bad news," he said. "There's already tremendous pressure on people to be lean, and this creates even more."

The recent outbreak of anxious misunderstanding reflects a basic quandary of life in the Era of the Worried Well: translating masses of data from elaborate population studies into simple lessons to live by.

To a researcher steeped in statistics, the Harvard study's finding that a 5-foot, 5-inch woman minimized her death risk by weighing 119 pounds or less is a useful abstraction. But to a woman hoping to maximize her health and longevity, the very precision of that conclusion appeared to give it the force of doctor's orders to lose weight—or else.

"Should a middle-aged woman keep losing weight until she's 15 percent less than the average? Certainly not," Stern said. "What the study suggests is that a person might be healthier if some weight is lost."

The Harvard study, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, was directed by Dr. JoAnn E. Manson, an endocrinologist who is also co-director of the Women's Health Center at the Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston.

Delving into a continuous health survey of 115,195 nurses who were 30 to 55 years old when the study began in 1976, Manson and her co-workers found that had 4,726 died. Predictably, the great majority of deaths were among the oldest women.

Next, the researchers sorted all the women into seven weight categories ranging from very thin to morbidly obese. And, to highlight the effects of body weight per se, they focused on women who neither smoked nor gained a lot of weight since early adulthood.

They found that, compared with the thinnest women, those who weighed successively more had higher mortality rates. A 5-foot-5 woman's added mortality risk was 20 percent at 122 pounds; 30 percent at about 140 pounds; 60 percent at 170 pounds; and 100 percent, or twice the mortality risk, at 180 pounds. "Even women with average weights had higher mortality" than the skinniest women, the researchers concluded.

Transit

Craig Simon, a driver for the Saluki Express from Carbondale said he does not have trouble operating the lifts.

"It's pretty easy," he said. Duke said there have been instances where the lifts do not operate properly. This happened, he said, when everything else in the bus was on, causing a slight power drain.

Concerns were also brought up about the safety of some of the Saluki Express stops at a SIUC Civil Service Council meeting earlier this month. Carolin Harvey, a member of the Student Center Advisory Committee, said some of the stops had inadequate lighting.

Duke said the stops were selected with the assistance of Sam Jordan, director of Campus Security and Marilyn Hogan, coordinator of parking and traffic at SIUC. He said lighting and safety were a top consideration in the selection of the stops.

Duke said more routes may be added because user suggestions have indicated a demand for service to the Carbondale Clinic and other places in southwest Carbondale.

The campus shuttle route, which circles campus, may be extended to southwest Carbondale to fill this niche next spring when officials will examine the route.

He said there are no routes being considered for elimination because of low ridership.

Saluki Express administrators also plan to announce a contest early next month to find artwork to put on the buses. Duke said a $300 prize is going to be offered for the contest, which is only open to SIUC students.

He noted that the administrators are looking for artwork to put on the buses — not a logo.

In addition to artwork, riders can expect to see advertisements in the buses soon. He said administrators hope to have ads inside the bus sometime next month.

Each bus could hold about 21 ads that would cost an estimated $400 a semester, he said.

It is too early to tell what kind of revenue will be brought in by advertising, but Duke said preliminary interest from local businesses has been good.

Police Blotter

Carbondale Police

■ Randall Allen, 25, of DeSoto, reported on Sept. 22 that someone broke into his locked vehicle at 1450 E. Main St. The doors on the vehicle were severely damaged. Damage is estimated at $725.

■ Sarah Simph, 20, of 910 E. Walnut, reported on Sept. 22 at 9:30 p.m. that someone cut the top on her convertible. Damage is estimated at $1,000.

■ James Pearson, 51, of Herrin reported on Sept. 23 that at 401 S. Illinois at the Amtrak Station a man approached him with a gun and demanded all his money. Pearson handed over $10 and his watch. The suspect is described as a 40-year-old black male, five feet nine inches tall, with black and gray hair wearing a blue windbreaker, blue jeans and very neat in appearance. The area was searched and a suspect was found but was not identified by Pearson.

■ Larry D. Ferner, 48, reported on Sept. 23 that a woman entered his workplace, the Knights Inn at 3000 W. Main, and placed a large block of concrete on the counter, demanding all the money in the cash register. Ferner handed over the money in the cash register. The suspect is described as a black female five feet five inches tall, wearing a white shirt with rolled cuffs, blue jeans and a red or orange bandanna.

Arrests

interfering with officers.

Brian Kennedy, a protester at Cripps Bend, said the two women buried their arms in concrete within an area which has been closed by a Forest Service order.

Kennedy said the women were blocking a section of road which logging trucks must use to drive back to the logging site.

Judge Philip Frazier released the women each on a $1,000 recognizance bond. Their trial date has been set for Nov. 21.

Despite a possible six-month jail sentence and a possible $500 fine for each of the women, Harris and Jiskra said their actions were worth the legal trouble.

"It was worth it," Jiskra said while awaiting logging trucks early Saturday morning. "It's not over, but it was worth it."

Both women said blocking the logging trucks was an act of "civil disobedience."

"Nothing ever happened in this country without people standing up for what they believe in," Harris said. "People have got to take a stand."

"Our country was founded on civil disobedience or uncivil disobedience," Jiskra said.

Neither woman would comment on the specifics of their arrests or their cases.

Forest Service officials said the women did not stop the commencement of logging Friday. The officials said logging trucks just drove around the women, and loggers were able to continue the cut on schedule.

Another protester, Joe Glisson, was arrested Thursday in connection with the demonstration against the Cripps Bend logging.

No injuries to protesters or loggers have been reported.

Loggers did not work Saturday or Sunday, but protesters said they will demonstrate against the cutting on Monday if and when the logging trucks return to the area.

Mafia influence abounds in Italy

Los Angeles Times

ROME—Detailing the limits of Mafia political power in Italy is difficult. But examples of its influence abound: Salvatore Lima, the Christian Democratic mayor of Palermo who rose to become a member of the Cabinet of seven-time Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti as well as of the Italian and European parliaments, was described as a key figure of the Palermo Mafia's power structure by the parliamentary Anti-Mafia Commission. Lima was assassinated in 1992. Antonio Gava, who headed the Christian Democratic political machine in Naples and went on to become Andreotti's Interior minister and thus was in charge of Italian law enforcement—has been accused of being a part of the Camorra's command structure. Then there is Andreotti himself, accused, among other things, of planting a kiss of respect on the mouth of the Cosa Nostra's "boss of bosses," Salvatore (Totò) Riina, during a 1987 meeting in a Palermo home. Andreotti vehemently denies the accusation—and all others—insisting that such a meeting with Riina would have been impossible because Andreotti always traveled with police escorts.

There also are those who are convinced that, as prime minister in 1978, Andreotti could have saved Aldo Moro, his former party colleague and a former premier who was kidnapped and subsequently killed by left-wing terrorists.

Spy agency hoards secret $1 billion

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON—The agency that manages the nation's spy satellite program has accumulated unspent funds totaling more than $1 billion without informing its supervisors at the Pentagon and CIA or its overseers in Congress, according to Capitol Hill sources.

The ability of the National Reconnaissance Organization to salt away so much money from its classified, multibillion-dollar budget reaffirmed long-standing concerns in Congress that intelligence agencies sometimes use their secret status to avoid accountability.

After complaints from the House and Senate in June about the NRO's finances, CIA Director John M. Deutch launched an inquiry. Based on its findings he recently ordered a restructuring of the NRO's financial management and a complete review of its spending.

The 35-year-old agency supervises design, development, procurement and launching of satellites and maneuvers them at the direction of CIA and Pentagon program managers, to cover designated targets.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Southern Illinois University at Carbondale 1996 Outstanding Scholar Award

A $5,000 SIUC Outstanding Scholar Award for 1996 will be awarded to recognize and to promote research and creative endeavors to an SIUC faculty or staff member who has made outstanding contributions to his or her discipline and has thus become widely recognized for these achievements. The award is made solely in recognition of scientific, educational, artistic or literary achievement; the recipient is not required to render future services to the university as a condition to receiving the award.

Eligibility. All SIUC faculty and staff members involved in research and creative activity are eligible for the award. Once nominated, the nominee may remain eligible for consideration for two additional years. This will require agreement on the part of the nominee, to be obtained again by the nominator. The supporting documentation may be updated at this time. Emphasis on service and/or teaching will not be considered as these are already honored through other awards. This award is permanent recognition of outstanding scholarship and is, therefore, awarded only once to an individual.

Nomination Process. Nominations for the award may be proposed by colleagues, associates, supervisors or subordinates of the nominee. The nomination should be supported by a detailed statement of the nature and importance of the accomplishments sought to be rewarded. A separate submission of relevant supporting documentation, such as curriculum vitae; list of scholarly and creative activities, and special awards will be requested at a later date (see below). The name, address and phone number of 6 referees external to the University must also be included in this latter submission as potential contacts by the Committee. The nomination letter and the packet of supporting documentation should then be forwarded to the Graduate School Office, Attention: Outstanding Scholar Award Committee.

Deadline Date: for nominations with statement of nature and importance of accomplishments only is Friday, October 6, 1995.

Deadline Date: for supporting documentation is Friday, November 3, 1995.

Contact Person: Sandra Ballestro, Graduate School, 453-4521

Evidence exhumed in Haiti

The Washington Post
GONAIVES, Haiti—Slowly, the masonry tombs have crumbled under the blows of hammers, exposing the skeletons that Haitians are counting on to help them deal with their violent past and begin a process of meting out justice for thousands of people killed by the army and its allies.

Haiti's National Commission of Truth and Justice hopes to use the skeletons being dug up by forensic anthropologists in the last two weeks to help convict murder suspects. The digging is also part of an effort to ensure that state-sponsored violence is not repeated.

Haiti has spent most of its 192 years of independence under dictatorships. The most recent lasted three years, beginning on Sept. 30, 1991, when the army and civilian militias overthrew democratically elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in a bloody coup, and ending after a U.S.-led force of 20,000 troops occupied the nation a year ago to restore Aristide to power.

During that time, human-rights groups documented about 3,000 political deaths, along with politically motivated rapes, beatings and disappearances.

The truth commission, formed in March by Aristide and financed in part by Canada, will probe killings during that three-year period—the first investigations into state-sponsored terror in Haitian history.

"I am here to watch, because I believe in this work," said Nerlande Rinchere, 30, standing in the blazing noonday sun as the group prepared to dig up the remains of her husband; Line Joseph, killed by the army. "When he was alive, our children ate and were able to go to school. They killed him, and now we have nothing. It hurts. It hurts every time I think of him."

The exhumations in the Gonaives cemetery were carried out by forensic anthropologists from the American Association for the Advancement of Science, headquartered in Washington. The same group has carried out exhumations for human-rights investigations around the globe.

squad needed to have.

"We had a dominating ball game and that felt good to get one of those," he said.

"We needed one of those because it shows the kids how to win and what it is like to win and win big."

The Dawgs beat the Colonels in every facet of the game as the Saluki offense scored 20 points. SIUC's defense scored two touchdowns and special teams added one.

SIUC's defense caused five turnovers that resulted into 21 Saluki points.

Hendricks picked off a deflected Nicholls State quarterback Henri Ransfore causing him to fumble Tony Seman picking up the ball and rambled 63 yards for the score.

Shortly after Hendricks' touchdown, Tommy Anderson sacked Nicholls State quarterback Henri Ransfore causing him to fumble Tony Seman picking up the ball and rambled 63 yards for the score.

The special teams scored their touchdown when the Dawgs' Kelly Edwards picked up a bobbed Colonels' punt and returned it four yards for the touchdown.

"Anytime something like that happens it's a real letdown for you when it happens to you," Watson said. "If it happens for you, it's a big boost, it's a great momentum swinger."

"We talked to the kids on Friday night about doing a great job of winning all three phases of the game, and we challenged them.

Our season was going to be made or broke today and we put a big game emphasis on it because it was."

Offensively, the Salukis got their best performance from the quarterback position this season, as sophomore Danny Smith commanded the Saluki offense to a pair of touchdowns and two field goals.

He connected on 13-of-22 passes for 264 yards.

Smith also threw his first touchdown in an SIUC uniform connecting with tight end Damon Jones on a crossing pattern that Jones turned into a 65-yard touchdown.

Smith had another touchdown to wide receiver Reggie Fowler, but that was called back by an illegal pick.

Penalties continued to plague SIUC as the Dawgs committed a season high 17 infractions.

However, momentum is definitely with SIUC as the Salukis start Missouri Valley Conference action next week at Indiana State.

Scman said it is important for the Salukis to maintain the emotion the team played with Saturday.

"I think it definitely helps the defense and the offense — and the special teams came back and played really well," he said.

"We won a game going right into conference, we've got Indiana State next, so I think it will definitely help, and hopefully we'll come out and have a good week of practice."

Angels need change to end playoff slide

By Jon Heyman
Newsday

California Angels manager Marcel Lachemann tried something different after his team lost its eighth straight game Friday night and appeared headed toward completing one of the biggest September collapses in baseball history. Heaven knows, the Angels could use something different. At this point, more of the same would be deadly.

A straight-faced Lachemann told his fast-fading club that they actually had the opportunity for one of the great "comebacks" ever if they can pull it off. Lachemann went on to compare his Angels to the 1978 Boston Red Sox, who blew a 13-game lead to the New York Yankees, fell behind a few games, then came back to tie the Yankees at season's end.

After closing the clubhouse for 35 minutes to give this inspirational message, Lachemann gave a briefer version for the media, saying, "Everyone's written them off. They have an opportunity to be one of the best comeback teams ever. That's not an opportunity that comes around very often."

Here are just a couple major problems with Lachemann's logic: 1) The Red Sox are not recalled as the team that came back that season but the team that collapsed; and 2) the Red Sox wound up losing the division, anyway, in a memorable playoff game decided by Bucky Dent's home run.

dream I was going to have a big game and I came out and did it.

"I guess the rest of the team had the same dream I had, and we all came out here and carried out the game plan the coaches set out for us."

Hendricks credits much of his success and that of the team's on the coaching staff's preparation.

"The coaches set up a good game plan for us — the game plan was set up so we could win," he said. "All we (the defense) had to do was to stop them, not allow them so many points because our offense put enough points on the board."

Last year, Hendricks was fourth on the team in tackles (111) and led the Dawgs with four interceptions.

This year Hendricks is currently tied for the team lead in tackles with 41 and has three picks on the season.

Statistical error creates confusion in NL Central

By Paul Doyle
The Hartford Courant

BOSTON—The Lords of Baseball declared it a success before ever watching a wild card race.

The chase for a wild card spot this year would revitalize baseball and keep more fans in more cities interested. It would make fans forget about the labor problems that forced the cancellation of the 1994 World Series.

But with a week left, even the baseball powers admit there are flaws.

"It's not perfect," said Red Sox CEO John Harrington, among the architects of the new format.

Forget perfection. We'll take simplicity. Baseball's desire to be like the NFL has left a trail of tiebreaker confusion.

The Cincinnati Reds thought they clinched the National League Central with a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Friday. But as players were celebrating, they found out they technically clinched Thursday, when the Los Angeles Dodgers lost to the San Diego Padres.

Seems it took Elias Sports Bureau, baseball's record-keeper, 24 hours to sift through the tiebreakers.

Don't blame the folks at Elias. The tiebreaker bylaws aren't exactly light reading. Baseball has released four pages of rules with 20 clauses.

The rules have often been reported incorrectly throughout the season. Now that the races have taken shape, Major League Baseball offices have received many calls requesting copies of the bylaws. Even teams have asked for clarifications.

Legislative Internship AVAILABLE

The Director of Area Services is seeking an undergraduate student interested in serving an internship during the remainder of the 1995 Fall Semester and for the entire 1996 Spring Semester.

The internship will require practical experience in an area legislator's office as well as an academic paper written in a relevant discipline. Possible disciplines include Political Science, History, Economics, Administration of Justice, Social Work, Speech Communication, and related areas.

Letters of interest and resumes should be filed with the Dean's Office, College of Liberal Arts - Room 2427 - Faner Hall - not later than Monday, October 2, 1995.

Letters of interest should include relevant background information as well as the student's career plans and a discussion of how this internship can be related to the student's long-term career objectives.

Additional information may be obtained from Mr. J. C. Caravalia, Director of Area Services, 536-8404 or Dean John S. Jackson, College of Liberal Arts, 453-2466.

Dawgs roll over Colonels

Salukis' dominate, cause Nicholls State to surrender, 48-20

Total team effort key to victory

The home losing streak is over! After two years and 10 games the SIUC football team broke into the win column at McAndrew Stadium when the Salukis pounded Nicholls St. 48-20 Saturday.

Not since the opening game against Washburn two seasons ago have the Dawgs been able to win at home and this victory is the first at McAndrew Stadium in Saluki head coach Shawn Watson's two-year tenure.

"It's very special because we talk about wanting to build a tradition here at McAndrew Stadium," he said. "When I was here in the late 70's, early 80's we came here and we won at home all the time."

"When we walked out here we were going to win — I lost very few ball games here."

Senior tri-captain Darnell Hendricks said it has been a long time coming for the seniors to get a home victory.

"That was great," he said. "The last win we had here was '93 and they were a D-II (Division II) school."

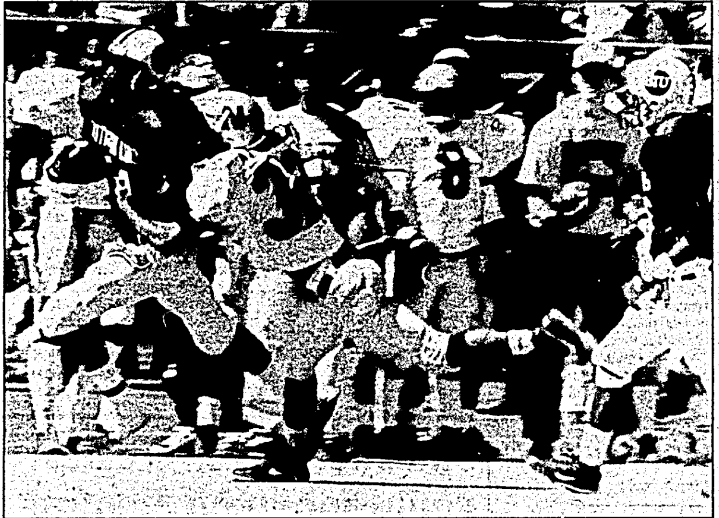

"This is the first time since '92 that we beat a D I-AA (Division I-AA) school."

Hendricks said breaking through on Saturday could be a springboard to a succession of home victories.

"Right now we have the monkey of our back at home — hopefully this is a new tradition here and we will win all our next games here."

With the victory the Salukis improve to 2-2 on the year.

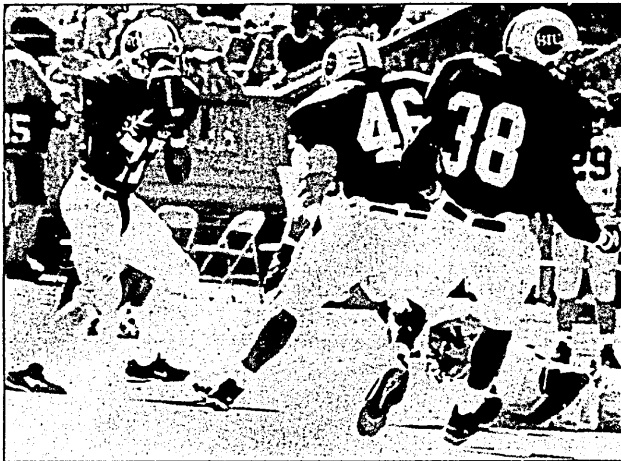

Watson said this kind of complete victory is exactly what his Senior safety provides big plays in big game

Saturday was big game for the SIUC football team, so the Salukis needed a player to come through with huge plays and a captain provided just that.

SIUC senior safety Darnell Hendricks provided big play after big play for the Dawgs in their 48-30 triumph over Nicholls State.

Hendricks, one of the Salukis tri-captains, came up with including two interceptions, one for a touchdown, and made 11 tackles. Many of the tackles were of the bone-crushing variety.

"The defense and the team got on my case during this week," he said. "They told me I wasn't playing and performing up to my status that I was playing at last year, because last year I was the pretty much the big hitter."

"So, today was like a challenge game to me I had to prove to the team that I was the same Darnell Hendricks that wore number 19 last year and wears number 27 this year."

Hendricks' first interception bounced off a Nicholls State receiver and he picked it out of the air a run 40 yards for the score. He added another pick in the third quarter, which set up a Karlton Carpenter three-yard touchdown run.

"The picks were lovely," he said. "I haven't had two picks in a game since last year and that was in the third game of the year."

"Especially taking one in for a touchdown was a great feeling today."

It was easy to tell it was going to be Hendricks' day when he unloaded on the Colonel's Henry Ransford on the second play of the game.

"I say if you can dream it you can do it," he said. "I went home last night and I

Saluki volleyball takes pair from Tulsa, SWMS

By Michael DeFord

Not since 1985 has the SIUC women's volleyball team been off to a better start in the Missouri Valley Conference.

After defeating conference rivals Southwest Missouri State University on Saturday and Tulsa University on Sunday, the spikers take sole possession of first place in the Valley.

Thanks in part to 11 straight service points by senior defense specialist Shelby Best, the spikers managed to overcome a two games to one deficit against SMSU to beat the Lady Bears in five games.

On Sunday, the spikers beat the Golden Hurricane of Tulsa in three matches 15-2, 15-2 and 15-7. Senior outside hitter Beth Diehl led the Saluki attack with 10 kills.

Diehl said the spikers 6-0 start is a definite plus as SIUC heads to Northern Iowa to take on the Panthers next weekend in Cedar Falls.

"It gives us confidence knowing we beat these teams, but we have had a tough time against Northern Iowa," she said. "They are such a confident team. Going up to play Northern Iowa is something we live for."

"It's very important for us to go up there and show them that we are something to be reckoned with."

The Panthers were picked to win the Valley in the preseason coaches poll. However, SIUC volleyball coach Sonya Locke said preseason predictions are not etched in stone.

"Anytime there are preseason polls of that nature, we are put in a position where it seems nobody respects what we can do on the court," she said. "Every match is a different match. It's going to be interesting to see what we can sustain when we have got a start like this."

Locke said Northern Iowa has made a formidable opponent in the past.
