New lights on the lower arena playing fields extends playing time

DAVID OSBORNE
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

In the past, darkness brought an end to intramural softball games at SIUC each evening. Not anymore.

Tuesday night, with the beginning of intramural softball playoffs, play continued past sunset under the brilliance of newly installed lights.

The project to install lights on the Sports Club Fields began last August, and work was completed last week. The lights, at a cost of $283,000, have effectively doubled the hours the fields can be used.

Herman Williams, associate director for Intramural Recreational Sports, said that games normally would start at 4 p.m. and end at 6 p.m.

"There were a lot of students that wanted to play but couldn't because they have classes up until 6," Williams said.

"This will allow us to play more games, get more participants out there, and a lot of people who were not able to play will be able to be there."

Williams said games will now be played as late as 10 p.m.

The first evening of play under the lights could not have come at a better time. The softball playoffs had been scheduled to begin Monday evening, but were delayed until Tuesday because of rain.

Ryan Coleman, a graduate student in sports management from Peoria, said the lighted fields would allow them to complete the playoffs two or three days sooner than before, even with the delay.

"Especially with getting rained out, we can schedule more games and make up for it quicker without having to play 10 hours on Sunday," Coleman said.

The lights are the first phase of improvements for the Sports Club Fields, located northeast of the SIUC Arena. Phase two will begin May 1, and will consist of skinning the infields to provide a bare

USG senators to decide fate of election results

Bill to ratify election results on USG agenda

GINNY SKALSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

With controversy surrounding last week's Undergraduate Student Government election, senators will finally have the opportunity to decide if they want to ratify the election results at tonight's USG meeting.

Two bills will be presented to the Senate calling for the ratification of the student trustee and USG presidential and Senate election results.

Normally the results have little or no problems being ratified, but this year some senators are concerned with the disqualification of elected senators and with the way the elections were run.

Thirteen P.L.U.S. Party senators and two independent senators were disqualified from the election Monday by the election commission after they failed to meet the 4 p.m. Thursday deadline to turn in their campaign expenditures.

Other controversy surrounding the election included about 10 different accusations made by Evergreen Terrace Senator Chuck Miller in a grievance he filed.

Miller's says that some students were able to vote twice, the polling places were not monitored according to election guidelines, and ballot counting was not closed to all campaign parties.

USG President Sean Henry said he thinks there will be a lot of debate about the results because of the senators who were disqualified.

"It probably will be a challenge to get [the results] ratified because of all the different controversy going on with the election," Henry said. "There will be some debate, but I'll be surprised if they're not ratified."

The ratification of the election results require a two-thirds Senate vote.

Henry said if the Senate does not vote to ratify the results, it will have to provide a reason why. He said it can also decide if it wants to have another election now or in the fall. If senators opt to have an election in the fall, then an interim president and vice president will have to preside over USG this summer.

"If the Senate wants a new election, then they have to vote on it, and if they vote to have one, we'll have to have another election," Henry said.

Academic Affairs Senator Ashley Chung, who sat on the student trustee election commission, said she has not decided if she will vote to ratify the USG election results because she said everything was not done according to campaign guidelines.

Chung said she saw that the polling places were not monitored by two people at all times as guidelines state they should be. She also said some poll workers did not initial the ballots because they were not aware they were supposed to.

"I don't know if the votes should be considered valid because there was a lot of errors," Chung said.

RSO funding problems fixed

Special Senate meeting next week to complete funding

KAREN BLATTER
GOVERNMENT EDITOR

The Undergraduate Student Government Finance Committee will complete funding allocations to registered student organizations next week.

Under the new direction of Scott Belton, USG Finance Committee chairman, the Finance Committee has successfully completed all RSO interviews and is meeting every day this week to review the funding allocations.

On April 14, Finance Committee Chairman Mario Burton resigned from his position citing stress. With his resignation, RSO funding, which was supposed to be done this week, was left incomplete until Belton was assigned to the position.

Belton said they will have final allocations ready for the Senate's approval next week.

USG President Sean Henry said he is concerned about the process getting done in time because it is late in the semester.

"I'm a little worried," he said. "I just want everything to be done and for it to all get approved. I know it will all be taken care of."

RSO funding is the highest power that USG has, and until the problems were corrected, USG was in danger of losing the power.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jean Paratore said the funding problems need to be fixed. She said USG needs to keep the power, and she has no interest in taking over the process.

"They need to get the funding done," she said. "They need to make the recommendations, and at this point it looks like it will be done."

Belton said the process is long, but he is committed to getting the funding done.

"We have fixed all we can," he said. "It's a very long process, but the Finance Committee has fixed everything."

Simon column getting good response

The Chicago Sun-Times has received positive response for Paul Simon's weekly column

ANDREA DENALDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

When the Chicago Sun-Times wanted a columnist with a different personality with a solid grasp on the political scene, they turned to former U.S. Sen. Paul Simon, said Steve Huntley, Chicago Sun-Times editorial page editor.

Simon, SIUC professor and director of the Public Policy Institute, began writing for the Sun-Times about a month ago with his first column premiering March 30. Since then, Simon and the Sun-Times have received great response about the column.

"We've gotten good response by word of mouth and letters ... Huntley said. "We've gotten generally good feedback."

One letter received by the Sun-Times came from the former head of Drug Enforcement Administration, Pter Bensinger. He agreed with what Simon wrote about spending more money on education against drug use and praised him on his column.

This is not the first time that Simon has written columns. He has written numerous editorial pieces and wrote a weekly column when he was in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate. Simon did say though, that this is his first time to write a weekly column for a large metropolitan daily newspaper.

His columns have stemmed from his knowledge of the U.S. political system. They have focused on school improvement, education against drug use, civility and water shortage in the Middle East.

"[I write] whatever I think is of current interest or whatever I feel like writing about," Simon said.

Simon said he has enjoyed writing weekly columns for the Chicago Sun-Times and he has learned a lot from the experience.

"You learn something with every column you do," Simon said, "because you have to do research for every column."

Simon's column appears in the Chicago Sun-Times every Thursday.

Nike chairman reconsiders donation to U. of Oregon

The University of Oregon's plans to join the Worker Rights Consortium, an anti-sweatshop group, have prompted Phil Knight, chairman of Nike Inc., to rethink a multi-million gift to help renovate the university's stadium.

Knights, an alumnus of the UO, was planning to donate or raise $30 million toward the $80 million stadium project, but apparently changed his mind last week after university officials announced their decision to join the consortium. In a statement, Nike said it wouldn't discuss Knight's "private philanthropy." While Oregon officials confirmed that Knight had made no formal pledges, they also said they were left with the distinct impression that he wanted to be significantly involved with the project.

Nike, based in Beaverton, Ore., has doggedly opposed the consortium, which is made up primarily of students and labor groups bent on excluding apparel manufacturers from the organization's power structure. Nike favors the Fair Labor Association, which evolved from meetings between apparel makers, the U.S. Labor Department and considers about 130 universities among its members.

"The WRC is a loosely formed organization whose operating tenets include a gothic monitoring system and an ambiguous living-wage provision," the Nike Web site states. "Neither Nike nor any of our competitors can even join the WRC, because they exclude companies from participating in their process — which we believe demonstrates the lack of depth and commitment to serious reform of factory conditions."

"The U. of O., despite its unique relationship with Nike and Phil, is free to align itself with the WRC," the statement continued. "However, it does not mean that we are required to support those efforts with which we have fundamental disagreements."

Consortium supporters maintain that the only ways to objectively monitor manufacturers' working conditions is to have outside sources do the monitoring — and by keeping manufacturers off the group's governing board.

Financial promises of Wallace's appealing

Wallace's guarantees University at least $310,000 profit annually

RHONDA SCIARRA
STUDENT AFFAIRS EDITOR

With the recommendation to outsource the bookstore to Wallace's Collegiate Bookstores, comes a guarantee of a $310,000 profit each year and $650,000 available for remodeling University Bookstore facilities.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and enrollment management Larry Dietz announced his recommendation for a five-year contract with Wallace's Monday to University Bookstore staff. The decision will go before the Board of Trustees at its May 11 meeting.

Dietz said part of the reason Wallace's proposal was chosen from Barnes and Noble, Follet Corp., and the University's proposals was the amount of money it promised SIUC.

Some of that money includes $650,000 going toward renovating facilities, fixing lighting problems and redesigning the layout of the current bookstore.

"That's the money the University doesn't have to commit to that project right now," Dietz said.

Currently the University Bookstore employs nine civil service workers and one Administrative and Professional staff worker. Dietz said he wants to make sure current bookstore employees are in "the best position they can be in if they wish to work for the new contract agency."

Ruth Pommier, president of the Association of Civil Service Employees, and the organization has been following the bookstore decision since talks of privatization began in September. Job security remains of the civil service workers remains in question, she said.

"My concern is that they have provided a combined 175 years of service to SIUC," Pommier said. "Although a margin of profit is important, the service that students and faculty have had can't be guaranteed under the new system."

Pommier and the civil service employee organization plan to pursue impact-bargaining with the University to ensure that current employees are treated fairly when plans to privatize move forward.

Grade requirements eliminate three USG senators

Commissioner confused about one of the decisions

DAVID FERRARA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Two University senators and a commissioner have been dismissed from Undergraduate Student Government because their grades at SIUC do not meet new standards.

The news befuddled at least one of those affected.

Contacted at his Neely Hall residence and at the USG office Tuesday afternoon, Government Affairs Commissioner Willis Reynolds said he was unaware that he would not be able to attend the semester's final meeting as a commissioner. A student government member must have a cumulative 2.25 grade point average to remain active.

But Reynolds, who has been at SIUC for more than two years, said he had no plans of returning to student government in the fall because he is scheduled to graduate in August.

USG President Sean Henry said he notified the stricken members in letters he mailed last week.

Reynolds said he received a mass e-mail Monday from Henry inviting him to a banquet but no letter. He said the e-mail failed to mention anything about being removed from student government. Reynolds had plans to attend the semester's final student government meeting today.

"As far as I know, I'm fine," Reynolds said. "Either [Henry] is being extremely unprofes-

OUR WORD

USG: there's nowhere to go but up

If hitting rock bottom was what Undergraduate Student Government was waiting for to fix problems, it may be about time to get out the tools.

Accusations have come from all directions. Little has been confirmed so far, other than USG's poor organization, a confusing and sometimes conflicting constitution and a growing cynicism by the senators.

The USG election seemed marked for doom from the beginning, when Interim Party presidential candidate Rob Taylor was denied the ability to run by Student Affairs based on a new and unusual way to calculate his grade point average. This added a new wrinkle to an already unclear policy in the USG constitution that states two different GPA standards for USG officers.

Then, University Housing asked Southern Party presidential candidate Bill Archer to resign from his position as a resident assistant. Archer said the move was in reaction to a vicious rumor started by another candidate.

Monday, 13 newly elected P.L.U.S. Party senators were disqualified from taking office because the party neglected to turn in a list of their expenditures by the deadline.

Since last week, allegations of fraud and misconduct in the USG election have been passed around like chicken pox at a day care. Remarkably, Ted Clark has confessed to voting for his own party twice, claiming he was "investigating a rumor" that others were doing so for less noble purposes.

Even without including the controversies that ensued earlier this semester, USG appears to be in crisis. These incidents are questionable in the singular, but absolutely atrocious in this volume.

Hopefully, this will be the end of it. Maybe the disqualification of the 13 P.L.U.S. Party senators is a sign that USG is growing up and getting serious. They provided rules, the P.L.U.S. Party, for whatever reason, did not comply and there were consequences. But if that is the way things are going to be, there can be no exceptions. Having decided that respect and compliance for USG laws are important enough to terminate a total of 15 senators, the organization cannot possibly continue to neglect the sorry state of their current regulations.

If USG is to return to any level of responsibility, every single student involved has to take responsibility for themselves and for this flailing organization.

If USG is to return to any level of respectability, every single student involved has to take responsibility for themselves and for this flailing organization. "I wasn't thinking about the ethical repercussions of it," said Ted Clark in response to questioning about the morality of his actions in the election Wednesday.

The current state of USG calls for an overhaul in every part of its operation. Relationships with other organizations must be mended; standards must be enforced and laws must be purposeful and well-defined. Next semester has the potential to be either a rebuilding year or a catastrophe. Nobody wants a defunct student government, so maybe it's time for USG to fold up this circus and get back to the business of representing the students.

Reflections on Earth Day: a great experience for those who showed up

The Way I See It

JULIE HUGG

jhugg1@midwest.net

The Way I See It... appears Wednesdays Julie is a sophomore in photojournalism. Her opinion does not necessarily reflect that of the DAILY EGYPTIAN.

Last week one of my supervisors at work said to me, "why don't you ever write about anything uplifting? Make people smile." Well, I kind of felt like a jerk after that, so here goes...

As I begin to write, Saturday, April 22, 2000, the 30th anniversary of Earth Day, is coming to an end. Ah, what a beautiful day it was. The sun was shining so bright, everyone had red noses. The wind was strong and mystical reminding us of the power of Earth's systems.

Children climbed the playground equipment and their laughter was heard throughout the day. There were tables with great information and representatives from about 15 different local groups. I learned about the mosquito pesticides being sprayed on the town of Carbondale. I learned that there are very more coal-fired power plants in Illinois than I ever thought. I learned about the HUGE numbers of uranium barrels just sitting like a time bomb in Paducah. And I learned about the Lorax.

The energy on Earth Day was beautiful and true. To see so many people in our community working together toward a common goal and celebrating the miracle of life on Earth was astounding. I don't think I have ever seen so many people in one place in such a good mood. Southern Sustainability was there along with: The Greens Party, the auxiliary branch of the Coast Guard, Free Again wildlife rehabilitators, Student Environmental Center, Shawnee and Southern Illinois Audubon Society, Sierra Club, Advanced Energy Systems and many, many more. There was a tree-planting ceremony, story telling, and speakers like Mark Donham and Dan Sitzar, Madcap, Blue Afternoon and beloved Carter and Connelly shared their music. All of this was powered by none other than — you guessed it — THE SUN!!!

When the day's events were coming to a close, the person who organized and worked every day (and probably night too) for the last few months, Andilee Warner, was given a token of appreciation, a plaque naming her as "Earth Queen." There were not many dry eyes for that one. After some inspiring and motivating words by Hugh Muldoon, a huge human circle was formed with neighbors and strangers hand in hand, and the Southern Illinois West African Drum Ensemble brought a perfect day in the park to a close.

As much as I would like to stop positive, I must also be honest. I was disappointed by the lack of Earth Action Week coverage seen in the DAILY

The ugly realities of the American prison system

DEAR EDITOR:

To the interesting discussion sparked by Julie Hugg's [April 19, DAILY EGYPTIAN] column, I would add the following observations. Five years ago I worked as a truck driver for a company that contracted with the Department of Corrections. I spent several hours a day in a prison that housed a variety of inmates, including about 300 lifers. I had extensive contact with both correctional officers and inmates. Most of the officers were thoroughly decent people, working hard to support their families. Many of the inmates, quite frankly, were not that different.

While I am no expert on rehabilitation, two conversations I had with officers have stayed with me through the years. Once, when explaining why the prison was again locked down, an officer told me that an inmate who was not a gang member had used a plastic shank to defend himself against a group of gang members who were harassing him. "Nobody here just does his own time," the officer told me. "Everybody here does everybody else's." This is Ugly Reality 1 of the American prison system. We throw young, first-time offenders in with older career criminals, offer, in situations where, to protect themselves, they must either join gangs, form alliances with these career criminals, or take their chances with homemade weapons. Nothing in life is free, including alliances, and yet we expect these young people to finish their sentences bright-eyed and pleasantly rehabilitated. If we truly cared about rehabilitation, we would not lock first-time offenders up with lifers, and we would make sure that correctional officers were able to provide an environment free from intimidation, coercion and harassment of some inmates by others.

The second conversation I remember occurred on the day before Thanksgiving. "You could bulldoze this fence and most of these guys wouldn't go anywhere," a different officer told me. "Most of them don't have anywhere to go." Ugly Reality 2: rehabilitation is not only a corrections problem, it is part of our larger social context. Suppose we do manage to rehabilitate some criminals — what sort of reception awaits them? What is the point of vocational training and college classes if employers will not hire them? If landlords will not rent to them? If the neighborhoods and towns from which these people came, and to which most will return, have no opportunities, other than criminal ones, to offer them?

Changing the nature of the prison system, while it is start, is not enough — we must get serious about addressing the social, economic and racial inequalities that underlie much criminal behavior.

EGYPTIAN, (aside from the photo-opportunity of Mayor Dillard riding the bus on Alternative Transportation Day) Although there were a good number of people at Turkey Park on Earth Day, there were also huge numbers who were not there. Aside from individual obligations, I wonder why: The word "community" has come to mean a geographical location, like a town or a subdivision. I feel that television and the automobile, among other things, have alienated and isolated us from one another, and I don't understand why everyone would not want to take an opportunity to come out and learn, talk and listen to music with their neighbors. It seems strange that no matter what type of music is offered, you will most likely see EVERY single person you know at a Sunset concert, but not for Earth Day.

But this is supposed to be uplifting, and as my friend reminded me, "it's quality not quantity."

For those of you who did not join us in Turkey Park, I hope you enjoyed the day and I hope it had meaning for you.

Resolution passes to terminate Provost search

Senators want permanent chancellor and president in place before provost

KATE McCANN & BRYNN SCOTT
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTERS

Faculty Senate passed a third resolution 14-4-6, requesting to halt the provost and vice chancellor for Academic Affairs search Tuesday, despite two previous failed attempts to stop the search.

Faculty Senate is asking interim Chancellor John Jackson to terminate the search until a permanent chancellor is named, although three finalists for the provost position have already been selected and interviewed. Interim Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Margaret Winters is one of the three finalists.

Mary Lamb, Budget Committee chairwoman, is concerned that the candidates were not chosen from a strong enough or large enough national pool.

However, Lamb and other representatives are more concerned that the "interim status" of the University will effect our candidate pool and the ability of the candidate chosen to perform adequately.

"A provost hired now would have to begin under a very dark shadow," Lamb said.

Jackson, who had not seen the resolution as of Tuesday, gave his assurances he will "take into consideration the Faculty Senate's view on this matter."

This is the third time in five months the Senate has attempted to pass a similar resolution.

Max Yen, Faculty Senate president, said selecting the provost after a permanent chancellor is in place would be logical.

"Through selecting the two highest administrative positions first, you could give a chance for the president and the chancellor to orchestrate the process and to develop an opinion on who would be a good team member," Yen said. "[If a provost was selected now] he or she could then determine if they are able to work with the person or not."

Daniel Chavez, a faculty senator who did not attend Tuesday's meeting, echoes similar sentiments as Lamb and Yen.

"It's kind of silly to hire a top level administrator like a provost under a lame-duck chancellor," Chavez said.

Chavez predicts the third resolution passed will be as unsuccessful as the first two, but hopes it will bring attention to the issue.

"Jackson will probably ignore it because I think he has his own little agenda, but it will get his attention," Chavez said.

Lamb said she hopes the resolution will still be somewhat effective.

"If you believe in any kind of shared government, this resolution should hold a great deal of weight," Lamb said. "Jackson may refuse to pay attention to the resolution and that could be dangerous."

Jackson, who rejected the first two resolutions, hopes to have a permanent provost in place by the end of the semester.

USC won't block students' access to music website

The University of Southern California says it won't join other schools in blocking students' access to the popular Napster Internet site, which lets people swap music.

The university made the announcement Friday in response to a lawsuit filed by the heavy metal rock band Metallica, which named USC, Yale University and Indiana University as defendants, accusing the schools of encouraging students to pirate copyrighted music.

Yale and Indiana were dropped from the action after announcing they would block access to the Napster site. USC issued a statement Friday saying it will permit its students access to Napster "only for demonstrably legal purposes from designated university personal computers and under university supervision."

A university lawyer, Carol Mauch, said the Napster site contains some applications "which are clearly legal, such as the chat rooms focused on various styles of music."

Students involved in national dialogue with web

Students wanting to have a say about national public policy and to organize like minds from across the country into grassroots movements can get started by visiting GenerationNet.org, a prize-winning Web site launched Monday and led by a Yale University business school student.

Users can post issues they want others to contemplate, or anonymously cast votes for topics already listed on the site. GenerationNet's staff will monitor issues getting the most responses and, on an annual basis, call registered members to determine which one to three issues the organization will develop aggressive national campaigns to support.

GenerationNet workers will give young people step-by-step instruction on how to do everything from rounding up volunteers to planning rallies sure to get media attention, said Executive Director Peter Schurman, who's getting a master's business degree in nonprofit management from Yale.

"The average person has opinions but doesn't feel empowered to make a difference," Schurman said. "We want everyone to know that they can get in politicians' faces and send a clear message that if they want to look good to young constituents and be re-elected, they need to make serious commitments to the issues young people have chosen."

"The site has been funded initially by three grants. It also won the $10,000 Social Entrepreneurship Prize from the Yale Entrepreneurship Society last month."

City receives $90,000 wastewater treatment plant grant

Money to help pay for part of an $8 million plant upgrade

KAREN BLATTER
GOVERNMENT EDITOR

The City of Carbondale received a $90,000 state grant for much needed improvements to the Southeast Wastewater Treatment Plant on Tuesday. City Manager Jeff Doherty said the $8 million upgrade project is needed to bring the plant up to Environmental Protection Agency standards. "It is a project that we have to do," he said. "The plant has reached capacity and without changes, no new homes can be added to [the sewer system]."

The Southeast Wastewater Treatment Plant needs to upgrade because of the growth in Carbondale in the past 10 years. The plant is approaching treatment capacity and the upgrade is needed to keep the plant operating with the growth rate.
The State of Illinois Community Developments Assistance Program Grant from Gov. George Ryan will help with the two-year project.
The plant, built in 1970 and 1971, was shown to be operating at 80-percent capacity in September 1999. The capacity limits the amount of commercial and residential growth the city could experience.

Doherty said the city is also trying to get a federal grant to help pay for the $8 million project. In December, sewer rates in the city will be raised 30 cents per 1,000 gallons to help fund the upgrade. The average household uses 6,000 gallons a month.
Based on the city's 1999 Water and Sewer Rate Study of regional communities, Doherty said the rate increases still keeps the city the seventh lowest city out of 91 regional cities for sewer rates.
Bob Winchester, Deputy Chief of Staff to Ryan, presented the grant to the Carbondale City Council Tuesday night.
The city approved the grant application in September 1999.

Black history museum looking for a place to call home

Community activists put their efforts toward building a museum to honor black history

DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A group of local residents would like to see a greater emphasis placed on positive images of African-Americans, and are working to create a place in Southern Illinois where those images can be seen by everyone.
A Carbondale community group called Southern Illinois Achievers has been working for the last two years to establish an African-American Museum of Southern Illinois.

The 18-member organization includes Carbondale residents and SIUC faculty. The effort began in 1997 after some in the community sensed a need to increase the awareness given to influential black leaders.
Corene McDaniel, president of Southern Illinois Achievers, has led the effort to help promote the achievements of blacks that might otherwise be ignored.
"It began after seeing that so many people have made contributions to the community," said McDaniel, a former president of the Carbondale Chapter of the NAACP.

Some of those people include local black leaders, such as William Archie Jones, Carbondale's first black city councilman, and Eurma Hayes Center founder Norvell Hayes, among other local black leaders, McDaniel said.
There are more than 100 museums dedicated to African-American history in the United States, according to the U.S. State Department. The African-American Museum of Southern Illinois would be the first of its kind in the region.
The museum is also expected to house art and other artifacts related to black history, but exhibits on positive African-American role models will be its primary focus.

are just as important, said Carolin Harvey, SIA's Treasury officer.
"We're not necessarily focusing on those people who will end up in history books, because most of us will not. But all of us have an influence on black kids' lives, and the lives of all people," Harvey said.
The group plans on having several fund-raisers, including a dinner this Sunday at the Eurma Hayes Center. SIA's first fund-raiser was in February as part of Black History Month. The fund-raiser was attended by local community leaders including Mayor Neil Dillard.
With the support of SIUC and other community organizations, including the Bank of Carbondale and the Carbondale Chapter of the NAACP, the group thinks it is close to achieving its goal, but securing a permanent location is still a work in progress.
The group has considered everything from existing buildings to vacant land sites in Southern Illinois. SIA estimates a monthly operational cost of $2000 for a full-time working staff.
Many of SIA's members are parents, and see the museum as a way to keep black history in the consciousness of youth, said McDaniel.
"As our children's children come along, they will forget about some of the people who have made a great contribution if we do not have something here to promote them," she said.

"I think this museum will add quite a bit to broaden people's perspective of the many achievements we have made to society," said Najjar Abdul-Musawwir, an SIA member and SIUC lecturer in Art and Design.
The group has yet to find a permanent location, and instead has relied on local churches and schools to exhibit some of the items they hope to one day house in the museum.
One major aspect of Southern Illinois' museum would be a greater emphasis placed on influential African-American who are not that well-known to the public, but whose achievements

Wallace's Collegiate Bookstore began in 1962 as a retail bookstore in Lexington, Ky., and was founded by former Kentucky Gov. Wallace Wilkinson.

Wallace's runs more than 90 college bookstores in the country. Universities where Wallace's operates college bookstores include the University of Kentucky, the University of Louisville, the University of South Carolina and Illinois State University.

"This has been the busiest spring we've ever had responding to requests of bookstores," said Tim Prather, Wallace's vice president of Marketing and Development. "It's because so many universities have done this and found that it's very successful."

Prather said it is common to find people concerned about a service making the transition to become privatized, but he foresees that change as positive.

playing surface, improving the drainage and, reseeding and fertilizing the outfields. The work is expected to be completed in time for the fall semester.

The last phase of work, scheduled for next summer, will be the addition of new backstops, fencing and concession stands. The total cost of the project will be about $440,000, the amount funded by a student recreation fee increase starting last summer.

Bill McMinn, the director of the Recreation Center, said summer is a slow time for intramural sports, making it the best time for phase two because of the reduced enrollment. McMinn said he believes the improvements to the fields may change that, creating a greater interest in intramurals during the summer months, as well as some extramural games against other schools or community teams.

"Maybe we could host some American Softball Association tournaments here," McMinn said. "There are a lot of softball leagues in the area, but few lighted fields."

grades have gone up since.

"I'm pretty darn certain it's high enough right now," Reynolds said.

Henry and Reynolds spoke around 6:30 p.m. Tuesday during a finance committee meeting about Reynolds' grades, and Henry said he would question Student Affairs today.

Jean Paratore, USG adviser, passed the names of the individuals to Henry after the board's decision. But Paratore could not comment on the student's grades Tuesday.

The students were asked to be removed after a decision earlier this month nullified a student's grades at a former college.

The requirements came about when former student government presidential candidate Rob Taylor petitioned to get his community college grades exempt and allow him to run for president. He was initially not allowed to run because his cumulative grades did not meet the guidelines. Taylor and his vice presidential running mate, Eric Waltmire, persuaded the USG Judicial Board in their favor.

Two Mass Communications and Media Arts senators were disqualified as a result of the grade requirement change.

Henry said he had personally spoken with Jawaad Kirkwood about being removed. Kirkwood, a college of mass communications and media arts senator, could not be reached for comment.

Stephanie Shanks, also a college of mass communications and media arts senator, also will not be able to participate in the meeting today. Shanks could not be reached for comment.

On Campus: Outdoor Adventure Club

Club offers students adventures around every corner

JAVIER J. SERNA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A group of people gather to joke, discuss, and sometimes even debate the thing they all have in common in the Video Lounge on the fourth floor of the Student Center every Monday night.

The group is drawn to the room out of a mutual interest in the great outdoors. When members debate, it is usually intended to result in a compromise so that their schedules do not overlap with whatever trips they have planned.

Their idea of fun includes rock-climbing, rappelling, hat-caving, mountain biking, canoeing, camping, fishing and hiking, all of which are regularly included in their itinerary.

A typical meeting with the club begins with many of the members sharing their recent outdoor experiences, usually reflecting on the past weekend. The forum then moves on to different individuals who inform the group of upcoming outdoor events and their adventurous plans for the following week, in hopes of sparking interest in others.

"Most of the trips that get called are just on somebody's whim," club vice president Scott Schnauffer said.

The open atmosphere at meetings allows for a wide variety of outings to become a reality for members.

"Pretty much anything anybody wants to do outside, if anyone else is willing to go with them to do it, that's what we go for," club president Bob Pollok said. "There are usually two or three trips on any given weekend."

Schnauffer, a sophomore in forestry, credits the club with giving him incentive to become involved in outdoor activities.

"I came down here without a good knowledge of what was out there, and through [the club] I have been able to pretty much hook it up," Schnauffer said.

Pollok, like many SIUC students, was partially attracted to the University because of the bounty of wilderness Southern Illinois has to offer.

"As a kid, I was a Boy Scout, and I kind of got into [outdoors] that way," Pollok said. "The main reason I came to SIU was because of the natural resources around here."

Though the club plans the majority of its trips in the region surrounding Carbondale, it also organizes a few bigger trips every year. For the last three years, the club has headed to Pisga National Forest near Asheville, N.C., in the fall semester. About 15-20 people usually make the annual trip, where they backpack, rock climb and go mountain biking.

This past year, the club has also taken trips to Johnson Shut Ins in Missouri during Labor Day weekend, as well as a spring break trip to Sedona, Ariz. The Land Between The Lakes area, bordering Tennessee and Kentucky, is another favorite among club members.

« Pretty much anything anybody wants to do outside, if anyone else is willing to go with them to do it, that's what we go for. There are usually two or three trips on any given weekend.

BOB POLLOK
Outdoor Adventure Club president

The club, a registered Recreational Sports Organization, began with about a half dozen members in 1996. In the four years since its origin, it has steadily maintained a core membership of about 25, and new members are welcomed to join.

Activities are subsidized by membership dues, which cost $10 dollars per member. Though members are also entitled to a 10-percent discount at Carbondale Cycle, most people join the club for the companionship of people who love to do the same things they do.

"I've met a lot of good people [through the club]," Pollok said. "It's a good place to meet people and have fun."

Southwest Missouri State's Jessica Polus (239) snuck into first place overall with her round three score of 76 — the only score to break 80 in the tournament — and take medalist honors.

Sophomore Alison Hiller led SIU with a three-round total of 262 that placed her in seventh individually. Sophomore Andrea Turner (263) finished in a tie for eighth place and senior team-captain Andrea Walker (266) took 11th place.

Junior Liz Uthoff (267) tied for 12th place and sophomore Jennifer Shutt (269), who scored the team's lowest one-round score of 83 Tuesday, landed the 16th spot.

SIU's score of 1,042 is the highest MVC championship winning total since 1989. The high score may be a result of the Victoria National layout, which is a difficult par-74 course and was named the nation's Best New Private Course in 1999 by Golf Digest.

Salukis still hunting

Softball begins final week of regular season in home doubleheader

COREY CUBICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Easter may be over, but there is still a hunt going on.

Entering the final week of the regular season, there is still much to be decided in the Missouri Valley Conference softball standings, as eight of 10 conference teams are still in the hunt for the Valley crown.

The Salukis are accustomed to fighting for one of the top spots in the Valley standings at this time of the year, but find themselves in eighth place. Today's opponent, Indiana State University (19-27, 7-5 MVC), was picked dead last in the preseason polls, but sits in third place.

The Salukis and Sycamores are making up an April 16 rain-out today at 1 p.m. in an MVC doubleheader at IAW Fields.

With the crazy amount of parity in this year's standings, the Salukis (35-17, 5-7 MVC) trail the Sycamores by only two games and are only three games behind first place Creighton University (9-5 MVC).

"In the past 10 years I've never seen it like this," Saluki head coach

Kerri Blaylock said. "The most losses I can remember [for a championship team] was four. I've never seen five, and some of those teams [this year] could still lose more."

The Sycamores' seven conference wins match their win total for the past four years combined. The Salukis, on the other hand, have not been under the .500 mark this late in the conference season since 1995.

But Blaylock is confident her team, which owns the best overall record in the conference, is going to be a team to reckon with come the conference tournament because of its solid pitching staff.

"With our pitching staff, we should have ourselves set, but again, you have to come to play every day and that is usually what determines it," Blaylock said.

With six Valley contests remaining this week for SIUC, including today's games and a date with first place Creighton Saturday in Omaha, Neb., Blaylock still has regular season ambitions in her sights.

The Salukis are arguably the most talented team in the Valley and definitely possess the best pitching staff. SIUC has a 0.79 team ERA, which is very important come tournament time. The biggest problem for SIUC has been scoring runs.

Of the Salukis' 17 losses, 11 have been by only one run, and when they score two or more runs this year, they are an impressive 30-4.

Meanwhile, the Sycamore offense is led by a pair of freshmen — outfielder Sarah Lemond (.333 avg.) and third baseman Stacey Sparger (.294 avg., 25 RBIs) — a big reason for the team's surprise turnaround this year.

"They've really turned it on and I think the thing about it is that you can get on a roll — both positive or negative — and you can just go with it," Blaylock said. "They've gotten on a positive roll."

As the regular season winds down, Blaylock wants her team to continue to focus on its game and let the Valley standings take care of itself.

"I would rather not talk about [the standings], but with the Internet nowadays, our kids are smart enough to get on it and figure it out," Blaylock said.

"My take on it is that if we don't get the job done, then we probably don't deserve to be there anyway, so we're just going out to play the game. I'm not thinking about other teams, I'm thinking about us."

Don't Forget to thank the one that is behind all the work.

Frisella has broken out of a slump in the last 11 games by hitting .447 with 11 RBIs and two home runs. He is currently hitting .302 with 15 RBIs, and will have a chance to better those numbers when the Salukis welcome Murray State University at 3 p.m. today.

His cycle-completing home run took an interesting twist when a girl ran off with the ball that was destined for a place among Frisella's prized possessions.

Luckily, the girl's dad is a professor at SIUC and called Callahan the next morning to let Frisella know they had the ball.

Now that Frisella has the ball back, he can focus more on the goal of placing himself among the potent power hitters in the Saluki line-up.

Jason Rainey, another freshman SIUC outfielder and Frisella's suite mate, was glad that his friend's dedication was rewarded.

"He does his lifting, which sometimes guys cheat on," Rainey said. "You don't see Sal doing that too much. That's why it's good to see good things happen to those who work hard because they deserve it."

With hard work, the better the odds of creating lucky breaks in sports. And fortunately for Frisella, he recovered the ball that will be a permanent reminder of one of baseball's rarest accomplishments.

"That was probably more of a memorable story," Frisella said. "What are the odds of one, hitting for the cycle, and two, losing the ball and getting it back."

"The memory is that I've never done it before, and I'll never forget it — I know that."

Short attention span theater

Tidbits from the world of Saluki Athletics

"Short attention span theater" Today's column, consisting of a few thoughts on current events involving Saluki athletics, is geared toward those with short attention spans.

Money crunch! In the springtime, a young man's fancy turns to ... the budget? That's the case if you work in the SIU athletic department, as the office continues to brainstorm ways to meet the Board of Trustees' demand that the department cut into its substantial deficit.

With each sport already laboring under a pretty tight budget, the department will be faced with some very difficult decisions if it plans on cutting corners. All of this leaves incoming athletics director Paul Kowalczyk in a tough spot.

Kowalczyk is already getting to start on remedying his inherited headache. He said Tuesday he is aggressively tapping into all of his Chicago area SIU connections for help while he finishes up his duties at Northwestern, before he arrives in Carbondale, and on the hot seat, this summer.

Taking volunteers: When only one umpire arrived in time for the start of Friday's baseball game against Indiana State due to a miscommunication, both teams were desperate for some help.

How desperate? The squads agreed to let former Saluki pitcher Dave Condon, who has done some umpiring since his SIU career ended, fill in for a few innings until the rest of the umpiring crew showed up.

Condon did an admirable job by most accounts, which is more than can be said for SIU's current pitchers, who have regularly been getting pounded of late. Maybe the Salukis should start allowing members of the crowd to do their pitching, too.

Fast-paced hoops: The way recruiting has been going for the SIU men's basketball team, Saluki fans can expect a drastic departure from the brand of ball that has been played by head coach Bruce Weber's first two teams.

SIU has been accumulating the horses needed to play crowd-pleasing, up-tempo basketball. The five guys Weber has signed for next season come with impressive backgrounds, and several of them will help provide the athleticism the Salukis were short on last season.

It would be nice to have come up with a big man to help Jermaine Dearman out, but no matter what happens with SIU's final remaining scholarship, the Salukis are setting up to be an entertaining show in the winter.

No matter how athletic the Salukis are, they will have a hard time making as quick as several of the Saluki women's players have been abandoning the program. Guard Kim Holloway recently became the third Saluki to transfer from head coach Julie Beck's program, after Janina Lopez and LaToya Graves cited homesickness for their decisions to transfer.

Homesickness or no homesickness, three players leaving after one season is a problem that Beck and her staff need to find an answer to ASAP.

How 'bout them Dawgs: Finally, congratulations to the SIU women's golf team, which won the Missouri Valley Conference championship Tuesday for the second time in three years. Budget problems or no budget problems, Diane Daugherty's group showed the Salukis can still do what it's all about — win championships.

Crowned MVC champs again

Women's golf team claims second Valley title in three years by 11 strokes

JAVIER J. SERNA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

After storms cleared over Newburgh, Ind., on Tuesday, the fate of the SIU women's golf team was clear.

The Salukis were champions of the Missouri Valley Conference.

For the second time in three years, SIU was crowned Missouri Valley Conference champs Tuesday after blowing away its closest competition by 11 strokes.

Though the rainy conditions at Victoria National Golf Club near Evansville, Ind. caused the final 18 holes of the MVC Championships to be postponed until Tuesday, playing 36 holes in one day did not stop SIU from capturing the championship.

The Salukis were one stroke behind the darkhorse the University of Northern Iowa after round one on Monday. And then, the Salukis made their move.

By the end of action Tuesday, the Salukis were 11 strokes ahead of their closest competition, with a score of 1042. Southwest Missouri State University (1,053), the pre-tournament favorite, posted a third-round surge that moved it into second place, just ahead of Northern Iowa, which shot 1,059 and fell to third place.

SIU was able to win with its team balance. While no SIU golfers finished in the top six individually, none placed any worse than 26th in the 46-player field. Five of SIU's six players finished in the top 16.

SIU outfielder Sal Frisella makes contact with an inside pitch at during batting practice Tuesday. Frisella was a lone highlight in the Salukis 1-3 record last weekend hitting for the cycle, hitting a single, double, triple and a home run, in Sunday's game. Frisella and the Salukis battles Murray State University today at 3 p.m. at Abe Martin Field.

The memory that was lost and found

SIU outfielder Sal Frisella's cycle complete with cherished possession

ANDY EGGENS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

In a baseball season some would prefer to forget about, a lifelong memory will forever be etched in the mind of SIU outfielder Sal Frisella.

In Sunday's 15-7 win against Indiana State University, Frisella became the first Saluki to hit for the cycle since Brad Hollenkamp accomplished the feat on March 17, 1990. It was the first time SIU head coach Dan Callahan witnessed someone hitting for the cycle in his baseball career.

Frisella hit a single, double and a triple before sealing the deal with a home run over the left field wall in his final plate appearance in the bottom of the eighth. Hitting coach Ken Henderson approached Frisella before the final at-bat to notify him that he needed a home run to hit for the cycle.

"When someone tells you something like that, it's like telling somebody you have a no-hitter," Frisella said. "I'm like, 'thanks for jinxing me.'"

The jinx did not work, as Frisella smacked the first pitch over the left field wall to complete the cycle. He left Henderson standing by himself in the dugout with his arms wide-open in joy, while his teammates rushed the field in celebration.

Unusual as it was, Frisella's cycle was not a fluke by any stretch of the imagination. Frisella puts endless hours in the weight room, and his 6-foot-1-inch, 205-pound frame is evidence.

"When he does things properly, the ball jumps off his bat probably quicker than anybody," Callahan said. "Some of it is due to the fact that he has very quick bat speed, and some of it is due to the fact that he is so strong."

"There are times when he'll do things mechanically incorrect and still hit balls hard. I think that is a testament to how strong he is and how much time he has spent in the weight room."
