GSC delays action on new billing system

By Charity Gould

Citing "lack of input," the Graduate Student Council decided unanimously to recommend a new billing system, which would permit a installment plan for payment of tuition and fees.

"On the whole, the council thought the system wasn't bad, but I think the lack of student input into the actual composition of the program, we couldn't condone," said Deb Brown, GSC president.

The new program, called Billing-Accounts Receivable Systems, provides for a centralized location of the University's Officer for all amounts due SIU.

The new system would provide universal window stations (no windows would be designated for special transactions); direct crediting of financial aid for students and an installment payment of tuition and fees.

One part of the BRS, the installment payment plan for tuition and fees, would go into effect spring semester 1981.

According to a report on the new program, the schedule of the installment payments would vary with the time the student registered.

Students who register before the first scheduled installment due date of a semester or summer session would be permitted to pay tuition and fees in three equal installments for a regular semester and two equal installments for a summer session.

A $5 service charge will be assessed each student who wishes to pay their tuition and fees in installments. Past due installment amounts will be assessed a $1 per month past due service charge.

"In effect, each student will have an account where all the debt is consolidated," said Wendy Broadbooks, GSC's vice president, "so if a student goes to Bursar's to pay a bill, they can go to any window and the cashier at the window will know how much that person owes by calling up their account."

The installment plan will be sold in recorded videos at their next meeting in September.

According to the GSC's question of more input, Richard Mullman, assistant to the president, said the Billing-Accounts Receivable System was discussed at installments head meetings on Jan. 22, Feb. 4 and Feb. 26.

"Both GSC and Un­ dergraduate Student Organization representatives were present at those meetings," said Mullman.

W.E. Buffum, associate vice president to the vice president of student affairs, said the task force that designed the system was a "technical group which contained representatives from the student affairs area, but no students were on it."

The Illinois Commerce Commission Thursday heard testimony from about 15 people supporting a plan to permanently expand utility companies from cutting off power to customers during winter months.

About 40 people attended the public hearing, held in Student Center Ballroom C. The meeting was one of a series of hearings being held throughout the state on the topic.

All of the comments received during the hearing supported the plan, which follows a trial program implemented in 1979-80. No representatives of the Central Illinois Public Service Co., which supplies power to most of Southern Illinois, made comments during the hearing.

Several commenters testified that weather is not the primary cause of utility bill problems. They suggested the overall problem involved rising power costs.

Kimmel opposes closed courts

Exclusion of the public and the press from court proceedings should be the last alternative employed by the courts to insure the rights of defendants to fair trials, Mike Kimmel, Republican candidate for Jackson County state's attorney, stated in a position paper made public Wednesday.

Kimmel said he plans to have a series of such get-togethers in Jackson County to present his positions on issues to the public. The next meeting will probably be held in two weeks.

Kimmel said he would serve to insure that the courts do not face Democrat John Clemmons in the November election, held the second of a series of "Meet Mike Kimmel" gatherings at the Murphyboro Airline Community Center. About 20 people, including State Rep. Ralph Dunn, R-Douglas, attended the meeting.

Kimmel said he plans to have a series of such get-togethers in Jackson County to present his positions on issues to the public. The next meeting will probably be held in two weeks. Kimmel said.

Kimmel said the rights of defendants to fair trials, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, must be balanced against the rights of the public and the press to access to court proceedings, guaranteed by the First Amendment.

"The press does protect the defendant by ensuring that what gets a fair trial. The presence of the public prevents deals being made and serves to insure that the courts do their job," Kimmel said.

"However, you may have a situation where that right could come into conflict with the defendant's right to a fair trial," he said.

Kimmel said statements made by police or attorneys regarding an arrest or criminal charge could damage both the defendant's rights and prosecution possibilities. To prevent these problems, Kimmel said, if elected, he will inform his staff and law enforcement officers he deals with of guidelines agreed upon by the American Bar Association and the press.

If damaging statements are nonetheless released, Kimmel said he would employ other alternative procedures before agreeing to closure of trials and other court proceedings.

These would include sequestration of a jury, change in the location of a trial, extensive questioning of potential jurors and additional peremptory challenges for both the prosecution and the defense. The last option allows attorneys to exclude prospective jurors without giving reasons for the exclusion. This is often used when an attorney feels, but cannot prove, a potential juror has been prejudiced by information from the news media.

Kimmel said he would serve as his own media contact in an effort to explain some of the intricacies of the law to media representatives.

"I will work with the press so they understand the importance of what they print," Kimmel said. "If they understand the system, we won't have any problem." Dunn, who is running for his fifth term in the Illinois House, endorsed Kimmel for the state's attorney slot and encouraged Republicans to help elect Kimmel.

"The guy who won the primary (Democratic candidate Clemmons) is going to be too hard to beat with all of our help," Dunn said. "I'm sure Mike has the interests of the people of the county at heart. He's certainly not a car­

LAC held last Tuesday. The meeting were held to solicit suggestions from the public about ways to improve fund raising and increase interest in SIUC sports.

Friend said Thursday that the meeting was a success, although they weren't widely attended.

"We received a number of useful ideas," Friend said. "While there weren't very many people there, the ones who did attend were interested in sharing their ideas with us."

Some of the suggestions to come out of Tuesday's hearings included scheduling family nights, increasing the number of halftime events, giving away door prizes to holders of athletic event cards and having delayed broadcasts of Saluki games on WSUI-TV Channel 8.

Whether these and other suggestions can be compiled in a report and submitted to George Mace, vice president for university relations, depends upon time constraints, Friend said.

"I would like to finish the report before the summer term is over," Friend said. "But that depends on whether we can schedule another IAC meeting this summer. Many of the members will be gone in August and I'll no longer be the committee chair in the fall."

A report of recommendations the Intercollegiate Athletics Commission has made to the Athletics Department over the past three years will be the main item on the agenda when the IAC holds a meeting Friday. IAC Chair Shirley Friend said Thursday.

"The purpose of the review will be to see what action has been taken by the department" on the IAC's recommendations, Friend said. Many IAC members have claimed in the past that the Athletics Department has ignored the IAC's recommendations. The IAC is an advisory body to the Athletics Department.

Friday's meeting will be held at 1 p.m. in the Balcony Conference Room in Anthony Hall and is open to the public.

The second item on the agenda will be a report from John King, the chairman of the President's Commission on Athletics. The commission was formed last spring by acting President Hiram Lesar to make recommendations about the future of athletics at SIUC. According to Friend, King will tell the IAC what his commission has been doing and will seek input from the IAC.

Friend said another topic of discussion at the meeting will be the two open hearings the Panel to investigate Billy's ties to Libya

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate created a nine-member panel Thursday to investigate Billy Carter's links with Libya's royal family as efforts to determine whether the White House influenced a Justice Department investigation of the president's younger brother.

The commission will "pursue the truth wherever the truth may lead," said Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., chairman of the new panel. Billy Carter registered as a foreign agent on June 14, under pressure from the Justice Department.

Police retake Idaho prison from rioters

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — About 100 heavily armed police stormed the Idaho State Penitentiary on Thursday to quell a riot after two hostage guards were rescued from rampaging inmates who set fires throughout the facility.

No deaths were reported from the 20-hour-long rioting at the 500-inmate prison eight miles south of here, but 18 inmates were injured and three cell blocks were severely damaged, said state Corrections Director C.W. "Bill" Crowl.

Riot-torn Chattanooga curfew ordered

ChATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — A citywide curfew was ordered on Thursday in an effort to put a lid on racial trouble in the streets, but a black leader called it a "Band-Aid approach."

Black leaders said the curfew order by Mayor Charles "Pat" Roswell was the urgent for now, but won't deal with the underlying causes — distress over unemployment and tenant complaints about the quality of city housing.

Violence broke out Tuesday after an all-white jury acquitted two Ku Klux Klansmen and convicted a third of reduced assault charges in the April 19 shotgun shootings of four black women.

Statements about Reagan ‘crazy’

A letter printed in Thursday's DE regarding who shot J.R. contained an outrageous threat. Nothing else the letter writer should give us rest or peace if they allowed themselves to be brought into use or used against us. If the letter writer considers himself a conscientious objector, he should make his views known to the government.

The letter writer also claimed that the American military was unprepared for foreign war. If that's true, it seems to me that the government is in for a big surprise. The military is a strong and efficient weapon. Let's not forget the American military in our reports.

As to the letter writer's statement that Jimmy Carter is a weak and inefficient president, it seems to me that he is not in the least bit weak. He is a strong and efficient leader, and he has been making a great effort to improve the country. Let's not forget his efforts for freedom and peace.

Minister expects large group of conscientious objectors

Congress and the Carter administration are not willing to reduce draft registration for those who have conscientious objections. They have decided that it is not necessary to do so. It is true that people have conscientious objections, but it is not necessary to reduce draft registration for them. The government should continue to enforce the draft.

Local farmers want migrant workers

Old Highway 51 south to Cobden is a scenic route. The narrow, hilly road weaves through green orchards laden with apples, peaches and in most instances, migrant farm workers.

About 2,000 migrant farm workers have flocked to the Southern Illinois area this summer to find work harvesting crops. Competition between those staying in the area is fierce. The heat wave in Texas has reduced crop production and more migrants than usual have been driven north in search of work.

The migrants are a transient society and only Mother Nature determines the next stop along the Central Midwest migrant stream.

The workers, most of whom are illegal immigrants from Mexico, said they travel to the States because they can’t find work back home. They travel north during the harvest season, earn what they can and then return home again in the winter.

The money they earn must last them through the winter, until they return again next summer. Many of the workers are single men and in ages of 18 and 20. Others, who have left their families behind, send their paychecks back to Mexico.

“There is not much money and jobs in Mexico,” said Evaristo Santos, manager of a Mexican store in Cobden.

“In Mexico they get no help. Sometimes Red Cross will help out, but it’s not the same type of attention as those with money get,” said the 18-year-old immigrant from Guadalajara, Mexico. Santos came to the States two years ago and has worked at various jobs obtained through the Illinois Migrant Council.

“There are no jobs in Mexico. People will just work to survive. They have no money to give to the family, just to eat from. In Mexico, the rents are very high and the food expensive. Salaries are low,” Santos said.

Most of the Mexicans, Santos said, are afraid because they don’t understand American customs. About 10 percent of them do not speak English. They help each other and live together,” he added.

The migrants depend upon the fruit and vegetable crops for their income, as much as the growers depend upon the migrants for labor.

Rafael DeTorres, director of the Fellowship House alcohol program in Shawnee, said that the migrants are essential to growers. Once fruit crops ripen, they must be picked immediately or the small growers lose money.

“The United States there is not a peasant class like in Mexico. In America, farm laborers do not have the same social status. American farmers don’t respect them. In the fields, they hire Mexican labor. They depend on them. If they aren’t there, the Mexican, then the crop wouldn’t be picked,” said DeTorres, a native of Puerto Rico.

Daniel McGuire, owner of McGuire’s Orchard near Makanda, agrees that if help wasn’t imported, the fruit and vegetable market of Southern Illinois would probably disappear.

“Nearly the local labor force is not sufficient to do the work,” he said. “Try getting welfare people who won’t come and work. And if they do, they won’t do the work right. They can’t do the work right.”

Seeing a need for housing the workers, the Union-Jackson Farm Labor Organization was formed in 1966. The organization, directed by a board which at that time consisted only of Southern Illinois growers, received $400,000 in grants and loans from the Farmer’s Home Administration, a Department of Agriculture program.

The money was used to build a migrant camp that would benefit all the farmers and workers in the area. In 1972, the Union-Jackson County Farm Labor Camp; located three miles north of Cobden, opened to provide housing for 180 workers.

According to McGuire, chairman of the farm labor organization, the camp was necessary because housing on the growers’ property became too expensive to maintain because of the high cost of labor.

“Housing of laborers for small growers became next to impossible. We had to build a place that was near in terms of cost and better than what we lived in ourselves,” McGuire said.

A short dirt road leads from Old Highway 51 to the camp. Each of the 36 green and brown concrete-block apartments includes two bedrooms sparsely furnished with worn beds. A small kitchen area contains a refrigerator, stove, sink and table. Each apartment is always occupied and is used for the four-month harvest season. DeTorres, said the apartment units share a communal bathroom.

In the front yard of the camp is a make-shift playground and two other buildings that house the Migrant Council Day Care Center and the Shawnee Health Clinic. These services, including the alcohol program, are available for all workers regardless of where they live or if they are illegal or not, DeTorres said.

Although the camp usually opens in March or April, this year various problems kept it from opening until July 21. McGuire said, the problems be added, have existed since the camp originally opened.

According to Compton, regional director of the Illinois Council a Department of Labor program, the problems are many. “Most of the problems are design problems, especially with the pipes. They freeze in the winter and burst,” he said.

Last year’s manager did a poor job of draining the pipes and as a result we had a whole slew of leaks,” McGuire added.

The work involved in preparing the camp to open this year was more than usual, said McGuire, who volunteers for his position on the labor workers board. Few of the growers on the labor board, he said, took the time to complete the work necessary for its inspection by the Department of Health.

The camp buildings, McGuire said, were built for summer use and the water pipes have no protection from the cold weather. The pipes must be completely drained of water to prevent them from cracking.

Compton said the association arrived at the camp so that it can eventually pay back the $400,000 loan. The money is needed for other projects.

Migrant farm workers' children given advantage of day care center

By Carol Knowles

Smiles light faces like the sun on a warm summer day. The sound of laughter fills the rainbow colored rooms of the center. And children romp around the room.

It appears to be a typical day care center, but it's not. This day care center is located in the middle of a camp for migrant workers.

Kay Weatherford, director of the center, said the program began in an effort to give the children of migrant workers the same advantages that other children have.

"Children of migrant workers are often left to fend for themselves at the edge of the fields their parents are working in, or left at home with another child who really isn't old enough to take on the responsibility for a younger sibling," Weatherford said.

At the center, children are fed, cared for and allowed to play. The program is structured, Weatherford said, with the afternoon set aside for napping. Meals are planned with the basic four food groups in mind. But, just as mothers in the past have made children clean their plates before dessert, the same treatment is given to the children at the center.

Continued from page 1 through the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. All materials used in the center and all improvements made to the center come from those funds. The center is funded about $20 per child per day.

About 40 children take care of the 35 workers who attend the center at the present time. Capacity for the center is 43. With the opening of the migrant camp this week, however, Weatherford said she expects many more families to bring their children to the center.

"This is going to be a very hectic place once the word gets out to the migrant workers that the camp is open. The workers will want to bring their children to the center, but we will have to turn them away for lack of room, she said.

"The children attending the center are picked up every morning on a bus that makes a 50-mile trip around the area to the sites where the migrants are staying. The 15 infants who ride the bus are placed in baby chairs and are tended to by two center employees. At 4 p.m. the bus makes the long trip to return the children to their families.

"Sometimes a lack of communication and the language barrier can cause confusion in the transportation system and children are not picked up by their parents when they should be. On such occasions, the bus driver or center becomes a temporary baby sitter. This week, two children never made it home to their families until they were picked up by the Department of families. Carmen Bonet, a parent in Health, Education and Welfare. Sometimes a lack of communication and the language coordinator is in charge of the center and an improvements made to barrier can cause confusion in programs. Those materials used in the center are funded from those funds.

"Most of the parents are interested in the programs to help their children," Bonet said. "I get a lot of cooperation from them.

"Some of the children attend the center for a while and then disappear. Sometimes the parents are working or if one of the parents is unable to work. A child can also attend for one year after his family has decided to settle in the area and give up migration.

"One of the functions of the day care center is to help make the migrant families self-reliant," Weatherford said. "We help the families out in any way we can.

"This is going to be a very hectic place once the word gets out to the migrant workers that the camp is open. The workers will want to bring their children to the center, but we will have to turn them away for lack of room."
Ranks of illegal aliens swell despite efforts to stop the flow

By Andy Strang
Staff Writer

Despite a Southern Illinois unemployment rate that is over the national average of 7 percent, an estimated 1,000 illegal aliens will enter the area in search of work during the next four months, according to a spokesman for the Illinois Migrant Council.

The aliens who enter this area, most of whom are Mexican, are part of what the Foreign Policy Association estimated to be between 24,000 to 52,000 illegal aliens entering the United States each year. However, an Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman in Chicago estimated the number to be closer to 11 million.

The United States, under its foreign immigration program, allows 20,000 immigrants from any one country to legally enter the country each year. Through the permanent resident program, these aliens may obtain visas to live in the country for tours, visits or educational programs. According to Andre Nutis, educational programs, INS, allows 20,000 the permanent residence in one country to legally enter the United States for tours, visits or temporary residence.

The demand for labor is high, and aliens may also qualify for educational programs in the country for tours, visits or educational programs. According to Vickie Otten, legislative director of Rep. Paul Simon's Washington office, employers are not supposed to ask a migrant worker for proper identification. "The employer is liable if it is determined that he is hiring illegal aliens," she said.

The present system of trying to enforce laws prohibiting illegal aliens from acquiring work and maintaining residence in the United States is not working. It has too many loopholes and is too flexible," said Otten. "Many growers have found these loopholes and use them to their benefit. "I don't know if my workers are legal or not," an area grower said.

"I ask for a name and a social security number. That is all I have to ask for," he said.

Many of the illegal aliens will find opportunities in the United States, said Vickie Otten. Many of the illegal aliens will find opportunities in the United States, said Vickie Otten. The illegal residents pay taxes and social security as well as the legal ones," he said.

According to Otten, "If social security is collected on an illegal alien, it will never be collected by the alien." However, illegal aliens are not eligible to receive social security benefits. "Their money would just go into the general fund," he said. "It is used to pay benefits for people who do qualify for benefits."

Drone did not know how much money illegal aliens pay in to social security, but he said, "I'm sure it's millions of dollars."

"I have to accept their statement as being true," Otten said. "I cannot ask every person who walks in the door if he is a legal resident or not."

Migrants find that jobs are scarce, pay is low, language always foreign

By Dave Powers
Staff Writer

Twenty-four-year-old Juan Portillo (not his real name) sat conversing in Spanish with the other migrant workers crowded in the small trailer that serves as the medical facility for the Union-Jackson Migrant Labor camp near Golden Post, cover the wall, shouting colorful warnings in both Spanish and English against the horrors of venereal disease and malnutrition.

His hands, weathered from a life of manual labor, fidget nervously with the small package of calamine lotion given to him by one of the clinic's volunteers. Dark, piercing eyes shift nervously under a crop of black. His hair was shoulder-length and disheveled, and he wore a disheveled immigration officer intent on deporting him.

Young Mexicans who cross the border into the United States, Juan is here illegally. He didn't come to start a new life in a more prosperous country or to permanently escape the extreme poverty that grips much of Mexico. He came to find work and earn money to support the wife and two young children that he left behind in Los Alamos.

How long it will be before Juan can return to his family, or even send money home, depends on what work lies ahead. Since he came to the United States some five months ago, work has been slow and money scarce. Florida will be his next stop before heading home for the winter.

Juan speaks virtually no English other than the few phrases he has picked up since leaving Mexico. He must depend upon fellow migrant workers who speak English to learn where the next job may be.

His days are filled with the incomprehensible gibberish of a foreign language and he has difficulty understanding what seems to him to be widespread malnutrition among the residents of Southern Illinois.

"Language is the biggest problem," Juan explained through an interpreter. "I don't think I have been mistreated, but I wouldn't even know if I had.

Juan has no great expectations for his future. There are no dreams of riches and like most of the migrant workers, he hopes only to survive and make ends meet.

Not all the migrant workers are Mexicans who lack legal documentation and who look over their shoulders for the immigration officers. Many migrant workers are U.S. citizens, both white and black, hailing from many of the 50 states. Some take to the migrant circuit for the chance to travel while others lack the necessary skills for a more secure vocation. Twenty-eight-year-old Dora Villalobos, a U.S. citizen, strained under the weight of her third child, due any day, as she pulled herself up from the small chair in the health clinic. Her fair complexion and red hair are in stark contrast to the dark hair and dark skins of many Mexicans sitting nearby. This would be her last visit to the clinic.

Migrants offered alcohol program

By Carrie Sweeney
Entertainment Editor

The life of a migrant farm worker is not one that is easy. Weeks and hours are long and hard and differences in culture and language create communication problems. Money is scarce and living conditions in most migrant camps are below poverty level.

According to Rafael DeTorres, director of the Fellowship House alcohol program operating out of the Union-Jackson County Farm Labor Camp, the frustrations of a migrant in turn create a greater problem—alcohol abuse.

"The alcohol program was set up in 1976 when a study determined that a lot of crimes, fights and automobile accidents were related to alcohol," he said. Funded through the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the program was set up to provide intervention in the drinking patterns of migrants with scheduled activities. Recreational sports such as basketball, soccer, volleyball and boxing are provided during the weekends and evening hours. In addition, the program provides alcohol information and counseling.

Although located at the Jackson Union Labor Camp, the alcohol services are open to all migrant workers in the area. No legal requirement is required for use of the services. DeTorres said, only a need for help.

"Preventative counseling is the key factor of the program," DeTorres said. We teach the migrants the U.S. laws concerning alcohol. We work closely with the local community so that there is a mutual understanding of the problems.

DeTorres added that the counselors also educate the migrants on all aspects of American culture, including money, the politics of the area and also teach them the necessary information so that they can make their own choices concerning alcohol," he said.

Farmers say migrant workers are needed to harvest local crops

McGuire agreed, adding that he was surprised that the camp had passed the FHA inspection when it opened.

"The camp has never made money and will never be able to pay the interest on the loan," he said.

According to DeTorres, who is in the educational psychology doctoral program at SIU-C, the conditions of the Jackson-Union camp are not really bad. "This camp is not bad compared to camps in Florida or Texas. This place is like the Hilton compared with other places," he said.

"We can't go out at night and we can't use the park. I won't go out at night without my brother," she added.

Cobden patrolman Herbert Garris Jr. said that he was told "by a reliable source" to expect more problems this year because of the large number of migrants. "There is an increase in problems once the migrants get here," he said. "Alcohol sales go way up. The older Mexican people will go drinking and slip drinks to those who are not of age. They like to party and most of the time if there is a group of them partying, they are disorderly," Garris added.

Many of the Cobden residents won't talk about their feelings towards the migrants and those that will are very hesitant about what they had to say. "If the immigrants weren't here, the peaches wouldn't get picked," one Cobden resident said.

Rob Tate of Carterville works as a volunteer teaching English to migrant workers. The English classes are held four nights a week and are sponsored by the Illinois Migrant Council.

A little store doubles as a classroom

By Carol Knowles
Staff Writer

On Old Highway 51, in the center of Cobden, is a little store called Su Cases, Spanish for Our Home. The store is rented by the Illinois Migrant Council for the migrant workers in the area. But the store is not just used for the purchasing of goods. In the basement of the store, eager students come four nights a week to learn English.

Martha Compton, a teacher hired by the council to develop literacy materials, said the class receives no funding from the council or the government. She said that she is paid for developing literacy materials, however. "Originally the class was a literacy program," Compton explained. "Now there is only one person who attends that is illiterate. We use the program to teach practical applications of English to migrants so they can communicate in town." Compton added that the goals of the program are to help people learn to say what they need to say, to improve reading skills in either language and to give the people a chance to practice their skills with other people.

At the beginning of the season in May, Compton said as many as 40 people attended the class, including local people who came to learn Spanish. Lately, however, the class size has stabilized to about 15 students. "Transportation is always a problem for many of the migrants who want to attend the class," she said.

Compton and Thomas Kalmar, education coordinator for the Illinois Migrant Council, implement singing as a literacy tool as well as textbooks with English-Spanish translations. "The conditions we hold the class in are not as good as we'd like them to be, but the students are very willing to learn," Compton said.

Doctor at migrant workers’ clinic says Mexicans avoid medical help

By Carol Knowles

Staff Writer

The people of Mexico are independent and hardworking people who stay away from health care, according to the FauntLeRoy, the sole doctor at the Union-Jackson Farmerwork Health Center.

The center, also known as the “Migrant Clinic,” is run by the Shawnee Health Service and Development Corporation in an effort to treat migrant and seasonal workers in the area. The program is funded with about $59,000 from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

According to Carol Knowles, administrative coordinator for the program, eighty-five new people came to the clinic for treatment in June. Another eighty-five new people came to the clinic for treatment in July. She said Jennifer Garcia, who has the most common complaints she receives are rashes, ear infections and lower back pain.

“Rashes just seem to be a part of the job,” she said. “We know it probably isn’t from the pesticides used by the farmers because complaints about pesticides are going on for years, long before advancements in pesticides were made. Lower back pains are a part of the job too. The lower back is a weak part of the body and anyone who does manual labor will have complaints of pain.”

One of the problems in treating migrant workers, FauntLeRoy said, is that the people come in with their own biases on what is causing them pain.

“Many of the drugs that the migrants need are over-the-counter in Mexico, but they need prescriptions for them in the United States,” she said. “They tend to resent that.”

The clinic program has come a long way from a few years ago when it operated out of a beat-up old bus, clinic staff members said.

“Progress has been slow, slower than it should be, but everything takes time,” FauntLeRoy said.

FUND RAISING BANNED

SPRINGFIELD (AP) - Local community fund-raising groups cannot solicit funds at the intersection of public highways unless they are part of an authorized statewide effort, the Illinois attorney general said in an opinion Thursday.

Attorney General William Scott said no local municipality has the power to pass ordinances that prevent strictly local groups to solicit at city street intersections.

Scott said that according to state law authorized organizations would be allowed to solicit donations at intersections with four-way stop signals when local ordinances permit. He said solicitors must be at least 16 years old and wear high-visibility vests while soliciting.

THE GOLD MINE A TASTE OF CARBONDALE’S BEST!

Serving up a piping hot deep pan pizza is Don Medley, owner of The Gold Mine restaurant at 611 South Illinois Avenue, Carbondale.

The Southern Illinois University magazine yearbook concluded after two months of surveys and tasting that the number one pizza in Carbondale was The Gold Mine’s cheese and sausage.

Hot deep Pan Pizza and good times are what The Gold Mine is all about. Stop in and see for yourself why The Gold Mine is number one in Carbondale.
Migrants struggle with language, low pay, scarce jobs, hard work

Mission, Texas, some 10 years ago, is through with the uncertainty of seeking work on the migrant circuit. She has picked her last Florida peach, Delaware pepper or Maryland cucumber.

Gaining her General Equivalency Diploma and successfully completing a legal clerk's course has brought a promise of security to a life which, until recently, depended solely on the whims of Mother Nature and the labor needs of the growers. Her husband now has a permanent job in Centralia, and Murphyboro is their new home.

At 18, Dora was enticed to the migrant circuit by a smooth-talking broadcaster whose voice belied promises of high pay and many benefits at a cannery in Delaware. What she found, instead, were long hours of work for low pay and poor living conditions. The conditions, she said, were similar at other migrant camps.

"There are some really bad places for the workers to live," she added. "Often the grower would have only enough work for a few but he would try to send them in groups to keep the workers there for when the work picked up.

"And when the season was slow, growers would loan money to the workers just to keep them there. And before you knew it, you could be deep in debt with no way to turn. The growers were always against welfare and food stamps."

By the time Dora met her husband, a migrant worker from near her hometown, she was well-schooled in the ups and downs of the circuit. They began to plan their route more carefully and "didn't head for the unknown.

"We had had enough of the weekends where many of the workers got rowdy, and the drinking ended in fights and family disturbances. We finally ended up spending more money for better housing away from the camp—but it was worth it."

Dora is the exception among migrant workers. Juan is the rule. While she understands the American system with its many legal recourses and was able to pursue a more secure lifestyle, Juan is at the mercy of employers, who may or may not pay the going rate for workers or provide decent accommodations until the harvest is completed.

Juan, the son of a poor farmer, is from a small village in Southern Mexico. His fourth-grade education and 13 brothers and sisters are typical of the conditions that prompt many Mexicans to cross the border into the United States.

The story is the same throughout much of Mexico, whose population is either very rich or very poor and where the phrase "middle class" is virtually unheard of.

Although Mexico is basically an agricultural country, it still must import much of its food from the United States. In 1976, Mexico spent more than $240 million on food imports.

The poor state of the Mexican agriculture industry has spurred a mass exodus from the countryside to the city by those who hope to gain more than just subsistence from the small farms that produce only with the help of expensive fertilizers and irrigation systems.

And as the job market of Mexico City continues to buckle under the weight of the unemployed, more and more young Mexicans will be looking north of the border for an answer.

"I want get to know the United States," he said. "I hope to get to know Florida, Chicago, California. I'll go wherever there is work, but soon I'll go back home to my family."

The Handicapped Rights Organization will hold its last summer meeting on Friday at Woody Hall B, in the conference room.

The Jewish Student Association will hold a fall semester meeting at 4:15 p.m. on Monday, at the Jewish Student House, 715 S. University Ave. For more information call 329-1063.

Telpro, an organization for students interested in producing their own shows and gaining experience with Radio-TV equipment, will meet at 6 p.m. Friday in Room 1046 of the Communications Building.

Two faculty members at SIU-C's STC who are husband and wife have been appointed Danforth Associates. Vivienne V. Hertz, assistant professor, and Donald G. Hertz, coordinate of the mortuary science and funeral service program, were among 450 educators selected nationwide in the program sponsored by the Danforth Foundation. Associates participate in conferences and are eligible to apply for grant funds for special projects.

Saluki patrolman’s alert response leads to capture of car theft suspect

By Tony Gordon
Staff Writer

A Saluki patrolman displayed the power of his memory when he was standing in the front yard of his girlfriend’s home in Carterville a few hours after getting off work.

When Mark Banycky, 21, of Carterville, saw a 1976 Honda Civic pass by the house, he quickly examined the license plates and noticed the rust spots on the silver-colored car. Bingo!

He remembered reading the car’s description earlier that day. The car was reported stolen in Anna.

Banycky followed the car to Cambria, where it pulled into a driveway. As the person driving the Honda got out of it, Banycky identified himself and asked if he was aware the car had been reported stolen. The male juvenile he was speaking to began running.

“I chased after him on foot,” Banycky said. “Someone across the street saw us running and called the police. The Williamson County Sheriff’s department arrived and confirmed the car was stolen and took the suspect into custody.”

The suspect is a juvenile and his name and address were not released by police.

The Saluki Patrol consists of student employees for the SIUC Police who perform foot patrol, radio dispatch and traffic control to supplement the full-time officers. They are uniformed and equipped while on duty, with the exception of firearms, and work between 15 and 25 hours a week. Since it was organized in 1969, the Saluki Patrol has employed over 400 students.

STC enrollment triples since 1971

By Calleen Moore
Staff Writer

Enrollment in the School of Technical Careers has tripled since 1971, according to STC Dean Arden Pratt. About 3,000 students were enrolled in STC last year, Pratt said.

“I’d say in general, enrollment at STC is a very normal mean for the student body of the University,” he said. Tool and Manufacturing Technology graduates are in high demand, he said.

“We will have industries request the whole graduation class.”

Unfortunately, the lowest paying jobs are in the allied health fields,” Morgan said.

Frederic Morgan, director of Allied Health and Public Services, said. “Traditionally, the pay in allied health has not been as high as it should be, but added the situation is improving.”

The average pay in the health area is $10,000 annually, he said. Morgan said qualified applicants outnumber the amount of students the health programs can accept.

“I’d say the health field has always been a very popular area,” Morgan said, adding that women dominate the field.

A weakness that exists for STC is many traditional roles still pertain to the programs; therefore, STC has trouble attracting minorities, Pratt said.

Joe Schafer, director of Aviation Technology, said more jobs are available in aviation than there are students in the field. But, he added, enrollment in the field is already filled for next year.

Unfortunate error

It was incorrectly published in Wednesday's Daily Egyptian that the infant-toddler and preschool programs make up the Child Development Laboratory and that Mary Lindahl was the assistant director of the CDL.

The CDL is made up of more than these two programs. Only the infant-toddler program is located in Quigley Hall. Room 116.

Lindahl is the assistant director of the infant-toddler program.

The child’s name in the accompanying photograph is Thomas Shaner, not Tommy Shaner as was published.

So, the person in the photograph accompanying the article on the “Sherlock Holmes game” was identified incorrectly. The individual in the photograph was Patrick Drazen, music director of WSU radio.

Men's swimming coach Bob Steele says despite many disappointments he faced recruiting this year, he will have a good crop of swimmers and divers coming in for the 1980-81 season.

Steele and diving coach Dennis Golden are both high on diver Jim Watson, who is the 1980 HSSA diving champion. Golden said Watson had only intermittent coaching in high school, not the constant attention that the sport demands.

"Being around the other good divers on the Saluki squad—like NCAA finalist Rick Twaddle—should give Watson some competition, even if it's only in a practice situation," Golden said. He added that Watson has a lot of ability and, "By the time the nationals come around, he should be ready."

Carlos Henao, a Colombian national, was signed by Steele recently. Henao, 13, has posted times of 46 seconds in the 100-yard freestyle and was on a 600- meter freestyle relay team that placed at the Pan American Games.

Henao is an accomplished long course swimmer, Steele said. However, Steele is unsure how good a short course swimmer Henao is. Steele said Henao was strictly a sprinter who should help the team out in the sprint relays. Henao has been studying English at Jacksonville, Fla., for the past year.

Steele says he has recruited a couple of Australian swimmers, Darren Bogg from Broome, and Mike Bold from Sydney. Steele said that Bogg, who is ranked in the top 30 in the world in the 600-meter freestyle, would have made the Australian Olympic team if the country had chosen to take a full contingent to the Moscow games. However, the country sent only one-third of its usual team, Steele said.

Steele said he expects Bold, who wants to coach someday, to help the team out in the backstroke, fly, and the individual medley. In fact, Steele said both Australian swimmers have a chance to break school records.

Additional swimmers Steele says he has for the upcoming season include Larry Wooley of Schaumburg. Steele said Wooley should be able to swim in the middle distance freestyle races. Wooley did not have a strong swimming program at his high school, Steele said, but with some good competition he should be able to realize his full potential.

Dave June, from Harvey, should make the squad as a sprinter. Steele said June has posted times of 22.21 seconds in the 50-yard free and 48.5 in the 100 free.

Barry Hahn is also expected to make the traveling squad, Steele said.

Steele said he needed about every type of swimmer from his recruits this year because last year’s squad, nine of them, is gone.

Of the other two, Chris Phillips will be coaching in Brazil and Tom Kontakainen returned to Sweden to attend medical school.

Steele said he finds prospective Saluki swimmers from several sources like high school meets, bi-weekly Amateur Athletic Union meets, and international meets.

Steele said he sends all prospects that he’d like to land personalized letter outlining facts about the school, the swim program, and, most importantly, about the academic unit the swimmer might want to get into.

However, most high school swimmers and divers don’t give a hang about letters from swim coaches. Steele said. So telephone calls and personal visits are important, he insists, because you can never get the word from the high school coach doesn’t hurt. But recruiting swimmers is relatively easy, Steele said, because you can get a reasonable idea of their ability and potential in a half hour or so.

Steele said he can recruit good college swimmers, but he doesn’t like to do it if they are really here only two years. Steele said, the best junior college swimmer he has been after is about one and a half years to get them to the Midwest.

Lastly, Steele says he tries to recruit college swimmers that he’s seen at international meets. However, he has met international teams that he has yet to meet at international meets.

Steele said he feels he has an obligation to American swimmers and tries to recruit them first. But, he says, if he signed just American swimmers the team would suffer because the international swimmers are usually better. Or, Steele said, he can chance it with a lesser American swimmer.
