Anderson announces independent bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican John P. Anderson became an independent candidate for president Thursday, appealing for the support of voters so disenchanted by the prospect of a Carter-Reagan choice this fall that they might stay home on Election Day.

In Austin, Texas, Republican front-runner Ronald Reagan said there was "a terrible possibility" that Anderson's reborn candidacy might throw the November election into the House of Representatives.

Reagan said he was not seriously concerned it might happen, but if it did — with Democrats holding the majority in the House — "it's pretty obvious what would happen."

White House press secretary Jody Powell said it was too early to predict the impact of an independent Anderson candidacy on President Carter's bid for re-election. Neither would he say whether the Carter campaign would go to court in an attempt to keep Anderson's name off the November ballots.

Abandoning his 10-month-long quest for the Republican presidential nomination at a news conference at the National Press Club, Anderson said:

"There is current statistical evidence that virtually one-half of potential voters are dissatisfied with a choice between President Carter and Ronald Reagan."

The Illinois congressman said he would seek to "broaden the choice available to millions of potential voters who simply do not participate in party primaries and caucuses."

He said he believes he can attract many Americans who would otherwise sit out the general election and not vote for either major party nominee.

Anderson repeatedly disputed contentions that an independent candidacy will make him a spoiler who could not win, but might give the election to one of the two major party nominees.

Aides said Anderson would begin his independent run for the White House with appearances in New York City, Atlanta, Charleston, W.Va., Detroit, Lansing, Mich., and Boston, starting this weekend.

The 58-year-old Anderson, making his announcement with his family at his side, said that starting immediately his campaign will be completely financed by private contributions. He estimated it would take between $10 million and $12 million to sustain "a credible effort" through November.

He said $307,000 in federal matching funds awarded him as a Republican candidate would be returned to the Treasury.

Although the two major party candidates will receive $29.5 million each to run their general election campaigns, there is no provision for federal aid to independent candidates.

Anderson said he was releasing all 57 delegates now committed to voting for him at the Republican National Convention in Detroit in July.

Anderson's independent White House bid likely would steal more votes from the Democratic presidential nominee than from the Republican contender, campaign officials said.

"I think it's probably going to hurt us," said Tim Snelling, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's central Illinois coordinator in the March primary campaign, in which Kennedy was drubbed by incumbent President Carter.

"I don't think there's a chance in the world that Anderson can win," he said. "But he's going to pull some votes."

Anderson, a 20-year veteran of Congress, said he would stay a Republican. But he said he was convinced there was enough voter dissatisfaction with President Carter and the GOP front-runner, Reagan, to allow him to become the first independent to win the presidency.

But Rep. Donald Totten, R-Hoffman Estates, Reagan's Illinois campaign manager, said Anderson's independent move might help Reagan by siphoning off more votes from Democrats unhappy with Carter than from Republicans dissatisfied with former California Gov. Reagan.

"If the election were to be held today it would appear that (Anderson) would help Reagan," said Totten. "It's more likely that he would make it impossible for a Democrat to be nominated."

"If nothing else, Anderson can guarantee a Reagan election," said Sen. Don Wooten, D-Rock Island, a Carter nominating delegate.

But a number of Carter supporters, including his Illinois manager, said they didn't think Anderson's bid would cut into the president's nationwide vote.

"I think voters will realize Anderson's is not a serious effort," said James Wall, Carter's spokesman in Illinois. Wall said he felt voters will realize Anderson can't win in November, and so vote for one of the two major party candidates.

Todd Renfrow, a Carter Illinois primary campaign co-chairman, said he didn't think Anderson's move pleased officials of either party.

Renfrow said Carter now would likely have to mount a stronger Downstate campaign that he might previously have considered in order to counter Anderson's popularity.

"It's going to be very tough in Rockford," said Renfrow.

Anderson's departure from the Republican presidential race whipped up a political duststorm on Capitol Hill, with some lawmakers raising the prospect that he could be drummed out of the Republican party.

House GOP Whip Bob Michel, a fellow Illinoisian who backed Anderson in a series of fights with party conservatives, said at the very least Anderson should get off the powerful Rules Committee and make room for "a bit of a fightin', partisan Republican."

Nordby withdraws from presidential race

By Paula Donna Walter
Staff Writer

Gene M. Nordby, vice-president for business and finance at the Georgia Institute of Technology, withdrew his candidacy for the SIU-C presidency Thursday.

Nordby, one of five candidates for the position, said his decision was "a personal one," and it had nothing to do with the quality of the school.

Contacted at his home in Atlanta, Ga., Nordby said, "I would not have gotten involved in the first place had I not had a high regard for the institution. It's a fine school and a good opportunity for a president to come in and go with the institution."

Nordby denied receiving any pressure from SIU officials to withdraw. He also denied having received a position elsewhere.

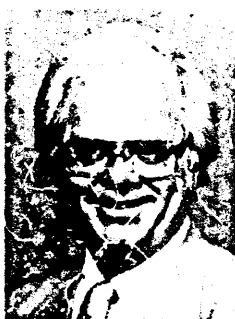

"It's just not a good thing for me right now. Sometimes one just doesn't have the time to look for other jobs. My primary obligation is here and I can't sacrifice my performance here to look for a job elsewhere," he said.

Nordby was originally scheduled to be on campus for public and private interviews Monday and Tuesday. His resignation leaves four candidates in contention for the position.

Two candidates—Robert Quinn, dean of the Commonwealth Campuses at Pennsylvania State University, and T. Alexander Pond, executive vice president of the State University of New York at Stony Brook—were on campus this week for public and private interviews.

Albert Somit, executive vice president of SUNY at Buffalo, will visit the campus April 30. The final candidate, Robert Ruford, vice-chancellor for research and graduate studies at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, will be on campus May 5.

All participants are winners at Special Olympics

By Jeffrey Smyth
Staff Writer

Christopher Miller of Benton didn't place first in the 10- and 11-year-old boys 50-yard dash. In fact, he placed last. The same held true for Brent Thomason of Brownsville in the same event in his heat. But both of these athletes, along with the other 1,200 participants in the Southern Illinois Special Olympics track and field events Thursday at McAndrew Stadium, won something.

All the participants, from the 18 Southern Illinois counties, won medals or ribbons for the events they competed in. And all won the hearts of the some 2,500 volunteers whose love and devotion made the day possible.

It was the 11th annual Special Olympics for Southern Illinois and as in the years that preceded, the volunteers for this one could express nothing but enthusiasm towards the athletes and the day itself.

"It's not work being out here," Cindy Davis, freshman in science and a Special Olympic volunteer, said. "I have gotten more satisfaction than anything else today. When you bring one of them up for an award, and see the smiles on their faces it makes me feel good to know they are happy."

"What impressed me was that they are so competitive," Harold Gibson, freshman in political science and another volunteer, said. "I played football in high school and they compete nothing like that. The athletes compete hard, but they are still nice to each other. They're just great."

Last minute preparations for the day's events began at 6 p.m. Wednesday with the preparation of some 4,000 lunches for athletes, coaches and volunteers. Final preparations were made early Thursday morning with the National Guard from the Carbondale Armory setting up telephone lines from the stadium's infield to the press box on the top row of the bleachers. Clowns began painting their faces at 7:45 a.m. while other volunteers were busy preparing the infield and special events booths to insure everything ran smoothly.

Many of the volunteers remembered past Olympics while they worked.

"This going to be very exciting," one clown said as she made up her face. "I never felt so much love from kids before. I'm ready to give them all I have."

And it appeared that most of the volunteers did.

"Everyone throws aside the fact that we don't know each other, and we have a good time," Denise Busby, senior in psychology, said. "It is a good time and it is nice to see everyone working so well together."

For the athletes, their faces expressed how they felt. Smiles were everywhere and one young boy was heard saying, "I love you clown I love this whole day."

Faculty lobbying efforts take group to capital for committee appearance

By Paula Donner Walter
Staff Writer

Three SIUC constituency group leaders traveled to Springfield Tuesday to try their hands at lobbying for faculty and staff salaries.

Lawrence Dennis, president of the Faculty Senate, Joann Marks, president of the Civil Service Employees Council and Gary Brown, president of the Graduate Student Council, appeared before the Senate Appropriations II Committee to ask for increases in the faculty and staff pay rate.

"We had a contingent there. The general impression is that the legislators understand, know the facts, and are sympathetic. But I think they are very apprehensive of the financial results of (President) Carter's policies," Dennis said.

The representatives are hoping to raise Gov. James Thompson's recommendations of an 8 percent pay increase. The Illinois Board of Higher Education originally recommended an 8 percent increase, plus a 1 percent increase in fringe benefits which was dropped in Thompson's proposal.

Dennis said in the past decade, except for two years, the faculty salary pay increases have been below the increases in the Consumer Price Index.

"You have to look at it in the context of the decade. Except for two years, we've fallen behind the inflation rate," he said.

Dennis said the catalyst for the local lobbying efforts was the recently-formed Association of State Universities Governance Bodies, which is composed of the faculty senate presidents from Illinois public universities. Dennis said the president of that organization, Martin Dubin of Northern Illinois University, testified before the appropriations committee.

"It's (the association) based on faculty senates, but the fact remains we have concerns for civil servants. The students have been supportive also because of a concern for the quality of education," Dennis said.

Dennis said he didn't think local groups had ever attempted lobbying and was told by one legislator "that it should have begun years ago."

He added that if the legislators do raise the pay rate, "it won't be the result of any one group, it will be of the general mood changing, of combined efforts."

National lowers meat prices 10 to 40 cents per pound

By Cindy Humphreys
Staff Writer

A reduction of 10 to 40 cents per pound in the prices of 145 different cuts of beef, chicken and pork was instituted recently by National Supermarket in Carbondale, and will continue "until we receive price increases from our wholesalers," according to Associate Manager Ken Kueper.

All National Supermarkets are reducing their meat prices by similar amounts in an effort to sell more fresh meat, Division Manager Al Cross said.

"We're taking a loss in gross profit, so we have to sell more meat to equal last year's profit," Kueper said. "By cutting our prices, we're accomplishing three things."

"We're keeping our meat cutters working, and consumers haven't seen meat prices like these in at least two years," he said. "We're also helping the farmers by stabilizing the meat market a little."

The quality of the meat will be the same as it always was, Kueper said.

A "family pack" of ground beef, selling at $1.59 per pound last week, now costs $1.39 per pound. Whole fryers that sold for 59 cents a pound now costs 49 cents a pound, and a whole pork butt, at $1.09 per pound last week now sells for 89 cents a pound.

National is also the only local grocery store participating in President Carter's voluntary, generic price freeze until May, even though the price freeze signs were recently taken down.

"We lowered the price on our generic canned vegetables lower than the price freeze price," Kueper said, "and we took the freeze signs down to avoid confusing the customers."

PCB testing of Campus Lake to be completed in a few weeks

By Erick Howenstine
Staff Writer

Testing of the sediment in Campus Lake for polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB) that leaked into the lake from a transformer in the Health Service is now only a few weeks from conclusive results. John Meister, director of Pollution Control, said it is very unlikely that any of the material, which is often compared in toxicity to DDT, ever reached the lake.

"No more than 15 gallons" of the thick oily substance leaked from the broken transformer from 1976 to the spill's discovery in 1978, he said.

The sump pump the PCB would have had to flow through has a catch basin that holds several hundred gallons, Meister said. Since PCB is several times heavier than water, that which reached the pump would have probably collected at the bottom, he said.

All the material found in the catch basin, as well as that scraped off the Health Service floor, is now "under lock and key" at Pollution Control.

The 22 samples of sediment taken from the Health Service drainage and Campus Lake have undergone three levels of impurity extraction and will soon be ready for analysis.

The actual analysis "takes about 30 seconds," he said. "It just takes about three months to get the material down to that (testing) stage."

The testing has been hampered by a lack of personnel to do it. Dan Carney, a graduate student in chemistry who has been conducting the tests, said the Environmental Protection Agency can run the test within several days, but a lack of facilities and shortage of staff make the procedure very difficult for the SIU laboratory to carry out quickly.

"The Health Service drainage ditch enters Campus Lake about as far from the beach as you can get," Meister said. Although PCB can pose a danger to humans through skin contact, Meister said that swimmers in Campus Lake are almost certainly safe.

PCB contamination is not indigenous to Southern Illinois. There are now 500 million pounds of PCB either in use or in landfills in the United States. The EPA has found "extremely high levels" all across the country, including the Hudson River, the Great Lakes region and even the Yukon River in Alaska.

Meister said the silt in Waukegan Harbor near Chicago was found to be "24 percent pure PCB."

Polychlorinated biphenyls were first used in 1929 as an insulating medium that wouldn't burst into flames at high temperatures. They were used in most capacitors, some transformers, air conditioners, fluorescent light fixtures and even carbon paper.

In 1971, after the substance was found to be highly toxic it was restricted to closed systems such as the Health Service transformer (which accidentally became an opened system in 1976).

The Food and Drug Administration considers five parts PCB per million environmentally safe, though Canada allows only 2 ppm.

Fish caught in Lake Michigan have been found to have up to 165 ppm PCB.

Besides its biological toxicity, Meister said PCB is also a "political pollutant."

"PCB is the current crisis or fad. With so much focus on a single black hat," Meister said, "other environmental problems are easily overlooked."

There's a tendency among the media, the government and other organizations to "find a bad guy, jump all over him and beat him up in order to look good."

Iran to close gulf if U.S. mines ports

By The Associated Press

Iran threatened Thursday to cut off the West's vital Persian Gulf oil lifeline if the United States mines Iranian ports.

"We shall close the Persian Gulf at any price," Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said in an interview with Iranian radio and television.

He did not say just how the Iranians might try to halt the supertanker traffic out of the gulf, which accounts for some 60 percent of all world oil exports. But if they succeeded, it would abruptly cut off 10 percent of the United States' oil, and higher proportions for Western Europe and Japan.

The threat came as the Iranians edged closer to the Soviet Union economically in the face of growing Western pressure to win the freedom of the U.S. Embassy hostages.

Boatlift brings Cuban refugees to U.S.

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — The "freedom float" flotilla brought hundreds more refugees from Cuba to the United States on Thursday, as the State Department insisted it would enforce immigration laws against defiant boat owners.

One immigration official said boat owners could be fined or charged with smuggling.

About 120 refugees arrived here at noon, bringing to nearly 1,200 the number who have landed since Sunday, when Cuban President Fidel Castro told exiles in Florida they could pick up relatives at the port of Mariel, gateway for the boatlift.

On Wednesday, Castro's government expanded his boatlift offer, saying anyone who wanted to leave Cuba could go to Mariel. For each relative picked up, exiles reportedly must take four other refugees.

Hunt deal prompts House complaint

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Paul A. Volcker, helped arrange up to $800 million in credit for the billionaire Hunt brothers of Texas to help them pay their silver speculating debts, it was learned Thursday.

Meanwhile, the chairman of the House Banking Committee accused the board of appearing to violate its own credit restraint directives through its involvement in the transaction.

A government source, who did not want to be identified, said Volcker gave his approval to the line of credit from private banks in late March because of concern that the financial problems of Nelson Bunker Hunt and William Herbert Hunt placed some brokerage houses and banks in potential jeopardy.

Volcker's approval apparently was deemed necessary because the board had announced rigid restraints on credit sought for speculative purposes two weeks earlier, on March 14.

Moy responds to Med School survey

Editor's note: The following letter was written by Richard Moy, dean and provost of the SIU Medical School, and sent to faculty, students, residents and staff there. The letter is in response to a survey published by Private Practice, a physician's journal, that ranked SIU's Medical School as one of the worst in the country.

Recent newspaper articles have given publicity to an alleged ranking of medical schools. While the ranking itself is actually silly and irrelevant, the publicity has been troublesome for a number of people. I would like to share with you the background of these events and the proper interpretation of them.

Several months ago a giveaway magazine sent to some deans and associate deans of the American medical schools (not all) a request for them to rank the medical schools in the United States by whatever criteria they thought were important. I am pleased that 80 percent of my colleagues joined me in throwing the request in the wastebasket. Several weeks later, John Cooper, President of the Association of American Medical Colleges, included in his regular letter to the deans the hope that no one had bothered to answer such a meaningless and unscientific request. Apparently, however, about 20 percent of the administrators did respond, possibly representing as few as 20 of the 126 operating medical schools in the United States. I am told that the magazine at that point was not quite sure what to do with such a spotty response, since it was clearly an unreliable sampling of opinions.

A writer by the name of Dan Greenberg, knowing about the survey and the results collected, wrote an article for the Washington Post approximately a month ago, mainly condemning John Cooper for what he interpreted to be a coverup because of Cooper's advice to the deans not to answer. This article apparently stimulated several newspapers to contact the magazine that had done the survey, which in its March, 1980 issue, has published not the survey but rather reprinted Greenberg's article from the Washington Post. The magazine, in an incomplete summary, acknowledging awareness of defects of the survey, nonetheless gave out the apparent results to the newspapers which have inquired. The results are of interest in that at the top are a group of medical schools who share the same characteristics of being old, private, heavily endowed and with a very large research profile. At the bottom, is an interesting mix of new, particularly community-based medical schools, minority schools, and schools affiliated with Catholic universities. It would certainly appear that the 20 percent who responded were traditionalists in medical education and among the many criteria by which medical schools can be judged they looked predominantly at traditional and research expectations.

To those of us who have been involved with this medical school over the past ten years and for some of us who have related to other new medical schools during this time, it is obvious that many innovations that we have been involved with have caused a great deal of anxiety to traditionalists in medical education. Among these are the three-year curriculum, placing education and service at a higher priority than research, being community-based, having split campuses, emphasizing family practice and devising and implementing a variety of much needed curricular reforms.

Obviously our school has been involved with almost all of these changes which some traditionalists have found troublesome. In addition, since for three years I was president of the group of deans of New and Developing Community-Based Medical Schools, this gave the SIU School of Medicine a very high national visibility in supporting and advocating these innovations. It is not a stretch of the imagination to assume that a small group of traditionalists, who would be sufficiently uncritical as to answer a totally unscientific survey might, in addition, vote their prejudices.

Quite obviously the SIU School of Medicine is an excellent medical school and probably the most successful community-based medical school in the United States. For those who are knowledgeable concerning dedication to excellence in the process of medical education, SIU should probably rank number one. Certainly being the first medical school in the United States to publish a complete set of the goals and objectives of the M.D. degree would so indicate.

There is obviously no official ranking of medical schools. Since there is such a broad spectrum of schools with differing mandates, one would have to separate them into appropriate subgroups. The guardian of excellence however is the accreditation process. Beginning with the first class we graduated, the School of Medicine has been fully accredited. We are currently in a four-year span of accreditation, which is excellent for a new school. If one looks at external standards of comparison such as National Board Examinations, licensure examinations, specialty boards, and our residency follow-up program, the results show that our students are consistently above average when compared to the graduates of other medical schools. This is rather notable when you consider that we do in three years what takes the rest of them four. In our most recent match, 68 percent of our graduating students got their first choice and 80 percent got their first or second. This is above the national average and clearly shows that the "buyers" are interested in our product.

This whole episode is being vigorously condemned by the Association of American Medical Colleges and by many academic leaders, including deans of the so-called "top ten" and for those who really want to know, the truth will be obvious.

Some good journalism, but...

I am writing in regard to the "Focus" on drugs in the April 18 Daily Egyptian. Let me say at the outset that I believe it was a very worthwhile and well-done piece of journalism. I would, however, like to correct a few factual errors which it contained.

It is not true that every brand of aspirin except Bayer contains caffeine. I don't know of any brand of aspirin sold as aspirin which contains caffeine — Bufferin doesn't. St. Joseph's doesn't, etc. It is the so-called "combination of ingredients" preparations such as Anacin and Excedrin which contain caffeine.

Until recently Excedrin PM contained methaphyrilene — the same drug in the same dose as Somnux sleeping tablets. This may have been taken out now because it may cause cancer. In any case, Excedrin PM is not just Excedrin with the caffeine left out.

Cocaine use does not cause deviated septums. Getting punched in the nose may cause a deviated septum (I got one that way many years ago) or you can be born with one. What cocaine use can cause is an ulcerated or even perforated septum — in which the septum separating the two nostrils of your nose has an open sore or even a hole through from one nostril to the other. This effect is mentioned in a lot of the earlier writings about cocaine, but it is very rarely seen today. I have known hundreds of long-term cocaine users and have never seen a single case of this problem. When it does happen it is only after many years, not after a few months. A few months of cocaine use will result in a runny sore nose but nothing worse.

You do not kill 2,000 brain cells every time you get drunk — doesn't that make you feel better? Alcohol certainly can kill brain cells if it is injected into them. But drinking it won't kill brain cells no matter what your mama, your third-grade teacher or your high school coach may have told you. Of course, if you drink enough to make your heart stop or your breathing stop, the brain cells will start dying right along with the rest of you.

The brain damage which is seen in alcoholics is not due to alcohol killing brain cells but to malnutrition. Alcohol is high in calories so it makes you lose your appetite if you drink much, but it has no nutritional value. If alcoholics ate a proper balanced diet despite their drinking, they could die of cirrhosis, throat cancer or whatever with their brain completely intact.

Of course, there are lots of other reasons why you shouldn't get drunk — vomiting, falling down a lot, getting arrested, impotence, hangovers and just being obnoxious to be around, for instance.

Again, congratulations on some good journalism on a worthwhile topic. — David F. Duncan, Associate Professor, Health Education

Not the time for games

Mark Pabich's "Sports on Tap" column in April 17's DE nauseated me. The current Olympic situation is not a "show of power by nation," but a protest of injustice.

Are we to idle away our time playing games (because if the Olympiad is not the political structure Mr. Pabich supposes it to be, that's all it is...a series of games), while the Soviets thumb their noses at the very ideal of democracy? It seems to me that those persons who oppose the U.S. boycott are taking a pretty selfish position, on the issue. Answer a couple of questions for me, will you, Mark?

—Is U.S. participation in the '80 Olympics more important than use of the boycott as an initial means of dealing with the Afghanistan crisis?

—Are the U.S. Olympic team members athletes first and citizens second?

Mr. Pabich, the world is tottering on the brink of another global conflict. This is not time to be playing games.

Botany researchers study strip-mine reclamation

By Diana Penner
Staff Writer

Strip-mine, the process of removing and displacing soil and rock above a substance to be mined, became the target of much protest by the environmentally oriented in the ecology movement of the late 60s and early 70s.

This process has resulted in huge strip-mine pits and large areas of crevices and slopes vulnerable to erosion. Often the land cannot support plant growth and seems devoid of life.

Public pressure to curb pollution and harmful disturbances to natural areas resulting from the industry operation, such as strip-mining, lead to local, state and federal legislation designed to protect the environment.

Federal legislation now requires companies to submit reclamation plans along with mining permit requests. But many questions remain regarding the best ways to mine and the most effective reclamation procedures.

Researchers in the Botany Department at SIU-C have been conducting studies for several years in attempts to answer some of these questions.

Clark Ashby, professor of botany, has been studying reclamation of strip-mines in the Southern Illinois area since the early 1960s. Since about 1975, Ashby has been working with graduate and research assistants planting various species of trees on sites mined in different ways.

The focus of the studies is to show that mined areas must be treated individually according to the way they are mined, the type of soil and the climate and the desired outcome of the reclamation.

Clay Kolar, researcher in botany, said it is important to determine what the reclaimed area is to be used for before inflexible legislation is applied to the area. The manner in which the area was mined needs to be taken into consideration in determining what is done with the site after mining is completed. Kolar said.

Legislation now prohibits mining companies from leaving large pits or holes that can be used for swimming and fishing areas. Kolar said in some cases it might be wiser to form a deep, artificial lake from such a strip-mine pit than to create artificial lakes, such as Rend Lake and Crab Orchard Lake, which use up potential farm land.

In Ashby's studies, no material was brought in to put on top of the strip-mined land.

On some of the sites, the material above the coal that was mined was replaced in about the same order it was taken out, for example with layers of rocky soil beneath layers of topsoil.

On others, the material was replaced in a fairly mixed up manner, with topsoil and rocky soil interspersed.

In a pilot study conducted by Argonne Laboratories in Chicago, material dredged up from Illinois waterways was spread on top of strip-mine areas to determine if toxic acid runoff could be inhibited.

According to Wyman Harrison, associate director of Argonne's Energy and Environmental Systems Division, the studies showed the dredged material helped control acid runoff and supported plant life.

Kolar said such a program is not necessary in Southern Illinois because acid runoff is not a problem in this area. Kolar said material other than dredged material from waterways, such as topsoil from other land, could be put on strip-mined land to reclaim it.

Since most mined areas in Southern Illinois are not close to waterways, the project would not be practical in this area, he said.

Because trees are relatively slow-growing, results from the research will not be conclusive for several years, Ashby said. However, studies so far have indicated that deciduous species such as black walnut, sycamore and red oak appear to grow fairly well on reclaimed land.

The key factor of how well the trees survive on the lands will be shown with time, Ashby said.

The research is funded through grants from mining companies, the Illinois Office of Surface Mining, the University and other state and federal agencies.

36 faculty leaves granted for next fall

By Chuck Hempstead
Staff Writer

Thirty-six of about 75 faculty sabbatical requests for the 1980-81 school year have been granted, with the remainder to be announced later this month, according to James Tweedy, assistant vice president for academic affairs.

Sabbaticals offer faculty members the opportunity to write, conduct research, travel and participate in advanced study in their field while being released from campus responsibilities for 4½ months at full pay or for a full year at half pay.

Requirements for obtaining a sabbatical include at least six years of teaching at the University, a promise to return to the University for at least one year and submission of a sabbatical application detailing the purpose and potential benefits of the leave.

Tweedy said the recommended form of the sabbatical proposal, which must be approved by the department chair, dean, and vice president for academic affairs, includes the nature of the sabbatical, the rationale for the leave, the length of the leave, the benefit to the instructor and the advantage to the faculty member's department.

Edward McGlone, chairman of the Speech Communication Department, said, "At one time, sabbaticals were considered a right. Now it's a privilege. At some institutions, they have eliminated sabbaticals."

One assistant professor in McGlone's department, Mary Lou McCauliff, will spend the spring semester of 1981 observing the training programs of corporations to increase her proficiency in management training. McCauliff's sabbatical proposal states that corporate contacts could lead to sources for internships or employment for students.

"The evidence suggests that communication skill is the single most important asset to effective management," McCauliff said of her sabbatical proposal. "I plan to use video recorders so managers can see their weaknesses and strengths."

C.B. Hunt Jr., dean of the College of Communications and Fine Arts, said that in addition to the previously mentioned criteria for sabbaticals, he evaluates whether the individual department can get by without the instructor. "No funds are available to replace the faculty member," Hunt said, "and we are not going to eliminate the courses taught by the instructors. The other members of the department have to fill in."

Deans submit their recommendations to the vice president for academic affairs, now John Guyon, who is temporarily filling the position recently vacated by Frank Horton.

Horton said not many requests are denied at his level. "We depend on the deans," Horton said. "If a proposal is too incomplete for us to understand the purpose of the sabbatical, we kick it back for additional information. Some proposals were excellent but they were so brief we couldn't tell what they were going to do."

Tweedy said that he could not recall any requests that have been denied at the vice presidential level since he began working there in 1974.

Another faculty member approved for sabbatical next year is Lawrence Dennis, professor of educational leadership. His leave is during the fall semester next year and he plans to finish one book and start another on the philosophy of education.

Although Dennis appreciates the time off, he points to the fact that SIU-E faculty receive sabbaticals of six months at full pay because they are on the quarter system, rather than semesters.

"When we changed from quarters to semesters in 1974, the faculty were promised that they would not lose any benefits," Dennis said, "but there is not much that can be done about it."

Two arrested for allegedly beating man

A 20-year-old Carbondale man was beaten early Thursday morning after he refused to hand over money to two men who approached him as he walked out of Gatsby's, according to Carbondale police. Gary A. Weiss, 20, of 610 E. College, received bruises, lacerations and was found by police clad only in his underwear after two Riverdale men beat him when he refused to give them $1, police said.

David T. W. e. 25, of 14044 School St., and John L. Cross Jr., 24, of 13802 Wentworth, were arrested on charges of aggravated battery at about 1 a.m. after they fled from police who saw the two running after Weiss on South Illinois Avenue. Police said the two also attempted to throw Weiss through the front window of the Trophy Shop at 600 S. Illinois Ave.

White and Cross were in the Jackson County Jail early Thursday afternoon pending a bond hearing.

Campus Briefs

The three-time national champion "Flying Salukis" will sponsor "Aviation Safety Day" at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Flight Training Headquarters at the Southern Illinois Airport. The safety clinic is being conducted with the help of the FAA General Aviation District Office and the state's Department of Aeronautics.

Students for Completion of the Rec Center are holding a petition drive in the Recreation Building and the Student Center Friday.

The Orienteering Club will have a clinic at 1 p.m. Friday at the playing fields across from the Recreation Building in conjunction with the Earth Week activities. The club will also provide rides at noon Sunday at the Student Center to orienteer at Devil's Kitchen Spillway.

John A. Logan College will offer a 40-hour first responder crash injury management course from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. beginning Tuesday at the Carterville campus. The objective of the course is to train persons in providing emergency care to accident victims prior to the arrival of trained medical personnel.

Vienna Center's staff offers inmates a choice

By Robin Saponar
Staff Writer

Trust and responsibility are important values. They serve as security measures in the Vienna Correctional Center.

The VCC is the largest minimum security prison in the nation, housing about 700 residents. The 3,500-acre facility is located about 50 miles southeast of Carbondale, bordering the Shawnee National Forest.

Warden Larry W. Mizell said the prison runs smoothly because of a combined effort by staff and residents. The staff trusts the residents to take on the responsibility of working or taking classes.

"We don't hand them jobs like dictators. They have an option to select, we simply require a selection. We trust that they'll do that," he said. "We don't march them to meals, they have an option to eat. We have as much of a real world atmosphere as we can, yet it's still a prison."

He explained that part of the security is a mental restraint the residents place upon themselves.

"Part of the wall is in their heads," he said. "They think that if they screw up here, they'll have to go back to a maximum security prison."

Educational classes offered range from remedial reading and math classes to college courses in all academic areas for various degrees.

Chester Lawrence, clinical services supervisor, said the programs are essential to the residents' rehabilitation.

"We feel the only way to control the population is through programs in education, vocation or recreation," he said. "If the guys are busy and tired at night, they're not into creating problems."

"Guys either work or go to school or they don't stay at Vienna," Lawrence said. "They may enter a program to get out of doing something, but in the end they accomplish something, learn something."

Vocational classes include training in office machine repairs, food services, automotive mechanics, welding, emergency medical technology and others.

The vocational program is operated by an "open entry, open exit" method. This allows residents to work at their own pace. Every two weeks there is an entry period which lets a resident enter the program, Lawrence said.

He said they try to keep the programs up to date, so the residents can use their skills when they are released.

"In every program we have we want the guy to have a saleable skill. If they aren't saleable, we'll change the class," he said. "As times change we've got to have different programs to cater to the times."

John Goodman, a 32-year-old resident, has been taking classes in drafting technology for nine months. He said he's thinks he's too old to obtain a job in the field.

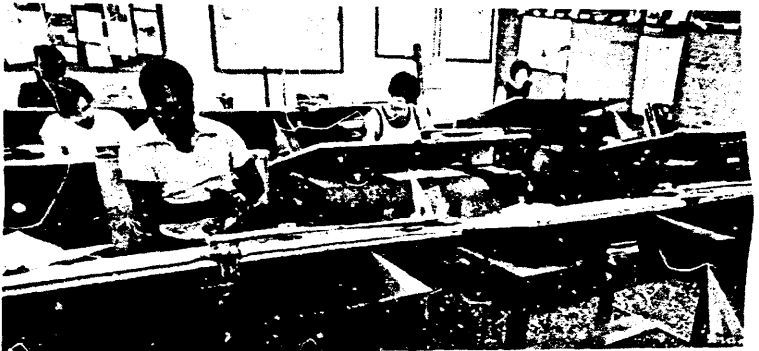

"I ain't got too much time left. I just take classes and mess around with it," he said. "I like this drafting more than academics. For a higher education you can't really get it here, you got to get it on the outside."

The House of Glass is a minimum security facility designed to give inmates who are within six months of release from state institutions educational or employment opportunities.

By Karen Clare
News Editor

He glances nervously at the black and white TV placed obtrusively on a bookshelf of paperbacks, then quickly at me. His light blue eyes wander from me to the set and he seems disinterested in the conversation and my inquiry. I comment on his southern accent and he smiles as he remembers a Kentucky childhood.

Dwayne Asberry is a resident of the Southern Illinois Community Correctional Center, 805 W. Freeman. The Center offers inmates who are within six months of release from state correctional institutions a chance to participate in educational or employment programs.

Asberry works at Freeman Dormitory as a dishwasher. The job doesn't pay much—$3.10 an hour—but he says that's not too important to him. The key to the Center's reintegration program is the freedom inmates are given to work or study in the free community.

Howard W. Saver, the supervisor at the House of Glass, said the Center is one of 11 in the state which helps ex-convicts make the transition from prison to society.

Saver, who has been at the Center since 1976, said that through employment, other problems the inmates have may be resolved. Family relations, drug and alcohol problems are all important, but through meaningful employment, the ex-offender has a base on which to grow.

One work release program deficiency Saver cited is that good job opportunities in Southern Illinois are few and far between. The pay scales are low and the work often calls for unskilled labor.

Another problem the ex-convict encounters is that he moves through the correctional system too quickly to accomplish any meaningful career goals which could help him find a job when he is set free.

After his discharge, the ex-convict is often right back where he started, with no formal training to help him in his return to the free community.

Asberry, 20, has been a resident at the Center for about two months. "The whole time I've been here it has been a real nice place," he said. Asberry was incarcerated in Vandalia Correctional Center, a medium security prison, before his transfer to the House of Glass.

He was convicted of deceptive practice—"I wrote some bad checks," he explained. When he is released, he plans to return home to Carmi, Ill., and find employment working in the oil fields.

There are currently 33 residents living at the Center, which can house up to 40 inmates.

Nineteen people are on the staff, which Saver said is very stable and conducive to the success of the program. The ratio of staff to residents is almost 2 to 1, he said.

Saver said the Center is financed through the Illinois Department of Corrections. The current appropriation for the program is $453,000, but the cost varies from year to year. The appropriation covers everything from staff salaries to the maintenance of the vehicles used to get the inmates to and from their work places.

The Illinois Department of Corrections Annual Report for Fiscal Year 1979 reports that inmates from all the correctional centers in the state paid $266,457 for room and board, $122,163 in family support and $207,271 in state and federal taxes. The average per person per year was $1,422. This money eventually trickles back down into the community as it is distributed in various forms, such as tax returns, to the taxpayer.

Instructor says inmates proud of passing courses in prison

By Robin Saponar
Staff Writer

For many students passing a college course is not a major achievement. But for inmates enrolled in college courses in prisons, passing a course can be a major accomplishment.

"Many inmates have told me taking a university course and passing is the first positive thing in their lives that they can be proud of," Charles A. Helwig, English instructor, said. "The larger number that I've dealt with came into the world with two strikes against them. They were in and out of foster homes or correctional centers."

Helwig has taught English courses to inmates at Menard Correctional Center, the U.S. Penitentiary in Marion and Vienna Correctional Center. He started the programs at Marion and Vienna 16 years ago.

The educational program began at Menard in 1956 as an effort to improve the prison's news paper.

"The first class taught at Menard was a journalism class," Helwig said. "The warden was interested in upgrading the quality of the Menard Times. That was the reason it (the course) started."

Helwig said there is no difference between the quality of education the prisoners receive and the quality of education college students get.

"The program is identically the same as on campus," he said. "Classes meet once a week. But we get in the same number of hours per meeting."

An attempt was made to utilize closed-circuit television as an educational supplement. This method didn't prove to be very successful.

"Men would sign up for this class. Then they wouldn't participate in a class where they wouldn't have an instructor there with them," Helwig said. "Men don't have contact with outside society. They want the contact with outside people."

"Personal contact is one part of the success," he continued. "We represent a link that is not part of the authorities at the prisons."

Helwig said that the easiest transition for a parolee to make is from a prison or correctional center to a college.

"I have found that if a person comes directly from an institution to a campus and gets involved with the academic community, the transition is fantastic," he said. "Students are not really concerned with a person's background. Neighbors don't need to know someone's pedigree from year one to let him belong."

He said that the transition is not as positive for those who are released and allow a break before they attend school.

He has kept correspondence with many of his former students and said "to my personal knowledge, I could give you a list longer than your arm" about the positive progress of the former inmates.

"I know at least six or eight men who started with the GED (high school equivalency test) and have now completed their doctoral degrees," he said. "I've totally lost count of the men who started with us and now have received master's degrees."

Helwig said he became "very involved" in teaching courses at the institutions and set out to structure the program.

"Before there was no continuity. They were taking 300 and 400 level classes without general studies," he said. "After I started sequencing the courses, a full four-year degree was available to them."

Camp challenge for troubled teens

By Cindy Calvin
Student Writer

Some people may find it pleasurable to spend 30 days in the wilderness, camping, hiking and canoeing.

For the youths that complete the Stress Challenge Program, this is not the case.

Mark Hileman, project coordinator for Stress Challenge, a delinquency intervention program, said many people don't realize just how hard the program is.

"Spending 30 days in the wilderness is not a vacation or summer camp, especially for those kids who turn to the program as a last chance to stay out of an institution," he said.

The Stress Challenge Program is located at the Touch of Nature Environmental Center in Carbondale. It is designed for adolescents and young adults who are having trouble with school, their family, their community, or the law.

Not all of the youths are termed "juvenile delinquents." In fact, some kids have not been in any trouble with the law or with the courts.

Stress Challenge is divided into four parts: Immersion, Expedition, Transition and a Follow-up period.

Hileman said that Immersion

Leaders of inmate subcultures said to be in control of prisons

By Dean Athans
Staff Writer

Many people say wardens and guards control a prison, but some criminologists, penologists and administrators say otherwise.

Elmer Johnson, SIU-C professor at the Center for Crime, Delinquency, and Corrections, says there is a strong, inmate subculture in many prisons. "It depends on the nature of the prison," he said. "In a 'quiet joint,' usually a maximum security prison where the administration does not let inmates participate in decision making, the inmate leaders may have a great amount of control. Some of their methods (of control) are often very frightening," he said.

Ron Beal, the public information officer at what he calls "the most secure federal penitentiary" in the prison system, said in early March that the prison administration at the U.S. Penitentiary in Marion is not controlled by inmates. Two weeks after the interview, the prison's inmates staged the longest work strike in the prison's 17-year history, lasting a total of 23 days.

But Marion's situation is uncommon. There is tight control with nearly one staff member for every one of the 400 prisoners there. The prisoners' average sentence is 30 to 35 years and Beal calls them "sophisticated criminal types."

The demands which prompted the work stoppage—the prison's third since June—were included better conditions in the prison, the creation of an inmate council, and the discontinuation of segregation and control unit cells, which supposedly are used for "sensory deprivation," according to inmate support groups in Carbondale and St. Louis.

Also, 64 strike "leaders" were placed in the segregation unit during the work stoppage. Beal described the inmate leaders as self-serving and "never on the side of the institution."

"They apply pressure to people," he said. "They strong-arm other inmates for anything from money to cigarettes. That's why most of our contraband is created. The inmates have to make homemade knives to protect themselves from assault."

Johnson said institutions where inmates have control "also tend to have well-run rackets. You have gambling, homosexual prostitution and drugs. There is peace to run things," he said.

While these problems probably don't exist at Marion, inmate control has created them in other prisons, and every institution has the potential for such difficulties.

A former SIU criminology instructor, Tom Murton, after

Marion prison epitome of isolation

By Dean Athans
Staff Writer

As you drive to the U.S. Penitentiary in Marion, south on Route 148, you discover what isolation is. The prison, built on a 900-acre forest preserve, is really in "the middle of nowhere." As it probably should be, you think.

As you approach it you pass a small white church and a school bus letting tiny children off in front of a driveway leading to a postcard farmhouse. When you round the curve and hit the crest of the hill, the five-story prison towers stand all around you, their dark-green glass hiding those inside. You pull up to the speaker on a deserted circle drive, roll down the window and hear nothing. You are astounded by the quiet of the place. Though massive, concrete and menacing, it is silent. You see no one — anywhere.

The speaker crackles on and a voice mumbles a question asking you if you have drugs, weapons or contraband of any kind. You say no.

You drive to what you assume to be the administration building — the only one outside the two 15-foot-high barbed-wire fences.

The barred windows of the compound inside are just thin slats from far away and you see no one behind them, and no one outside walking.

As you enter the administration building a man in a blue jacket watches you walk toward him, through a metal detector, to his desk. He does not say hello.

He asks who you are. You tell

Pre-trial wait in jail examined

By Dave Powers

Associate Editorial Page Editor

More than two months have passed since 33-year-old Ray Gardner was arrested for the attempted armed robbery of a gas station in rural Jackson County. An alert passing motorist contacted the sheriff's office, ending Gardner's first try at big-time crime before it even got started.

Although the worst was yet to come the pre-trial hearing about to start seemed almost pleasant compared to the humiliating, degrading experience of arrest, booking and five nights in the Jackson County Jail.

Gardner's mind could not help but drift back to the night his life took such an unexpected turn.

The handcuffs made his wrists ache as he rode the tiny, ancient elevator from the first-floor sheriff's office to the second-floor jail. The cold stare of the deputy who arrested him and accompanied him in the elevator made Gardner dread the cold, mechanical reception he expected to receive from the jailer.

Bright glaring light burst upon the deputy and his charge as the elevator door opened into the booking area. Gardner squinted, bringing into focus the bare, gray floor and walls that would become all too familiar in the next several days.

With the mechanical accuracy that comes with repetition, jailer Brady Buckley began the paperwork of the booking process.

"Address? Date of birth? Place of birth? Social security number? What's your state of health? Are you taking any prescription drugs? Have any drug dependencies?"

Gardner mumbled the answers, wondering at the purpose of the questions. Buckley must have read his mind, for he offered an unsolicited explanation.

"We don't want you getting sick on us, so if you're taking any kind of prescription drugs we can get a doctor to verify it and get what you need from a local druggist."

"This is for your own health, so if you have any dependencies or think you might have withdrawal symptoms later, let us know now so we can be prepared."

Removing the handcuffs, Buckley directed Gardner to empty his pockets and remove his belt.

"Put everything on the desk and put your hands on your head," the jailer told Gardner before frisking him.

Buckley took an inventory sheet from a drawer of the nearby rickety wooden desk and listed Gardner's belongings. After Gardner signed the inventory sheet, the $23 in his billfold was placed in a smaller envelope. Both manila envelopes were labeled "Gardner" with a laundry marker and locked in the gun room.

The jailer disappeared into a nearby closet while the deputy stood near Gardner. He soon returned with a towel and a drab gray prison garb, complete with cloth shoes.

Gardner was led down a short, narrow hallway to a small gray door.

"Just want to make sure you're not bringing anything into my nice clean jail," Buckley quipped, opening the door to a small shower.

The stark, red tiles of the shower were a sharp contrast to the grayness just outside the door. Only a few minutes passed before Buckley tapped on the shower room door.

Now dressed in the prison uniform, a docile Gardner followed the jailer to a small shelf near the wooden desk for fingerprinting. Gardner felt helpless as Buckley firmly pressed his fingers on the ink pad, then on the paper.

Three quick Polaroid photos later, Gardner found himself carrying a flimsy mattress, a wool blanket and a pillow down a narrow inner corridor in front of the cells. Prisoners were few, so Gardner had the six-by-eight foot cell to himself. The snoring of the prisoners scattered among the cells was the only audible sound, and the outline of an unadorned, ceramic commode near the center of the cell the only thing visible in the darkness.

In the next four days and nights, every snore, every yawn and every slam of the steel doors would become all too familiar to Gardner.

Writer describes wait in Jackson County jail

Breakfast arrived promptly at 6 a.m. each morning, lunch at 11:30 sharp and dinner at 5 p.m. Gardner was surprised when, after asking for an after-dinner cigarette, he was given tobacco and rolling papers and told to twist his own.

The four days passed slowly, the only diversion being a portable black-and-white 9-inch screen television on the window ledge in the outside corridor at least 10 feet from the cells. Although allowed to shower daily, Gardner had yet to brush his teeth since toilet items aren't provided until a bond hearing shows that the prisoner will be around more than a week. Family or friends aren't allowed to bring in such items for fear they might smuggle some unauthorized substance to the prisoner.

Gardner would just have to let the wheels of justice turn at their own pace before he would see the outside and experience its taken-for-granted comforts again.

"The law says you have to get bond set without any unnecessary delay," Chief Deputy Woodrow Procnier said.

"But if a man is arrested after regular business hours or on a weekend, he has to stay in custody until the state's attorney can review the evidence and decide on the charges."

"It usually takes about two working days for the states attorney to process the paperwork."

Gardner was arrested on Friday night and didn't leave the jail until the following Wednesday morning, when he went before a circuit court judge. The judge set bond and appointed defense counsel since Gardner's financial situation precluded his hiring of a lawyer.

The $15,000 bond set that Wednesday was relatively low for such cases, Gardner's public defender Dennis Waks said.

"Setting bond is purely a judgment call," Waks said. "Questions about the prisoner's personal life, his income, previous record, even where he lives can influence the judge's decision."

Being a Jackson County resident, married, two young children and no previous felony record—all this played in Gardner's favor. By Illinois law he had only to raise 10 percent of the $15,000, or $1,500, to be freed.

But those humiliating days and nights in the Jackson County Jail will not easily be forgotten. To the inexperienced criminal such as Gardner, jail represents a significant deterrent to further crime.

Vienna Correctional Center teaching vocational skills

"This gets you on the right track. Whatever they offer, you can learn a lot," Goodman said. "A guy has to apply himself real tough. In other prisons you got other problems to deal with."

VCC is sometimes called a "country club" because of the security measures used and the facilities available. Lawrence disagrees with this label.

"People call it a country club. Yet if we change one guy's life because he plays tennis in his spare time instead of having nothing to do, I think we've served our purpose," he said. "And I think we've changed more lives than that."

Lawrence said people have an incorrect belief about the residents.

"There's not necessarily something wrong with these people. They've made a mistake. I could have made a mistake too," he said. "We try to teach the guys a new lifestyle. If the majority of these guys grew up in different backgrounds they might have a different set of values."

He said that some of the residents never learned how to handle money. They never had a checking account or a budget and carried all their money in their pockets. One program now available to residents is consumer education.

Some of the recreational facilities provided are basketball, swimming, pool, fishing, softball, horseshoes, weightlifting, track and field, tennis, football, and bingo. The residents range in age from 17 to 84 years old.

Each resident has his own room, which includes a bed, mattress, desk, chair and a rack to hang clothes on.

The philosophy at VCC is that people will usually live up to the expectations already set up for them.

"If you expect them to act like animals, they will," he said. "If you expect them to act like human beings, they will."

Program stresses innovation for rehabilitation counselors

By Craig DeVrieze
Staff Writer

Innovation is an important factor in correctional rehabilitative counseling that cannot be taught. But it is a process that is stressed to prospective counselors by the SIU-C Rehabilitation Counselor Training Program.

"When the students get out in the institutions we encourage them to innovate programs and test how well they work out," John Grenfell, a professor of rehabilitation, said.

The counselor training program encompasses all types of rehabilitative counseling. One-third of the program concentrates on correctional rehabilitation, which includes counseling for adult and juvenile offenders as well as alcohol and drug abusers.

This part of the graduate-oriented program currently consists of about 18 students. Half of the 45-hour program is made up of core courses which concentrate on over-all counseling techniques. A number of seminars are offered for students who choose to specialize in correctional rehabilitation.

A central aspect of the program is working in the field. Students travel to area institutions like Menard, Vienna, Dixon Springs and Marion, where they work within the counseling programs and gain hands-on experience.

Students may do a practicum, which consists of working seven hours each week at these institutions. They are all required to work an internship at these prisons working 40 hours a week.

"Our emphasis is on reintegration," Grenfell said. "This type of counseling is meant to teach convicts how not to commit crimes."

He said reintegrative counseling includes showing ex-convicts how criminal behavior such as the over-use of drugs and alcohol and getting into debt can lead to them to commit more serious crimes.

"It teaches the importance of living within their income," he said.

Reintegration includes teaching job skills, how to get a job, how to keep one and other things that will help the convict live in the outside world.

"The important issue is to get the person to realize that if a man doesn't use the resources available to him he will end up back in jail," he said.

Another thing the rehabilitative program attempts to teach prospective counselors is how to recognize who can and can't be helped.

Grenfell said that there are basically three types of prisoners to look for; those who want to be helped, those who take advantage of the programs to gain their release and those who want to do their time and be left alone.

"We emphasize to students that they should work with the ones they can best help and who want to be helped. We try to make them aware of those who are working for their own betterment as opposed to those who are trying to con them in order to get out," he said.

The counseling program also attempts to show students the kinds of counseling techniques that have been used in the field.

"We try to show the varieties of programs that have been tried across the country," he said.

Grenfell added that the program is vocationally designed to help students to get jobs.

Howard Saver is the director of the Southern Illinois Community Correctional Center in Carbondale. He earned a master's degree in the counseling program 10 years ago and said that background was essential in his landing a job.

"The program is very real-world oriented. It helped me get a job in the field," Saver said.

Inmate leaders may 'run' prisons

being fired from SIU in the early '60s, took over two prison farms for the Arkansas state prison system. In trying to correct the "torture and brutality" he said he saw there, Murton stumbled upon one of the strongest internal inmate systems ever.

When Murton first took over the Tucker Prison Farm, he said he found it on the verge of riot. The "trusted" inmates served as armed guards over the work details of the lower classes of prisoners, he said. By the time Tucker was ready to erupt, Murton said many of the 400 inmates were armed with guns and all of them with knives. He said "order" was being maintained by 13 state troopers.

Murton soon discovered that the inmates were angered over the treatment they had received under a previous warden. He said the previous prison staff had granted "privileges" — such as the freedom to run gambling and other illegal rackets — to the "trustee" prisoners in return for their cooperation in keeping order through enforcing discipline with torture and violence.

Murton said he had to have the inmates' approval before he could take control. But over a period of a few months — after doing away with corporal punishment and improving living conditions — he began to break apart the rackets, which also cut down the violence and assaults associated with them.

"The homosexual situation was particularly bad at Arkansas," Murton said in a 1970 magazine interview. "There was no single-cell confinement. At Tucker there were 100 to 150 men in each barracks. Homosexual attacks were a real problem. I realized the prison staff couldn't handle the problem."

I turned to the major source of change in the prison — the inmate power structure. I took a man by the name of Chainsaw Jack, who was serving life for cutting a man's head off with a saw for making homosexual advances to him. He obviously had a useful hang-up."

Murton put him in charge of the barracks and the incidence of rape dropped. Murton set up inmate elections at Tucker, and, to his surprise, the previous inmate leaders were not elected. These new inmate "officials" were given some responsibility for what may have been the first time in their lives, and the prison flourished.

Murton then ran into a coverup when the state sent him to the larger Cummins Prison Farm. He took one other person along — Chainsaw Jack — to help him gain control of the even stronger internal inmate structure. The two began cleaning up the prison the same way they had at Tucker until January of 1968 when workers discovered buried bodies in the levee behind the prison. He was fired when he charged that the bodies were of prisoners who died during the previous administration's tenure.

Though the Arkansas

example is an extreme one, prisons have been and probably always will be volatile within while appearing outwardly as if everything were running smoothly. Johnson explains why: "The reason a prison is potentially a danger is because of the type of men in them — they're criminals. But not just criminals," he said. "They are the unsuccessful ones, the good ones aren't in prison. They either don't get caught at all or have good lawyers and get off," he said, "but the inmates who are in prison are inept and ignorant criminals."

Beai said the average inmate at Marion is "no beginner" but agreed that they lacked one skill overall that may prove a certain degree of ineptitude — the skill to not get caught.

him you have an appointment and you are told to wait "over there" on the couch in the entrance, across from a line of wardens' portraits.

The thick bars, covered by plexiglass, that the man at the desk controls, slide open slowly and two men walk out — one in a green army-type uniform and the other in a blue jacket with an emblem on the pocket.

The atmosphere is nothing short of eerie. Suddenly — on the hour — people walk out of side hallways, all dressed in green baggy pants and jackets. They know you don't belong, but, unlike the men in blue jackets they smile at you. One looks like a father, understanding, a little fat; he nudges another, asking him what's going on. They look like regular guys, friends, family, people — not the caged animals you thought they'd be.

The others leave again as if waiting for something to happen. But one remains across from you. He looks happy. He has a duffel bag full of clothes and looks at the clock often. The man in the blue jacket gets up and walks out the front door. The man in the green follows, smiles, and waves to you as he leaves.

When you finally get in to talk to the man you had an appointment with you ask him how often inmates are released. "Probably every day," you say, hoping.

"We have 400 inmates," he answers, "with an average sentence of 30 years. So it's not too often. We haven't had one for quite a while."

Just then another man in green comes into the office, smiling, holding a stack of forms. He tells the man you are talking to how happy he is to be able to get authorization to use a hammer and screwdriver since he was a carpenter before he got in. He smiles at you and you nod in approval.

And as you drive home you just begin to appreciate freedom.

Johnny good with Sex Pistols, but 'rotten' in Public Images

By Bill Crowe
Entertainment Editor

In the short span of four years Johnny Rotten has evolved from the most controversial, revolutionary singer in the world to a fossil—something you might find in some secluded gully in Giant City.

Rotten and the rest of the Sex Pistols spat in the eye of the established music industry with their sneering, violent views of the world. The Pistols were an incredibly brutal musical force from 1976 to early 1978, when the band blew apart amid charges by Sid Vicious, Steve Jones and Paul Cook (the other band members) that Rotten had become a superstar—exactly what the Pistols despised.

Although the Pistols' nihilistic viewpoints never caught on with American audiences, they paved the way for the future success of such "new wavers" as the Clash, Elvis Costello and other Stiff Records recording artists such as Nick Lowe, Ian Dury, etc. Simply said, the Sex Pistols were tremendously important to the music industry of the '70s and will prove even more significant as the '80s move on.

Rotten returned to England following the Pistols' break up and formed Public Image, Ltd.

PiL, for short, which has just completed "Second Edition," its second album and first American release. If you're expecting "Second Edition" to even try to equal the Pistols' blood and guts approach to music, forget it. "Second Edition" is one long, overblown, depressing bummer.

Dropping the Johnny Rotten

A Music Review

and going back to the real name of John Lydon, the singer and his new band have packaged a myriad of sickly songs about drug addiction, rape and death in this laboriously dull two-record set.

Rotten, oops Lydon, was a great singer with the Pistols. He could command a stage with hypnotic intensity, wailing and screaming his lyrics while the crowds showered him with debris in a primal show of love rather than hate. With PiL, Lydon shifts into low gear and sounds like leper dying a slow, tortuous death.

So does the rest of the band. PiL music is predictable dreary and laden with overlong instrumental passages broken up only occasionally by Lydon's depressing, choked vocals or Keith Levene's guitar and keyboard fills. This album creates depression, paranoia and hatred rather than telling stories about it.

The band's lyrics are equal to its instrumental talents—minimal and awfully inaccessible. Only two of the nine pieces with lyrics—"Poptones" about rape and "Swan Lake" about Lydon's mother's death—are understandable. The rest are unsuccessful, befuddling attempts at avant-gardism which fall flat on their faces. What a bore.

In fact, this album's best moment comes in the instrumental "Radio 4" which closes the album out way after you've already become sick of it. "Radio 4" employs a cathedral-like use of organs and synthesizers which is a welcome relief from the muck and mire of the rest of this mess.

Typically, for this album, the first cut, "Albatross," is probably the worst. It's nothing more than a depressingly bad attempt to copy the Doors' classic "The End." "Second Edition" is not only full of trash, but exploitative, unoriginal trash at that.

Lydon recently said that PiL is what he always wanted the Sex Pistols to be. If he means that he's crazy. The Pistols was a classic band which changed the entire musical course of the '70s. It will always be remembered. PiL is awful and will be remembered—if at all—only as The Band Johnny Rotten Joined After The Pistols Broke Up.

Go back to singing "God Save The Queen," Johnny. Even though Jones and Cook, and probably Vicious, if he were still alive, won't give you the time of day.

Firefall's 'Undertow' too flowery, lacks depth, waves of excitement

By Craig DeVrieze
Staff Writer

The past few Firefall albums have been a lot like Farrah Fawcett or Cheryl Tiegs. Oh-so-very pretty, but about as deep as a fishbowl.

The major problem with the group is its leader and chief songwriter, ex-Burrito Brother Rick Roberts. Roberts consistently fills Firefall LPs with flowery lyrics, flowery vocals and flowery arrangements. Many of his songs are actually quite pleasant at the outset, but they don't stay that way long. Roberts doesn't seem to realize that even roses can smell bad after a time.

With its debut album, "Firefall," the group showed a good deal of promise. Roberts was a little less contained and his style was still fresh. But two succeeding releases, "Luna Sea" and "Elan" were pretty lifeless and got old well before their time.

Firefall's latest, "Undertow," promises to do the same.

Which is really too bad, because this is not a band without some talent. Guitarist Jock Bartley is capable of a lot more than the unsophisticated guitar parts Roberts' songs provide for him. And ex-Byrd Michael Clarke is an excellent drummer who does more musically for Firefall than a drummer rightly should.

The songwriting alternative to Roberts is Larry Burnett, an acoustic balladist who was a cabbie in New York before joining the group. Burnett is a vocalist who shades Stephen Stills ever-so-closely and his wandering, soulful vocal style makes Roberts, by comparison, seem even wimpier than it really is.

His songwriting abilities far exceed Roberts'. Burnett's forte is bitter love songs and he writes these with the best of them. (I consider his "Cinderella" a classic.)

Needless to say, his two contributions to "Undertow" are the best the album has to offer. "Business is Business" and "Only Time Will Tell" are, not surprisingly, bitter love ballads. The latter best reflects his attitude. "You thought I had something to sell you. But it wasn't the best buy in town," he laments at one point.

Roberts' efforts pale by comparison. To be fair, three acoustic songs he penned for "Undertow" are actually quite palatable. But his songs usually are. The problem is that they usually lack the depth and intricacy to keep them that way.

His best contribution is "Love That Got Away," a tune with a nice calypso rhythm and some sweet harmonies. "If You Only Knew" and "Headed For a Fall" are both pleasant enough right now, but will they stay that way?

His two attempts at rock 'n' roll are pretty sorry. Roberts tries to muscle up vocally on the title track and "Laugh or Cry" (co-written with Mark Andes) and proves what I've suspected all along. The man's got no soul. The music is incredibly heavy on these and they are anything but "rock 'n' roll."

"Laugh or Cry" and "Stardust" are both pretty inane lyrically. And speaking of inane lyrics, Bartley's one attempt at songwriting here, "Leave It Alone," features lyrics silly enough to compete with Andrew Gold's.

But Roberts' might want to pay attention to the music on that one. Bartley gives it a basic, light rocking touch which Roberts probably could never duplicate.

"Undertow" is certainly no worse or no better than "Elan" or "Luna Sea." But it suffers from the same deficiencies both of those did: pleasant but lifeless and really good only when Burnett comes to bat. The best that could happen would be for Roberts to turn his leader role over to Burnett. Only then will this potentially good band move past the cover girl stage.

Muddy has his mojo working

By Rod Smith
Staff Writer

More than 1,000 blues enthusiasts of all ages filled stately Shrivock Auditorium Wednesday for an evening with an artist who is probably the most imitated electric blues guitarist in contemporary music. McKinley Morganfield, better known as Muddy "Mississippi" Waters, 65-years-young, proved to an appreciative audience that he still "has his mojo working."

Waters' tight and talented six-piece backing band of Junior Johnson and Bob Margolin on guitars, Calvin Jones on bass, Jerry Portnoy blowing harp, Willie "Big Eyes" Smith on drums and crowd-pleasing "Pine Top" Perkins, the only member in the same age group as Muddy, on piano, opened the show with three numbers before the guest of honor took the stage.

Muddy, clad in satin shirt and vest, slowly walked to center stage and received an almost obligatory standing ovation. He acknowledged the crowd with a quick smile and a nod, and broke into the opening power chords of "Hoochie Coochie Man."

Muddy's worshippers stayed on their feet and danced and clapped through the opening number, but soon sat down to let the master of the Chicago urban blues display his fierce, complex bottleneck style guitar.

Waters leaned on a stool while he played, pointing to a band member when it was his turn for the solo spotlight. His lined face showed his age and at times he looked tired from years of one night stands. Although he looked worn out, each note of his guitar was crystal clear, but had a effectively raw edge.

He played cuts from his latest album, "Muddy 'Mississippi' Waters Live," like "Please Don't Go" and "She's 19 Years Old," but the highlights of his unfortunately all-too-short 80-minute set were the final three tunes.

Muddy finally broke into a sweat, got off his stool, and pranced around to the strains of "Kansas City." The auditorium ushers quit trying to keep dancers out of the aisles and the previously calm audience

Camp poses challenge for youths in trouble

takes place in Southern Illinois and starts when the youth is picked up from the agency. During this 10-day period, the youth is issued food, equipment and clothing and taught some basic skills needed to survive in the wilderness.

Hileman said the idea of Immersion is to "teach the kids how to cook on their own and be responsible for cleaning up as well as learning whatever skills necessary for traveling in the wilderness."

During the Expedition phase of the program, the youths go to designated wilderness areas, such as Big Bend National Park in Texas and the White Otter Wilderness area in Canada. The youths spend 30 days and nights there, Hileman said.

The Transition period prepares the youths to go back to their communities. The two techniques used are group counseling and individual counseling, Hileman said.

By this time the instructors are familiar with the areas where the kids are having problems and what each kid needs to work on, said Hileman.

In the Follow-up period, the last part of the program, each youth is brought back into his or her community and evaluated by the instructors.

"The instructors prepare a written evaluation along with recommendations for the case managers, probation officers, parents and anyone who will be working with the kids after our program," said Hileman.

"We have to have a dedicated staff because we are with the youths 24 hours a day for 30 days, which I feel is one of the good aspects of the program. When something happens, we deal with it right then, there is no delay," he said.

Hileman cited four main reasons for the program's success: the new environment, the commitment made by the youth, the taking on of responsibility for himself and his equipment, and learning to trust and cooperate.

Basically, the Stress Challenge Program is voluntary. After they are interviewed, the youths are asked to sign a contract if they wish to enter the program. However, a number of youths are court ordered.

Brenda Howard, case manager for UDIS, said that youths are referred to her by the probation office, the state's attorney's office, juvenile police or the Department of Corrections.

She said the reason the program is successful is because it removes the youths from the communities where they might be pressured.

"A lot of kids have a reputation they have to maintain in their community. If they have a reputation of getting in trouble they might continue to do so in order to live up to that reputation," she said.

Howard said the best part of the entire stress Challenge Program is the part called Solo. Solo is when the youth spends three days and three nights alone.

"The kids make decisions during that time. They have a chance to sit and think about what's going to happen to them when they get home," she said.

Richard Gruntree, a resident of the House of Glass, 805 W. Freeman, shoots pool in the Center's recreation room.

Currently there are 33 residents living at the Center, and the ratio of residents to staff is almost 2 to 1.

Center helps residents return to society

screens all applicants before they are allowed to enter the program, but the Center will accept both felons and misdemeanants. Generally, the Center will not accept violent or sex offenders who might be disruptive to the program. Saver said. The residents at the Center are at least 17 years old, and many are under 21.

There are no armed guards at the Center, but each resident is searched for drugs, alcohol and weapons each time he returns to the facility. An unannounced count system, 24 hours a day, is also used to monitor the residents.

In recent months a new security check has been implemented at the House of Glass. An unannounced dog search team from the Canine Division comes in to do spot checks.

Saver seemed very impressed with the team. "The dogs search the facility in a shorter time than human beings," he said. Those in the facility at the time of the search, staff and visitors included, are subject to arrest if they are found with any contraband items. Savor said the team is "always catching visitors."

The residents share various house assignments and earn privileges through a level system. This system is designed to give the inmate unsupervised release time after he has demonstrated his reliability.

Residents earn Independent Release Time (IRT) after exhibiting good behavior for a given time period, usually a month after they enter the program. Residents are then able to participate in the work release program, do volunteer work, and even pursue recreational activities.

Jerry Pierce has been an inmate at the Center for about a two and a half months. Pierce, like most of the residents, looks forward to his IRT. Commenting on a recent weekend visit with friends, he remarked, "It's good to get away, you just hate to think about coming back."

Pierce works at the Ramada Inn bussing tables. He described his job as "a run of the mill junk job." He said the bad job outlook is one of the deficiencies of the program, but added that he doesn't base his goals on a job like the one at Ramada Inn.

Pierce mentioned that another problem he has had at the Center is the lack of space. The residents are allowed to have visitors in a recreation area which is just large enough to accommodate a pool table, a few chairs and couches and a card table. He said most of the residents "constantly sit around" during their free time.

Originally from Mount Carmel, Ill., Pierce was arrested for drugs in Rochester, N.Y., along with 30 others. But he was the only one convicted. He said he feels some animosity towards the system that incarcerated him. "I didn't need to go to prison to see a different side," he said. "It only taught me not to get caught."

"Being locked up is punishment, not rehabilitation," he said with conviction.

Pierce, who is looking forward to his release from the House of Glass in August, added, "Freedom, that's a big word around here. You can reach out and touch it, but you can't have it, not until the man signs your papers anyway."

Exxon top money-maker in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company, reported that its earnings doubled to $1.925 billion in the first quarter from a year ago—the largest quarterly profit ever for a U.S. corporation.

Shell Oil Co., meanwhile, reported a 67 percent earnings increase; rising Alaskan oil output at higher prices pushed quarterly profits up 169 percent for Standard Oil Co. (Ohio); and $119.6 million in gold and silver trading profits sparked a 236 percent earnings gain for Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Exxon's revenues in the first quarter rose to $27.6 billion from $18.8 billion, and earnings per share rose to $4.40 from

$2.15 in last year's first quarter, when profits were $955 million.

Exxon attributed part of its earnings gain to a doubling of foreign refining and marketing profits. It also said increasing oil prices, which doubled to an average of $30 per 42-gallon barrel in the past year, were another contributor to profits.

Richard Gruntree, a resident of the House of Glass, 805 W. Freeman, shoots pool in the Center's recreation room. Currently there are 33 residents living at the Center, and the ratio of residents to staff is almost 2 to 1.

Center helps residents return to society

screens all applicants before they are allowed to enter the program, but the Center will accept both felons and misdemeanants. Generally, the Center will not accept violent or sex offenders who might be disruptive to the program. Saver said. The residents at the Center are at least 17 years old, and many are under 21.

There are no armed guards at the Center, but each resident is searched for drugs, alcohol and weapons each time he returns to the facility. An unannounced count system, 24 hours a day, is also used to monitor the residents.

In recent months a new security check has been implemented at the House of Glass. An unannounced dog search team from the Canine Division comes in to do spot checks.

Saver seemed very impressed with the team. "The dogs search the facility in a shorter time than human beings," he said. Those in the facility at the time of the search, staff and visitors included, are subject to arrest if they are found with any contraband items. Savor said the team is "always catching visitors."

The residents share various house assignments and earn privileges through a level system. This system is designed to give the inmate unsupervised release time after he has demonstrated his reliability.

Residents earn independent Release Time (IRT) after exhibiting good behavior for a given time period, usually a month after they enter the program. Residents are then able to participate in the work release program, do volunteer work, and even pursue recreational activities.

Jerry Pierce has been an inmate at the Center for about a two and a half months. Pierce, like most of the residents, looks forward to his IRT. Commenting on a recent weekend visit with friends, he remarked, "It's good to get away, you just hate to think about coming

Pierce works at the Ramada Inn, bussing tables. He described his job as "a run of the mill junk job." He said the bad job outlook is one of the deficiencies of the program, but added that he doesn't base his goals on a job like the one at Ramada Inn.

Pierce mentioned that another problem he has had at the Center is the lack of space. The residents are allowed to have visitors in a recreation area which is just large enough to accommodate a pool table, a few chairs and couches and a card table. He said most of the residents "constantly sit around" during their free time.

Originally from Mount Carmel, Ill., Pierce was arrested for drugs in Rochester, N.Y., along with 30 others. But he was the only one convicted. He said he feels some animosity towards the system that incarcerated him. "I didn't need to go to prison to see a different side," he said. "It only taught me not to get caught."

"Being locked up is punishment, not rehabilitation," he said with conviction.

Exxon top money-maker in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company, reported that its earnings doubled to $1.925 billion in the first quarter from a year ago—the largest quarterly profit ever for a U.S. corporation.

Shell Oil Co., meanwhile, reported a 67 percent earnings increase, rising Alaskan oil output at high prices pushed quarterly profits up 169 percent for Standard Oil Co. (Ohio); and $119.6 million in gold and silver trading profits sparked a 236 percent earnings gain for Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Exxon's revenues in the first quarter rose to $27.6 billion from $18.8 billion, and earnings per share rose to $4.40 from

$2.16 in last year's first quarter, when profits were $955 million.

Exxon attributed part of its earnings gain to a doubling of foreign refining and marketing profits. It also said increasing oil prices, which doubled to an average of $30 per 42-gallon barrel in the past year, were another contributor to profits.

Hall's new sound 'stimulating'

By Karen Gullo
Staff Writer

It's no secret that Daryl Hall is a modish yet effective singer-songwriter-musician, but up to now his music has offered less than polished chic.

However, his new, or should I say recent solo album it was recorded a few years back), "Sacred Songs," branches out into a new wave direction that certainly would have been regarded as too radical for the Daryl Hall of Hall and Oates fame. "Sacred Songs" is much more stimulating than the drippy disco-pop sound of the Philadelphia-based duo of Hall and Oates, and most of the credit should probably go to producer Robert Fripp.

Hall's typically mellow soprano voice, prone to sustained high-pitched squeals, works well with the new wave sound on "Sacred Songs," although the soft mellowness has been replaced with a tougher and more contemporary style. The use of synthesizers also improves the transition from hard rock to the new sound.

The first song and title track, "Sacred Songs," has a driving sound that isn't present on previous Hall and Oates tunes. It's as if Hall is finally breaking loose from his conventional rock 'n' roll roots.

The next song, "Something in

A Music Review

44 Time," is a very appropriate tune for the characteristically slick style of Daryl Hall. Many rock 'n' roll artists are dabbling with the new wave sound, so a song in pounding four-fourths time is almost a requirement for a commercially successful album. Unfortunately, some rock 'n' rollers can't get away with the new sound without sounding like they're mimicking the authentic new wavers, but Hall doesn't have this problem because he's working within the limits of originality.

"NYCNY" starts out with a calm moment, but it turns out to be the calm before the storm as the tune breaks into an alarmingly loud and fast-paced beat that certainly does bring the streets of New York City to mind.

The second side of "Sacred Songs" is generally more mellow than the first side. "The Farther Away I Am" is a short and soft flowing tune with an electric piano background. Again the incorporation of synthesizers is used to achieve an illusive and sophisticated mood. "Why Was It So Easy" is another slow song with emotional lyrics.

"Don't Leave Me Alone With Her" reveals what may be an insecurity about strong women as Hall croons "Whenever I see that girl, it messes up my security, please don't leave me alone with her."

The theme of the song "Survive" seems to sum up the general point behind Daryl Hall entering the league of former pop-rock artist turned new waver. Branching out is part of growing up and maturing, and as people get older they change their ways and styles.

In "Survive," Hall sings 'you were born in freedom to be a slave to your inhibitions,' but it's clear that he intends to give in to his inhibitions enough to successfully record an album that is distinctly different and much more stimulating than those he issued in his Hall and Oates days.

Muddy Waters' mojo still works

began foot-stomping and hand-clapping. Muddy traded off vocals with "Pine Top" as they sang about how many Kansas City girls each of them would get.

This was followed by "Mannish Boy," a song with lyrics that gave the Rolling Stones their name. Guitarist Junior Johnson punctuated this number with a teeth-gritting solo. By this time, Muddy was in the groove, giving big-eyed looks to the audience and even an occasional smile.

Muddy left the stage to delirious applause and returned for a rendition of his best known song, "I've Got My Mojo Working," which quickly became an audience sing along.

He left the stage again and the house lights came on, but no one was about to leave. Following minutes of standing ovation, his band returned for one more song, sans Muddy. His road manager, who had tuned guitars and provided towels throughout the show, played a few lead licks and it was over. A short set, but very sweet.

The Chicago Slim Blues Band opened the show with an enthusiastic 50-minute performance. Although the band's song lyrics all had vulgar themes of sex and/or drugs with titles like "I Know You're Smoking Reefer, I Know You Took Cocaine" and "Mama Love Me Or I'll Kill Ya," with references to John Wayne Gacy, Chicago Slim, a 300-pound plus harp player had them literally dancing in the aisles.

At one point, Chicago Slim left the stage and was found playing his harp in the aisles. It didn't matter that he didn't have a microphone and couldn't be heard by anyone. He danced through the crowd shaking hands and generally enjoying himself.

This show was the final concert of the year sponsored by the SPC Consorts Committee, ending a highly successful year that brought Southside Johnny, John Prine, Tom Waits, Ronnie Laws and the Talking Heads to Carbondale. The enthusiastic response of the crowd at the Muddy Waters concert was typical of that of other Shyrock shows.

New Van Halen album is 'talk of the campus'

A Music Review

By Ken Mac Garrigue
Staff Writer and
Tony Delgado
Student Writer

Everybody's talking about the new Van Halen album.

Recreation majors:
"Me and my girlfriend couldn't park and recreate to this album. The beat was too fast—for me anyway."

Food and Nutrition majors:
"It reminds me of an unbalanced diet—it has no meat and no milk, but it does have fruit."

Agriculture majors:
"Well, I'll tell ya. I played it to the swine the other day. After hearing it they all went back to the mud, banged their heads against the post and asked for the Talking Heads. Skoal, brother."

Music majors:
"I played it on my J.C. Penney stereo and even though the acoustics in my room are the greatest, it wasn't that great of an album, except for the down beat. I liked the down beat. Bring back the Doors!"

Medical students:
"After listening to this album my heart rate jumped 25 beats per minute, my pulse rate went up and my lactic acid rose. I feel it causes cardio-vascular disease and infection of the urinary tract."

Radio-Television majors:
"Is the red light on? Hold the cue card up a bit. All right, I'm ready."

Radio-Television majors (take 2):

"After looking at 33 episodes of Hawaii Five-O, Van Halen reminds me of a luau. Take it from me, I should know. I'm an R-T major. By the way, do you think I can get on Channel 3?"

Womens' Studies majors:
"Yeah, this album really didn't do nothin' for me. It's an example of the male dominated business of heavy metal rock music. I think all guys are queer anyway. The music? Hell, you can't even dance to it. ERA all the way! Long live Patti Smith!"

Aviation majors:
"Yeah, man, I fly to it all the time. I use it to jam up other signals. That way, the airports don't know when I'm coming in."

Pre-law students:
"After 22 hours of studying, I get into Van Halen because it relaxes me and gets me ready for bed."

Anthropology majors:
"The primal screams of (lead singer) David Lee Roth remind me of the mating call of the wild gorilla in the Congo."

Liberal Arts majors:
"I asked if I could be a roadie for Van Halen and they fed me drugs and told me to distribute their album so I did—I got beat up a lot. But I love these guys! No nukes!"

Journalism majors:
"Is this tape recorder on? Just quote me, okay? You write anything else and I'm going to hit you for libel. Yeah, I interviewed David Lee Roth once, and he screamed into my tape recorder and I hit him across the head with it. See, nobody screams into my tape recorder because my tape recorder was given to me personally by Charles Foster Kane."

Fraternity members:
"Yeah! It's great! I got 8 hours. How 'bout you? I have enough time to sit back and really enjoy the album. Come out to the Kappa Kappa Gamma! Join the TKEs! We're tops in pops!"

Psychology majors:
"Van Halen is detrimental to a person's health throughout the Freudian stages. The psychosexual images portrayed by David Lee Roth would get teenyboppers excited, but true professional college listeners would feel otherwise."

Speech majors:
"Uh-huh, like, y'know, oh wow, sorry man, what was the question?"

Photography majors:
"I enjoy the cover photo because of the big guitar coming out of their lower torsos. I really dig David Lee Roth's f-stops, too. Oh, excuse me."

English majors:
"It's a pleasant album. The adverbs and adjectives in the songs are well-formed and the nouns are picturesque."

Besides the comments made by other majors here at SIU-C, we reviewers say that all you Van Halen freaks should run out to your local record store and pick up a couple of copies of Van Halen along with Cowboys International.

Injured netter returns; Salukis host 3 teams

By Rick Seymour
Staff Writer

He's back. Maybe not at full speed, but at least he's back. Brian Stanley will be back into tennis Coach Dick LeFevre's lineup for this weekend's quadrangular meet with Indiana State, Northern Illinois and Western Kentucky at the University courts.

"Brian will be able to play this weekend, but I don't know how effective he will be," LeFevre said of his No. 2 singles player.

The Salukis were forced to give two points away at every match played since Stanley sprained his ankle in practice two weeks ago. Each player had to move up a notch, which caused the two vacant spots, one at No. 6 singles and the other at No. 3 doubles.

"I think it has improved each player since they were forced to play a notch higher than usual," LeFevre said.

With Indiana State coming to town Saturday and Sunday, LeFevre had better hope his players are stronger than usual, according to Northern Illinois Coach Orville Kersten.

"Indiana State is awfully tough. They have an extremely good team this year," Kersten said of the Sycamores.

"We are out of their category, but we should give Southern a good match," Kersten added.

However, LeFevre feels the meet will be a "good warm-up" for the conference meet to be held in May. With Stanley back in the lineup, LeFevre feels confident that his squad will come out on top.

"Sure, Indiana State is tough, but I'm looking for us to win this meet," LeFevre said confidently.

Nobody knows what type of team Western Kentucky is fielding. Neither coach's team has competed against the Hilltoppers.

"We don't know what Western Kentucky is like. It should prove to be a good strong meet," SIU said.

SIU never has played Western Kentucky during LeFevre's 24-year reign as coach.

The Salukis will bring a 9-16 record into the meet. They are coming off a 5-4 win over the University of Illinois at Champaign last Sunday.

SOX WRECK BOSTON

BOSTON (AP)—Lamar Johnson drove in four runs, including the tiebreaker in the seventh inning, as the Chicago White Sox defeated the Boston Red Sox, 9-3, Thursday at Fenway Park.

Johnson batted in a run with a single in the first inning and hit a two-run homer, his fourth, in the third.

Baseball squad starts homestand against Kentucky

piloting the Salukis, probably will win his 400th collegiate game. He now has 397. Win No. 400 will put Jones in an elite category among college coaches.

Jones presently is third among active college coaches in winning percentage.

Tracksters ready for split weekend

meter race since the Murray State Invitational April 12.

"The competition is such that the chances of placing in two events is nil," Blackman said. "So the best way to score points for the team is to put people in their best races."

SIU's sprinters will be trying to continue to improve their times, but could run into some difficulties at the Eastern Kentucky meet.

"I'm anxious to see how the sprinters will do," Blackman said. "They will have to do a lot of running because of all the heats."

Blue Demon star to stay in school

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP)—DePaul's Mark Aguirre said Thursday that he came very close to declaring himself eligible for the upcoming National Basketball Association draft to prove himself to skeptics who feel he can't make the grade in the professional ranks.

"I really wanted to play in the NBA," said Aguirre, who announced that he will return to DePaul for at least another season. "A lot of people said that I have a lot of shortcomings and I wanted to prove them wrong."

"But after a while, I realized I had to stop thinking about what other people thought and start thinking about myself," Aguirre added. "The situation is right for me here. I don't think I'd have liked the pressure of going into the NBA and trying to prove something."

WIU, Illini invade SIU for 4 weekend games

The SIU women's softball team will close out its regular season this weekend when it hosts a pair of doubleheaders against intrastate rivals.

Friday afternoon, the Salukis will carry an 8-7-1 record into a 2 p.m. double-header against the University of Illinois softball club at the Women's Intercollegiate Athletics field.

Saturday, Western Illinois will visit for a twinbill at 1 p.m. Illinois does not have an official intercollegiate softball program and did not play SIU last season. The Salukis lost to Western Illinois twice last season, 4-3 in the regular season and 4-0 in the Midwest Regional tournament.

Pitching may be a question mark for the Salukis, as freshman Donna Dapson, who owns the team's best earned-run average at .808, has been having problems with her left knee.

"It's not some recurring injury," Coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said. "It happened out in New Mexico when Donna was pitching. She must have put a lot of pressure on the knee by coming down on her left foot the wrong way."

Hart plans return to football Cards

By Rod Smith
Staff Writer

Take Hart, Cardinal football fans, your No. 1 quarterback will return next season.

"I'll be back," Jim Hart, St. Louis Cardinals quarterback and 1986 graduate of SIU, said Thursday. He has not yet signed a contract for the 1990 football season, but said he intends to sign in the next three weeks.

Hart was in Carbondale Thursday serving as "Head Coach" for the Special Olympics held at McAndrew Stadium. He is the Saluki game, season and career record holder for most completions, most passing yardage and most touchdowns passing.

Although Steve Pisarkiewicz started the last three games of the 1979 season when Bud Wilkinson was fired as head coach and former Cardinal safety Larry Wilson took over, he leaves no doubt as to who is the Cardinals No. 1 signal caller.

"I'm the No. 1 quarterback and Steve is the No. 2 quarterback. There is no doubt about it," Hart said. "Nothing has changed. I know that, Steve knows that, and the management knows that."

Hart will be playing under new Head Coach Jim Hanifan, formerly the Cardinals' offensive line coach under former Head Coach Don Coryell and Wilkinson.

"He has been an assistant with us from 1973 to 1978 and we know him well," Hart said.

"He's nothing new to us."

Hart, who will turn 36 Tuesday, will enter his 15th professional season. He tried to evaluate his team's performance of last year.

"We did establish our running game, but our passing wasn't so good," Hart said. With the tragic death of J.V. Cain and an injury to Mel Gray, we lost two great receivers and only had one, Pat Tilley, to throw too."

Although Hart never has seen the Salukis' Kevin House play, he said he "sounds like a natural for our team."

The NFL draft is next week, and Hart said the Cardinals will be looking for help at tight end, defensive line and defensive secondary.

Vervoorn leaves pool for army duty

By Dave Kane
Staff Writer

With eight seniors ending their careers this season, the last thing Saluki men's swimming Coach Bob Steele needed was to lose another key swimmer to the draft.

No, there isn't a new professional swim league snatching up college talent. In this case, the draftee was the Dutch army and the draftee was freshman standout Kees Vervoorn.

Vervoorn, a native of Den Haag, Holland, left the SIU campus early this month to report for duty. Voted the team's freshman of the year, he was an outstanding butterfly and freestyle specialist.

"Kees (pronounced 'case') had to be home April 9 and had to report for induction April 13," Steele said. "His chances of coming back for us next year look pretty slim, unless he gets some kind of deferment. It's really a shame, because he won't even be able to compete in the Olympics—that is if Holland elects to compete."

"Unlike our Army's draft policy, they (Holland) don't care if you're in college or not," Steele added.

It's too bad Steele can't draft the nation's top high school swimmers. Instead, the recruiting for his swim army has dominated his time.

"We're going to lose eight seniors, so we're really working on it now," Steele said. "But we haven't signed anybody yet. We're going for six people, but I think we may have lost one to the University of Texas."

Steele said several potential recruits already have visited the SIU campus, and they were impressed with the atmosphere and the swimming program. However, they were allotted two more visits to other schools, creating a waiting game.

"We just can't get any commitments as of yet," Steele said. "A guy might tell you he's really impressed with your school and everything, but then someone else will tell him that a degree from XYZ is better than one from SIU, although that might not really be the case. You never know what to expect."

With the loss of senior freestyle sprinters Bob Samples and Marty Krug, Steele said he has been concentrating on two sprinters. A backstroke, butterfly and diver also are among the swim recruiting priorities.

"We've got the most favorable responses from the sprinters so far," Steele added. "But until they've taken a look at a couple of other schools, we can't be sure."

Saluki nine to open long homestand

By Mark Pablich
Staff Writer

The "Hill Gang" finally will get a chance to see plenty of Saluki baseball, beginning Friday when SIU hosts Kentucky for a three-game series. Following will be seven games in four days against SIU-Edwardsville, St. Louis University, Illinois, and Eastern Illinois.

Saluki Coach Itchy Jones said his club wouldn't be bothered with 10 games in six days, but instead needs the heavy workload.

"As far as our hitters go, it will be ideal for them to be able to hit in that many games in a row," Jones said. "For our pitchers, however, it will be a lot of work."

"Some of the guys haven't pitched much, and this will give them a chance to throw," he added. "We'll have to count on a few of the pitchers coming to a throw with maybe only two days rest."

Junior Harold Brown, who is 3-2, will open the Salukis' homestand against Kentucky Friday and probably will see action Tuesday. Junior Bob Schroeck, who will throw one game Saturday, might also have to pitch again with only two or three days rest.

"It won't be easy for some of them, but it should only happen to a few," Jones said. "Our whole staff could see some duty."

While the homestand may take a toll on the pitchers, Jones said the hitters should look forward to 10 games.

"Every time our players can hit eight or 10 times a day against different pitchers, they'll improve," he said.

"We've improved drastically in the hitting department since coming back from Florida, and 10 games in a row will keep everyone sharp."

Two players who have been especially sharp this season are juniors Jim Adduci and Gerry Miller. Adduci is hitting a hot 427, with six home runs and 21 RBIs.

Miller is hitting a solid .329 and leads the team in RBIs and home runs with seven, four of them coming last weekend in two games.

"These next games will be a good proving ground for us," Jones said. "We're set at most of the positions, especially the infield, and this will give us a good chance to make sure everyone is in the right place. It's also a great opportunity to improve our record."

Sometime this weekend, Jones, who is in his 11th season

Dempsey to show new plays in final spring tune up

By Rod Smith
Staff Writer

The Saluki football team will hold its third scrimmage of the spring at 3 p.m. Friday at McAndrew Stadium. The practice session is free and open to the public.

The offense dominated the team's first scrimmage, but last week's defense was impressive. The No. 1 defense forced five fumbles, had four quarterback sacks, and allowed only seven pass completions in 21 attempts.

"Up until last Friday, I was concerned about our defense," Head Coach Ray Dempsey said. "But they're coming on strong now and I feel much better about everything."

Dempsey said Friday's scrimmage would be similar to the previous two—the No. 1 offense running sets of 12 plays against the No. 2 defense and the No. 1 "Mad Dog" defense facing the No. 2 offense for 12 plays.

"We're trying to introduce everything and get it on film so we can study it later," Dempsey said. "We will have a goal line session and try a few new plays."

The coach said the defense has two different formations that will be used.

"Our defense is basically a five-man front with two linebackers, called our 'eagle' look, but we also use a five-man line with no one over the center with our backers being protected and harder to get to. That is our 'split' defense," Dempsey said.

At this point, the top two linebackers are two-year letterman Rick Bielecki, who led the Salukis in tackles with 108, and junior letterman Mike Rager. They are being pressed by Carbondale native Tony Bleyer, who Dempsey said had many good hits in last week's scrimmage.

Dempsey said both Bielecki and Bleyer suffered slight injuries during the week and may not see action.

Dempsey said Marvin Hinton, a sophomore defensive back from Memphis, Tenn., would be given a shot at the wide receiver slot vacated by speedster Kevin House

Thinclads split up for weekend meets

By Ed Dougherty
Staff Writer

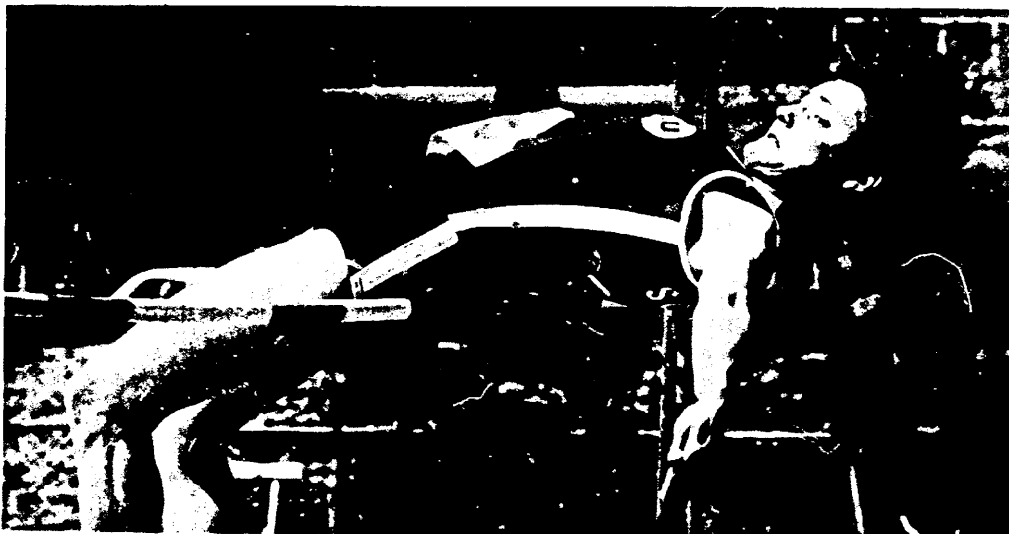

While the remainder of the women's track team is at Eastern Kentucky University's Becky Boone Relays in Richmond, Ky., Lindy Nelson and Cathy Chiarello will be competing against some of the nation's top women college athletes at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa.

Nelson and Chiarello will be the first two women tracksters SIU ever has sent to Drake. Two years ago, Peggy Evans entered the 800-meter dash without University backing, track Coach Claudia Blackman said.

Nelson will be one of 12 contestants in the 5,000-meter run, and Chiarello will be one of eight runners in the 1,500-meter run. There will be a lot of runners with times that will be close to Nelson's, Blackman said. The coach, who does not know who has been invited to Drake, said she has no idea how Chiarello will do.

Last year at the Becky Boone Relays, the Salukis finished 13th out of the 20 teams entered in the meet. Tennessee State and Michigan State tied for first place, but Tennessee State was declared the winner because it had more first-place finishers.

Blackman said she did not know how high her squad would finish this year, because other teams will be sending individuals to Drake. However, Michigan State, Purdue and Western Kentucky must be considered the favorites, she said.

Lady Saluki high-jumper Penny Hoffman and most other team members will travel to Richmond, Ky. this weekend for the Becky Boone Relays at Eastern Kentucky University

Two other Salukis, distance runners Lindy Nelson and Cathy Chiarello, will travel to Des Moines, Ia., for the prestigious Drake Relays Friday and Saturday.

"Teamwise, we're going to be hurt without the services of Lindy and Cathy," Blackman said. "We'll be losing points they would have scored."

Blackman said she expects to see at least 10 personal bests at the Becky Boone meet because of the high caliber of competition.

"For some, it will be a confidence builder," Blackman said. "But for others, it will be frustrating if they run their best and don't make it out of the preliminaries."

Blackman said she expects Karen LaPorte to do very well in the 400-meter hurdles because of the excellent competition she will be surrounded by. LaPorte will be anxious to prove she should have been invited to the Drake Relays, according to the coach. Patty Flynn will participate in only the 10,000-meter run, Blackman said, because it is her best chance of scoring points. It will be the first time Flynn has run the 10,000-
