Leaders try to salvage deficit-saving budget

WASHINGTON (UPT) — Congressional budget leaders, staggered by President Reagan's rejection of a compromise package Tuesday tried to salvage a 1986 spending plan that would take at least a small bite from the federal deficit.

A consensus emerged that an agreement — if one is to come at all — must be struck within a day or two, but some Republican senators indicated it might not be worth the trouble. House Speaker Thomas O'Neill said Democrats will yield no more on military spending — a stand that apparently cuts down maneuvering room for negotiators.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., and Rep William Gray, D-Pa., chairmen of the budget committees, had lunch at the white House with Reagan and emerged with word they would try again to resolve conflicts over spending priorities.

Domenici appeared skep-tical there would be a budget, but he noted the government will keep running.

Domenici said he and Gray "didn't attempt to get a deal" with Reagan, and that the president suggested deeper cuts in domestic programs and declared the Pentagon had been cut enough.

USO executives attend convention: return with 'networking' concept

The convention was the United States Student Association's annual where over 400 student leaders and activists from across the nation were on hand to exchange ideas and reach agreements on plans for the future of higher education students. One of these ideas was "networking."

Appleman added that net-working would heighten student interest on student issues and other concerns where students contributing assistance would be an asset.

Despite formal networking plans, interaction with delegates from neighboring states, or networking in on a smaller scale, was a chief means of conducting business.

College of Education to battle 'today's problems'

By David Sheets Staff Writer

An academy to update Illinois school district ad-ministrators in their trade and renewed teacher certification standards are two of the prime issues that the SIU-C College of Education plans to address, courtesy of the state's new Education Reform Package

The Illinois Education Reform and Finanace Act was passed by the legislature June 30 and signed by the governor academy plan "is intended for school ad-ministrators who are facing today's problems and implementing today's new programs," explained Donald

"Many of the same programs may be similar, just extended to all school ad-ministrators," he said. Beggs said other states were being observed, such as California, Florida and Nevada, where similar retraining projects have been established.

"The academy idea came into the reform plan late in the legislative schedule, and we have now just had a couple of weeks to review the legislature's paperwork on it." Beggs said

Another of Beggs' concerns Another of Beggs' concerns is "too much space available for the program and not enough people in this area at the moment." He said there are "lots of small school districts in southern Illinois with small administrative staffs," and that the possibility of drawing administrator "students" for the academy from further north in Illinois is from further north in Illinois is a consideration.

In improving teacher certification standards, the "quality of the student at SIU-C will not change," said Nancy associate dean for academic affairs

Our records are quite high as far as quality students," she said. "They come to us with high grade point averages

Correlating with the higher standards will be studies by the Illinois State Teacher Certification Board on teacher education trends. Monitoring the trends will enable the board to make adjustments according to demands presently placed on teachers.

Beggs said the upgraded certification will make educational instruction caucational instruction "just that much better" at SIU-C. He could not be specific about new certification details.

James R. Thompson Tuesday unveiled a two-month famine relief program called Illinois Agriculture for Africa by asking for grain and cash donations from farmers and other individuals.

"We have food in abundance in this state." Thompson said. "In fact, we have too much food while others have none."

The program, which is a cooperative effort between the governor's office, the state governor's office, the state Agriculture Department and the World Vision Relief Organization, asks farmers to donate 10 bushels of grain. Other people are being asked to donate $35.

Officials said they hoped to collect 500,000 bushels of grain. roughly five bushels from each of the state's 96,000 farmers

Athletics program needs/but one head

THE SIU-C ATHLETICS PROGRAM is undergoing change. It began when Bruce Swinburne, vice president for student affairs, resigned from his athletics-related duties just before scandal was exposed in the men's basketball program. Dean Stuck was a program and prog was exposed in the men's basketball program. Dean Stuck was then named special assistant to the president on intercollegiate athletics, acting as a temporary liaison between the department and the administration. Since then, numerous ideas have been tossed about regarding how the upper echelons of the men's and women's departments should be restructured.

The Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee recently endorsed a plan that calls for an interim executive director to coordinate activities and formulate policy and direction for both the men's and women's departments. The interim director, to be chosen from present athletics administrators, would be one step.

the men's and women's departments. The interm director, to be chosen from present athletics administrators, would be one step above separate athletics directors for each department. The plan the IAAC accepted meets a request from President Somit that the committee establish a plan with only one "middle man" between him and the athletics program, as in the past.

THE PLAN THE IAAC ACCEPTED thus basically maintains the status quo. There will still be two levels of administrators separating the president from the people most directly in charge separating the president from the people most directly in charge of athletes — the coaches. Such layering makes the channels of communication all the more indirect and the question of what responsibility lies with who all the more difficult to answer. The athletics program at SIU-C is not so gigantic or overwhelmingly important that it needs such administrative overkill. One competent director to oversee both the men's and women's departments and report directly to the president should be able to keep the program running smoothly. And, while we're on the subject, if past performance offers any guide the present women's athletics director. Charlotte West, could fill such a position to everyone's satisfaction.

JSO president lists main concerns

After returning from the United States Student United States Association Student Nationa Congress, I have witnessed what I believe to be the blossoming return of student activism.

Over 400 students of various backgrounds, races, ages, affiliations and degrees of disability met to discuss the salient issues of our time.

General concensus was that although students are very concerned about issues outside the specific realm of education, fiscal and resource realities dictate that if we are to be effective we must limit our scope of priorities in-volving access to educational opportunities.

One of our first goals was to one of our first goals was to encourage a national financial aid data base by distributing surveys to over 400 campus representatives of which we received overwhelming support. ## City's concern for underage drinking a facade

10 ACCEPT SIU IDs or not accept SIU IDs, that is the , destion, a question that has resulted in a considerable amount of controversy throughout the University and the city.

Actually, it comes down to underage drinking and what to do about it. Sure, there's no need for SIU IDs to be used off campus, regardless of the fact that they may or may not be used by underage drinkers.

But the question remains: what should be done about underage drinking?

what should be done about underage drinking?

The liquor establishment claims to be willing to curb underage drinking, yet its attempts to do so are meager at best. Students under 21 claim bars are necessary outlets for non-drinking activities, but it seems safe to say that few underage bar patrons actually plan not to drink.

But a bar owner wanting increased profits and an 18-year-old wanting a beer are not unusual by any means. Their motives may not exactly be within the law, but they are at least understandable.

The truly confusing player in this drama is city government

WE ARE TO believe that it was the underage drinking problem ended. And we are to believe that the newly instituted punishments—a pitcher ban and mandatory hand-stamping policy for those ewhers receiving nine violations in a six-month period—will do the job. Fat chance.

Not only are the so-called punishments nothing more than a slap on the wrist, the method of determining violations is arbitrary and blatantiv inaccurate.

The reason behind this system?

Simply put, the city would stand to lose both revenue and support from the liquor establishment should underage drinking cease. The efforts of the city to end this practice are no more than token gestures to appease those wanting action taken.

At the same time, the city has a convenient way of punishing bar owners who fall from grace: simply step up police checks on IDs in the targeted bar, hence more violations.

I'm sure there are those in city government who are dedicated to putting an end to underage drinking, but collectively little is being done.

THE ANSWER in all this is simple: make punishments for bar owners who serve underage patrons serious enough to actually discourage such behavior. If owners faced stiff fines, suspended and eventually revoked licenses, they certainly would exercise more caution.

The city could even go a step further and set a bar entry age of 21, as is the case in some other university towns, such as De Kalb and Bloomington.

Or the bar owners might make such a move unnecessary by following the example of Chicago, where there is no specific entry age but where most bar owners refuse to admit those under 21, due to the difficulty in enforcing the drinking age and the punishments involved for neglecting to do so.

Naturally any moves to prevent those under 21 from entering Carbondale bars would be extremely unpopular, but something needs to be done if there is to be an end to underage drinking.

Lets face it, people go to ars to drink: they may also socialize, dance and watch videos, but their primary reason for going to a bar is to drink. Period.

AND THE FACT of the matter is it's against state law for anyone under 21 to drink. The reasoning behind this law is beside the point; the law does exist.

It's not that I'm outraged by people under 21 wanting to drink; it hasn't been that long since I've been there myself. But I'm insulted by the city's policy of looking the other way while talking tough.

Granted, the city doesn't want to make enemies of the students, but ridiculous posturing against underage drinking makes no sense whatsoever.

If the city is going to look the other way, fine, it should just forget all the hype to the contrary. If it's serious about putting an end to underage drinking, then tough decisions need to be made.

The city cannot have it both

Women troubled worldwide

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

delegates to the U.N. conference on the International Women's Year approved a world plan of action. The recent women's conference in Nairobi to assess a decade of change found that all too many of the problems remain.

The delegates to the conference were official representatives of their governments, which may explain the tired reiteration of point and counterpoint in East-West conflicts. Apartheid, terrorism and Zionism, the last of which thankfully for once was not equated with racism, do of course affect women Women are affected by all the vagaries of politics and economics. But there are some more basic and elementary things that must be changed before women can effectively work to change policies.

The killing of female infants is still fairly routine in some areas of the world. In others, having too many female babies constitutes grounds for divorce. The vicious practice of female circumcision goes on in some cultures. Some women are still considered chattel, with no political or property rights of their own. Educational opportunities for women remain scarce in many countries.

Opinions from elsewhere

Concerns such as these were not ignored. The conference adopted "Forward-Looking Strategies," which included these life-and-death matters and other concerns of daily living for many women. Governments piedged to guarantee equal pay and educational opportunities. The document supported policies that would help women, such as creating child-care centers or paying fair prices for agricultural goods. It formally stated that domestic violence is unacceptable and officially recognized women's importance to economic growth. Such official statements may seem trite or old hat in the Western context, but they are still radical concepts in some countries.

The review also found that the women's decade has brought about significant change. The vote has been extended to women in most countries, and development projects are now designed with recognition of the roles of women as well as men. The U.N. convention to eliminate discrimination against women has been signed by 76 countries. None of this says that the laws are uniformly enforced, but at least legal recognition of women's right's is increasing.

The decade for women has spotlighted the special needs of women and the abilities of women to contribute to issues that affect all people. If the Nairobi conference was "an orgy in hypocrisy," as U.S. delegation head Maureen Reagan charged, it became that when the delegates abused their forum to exploit governmental differences on such things as acts of state terrorism (the Soviet term) or the role of outlaw states (the Western pejorative).

But in the vast majority of the 400-plus paragraph statement, the world's countries came together on goals to bring women into full participation in deciding the fate of this planet. That positive achievement deserves more recognition than a rehash of the acrimony among nations. Those differences are the setting in which women must work, in which this conference had to be held. But the goals, which transcend the problems, should not be obscured by them.

U.S. should follow realism of Soviets in arms talks

THE SOVIET UNION is giving signs of an overdue realism in the Geneva talks on strategic arms reduction.

The main Soviet concern has been President Reagan's ambitious Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), which is supposed to shield the U.S. against nuclear attack. Given the threat the program creates to the Soviet deterrent, and the danger it presents of an American first strike, their anxiety is understandable. And they can't be expected to accept weapons reductions as long as SDI is forging ahead, since dismantling Soviet missiles would simplify the American defensive effort.

The reasonable compromise has been obvious all along: trading the U.S. "Star Wars" program for deep cuts in Soviet offensive weapons, particularly large land-based missiles. That would preserve the Soviet deterrent while removing the precemptive threat to America's land-based missiles.

BUT BOTH sides have stoutly resisted reasonableness. The Soviet position has been particularly fraudulent, demanding that any agreement prohibit not just the testing and deployment of space-based weapons but any research on them.

The Soviets also have blocked progress by insisting that any limits on the number of weapons apply only to missiles, not to the warheads carried on the missiles. That wouldn't solve the existing problem but aggravate it.

Limiting only launchers, as the first SALT agreement did, encourages each side to pile more and more warheads on each missile, which in turn makes each missile a more tempting target for the other side. It creates a situation in which two warheads can destroy 10—a lucrative exchange for whoever strikes first, and thus an incentive to start a nuclear war.

FORTUNATELY, the Soviets have given signs that they're ready to reverse

themselves. In a July 5 letter to the Union for Concerned Scientists, an American organization. General Secretary Gorbachev said he wants "a complete ban on the development, testing and deployment of attack space systems" — conspicuously omitting the ban on reseach. There also have been news reports that the Soviet negotiators in Geneva have informally suggested that they would allow research if deployment were forbidden.

deployment were forbidden. Meanwhile, Rep. Stephen Solarz (D-N Y.) said he was told by a senior Soviet general in Moscow earlier this month that the Soviet proposal for a 25 percent cut in offensive weapons would apply to warheads as well as launchers, American officials told the New York Times last week that the Soviets have tentatively broached the idea of percentage limits on different types of weapons—say, restricting land-based strategic missiles to 50 percent of each side's.

If the Soviets are serious about all these proposals, which is yet to be demonstrated, they could break the deadlock that has afflicted the Geneva negotiations since the outset. But that won't happen unless the U.S. is also willing to accept the plausible. Refusing to scale back the administration's Star Wars plans would guarantee failure.

This may be the chance the administration needs to get something of value from the other side, and it shouldn't be wasted. Realism from the Soviets is worthless unless it's matched by our side.

Delay of federal grant release sparks letter-writing campaign

By Elizabeth Cochran

Attorney General Edwin Meese's decision to delay the release of a $625,000 grant to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence has sparked a letter-writing campaign by the Jackson campaign by the Jackson County Coalition for Safety. The grant was recom-mended by the U.S. Attorney General's Task Force on Domestic Violence. The money was marked by the NCADV to develop police department violence centers, to increase public awareness of domestic violence, and to provide a national information and referral service.

Meese put the funds under review in response to a letter from Rep. Mark Siljander (Rsigned by 24 en, that called the Congressmen, that called the NCADV a "pro-lesbian, proabortion, anti-Reagan radical feminist group."

Social Security office not closing, officials say

By John Krukowski

Reports of the demise of Social Security District Office in Carbondale are greatly exaggerated, say officials of the Social Security Administration.

Despite its inclusion in a

U.S. Senate resolution last May as a Social Security office "which may be downgraded or closed" by the SSA, Social Security people maintain that the office at 250 W. Cherry St. is in no danger.

There has never been any intention or even talk of downgrading Carbondale service," said Bob Drone, manager of the Carbondale office

Drone said that with its 29 employees, the Carbondale office is simply too large for the SSA to consider the SSA to consider reducing its staff or ser-

Retired faculty members aren't 'put out to pasture'

By Michael Cavanagh Staff Writer

SIU-C President When Albert Somit conceived the idea for the Emeritus College three years ago, he started something unique that helps the University as well as retired faculty and administrators ministrators.

Somt gave the idea to Arnold J. Auerbach, a retired faculty member of the Social Welfare Department who organized the Emeritus College and became its coordinator in 1982.

"We are a service oriented group," said Auerbach. He says the members are setting up the scholarship because. We look upon students as our academic grandchildren.

Relations between students nd the Emeritus Collage is similiar to student relations with their grandparents, with their grandparents, Auerbach said. Sometimes students get along better with their grandparents than their parents; in the same way, students are better able to relate to the retired faculty than to their professors.

Commenting on tuition increases. Auerbach said that the Emeritus College is just "doing its part" by setting up the scholarship. The money will be administered by the SIU Foundation, and a committee of the Emeriti will decide the enterior for who is alignly for enterior for who is alignly for criterion for who is eligible for the award.

Slowpoke White Sox anger fans, opponents

just two days on the job for Texas manager Bobby Valentine to ask a question that many had already posed before him

"Do these guys get paid by e hour?" Valentine wonthe hour? dered.

These guys were the Chicago White Sox, who often have been accused of playing games in slow motion and taking the time to complete three innings that many teams take to play an entire game.

Deliberation and the Sox have been cousins ever since catcher Carlton Fisk was acquired by Chicago four years ago. But the three-hour-plus time clock the Sox have punched in recent years didn't seem to cause much frustration until midway through the 1985 season.

IN 1983, the SOX 141... accurately walked — to a division title and a 20-game margin. The long arently didn't victory margin. The long games apparently didn't bother pennant-hungry southsiders who had, after all, waited 24 years for a flag. Sitting through a three-hour-plus game wasn't all that much to ask for a team that had been mired in mediocrity.

Chicago has been a leader in the majors for length of games since Fisk arrival. In 1985, the club had played 18 three-hour-plus games when the season was only one-third over

They also played an eighthour, six-minute game with the same club last year but that took 25 innings and two days to complete. It is still the longest game in major league

No club has ever averaged more than three hours per game. The Sox are at about 2:53 right now, give or take a stroll to the mound by Fisk. That is attributable in part to

WASHINGTON (UPI) Police in suburban Virginia last week arrested Washington Redskins running back John Riggins on a charge of being drunk in public, authorities said Tuesday. Fairfax County Police spokeswoman Carol Kitzerow said police picked up Riggins, 35, at 1:50 a.m. Thursday while he was riding in a car driven by Stuart Miller in Reston, Va., Miller, 40, of Arlington, Va., was charged with driving while intoxicated.

Riggins is set to appear in the county's General District Court on Oct. 24. Both men were released

A few "die hard" Saluki fans used to get together and party after games and through the years this group developed years this group developed into the Saluki Booster Club, which has kept the same mission throughout – to support SIU-C men's and women's athletics.

Most of the money the club generates goes directly to SIU-C athletics. Money retained by the club funds numerous functions like the annual "Buffalo Tro" banquet and

Because of such diversity in membership, McKinney feels the media unfairly stigmatized the Booster Club because former member Roy S. "I firmly believe baseball is primarily daytime sport, valuable largely because it brings people out into the air and sunlight. I think we can do many things to increase attendance at Wrigley Field before resorting to night baseball."

P.K. Wrigley, Chicago Cubs owner, 1934

Philip K. Wrigley was firm in his belief that the Lake View neighborhood surrounding Wrigley Field, home of the Chicago Cubs, should not be disrupted by night baseball. Yet, unlike many baseball club owners, who were ap-prehensive about the effect of television on attendance, Wrigley thought television was a good advertising tool to in-crease interest in the sport. He insisted on televising home games, a move still shied away from by owners today. Now, it appears the medium he so strongly supported may force Wrigley Field, the nation's only major league ballpark without lights, into the glare of artificial light.
