Key lost; all Neely locks to change

By Kathleen DeBo
Staff Writer

The the locks on every floor of Neely Hall have to be changed because a staff member lost a key which provides access to residents' rooms, Steve Kirk, assistant director of housing for residence life, said.

"To be real frank, one of the staff lost a key. We think we know where it is. It probably went into the trash and is in the landfill by now. We're going to recore any lock the key will fill."

The lost key provides access to residents' rooms and possibly some maintenance closets, Kirk said.

About once a year, keys to a limited number of rooms, such as keys to staff rooms or keys to the back doors of the residence halls, get lost but usually only a few people are affected, Kirk said.

"It's pretty unusual to lose a key that covers this much ground. It's pretty rare. The last time was maybe, at a guess, two to three ago," he said.

Don Ballestro, a housing administrator, said "Based on the cost of the keys and the coring, it could cost between $3,000 to $4,000. That's a ballpark figure."

Ballestro said recoring will probably take about eight days with two floors done each day. Currently, eight floors are done.

The staff member, a head resident of one of the triads, shared responsibilities with the Neely staff and needed the key in case he had to have access to dorm rooms in emergencies while on duty at Neely, Kirk said.

Isabel Martinez, a freshman in pre-dentistry who lives on the 10th floor, said "I feel sorry for the person who lost the key. (The recoring) will probably take a while but it hasn't really inconvenienced me. We are in limbo. We don't know if the key will fit when we come back. You don't think it would actually happen."

Her roommate, sophomore in biology Jackie Friedman, said, "I don't care. If someone lost a master key, I want them to change the lock. It is kind of ridiculous, though. A lot of people will go out tonight and they may not be able to get

Absentee ballots to be available for collective bargaining election

By Nora Bentley
Staff Writer

Members of the faculty and administrative-professional staff who won't be on campus to vote in the collective bargaining election Nov. 16 must fill out an absentee ballot and return it to the Illinois Educational Labor Relations Board by Nov. 14, Charles H. Hindersman, vice president for financial affairs, said.

Hindersman said a list with 115 eligible voters who are assigned to off-campus locations was sent to the IELRB. They will automatically receive absentee ballots from the IELRB.

Other eligible voters who won't be on campus on election day must "in writing indicate they won't be able to vote in person and give a reason,"

Hindersman said.

The absentee ballots will be counted by the IELRB at the same time as those on campus, he said.

To request an absentee ballot, voters should write to the IELRB, 320 W. Washington St., second floor, Springfield, IL 62706. The requests must be received by the IELRB by Nov. 6, Hindersman said.

25 people arrested, charged with underage possession

By Richard Goldstein
Staff Writer

Twenty-five people were arrested Thursday through Saturday and charged with underage possession of alcohol, including 13 arrests at Gatsby's Bar and Billiards Parlour Saturday, a police official said.

In addition to the arrests at Gatsby's, 608 S. Illinois Ave, police arrested five at T-Birds, 111 N. Washington St.; five at Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave; and two at the American Tap, 518 S. Illinois Ave.

On the same weekend last year police records show 18 people were charged and arrested for underage alcohol related violations.

Neal Jacobson, executive assistant to the chief of police, said police responded to an anonymous call saying there were underage drinkers in Gatsby's.

But Jacobson said the number of arrests depended

Students can get software at Faner

Computer virus still could infect disks

By Miguel Alba
Staff Writer

Personal computer software is available again at the Faner Lab after lab officials discontinued its use due to the discovery of a computer virus in the software, but the possibility of reinfecting the software still exists.

Lawrence Hengehold, director of computing affairs, said the possibility of reinfecting the software exists because any lab user who has an infected disk could recontaminate the software.

"There is no way to secure that the virus will not come back," he said. "Students must protect themselves."

Suspicious first arose when users of personal computers at the Faner Lab began complaining about lost data the week of Oct. 17.

So far, about 200 computer science students have fallen victim to the virus. They are experiencing problems getting assignments done because of it.

Since the virus has been discovered just recently, the number of cases involving virus damage is uncertain.

"There is really no way to estimate the extent of the virus," Hengehold said, adding there could be more cases involving virus damage yet to come.

Hengehold said the practice of regularly checking for the virus and taking precautions so the virus does not have a chance to infect other disks is the key to combating the problem.

Hengehold said lab workers will be checking disks regularly at first to make sure the virus does not infect the software. But, this process is made difficult by the number of users in the lab, he said.

The Pakistani Virus, so named for its place of origin, is a computer program that scrambles data. Like a real biological virus it spreads, usually without the users knowledge.

Thomas Hazel, graduate student in computer science, said the virus hides in the information on the disk that tells the system what to do,

"the boot record," or in the information on the disk that operates the system, the "command.com."

The virus is transferred to a clean disk by using an infected disk, or by using a computer that has the virus in its memory.

"It only takes a few seconds to turn off a computer (this kills everything in the computer's memory), or calling up the directory (a list of all files on a disk) to see if your disk is infected," Hengehold said.

The virus appears under the file name "(c) brain", after the virus has been transferred an unspecified number of times. When the file is opened, the user will see, "Welcome to the dungeon. Contact Basil & Amjad for the vaccine." A vaccine is the cure for a virus.

Amjad and Basil Farooq are the two Pakistani brothers who created the virus. They intended to discourage the use of selling illegally copied software. The brothers sold infected Lotus 1-2-3 programs to American tourists for as little as $1.50. Lotus 1-2-3 usually sells for several hundred dollars in the United States.

Officials at the Faner Lab, the lab in the Communications Building, and the "help desk" in Wham, are distributing information on how to deal with the virus and what to do if your disk is contaminated.

"If you think your disk is infected, bring it to the lab, let the lab people check it out," Hengehold said.

It is possible to save the information on disks with the virus.

Hengehold said there is no possibility of the Pakistani Virus infecting the University mainframe because it is written specifically for microcomputers.

But, in the past, a virus called "Christmas tree" infected the mainframe.

"That virus made a picture of a Christmas tree on the screen," Hengehold said. "It was a nuisance. But, we caught it in time."

Hengehold said the mainframe is carefully monitored for such things.

Terrorist attack kills 2, injures 40 in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — A powerful car bomb killed two black men and wounded more than 40 other people, including two pregnant women in a coal mining center Monday in the deadliest terrorist attack in four months, police and hospital sources said. Police Capt. Ruben Bloomberg said two black men died but he declined to comment on a witness's report that two mutilated bodies were found in the wrecked car in downtown Witbank, a mining town 80 miles west of Johannesburg.

Israeli jets hit suspected Arab guerrilla base

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli warplanes, striking within range of Syrian anti-aircraft guns, destroyed an Arab guerrilla base Monday in eastern Lebanon hours after ground troops captured a seven-member Palestinian death squad that had taken a Lebanese family hostage, security sources said.

Miriam hits El Salvador with torrential rains

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — Tropical Storm Miriam, the reincarnation of deadly Hurricane Joan, hit El Salvador Monday with torrential rains and strong winds but left little damage compared to devastated Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Nicaraguan and Costa Rican authorities began distributing international aid and cleaning up the weekend damage from Joan.

Iraq will honor new OPEC oil price ceilings

MANAMA, Bahrain (UPI) — Iraq said Monday it is ready to honor any OPEC agreement that raises world oil prices by setting new ceilings on the oil cartel's output. Iraq is ready to take part in any agreement, provided this production is in line with demand for oil on the world market, Iraqi Oil Minister Issam Abdulrahman Chalabi said in a statement carried by the Iraqi News Agency.

Treasury official: U.S. trade deficit to shrink

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said Monday the huge U.S. trade deficit will shrink even if the dollar stays at its current levels but accused Taiwan and South Korea of manipulating their exchange rates. In his first report to Congress under the new omnibus trade law, Brady refused to make explicit recommendations about the dollar's value or the size of trade deficit the United States can sustain without economic dislocations.

Reagan: Sanctions failed to end apartheid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Holding firm to a position overridden by Congress, President Reagan insisted Monday that economic sanctions enacted over his strenuous objection have not moved South Africa toward an end of apartheid. In an annual report to the Senate, required by the 1986 legislation that penalized South Africa for its policy of racial separation, Reagan said the sanctions haven't been successful.

Manhattan building collapses on busy street

NEW YORK (UPI) — A section of a six-story commercial building collapsed on busy midtown Manhattan street Monday afternoon, injuring at least nine people and leaving up to five others unaccounted for, officials said. The collapse created a commuters' nightmare during rush hour, forcing officials to slow subway service on 11 different lines.

Marion brothers to face charges in Florida first

MARION (UPI) — Two Marion brothers arrested after a bullet-punctuated, high-speed chase will stand trial in Florida before being returned to Illinois to face charges of armed robbery and kidnapping, authorities said Monday. Williamson County Assistant State's Attorney Michael Riffley said Florida authorities told him Monday they will proceed first in trying Kenneth Gravatt, 23, and his brother, Michael, 19, on a variety of charges including a attempted murder.

Dirty Dancers get audience moving

Contours perform songs from movie

By Beth Clevin
Entertainment Editor

People of all ages had the time of their lives Thursday night when Dirty Dancers — The Concert Tour hit the Arena.

The concert began at 7:30 p.m. with the Dirty Dancing Band playing a medley of songs from the movie. The Dirty Dancers entertained next with the same closeness and excitement found in the movie.

After the dancers got the crowd going with their routines to songs, such as "Wipe Out," the Contours hit the stage, performing some of their original hits from the '60s.

People of all ages joined in the fun, dancing at their seats.

The group, dressed in green silk shirts and white pants, did their own synchronized brand of dancing while they sang, and the Dirty Dancers providing some background moves.

One of the unique features of the evening included the Dirty Dancers showing the crowd some of their moves. People of all ages joined in the fun and danced at their seats, performing moves such as the pony, the twist and other dirty dances made famous by the movie.

The dancers then went out into the crowd to teach their moves, while two Carbondale couples, who won the dirty dancing contest, got their chance to perform on stage.

The Contours returned to the stage to perform their hit from the movie, "Do You Love Me?" one of the favorites of the crowd, while the Dirty Dancers did their thing. Each of the five Contours took his turn in thrilling the crowd by dancing center stage.

A 15-minute intermission was held while the stage was set for the second and better half of the performance.

Following the break, more emphasis was placed on the movie as the dancers performed actual dances from the release. They excited the crowd with their dances to "Hungry Eyes" and the mambo.

One couple did a short portion of the dance to "I've Had the Time of My Life," introducing the highlight of the night, Bill Medley.

Medley, who was a member of the Righteous Brothers for over 20 years, sang favorites, such as "Let the Good Times Roll" and "Old Time Rock 'n Roll."

The Dirty Dancers perform at the Arena Thursday night.

He ended with the concert hit, "I've Had the Time of My Life," his Oscar-winning duet with Jennifer Warnes, which he sang with his backup singers.

The concert attracted people of all ages and entertained them. Very few concerts attract such a diverse crowd, and this was one of its strong points.

Although the performance began with dialogue from the beginning of the movie and included some of the favorite scenes, it didn't stay with this format, featuring several songs not associated with the movie

Rap duo to play at Shryock

A night of rappin' is on tap at Shryock Auditorium at 8 p.m. Nov. 12 with D.J. Jazzy Jeff and The Fresh Prince.

The group is on tour, debuting their new album, "He's the D.J., I'm the Rapper," with the songs "Parents Just Don't Understand" and "A Nightmare on My Street."

Jazzy Jeff, from the Philadelphia area, began deejaying at parties when he was 10 years old. He taught himself recording techniques by working in his basement.

Jeff soon became known as one of the top deejays in the city, but found his niche after meeting the Fresh Prince.

Prince began rapping at 13, when he was known as Prince Charming. He kept up with the New York rap scene and teamed up with Ready Rock-C in high school.

In 1986, Prince picked up a microphone at a neighborhood party deejayed by Jeff. The two hit it off and have been together since then.

Tickets for the performance are $14.50 for SIUC students and $15.50 for the general public and will go on sale at 7:30 a.m. Thursday at the Student Center central ticket office.

Line reservation cards will be distributed at 6:30 a.m. Thursday at the west patio of the Student Center on a first-come, first-serve basis.

The performance is a SPC consorts presentation.

I SUPPORT COLLECTIVE BARGAINING BECAUSE I HAVE BEEN IT WORK

I am in favor of collective bargaining because I have worked on a campus with a collective bargaining contract and I have seen the good that it can do for the faculty. Oakland University is a medium-sized state university in Michigan; I taught there from 1977 to 1984, earning tenure and promotion and chairing the Department of Theatre and Dance. The Oakland faculty turned to collective bargaining in order to achieve salary parity with local public school teachers who were bargaining. Not only did we achieve that goal, but Oakland has been ranked 1 or 1* (the highest rating) in annual AAUP salary comparisons for many years. SIUC, in comparison, ranks 4 (the lowest possible rating).

But the most important provisions of the Oakland contract, from the point of view of the faculty, had to do with binding arbitration of grievances, including tenure denials. Under the Oakland contract, a faculty committee at the College level made the first recommendation regarding tenure; a faculty committee at the University level then conducted a de novo review and made an independent recommendation; the administration then made its decision. If the two faculty recommendations were positive, and the administration reversed, binding arbitration was mandatory; if the two faculty recommendations were opposite, and the administration made a negative decision, binding arbitration was up to the Faculty Association. In the first fifteen years of the contract, eight cases of tenure denial went to binding arbitration; the faculty member won seven of those cases.

Later, the administration began routinely denying promotions to full professor. The Faculty Association responded by negotiating binding arbitration for denials of promotion as well. Amazingly, the same people who had been denied promotion were now promoted, without the use of arbitration. The administration had learned its lesson.

Why am I in favor of collective bargaining? Because I have seen it work.

Kudos from the Daily Egyptian

THE DAILY Egyptian would like to take this opportunity congratulate SIU-C faculty, students and citizens of Carbondale for the work they have done to enhance the community.

Richard Russo, associate professor of English, for the recent publication of his second work of fiction, "The Risk Pool." His first novel, "Mohawk," currently is under production with Light Year Entertainment to be made into a motion picture.

HENSLEY WOODBRIDGE, professor of foreign languages, who recently attended a three-day conference in Managua, Nicaragua, for the 100th anniversary of Ruben Dario, Nicaragua's most famous author. Woodbridge met and talked with President Daniel Ortega.

Wendy Lucero, SIU-C graduate and U.S. Olympic diver, who placed sixth in the three-meter springboard at the Seoul Games. Lucero is considered a medal hopeful for the 1991 Olympic Games to be held in Barcelona, Spain.

ALL THE people who helped in staging Arts in Celebration at Turley Park Oct. 1 and 2. The event, more than a year in preparation, wonderfully showcased the variety of arts in the Southern Illinois area. This is an event that should be continued.

The handful of people who helped halt timber cutting in the Cave Valley and Bear Creek areas of the Shawnee National Forest. This small group of people proved that fighting for what you believe in can pay off.

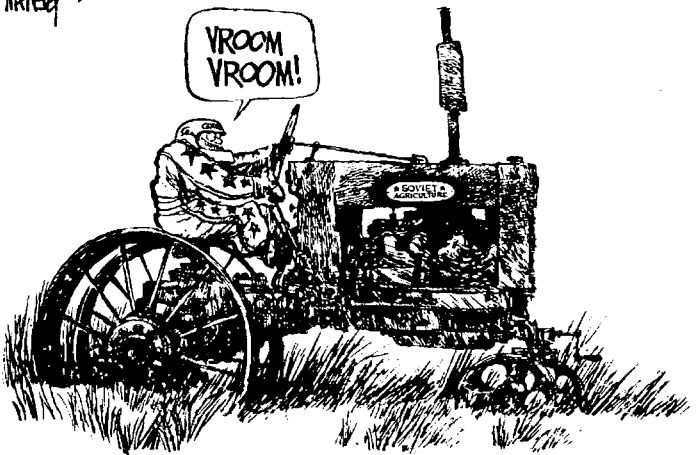

Anthony Cuvo, professor at the University's Rehabilitation Institute, who was named a fellow for his research on how the mentally retarded learn and retain new skills.

PRESIDENT JOHN Guyon and the various women's groups for addressing issues affecting women. Guyon, with urgings from the area women's groups, recently appointed a women's task force committee at SIU-C and revised the sexual harassment policy.

Ed Shea, professor emeritus in physical education and world record holder in the 200-meter backstroke with a time of 3:18.03 for the 70- to 74-year-old age division. Shea is defending his title in Brisbane, Australia at the 1988 World Masters Swimming Championships.

May Dorsey, a 102-year-old SIU alumna. Not only an inspiration to many, Dorsey is a font of information on the changes that have taken place in the area since she graduated in 1909.

Answering questions on IEA

This letter is in response to Ms. Hees' letter — a letter which appeared to be critical of the IEA-NEA efforts to bring collective bargaining to the SIU-C campus. In that letter she asked questions and made charges which I will, in part, try to answer.

She is concerned that IEA-NEA members' dues from elsewhere are being used for organizing purposes on this campus. In fact, the majority of these members voted to have a portion of their dues used for this purpose. They would (and should) be distressed if the money was used otherwise. On those other campuses, non-union faculty's "fair share" assessments (a lesser amount than membership dues) were used only to bargain for and represent those faculty on their respective campuses.

Ms. Hees charges that IEA-NEA mailings have created a paper mill and a burden upon our staff. This university and every other university has an inherent paper mill problem. All of the IEA-NEA, UP-AFT, FFFC, and SIU-C administration anti-bargaining mailings are an insignificant portion of the paper mill. We have a right to information on all sides of the issues.

Hopefully, this issue will be decided by informed voters on November 16. Ms. Hees, there is information in the material you are dismissing as propaganda.

Ms. Hees expressed dismay at her own estimate of approximately $1.2 million spent by IEA-NEA in an attempt to organize this campus. I don't know if her estimate is accurate, but let us assume it is. NEA is a large and influential group, nationwide with 1.7 million members. Over the three-plus years of organizing effort at SIU-C, this amounts to a few cents per member per year. From another standpoint, if it comes to pass that I am to work under collective bargaining and have my benefits, raises, and working conditions determined by a bargaining agreement, I certainly don't want my union operating on a shoestring budget and picking up volunteer help where and when it can.

Ms. Hees complains of a burden from professional society dues which she currently pays. Most of us pay dues to our respective professional societies. It appears that her dues are considerably higher than most. May I close with some questions? Are her dues directly or indirectly conditional to her employment at SIU? (I suspect they are). Is she not being compensated sufficiently at present so those dues are not a burden? Could a collective bargaining unit negotiate compensation for those dues into her contract? —Louis E. Strack, associate professor, animal science, food and nutrition.

Editorial perpetuates myths

As the women who are under lock and key are taking "measures that collectively approach the security of a maximum security penitentiary" and the men attempting to date them, we would like to collectively refute certain myths we feel were perpetuated by the General Editorial of Wednesday, Oct. 19, edition of the DE.

Let us first say we do applaud the newspaper's support of the event and their efforts to educate the public. But we feel that the editors are laboring under certain misconceptions we wish to address.

These are 1. that violence against women is framed around men's concerns. The initial concern should not be men's social needs, but women's need to survive without constant fear and apprehension. 2. that "sometimes" coercive means "employed in pursuit of sexual relations" can be condoned. Sexual violence has little to do with sex. It is an issue of power and the need to dominate and objectify another. To promote this issue as purely "sexual" is a falsehood and violence never has anything to do with a healthy relationship. 3. that these research statistics might be "entirely accurate" or "suspect" as the editors have discounted feminist research. We must question their use of such research at all. According to the FBI, one in four women will be raped in her lifetime. This statistic is rapidly increasing to one in three. 4. that women's sexual preference as in any way connected to their political and personal beliefs and actions. While we applaud the effort to dispel such myths we question bringing them up into any light whatsoever. 5. that men's place is with "the boys" at the Brother Peace. The Brother Peace movement is open to all and works to end violence against women, not to obtain dates for men. Women's safety concerns everyone and this week's events are for everyone.

We do not want our hard work undone by ignorance or "good intentions." Violence is everywhere and is killing us all. Our point is not to persecute, but to clarify. As concerned women and men, we fervently work and hope for a safe world for all—Cynthia Schnatmann, senior, consumer economics and family management.

BASA actions contain message

I, as an African-American student, would like to commend, congratulate, and thank the Black American Studies Association for their call for Dr. Seymour Bryson's resignation as Affirmative Action officer here at SIU-C. My interpretation of the message which the BASA is trying to convey is threefold.

First, the BASA is of course sending a communique to Dr. Bryson himself. The message is one that, like both Roger Ivy and Franz Mullings alluded to, Malcolm X stated many times throughout his literature and speeches; if you're not a part of the solution, you are a part of the problem. Dr. Bryson has demonstrated by his actions that not only is he not a conductor through which justice here at SIU-C can flow, but indeed is a resistor of the progress of African-American students as a whole.

Secondly, the message is directed at other black administrators whose commitment to the academic success of African-American students as a whole is in question. It is not enough for Black administrators to further their own personal interest without regard for their inherent responsibility to the masses of those of African descent. Their responsibility arises out of the sacrifices made by our ancestors that, in fact, made the status quo possible for both black administrators and students. The African-American student body here at SIU cannot and will not support black administrators who do not exhibit a passionate commitment to the further progress of the African-American masses.

Finally, the message is aimed at future SIU African-American administrators, some of whom are surely among the present situation in the initial act in a socialization process which will develop a truly strong group of African-American administrators with an agenda to further the cause of our people on the university level at SIU.

It is unfortunate that Dr. Bryson, a brother, has to be the target of such action that should be aimed at those who wittingly employed him as a shield behind which to disguise their cowardly deeds. What is more disturbing is that he allowed himself to be manipulated in such a manner. However, it is the duty of those African-American student leaders to bring the truths to light and see that justice be done, as Malcolm would say, "by any means necessary."—Glenn E. Hill, senior, economics.

USG a bunch of pseudo-politicians

The recent hullabaloo within the Undergraduate Student Government has caused me to wonder just what these folks are up to, and I'm sure I'm not the only one wondering.

The students of SIU-C elected the USG members to represent them and to protect and promote their interests.

What they have received in return for their good-faith vote appears to be a bunch of self-serving pseudo-politicians.

If I were an undergraduate, I'm not sure I'd admit to having voted for any of the USG representatives.

I think it is about time the USG re-evaluated its mission, stop all this impeachment nonsense and get back to the work they were elected to perform.

I think Gus Bode would agree with me when I say to the USG, "Children, play nice." —Irwin L. Faulkner, Murphysboro.

No night transit on Friday

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

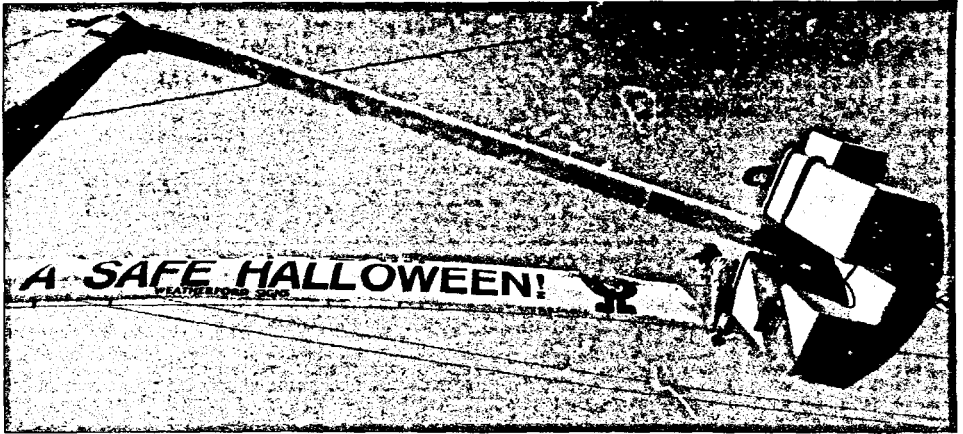

Upcoming Halloween festivities will result in the cancellation of the Night Safety Vans and Women's Transit services Friday night. John R. Knauer, supervisor of the safety van system, said that congested streets on the strip and Grand Avenue would make punctual service impossible.

The Night Safety Vans are designated to provide student transit to and from educational activities, Knauer said.

Van schedules are normally in operation six nights a week, Sunday through Friday, but the crowded Halloween celebration disrupts Friday evening service each October, Knauer said.

Knauer said in his two years as Women's Transit supervisor, no complaints have ever reached his desk about service cancellation at Halloween.

Students unable to drive themselves home from this weekend's festivities on the strip may take advantage of a designated driver booth to be set up in the Public Relations Student Society of America Safety Tent across from the Rec Center on Grand Avenue.

Ultraviolet, a band from Chicago, will finish off the night. Bob Wall, one of the band's members, is an SIUC graduate and played in the Carbondale-based band The Bras and the Hellcats.

Each of the bands will play about an hour.

Stokes, who plays with Four

"It's better planned this year," he said.

Stokes, sound technician and consultant at Gatsby's, said they may have a problem if it rains, because of the possible damage done to the equipment.

Student to show design in contest

By Theresa Livingston
Staff Writer

Tomorrow, while most students are in class, Vince Quevedo will be representing the clothing and textiles department in Vocational Education Studies as a finalist in a state-wide design contest.

"It's an excellent opportunity for students to show their designs," Quevedo said.

Each of the 400 contestants submitted an illustration, from which 27 finalists were selected. The finalists' entries are on exhibit in the Chicago Sun Times building, with each designer being invited to show the finished garment.

Sponsored by the Chicago Fashion Group, the contest is divided into the categories of evening wear, casual wear, children's wear, career wear and best illustration.

Quevedo, a doctoral candidate from Bloomington, said the entrants are mostly students from the Chicago area.

"It is unusual for someone from downstate to reach the finals," he said.

Quevedo, who is competing in the formal wear division, is the second person in the University's history to make it past the preliminary judging of the "prestigious event."

A previous entry submitted two years ago by a former student in the department placed second in its division.

Quevedo's entry is a formal strapless gown of pink and black satin. Designed with debutantes in mind, the dress features a flounce headpiece and a lengthy detachable train which doubles as a cape.

People need to learn how to deal with grief

By Phyllis Coon
Staff Writer

Laughter to tears, everyone grieves for a loss differently, an associate professor of mortuary sciences said.

To teach people that their grieving reactions are normal, the Illinois Funeral Directors Association has been lecturing to schools and community groups, George Poston, assistant professor of mortuary sciences, said.

"We can't pinpoint or specifically say how someone will grieve," Poston, who was appointed to the Education Committee of the Illinois Funeral Directors Association, said. "To educate or talk about grief, you have to talk in general terms."

While people commonly think of grief occurring after a death, Poston said people grieve for a number of reasons, including loss from a divorce or moving away from friends.

Some of the more common reactions include depression, anger and a period of time when the grieving person shuts out the people around them, Poston said.

Funeral directors are able to pinpoint reactions at a one-on-one meeting, he said. "This is when we can talk more about specific reactions," Poston said.

Many people do not think that children grieve, Poston said. But children pick up a lot of their parents' reactions, he said.

"Children do grieve," Poston said. "It may be different outward. A child may swing by themselves."

Another time children may pick up a reaction is when they see a parent crying over a loss and the children want to know why, Poston said. This usually is the first time parents begin explaining grief, he said.

"Like sex education, explaining grief is something that parents might rather have someone else do," Poston said.

School education on grief became common in the late 1960s, he said. In high schools, students usually are educated on grief in a health class. In grade schools students are taught about grief through a lecture and film session, he said.

The films, which are eight to 17 minutes long, explain the stages of grief, Poston said.

"The films are very short and set the mood for a discussion or are supplements to what is going to be talked about," Poston said.

There are many theories of how to approach the subject, he said.

"But someone speaking on the subject has to remember to speak on the level of the people they are talking to," Poston said.

Some people think education should start with the death of a pet or with the fall season and the falling leaves, Poston said.

"But most people agree explaining grief should be explained before a death occurs," Poston said. "Getting into the schools really helps prepare students."

May people ask how long grieving will last, he said.

"Each person will grieve for a different length of time," Poston said. "People usually don't stop grieving. They remember on holidays, anniversaries, birthdays. A loss is something someone will carry with them forever."

The Illinois Funeral Directors Association is a not-for-profit organization that provides consumer information and audiovisual resources for schools, churches and civic organizations on the subjects of grief, funerals and death education.

A master key is a key that provides access to several locks. Each submaster key provides access to a few of the locks that the master has access to.

Antoine Kellum, a fourth floor freshman with an undecided major, said "It is no problem. I guess if I was locked out it would be a problem but I'm staying right here."

Kirk said, "Some employees need keys to get into things, so there are a lot of keys out there. What makes me mad is some schools don't even bother to recore when they've lost a master key. But we want to be safe. It is conceivable that someone might find the key and understand the code on it. It is our policy to be real, real safe about it."

Kirk said the staff member did not lose his job.

"It wasn't a case of someone being extremely careless. It could've happened to anyone. He will have to accept some of the financial responsibility," Kirk said.

The staff member will have to pay $100 or 10 percent of the cost, whichever is more, Kirk said.

The rest of the money will come from operating expenses, Kirk said.

The key has been lost for a few days, Kirk said. The staff member had tried to search for it in his apartment and eventually concluded it had probably gone down the trash chute.

"It's probably went to the landfill and is buried somewhere," Kirk said.

"We generally don't have many building masters. One result of this is that we're in the process of deciding not to have one key again. Security will need a master, but generally we will use submasters," he said.

"If you keep a submaster key on a ring you could lose a lot of keys if you lost the ring but hopefully the ring is harder to lose. It is bulkier and if it goes down the trash chute, it will make a lot of noise. I wish we'd been that smart up front," Kirk said.

more on availability of manpower than a tip that there were underage drinkers in a bar on the strip.

"As a matter of course our department does perform routine bar checks" for underage drinking, Jacobson said.

The police news summary for the weekend said "with more time and manpower many more could have been arrested."

Jacobson couldn't comment on how many underage drinking violations usually are processed by police, but he said, "This one particular incident (at Gatsby's) may have inflated" the number of arrests this weekend.

Gatsby's would not comment on the arrests.

New design links computers cheaply

CHICAGO (UPI) — A researcher at the University of Illinois said Monday he has made a leap in computer design, linking several computers in a way that could cheaply but dramatically boost the speed of supercomputers.

The development could be used to bind smaller computers into a unit as fast and powerful as a supercomputer, but at a fraction of the cost.

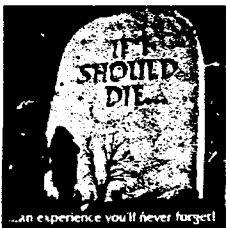

David Kuck, director of Illinois' Center for Supercomputing Research and Development, said a team at the Champaign-Urbana campus devised architecture for two clusters of two processors and memory units allowing them to break up and efficiently tackle parts of a problem simultaneously, known as parallel processing. Processors are the basic working units of computers.

Kuck said the design allows for expansion and he expects to have 32 processors linked with the new system of hardware switches and software, or computer instructions, by mid-1989. Theoretically, the architecture, dubbed the "Cedar System," could coordinate the work of up to 256 processors.

"It's a very nice network for interconnecting processors and memories in a way that's very fast," Kuck said.

Kuck said most supercomputers, including America's fastest Cray supercomputers, have been struggling to achieve greater speeds by improving the speed of a single, very expensive processor. A better approach, he said, would be to link multiples of less expensive processors, adding more speed with each processor.

Hospitals compete for trauma centers

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — The Public Health Department has finally completed the task of designating trauma centers at Illinois hospitals under a 2-year-old law — a process which led to a battle between rival hospitals in one downtown community.

The new system was required by a 1986 state law revamping the state's hospital network by designating trauma centers in 10 regions, with top-ranked regional hospitals drafting guidelines for how designated facilities should respond to severe medical emergencies.

The agency considered applications of 87 hospitals wanting their emergency facilities designated as trauma centers. There are two types — level one, with essential services available 24-hours-a-day — or level two, with some essential services around the clock and others available within 30 or 60 minutes. The agency is expected to release a final list of level one and level two facilities this week.

The competition for trauma center designation grew fierce in Champaign-Urbana, where cross-town rivals Burnham Hospital and Carle Foundation Hospital each applied to receive level one designation.

Under state law, both hospitals could win level one trauma status if qualified. But the hospitals became embroiled in a feud which resulted in charges of staff piracy and influence peddling in an effort to make only one of the facilities eligible for top status.

Burnham officials were formally notified on Monday the Public Health Department denied their level one application because they have only one staff neurosurgeon and do not meet the 24-hour staffing requirement, said Sandi Jones, assistant administrator at Burnham.

Burnham had two staff neurosurgeons, enough to meet level one requirements, but cross-town rival Carle Foundation hired them both away, and Burnham could recruit only one replacement, Jones said. Burnham officials contend one staff neurosurgeon and arrangements with an area clinic should meet level one standards, she said.

Jones said Carle Foundation, which was granted level one status in August, also orchestrated a lobbying campaign urging state legislators and Public Health officials to deny Burnham's application.

"Their pipeline in the Public Health Department is apparent," Jones said.

Police Blotter

John Zomot, 21, of 413 E. Freeman St., reported someone entered his residence and took a portable radio and television sometime between 3:30 p.m. and 4:45 p.m. Sunday, Carbondale Police said. Loss is estimated at $180.

Michael Vaughn, 22, of 407 W. Elm St. reported someone entered his residence sometime between 8:30 p.m. Saturday and 1:50 a.m. Sunday, Carbondale Police said. Vaughn said a book of personal checks was stolen, police said. Loss was estimated at $10.

Reforms wanted by candidates

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — Legislative candidates support creation of a state Ethics Commission, tougher lobbyist disclosure laws and support bans on top state workers returning to lobby their former colleagues, Common Cause officials said Monday.

Common Cause, a political watchdog group, said it bases its conclusions on a written survey of legislative candidates. Officials said 116 candidates, including 58 incumbents and 58 challengers, responded to the survey that questioned them on their support for potential changes in laws affecting lobbyist disclosure, conflicts of interest, campaign financing, financial disclosure and judicial selection.

■ More than 80 percent favored requiring lobbyists to report certain expenditures currently excluded from lobbyist disclosure statements, such as expenditures for "golf day" tickets.

■ 69 percent said they would support creation of an ethics commission with powers to investigate alleged ethics violations by public officials and lobbyists.

■ 60 percent said they would favor a gubernatorial campaign finance reform package that included limits on contributions and expenditures combined with some public funding and 55 percent favored a similar package for legislative races.

■ 62 percent said they would support prohibitions on top state employees returning to lobby their former colleagues for two years.

■ At least 70 percent favored adding certain items to the financial disclosure statements of public officials.

AIDS victim supports Dukakis, increased disease awareness

Editor's note: The St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently sent its reporters around the country to gather interviews with ordinary voters who will help choose the next president. This is one story in a series.

By Patrick E. Gausen
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

SAN FRANCISCO — On an October afternoon that set a high temperature record at 93 degrees, Rick Graham sat in a warm office and slipped a heavy sweater over his polo shirt. He is notably lean, like a professional dancer, which in fact he used to be.

But he dances no more. In San Francisco, with the nation's highest rate of AIDS, Graham's chills and drawn features are symptoms of yet another young person sentenced by the disease to death.

At 37, Graham plans to cast what almost certainly will be his last presidential vote for Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, while lamenting the absence of a stronger advocate for his cause.

"WE'VE HAD eight years of national government which has totally ignored the problem of AIDS," he said. "I

"President Reagan has never made a major speech about AIDS or visited an AIDS hospice."

really want to say they've let people die who didn't have to die. They let people get sick who should not have gotten sick."

While more money is needed for research and assistance, he said, of greater importance is national leadership to promote education about the disease. But there has been next to no leadership from President Ronald Reagan, he charged, and he expects only a little better performance if Vice President George Bush, the

Olympic team honored at White House

WASHINGTON (UPI) — With the kind of pageantry and imagery that has become a trademark of his White House, President Reagan paid tribute to the U.S. Summer Olympic team Monday for a drug-free performance that "showered the world."

Under bright sunshine on the South Lawn, Reagan welcomed the men and women of the 611-member team to the White House as heroes one and all.

"I believe people who go out and give their all in fair and competitive sport are winners," he said. "In Seoul, we claimed 94 medals and 611 winners. All of you, you're 611 reasons for America to be proud."

Though the U.S. team fared third in the medal tally in Seoul, behind the Soviet Union and East Germany, there was no disappointment in the air.

Republican nominee, replaces him.

"President Reagan has never made a major speech about AIDS or had someone with AIDS to the White House for dinner or visited an AIDS hospice," he complained.

WHILE DUKAKIS, the Democratic candidate, has not given AIDS the priority Graham wants, the Democrats are "the party of acceptance, the party of inclusion," he said. "The only response from either campaign has been from the Democrats. The only concern in Congress has been from the Democrats. So I'm not just voting for a president, I'm voting for a history. And the Republicans' past has been abysmal."

He added, "I'm not voting on just the one issue. And on all the other issues I believe Dukakis is the right man."

Graham met in San Francisco recently with Kitty Dukakis, the candidate's wife, and said she had left behind a hope that she might embrace the cause as a special project if her husband were elected.

ALSO, DUKAKIS stirred support among Californians who have AIDS by denouncing a state ballot proposition to require official reporting of all positive AIDS test results. Under current state law, the results can be kept confidential.

"Dukakis put himself on the line on a volatile issue," Graham said with appreciation.

Graham developed a strong respect for politics, he said, after handing out literature at age 10 for John F. Kennedy's successful Democratic campaign.

"Voting has always been one of the most important things in my life," he said. He considers himself independent but always voted Democratic for president.

He was an only child, raised as Anthony Richard Graham in Akron, Ohio, by a single mother. He says he realized by age 13 that he was homosexual and openly admitted it.

AFTER A successful but too consuming career as a professional dancer, he switched to accounting, moved to Washington and eventually ended up in San Francisco in 1980 as manager of a sex club for homosexual men.

In 1983, he was hospitalized 13 times for bizarre symptoms. His fever reached 107 degrees; his white blood count was at zero; his kidneys were malfunctioning. The diagnosis of AIDS-related complex was advanced in January to full-blown AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome), a fatal condition probably passed on by a sex partner.

"The average life span from diagnosis of AIDS to death is 17 months," Graham said quietly.

HE IS too weak for regular work. He lives on welfare and is president of People With AIDS-San Francisco, an activist group. He also volunteers time to the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, a $6.4-million-a-year educational and support organization that is an unofficial national clearinghouse for information.

In 1983, Graham was hospitalized 13 times for bizarre symptoms.

Graham, a former foundation staff member, answers a special hot line for people who have AIDS and want to talk with "someone who's been there."

And "being there" is not just facing mortality but losing a steady succession of friends and lovers. Managing a sort of distant smile, he explained, "The people who have died are faces before my eyes. And the ones I have left won't be with us much longer."

HE WOULD be happier, Graham said, if his last vote were for someone inspiring in the John Kennedy mold. But for Nov. 8, 1988, he said he finds no real inspiration in Bush or Dukakis.

Smiling again, Graham fixed his penetrating gray-blue eyes and said, "That's one good thing. I won't have to face another election like this one. I mean it."

HALLOWEEN'S COMING.

It's fun to go uptown for the festivities. But, remember that it's great to make it back safe and sound. Plan on a good time but keep these things in mind.

Consider that in the USA:

Almost 1/2 of all accidental deaths are alcohol related
Almost 1/2 of all convicted jail inmates were under the influence of alcohol when they committed their crime

Almost 1/2 of all homicide offenders and victims had been drinking
1/3 of all homicide victims were drunk
More than 600 rapes were reported on college campuses last year but many more went unreported
Almost 2/3 of the 13,000 students physically assaulted on campuses across the USA said the attack came after a party where alcohol was consumed.
31 of these attacks were sexual assaults.*

Maximize your fun this Halloween by playing safely. Protect yourself.

Stay with a group of friends. It's safer and more fun.

If you're drinking, eat first, sip your drinks, and know your limits.

Plan your trip to and from the "action" along the most traveled, well-lit route possible.

Both sides biting, inaccurate in TV election ads

By Cliff Hays
 Minneapolis-St. Paul Star Tribune

News Analysis

WASHINGTON — The most enduring television image of the 1988 presidential campaign may be neither George Bush nor Michael Dukakis, but an endless line of tough-looking prisoners moving in slow motion through a revolving door.

That stark, 30-second, black-and-white commercial is the punch in the gut the Bush campaign has been using to attack Dukakis over a Massachusetts prison-furlough program.

Analysts and political consultants are almost unanimous in giving Bush the edge in the complicated competition for delivering his message through television advertising. Pollster Lou Harris has said Bush ads about the furlough program and Dukakis' opposition to the death penalty have influenced more voters than anything else this year.

"Really, more than the debates, more than anything else, they have determined the set of the election until now," Harris said last week.

He said 63 percent of voters see Dukakis as soft on crime as opposed to 52 percent before the Bush attacks aired, and 49 percent term the governor out of the political mainstream compared with 34 percent who did so before the advertising.

But the battle for the White House between the Republican vice president and the Democratic governor of Massachusetts will only get more intense in the closing days of the campaign before the Nov. 8 election as they carry the fight on television screens across the nation in expensive bursts that appeal more to emotion than to reason.

Federal law allows each candidate to spend $54.4 million for the campaign.

Federal law allows each candidate to spend $54.4 million for the campaign. Robert Moebacher Sr., Bush's finance chairman, has said that $30 million to $35 million of that will be devoted to television advertising. The Dukakis campaign, spending for television will be similar.

Dukakis communications director Leslie Dach has said that the campaign was trying to buy several five- and 30-minute blocks of time on the television networks, some of which might be used to broadcast "citizen forums" with the candidate.

The blocks would be in addition to a 30-minute election-eve block that both candidates also are seeking.

In addition, Dukakis, as part of a television blitz he hopes will revive his campaign, is offering himself for television-network interviews and making himself available to major-market television outlets.

So far, the competition in television advertising has been similar to the overall competition between Bush and Dukakis.

The Bush ads have been simple, hard-hitting and aimed to achieve a consistent goal — to convince voters that Dukakis is dangerous, inexperienced, soft on crime, weak on defense and out of the political mainstream. By contrast, Bush is portrayed as a family man who would defend traditional American values.

Bush: Democrats' campaign jabs are desperate

United Press International

Republican George Bush said Monday Democratic jabs that his campaign is deceitful and racist demonstrates political desperation, but Michael Dukakis contended Bush is running from the truth because "he can't win an election where the real issues are discussed."

The GOP vice president spent the day stumping through the New England states of Connecticut, Maine and Vermont — which are not solidly in the corner of either candidate.

Responding to Democratic charges that Bush campaign commercials smeared the Massachusetts governor with deliberate distortions, the Republican candidate told a Waterbury, Conn., crowd, "I stand 100 percent behind those ads. These ads have been on the air for a long, long time."

The charges, he said, were "absolutely ridiculous" and, "People see this for what it is, a campaign tactic."

"We are not going to let up. We are not going to be deterred by the negative attack coming out of the other side," Bush said.

Since the Los Angeles debate with Bush Oct. 13, Dukakis has moved on the offensive, charging that the Republican was lying in ads that criticize the governor's stand on national defense and his anti-crime record.

"There's signs showing in the opposition camp of desperation, using ads that accuse us of lies," Bush said Monday. "Well, the record on that furlough program ... that record is no lie."

Bush contended his campaign had "complete documentation" for its commercials and Dukakis' "opposition to these essential military programs is no lie."

"He is upset not because it's false, but because he is weak on crime and defense and that's the inescapable truth," Bush argued. Of the three New England states on Bush's travel schedule Monday, Maine is considered leaning to the vice president, Vermont is likely leaning to Dukakis and the race in Connecticut is considered very close.

Of the other states in the region, Massachusetts and Rhode Island appear solid for Dukakis, while New Hampshire is strong for Bush.

Dukakis spent Monday in California, the largest election prize with 47 electoral votes.

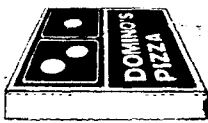

In a morning address to supporters at a rally in downtown Los Angeles, Dukakis continued his charges that Bush is running a campaign "based on distortions and distractions and outright lies."

"We're not going to let him get away with it," Dukakis promised. "Mark Twain once said that a lie can travel halfway around the world while the truth is still putting on its shoes. Mr. Bush must have read Mark Twain."

Bush, he charged, was lying because "he can't win an election where the real issues are discussed."

Despite his rhetoric, however, Dukakis refused to respond to questions about the Democratic charges that the Bush campaign was using racist tactics by highlighting the case of black convict Willie Horton, who on a weekend furlough granted under the Massachusetts program raped a Maryland woman and stabbed her boyfriend.

Campus Crusade for Christ displayed this sign along with tombstones outside the Student Center Monday to promote the showing of the film "If I Should Die." The film will be shown at the Student Center at 7 and 9 p.m. tonight.

Film shows Biblical aspect of afterlife

By Wayne Wallace
Staff Writer

Signs around campus have been hinting at it for over two weeks now.

From "If" to "If I Should," these curious advertisements were never meant to confuse students, but to make them think, according to Leon Poplawski, local director of Campus Crusade for Christ.

"If I Should Die" is the full title for the computerized slide presentation scheduled for two shows at 7 and 9 tonight in Ballroom D of the Student Center.

The film deals with life after death from the Biblical point of view, Poplawski said.

"The question really isn't 'If I should die?' but 'When will I die? How will I deal with death when it happens?'" he said.

Using nine slide projectors and three screens, "If I Should Die" gives the impression of motion, although it really isn't a movie.

Poplawski, who saw the show three years ago when Campus Crusade for Christ brought it to the University, said that a computer synchronizes the nine simultaneous projectors into a panoramic view of more than 1,000 images.

The soundtrack consists mainly of hard rock groups from the 1970s, Poplawski said.

Music from bands like Kiss and Black Sabbath will be slowed down slightly, with the lyrics printed up on the screens, but according to Poplawski, the film doesn't say anything against rock 'n' roll.

"So much rock deals with death that the film just uses these songs in an unbiased way to make its point about the certainty of death," he said.

Despite its Christian themes, "If I Should Die" is "definitely not for old ladies," Poplawski said.

'Eight Men Out' realistically portrays 1919 Series scandal

By Dave Miller
Staff Writer

"Anything can happen," Chicago White Sox manager Kid Gleason told a group of sportswriters after game seven of the 1919 World Series. Yes, even the World Series can be fixed.

"Eight Men Out," based on Eliot Asinof's book of the same name, is the story of the scandalous 1919 World Series, after which eight members of the White Sox were banned from baseball for life for allegedly fixing the fall classic.

The prohibitive favorite White Sox dropped the nine-game series with the Cincinnati Reds, five games to three.

The fix not only rocked the baseball world but shocked the nation. It was the Watergate of the 1920s. The 1919 White Sox team, the premiere franchise of the day, forever would be remembered as the "Black Sox."

The movie succeeds in relating the complex circumstances surrounding the scandal, although many events surrounding it are hotly disputed and debated to this day.

Writer and director John Sayles allows the movie to move at a leisurely pace, much the way a ballgame unfolds. The stroll through the story is welcomed as it becomes difficult at times to keep up with the many characters that play an essential role in the fix.

Sayles is to be commended

for not bowing to the Hollywood habit of making a complex story simple and of giving the actors with "marquee" value more screen time at the expense of the plot. The filmmaker could have especially succumbed to the latter with such star players as Charlie Sheen, D.B. Sweeney and John Cusack on his team.

The movie is about human nature as much as baseball. While the movie doesn't apologize for the players' involvement in the fix, it does help to explain why the players went for the fast money.

In a scene after the White Sox clinch the American League pennant, owner Charles Comiskey reneges on a promised bonus and instead gives the players bottles of flat champagne.

The movie raises a question as to whether all eight members of the team deserved to be banned for life by commissioner Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis after a jury acquitted all eight of fixing games.

A gray area exists between the organizer of the fix among the players, first baseman Chick Gandil, and the seemingly innocent left fielder, "Shoeless" Joe Jackson.

Sweeney does a good job of showing the naivete of Jackson, who took $5,000 before the series but then proceeded to hit a team-high

.375, belt Chicago's only home run and drive in six runs, while not committing an error.

Somewhere in the middle of Gandil and Jackson is third baseman Buck Weaver, played by Cusack. Cusack walks the fine line of showing Weaver's innocence and involvement in the scandal.

One of the movie's outstanding scenes has Weaver explaining his love of the game to some neighborhood kids after they asked about the fix. The kids appear periodically throughout the movie and contrast the innocence of baseball and the times with the seedy gamblers.

The baseball action, while not as good as the acting, is certainly believable.

At times, the ballpark competes for attention with the action happening in it. Comiskey Park, circa 1919, is recreated, complete with outfield billboards, a flagpole stationed in centerfield and the smokestacks of the South Side rising above the outfield walls.

"Eight Men Out" is a compelling look at a time when both kids and adults felt betrayed by their heroes. Baseball and the country would never be the same.

Neighborhood watches help to catch criminals

By Mark Barnett
Staff Writer

When communities are involved in crime prevention, the police have a better chance of catching the criminals, the Carbondale Police Department's crime prevention officer said.

"The more eyes and ears out there, the better the chance police have to catch these guys (criminals)," Art Wright, crime prevention officer, said.

October is national Crime Prevention Month. Communities can become more involved in crime prevention by joining a Neighborhood Watch group, Wright said.

Nearly 19 million Americans participate in Neighborhood Watches.

Nearly 19 million Americans participate in Neighborhood Watches, according to the Illinois Criminal Justice Information Authority. On the local level, approximately 2,500 to 3,000 volunteers participate in Carbondale's Neighborhood Watch, which is in its fifth year, Wright said. The program started in January of 1983, he said.

Carbondale's program has 52 block captains. Block captains inform residents in participating blocks what to look for when crime occurs in the area, Wright said.

Block captains receive letters from Wright that inform them of crimes that have occurred in the neighborhood and when and how they were committed.

Carbondale residents are not apathetic toward crime because of these volunteers, Wright said.

To prevent burglaries, the Carbondale Police Department offers a free service, the Home Security Survey.

At the request of Carbondale residents, Wright will inspect the residents' house and make recommendations about how it can be made safe from burglary.

Wright checks the locks on all the doors and windows in the home.

"All door locks should have at least a one-inch bolt," he said. If doors have glass on the front, then the door should have a double-cylinder lock, he said. Double-cylinder locks can be opened only by a key from both sides.

If burglars break the glass, then they can't just turn a knob to get in, he said.

More work is involved, and the more work and noise burglars have to make, the less likely it is they will continue the break-in, Wright said.

Lights also deter criminals, Wright said.

The rear of a home should be lighted. A burglar is likely to avoid houses that are well lighted near entrances, doors and windows, Wright said.

Sound in populated areas will turn away a burglar, Wright said.

Students get chance to test alcohol awareness and limits

By Miguel Alba
Staff Writer

Students anxiously waited in line to find out if they were above or below the .10 percent of alcohol to blood ratio that legally qualifies them as being intoxicated in Illinois.

Participants lined up in front of Sidetracks, 101 W. College, Thursday night to be tested by a breathalyzer as part of Alcohol Awareness Week. The tests were conducted by Carbondale detectives.

Joe Jurkovic, director of programs for the SIU-C chapter of the American Marketing Association, said the event was intended to make people aware of their limits.

"There are no strings attached here," he said. "We just want people to know what their limits are."

Matt Even, a senior in management, said he was surprised he passed. "It's nice to know I can drink that much and still be OK," he said.

Detective Echols of the Carbondale Police, said participants should wait 20 minutes after having their last drink to ensure that the results are accurate.

He said the use of foreign objects, such as pennies, gum, or mints, placed in the mouth, prior to testing, do not alter the results.

Breathalyzers are based on light absorption. Light is passed through a chamber that contains the expelled air. The light is absorbed by the alcohol molecules that are present; therefore the more alcohol molecules present, the more light absorbed. The breathalyzer computes the alcohol to blood ratio mathematically.

Classified Department, Communications Building

Tanzanian alumnus relates experiences

By Diana Mivelli
Staff Writer

After 16 years, a University graduate came back for a visit to his alma mater to tell where he has been since graduating in 1972.

F. Lwanyantika Masha explained at a lecture Friday his path from his home country, Tanzania, to New York with stops in Southern Illinois and Texas to eventually become chief of planning and evaluation of the United Nations Department of Public Information.

Masha received his bachelor's and master's degrees as well as completing his doctoral dissertation in the School of Journalism during his stay at the University.

"I am very proud to sit here now," Masha said of the classrooms he once sat in as a student. When Masha left in 1972, the Communications Building had recently been built.

Masha said he was so broke when he left the university, he missed his graduation ceremony because he needed to start work so quickly.

He went on to Canyon, Texas, where he joined the staff at West Texas State University adding to their two-member journalism faculty.

"I was the third one (in the department) and being the only one with a doctorate, they decided to put all the load on me," Masha said. He taught all the writing courses in addition to supervising the student paper and working with community relations. "It was a fascinating period."

Masha said he had applied to the United Nations for a research position before graduating. After a year in Texas he got a job as an information officer and moved to New York.

Masha later was put in charge of special projects and for the last seven years has been head of planning and evaluating of the U.N. Department of Public Information.

This position includes drawing up the budget for the whole department that includes close to 700 people with a budget of approximately $5 million.

"We have to synchronize our budget system with the rest of the departments. We monitor what is being done and what was promised to be done was done. We account for money the government gives us."

Masha said he has been involved in the discussion of the New World Information Order for several years. He is the U.N. contact for the group.

Aid office changes its name

The Office of Student Work and Financial Assistance has changed its name to the Financial Aid Office to conform to national trends, Pam Britton, director of the office, said.

The location and phone number of the office will stay the same.

"This was a decision made by (former director) Joe Camille. Basically, I think the rationale was that most financial aid offices at colleges across the nation are called Financial Aid," Britton said.

"Student work does not hold the prominence it used to. I want to emphasize we're doing the announcing but the decision was made before," she said.

Examining feelings can help identify cause of depression

By Kim Hays
Wellness Center

Jason has been experiencing insomnia and loss of appetite. He has felt sad and hopeless, and he lacks interest in activities that he used to enjoy. Jason could be suffering from what is commonly known as depression.

Depression is the most common problem people bring to mental health professionals. Most people think depression is "feeling blue" or "being down in the dumps." In fact, a variety of symptoms signal depression.

Emotional symptoms include a loss of warm feelings toward family or friends; loss of sexual desire; feelings of guilt, hopelessness, worthlessness, or shame; changes in emotions, ranging from erratic crying spells to a lack of emotional responsiveness or numbness.

Depression also has physical and behavioral symptoms. Changes in eating patterns include either compulsive overeating or a loss of appetite. Depressed people might sleep excessively or find it difficult to sleep.

Unexplained physical ailments, such as backaches, headaches, or digestive problems can accompany depression. Low energy levels, neglect of physical appearance, and an inability to cope with responsibilities also signal depression.

Many causes for depression exist, including psychological stress associated with disappointments and unhappy events that can cause mild depression. The death of a loved one also can result in depression.

However, when depression exists without an apparent cause or the symptoms do not disappear within a reasonable amount of time, a mental health professional could help identify the cause.

If students experience depression, they might examine their feelings to identify possible sources of stress.

Students can talk with a supportive friend. Talking about troubles can help students better understand the problem. Students should avoid making decisions or long-term commitments when depressed.

The SIU-C Counseling Center suggests consulting mental health professionals when pain or problems outweigh pleasures much of the time.

Gateway honor given to Salukis' Ferbrache

By David Gaillanetti
Staff Writer

Defensive end Shannon Ferbrache was named Gateway Conference defensive Player of the Week Monday by Gateway officials.

"It is a great honor; something that has been a personal goal of mine for a long time," Ferbrache said. "I just wish it could have come under a victory, but it didn't happen."

Ferbrache had 10 unassisted tackles during the Salukis' 10-9 loss last week to Northern Illinois. He also made one assisted tackle, recovered a Huskie fumble and sacked quarterback Marshall Taylor twice.

"I thought maybe I had a chance because I was real happy with the way I played,"

"It is a great honor; something that has been a personal goal of mine for a long time."

—Shannon Ferbrache

Ferbrache said, "I certainly did not expect it, but I thought I had a legitimate shot."

Ferbrache is the third Saluki to receive the league honor, joining quarterback Fred Gibson and halfback Chuck Harnke.

A Junior, Ferbrache has started at defensive tackle for two straight years. He and tight end Yogi Henderson, sidelined for the season with a knee injury, were teammates at Warren Central High School on a team ranked eighth in the nation by USA Today.

Shannon Ferbrache

Field hockey ends regular season by losing at Iowa

By Troy Taylor
Staff Writer

The field hockey team won one of its three matches in Iowa City, Iowa, finishing the regular season at 7-12. The team is awaiting its seeding for the Midwest Independents Championship, which will be held this weekend in St. Louis.

The Salukis lost 7-0 to No. 6 Iowa on Sunday. The shutout loss was the Salukis' sixth of the season and the seventh handed out by the Hawkeyes.

Tina Perrott scored two goals for Iowa, which led 3-0 by halftime.

In Saturday's game, a second half goal off a corner by senior Julie Mayor was not enough to upset Michigan. The Wolverines beat the Salukis 2-1.

Michigan had 27 shots on goal to SIU-C's 18.

Two goals by Cindy Oppermann gave the Salukis a 3-2 victory over James Madison on Friday. Oppermann tied the score at 1-1 in the first half with a goal.

Oppermann's game-winner came at 7:28 of the second half. It was her 11th goal of the season and 20th career. She moved to No. 9 on the all-time Saluki scoring ladder.

Mayor had the Salukis' other goal, a penalty corner at 19:11 that came off an assist by Klaudia Gorman and a stick-stop by Nancy Hatrich.

players before the conference season starts.

The Salukis' true season opener at home will be Nov. 30 against the University of Evansville.

"I think there will be a packed house for the home opener, as they beat us twice last season," Herrin said.

The Salukis will open their 1989 Missouri Valley campaign on Jan. 9 at home with league favorite Wichita State.

Herrin said he thinks the Shockers have the best chance to win the conference, with Bradley a strong second, despite the loss of national standout Hersey Ilawkins.

"They have Anthony Manuel

Herrin said he has discussed the schedule with the team, but starting to compete earlier in development than in the past, something the Soviets have been doing for years, Meade said.

"The Japanese were the leaders after the war. Then the Soviets moved in and took over."

Meade said the Soviets are superior gymnasts because they practice more and perform less. An American gymnast will go to school, practice and compete in 15 collegiate meets a year, he said. The Soviets practice, go to school, practice again, and compete in about seven meets a year, he said.

"They spend a lot more time in their program with sports psychologists than we do. They try different practicing techniques on machines that we don't have access to."

As for the U.S. women's team, Meade said they actually were third. Officially, the women finished fourth behind East Germany.

The United States was docked five-tenths of a point because, as the East German coach pointed out, an American alternate kneeled on the parallel bar platform while a teammate performed her routine. According to a minor rule, the only person allowed on the platform during the performance is the performer. The U.S. women's team lost to the East Germans by two-tenths of a point.

"As anyone knows, they (U.S. women gymnasts) did a tremendous job and the men just weren't very good," Meade said.

Tell it like it is, coach.

Arbitrator rules against club owners

NEW YORK (UPI) — Arbitrator George Nicolau Monday penalized baseball's club owners by granting free agency to 14 players, including right-handers Jim Clancy and Doyle Alexander.

The decision stems from a grievance won by the Players' Association, which claimed owners conspired to keep 1986 free agents from enjoying a free employment market. Nicolau ruled in the union's favor Aug. 31.

Nicolau's list included outfielder Tim Lincecum, who gave up his right to free agency Sunday by signing a three-year, $6.3 million contract with the Montreal Expos. Eligible players include catchers Alan Ashby, Bob Boone, Rich Gedman and Ernie Whitt, and second baseman Willie Randolph.

College ADs look for more money

By Gelyn Wilkins
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

When college athletics directors went to Kansas City last week, they were looking for something other than a good sirloin.

To hear some of them, they couldn't pay for it anyway. What they hoped to find was a source for more money. Budgets are high in their business these days, and cash-flow arteries are hardening.

Texas Christian University's Frank Windeger, one of the delegates to the meeting involving 104 other colleagues, picked up a report that Michigan's athletics deficit will reach $2.5 million by 1990. That's the Michigan regarded as one of the progressive of athletics programs, the Michigan that usually fills a 101,702-seat football stadium. That also is the Michigan that has to support two dozen other, less-visible sports.

Thus the Big Blue, as well as a bunch of other college outfits, could soon turn into Big Red. Unless ...

Well, why not add another game? An 11th game was added in 1970, and no one complained, except maybe a few coaches. Now the athletics directors are proposing the option of a 12th game.

They'll love it in the countries where football is the national sport — like Nebraska, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas, where athletics director Frank Broyles is one of the 12th-game cheerleaders.

It might sound as if the ADs are not only greedy but also talking out of both sides of their ledger sheets.

Those citizens would as soon expand the season to 12 months, with no open dates. The athletics directors, the cash-flow coaches, will love it. The coaches get used to it again, although Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield says, "The athletics directors are doing this, not the coaches. They would schedule 17 games if they could."

It might sound as if the ADs are not only greedy but also talking out of both sides of their ledger sheets. They're after more money, so they want to add another game, another week to the season. Yet they aren't getting around to serious talk about a national playoff, and one point of resistance to it has been the burden on players of an extended season.

Much of the resistance, however, comes from academic administrators. First they have to come around to the idea of a 12th game. Then the campaign for a playoff will begin in earnest.

Sports Analysis

"The 12th game probably won't be approved next year," Windeger said, "but it will come to pass sooner or later. And I think the playoff will, too. Those sources of revenue are out there, and we have to tap them."

They'll love it in the countries where football is the national sport — like Nebraska, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

When the 12th game was proposed in Kansas City, Windeger suggested that the season begin no earlier than Sept. 1 and end no later than Nov. 30.

"I've never been in favor of open dates anyway," Windeger says. "It helps some teams who have a lot of injuries, but generally I think it's better to play straight through."

The next step to a playoff might be considerably tougher to take. That would add up to three more games. Will the academic people go for that?

"The point is," Windeger will argue up and down the playoff campaign trail, "is that we're only talking about an extra three games for the teams that make the finals, and the extra games would be played between semesters. Even so, football players still would miss less class time than athletes in other sports miss now."

The down side of an additional game and playoffs is more pressure on the already burdened shoulders of players and coaches.

The other side is the money side. Athletics directors have to find a way to support sports that are costly but don't generate money. Another game by the football team, the principal money-maker, another offering to the TV gods, seems to them the simplest answer.

In other words, the other side, as far as Windeger and the other prospectors know, is the no-choice side.

Herrin's team to face tough schedule early

By David Gallianetti
Staff Writer

A date with a foreign team and three tournaments highlight the men's basketball schedule before preparing for Missouri Valley action in January.

game. Also, it will be nice to kick off the season on a Sunday afternoon.

On Nov. 25-27, the Salukis will cruise into Puerto Rico, for that commonwealth's invitational tournament.

"We are very fortunate to be playing at Puerto Rico, and we worked hard to make it a reality."

The Salukis will open with Toledo, standing a chance to face perennial national power Villanova.

"With a team like Villanova and (Puerto Rico's) national team, it will shape up to be a great tournament.

SIU-C will also participate in tournaments at Austin Peay on Dec. 2 and 3, and at the University of Wyoming on Dec. 29 and 30.

Herrin admitted that three tournaments is a heavy load to carry early but it should benefit the team by providing game experience.

"It gives us games," Herrin said, adding that the extra work will benefit the new

Gibson sidelined this week while nursing strained knee

By David Gallianetti

Quarterback Fred Gibson will not play Saturday at Kentucky, as he will be sidelined for at least a week with a knee injury, Coach Rick Rhoades said.

"I don't see how he can unless a miracle happens," Rhoades said. "We will probably go with Reggie (Edwards) and Scott (Gabbert) both."

the slack against the Wildcats Saturday.

"We have got to stay positive and execute like we're supposed to," Edwards said. "It is a big task, but I think I can do well. All of the offense will have to help."

Edwards said all the sudden attention generates a lot of pressure, but he personally doesn't feel any.

"Everyone is putting it on me, but I don't feel any different. I'm just going to treat it like practice."

Gabbert said the experience of playing Kentucky as a freshman is invaluable.

"I'll try not to worry about it," Gabbert said. "Being a freshman, it will be more experience for me to play Kentucky."

The freshman said he wished his playing time would have under more opportune circumstances.

"I feel sorry for Fred having to miss the game, but I suppose we'd rather have him out now and ready for the conference game when we really need him."

The Salukis are not dwelling on last week's heartbreaker with the Huskies, but looking ahead to Kentucky, right tackle Rob Mason said.

Rick Tyner, groundskeeper for Abe Martin Field, prepares the infield dirt for sod which will be laid next season.

Gibson stretched ligaments in his left leg when he was tackled early in the third quarter last week in the Salukis' 10-9 loss to Northern Illinois.

"I am really hoping for about a week," Gibson said. "I'll be rehabilitating real hard and hope I can bounce back. It really hurts right now."

Gibson said although he has been having knee troubles, the twist his leg took as a result of the tackle is really the cause of the problem.

Edwards and Gabbert both said they are ready to take up his role—pretty good about how we played through the first three quarters," Mason said. "We felt we should have won, but didn't deserve to. We are raring to go, and look at it as an opportunity to showcase ourselves against a classy team."

Mason said the fact that the Wildcats have not seen the wishbone often, could be to the Salukis advantage.

"They haven't seen a true wishbone in about four years, so one week to try and stop it is not a long time. We feel like we're in a pretty good position."

Bill Meade a man of many words

For a man who has seen enough Olympic Games to be able to sing each country's national anthem from memory — and given the chance, he would — this year's Games in Seoul had a lot of firsts.

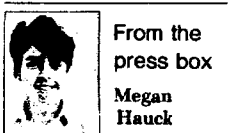

Of course, Bill Meade, the men's gymnastics coach, is always looking for something unusual to do and say.

"I've never met so many people with bad breath before," Meade said. "Everybody in Korea has bad breath. I could not hold my breath long enough to get out of town."

"It's from kimchi. It comes in three levels, and if you get the red, you start to sweat behind the knees and above your lip. If you think Mexican food is hot, this is on a whole new plane."

Meade, who ate fish, pizza and pork, but stayed clear of "hot dogs because they were made from real dogs," said the 1988 Olympics was one of the safest he's been to.

"I didn't see one firearm on security personnel over there," he said. "(Koreans) certainly aren't a friendly-looking people, but they acted friendly enough."

"Security there was probably equal to the 1964 Olympics in Tokyo when all the gangsters left town."

Meade, who spent 10 days at the Games in Korea, said he has never been to a country where people smoke as much as the Koreans.

"About 80 percent of them smoke," he said. "Judging from all the smog there, they probably smoke in self-defense."

On a more serious note, Meade said the Korean's hosting the Games were able to show the rest of the world a nation that is highly industrialized.

He found it hard to believe that just 37 miles north of where he stayed, 40,000 troops separate communist North Korea from South Korea, he said.

"I took the time one day to go up there, and it is hard to believe, being back in the United States, that there are places in the world where conditions are so tense that you are instructed not to point or make any kind of gesture."

Meade's stay in Korea wasn't all fun and Games. He was one of several Americans who videotaped each team's performances to benefit American gymnasts in the future.

The U.S. men's gymnastics team, which finished 11th in a field of 12, had key members injured. Those who weren't injured were young and performed poorly, Meade said.

Baseball team's field ready for off-season

Abe Martin Field is getting its yearly check-up, but this fall's will be more encompassing than those in past seasons.

Rick Tyner, maintenance laborer for the University, has taken over retired Abe Martin groundskeeper Leo Danley's job of getting the field game-perfect for SIU-C baseball players.

Tyner's list of things to do includes refurbishing the infield, especially the pitcher's mound and the bases. Erosion caused by wind and rain removes dirt from the infield, creating pockets that hold water. Dirt and sod must be added to the infield and inner edge of the outfield about once every two or three years to fill in these pockets.

The pitcher's mound must be tilled and re-built each year to keep up with NCAA regulations, which states that the mound measure 15-inches higher than the batter's box.

"Each time a pitcher steps down dirt is loosened, making the mound bigger and more flat," Tyner said. "Re-building it makes a pitcher about three or four miles (per pitch) faster."

Mike Perkins, assistant athletics director of scheduling and facilities, said about 45 tons of dirt has been added to the field, raising it three-quarters of an inch, and about 350 square yards of sod will be added before this year's refurbishing is complete.

"We do something to the field about this time every year," he said. "We're just doing it a little more extensively this year."

The project will cost about $700, he said.

Assistant baseball coach Dan Hartleb said 350 square yards of sod will cover less than 8 percent of the field. Between 12- and 18-inches will be cut back from the infield to allow for the new sod.

"It'll help as far as ground balls go," he said.

The project is scheduled for completion Oct. 28.
