Fee hike for student lobby questioned

Allocating funds:
Paratore proposes use of previously raised money to fund USSA.

By Dean Weaver
DE Special Assignment Reporter

One SIUC administrator says there is no need for Undergraduate Student Government to raise student fees to pay for a federal lobbying group.

Jean Paratore, associate vice president of student affairs, said student government already collects thousands of dollars from students that were originally intended to be used for a student lobbying organization.

"I don't think they should look at a fee increase," Paratore, financial adviser for student government, said. "They should use the money that is already there."

On April 10, undergraduate students passed a referendum that proposed raising student activity fees 50 cents per semester to support the United States Student Association, the oldest student-lobbying group in the nation's capital.

But USG already collects a 50-cent-per-semester student activity fee that was used to fund the now defunct Illinois Student Association, a state lobbying group for college students.

The SIUC Board of Trustees raised the student activity fee for Fall 1990 with the understanding that a portion of the money was for the state lobbying group, Lawrence Juhlin, vice president of student affairs, said.

Since fall of 1990, more than $100,000 has been collected from this 50 cent fee.

But during the 1992-93 school year, USG and GPSC decided to withdraw their support for the failing lobbying group, Juhlin said more than $58,000 of the funds designated for ISA have been collected for student government.

Juhlin said he has collected $18,803 from the former ISA fee this year. Eighty-six percent of that money goes to USG and 14 percent to the Graduate and Professional Student Council.

Paratore said that $18,000 is a substantial membership due for any lobbying group and she will advise USG to examine the effectiveness of USSA.

"I think they should ask legislators how much of an impact USSA really has on Capitol Hill," she said.

Paratore had initial concerns that student fees could not be used to support an official lobbying group, but said after consulting legal council she discovered there was no problem.

Matt Parsons, USG chief of staff, said the money intended for ISA has been used to support Registered

GPSC votes against rise in '97 tuition

The SIUC Graduate and Professional Student Council passed a resolution last night opposing proposed fee and tuition increases for 1997.

GPSC members criticized the University administration's exclusion of students from the proposal review process.

The resolution stated: "... (GPSC) condemns the University administration and the Board of Trustees for their practice of sneaking future fee and tuition increases by the students."

Patrick Smith, GPSC president, said the Board of Trustees decided to require that proposed fee and tuition increases be submitted for review two years in advance.

Smith said proposed fee and tuition increases for fiscal year 1997

Students ready boats for 22nd SIUC regatta

Cardboard race sets sail Saturday

Ho-Ming Liu applies a water-proofing liquid to a cardboard dragon head he will attach to the boat he is building for the 22nd annual SIUC Boat Regatta this weekend.

He hopes the ingredient will save his boat from sinking.

Liu, a freshman in design from Taiwan, got the idea for a three-headed, open- and closing-mouthed dragon boat while he was eating lunch one day and drew the original design on a napkin.

He designed a miniature replica and is now working on the actual cardboard boat that will hold three people.

Liu said he has been working on the pedal-powered boat since last Friday.

"One day I only slept for four hours, the rest of the time is spent here (in the blue barracks, 100 E. Park). I even skip class sometimes," he said.

"Now I'm in a big hurry and I'm a little behind; I want to make (cardboard) helmets for the members who will ride in it."

Although the cardboard boat race is in its 22nd year, Richard Archer, assistant professor in the School of Art and Design, created the contest for his 3-D design class' final project.

"The Monday after the Saturday race, I got calls from all over campus with people saying, 'No, no, we want to play too,'" he said.

"Since then its become a campus, national and international sport, but it started here. I just thought it was supposed to be a final for my class."

The race will begin at the SIUC boat docks at noon Saturday, but technical inspection will begin at 10 a.m. to get boats into their categories and check to make sure legal materials were used — cardboard only.

Archer, the commodore, announcer and producer of the regatta, said there are 150 entries in the race this year and three

Neckers' labs given clean bill of health

By David R. Kazak

Inspectors from the Illinois Department of Labor came to SIUC Monday to inspect the fume hoods in Neckers and concluded they are not dangerous, an IDOL spokesperson said.

Lenore Killam, an IDOL safety inspection manager, said, "We feel comfortable with the self-monitoring Southern Illinois University is doing through its Center for Environmental Safety."

els," she said.

Despite the favorable inspection, replacement of one of the fume hoods is scheduled to take place before July, a University spokesperson said, but there is disagreement about whether the old hoods are really dangerous.

A chemical spill in an organic chemistry lab two weeks ago raised concerns among students about the safety of the fume hoods, which are designed to remove potentially hazardous fumes from work stations.

A student dropped a container, holding a chemical called benzyl bromide and the resulting fumes filled the room, causing eye irritation for some students.

The fume hoods became the immediate center of attention because warning signs placed above the hoods by the Center for Environmental Safety stated the hoods were not working up to the 100 feet of air per minute standard.

Last week, two students accused the chemistry department of forcing them to work with unsafe chemicals, without adequate protection from fumes.

But laboratory Director Ami Ruffing said although the fume

RUSSIA'S EXPULSION OF JOURNALIST CRITICIZED — MOSCOW—Correspondents, diplomats and a leading Russian newspaper poured scorn Wednesday on the government's explanation for the sudden expulsion of an American journalist, calling it isolated and lacking in credibility. The expelled journalist, Steve LeVine, agreed and said he suspected that Russian authorities were retaliating for his recent articles exposing Moscow's brutal military operations in Chechnya and heavy-handed tactics in support of its interests in oil-rich Central Asia. LeVine, 38, contributes articles on Central Asia and the Caucasus to Newsweek, The Washington Post and the London-based Financial Times newspaper.

NEW CIA DIRECTOR PLEDGES PRIORITIES CHANGE — WASHINGTON—John M. Deutch, President Clinton's nominee to direct the CIA, said Wednesday he will act immediately to replace top officials in the agency's scandal-ridden covert-operations wing with "a new generation of leaders" who are more attuned to the intelligence priorities of the post Cold-War world. He promised to establish new priorities for spying and hold accountable any officials who failed to "meet standards of propriety and legality" that he plans to outline at the outset of his tenure. Deutch, 56, told members of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence that if confirmed, he would support placing the nation's myriad spy-satellite programs under the management of a single agency.

MAN ARRESTED FOR SPANKING CHILD IN CANADA — TORONTO—For a few dozen hours this week, Canada threatened to supplant Singapore as the locus of world debate over corporal punishment. At issue was the case of an American tourist, David Peterson, who was caught in a Canadian parking lot last fall as he gave a spanking to his 5-year-old daughter. A Canadian witness called 911 and told the father it was against the law to spank in Canada. It isn't, exactly. But Peterson was charged with assault, and he spent a night in jail. He returned this week, according to news reports, to stand trial and clear his name. In a not-guilty verdict rendered Wednesday, Ontario provincial Judge John Menzies agreed that the father's punishment met Canada's legal tests of appropriate discipline.

POST-RADIATION DRUG FOR SOLDIERS TESTED — WASHINGTON—The Defense Department, in cooperation with NATO allies, is testing two commercially-approved drugs it hopes will enable soldiers who initially survive a nuclear bomb to last long enough to finish their battlefield mission, the director of the Defense Nuclear Agency said Wednesday. The drugs, which reduce or eliminate the vomiting that follows exposure to radiation, are being tested "to extend the ability of an individual to perform his mission in a radiation environment," Maj. Gen. Kenneth Hagemann told reporters. The project is part of an effort to upgrade the effectiveness of troops on the post-Cold War battlefield.

ACT OUTLAWING GUNS NEAR SCHOOLS REJECTED — WASHINGTON—A sharply divided U.S. Supreme Court on Wednesday struck down a 1990 federal law that outlaws possession of a gun within 1,000 feet of a school. In a ruling with broad implications for constitutional law and with potentially far-reaching impact on domestic social policy, the Supreme Court ruled that the Gun-Free School Zones Act is an unconstitutional infringement on states' rights to regulate purely local activity. The 5-4 majority, led by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, asserted that Congress exceeded its authority by defining school safety as "economic activity" governed by the Constitution's commerce clause and therefore subject to federal intervention.

DROP OF TALK SHOW RESULTS IN DEATH THREATS — A San Bernardino, Calif., radio station has been targeted with bomb and death threats after dropping G. Gordon Liddy's ultra-conservative talk show in the wake of the Oklahoma City bombing. "One of the most recent calls was, 'You are all going to die,'" Bill McNulty, general manager of KCKC-AM, said Wednesday. "And I thought, 'My God, what is wrong with you people?'" McNulty said that he had decided to drop Liddy's syndicated show even before President Clinton on Monday called for radio talk show hosts and politicians to cool their angry rhetoric in the wake of the bombing.

Acting executive assistant fills own shoes

By Sean J. Walker
DE Campus Life Editor

The acting SIUC executive assistant to the president for international and economic development was chosen to permanently fill the position pending approval by the SIUC Chancellor and ratification by the SIUC Board of Trustees.

Rhonda J. Vinson, a resident of Makanda, has served as the acting administrator since the Dec. 7 death of Charles B. Klasek, who held the office since 1990. Vinson said she did a great deal of traveling with him and Mrs. Klasek before taking over the position. "I am well-groomed for the position."

As the acting administrator, Vinson has been overseeing SIUC's program in Nakajo, Japan, the office of International Programs and Services and Touch of Nature Environmental Center. Vinson previously held the position of director of the Office of Economic and Regional Development, where she directly reported to Klasek.

Vinson said her old position will still fall under her umbrella, but a new head will be chosen soon.

"I will start the search soon with a committee to find someone to fill the position (director of the Office of Economic and Regional Development)," she said.

Vinson, a Danville native, earned a bachelor's degree in special education at Eastern Illinois University in 1970, then taught in the Danville area for six years. In 1977, she completed a master's degree in instructional materials from SIUC. She stayed on to earn a PhD in curriculum and instruction in 1983.

Vinson returned to SIUC full time in 1981 to work at the Coal Research Center. In 1983 Vinson directed the international development efforts in SIUC's Office of International Education. For the next three years, she toured Asian colleges and helped establish links between SIUC and schools in China, Indonesia and Malaysia.

Vinson said she will handle the arrangements with the Ministry of University Affairs in Thailand for a proposed SIUC expansion in Thailand.

Daughters get lesson in real life

Take them to work: Annual 'Day' designed to encourage future female workforce.

By Shawna Donovan
DE Professional Affairs Editor

Today is the third annual "Take Your Daughters to Work" Day. Seven million daughters are expected to participate in the annual event sponsored by the Ms. Foundation.

The day is designed to encourage young women to achieve their goals and expand their self-confidence by having a firsthand look at their parents' jobs — from administrators to civil service employees.

Jeanie Cook has been celebrating "Take Your Daughters to Work" Day since 1983.

Cook, a secretary for the Upward Bound Project, said her daughter Katie, 15, has come to work every time she has an open day. This year, Katie has come to work with her four times.

USG senators vote yes to debit card program

Against the grain: Illinois legislation currently proposed would ban system.

By Dave Mack
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Undergraduate Student senators voted at last night's meeting in favor of a debit card that would allow students to make purchases on campus using their ID cards.

With the support of SIUC student government, it might be possible to prevent the currently proposed legislation that would ban debit card programs at public universities in Illinois, according to Matt Parsons, USG chief of staff.

"We might be able to swing this vote," he said.

"It's already been through the Senate and it's on the way to the House."

However, even if the bill passes the Illinois government, a recent amendment would allow the debit card under certain circumstances.

"Institutions of higher education can have a debit card if a reasonable opportunity for local merchants to collaborate in the system is offered," Parsons said.

"The University of Illinois is also fighting this so we do have some help."

USG City Affairs Commissioner Mike Nolan spoke out against the SIUC administration for forcefully supporting a bar-entry age increase despite students' desire that it not be raised.

"It's the administration and one professor (Patrick) Kelley (who are pushing for 21)," he said.

"They're using threats to bully the city."

"The administration has said to the city. 'If you don't pass the 21 entry age, the University isn't going to shut down and the party will go on."

Senators voted in favor of a resolution to create an RSO audit task force that would investigate how the organizations spend their university funding.

"We're going to make sure they're using the money where they say they will use it," said Jennifer Bailey, chairman of the finance committee.

Bailey also said the previous Registered Student Organization fund allocations will stand.

"We have allocated the money in a fair and just manner," she said. "The money isn't there (for any more funding)."

A resolution requiring instructors to post all grades on-line failed.

"I've never had a problem with professors who weren't willing to give out test or quiz grades," said Steve Rozanski, senator from the west side.

USG senators voted unanimously to ratify the student trustee election results.

"Jason Ervin is officially our student trustee," said Carin Musak, USG vice-president.

March organized to protest Republican agenda

By Michael D. DeFord
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An organized coalition consisting of several Registered Student Organizations is planning a march to protest decisions proposed by Republican leaders.

The Stop the Contract on America Coalition will march against the Republican agenda, known as the "Contract With America," proposed by newly elected congressional leaders.

The coalition will assemble at the North Entrance of the SIUC Student Center on Monday and march to Carbondale's Federal Building, 250 W. Cherry St.

Lara Ashby, a senior in photography from St. Louis, said she is marching to preserve the democracy of the United States.

"I am marching on May 1 because our democracy is being threatened by a bunch of white male fascists," she said. "I never signed this contract."

The Contract with America, which is currently under consideration in Congress, is an attempt to advance economic opportunity and make the government more accountable and responsible to U.S. citizens.

According to the coalition, only 21 percent of the U.S. population voted to elect the Republican congress and believes the contract does not reflect the majority sentiment in America.

Ashby said the Contract with America not only attempts to do away with such programs as welfare for single mothers and decreased military spending, but also denies young people the opportunity to attend college and allows big business to evade social and environmental responsibility.

Margie Parker, a member of the Southern Illinois Peace Coalition from Carbondale, said the cutting of defense spending should be the government's top priority.

"Congress is not planning to cut any defense spending," she said. "We are spending more on defense while neglecting human needs."

"Unfortunately, under the current contract, that trend seems to be continuing instead of reversing."

According to Parker, many experts have claimed it is possible to cut defense spending by as much as 50 percent and still maintain a strong military.

Students ignored in fee-hike discussions

HERE WE GO AGAIN! MORE STUDENT FEE increases are already in the works at the offices of SIUC administrators for fiscal year 1997, and it seems once again that student input will be taken very lightly — or not at all — by the SIUC Board of Trustees. Countless DE editorials have called upon the board to give greater attention and place more emphasis on the concerns of their customers — the student body — regarding fee increases, but the trustees have not listened. It is now up to the customers to express their dissatisfaction with an institution to which they are already paying large sums of money.

FEE INCREASE PROPOSALS FOR 1996-1997, according to figures from the Graduate and Professional Student Council include: an increase in the Student Recreation Center fee of $3 per semester, an increase in the Student Center fee of $4.25 per semester, an increase in the Athletic fee of $7 per semester, an increase in the Health Service fee of $3 per semester and a University Housing fee increase of between $9 and $12 per month. An official from the SIUC Office of the Chancellor says these increases are only preliminary proposals and official action will probably not be taken on them until the July board meeting. He said at the monthly board meetings, students and members of the Undergraduate Student Government and GPSC will have an opportunity to discuss the increases. This' opportunity is not as great as some SIUC officials would have us believe, however.

IT WOULD APPEAR THAT UNIVERSITY OFFICIALS have scheduled discussion and action on the fee increases in a way which makes it difficult for many students to voice opposition for the hikes.

It might be suggested that individual students attend board meetings in person to discuss and express their feelings concerning the fee increases. However, there is only one board meeting left in the spring semester, May 11, where students would have an opportunity to speak to the board regarding the increases, and it is unlikely that any SIUC student would be able to make it to the meeting; it will take place in Springfield during finals week. And the final vote on the increase is tentatively scheduled for the heart of the summer term — a time when a minimal portion of the student body is present.

GIVEN CURRENT CIRCUMSTANCES, TIME IS OF the essence if the student body wishes to respond to board members and other University administrators regarding the proposed increases. On the back of potato chip bags, peanut cans and various other products, there is often a hotline number to call or an address to write with comments concerning the customers' level of satisfaction with whatever they have purchased. Such a forum for comment is available to the student body as well.

Phones should be ringing off the hooks at the USG and GPSC offices with students' voices calling upon their elected leaders to oppose the increases until students are given a fair opportunity to be heard. The office phones of SIUC President John C. Guyon, 453-2341, and SIUC Chancellor James Brown, 536-3331, should be ringing with the anger of students who are tired of having their concerns placed upon the back burner. And written letters and phone calls from students should also be pouring into the offices of board members who's names and addresses are listed on page five of the University Directory.

It is time for students to come out of the University wood-work. If a strong attempt is not made now by the students to show their position on the fee increases, University officials will continue to side-step their concerns. And if students are still ignored, perhaps the product of SIUC should be deemed unsuitable and education from an alternative institution should be sought.

Letters to the Editor

Attitude of FLIT department poor; lacks benefits to students' resumes

I had a nightmare last night. The nightmare was that I was at a job interview where the interviewer decided to check up on the validity of my degrees. My degree in international marketing checked out okay, but when the interviewer called the Foreign Language International Trade Department (had they accepted my marketing internship as the mandatory FLIT internship), he/she was so unimpressed with the people that he/she talked to that I was not hired.

Well, maybe that is a bit extreme — they probably would not be able to tell this over a short phone call — but any student who has tried to talk to and deal with the FLIT department would be able to tell you that they are quite possibly the least Normally "innate" would be a strong and maybe strange thing to say here, but that is not the case.

Last semester I decided to get an marketing internship for myself in Japan. After a lot of correspondence and work, I was accepted to do an internship in Nakajo at the SIUC-N Japan campus. I then decided that it would be to my benefit if I got a double degree in international marketing and FLIT. I spent several months dealing with the FLIT office fulfilling requests that went nowhere. Eventually I got to the point where I just wanted an answer about whether or not I could become a FLIT major.

I still, to this day have never been contacted by the FLIT department about whether I will be accepted or not. I have, however, seen a copy of a letter that was sent to my marketing internship supervisor half-way around the world to Japan, that says that it is doubtful that I will become a FLIT major. This letter was written in a style that expressed more than the simple fact that they would most likely not accept me to the program, it expressed, what I perceived as a personal dislike for me. I still have yet to figure out what business a FLIT secretary has sending a letter to my marketing internship supervisor. The FLIT program has the right to reject me; I have not fulfilled the requirements of the FLIT program to do a FLIT Internship, at this moment in time. But I think that not accepting me into their program and trying to make me look bad from around the world, without ever informing me of anything, is another thing. Let it suffice to say that my credibility at the SIUC-N campus is a bit more than can be torn down by a simple secretary's letter.

This is just one example of the FLIT departments long legacy of incompetence. The program's popularity is self propelled by the nature of the degree in our international world. The people who run the program know this and use it to get students into the program. But they don't mention that they have a real problem graduating student's because of their inflexibility.

What student's (and the FLIT department) don't realize is that there are other options to get a degree with the same impact as a FLIT degree. One interested in a language and business would find it much less of a hassle to become a business and administration major with a language specialization (subject to the dean's approval). By doing this, the students will be able to choose the business courses most related to their interest as well as not have to deal with finding their own mandatory internship, as in the FLIT program, without any help whatsoever from the FLIT department.

In retrospect, I now realize that I should have gone with my first impression of the FLIT department, and not wasted my time fulfilling their futile requests over a period of months. I am happy to be graduating with a double degree and two minors, without having to be associated with such a backwards program. What a relief, I no longer have to worry about having that nightmare.

Pro-life ad irresponsible on part of DE

The Daily Egyptian exhibited profoundly irresponsible journalism on April 26 when the pro-life propaganda, financed by the Human Life Alliance of Minnesota, was published.

This type of advertising should never have been published by the campus newspaper. This supplement was not about homecoming or another relatively non-controversial campus event. The supplement represented the views of a right-wing organization.

What are the criteria used by the DE to determine whose agenda will be published? Apparently these services are sold to the highest bidder. Remember last year when the Neo-Nazis bought their way into our campus paper?

I am not questioning anyone's right to free speech. The Human Life Alliance of Minnesota is free to believe and say whatever they wish. My concern lies in the fact that the DE seems to feel that it was appropriate for such garbage to be published by the campus newspaper. Let these people find some other way to promote their views. The DE should not lend a helping hand to such organizations.

"We are very child-oriented up here," Pei said.

Pei, who participated in the annual event last year, said her daughter, Katherine, 9, will sit in two meetings.

"She will get here late and I have two appointments in the afternoon," Pei said. "I think it is a real important experience for the children."

Pei said the office always has children running around because the Student Development encompasses Rainbow's End child care facility, located behind the Recreation Center, and Non-Traditional Student Services.

"I'm a scout troop leader too, so we always have children up here," she said.

Cook said because of good relations with her supervisors, her children are able to help out.

Cook has worked at SIUC for almost 20 years. In that time, she has worked at the School of Art and Design, Center for Basic Skills and philosophy department. She has been at the project for over a year.

However, a lot of campus personnel are not participating in the event.

According to University Human Resource department, only two persons have inquired about the event.

Beth Firestein, from Women's Services, said the services support the event.

"We have been too busy to coordinate publicity for the event," Firestein said. "But we do think it's important."

Last year, 5 million girls participated in the nationwide event, according to the foundation.

"The U.S. military budget is more than 13 times the combined budgets of several enemies the Pentagon has identified," she said. "It certainly does not seem necessary to outspend them by that much in order to remain strong enough to defeat them."

Parker said she hopes the rally will motivate people to take the time to look at our federal priorities and act to help those people in need.

Cathleen Tracy, a sophomore in social work from New Lenox, said she is concerned with the future of our environment.

"Our voices need to be heard," she said. "Crucial environmental laws will be destroyed by this contract."

"The fate of the earth should not be allowed to rest in the hands of Republicans."

Tracy said all environmental laws are waived under the contract, and said the contract establishes a two-year emergency period for logging.

"All the work environmentalists have put into exposing scandals the forest service has been caught with are going to be ignored," she said. "All the work put into saving our forest is gone. What ever happened to justice?"

Dan Piper, a senior in English from Edwardsville, said the current contract puts the future of education in jeopardy.

Ten years ago the federal budget for higher education was 10 percent, today it is less than 2," Piper said. "Ten years ago the budget for grants was 70 percent of federal aid and loans were 20 percent; today those figures have reversed."

"These cuts are going to make that less of a commitment to higher education."

Piper said one of the biggest cuts proposed right now is ending student loan interest subsidies, which will increase the debts of undergraduates by 20 percent and graduates by 50 percent.

Several RSO's were represented at the rally, including the National Organization for Women, Black Affairs Council, Student Environmental Center, the SIU National Lawyers Guild and Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals and Friends.

hoods are not working at full capacity, it does not matter because the chemicals the students use are not dangerous.

"Almost any chemical can be harmful," Ruffing said. "It all depends on the method of exposure and the amount of the chemical in question."

"Because the hoods have never worked at those levels since they were installed, we have adjusted the amounts of chemicals to decrease any potential danger," she said.

"With better fume hoods, maybe we can adjust the chemical amounts up again," she said.

Ruffing said some of the cause for concern came when the students researched the properties of the chemicals they use in lab. She said they used information from Material Safety Data Sheets.

The MSDS contain information about chemicals from the manufacturers.

The MSDS for sodium chloride, table salt, includes instructions to use protective clothing, gloves and a mask. It calls it an irritant and says the symptoms of acute exposure are nausea, vomiting, convulsions and in the case of infants, coma.

"The MSDS will list every possible hazard," Ruffing said. "They will always use terms like irritating or harmful. The truth is, almost anything can be irritating or harmful if you have enough of it or are handling it wrong."

Matthew Peters, a junior in chemistry, said he worked for a chemical company as a lab tech for two years before he came back to school to get his degree.

"The danger of the chemicals in lab is not even an issue," Peters said.

"It's a problem the University knows about and is doing everything it can to correct."

*Julia Kniesly
associate director,
Center for Environmental Safety*

"If you desire to be a chemist, your degree will say you know how to work with chemicals and understand them also."

Peters said the lab where the accident occurred is for chemistry majors only, and he doesn't understand what the complaints are about.

Give states food stamp programs — Packwood

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., proposed Wednesday that the Senate go further than the House in overhauling the welfare system by turning over the federal food stamp program to the states.

The influential committee chairman said he favored transforming the $27 billion-a-year program into a block grant to be administered by the states.

Major welfare programs now are entitlement — federal guarantees of benefits to every eligible American who applies, no matter what the cost. The House block grants wipe out those guarantees, allowing each state to determine who should be eligible for aid and for how long.

Clinton urges swift adoption of counterterrorism proposals

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Vowing that the "horror" of Oklahoma City must never recur, President Clinton announced new counterterrorism proposals Wednesday he said would balance concern for civil liberties with the need to ensure "swift, certain and severe" justice for "anyone who dares sow terror on American land."

Summoning congressional leaders to the White House to plan the nation's response to the worst act of terrorism in American history, Clinton urged lawmakers to adopt the proposals swiftly.

The package includes hiring an additional 1,000 FBI agents, prosecutors and other federal law enforcement officials and creating a central counterterrorism bureau under the direction of the FBI.

"We cannot allow the entire country to be subjected to the horror the people of Oklahoma City have endured," Clinton said. He described the measures as grounded "in common sense and steered with force."

President Clinton

Leaders from both parties pledged to work with unaccustomed bipartisanship to craft the new law, combining the new proposals with the main features of a pending counterterrorism bill.

But they suggested that they still have reservations about the constitutionality of some of the proposals, particularly those that would expand the FBI's authority to engage in wiretapping and other forms of electronic surveillance.

Senate Majority Leader Bob

Dole, R-Kan., said after the meeting that as tragic as last week's bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building was, "we need to be very careful in how we proceed. ... There are certain areas, involving people's rights that we have to go very slowly on."

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said any legislation granting federal authorities broader investigative powers must protect "our civil liberties while also protecting us."

Although all of the lawmakers were generally receptive to Clinton's request for more law enforcement personnel, some expressed concern over the cost of hiring as many as 1,000 new agents for the FBI, the Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Firearms and Tobacco and other federal agencies.

Participants at the meeting said White House Chief of Staff Leon E. Panetta estimated the additional costs of the package at $100 million this year, $500 million next year and about $1.2 billion over five years.

have to be submitted to the board this spring, and students have been left out of the proposal review process.

"The University has excluded the student advisory committees, student governments, and the students at large from reviewing the fee and tuition increase proposals in a timely manner, and actively hidden these proposals to avoid student agitation," the resolution stated.

Smith said he and several other student government officers met with Vice President of Student Affairs Harvey Welch in February to discuss proposed fee increases, but were told the meeting was canceled.

"We were told we would receive the proposed increases in writing," said Smith. "We finally did — April 18."

Jason Matthews, GPSC vice president for administrative affairs, said the University administration canceled the meeting because they did not want students to see the fee increases.

"I can only assume that they knew what the proposed increases would be in February, since they called the meeting with us," he said.

"My guess is if they were afraid if so many increases were submitted at once, students would summarily reject them."

Smith said the student government will not have enough time to discuss the fee increases with their constituents.

"Basically the increases came so late in the semester that no one has time to talk about them publicly," he said. "To say the least, the administration dragged their feet — and in my opinion they purposely did not inform us of the increases."

Donald Wilson, vice chancellor for financial affairs, said the tuition and fee increases will not be discussed formally until the June Board meeting, although the Board's finance committee will discuss the increases informally on May 11.

Mail bomber taunts computer 'techno-nerds' in letter to victim

Newsday

In a letter to one of his victims, the Unabomber railed against "techno-nerds" and computer experts, and he taunted a Yale computer professor for being "dumb enough" to open the package that injured him last year.

The mail bomber, who is blamed in the Monday killing of a lumber industry lobbyist in Sacramento, Calif., seems also to have confirmed prior suspicions that he harbors class resentments. "Apparently people without a college degree don't count," he wrote to David Gelernter of Yale University in a letter received Monday. Gelernter, on June 24, 1993, opened a letter bomb that nearly blew off his right hand, damaged his left and left him mostly blind in one eye.

The Unabomber has killed three people and injured 23 in 16 attacks over 17 years. A copy of his letter to Gelernter was released Wednesday by the FBI.

In releasing the letter, which authorities say is authentic, federal agents apparently hoped its dissemination would lead to more clues to the mail bomber's whereabouts.

Music, murder, mystery

The Stage Co. produces farce of film cliches

By Benjamin Golshahr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Whodunit? That's the question an audience must wrestle with in a new comical murder mystery play currently running at The Stage Co., located at 101 N. Washington St.

"The Musical Comedy Murders of 1940" uses classic murder mystery devices in a humorous way while drawing the audience into its twisting plot, said Jeff Frantz, who is making his directoral debut with this play.

"The whole piece is a farcical play on all the old film noir and murder mysteries like Agatha Christie," Frantz said. "The whole show plays off all the old cliches you've ever seen in those old murder mysteries."

Choreographing dance variety

Students contribute to theater

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A wide variety of dance can be good for the soul. The Southern Illinois Repertory Dance Theater is using a variety of ways of choreography for their 20-year celebration concert, Dance Expresso.

Artistic Director for SIRDT, Donna Wilson said the company is primarily students and faculty with an occasional member of the community. All choreography is done by the members of the company to bring a distinction to their style.

"The choreography is all student choreography," she said. "A very kaleidoscopic thing. Our strong point is variety."

"What we present, is the talent of the students at that time."

The theater tends to lean toward modern dance and jazz with an occasional ballet or international dance.

"We don't have a theme. The choreographers choose a theme that they are interested in so there is a lot of variety," she said.

The theater boasts 20 members and four apprentices. The Dance Expresso has nine different works, eight of those are student productions.

As part of the 20th anniversary, the theater is performing "Water Study," a piece which was choreographed in the 1930s. Wilson said the piece was first performed without the use of music, and the theater has reconstructed it for their performance.

Walking on Einstein members have been working on their song-writing ability for the last six years and now are riding the west wind into town to play their first Carbondale gig.

The band, hailing from Joplin, Mo., prides itself on maintaining a diversity of sounds ranging from heavy, driving music to light pastoral acoustic melodies as they play through each set, said front-man Marty O'Flaherty.

"We strive from the beginning not to run one sound into the ground," he said. "(We) experimented with the music and found what works best." The music of Walking on Einstein has been evolving over the years and has reached a degree of maturity, said O'Flaherty.

"Now we're picking and choosing a little better, and hopefully it's showing a lot of growth. You learn a lot going from recording session to recording session," he said.

"The Great Dying," (1993), the band's first album, was released by the band members themselves. Six months ago that album was picked up by Mercy Records, an independent label, and was re-recorded. "Commoners Among the Masses," their second album, is due for release this summer.

O'Flaherty, responsible for all the song writing in the band, said the song matter covers many different themes.

"Each song is about something different," he said. "I have a lot of statement songs, not political views, but ecological views. Then, of course, you have your love songs which you can't live without."

Walking On Einstein has toured throughout the Midwest, and has taken extended 10-day tours to Florida, Texas and Colorado. In the past they have opened for such acts as the Connells, Tripping Daisy, Pale Divine and the Millions.

Tonight the band is making their Carbonade debut at the Hangar 9. The cover charge is $1.

several bookcases that contain old volumes of literature. An upright piano, plush oriental carpets and a painting of an old war hero complete the look.

The set also has a few special features which may surprise the audience. Frantz said, "It's almost like a character on its own," he said.

Frantz said many people came out to audition for the parts in the play, but he is greatly pleased with the cast upon which he decided.

"These people have all brought a lot to their characters," he said. "We rehearse, but they've spent a lot of time on their own working on their characters and I think that will show."

Frantz said this play doesn't adopt much of a serious tone. It's pure entertainment. "I think the audience will have a really good time," he said. "It's something to just watch and have a good time with."

The play is running at The Stage Co. for the next two weekends. The theater is fairly intimate, seating only 96 people. Friday and Saturday shows start at 8 p.m.; admission is $7. A Sunday matinee beginning at 2 p.m. costs $5.

Personal narratives

Survivors of cancer reflect on life stories

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

When Tari Glaspie was diagnosed with breast cancer in 1993, one step on her road to recovery was seeking out other cancer survivors and listening to their personal stories.

Glaspie, along with her close friend Lisa Ford-Brown, have combined those personal narratives, and the two are now directing the new performance, "Promises in Pink." Both women are doctoral students in the speech communication department.

The performance is a compilation of 12 narratives collected from breast cancer survivors and the people close to them.

Glaspie said the narratives range from serious to comedic; each story is as individual as the person who told it.

"Some (narratives) are very powerful," she said.

"Some are very funny, because it (performance) is a celebration of life and dignity."

Glaspie said she was first inspired to collect narratives and stage the performance so other people with breast cancer would have normal, average people with whom to relate their experience.

Ford-Brown is writing her dissertation on breast cancer and the specific narratives in the play but credits her involvement in the play to her friendship with Glaspie. Watching her friend grow frustrated in attempting to find someone who would voice a similar experience moved Ford-Brown to join Glaspie in her efforts.

Both women have gathered narratives from conventions, though mostly by word-of-mouth. One of the narratives comes from as far as New York.

Glaspie said the performance is meant for everyone, men and women, because they want people to realize that breast cancer is nothing of which to be ashamed.

"Every ethnic group, age, educational group is represented," she said.

"Men as well as women — we don't feel it is only the woman with breast cancer; it is also the family

"We want to make people realize that breast cancer is not something to be embarrassed about. It's an opportunity for these people to hear the voices.

"There are just too many people dying from (breast cancer)," Glaspie said.

The directors said the performance stresses two points: that one out of eight women will develop breast cancer over the next year, and that the disease makes one a survivor, not a victim.

Glaspie said this disease does not discriminate — "breast cancer is an equal opportunity cancer."

"We try to stress in the show the definition of a breast cancer survivor," Ford-Brown said. "We refuse to use the words patient or victim."

The directors quoted Linda Park-Fuller, a professor from Southwest Missouri State: "A survivor is anyone who has lived with breast cancer for one day or 99 years."

Glaspie added that women with breast cancer do not automatically receive a death sentence but can choose to fight and live their lives with dignity.

"Promises in Pink" offers an opportunity to hear personal narratives from cancer survivors and their families.

Ford-Brown said the 10-member cast is ethnically accurate with the personal narratives.

"They try to embody the people and stay true as humanly possible to the narrative," Ford-Brown said.

"Promises in Pink" starts tonight at 8 p.m. in Quigley Auditorium, and is a Kleinau Theatre production.

The show will run throughout the weekend. Ticket prices are $4 for public and $2 for students.

fashion design, said she has been dancing since the age of three and enjoys having people dance to her pieces.

Moore and friends choreographed a hip-hop piece for the show, "Here We Come."

On the other spectrum of dance, Jeannie Zeck, a doctoral student in 20th century literature, has choreographed two pieces.

"Pushing Forty" is a piece that Zeck explained as a take of her turning 40 and acknowledging the need for strength and adaptability.

"It was a fruitful time of my life. I learned more in those five years before turning 40 than any," Zeck said. "Forty was an important milestone, a coming of age. I can handle so much now."

Zeck said the choreography replicates the movements of carrying heavy objects on the dancer's back.

"It is a metaphor for something you have to carry, divorce, marriage, children, death," Zeck said.

Her second piece, "Windows and Doors" is dedicated to Wilson for opening doors of opportunity and knowledge into her dancers' lives.

The variety of dance in the SIRD can be seen Friday at 8 p.m. at Shryock Auditorium. Tickets are $6 general admission and $3 for children.

Law students win third moot court contest

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIU law students took first place for the third time in the Illinois Moot Court Competition April 21-22 in Springfield.

Seven teams from Illinois and one from Indiana competed.

Cynthia Hagan, an adjunct law professor, said the teams receive a law problem early in the semester and students prepare an appellate brief to the Illinois Supreme Court.

Hagan said members of the Illinois Appellate Attorney Association prepare the problem and serve as judges for the competition.

Students are judged on written briefs and oral arguments in the preliminary, semi-final and final rounds.

Several weeks of intensive research and the writing of many drafts of the briefs are required for students to prepare for the competition, Hagan said.

"They practice in front of local practicing lawyers and professors to perfect their oral presentation," Hagan said.

The moot trial court competition has taken place annually since 1985 and SIU has participated since then, she said.

SIU teams have been successful in this competition, Hagan said.

"Through the team's continued success, the SIU School of Law has earned a reputation for excellence in appellate advocacy among the law schools, appellate attorneys and judges who participate in this annual competition."

Jonathan Swanson, a third year law student from Naperville, said participating in the moot court trial competition was a great opportunity to combine written skill with oral advocacy.

"Working on Illinois issues and preparing it for the Illinois Supreme Court is the exact process you go through in real life situations," Swanson said.

Swanson said that competing in the state Supreme Court Chambers will be a memorable experience.

"There are many practicing lawyers in Illinois who have never set foot in the Supreme court chambers," Swanson said.

Patrick Smith, a second year law student from McHenry, said the competition has had a significant impact on him.

"As a student, it has allowed me to go through lawsuit appeal from start to finish which many students do not get a chance to experience," Smith said.

Also, it has given us an opportunity to argue in front of real appellate judges and lawyers," he said.

Smith said even though the competition is moot court, it gives the students a chance to use what they have learned in the classroom.

He said the atmosphere of competition in the Supreme Court Chambers is something he will never forget.

"As students we are not exposed to real court rooms, not to think of the Supreme Court Chambers."

Police say gang activity up

By Dave Mack
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Gang activity is on the rise in Carbondale, according to Lt. Calvin Stearns of the Carbondale Police Department.

Despite the popular belief that gangs only exist in big cities like Chicago, Carbondale and SIUC do have gang activity, Stearns said at a gang awareness presentation in Pierce Hall Tuesday night.

"It has been in a lull but we're starting to see an increase lately," he said. "All of the small communities in the midwest are seeing an increase in gangs."

Parents will often send their gang-oriented child to live with relatives in a small town to remove the child from the gang influence. However, the child will often find a new gang or start one of his own in the new town, Stearns said.

The Carbondale Police Department interviewed one gang member who was sent to SIUC from Chicago to study business so he could manage the gang's fiscal affairs. The gang told him to focus on his education and not to engage in any gang activities while in Carbondale.

Stearns, who has been an officer for 14 years, said gang activity in Carbondale runs in cycles.

"You have a couple of people that get behind it and really make things happen," he said.

When those people leave town or are arrested, gang activity subsequently drops until another gang leader appears, Stearns said.

Many gang members are transferred to the Illinois Department of Corrections' "House of Glass" on Mill Street for their last year of incarceration, which seems to help bring gang activity to Carbondale.

"We end up arresting their alumni time and time again," he said.

Stearns showed security camera videos from two different convenience stores that depicted gang members shooting rival "gang-bangers."

In one video, the victim staggered out of the store with three bullets in him before observers called the police.

"We're not going to tolerate violence down here," he said.

Stearns also presented slides of gang signs and graffiti on local business and residences. Much of the gang art featured cartoon characters.

"You'll see a lot of cartoons in gang graffiti," he said. "There are some people with absolutely stunning artistic talent who are incarcerated."

Stearns said traditional gangs are typically very organized. Often, they have a rule-book that defines how to get in and out of a gang, rules of conduct for members, punishments for misbehavior and guidelines for holding office in the gang, he said.

Stearns discussed the "El Rukns," an extremely prosperous Chicago gang that owns industrial parks, shopping malls and housing sites.

"These people control millions of dollars of real estate in Chicago," he said.

Stearns said he is often criticized because his gang awareness seminars focus on black gangs.

"Whenever I come to campus and do one of these things, I get grief for talking about black groups," he said.

"The white gangs are there, they're active, they're dangerous, but we just don't see them in Carbondale," Stearns said. "They don't live in Carbondale and they don't come around."

Biker gangs composed of whites are prevalent in other parts of the state, especially Perry County, he said.

Stearns said there are also more children-oriented lectures which are handled by two officers who are involved with the Drug Awareness and Resistance Education program and are trained to speak to children.

The Gang Resistance Education And Training program is designed to educate the younger age groups.

Police Blotter

Carbondale Police

Lee B. Brown, 36, of Carbondale, was arrested at 10:52 April 25 at the intersection of South Washington and East Main Streets on a Jackson County warrant for failure to appear on an original charge of possession of drug paraphernalia. He was taken to the Jackson County Jail and was still in jail Wednesday afternoon.

Police said Rolando B. Elsay, 27, of Carbondale, was arrested for unlawful use of a weapon at 1:58 a.m. April 26 in the 200 block of West Oak Street. Police said Elsay was stopped after they observed him walking in and around the businesses in the 200 block of West Oak Street. A pat-down search for weapons revealed a .38 caliber revolver he was concealing, police said. A name check at the police department revealed two outstanding warrants from McLean County for deceptive practice, police said.

Elsaw was taken to the Jackson County Jail and was still in jail Wednesday afternoon.

Police said Robert D. Carlton, 25, of Carbondale, was arrested at 12:38 p.m. April 25 at the intersection of East College and South Washington Streets for violation of bail bond. Carlton was taken to Jackson County Jail and was still in jail Wednesday afternoon.

University Police

University Police said Brunette T. Jefferson, 18, and Tara V. Jordan, 19, both of Bowyer Hall, were arrested at 10 p.m. April 23 for aggravated battery. Both were taken to the Jackson County Jail, where they later posted bond and were released.

A 19-year-old woman said she was battered by two women at Thompson Point at 10:37 a.m. April 25. Police said she did not require medical attention. Two suspects have been identified and the investigation continues.

University Police said a vehicle parked in lot 59 was burglarized between 7:30 p.m. April 23 and 10:30 p.m. April 24. The offenders got away with $850 worth of property, police said.

EPAWG DAYS OF SPRING

Oklahoma remembered

Mourning of bomb blast victims continues with minute of silence

The Washington Post

OKLAHOMA CITY—For a full, silent minute, everyone in this shattered city remembered the nightmare they'd like to forget. Firefighters held their hard hats to their hearts, their heads bowed in sorrow. Even the rescue dogs seemed to pause reverently Wednesday morning, resting at the feet of their masters.

They remembered because it is impossible to ever forget what happened here exactly one week ago Wednesday, at 9:02 a.m. on Wednesday, April 19—impossible for all the families mourning loved ones and for all the many others who paused Wednesday.

"Sometimes I have felt, in the past, that it was too boring around here," said Jeannie Cuiapak, 29, who came to the rescue site Wednesday morning with her daughter, Lacy, 17 months, to observe the nationwide moment of remembrance called by Gov. Frank A. Keating, R, for the victims of the bombing. "I've traveled. I've been places. After this, I would say that I wish with all my heart that we could be boring again."

'Time stood still'

Exactly one week after the blast Keating stood before the ruined Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building and blew a whistle. Time stood still as the moment of remembrance began. Keating held hands with his wife. Across town drivers pulled off highways. Conversations stopped in mid-sentence all around Oklahoma City. And a thousand miles away in New York City the bells pealed at St. Patrick's Cathedral echoing above Fifth Avenue for that mournful minute.

In Oklahoma City the world looks different now to the 440,000 residents of this friendly, heretofore uneventful place, never again so predictable and secure.

In the week that has passed since the bombing people here have changed. They no longer ask, as they did in the first couple of days, why their city, of all places, was chosen as a target.

Now, they say with bitterness that a terrorist strike could hit anywhere, any time. The families of people who worked or had business in the Murrah building that morning no longer display smiling family photographs to the news media, asking for help, speaking of hope in finding a missing brother or mother; they know the answers now, even if they have not yet been visited by an official chaplain with a notification of death. Despite their most heartfelt prayers, they know.

So far, the official tally is 14 children killed in the bombing. In one of the few heartening pieces of news in several days, Assistant Fire Chief Jon Hansen said Wednesday that perhaps only five other children, and not the 15 others originally thought, are still missing in the collapsed ruins of the building. That is small comfort to residents here, but it is something.

The shock here has subsided into a numbness. Many have begun to try and re-create some normalcy of routine, to shut off the televised reminders while holding their children close and counting their blessings.

"Every night," said Cuiapak, who also has a 5-year-old daughter, "I go in my little girls' rooms and lie down in their beds and I know that those people who lost their children wish so badly that they could hug their kids like I get to hold mine. And I feel a little bit guilty somehow."

A few stories

So much has been lost, so many ironies abound. Donald Ray Leonard, 51, a Secret Service agent of more than 20 years, was planning to retire in another month and play golf; he was killed as he settled in for one of his final work days. Donald and Mary Anne Fritzel had business at the Social Security office that morning; they died together, one day after celebrating their 35th wedding anniversary. Trudy Rigney, 31, had lived in a homeless shelter just five years ago; in two weeks, she would have graduated from the University of Oklahoma.

All those plans, all those personal milestones, destroyed in a matter of seconds.

At a modest home on the west side of the city, Gilberto and Martha Martinez welcomed the birth of their fifth child last week. He was named Gilberto, too, for his father, the 35-year-old pastor of the El Tabernacle De Fe Church and a man who was forever helping members of his Spanish-speaking congregation with the difficulties of English. Last Wednesday, he accompanied several members to the Social Security Administration in the Murrah building to settle several small problems, another act of kindness that ended his life.

Martinez's funeral was held Wednesday, one of dozens of funerals currently taking place in this stricken city. In front of his American flag-draped coffin, a simple sign spelled out perhaps his most important role: "Dad."

"We all know him as a real wonderful husband and a laughing daddy," said mourner Maria Venegas, a hairdresser.

Emotional recovery

Residents have expressed their grief in numerous church services, but they have also expressed themselves in letters to the editor, on radio talk shows, in the purple ribbons of sympathy pinned to their lapels, and even on the back windshields of their cars. "We Will Never Forget," said the sign on an Oklahoma City police car roaming the perimeter of the bombing site Wednesday.

KFOR-TV, one of the leading television stations in the city, has devoted several hours each night to letting viewers phone in with their comments about the tragedy. Most end up crying on the air.

"We're not qualified for anything like mental-health counseling," said John Smith, an assignment editor at the station. "A lot of people just need to talk." Smith said the station may continue the practice for as long as another month.

It will take far longer, of course, for the city's residents to come to terms with the enormity of their tragedy. Many say that the darkest hours—for relatives of victims, for rescuers pushed to the brink of exhaustion, for everyone—will come much later, after the national news media has packed up and gone on to other big events.

Seeking answers: Increased FBI surveillance may thwart terrorists

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—One of President Clinton's immediate responses to the Oklahoma City bombing was to ask Congress to give the FBI greater authority to investigate suspect radical groups, but there is no proof that increased powers will deter future terrorism.

"Even if you do opt for greater surveillance and infiltration, there's no guarantee that it will prevent new terrorist acts," said Joseph P. diGenova, a former U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia and a Justice Department official in the 1970s who helped draft the guidelines for FBI inquiries into domestic subversion.

"From what we know so far of the Oklahoma situation, it seems to be the work of some individuals rather than the so-called 'militia' with which they had links. So if that indeed turns out to be the case, it doesn't appear that any amount of infiltration and close surveillance would have revealed this plot in advance and prevented it," he said.

Nevertheless, the Oklahoma bombing has triggered a major debate about whether the investigative guidelines, imposed in 1976 to safeguard civil liberties and eased in 1983 to give the FBI more flexibility, should be relaxed more.

At issue is whether national security requires that some rules intended to protect people from illegal police practices should be set aside when law-enforcement agencies have intelligence that does not meet legal standards but which gives grounds for suspecting a group might be plotting subversive actions.

DiGenova recalled Wednesday that it was the FBI's desire to protect itself from charges of acting illegally that originally caused the bureau to "insist it wanted very clear guidelines so it couldn't be criticized either for conducting or not conducting an investigation with controversial overtones."

But some former senior FBI officials contend the guidelines have hobbled the FBI's ability to keep close watch on organizations such as paramilitary "citizens militias" with anti-government views. Although there is no evidence so far linking such groups to the Oklahoma incident, their views were shared by Timothy McVeigh, who has been accused of the bombing.

Some members of Congress have also responded by calling for legislation to help the FBI foil terrorism. Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, said Tuesday, "I believe it is proper to have surveillance as long as it's not too close or intimidating. I think it is appropriate, and certainly constitutional, to have infiltration."

divisions of classification: Class I — corrugated paddle boats, Class II — human-powered pedal wheelers and Class III — instant boats, where 20 names are drawn out of a hat to build a boat from a secret kit of materials.

Boats will race in a series of heats, and each class will receive three awards for top places. Additional awards include the Vogue, for the best looking boat, a team spirit award, the best-dressed team award, and the Titanic award for the most spectacular sinking.

Trophies are made by graduate students in the art and design school.

Archer predicted two-thirds of the boats in classes I and II will race to the finish line and only one-third will sink. He said half of the instant boats will sink.

Past boat races have attracted news stations such as ABC's "Good Morning America," CNN and Chicago's WGN.

"The race isn't about going fast — some people just want to get on the news," he said. "Last year with all the news coverage we probably had 50 million viewers."

During the past two weeks, Archer has been interviewed on 20 radio shows throughout the country.

He has been contacted by SIUC alumni to set up boat races in 15 different states this summer.

Lisa Sharp, a freshman in studio art from Springfield, is working on a nine foot long hot dog boat for her 3-D design final project.

"It's a flat bottom boat and it has been water-proofed, so we're hoping it will stay afloat," she said. "Because it is nine feet and we have three people, the displaced proportions of people and water should help it."

So you think you're a baseball fan? Try this quiz

The Sporting News

This week officially ends the longest lay-off of the century, and all that rust and all those signings were enough to challenge even the most astute fan. If you've sworn off Major League Baseball, then you're probably on the wrong page anyway. If you're still following along, then we invite you to take The Sporting News Post-Strike Test.

If you answer 13-15 correctly, you're a True Fan; 10-12, Extended Spring Training; 7-9, Eighth-Inning L.A. Traffic-Beater; under 7, Bill Usery Buff. As a bonus, we've included a replacement question (No. 16) in case one of these is a stumper.

- Jody Reed switched leagues for a third time last week. What team took the second baseman this time?
- The 1994 American League West may have been the worst grouping in major league history, but it did produce the league's ERA champion. Who was he, and what team re-signed him?
- True or false, according to Section 7.03 of the MLB Official Baseball Rules published by The Sporting News: "Two runners may not occupy a base, but if, while the ball is alive, two runners are touching a base, the preceding runner shall be out when tagged. The following runner is entitled to the base."

- Who are the six new managers (not including Sparky Anderson), and which one of them was a Los Angeles Dodgers reliever?
- We told you last Nov. 21 how Tim Wakefield has coped with his fluttering career since leading the Pittsburgh Pirates to the 1992 playoffs as a rookie. Which of these things happened last week: (a) Wakefield was released by the Pirates and signed by the knuckleball-loving Marlins, who train and have a Class-A affiliate in his hometown of Melbourne, Fla.; (b) Wakefield was released by the Pirates.

- In what divisions can you find the Pirates and Milwaukee Brewers?
- Who threw the last World Series pitch, and what star closer was he sharing the bullpen with entering this week?
- How many former Atlanta Braves now wear Cincinnati Reds uniforms, and which one of them hit the most homers in a season?
- Where is the player who drove in 98 runs as the Chicago White Sox's designated hitter in 1994, and who is replacing him?
- There are two new playing fields, one in each league. Where

- are they?
- Four former All-Star pitchers retired last week, leaving with a combined total of 622 victories, 682 saves, 9,464 2/3 innings and 6,536 strikeouts. Who are they?
- True or false, according to Rule 4.03 (a): "Except the pitcher and the catcher, any fielder may station himself anywhere in fair territory."
- Who was expected to win the Minnesota Twins' regular left-field job? (Head immediately for the showers if you miss this one.)
- Roberto Kelly went from the New York Yankees to the Reds to the Braves to ...
- Name six of the 12 players involved in last December's Houston Astros-San Diego Padres trade, the biggest since 1957.
- Sept. 6 probably will be the biggest day of the season. Why?

- Dodgers reliever Phil Regan (Baltimore Orioles) and Jim Riggelman (Chicago Cubs).
- b.
 - N.L. Central, A.L. Central.
 - Mitch Williams and Lee Smith.
 - Six—Damon Berryhill, Ron Gant, Brian Hunter, Deion Sanders, Pete Smith and Manager Davey Johnson, who hit 43 home runs for the Braves in 1973.
 - Julio Franco went to Japan and is replaced by Chris Sabo.
 - Colorado's Coors Field and Kansas City's grass.

- Goose Gosage, Jack Morris, Jeff Reardon and Rick Sutcliffe.
- True.
- Marty Cordova.
- The Montreal Expos.
- The Padres traded Phil Plantier, Derek Bell, Pedro Martinez, Doug Brocail, Craig Shipley and Ricky Gutierrez to Houston for Ken Caminiti, Steve Finley, Andujar Cedeno, Roberto Petagine, Brian Williams and a player to be named.
- Cal Ripken can break Lou Gehrig's record of 2,130 consecutive games.

Answers

- The Padres.
- Steve Ontiveros of Oakland.
- False. The preceding runner is out.
- Bruce Bochy (Padres), Bob Boone (Kansas City Royals), Kevin Kennedy (Boston Red Sox), Johnny Oates (Texas Rangers), former

A wink was as good as a nod to this horse

The Washington Post

Burk's Charger veered wildly in a race at Pimlico this month not because he was careless or clumsy or common. No, a veterinary specialist said, the horse smashed into the inside rail because he didn't know it was there.

Seith A. Koch was blunt with his diagnosis: Burk's Charger is blind, and has been for some time.

Burk's Charger became a winner in his fifth start, in February, and followed that with a first- and second-place finish. He was a 3 year old on the rise, a black-maned bay with a strong closing kick, $19,595 won and a lot of promise.

But the usually obedient brown gelding had acted wacky in two of his nine races, darting right at the start of one, left in the homestretch of another. The latter started a two-horse tumble that left jockey Allen Stacy with a stiff neck and cracked ribs.

So Koch, a veterinary ophthalmologist, was summoned to trainer Jack Salter's Laurel Park stable Saturday to examine the eyes of Burk's Charger. Even before Koch unpacked his instruments and approached the patient, he saw trouble—ominous blue-gray pupils, permanently enlarged. Koch looked into them with a lighted scope and said later, "It blew my mind."

There was severe degeneration in the retina and optic nerves of both eyes. Burk's Charger's retinas were "burned out," Koch said, a condition no medicine or treatment can correct.

"I'm not going to say he has no vision whatsoever," Koch said. "But he certainly doesn't have usable vision. ... You can safely say, from a functional standpoint, that he's blind." The horse's handlers were agast. Sure, the dilated pupils had been noticeable, even unsettling, but in four months at Laurel, Burk's Charger hadn't acted like a sightless horse—around the stable, anyway, or during workouts.

"He never runs into anything," said Sheila Kane, who became his groom last month.

"He knows where the windows are," said assistant trainer Michael "Tank" Beck. "He knows where the water bucket is. He always knows where you're at around him. ..."

Koch questioned how such a horse could be permitted to race nine times in three states. But Pat Brackett, a state-designated veterinarian who works at Pimlico and Laurel, said it would be costly and impractical to check the eyes of every horse in every race.

On the road

The Tigers' loss marked their seventh in a row, while the Salukis' win snapped a four-game losing streak.

"(Holder) pitched well and the defense played well behind her," Saluki Head Coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said. "I felt we played much better than we did the previous four games."

Missouri (45-14) took a U-turn in the second game behind an 8-run third inning and a solid pitching performance by Barb Wright, who surrendered only one hit in five innings.

"She was a good pitcher," Brechtelsbauer said. "She moved the ball well. The ball dropped out. She put the ball where she wanted to put it and made us hit it where she put it."

The Tigers exploded for six runs, all earned, off Saluki starting pitcher Buffy Blust, who was yanked in favor of sophomore reliever Jamie Schutteck with two outs in the third stanza. Schutteck did not fare well, either, surrendering two runs — both earned — in the final inning-and-a-third of play.

"It was a good game until all of a sudden they got on a roll," Brechtelsbauer said. "They found holes for everything they hit. They got on a role once they got a couple of runs."

Schutteck (12-3) was purposely limited to one and one-third innings of work in the twin bill in an effort to take precautions with a left-knee injury she sustained when she was hit by a pitch in a game during the team's trip to Florida over spring break.

Brechtelsbauer said she was fearful that Schutteck might further injure herself before SIUC's six MVC games this weekend. She said she will decide on a game-by-game basis how she will use her ace hurler.

The Salukis (5-7 in MVC) will leave for Indiana State, play the Sycamores (3-7) twice, and then head to Illinois State on Friday. SIUC faces the Redbirds (12-0) for a doubleheader Saturday afternoon before departing later that evening to visit Bradley (4-8) for a pair of Sunday contests.

With only seven spots available for the 8-team MVC tournament May 11-13 (the Sycamores receive an automatic bid for hosting the games), the Salukis are in sixth place ... and in position to do anything from moving up to a third seed to falling out of the playoffs, which makes this six-game weekend extremely important.

"This is a huge weekend," Brechtelsbauer said. "If we have a great weekend we'll be in, and if we don't we may be out. We're on the bubble."

With SIUC's schedule still showing games against eighth-place Bradley and seventh-place Northern Iowa (4-6), both of which are battling the Salukis for the sixth and seventh playoff spots, the Salukis are in a position to control their own fate.

"We don't have to sit and wait and wait for other teams to do it," Brechtelsbauer said. "We can do it ourselves. That's a pretty good position to be in."

she couldn't care less about baseball.

"I'll go to the games and drink a couple of beers, but that's about it," Doran said.

Joc Mayer, a junior in forestry from Mokena, said the only reason he has ever gone to a game was because it was free.

"No one cares anymore," said John Piramo, a senior in psychology from Chicago.

Many people said they preferred other sports. A common complaint was that the sport is too slow and boring. Hockey and basketball were favorite alternatives mentioned.

Terry Lilley, a freshman in history, expressed a major dislike for the sport.

"Baseball is a large plant-eating, bird-brained dinosaur slugging in its movements and outdated," Lilley said.

Most people said they doubted another strike would occur. Dave Arey, assistant director of the Coal Research Center, said he assumes everyone will go to great lengths to avoid a second strike.

"If the season ends due to a second strike baseball will have destroyed itself," Irby said.

Golf

"They have more resources and a big tradition — as well as being ranked fourth in the country — and should challenge for the national championship."

Southwest Missouri State (982) finished third and Illinois State (983) finished fourth in the 8-team field.

"We have a good rivalry with Illinois State, so it is always good when we can beat them," Daugherty said.

Everyone contributed

Daugherty said the key to the team's success was that every member contributed.

"Everybody played together as a team," she said. "It was cold yesterday at about 32 degrees and it rained the day before, so I'm very happy with the way our team played in less-than-ideal conditions."

Senior Lieschen Eller led the Salukis, finishing in a tie for fourth with a three-round total of 236.

"I'm happy with the way I played," Eller said. "The wind was really blowing strong and that was tough, but I played well through it."

Eller's leadership role

Daugherty said Eller has meant a lot to the program and took over the leadership role on the team this year.

"She was the only all-conference player not from Tulsa, which is an achievement considering she has been playing with a lot of pressure."

"She has already graduated and is pursuing her master's degree, but still finds time to practice all of the time."

Eller said she is planning to play on the mini-tour and see what happens there.

It is possible she might return to SIUC to get her master's in sports psychology, she said.

One of the surprises of the tournament for the Salukis was sophomore Stacy Skillman, who was SIUC's second-highest finisher at 241.

"She was a transfer who didn't play last year, so in actuality she is a freshman," Daugherty said. "Stacy has a lot of distance, and when she controls the ball she is very good."

Molly Hudgins (248), Jamie Smith (249), Kristen Oglesby (251) and Laura Stefanich (264) rounded out the Saluki contingent.

Daugherty said the future should be strong for women's golf here.

"I'm excited about players like Molly, Kristen, Jamie and Stacy coming back," she said.

"We will miss Lieschen and Laura, but we have a lot of quality golfers returning."

Crowds

They came—50,245 strong when a crowd as small as 35,000 was predicted. They cheered. Not like it was the World Series or anything, mind you. But enthusiastically.

Yankee manager Buck Showalter even got his own, "Buck, Buck, Buck" chant. They only brought a couple of angry signs—like one that said, "Shame On You." And they only booed once all day—when they spotted union boss Don Fehr coming off the field after batting practice.

Why, the crowd even managed to overlook the gaffes of replacement umpires—from college ball and the low-minors—who worked the game because owners have locked out the real ump. (Maybe New Yorkers aren't so keen after all.)

"It seemed like a normal big crowd at Yankee Stadium," said infielder Pat Kelly. "We even had our usual drunk fan sliding head-first into second base."

"It's been a long time. You just want to get back," said Yankee pitcher Bill Wickman. "It was really excellent to see the way the fans supported us."

"Just running across the field from the bullpen to the mound, I was so excited it felt like I'd run for an hour and a half."

"Let's not judge the fan reaction just yet," grinned veteran Don Mattingly. "We won. Wait until we kick a couple of balls or get down early by a few runs. They may still have a few things saved up to say to us."

One day's response in one ballpark is as indeterminate as evaluating an election after returns arrive from the first precinct.

Still, Yankee Stadium is to baseball what New Hampshire is to presidential primaries. In this joint, you're permitted to read tea leaves.

"This is a good start. Everything really positive," said Rangers pitching coach Dick Bosman. "But we have to build on this."

Twin tracksters sign

After stellar prep careers, Eldorado High School brothers Jeremy and Joseph Parks signed national letters-of-intent Tuesday to attend SIUC.

The twins are slated to join both the Saluki cross-country and track teams. They had been avidly recruited by such powerhouses as Oklahoma State, Iowa State and Illinois State.

"Running at SIU will make it easier for our parents to watch us run," Joseph said. "We know people in Carbondale and we will get a lot more support running so close to home."

Joseph finished fourth in the Illinois High School Cross Country Championships last fall, while Jeremy took 11th place.

Saluki Head Coach Bill Cornell said he's been keeping an eye on Little Egypt's top twin tandem throughout their careers at Eldorado.

"They have a lot of talent and are winners," he said. "I have been aware of their careers the past few seasons, and look forward to working with them at SIUC."

Netter all-academic

SIUC senior tennis standout Atlat Merchant, a native of Bombay, India, was recently named to the Missouri Valley Conference all-academic first team.

Merchant boasts a 3.73 grade-point average and is scheduled to be awarded a degree in hotel and restaurant management.

National billiards tilt

The SIUC Student Center is slated to host the Association of College Unions International Billiards Championships Friday and Saturday.

College billiard players from across the nation will vie for the title beginning Friday at 1 p.m. and Saturday at 8 a.m.

For more information on the championship tournament phone 453-2803.

Shryock pecs and lats

Saturday night is the 5th Annual Mr. and Mrs. SIU Natural Bodybuilding Competition at Shryock Auditorium.

Preliminary judging starts at 2 p.m. Saturday afternoon, and the finals will begin around 7 p.m.

Tickets for the event can be purchased at Shryock or the Student Center.

Tickets for the preliminary judging are $3, with a seat to watch the finals going for $6. A ticket package including both is $7.

Triathlon Saturday

The 12th Annual Doc Spackman Memorial Triathlon is set to kick off Saturday at the Campus Lake boat docks at 8 a.m. Participants will compete in a 5-mile bike trek, a 2-mile run and then a 385-yard swim in Campus Lake. Competitors may register Saturday at the event beginning at 6:30 a.m., or sign up ahead of time at the Rec Center Information Desk.

Fees for the triathlon are $8 for individuals and $18 for teams of three. Late registrants have to pay $12 for individuals and $22 for a team. For more information phone Kathryn Hollister at 453-1267.

Softball squad faces critical road trip

By David Vingren
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Which is harder, going up against the nation's 15th-ranked team in a doubleheader, or playing six crucial conference games in just three days, all of them on the road?

Answer: the Saluki softball team will find out when it hits the road Friday.

SIUC (21-19) split the doubleheader against No. 15 Missouri on Tuesday at a neutral site in Manchester, Mo., capturing the first game 3-2 but dropping the final contest 8-0 in a five-inning slaughter.

The Salukis now must prepare for Friday through Sunday's doubleheaders at three Missouri Valley Conference schools in a weekend that could determine the team's playoff fate.

Christine Knotts provided the game-winning hit for the Salukis in the top of the sixth inning of the opening game against Mizzou Tuesday. With Missouri up 2-1 and Salukis Dawn Daenzer and Marlo Pecarro on base, Knotts lined her ninth triple of the year to clear the bases and put the hometown heroines ahead for good by the final 3-2 margin.

SIUC starting pitcher Kim Holder went the distance to pick up the win and move her record to 4-5. The freshman gave up two runs — both earned — on six hits, with one walk and one strikeout.

Players say crowds show fans have forgiven

By Thomas Boswell
The Washington Post

NEW YORK—When it comes to sports, this is a tough, demanding, sophisticated town. In every big-time American game, the traditions here go back generations, not merely years or even decades. New Yorkers have long memories, powers of comparison and pride in being hard to con. It's no town for soft touches or suckers. They know how the world works. They're a litmus test. (Just ask them.)

If you want to know how the public—or at least the baseball public—feels about the return of its delinquent game, start here in Yankee Stadium.

"I'm relieved. I'm pleasantly surprised," said Yankee pitcher Jimmy Key. He wasn't talking about his curveball or even his Opening Day win over Texas. Key was talking about the only thing in baseball that matters in 1995—the fans.

Ever since baseball's 232-day strike ended, one question has been paramount. Would the fans who truly care for the game, and understand that it should be protected and improved, forgive the owners and players who have dam-

... but not all SIUC students have forgotten

By Carey Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

While the much of the country seems to be ecstatic that professional baseball players are back on the diamond, some SIUC students' feelings are less clear.

Heather Roloff, a junior in university studies from Shamburg, said she is excited about the return and would have freaked if the strike went on.

"Baseball is a part of summer," she said. "It's a big celebration of life. It's America."

Robert Irby, a senior in philosophy and history education, said he feels great now that the season has begun. Irby said he was planning to skip every afternoon responsibility he had to enjoy opening day.

Leo Michuda, a graduate student in manufacturing systems from Chicago, said it was good to see some real pitching yesterday.

Others on campus were less enthusiastic. Troy Miller, a senior in aviation management from Madison, Wis., said he really does not care about baseball. He said the only reason he has ever attended baseball games was for the social atmosphere.

Tara Doran, a junior in therapeutic recreation from Homewood, agreed with Miller and said

Women linksters nab 2nd in MVC

By Doug Durso
Daily Egyptian Reporter

This is one case when finishing second is as good as winning.

The SIUC women's golf team placed a strong second to nationally ranked Tulsa in the Missouri Valley Conference Golf Tournament held in Cedar Falls, Iowa, April 24 and 25.

Tulsa, ranked the fourth-best team in the country, ran away with the tournament in setting an MVC record for 18 holes (297) and a 54-hole total of 900. SIUC shot a team three-round total of 967 to capture second place.

Saluki Head Coach Diane Daugherty said she knew that the tournament was a battle for second.

"I am very delighted with our performance," she said. "Tulsa is just out of our league. If you added the budgets for all of the rest of the teams together and multiplied by two it still wouldn't be as much as Tulsa's."
