Minimum wage hike may affect SIUC

Students' jobs on, off campus may be cut or reduced if increase is implemented.

By Brian T. Sutton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Some minimum wage jobs at SIUC and in Carbondale may have hours reduced or may be cut if the national minimum wage is increased, a University official and local business owners say.

President Bill Clinton's proposed minimum wage increase of 90 cents during a two-year period would raise the wage from $4.25 an hour to $5.15 an hour. Some U.S. House of Representative Republicans have proposed a $1-increase instead of Clinton's 90-cent increase.

Pamela Britton, director of SIUC Financial Aid, said if the minimum wage is raised and no additional funding is provided for the University's budget, campus employers will have less hours to provide for their workers.

But she said in some cases this will be a positive thing because the wage would be higher, and students would be able to work fewer hours while making the same amount of money as they do now.

Britton said if the minimum wage is increased, there also will be fewer hours available to SIUC students who work through federal and state-funded minimum wage jobs on campus. She said the proposed federal appropriations bill does not provide for an increase in the amount of federal money that would be used for those jobs.

If the wage is increased and no additional money is given, University employers will have to shorten the hours students can work for these jobs, or it may have to cut jobs to make up the difference, Britton said.

However, Gary Drake, director of the SIUC Arena, said the Arena cannot cut employees and still provide the same level of service. He said tickets prices for Arena events may have to increase to make up for the possible minimum wage hike.

"I would not cut jobs so we may need to raise ticket prices $5 or so," he said. "The bands get a percentage of the profit, and we would need to make more to cover the wages of workers."

Jim Skiersch, director of the University Bookstore in the Student Center, said he would try to keep the same amount of workers and have the same amount of service by reducing hours the workers could work. He said prices would not go up on merchandise in the bookstore.

"We will learn to do more with less," he said.

Yaser Ibrahim, co-owner of Sam's Cafe, 521 S. Illinois Ave., said local businesses off campus that employ students who work for minimum wage rely on profits to run their businesses.

Ibrahim said his business would be affected by the minimum wage

$15,000 USG allocation too little—WIDB engineer

By Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An allocation of $15,000 to a student radio station by the Undergraduate Student Government will not help get the station back on the air before next spring, radio station officials say.

USG voted on two proposals Wednesday to help fund WIDB to allow the station to get back on the air after an equipment failure in February.

The first proposal, which asked USG to fund WIDB $82,000 to replace faulty broadcasting equipment, did not pass the USG Senate.

Morgan Grammer, WIDB chief engineer, said the $15,000 allocation for next year is not enough for the station to begin broadcasting before the first day of fall classes.

"Come August 21, WIDB will not be on the air because USG could not organize themselves with the information we gave them," he said. "I think I speak for everybody at WIDB when I say we would rather USG just stay out of this after tonight."

Grammer said WIDB talked with administrators and USG members about a workable budget to get the station back on the air by next fall. But he said some senators did not talk to him and did not understand what WIDB was asking for.

Eric Bottom, USG Finance Committee chairman and College of Business senator, said the only budget request he received from WIDB was for $136,000. He said that request did not include labor costs for replacing the faulty equipment.

He said because of the large request, he wrote the proposal for $15,000 this year and requested a committee be formed of WIDB officials, USG members and administrators to find a workable budget that all three parties could agree on.

Bottom, who is also the student trustee-elect, said because he did not receive a copy of the budget asking

SIUC officials: Male, female professors' salaries moving slowly toward equality

By Donita Polly
DE Politics Editor

Female professors at SIUC receive lower average salaries than males in the same positions, but University officials say the disparity is slowly decreasing.

A survey conducted by SIUC's Institutional Research and Studies states that female full professors earned an average salary of $53,270 in 1995, while males earned an average salary of $60,735.

Female associate and assistant professors also earned less than males by about $4,400 and $1,200 respectively.

Another survey conducted by the Integrated Post Secondary Education Data System reports that female professors who work in Illinois public universities earn smaller average salaries when compared to males in the same positions.

“(More equitable pay) doesn't mean all the problems are solved. We still have to work at finishing up the movement to equality, but we have made progress.”

Margaret Winters

Associate vice chancellor for Academic Affairs

Margaret Winters, associate vice chancellor for Academic Affairs, said the University has made efforts to hire more females and pay them equally in the last decade.

"It doesn't mean all the problems are solved," she said.

"We still have to work at finishing up the movement to equality, but we have made progress."

Winters said that of the 31 full professors at SIUC who are female, none are engineering professors, who traditionally among the highest paid.

She said females are usually drawn to fields such as the humanities and arts, which are lower paying positions.

She said females are just beginning to gain full professor status while males have had these jobs for years.

"It's better than it used to be, and it will get better," she said.

"It would take some time before this shows up in the higher ranks."

Females also have a lower average salary because many are more willing to work part-time and lower-level jobs than men, Winters said.

She said tenured females are pressured to do more teaching and serve in advisement roles.

She said this makes it harder for females to become full professors because they cannot spend time working on research that is needed to become full professors.

However, according to the University's survey, the average salary of SIUC female instructors is more than male instructors.

In 1995, SIUC female instructors earned an average of $30,072 while males earned $20,233.

Ellert said females are paid more as instructors for the same reason male professors are paid more.

She said females are usually in these jobs for a long time and do not get promoted from the rank of instructor.

U.N. WAR CRIME TRIBUNAL FREES SICK GENERAL — BRUSSELS, Belgium—A U.N. tribunal prosecuting war crimes in the former Yugoslavia ordered the provisional release Wednesday of a Bosnian Serb general whose arrest under suspicious circumstances had severely strained the Balkans peace process. One of the tribunal's two presiding judges, Claude Jorda, ruled at a hearing in The Hague that Bosnian Serb Army Gen. Djordje Djukic should be released immediately for health reasons and be allowed to return to his family home in Belgrade. The move came amid reports that the general is suffering from terminal pancreatic cancer and has only a short time to live. In ordering the release, Jorda rejected a prosecution request to withdraw the indictment against Djukic, which claimed that his role as a senior logistics officer in the Bosnian Serb army made him partly responsible for the death of thousands of civilians during the shelling of Sarajevo. Jorda also refused a defense appeal to drop the charges due to lack of evidence.

YELTSIN VOWS TO DELAY BORDER RESOLUTION — BEIJING—As relations between Russia and China approach their warmest moment in half a century, President Boris N. Yeltsin preceded his arrival here Wednesday with a blast at illegal Chinese immigrants and a vow to delay final resolution of a 300-year-old border dispute. Chinese and then-Soviet foreign ministers agreed to define their 2,600-mile common border during a 1991 Moscow visit, and the painstaking work of fixing each post along the frontier has been completed except for about 12 miles. Border disputes and an atmosphere of distrust that prevailed between the Communist giants after their ideological fallout in the 1950s led to armed clashes and the massing of troops by both sides.

NIH FACES TESTING CONTROVERSIAL AIDS DRUG — WASHINGTON—The National Institutes of Health, after an unusually protracted dispute, is beginning a nationwide clinical trial of a drug that has been promoted as a cure for AIDS by Nation of Islam leaders but had been dismissed as ineffective by NIH researchers. Even as the trial begins in Washington and several other cities — culminating a five-year debate involving issues of race, religion and medical politics — disagreements persist among key participants about whether the research should be conducted and what it will prove. The drug that is being studied has become a kind of symbol in recent years as the AIDS epidemic has veered increasingly into poor black communities. The compound, known as low-dose alpha interferon, or Kemron, has become popular among some African Americans who resist mainstream medicine. It also has become the focus of a crusade among a nucleus of black physicians who contend that they have been shut out of the U.S. research establishment.

SAFETY OFFICIAL: CF6 ENGINES NEED CLOSER LOOK — WASHINGTON—The National Transportation Safety Board says the Federal Aviation Administration should require more frequent inspection of thousands of General Electric Co. jet engines that may be subject to internal cracks. Three of the GE CF6 engines have experienced major failures, causing one fire and passenger evacuation. The FAA has required inspections of the engines, but safety board Chairman Jim Hall said in an April 16 letter to FAA administrator David R. Hinson that the inspection schedule is insufficient. The CF6 powers many Boeing 747s and 767., McDonnell Douglas MD-11s and DC-10s, and Airbus A300s, A310s and 330s. The safety board originally recommended that the engine inspections be conducted after an engine on an Egypt Air Airbus A300 exploded and caught fire at Cairo on April 10. The board then determined that two similar explosions, affecting a DC-10 in Bangkok in 1995 and an A300 at Los Angeles in 1993, had been caused by the same metallurgical defect.

Nutritionist cautions: Store foods carefully

By Mary Beth Arimond
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Some students may not realize that their upset stomach came from food poisoning, which is caused by people not knowing how to handle or store food properly, a nutritionist says.

Kate Zager, a nutrition and fitness coordinator for the Student Health Programming Wellness Center, said many students forget to wash their hands before and after they prepare food.

She said they also need to remember to wash the counter top and cooking utensils with soap and hot water.

"Many students who use a cutting board with foods like chicken forget to wash the board before they place their food on it," she said.

"With that in mind, they can transfer the bacteria to other food, which results in food poisoning."

Zager said food should be kept cold or hot.

She said cold is considered to be 40 degrees Fahrenheit or below, and hot is 140 degrees Fahrenheit or above.

"Perishable foods shouldn't remain at, or near, room temperature for more than two hours," she said. "At 60 degrees Fahrenheit, illness-producing bacteria can start to grow. At 80 degrees Fahrenheit and above, they multiply rapidly."

She said canned food should be stored in dry, cool cabinets.

Zager said people should avoid cabinets above the stove because the heat could bulge or dent the cans, which then could spoil the food.

She also said students should not store food in cabinets that contain pipes because if the pipes leak, it could result in damaged cans and spoiled food.

Zager said to thaw food in the refrigerator or the microwave, not at room temperature.

"Bacteria can start multiplying on the outside even while the center portion is still frozen," she said.

As the warm weather arrives, so does barbecuing season.

Zager said students need to take extra precautions when preparing raw meats, fish, poultry and dairy products.

"Make sure the meat and other foods are fully cooked," she said. "If there's any pink in the meat, don't eat it."

She said if food looks spoiled, smell the food rather than trying to taste it.

She said if it smells spoiled at all, throw it out.

She said many people assume mayonnaise causes food poisoning, but that is not the case.

"It's the protein that causes the food poisoning," she said. "The protein is found in foods like chicken, potato salad or egg."

When multiple roommates live in one household, their refrigerator tends to fill up with food, and sometimes food could be forgotten when it is tucked away in the back, Zager said.

"Roommates should date their food with a washable marker so they know when it was put in the refrigerator," she said.

She said the "sell by" or "pull date" on dairy products is the date the product should be sold.

People can consume the dairy product within seven days after the "sell by" date, she said.

Whitney Morris, a senior in early childhood education from Collinsville, said she thinks she is prone to food poisoning because her kitchen, which she shares with other roommates, is not always clean.

"It's hard to keep track of what's been clean and what hasn't because we cook throughout the day and at different times," she said.

"I don't allow food poisoning to dominate my thoughts; otherwise, I would be scared to eat."

Jim Kintz, a sophomore in hotel and restaurant management from Chicago, said his roommates are very unsanitary because they leave dirty dishes on the counter top and in the sink.

"These dishes could sit there for up to 10 days at the most, but on average, they sit there for two to three days," he said.

Zager said the kitchen should be kept clean to prevent food poisoning.

"Roommates should remember to change sponges every once in a while," she said.

"Towels and dishcloths need to be clean, and food should not be left out for a long period of time."

She said food poisoning generally develops 12 to 24 hours after consumption, and it results in extensive diarrhea, vomiting and stomach cramping.

She said contact Health Services as soon as these symptoms occur.

Students protest Israeli retaliation

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Assistant Features Editor

More than 30 SIUC Lebanese and Palestinian protested recent Israeli bombardments of Lebanon outside of the Student Center Wednesday.

Last week, Israeli artillery retaliated against various Lebanese attacks by shelling the Southern Lebanese village of Qana. More than 100 Lebanese civilians were killed, and 100 were wounded.

Mowafaq Manasra, a protest participant and a graduate student in electrical engineering from Palestine, said Israel needs to pull out of South Lebanon for peace to be established between the countries.

He said the Israeli occupation in South Lebanon is the reason for the recent attacks on Israel by the Lebanese militant group, Hezbollah.

"If you come to my house, force your way in and occupy it. I will do whatever in my means to clean my house from the attackers," he said. "It is self defense. They have no right to be there. It's not their land."

Hezbollah members claim that Israel violated the written 1993 agreement restricting the two countries from attacking civilian groups.

Resident offers plan for woods

Slow, cool burn
of underbrush
proposed solution

By Lisa M. Pangburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A Carbondale resident who has already offered his time and energy to rejuvenate Thompson Woods has now proposed what he says is a better way to fix the depletion of the woods.

Jim Jung, owner of Hillside Nursery, 1900 W. Sycamore St., has now offered to do a slow, cool burn of the underbrush in addition to spraying herbicide on exotic plants in Thompson Woods.

Jung said he wants to do the burn because it is the most effective way to treat the problem of exotic plants pushing out native plants in the woods.

Jung also has offered to spray 30 gallons of environmentally safe herbicide at the cost of $1 to the University to control the exotic plants. The herbicide was donated by Monsanto, an agriculture chemical company, last week. Jung's offer to spray the herbicide was accepted by the SIUC administration Monday.

Jung said many times fire is healthy for wooded areas.

"A lot of native species are used to fire and thrive because of it, but a lot of exotic plants are not," he said. "And that is where we can easily get rid of the exotic plants in Thompson Woods."

He said if the burning proposal is approved by the SIUC administration, he would also take precautions to properly close off the woods and do the necessary cleanup of wood and brush on the forest floor so the flames would not get too high.

"We will not leave any large amounts of combustibles in the woods," he said.

Philip Robertson, an SIUC plant biology professor and head of the Thompson Woods Management Committee, said many people think a burn would be a good idea, but he said there are other things to think about.

"The weather has to be cooperative, and right now there are some wildflowers out there that would be burnt but not destroyed," he said.

Robertson said his preference would be to burn next spring.

"My preference would be to spray this year and knock out the (Japanese) honeysuckle (an exotic plant species) and then burn next spring and hit it with another spray of herbicide," he said. "My guess is that it is too late for a spring burn."

Bruce Francis, SIUC superintendent of grounds, said there would be a quicker depletion of the exotic plants if the burn, along with the use of the herbicides, was approved.

Jan Wilder-Thomas, a local environmentalist said she is leery of any type of forest burning.

"It's a controversial subject," she said. "It could be a good thing, but all I've seen come out of burning is negative things."

Wilder-Thomas said she has seen scarring on trees from previous burns in the Shawnee National Forest that have led to the trees being cut down. But she said she is not sure how such a burn would work in Thompson Woods.

James Tweedy, SIUC vice chancellor of Administration, said the administration also must think about the city when it considers the burn.

"We have been told by the (U.S.) Forest Service that a slow burn is the best way to deal with the exotic plants, but we need to think how the smoke will affect the city as well," he said. "We are still working on it."

Same-sex marriage bill up for vote in legislature

By Marc Chase
DE Editor-in-Chief

The Illinois House is expected to vote today on a bill that would not recognize same-sex marriages of couples who legally marry outside of the state and move to Illinois, a spokesman says.

The bill passed a House committee Wednesday and now is on the House floor for final consideration.

Mike Sys, spokesman for Illinois House Speaker Lee Daniels, R-Elmhurst, said most of the bill's supporters, including Daniels, advocate the legislation because of state financial reasons, not moral reasons.

"It's not so much a philosophical issue about same-sex marriages as it is a fiscal issue," Sys said. "If we grant all kinds of pensions and health benefits (to same-sex couples) in the private or public sector, we're talking about a huge burden on businesses."

Sys said the prompt passage of the bill by the House committee is a good sign that it also will be approved by the entire House.

Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, said if same-sex marriages were recognized by the state, Southern Illinois and all state regions would lose revenue.

"Regardless of the moral side of the issue, in a time where Illinois is fighting for funds for education we need to hold on to

It is time for the minimum wage to be raised again

IT LOOKS LIKE LIFE BEHIND THE BURGER grill has a good chance of becoming more rewarding. A minimum wage increase that appeared politically unfeasible earlier this year is looking more and more probable after gaining the reserved acceptance of Republican leaders such as Bob Dole and Newt Gingrich.

The main political thrust behind the resurrection of the minimum wage increase proposal are the public opinion polls that have indicated that 70 percent of the public supports the raise.

These polls are not the main reason the wage should be raised, however. Adjusted for inflation, minimum wage is at a 40-year low. It's simply time to raise it again.

THE EFFECTS OF AN INCREASE AT SIUC ARE still unclear and would depend on whether the government would fund budget increases to accommodate a raise without reducing hours. If the extra funding never panned out, officials have indicated that a combination of less hours and fewer jobs would be the only alternative. But if the earning power of these jobs continues to deteriorate, the jobs become less worthwhile to hold.

Most of the on-campus jobs undergraduates have are minimum wage positions with modest pay increases after the worker stays on for an extended time. A student staying at the same campus job, working the maximum number of hours for three school-years under the current minimum wage, would still make less than the proposed $5.15 figure. Without a minimum wage increase, on-campus jobs become less and less worth the time students allocate to them.

MANY CRITICS OF THE PLAN CONTEND THAT life behind the grill will only get better for those who aren't fired as a result of labor costs that increase with the wage. It is true that companies would have to increase productivity and/or prices if the proposed increase from $4.25 to $5.15 becomes a reality.

The old adage, "You get what you pay for," gains a little significance here. Minimum wage jobs have a very high turnover rate. Proponents of the raise say this turnover could be reduced if the wage goes up.

A 1990 study at the University of Washington gives credence to both these theories. It found that when Washington increased its minimum wage during 1989 and 1990, that 10,000 jobs were lost. But the study also noted that employers spent more time screening and training employees.

INCREASES IN THE MINIMUM WAGE ALWAYS translate into higher operating costs. If legislators listened to this argument every time an increase was proposed, the wage would never go up. We believe the inflation-adjusted low point of the wage makes the argument less valid.

There is a balance to be struck here. A higher minimum wage would give many workers more training as a result of employers seeking more productivity out of them. It also makes low-end jobs a viable source of income for people that may or may not support a family. Raising the wage too much or too soon destroys job opportunities by making people too expensive to hire. One thing is certain, however: The wage has to be increased periodically (unless one advocates sweatshop labor).

A 40-YEAR LOW IN WHAT THESE WORKERS are really earning makes it apparent that now is one of the times it should be raised. The fact that 70 percent of the American public agrees with this will make it easier for Congress to make the right decision on the proposal.

African unity needs realistic approach

I am replying to Dele Omosogbon's Perspective in the April 16 Daily Egyptian.

First of all, I want it to be known that I am fully supportive of the goal of African unity. But I want to see a realistic approach taken to the past, present and future of such a goal. Unrealistic romanticism leads to disillusion. Certainly events of today in Somalia and Liberia, to mention only the worst cases, are not grounds for optimism. I don't think either of these can be blamed on Colonialism.

Dele says there "is only one African culture manifested in diversities." This is meaningless. The same thing can be said about Asia, Europe, etc., with equal lack of verifiability.

What were these "contributions of blacks and Africans to human development and civilization ... prior to the arrival of foreign dynasties in ancient Egypt"? I'm not saying there weren't any, but it is irresponsible to make claims like these without documentation.

"Europeans ... have fought the most wars among themselves of any species of the human family." First of all, Europeans are not a species and second, how can anyone prove such a statement is true? How can one cover the history and prehistory (mostly unknown) of all continents to prove it?

Finally, if I were to make assertions about the nature of "... the black and African psychology" or such statements as "African peoples share the historical experiences, the same rhythms, the same cosmological sensibilities," I would quickly be branded a racist. Much of this nonsense is based on mystical musings by such authors as Kwame Asante and Janheinz Jahn, who are perhaps examples of what Dele calls a "banal syndrome" in a sentence that seems to have strained the resources of the thesaurus.

Blaming gays for world's ills is divisive

Reverend Scott, I enjoyed your letter on April 18 and I too applaud the Hanbrinks' and Harbisons' joyous celebration of their respective anniversaries. We all know the sharing of our lives with another is not always easy and must be full of compromises, negotiations and learning to live together. The source of the strength we need to navigate is of course the love that we share — two people who love each other. And you're right, there is too much divorce and adultery, we need to celebrate the commitment of two people — one to the other. And that is what the "wedding" on Thursday was about.

Why do gay and lesbian people have to make such a spectacle? Because, unfortunately, our society has taken it upon itself to determine through its judicial system and some of its churches who we can love. I'm not sure why we waste our resources on keeping a group of people down, actively attempting to deny individual freedoms and happiness. And what confounds me the most is how does any of this take away from you? How can two people who love each other interfere with your life? Do you know Erika or Kris? Have you ever talked with a gay, lesbian or bisexual person and really tried to hear them?

I'm sorry Rev. Scott, my questions are rhetorical and I don't mean to sound like I'm attacking you. I really do believe we have more in common than you think. However, blaming the ills of the world on any group of people is divisive and ungodly by anyone's standards. There was a time when Baptists, Jews, Catholics, etc. were unfairly targeted by the majority. Right now it seems as if gays, lesbians and bisexuals are the targets of choice. Don't we ever learn that as long as one group is victimized, none of us can ever be assured of our own freedom? I would stand up for your right to be who you are Rev. Scott — can you say the same for me?

Denying gay marriage is unacceptable

This is to Jeffery Scott, pastor of the University Baptist Church, and in response to his letter of April 18. It is unfortunate that your letter contained some glaring inconsistencies, as well as a few truths. Yes, marriage as an institution is a wonderful state of being, however, there isn't a "happily ever after" outside of fairy stories. Marriage is an estate which must be worked at, fought and compromised for by the two people who enter into it. To say two people willing to try marriage with the spouse of their choice is morally unacceptable is outrageous on your part. To deny them the right to pursue their own happiness in the way they prefer, in my opinion, is morally bankrupt.

To further generalize what you find unacceptable about one married couple to the entire population of students in this or any community is unquestionably incorrect. While adultery is a problem in this country, it is hardly a new one brought into being by people of my generation. Yes, marriage needs work, but we haven't found a complete solution for it in over 5000 years. Don't expect miracles overnight. It is not going to happen.

Finally, to make any relationship work requires patience and tolerance as well as work. Mr. Scott, please look in a mirror and cast your stones at the sinner you see there. They will do more good that way. Ultimately, the only person you can change is yourself.

How to submit a letter to the editor:

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 350 words. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

Student apathy needs to end

As a soon to be graduate of SIUC, I wanted to share some thoughts I have had over the years as a student here. First, I have learned probably as much, if not more, from outside experiences while in Southern Illinois than in the classroom. I would encourage all students to take part in student or local government, organizations, and causes as a way to learn and be a part of the community here in Southern Illinois.

Holly Harris

Perspectives

Speaking as a grassroots environmental activist, I have seen a lot of wonderful community spirit and organizing happen here around issues such as logging in the Shawnee forest, the Crab Orchard incinerator, Sugar Creek, Lake Kinkaid, and recycling. And as I approach my venture into the "real" world I begin to see that threats to the world increase each day: smoke stacks from multinational corporations continue to pour more toxins into our air, pulp mills dump bleach into our already dammed rivers, the salvage logging rider rips across our national forests, congress is attempting to weaken the Endangered Species Act while species go extinct, and NAFTA allows U.S. corporations to go into Mexico and other countries to extract "resources" for the Almighty dollar.

I say these things with the hope that students will wake up and take a look at what their apathy helps create. But primarily, I say this for the professors at SIUC. As a student I have taken ecology classes, chemistry classes and a variety of other classes where we have learned about the "environment." And in all of these classes professors are still using bleached, unrecycled paper, even though SIUC General Stores offers unbleached, 100-percent recycled paper. The same professors who talk about ecosystem destruction and its loss of diversity in the classroom take no part in trying to protect the ecosystems so close to where they live. These professors owe it to themselves, and others, to practice what they teach in the classroom. I hope that teachers at SIUC can find the courage to stand up for what they know is correct even if that means their peers, the government and private agencies which might supply them with grant money, might not like what they are saying.

As an organizer, I have tried to motivate people to become involved in environmental issues for about three years, this will be one of my last attempts to do that as a student at SIUC. So with the 10-year anniversary of the Chernobyl disaster and Earth Day week now occurring, make a commitment to yourself to become active. Make time to take part in issues that you know need your attention. We are all part of the problem, but more of us need to become part of the solution.

Holly Harris is a SIUC senior in plant biology.

for $82,000 for WIDB, he was confused about how much money was needed for the station and told the senate that more time should be expended to answer such questions. "I don't know which budget the administration saw last week, and without that information, I cannot support giving $82,000 to WIDB," he said. "I don't even know what budget the $82,000 came from or where that money is going to."

Andrew Ensor, Southern Hills senator and author of the $82,000 proposal, said the proposal was to allow the USG president to get a loan for WIDB. He said the loan could have come from a University office, such as the SIUC Office of the Chancellor.

Ensor said the $82,000 figure was decided upon in a meeting between himself and WIDB officials after analyzing the costs for replacing faulty broadcasting and recording equipment.

"This resolution is so the student president may go out and do this (get the money)," he said. "This does not say the student president has to go out and do this."

USG President Kim Clemens told the senate at the beginning of the meeting that if the $82,000 proposal were to pass, she would veto it. But she said she was in support of Bottom's proposal for $15,000 and for a committee to be formed to discuss additional funding possibilities for the station.

"I will not and cannot let USG go into debt for any organization," she said. "It's as simple as that."

Ensor said he was disappointed in Clemens' opinion on the matter.

"The student president was not at any meetings concerning WIDB, and for her to pass judgment out of ignorance is unfair," he said.

Jemal Powell, Mass Communication and Media Arts senator, said he wanted USG to give the full $82,000 to WIDB because they needed and deserved help from USG. He asked Bottom how long he planned on doing a "song and dance" on the issue.

"I would like to put this off until everyone learns the dance steps," Bottom said.

Bottom said his proposal will not keep WIDB off the air.

"We need time to answer the questions about how much money is needed for WIDB and where it's going," he said.

"I think it's improper for us to say we're going to spend 82,000 or 136,000 of student dollars without us sitting down and answering these questions."

increase because his delivery drivers make minimum wage. He said he will not cut drivers or cut their hours.

"In Carbondale, you cannot be competitive and not have a delivery service," he said. "I will probably raise my prices to make the difference."

Daniel Primont, chairman of the SIUC Economics Department, said raising the minimum wage will not have much of an impact on the U.S. inflation rate, as feared by some opponents of the increase.

"There may be a small raise in the national unemployment," he said.

Some SIUC students who work for minimum wage said they support a minimum wage increase, even if it means they would work fewer hours.

Matt Dowland, a senior in accounting from Carlinville, said he would look for another job or a second job if his hours were reduced at the Alumni Association where he works.

"The increase is fine with me," Dowland said. "I need more money."

Jennifer Camden, a junior in journalism from Murphysboro, said she is hearing the same doom and gloom arguments that were used when the minimum wage was increased to $4.25 an hour in 1989.

"They said the same thing about mass unemployment in 1989, and it did not happen," Camden said.

Camden said she works at a photo lab in the Communications Building for 15 hours a week and baby-sits to make ends meet.

"The minimum wage should be automatically increased with the cost of living," she said. "It shouldn't take an act of Congress for people to be able to pay bills."

OPM release of employee addresses draws criticism

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Rep. John L. Mica, R-Fla., the House civil service subcommittee chairman, has criticized the Office of Personnel Management for its decision to turn over home addresses of OPM employees to federal unions.

"This is an indefensible invasion of the employees' privacy for purely political reasons," Mica said in a statement Tuesday. Mica called the OPM decision a "taxpayer-subsidized reward to the unions" that will permit them to "inundate" agency employees with "highly partisan" material in an election year.

In a letter to Mica last month, OPM Director James B. King said the government shutdowns created confusion among employees concerning their rights during furloughs, and "made it difficult, if not impossible," for unions to communicate with employees.

If unions use the addresses to bombard "unwilling recipients" with political material, King said, he would take "any corrective measures that are needed."

Labor unions, which are obligated to represent the interests of all federal employees in their bargaining units, have long sought the right to obtain home addresses of the individuals they represent, especially non-members.

all possible revenue," Bost said. "I will be supporting this bill (today)."

Southern Illinois Representatives Larry Woolard, D-Carterville, and David Phelps, D-Eldorado, were unavailable for comment Wednesday.

Jeff Lucas, co-director of the SIUC student group Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals and Friends, said while his group opposes the bill, he expects it to pass the House today.

"Our best hope is that the House will find it in their hearts to vote against the bill and respect the gay community," Lucas said. "But we expect it to pass, and our only hope is that Gov. Edgar will be on our side."

The Illinois bill passed the state Senate last month and would require House approval and a signature from Gov. Jim Edgar before it could become law.

The bill was written in response to another bill in the Hawaiian legislature that calls for the state to legally recognize same-sex marriages.

Lucas said the bill is needless because it mimics a law that already exists in the state.

Illinois law already refuses to recognize same-sex marriages. Sys said the bill would only clarify Illinois law and prohibit the legal recognition of same-sex married couples who come to Illinois from other states where their vows may have been legally recognized.

Leader's day in Tokyo court arrives

Los Angeles Times

TOKYO, April 24—Shoko Asahara, the apocalyptic guru accused of launching a campaign of mass terrorism on one of the world's largest cities, appeared in court Wednesday to answer charges of masterminding the deadly nerve gas attack on Tokyo subway riders last year.

Asahara, who lured hordes of young followers into his Aum Supreme Truth cult with claims of supernatural powers and a doomsday vision of salvation, is accused of killing 11 people and injuring more than 5,500 others in the attack on March 20, 1995. If convicted, he could face death by hanging.

In his first public appearance since his arrest last May, the guru maintained a poker face. He told the court his occupation is "sponsoring" Supreme Truth, the Japanese media reported.

Asahara's long hair was tied back in a ponytail, and he wore a dark blue jogging suit. The court had rejected his request to wear white spiritual robes, the Japanese media said.

The brutal crimes that the cult is accused of committing — from murder and kidnapping to the production of rifles and the Nazi-era nerve gas, sarin — astonished Japan and led to national soul-searching about how this well-ordered society could produce such mayhem.

Asahara, 41, is expected to enter his plea before a panel of four judges in the Tokyo District Court, which has been shut down for all other cases. He was transported to court today in a bulletproof white police bus, curtains tightly drawn, accompanied by about 20 escort vehicles and an overhead helicopter.

Protest

Rami Jibreel, a junior in mechanical engineering from the Gaza Strip, said the Hizballah is not an army, but more of a group. He said civilians are suffering because there is no specific place to attack the Hezbollah.

"They are aiming against Hezbollah but killing more civilians than the Hezbollah," he said. "The Hezbollah are just presenting a resistance for the occupation of Lebanon."

Jamil Abbo, president of the General Union of Palestine Student Association and organizer of the rally, said the Israeli prime minister's actions are an attempt to win the confidence of Israeli voters by using force.

"He wanted to play tough with Hezbollah," he said. "He has seemingly won himself little electoral bounce."

In 1993, Secretary of State Warren Christopher persuaded the countries to agree to a cease fire. Abbo said he hopes the United States will intervene again to stop more Israeli bombardments.

"The killing of innocent people is unnecessary," he said.

"The U.S. has influence and authority over Israel. We can see the leaders agreeing on one thing. They all know Israel is wrong. Israel is not working towards peace by occupying the land and firing at civilians." But Pinit Varol, a medical student at SIUC who was born in Israel, said while the death of civilians is unnecessary, the Israeli government has a duty to protect its country.

"I don't think killing anyone is the right thing, but their position is understandable," she said. "Israel is in a kind of catch 22. What can it do? If Israel doesn't act, they will keep on getting shelled by Hezbollah."

Varol said she does not believe intervention by the United States will result in immediate peace.

"I think it gets more difficult when the U.S. becomes involved," she said. "The resolution has to come from either side, not a power figure standing overhead."

Samuel Goldman, a professor in educational administration and higher education, said the Hezbollah are opposed to the statehood of Israel. He said Israel created the buffer zone in Lebanon to protect itself from constant Syrian and Lebanese attacks.

Israel only will consider pulling out of Lebanon when it has a guarantee of security from the Hezbollah, Goldman said.

"The main goal of the Hezbollah guerrillas is the elimination of Israel," he said. "Israel would give back the land tomorrow, but it's a true security issue."

Varol said the country of Lebanon is not very strong, but they still have a responsibility to stop the Hezbollah.

"Obviously they don't have much power, but the Hezbollah are situated in Lebanon," she said. "Someone in Lebanon needs to stop the Hezbollah."

Corporate sponsors plan marketing for Olympic torch relay

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—The cross-country torch relay begins in Los Angeles Saturday amid an Olympic-size marketing blitz.

Corporate sponsors of the largest Olympic relay ever are using it to promote their products. They plan to hawk souvenirs and other merchandise along the 15,000-mile route to Atlanta. BMW, the "official provider of mobility" to the relay, is using the event to showcase a new luxury sedan.

At its core, the relay reflects the Olympic spirit: 5,200 torchbearers were selected because of their service to their communities and cities along the route are throwing free celebrations.

exciting to us."

The relay has the makings of a blockbuster event. The entourage includes 10,000 torchbearers, 2,500 escort runners, 30 cars, 10 motorcycles and some mountain bicycles. The torch will travel through 42 states by foot, boat, train, bike and even pony express, making it larger than the relay for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics.

"We wanted to create a route that reached as many people as possible," said Hillary Hansen, director of the torch relay for the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games. "This is the one chance many people will have in their lives to have an Olympic experience."

It is also a chance for companies to tout their products before a huge audience. The relay is expected to draw between 30 million and 50 million spectators during its 84-day schedule, a crowd that exceeds the TV audience for "ER," which has about 35 million viewers.

"It gives us a platform to speak to America and give our products exposure in the markets where we do business," said Scott Doniger, Olympic product manager for BMW.

"It is awesome to be part of it," said 16-year-old torchbearer Ryan Holguin, a San Pedro High School honor student. "The Olympics are so big and worldwide."

In Kingman, Ariz., residents are throwing a Fifties-style pajama party at the local Boys' Club as the torch arrives next week.

"From Greece to Kingman," said Eve Hanna, who is organizing the celebration in the city of 17,000 located on Route 66. "It is very

Change is under way in Mexico's oil patch

Los Angeles Times

CIUDAD PEMEX, Mexico—Guiding a sedan through this sun-baked settlement of tidy green and yellow cottages, Mayor Simon Zea can barely contain his pride in The Town That Oil Built.

Here, he indicates with a pudgy finger, is the grammar school funded by Pemex, the state-owned oil giant. Further on is the Pemex General Hospital. Over there is the Pemex day-care center with its motherly staffers in pink gingham Pemex smocks.

The mayor lives in the Pemex-built "workers' neighborhood," showers with free, Pemex-supplied water, drives on roads laid by Pemex.

In Ciudad Pemex, even the beauty queen—The Flower of Petroleum—rides on the oil company truck in the parade.

"Everything we have is thanks to Pemex," the beaming, gray-haired Zea said, nodding cheerfully. "The (Mexican) government does nothing."

But today, startling change is sweeping the country. And nowhere is it more evident than in its vast Oil Patch, which is filled with dozens of Pemex company towns.

After decades of treating Pemex as some eternal well-spring of wealth and national pride, official Mexico has concluded that the world's opening borders make this impossible. Now it is trying to do the unthinkable: run the oil company as a company.

Pemex has slashed jobs, cutting the Western Hemisphere's biggest corporate payroll in half. Generating a national uproar, the government is trying to privatize one of the company's four operating divisions: The idea is to raise revenues and get the government out of petrochemicals.

For Pemex company towns, as dependent on oil as many California communities once were on the military, the change is gut-wrenching. For millions of Mexicans in other areas, it's an ideological revolution.

"Pemex was one of the country's icons — along with the Virgin of Guadalupe, the army, the red, white and green flag," said George Grayson, a professor at the College of William & Mary in Williamsburg, Va., who has studied the company.

Congress allowed to make budget for CIA public

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—President Clinton has authorized Congress to make public the "bottom line" annual appropriation for U.S. intelligence in the next fiscal year, one of several modest reforms he announced this week.

White House press secretary Michael McCurry said the president's decision to disclose the total spending figure for the CIA and all intelligence agencies — reportedly $29 billion this year — was in line with his "determination to promote openness in the intelligence community."

Clinton also endorsed changing personnel practices, including a requirement intelligence professionals seeking promotion do tours of duty not only within the CIA but with Pentagon-based agencies. A senior intelligence official who discussed the reform program described the personnel changes as the "centerpiece" of the reform.

Next in importance, the official said, was legislation that would create the long-promised National Imagery and Mapping Agency to centralize all imagery analysis and mapping operations.

VA faces layoffs, closings

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Veterans Affairs Secretary Jesse Brown has acknowledged that his department could not absorb the kind of cuts the Clinton administration has proposed for his department over the next seven years without massive layoffs and closing the equivalent of 41 hospitals.

In an appearance Tuesday before the House Appropriations subcommittee that oversees the VA, Brown continued to insist that the nation's 26 million veterans probably will do better than the White House budget figures suggest as long as President Clinton remains in office.

Subcommittee Chairman Jerry Lewis, R-Calif., said that throws doubt over the White House's commitment to balancing the budget.

Brown did not address that issue, but he did concede under questioning by Lewis that the VA would have to lay off 60,000 workers, close hospitals and deny medical care to about 1 million veterans if funding for the department network of 171 hospitals remains flat over the next seven years.

Geologists poking around in volcano for data

Newsday

While scientists on the small Caribbean island of Montserrat face a rumbling, belching volcano that is much too close for comfort, a far deeper understanding of what makes volcanoes tick is being found in a narrow hole geologists poked recently into the flanks of a huge volcano in Hawaii.

The hole (4.5 inches in diameter at the top and about 2 inches in diameter at the bottom), drilled 3,464 feet into the overlapping lava flows of the Mauna Kea volcano, provides the first way to read page-by-page through a massive volcano's violent history. The project allows geologists to sort out when the volcano was born, its fiery personality, and what's happening as it declines into old age.

The drilling target, Mauna Kea, is the tallest of the Hawaiian volcanoes, one of several massive shield volcanoes that helped build the Pacific paradise.

It is many times larger than the Soufriere Hills volcano on Montserrat, and is far different in terms of its origin, history and the type of lava that streams rapidly down its sides.

The long drill string that chewed its way into the Hawaiian volcano passed through layer after layer of lava, sediments and surprises.

"Everything we got there is new" data concerning the volcano's history, said geologist Edward Stolper of the California Institute of Technology, a co-leader of the drilling project. "We got more than scattered snapshots; it's a continuous record" of part of the volcano's lifetime.

Greek Guide

WEEK

Greek Week celebrates determination, loyalty and putting out for community

By James J. Fares
Advertorial Editor

Greek students give the opportunity for their organizations to do something kind for someone else with out having to invest money or a lot of time as they have participated in the Red Cross blood drive, Special Olympics and Carbondale Clean and Green.

In addition to Greek Week and celebrating greek life on campus, Greek Week is designed to show how important unity is by pairing sororities and fraternities together for various Greek Week events.

Besides the fun side of greek life, a lot of organizations put forth the effort to help someone in need.

Tiffany Chapman, Psi Omega Chi community service chair, said that her sorority donates anywhere from 3-7 hours a day during the community event in which they help out.

"We raised over $300 this semester for the Arthritis Foundation," Chapman said. "We want to grow closer to the community and get away from the party image in which they perceive greeks and SIUC to have."

The Southern Illinois Blood Drive is the biggest philanthropy project sponsored by the Inter-Greek Council.

Laura St. George, public relations chair for the Inter-Greek Council said the blood drive has an application process to choose who will organize the drive throughout different fraternities and sororities.

"Throughout the greek system, different organizations put forth an effort to help out the community," St. George said.

"Carbondale Clean and Green is sponsored heavily by greeks organizations and the Delta Chi house has the blood drive in their basement."

Vivian Ugent, regional coordinator of the Red Cross blood drives for Southern Illinois, said she tries to provide a variety of locations and times so it is as convenient as possible for those who want to come and donate.

"We really count on the greek organizations to come and help out," Ugent said. "We call them blood buddies, who are people who walk first-time donors through the process."

"I think helping out the community is one of our strongest parts," Chapman said. "I'm very proud to be apart of an organization that likes to give time to help out."

Ugent said she was especially appreciative of the fact that Pi Kappa Alpha sponsored another drive in their fraternity house to give a blood drive outlet off campus.

These guys went the extra mile," Ugent said. "They are an individual sponsor and are very committed in opening their fraternity to the general public."

Ugent also said that this is a great way for SIUC and the greek system to get rid of the party school image.

The greek organizations at SIUC seem to always go out of their way for a good cause and to help the community," Ugent said.

"That is a part that deserves more recognition and community awareness. The public seems to generalize too much on the negatives and not enough on the positives."

Crutchin' down: Various activities filled the Greek Week schedule as different organizations participated in the celebration.

Two worlds collide: Are you in or out?

By Hua Cui
Advertorial Reporter

The motto hand in hand, and try to make the community better is one reason why some people would choose to go greek. That's why many students take part in various Greek organizations around the SIUC campus.

It is estimated that about 50 percent of SIUC students are Greek members. They volunteer to help out people in need, including blood drives, food drives and raising money for the homeless and ill children. Usually a Greek group includes anywhere from 60-90 members.

"It makes me feel great doing good for others," Erin Johnson, a sorority member at SIUC said. Johnson said she has taken part in various kinds of charity activities including flood drive and a food drive organized by her sorority.

"In my past 19 years, I demand too much from others, and do so little for them," Johnson said. "Taking part in such kind of activities make me feel grown up. At least it proves I can do something for the community."

Michael Emerson, a fraternity member said that taking part in activities of his fraternity made him learn about society. Emerson said he had gone to Marion last year to raise money for the homeless.

"There are so many kind-hearted people, they deeply moved me," he said.

Emerson also said that taking part in these activities were quite helpful to form a leadership ability, which was a precious experience upon his graduation from the university.

Joining Greek organizations at SIUC can also be great fun, some students said.

"There can be lots of fun in a sorority," Amy Asmussen, a sorority member said. "I meet lots of interesting people with in our group, as well as through out other organizations."

She said she organized a Halloween party for kids in Southern Hills last year. "It is very interesting to spend Halloween with the kids and show them that we care."

But some students around SIUC are not so interested in Greek organizations and would rather stay independent.

"I have no interest in that," Carl Silvergate, a graduate student said. "It seems to me they are a group of people with nothing to do, holding parties, drinking beers."

Neveda Taylor, a senior in advertising from East St. Louis, said that going greek has never crossed her mind.

"I have never thought of joining the Greek organizations, Taylor said. "I have lots of things to do - study, work, I just have no time to do that."

Fees charged for joining the Greek groups, known as dues keep some students away.

Amy Chysh, a junior in marketing from Alton, said that the amount of money to join a sorority is a little bit too steep for her.

"I was told that the Greek members must pay about $200 to join the group, Chysh said. That's a just a bit too much for me, I just have no money."

Whether students on campus at SIUC prefer joining the greek community or not, going greek definitely has its advantages and disadvantages.

Just as staying independent and doing your own thing has its good days and bad.

Greeks go all out for week of goofy, fun events

Organizations unite for fun in sun during SIUC Greek Week

By James J. Fares
Advertorial Editor

As a way of celebrating the hard work in academic excellence and good work throughout the community, SIUC greek organizations set aside one week in the spring known as Greek Week.

Greek Week is a five-day long festival that is a way to unite the different sororities and fraternities for the only time throughout the semester.

"Greek Week is a time for greeks to come together and participate in goofy events such as a food eating contest and the human pyramids," Jonathan Spencer, director of the celebration said.

"We have fun and do community services and philanthropic events as well."

Greek Week first began in the 1970's when alcohol was encouraged.

Now that aspect of Greek Week is long gone during the events, but is a celebration factor when the week comes to an end which is known as the Tri-Angle Party.

Each fraternity or sorority participates in events such as bed races, obstacle course, hula hoop and cantaloupe bowling. Each team receives points for first, second and third places.

The group winner of Greek Week will be announced May 5.

Seventeen of the twenty-two greek organizations participated in this year's activities.

All are encouraged, but not all attended said Spencer.

"The main point of Greek Week is to go out and have fun," Spencer said. "It is a healthy fun competition because throughout the year each individual organization is busy raising money for their individual philanthropy."

At the end of the week there will be a Greek God/Goddess competition than involves dressing up every day according to that day's theme.

"Some of the themes were, favorite cartoon characters, talk show host and food," Spencer said.

While dress was emphasized, the really important part is the question in which the participants must answer.

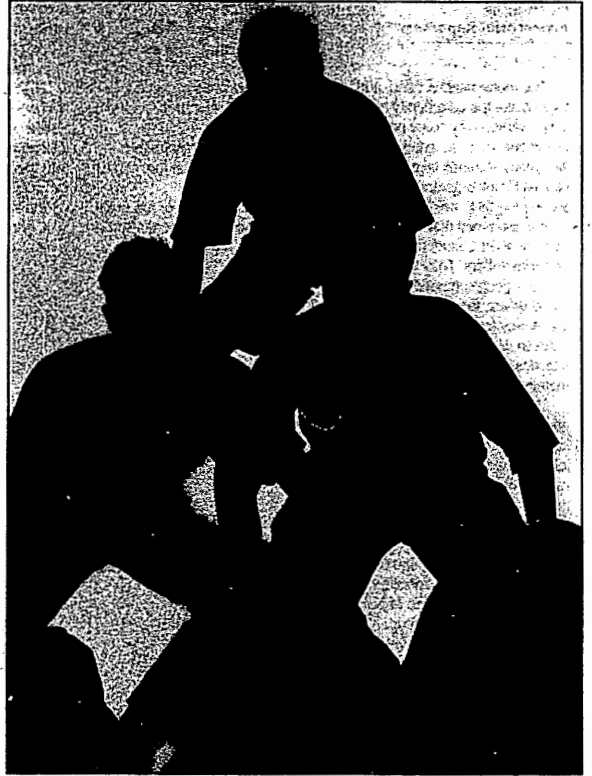

"It's really hard because they have to answer their question as the character would," Spencer said. "There is no way to prepare for the question because it is spontaneous."

All events of the week will be recognized and trophies will be given away for the categories of events.

Each fraternity and sorority were given points throughout the week for participation events and spirit.

"This is a really good time of year for the greek system," Spencer said.

"This is the only way for every organization to get together and have fun as a whole."

Stack'em high: One of the main events during Greek Week was the human pyramid. Seventeen of the twenty-two greek organizations participated in the celebration.

'Son' to slam SIUC area with Southern-punk style

By Jason E. Coyne
DE Arts/Entertainment Editor

With an upcoming release tentatively titled "Son of Slam's rock 'n' roll Album," one may think Son of Slam has a pure rock 'n' roll sound.

That is simply not the case, bassist Terrence Bishop said. He claims the band has dubbed its grooves "psychoholic Southern country punk."

Drawing on such punk influences as Patti Smith, The Sex Pistols and The Replacements, the quartet has its eyes set on a June or July release for the follow-up to its "Trailer Park Politics and God" debut.

The band got a boost in popularity in 1994 when it was signed to an all-rap label, Outlaw Records, to record its freshman effort.

"We're the only rock 'n' roll band on the label," Bishop said. "We are hoping to get signed with IRS before this next release."

Beginning five years ago as Uncle Slam, the band had to change its name when it found that another band had already copyrighted Uncle Slam.

"It has nothing to do with the Son of Sam (referring to the Satanic-influenced David Berkowitz murders in New York in the late '70s)," Bishop said. "We live in the Bible Belt and are not Satanists, but we are interested in evil and the dark side of things. Living in the Bible Belt, a lot of things we like seem that way (evil)."

Bishop said the band's tours bring about things that others may perceive as sinister.

"We are big partiers and enjoy many of the finer things in life," he said. "We don't condone it but to each his own. Sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll all used to be part of life on the road, but now I can't remember what it is."

The group has enjoyed limited success in the southeastern United States, and it is not too rare for the group to play at venues that have no cover charge, Bishop said.

"We play for beer, peanuts and pizza sometimes, but that's what you have to do when you're a rock 'n' roll band," Bishop said.

Although Bishop, originally from Swainsboro, Ala., guitarist Eric Lewis, from Knoxville, Tenn., drummer John Bonds, from Hernando, Miss., and singer/rhythm guitarist Chris Scott, from Pate County, Miss., are all from the South, the group decided to relocate to Memphis because it offered more of everything.

"Memphis has more places to play and things to do," Bishop said. "It's a dark town, and you can name your poison at any time. Some of the luxuries include the 24-hour beer bars."

Bishop, now in his 13th band, said he has favorite cover tunes as well as originals.

"As far as cover tunes, it is either Patti Smith's 'rock 'n' roll Nigger' off of the 1977 release 'Easter,' or David Allen Coe's 'Long-Haired Redneck,'" he said. "I'm in love with eight of the 10 songs off of the upcoming release, but 'Edmo' is kind of a new alternative hard-core sound with a mix of rhythm and blues."

Redemption, family love brought to life in 'Tribute'

By Travis Akin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

In the Stage Company's production of "Tribute," the story of a father wanting to restore a relationship with his son evokes sympathy for a man who regrets his past actions.

Bernard Slade's "Tribute," which opened last Friday at the Stage Company, takes the audience to the New York home of Scottie Templeton, whose only claim to fame is his charming wit and the good friends he has made.

Templeton is a former Hollywood producer who has squandered his money and been in and out of work his entire life. All of his marriages were destroyed by his infidelity. The only thing he has as a legacy is his son Jud, who has not been able to forgive his father for walking out on him and his mother.

The show opens with Lou Daniels (Roy Weshinsky), getting the crowd ready for the start of a tribute program for Scottie Templeton on his birthday. Templeton has just discovered he has cancer and has left the hospital to meet his son who is going to see him the summer with him.

The conflict between father and son heightens as the two try to establish the framework for a relationship, but they always seem to end up disagreeing. Ryan Patrick (Jud) creates a character full of hostility and anger. Patrick is able to bring out the pain of his character and the helplessness of a young man stung by the misfortune brought on by the divorce of his parents. From the moment he burst through the door of the apartment, he established his character.

Play Review

Templeton, played by Stan Hale, is a man who has never grown up. He has never committed to anything in his life and has destroyed every good thing that comes his way.

Hale brought animation to the character and his lively performance carried the show. Hale's performance is genuine and from the heart.

"Tribute" raises questions about what is truly important in life. As sickness plagues Templeton, he is forced to deal with his past mistakes and what his legacy should be.

"Tribute" will be presented April 26-28 and May 3-5 at the Stage Company, 101 N. Washington St. Friday and Saturday shows begin at 8 p.m. The Sunday performances begin at 2 p.m. Tickets for the evening shows are $7 and the matinees are $5.

Push Down and Turn — "Twelve Days in April" (Spring Street Records)

With a bit of soft pop/rock coupled with a portion of harmonized arena rock, Push Down and Turn has found a formula that has been a winner on pop radio.

These five fraternity brothers from DePaul University in Green Castle, Ind., could become MTV's newest sweethearts, if they could just muster up the exposure.

"Languid," the first cut on the band's second CD, "Twelve Days in April," is as catchy as any Top 20 hit. The subject matter of the song, a person's hope for a relationship to mend, is something almost everybody could relate to.

"November Girl" stirs up the heart with the energy it accumulates in the final two minutes of the song. The eb- and flow of the song emulates the way a person may initially feel down and sluggish after the loss of an important relationship. The music, as a person might, gradually builds strength and confidence as time goes on.

These two songs alone easily could easily be mistaken by professional radio listeners for unheard singles off of Hootie and the Blowfish's CD, "Cracked Rear View." Even lead singer Hed sings with similar vocal inflection as Hootie's Darius Rucker.

Although the band does not have an innovative sound or lyricist, the music makes you feel good. Jason Barth's keyboard expertise and precision go over well on nearly every song.

The dreamy keyboards and fading guitars help keep foot-tappers tapping on the title track. Nobody seems to stand out musically in this band, but like any winner, everyone plays their role on the team. B-

Movie Review

"Muriel's Wedding" is one of those movies that, on first impression and by the pre-release hype would seem to offer comedy. Though this film does have its funny parts, its overall feeling and message is depressing.

The story is about a young lady named Muriel who lives in the small town of Porpoise Spit, Australia. She is an ugly-duckling type. Everyone thinks she is fat, annoying and hates the fact that she consistently listens to ABBA.

Her big dream is to get married, because all of her friends and she seems hopeless and doomed much like her family, that is neither supportive nor loving toward Muriel.

In a last ditch attempt to find happiness, she steals a chee from her father and takes off on vacation where she runs into her old high school friend Rhonda. The two decide to run off to Sydney and find new lives.

This may seem like a coming of age movie, but it is more than that. Muriel has serious problems. Though many of these are external (her mother's death, her uncaring father, and insensitive set of friends), her serious problems are internal.

She lies frequently to herself and to others. She dreams of getting married, and even though she has no fiancée, she goes to every bridal store in town to try on dresses. She is in every way a tragic character, one audiences will sympathize with.

But despite these downfalls, it is her personality and perky attitude that will keep audiences interested enough to watch the film until the end when there is a predictable, but all the same, happy ending.

'Crumb' documents distortion

Who ever coined the phrase "The truth hurts," would probably change that old saying to "The truth is so disturbingly funny that it hurts my insides," if they would have first seen the documentary "Crumb."

This film focuses on the warped mind of the underground artist Robert Crumb, who is best known for creating the saying "Keep on Truckin'" and creating the X-rated cartoon characters Fris the Cat and Mr. Natural.

This is a strange tale: one of sexual desires, explicit artwork and the man who created it all. Though many of the cartoons are more disturbing than funny, the justification, the madness and the thoughts behind them are so unusual that it is hard to not be amused, if not astonished.

The film is primarily made up of interviews with Crumb, his family, critics, colleagues and fans.

Viewers will see the oppressive environment Crumb grew up in. Stories of having his collarbone broken when he was five by his father, to his amphetamine-swallowing mother threatening him with enemas if he did not behave will give viewers an insight to how his twisted personality was formed.

What distinguishes this as a great documentary is that it paints a personality behind the madness. This film does not try to manipulate Crumb and set in him in a bad light. In fact, it lets Crumb and those around him do it themselves.

major differences between the indoor and outdoor seasons and offered her personal preference between the two.

"I don't like indoor very much because my shins always hurt," Daniels said.

"I think indoors, since you have to cut in the lane (after starting the 400-meter run), you have to get out really good in order to get a good position.

"Outdoor, you're in your lane, no one's in your way, no one's in front of you or going to cut you off."

Daniels added that this past indoor season, she did not have to contend with someone else vying for the front of the running pack as she was always able to break out in front.

"This year, I did a lot better indoors, I think, because I didn't have that much competition, so I would always be the first one to cut in," she said.

The 1996 indoor season was a big performance for Daniels as she won the 400-meter dash at the Missouri Valley Conference championships Feb. 23-24, and in the process, broke the MVC record with a time of 55.91.

Her performances on the track have led her to become one of the all-time top 30 scorers on the SIUC women's track and field team.

One goal Daniels was unable to attain during the indoor season is still waiting for her in the outdoor season — that is to qualify for the NCAA championships.

"I wanted to qualify for nationals, but I was never challenged indoor," Daniels said.

"I never had anyone to push me and I think I won every race that I ran indoors.

"I'm already at that point where I was at the end of last year, so hopefully I can pull it through in these last few meets and get a qualifying time."

According to Debro, Daniels' goal to compete at the NCAA's could definitely be achieved this year.

"I think it is realistic for her," Debro said.

"It's definitely realistic, she's got another second or so to take off and whether it gets her there or not is hard to know.

Saluki senior sprinter Katrina Daniels gets off to a quick start during the Salukis' track/field practice Wednesday afternoon at McAndrew Stadium. Daniels won the 400-meter dash at the MVC Championships Feb. 23-24 in a time of 55.91 seconds.

"If I had to choose again, I would choose this school (SIUC). I like it."

Katrina Daniels

"She could hit the provisional mark and not even go."

Debro added that Daniels might have to reach the automatic standard time of 52.60 in order to go to nationals May 29-June 1.

"I don't think it's a question that she can do it, we're just waiting on it to happen," Debro said.

"It may come this weekend — it may come at conference."

Perhaps Daniels' best chance of qualifying for nationals will be at the Drake Relays April 26-27.

Since the Drake Relays has qualifying time standards, the competition will arguably be the som- of the best in the nation.

If Daniels qualifies for the Drake Relays in the 400-meter dash, she said she wants to use this meet to qualify for the NCAA's.

"If I get in (to the 400-meter dash at the Drake Relays), that will definitely be my goal," Daniels said.

"My main focus, if I get into the open quarter, is to qualify. I want to win the open quarter, but if I don't, it wouldn't break my heart."

Although Daniels soon found out the 70 degree February temperature she experienced is not typical winter weather in Southern Illinois, she said she would still make the same choice she did four years ago.

"If I had to choose again, I would choose this school," Daniels said. "I like it."

Houston Rockets preparing to win third championship

The Los Angeles Times

INGLEWOOD, Calif.—What do you call it when the twice-defending NBA champion falls to fifth in the West and has to open the playoffs on the road?

An improvement.

It is if you're the Houston Rockets, the NBA's least-respected, most-traveled back-to-back champions ever, who have to open in the Forum Thursday night. Of course, a year ago when they won their second title, the Rockets were No. 6 in the West.

The league has gone beyond disrespect, into contempt and amusement and back. The Rockets laughed the last two years in a row; now people know not to write them off before they pound a stake through their hearts.

Now all the Rockets have to do is ... Jo it again?

It was amazing enough the first two times, as a survey of their recent finishes suggests.

1990-91: They have the usual volatile season, catching fire with Hakeem Olajuwon out because of an eye injury, winning a franchise-high 52 games. Talk radio callers in Houston recommend trading Hakeem, who is considered greedy, selfish, etc. Don Chaney is named coach of the year.

In the playoffs, Laker Coach Mike Dunleavy has his players collapse on Olajuwon, daring the guards to beat them. Vernon Maxwell takes 11 more shots than Olajuwon. The Lakers sweep, 3-0.

1991-92: Olajuwon, who has been grousing about his contract for years, says he has a hamstring injury—and is accused by General Manager Steve Patterson of faking it to force the team to renegotiate. Olajuwon subsequently calls Owner Charlie Thomas a "liar."

Chaney is fired at midseason. Assistant coach Rudy Tomjanovich takes over, looking overmatched. The Rockets die, finishing 0-3, losing to the Dallas Mavericks, who won 22 games all season, and miss the playoffs.

That summer, the Rockets agree to a deal sending Olajuwon to the Lakers. Salary-cap rules make it unworkable so everyone stays put. A year later, the rules are loosened.

1992-93: Olajuwon and Thomas make peace. The Rockets win 55 games, beat the Los Angeles Clippers, 3-2, in the first round—their first postseason series victory in six years—then lose to the Seattle SuperSonics, 4-3.

1993-94: The Rockets win 58 games but in a second-round series against the Phoenix Suns, start 0-2 at home. Both local papers, re-membering the NFL Oilers' collapse at Buffalo, run the same headline: "CHOKE CITY."

The Rockets rally to win the series and advance to the finals. The team commissions a commercial showing a fan listening to a game, sitting on a ledge with an anvil tied to his ankle. Thinking the Rockets have lost, he throws the anvil over the side, only to hear the announcer yell the game is still on. As the fan grimaces, a voice intones: "Because it's hard to be a sports fan in Houston."

NBA, TBS, TNT ready for playoffs

The Baltimore Sun

With Dennis Rodman, Nick Van Exel and, to a lesser degree, Magic Johnson getting into highly publicized scrap with NBA officials, and notables like Shawn Kemp drawing suspensions for fighting, one can only wonder what will happen when the league's postseason curtain rises Thursday night.

"Nobody plans these things. The word is out, though."

"(Commissioner David) Stern and (vice president for operations) Rod Thorn have put the word out (that fighting won't be tolerated)," said former Phoenix Suns and Boston Celtic guard turned Turner Network analyst Danny Ainge.

But Ainge, who got into a few tussles during his playing days, including a celebrated biting incident with former Atlanta Hawks center Tree Rollins, said a little scuffle now and then isn't such a bad thing for the players or the league.

"The only thing I worry about is when a lot lesser player tries to go in and get involved with a bigger-name player," Ainge said.

"But people will be cognizant because they (league officials) are going to be paying attention."

Whatever happens, the Turner networks (TNT, TBS) will catch most of it, carrying at least 40 games over the next 30 nights during the second season.

Each network will have double-headers Thursday night.

TBS will air the New York-Cleveland series at 7 p.m., followed by Portland-Utah.

TNT has Atlanta-Indiana at 8 p.m. with Houston against the Lakers afterward.

Washington Bullets forward Chris Webber will join studio host Ernie Johnson and analyst Cheryl Miller for inserts during and after games Thursday night and Friday.

Bullets Coach Jim Lynam will be joining Vince Cellini for "Inside the NBA" on TNT after doubleheaders both nights.

Also, Washington weekend sportscaster Chris McHenry will report from the sidelines during the Portland-Utah series.

down 1-2-3 to end the inning quickly.

"We had the bases loaded and nobody out, and we didn't do a good job," Henderson said. "The infield's back with nobody out, and even if we hit ground ball, and they turn a double play, they're still going to give us a run."

Junior second baseman Jay Mansavage, who was 3-5 on the day, said he believed the team would win the game in the late innings, but agreed with Henderson that Southern did not get the job done offensively.

"Our problem today was that we were just coasting," he said.

"We really didn't put too much effort out, and couldn't get anything going."

Saluki sophomore netter makes charge for record

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC sophomore Sanem Berksoy is turning up the record books with the numbers she has posted since playing for the women's tennis team.

Berksoy, a native of Istanbul, Turkey, currently has a 12-match win streak with a 17-2 record for the spring. For the year Berksoy is 31-6, and her overall career record is 63-17 with a .788 winning percentage.

After only playing two years on the court at Southern, Berksoy is on pace to take over the school record for most wins, which was set by Sue Briggs — an SIUC Hall of Fame member — who posted a 74-21 career mark.

Berksoy is currently ranked in 10th on the all-time singles win list during a spring season with 17. She is tied for third on the all-time leaders list for most singles wins in a year with 32. She tied for third again for most singles won during a fall season with 15 in 1994.

Berksoy said she does not focus on her win streak, but takes the season one match at a time.

"I don't like to think about my streak because that puts pressure on myself," she said. "I try to play the match and not think about my previous matches."

SIUC women's tennis coach Judy Auld said Berksoy's win streak has included some tough matches against some quality players.

"She played some really good people, and those are significant wins for her, but they are even more significant wins for the team," Auld said.

Berksoy began her tennis career at 8 years old, playing at Osik Tennis Club in Turkey with her friends and family.

By the time she was 10 she was competing in tournaments outside of Turkey.

According to Berksoy, coming to America to play tennis was not a difficult step for her because she has competed in 10 different countries.

She said the stroke she loves to defeat her opponents with is the fore-hand ground stroke.

"That is my most consistent stroke and I am able to control the placement of the ball," she said.

Auld said Berksoy's game is strong because she is mentally focused once she is on the court.

"She just goes out on the court and does her business," Auld said. "When she gets on the court she's all tennis."

Berksoy was recruited by Southern while playing as an exchange student for East Moline High School, (East Moline), at the state tournament.

Auld said she recruited Berksoy because her performance at the tournament caught her attention. Berksoy finished the tournament in the No. 7 spot in singles out of a field of 128 players.

"She's an excellent player," Auld said. "I think she's improved tremendously within the last two years. I liked her as a recruit and as a player."

Berksoy admits she has come a long way since playing for East Moline, and said she has matured and developed her skills on the court since coming to SIUC.

"Since I've been playing here, my mental game has improved a lot," Berksoy said. "I've been getting experience and playing a lot of matches against different players."

Auld said Berksoy's game is aggressive, and she can hit from any spot on the court.

"She is predominantly a base-liner. We worked on her coming into the net a little bit more, but she is a very aggressive base-liner," she said. "She does a lot with the ball from the base line. She can hit deep, hit the corners, hit angles, and if someone comes into the net, it doesn't rattle her."

Eric Davis: Quietly making a comeback

Newsday

NEW YORK—There was no big deal made about his comeback. No news conference. No big, wet kisses from Marge Schott. No big headlines like Doc Gooden, Ryne Sandberg and Chris Sabo all received.

In fact, if you didn't read the transactions on the agate page in the newspaper, you would have missed it completely.

Nonetheless, Eric Davis is back. Back home with the Cincinnati Reds.

"Honestly, I don't think anybody gave me a chance to make it back," Davis said before the Reds took on the New York Mets at Shea Stadium Tuesday night. "So it was like I snuck in the back door."

But Davis' return to baseball following an injury-forced one-year layoff isn't a secret anymore. In less than a month, Davis, 33, has played so well that he has gone from the Reds' fifth outfielder to their starting center fielder.

"That goes to show you that hard work pays off," said Davis, who signed a non-guaranteed, $500,000 contract and was a non-roster invitee to camp.

Things, though, didn't start that well in Davis' comeback. Many thought he had no chance of making it after he started 0-for-9 at the plate. His swing—once one of the quickest in baseball—was slow. But Davis battled back and finished camp strong. Not only did his bat come around, but his defense and speed were still there. The Reds had no choice but to include him.

"Eric has always had a lion's heart," Reds Manager Ray Knight said. "He's always played hard. I've never seen Eric Davis not play as hard as he could all the time."

That's why many thought Davis was the next coming of Willie Mays when he made his Major League debut in 1984. Not only did he have all the tools — speed, power and

"Honestly, I don't think anybody gave me a chance to come back."

Eric Davis

defense—but the desire, too.

"There's no one who came into the game with more talent that I've ever seen," said Knight, who as a member of the Mets was involved in a famous brawl with Davis in 1986. "He hit the ball as hard as anybody, played great defense and he could fly. You're talking about a superstar, Hall of Fame-type player that injuries shortened his career."

Davis hasn't been the same since he lacerated his kidney in three places in 1990 diving for a ball against the Athletics in the World Series.

Most thought Davis was finished after he got a herniated disk in his neck after crashing into the center-field fence at Fenway Park in 1994. He was with the Detroit Tigers then. An injured Davis batted a woeful .183 in 37 games before season-ending surgery.

And although Davis was recovering nicely, he decided to retire.

The only reason he came back was because the Reds called. No other team would have been able to lure him. Despite Schott's ill treatment toward him after he was injured in the World Series — at first, the Reds refused to pay his hospital bills and they traded him to the Dodgers after the 1991 season — Cincinnati still has a special place in his heart.

"When you're in the situation like I was, being retired," he said, "you don't just want to come back to any situation."

Dawgs fall 3-2 in pitchers' duel

St. Louis University's pitching defeats SIUC in 10-inning marathon

By Chad Anderson
DE Sports Editor

An RBI double in the 10th inning by St. Louis third baseman Adam Gabris put the finishing touches on what was a 2-2 pitcher's duel for nine innings.

The Salukis utilized eight pitchers in the game, which was planned before game-time, and sophomore David Piazza (4-2) collected a hard-luck defeat for his second of the season after pitching two and one-thirds innings in late relief.

The game-winning run was charged to Piazza, giving him the defeat, but the RBI double was hit off freshman pitcher Jason Frasor who came on in relief of Piazza in the 10th.

St. Louis used only two pitchers in the game, and its starter, Joel Sigman, pitched an impressive nine and one-thirds innings. Sigman kept the Saluki offense off balance with the exception of junior shortstop Frankie Jaramillo's solo-homer in the third inning, which gave SIUC the early lead, 1-0.

"You could see it coming early in the ball game that we weren't going to have a great offensive day, and it was probably going to be a low-scoring affair," said SIUC hitting coach Ken Henderson, who took over for head coach Dan Callahan due to personal reasons. "The pitchers did a great job all day long. They kept us in the ball game. It's a 2-2 game in the 10th, and they (St. Louis) only had six hits at that point."

"The pitchers did a tremendous job, but we didn't execute on offense, and get the job done in the clutch."

Even though the Salukis have played well in late inning and extra inning situations this season, SIUC could not capitalize in the ninth or 10th innings against the Billikens.

In the ninth with the score knotted at 2-2 and one out, Saluki freshman third baseman Jerry Hairston singled through the hole at shortstop to left field, and then stole second base, but senior designated hitter Mike Russell flew out to shallow center field. Junior first baseman Aaron Jones came to the plate with two outs in the inning, and struck out swinging to send the game into extra innings.

In the 10th inning with two outs, SIUC stranded runners on first and second, behind a walk drawn by senior outfielder Chad Isaacson and single by Jay Mansavage, but sophomore outfielder Scott Seipp grounded out to the shortstop to end the game.

Southern could have gone ahead in the sixth inning when the Salukis loaded the bases with no outs, but junior catcher Bret Horace, Jaramillo and freshman center fielder Joe Schley went

Saluki senior on fast track to success at SIUC

By Jared Driskill
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As a freshman at Warren Township High School in Gurnee, Katrina Daniels made the decision to let her feet talk her way into college.

Daniels, a senior on the SIUC women's track and field team, said she made a decision her freshman year in high school that her ticket to college was going to be an athletic scholarship for track and field.

Going to college and having a plan to get there was something Daniels obviously took seriously.

"I knew I could run fast and I knew that in order to go to college, I would probably have to get an athletic scholarship because my mom couldn't afford it," Daniels said. "So, my freshman year in high school I was like, 'I'm going to get a scholarship in track, and I had never run track before, but it just worked out that way.'"

Ever since her days attending Warren Township High School, Daniels never looked back as her motivation and will to compete at the collegiate level came from her mother.

"She supported me all through high school," Daniels said.

Daniels had realized her goal to compete at the collegiate level and decided to visit Southern as a prospective school. Good weather and impressive programs made the decision to attend SIUC an easy one for Daniels.

"I wanted to major in business, and they (SIUC) had a really good business program," she said. "When I came down here it was February, and it was like 70-degrees. I thought it was going to be like that all of the time in February, so I thought 'well, they have a good business program, good weather in the winter time, I think I'll come here.'"

According to SIUC assistant women's track and field coach Tina Debro, Daniels benefits the team in more ways than one.

"Katrina's always been a leader," Debro said. "She's probably one of our strongest links to our relays and our team. She has good work ethics and she is a very positive individual."

Daniels' primary individual event is the 400-meter dash. She explained

see DANIELS, page 18

Between the Lines

After the first day of competition in the heptathlon at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, Saluki junior Heather Greeling is in the No. 2 spot out of a field of 11 athletes, two spots ahead of Saluki sophomore Lorraine Parkinson.

Greeling scored 2733 points in the four-event competition, and achieved three personal best performances in the 100-meter hurdles, the high jump and the 200-meter dash. Parkinson garnered 2458 points, winning the shotput.

Today, the two Saluki track and field standouts will continue the competition with the javelin, the long jump, and the 800-meter run.

After being overlooked in the NFL draft, Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier said he's not interested in signing as a free agent this year.

Frazier missed part of the 1994 season with a blood clot in the leg and has had recurrence.

Frazier, who could be on blood-thinning medication for up to a year, told a Nebraska television station he'll try the NFL in 1997. Frazier was a starter at Nebraska since his freshman year and built a 33-3 overall record, including two straight national titles and four consecutive Big Eight Conference championships.

After starting the 1996 season 11-2, the Baltimore Orioles have taken a swan dive, losing their sixth straight game Tuesday night at the hand of the Cleveland Indians. The O's are 11-8 and still have a one-game lead on the New York Yankees.
