Raving any uniforms, weather problems Saturday, this year's Spring Thing should be a success, according to Andrew Daley, executive director of the Student Programming Council. The event, which will feature an group Digital Underground, was designed in 1993 to provide students a break from school-related stress before finals. Past performers were Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers and George Clinton and the F-Phunk All-Stars. For months, SPC has been looking for vendors to provide activities for the crowd as it listens to the band. SPC has several novelty bands lined up including spin art, photos buttons, candle making and football speed tests.

Aisha Cool, SPC marketing co-chair, said she is disappointed with attendance, explaining on Monday that the price for the all-star festival, "We normally had a few thousand people at Spring Thing," Cool said, "but now we have several activities and we need volunteers."

Another feature in this year's festival is the Tuxie slide, a 35-foot-tall slide shaped like the Tuxie mascot. This year's band, Digital Underground, scored a big hit in the early 90's with the song "Humpty Dance," and the group's latest album is "Who Got The Glass?" Daley said Digital Underground is a band that is well-suited to this type of festival. They seem to be a band that can bring in a diverse crowd," Daley said.

Diversity is exactly what Cool said SPC should be bringing to the University students. "Our board is trying to get a diverse range of students who come out rather than only attracting certain groups," SPC said.

The sponsors for Spring Thing are Bigwounds, Happy's Tape, Service, 710 Boulevard, Invictus, Concel, the City of Carbondale, Zoom Radio Group, Undergraduates Student Government, the Student Center, University Bookstore, Home Catering and Contracting, and the Chicago Professional Student Council.

Boat Regatta to set sail once again

Sink or swim, organizers promise a fun time for SIUC

Geoffrey M. Ritter
Grad Student Reporter

All Anthony Roberts needed was a roll of balsa, a volutary and a big idea of cardboard, and he built himself a boat. It's like a speedboat, but it's more like an airplane, said Roberts, a sophomore in chemical engineering from Chicago, as he glued together the cardboard speedboat that he will decorate as he travels throughout the world.

"Mine is made for speed," Roberts said. While Roberts has already spent a week sanding on his boat, the clock is ticking down. The boat's christening is just moments away. "The Great Cardboard Boat Regatta," in which Roberts will compete with up to 100 participants piloting their homemade boats across Campus Lake, will take place at noon on Saturday at the Campus Lake Boat Dock. The event, now in its 27th year, originated at SIUC and has since spread to more than 200 places throughout the world.

As a project given by art and design professor Lucy Beach, Roberts and his classmates have spent the past weeks designing and constructing these cardboard boats with the hope that they will then host an event on their campus. With a smile on his face, Roberts is confident that his design will prove seaworthy. "I don't plan on sinking," Roberts said. As usual, contestants will be able to enter in the green rockets that will decorate the back of his cardboard speedboat. "Mine is made for speed."

Civil Service Council yard sale benefits students

Yard sale to raise money for educational assistance program

Andrea Donaldson

The council will be sponsoring the 16th annual one-day yard sale from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday in the SIU Arena parking lot. The rain date is scheduled for Sunday.

The profit from the yard sale will go into the educational assistance program for dependents of Civil Service Council employees. The educational assistance program, established by the Civil Service Council in 1982, awards dependent's of Civil Service Council employees who are in an undergraduate program at SIUC. Students must register the grants on a semester basis and must apply each semester.

The funding for the grants come from donations by employees and fund-raisers throughout the year. "The more money we can raise, the more money the students get," said Tipp "The more money we earn, the more money the students get," Tipp said.

The Civil Service Council yard sale is an integral part of raising funds for the educational assistance program, said Pam Dinola, chair of the educational assistance committee. "The educational assistance program is a great benefit," Dinola said. "It helps the SIU employees and their dependents with things we can give back to them."
the race in one of three classes. The first class, Busch said, consists of canoe and kayak-style boats, with the second class of entries providing an opportunity for participants to build something more experimental. The third class will consist of "instant boats," which last-minute contestants will be able to build on the spur of the moment.

Participants who sail the 200-yard course will be in competition for a variety of trophies, from the first-place cup to the Titanic Award,
given in honor of the most spectacular sinking.
The race, which has been covered in previous years by such media outlets as Sports Illustrated and MTV, is expected to draw up to 5,000 participants and observers.

"It will be a good day on the SIUC campus," Busch said. "The University will have a wonderful family-oriented event."

In addition, this year marks the first that the event's creator, former SIUC professor Richard Archer, is not at the helm of the race.
Despite the fact he is enjoying his retirement of online trading and motor home restoration, however, he still plans to don his traditional white suit to serve as the announcer for the race.

"I am actually going to enjoy it this year," Archer said with a laugh. "I'll walk in there, nounce and it will feel good."

Archer just returned from Tempe, Ariz., last week, where he served as announcer for the season's first boat regatta.

"I have announced so many regattas around the country," he said, that he has four sets of white suits.

With his retirement, Archer has plenty of time to look at the popularity that his brainchild has endured for almost 30 years. He still receives phone calls and e-mails from people who participated years ago, and he still remembers the excitement that students bring to the race.

"Students always say 'Arch! I did it!' They'll call their mom and say 'Mom! I won it!,'" Archer said. "When people see their cardboard boat work, they get a lot of self-confidence."

And this, Archer said, is why the race has made it this far. The act of building the boats brings out the child in people, he said, and entering in the race boosts self-esteem. Most of all, he said, it offers people the opportunity to put on a show for the whole world to see, if only for a few minutes.

"Andy Warhol said you'll get your 15 minutes of fame," Archer said. "Saturday, I'll provide the stage."

Local band makes album, producer wins award

Travis Morrise

Jon Plunkota's method of producing an album ephiphany hands-on collaboration with the band as opposed to mere technical proficiency. "I don't want to be just some engineer behind the board. If you're more active, then you're a better producer and you bring a different view to the process," said Plunkota, a senior in audio production/recording engineer from Mount Prospect.

Plunkota has just produced, along with Drew Hugill, The Plus debut album "Digital Sunshine" as part of his RT 491 independent study class. He also won two awards at the RT 2000 audio production student of the year. The album "Digital Sunshine" is his major contribution to the process. "John and Drew are like a part of the band and are a much responsible for the sound," Shurtz said. "It was a good experience." Shurtz said he was particularly proud of the song he wrote called "What It Be Great." Because it best reflects his thinking as of right now.

Jon Plunkota's production of The Plus album at Hangar 9, Craig said he was more than excited. "We're going to reap the benefits of a lot of hard work. The Hangar is one of my favorite places to play in Carbondale," Craig said.

As for the man behind the band's studio sound, Plunkota, he said he hopes to be a major producer after graduating. He said he is especially evious of the position. "I think I know where I want to be," Plunkota said. "I would like to be the ultimate producer that everybody wants to work with me."

AmeriCorps impacts communities at home and abroad

From Colorado to Carbondale, AmeriCorps has improved communities

Geoffrey M. Ritter

Daily Egyptian reporter

Jamie Walczak joined AmeriCorps two years ago, even though she wasn't sure what she was getting into. All she knew was that she couldn't think of anything else to do.

"I did it because I didn't know what I wanted to do career-wise," Walczak said of the experience. She was getting into. All she knew was that she couldn't think of anything else to do.

AmeriCorps has been an experience. Walczak, now a junior in Business Administration at Southern Illinois University, is a member of AmeriCorps, a national public service movement that, since its creation in 1993, has sent more than 150,000 workers to communities throughout the country to assist with various service projects.

"I did it because I didn't know what I wanted to do career-wise," Walczak said of the experience.

The organization has sent AmeriCorps to places all around the country, from a recreation site in the Montana-Wyoming border, all the way to talking to students at a vigil held in the aftermath of the shooting in Littleton, Colo.

"What I really enjoy about working with AmeriCorps is being a member of an organization that is dedicated to giving back to the community," Walczak said. "I feel like I've made an impact, whether it's through my community service or through the impact I've had on others."

AmeriCorps members are awarded a $4,000 stipend for the time they serve and are granted a grant of almost $5,000 upon completion of service.

Walczak's journey with AmeriCorps began two years ago, when she was a Freshman at Southern Illinois University. She became a member of AmeriCorps after attending a recruitment event on campus.

"I decided to join AmeriCorps after learning more about the program," Walczak said. "I was impressed by the opportunity to serve my community and make a difference in the lives of others."

AmeriCorps is a federal program that provides members with a stipend and training to work in various fields, including education, environmental stewardship, and community development.

"I think it's important to give back to the community," Walczak said. "I want to make a difference and help those in need."

AmeriCorps is funded by the Corporation for National Service, a federal agency that administers the program. The agency has been praised for its efforts to increase awareness of the program and its impact on communities.

"I think it's important to give back to the community," Walczak said. "I want to make a difference and help those in need."

AmeriCorps members are encouraged to become leaders in their communities, both through their work and through their personal development.

YARD SALE

Last year's yard sale brought in 100 vendors and a net profit of about $1,200, said Sue Durso, a volunteer for the 10th Avenue Volunteer Community Services, which specializes in food and specimen, a 45-foot trailer that is used to transport food and other items.

In the past, the yard sale has brought in food and specimen, and Durso said the organization is always looking for more donations. The group also sells items such as $1,000 for the spring season, Molina said.

Vendors will offer antiques, collectibles, clothing, craft, nugs, furniture and other items.

Gore's disappearing reappearing act

Where in the world is Albert Gore Jr.? We can report with confidence, having laid eyes on the vice president more than once, that he was in Pennsylvania Thursday. He spoke in favor of universal health insurance for the children, severely criticized Texas Gov. George W. Bush for his record on health insurance and raised money for the Democratic National Committee here in Philadelphia.

Now and then in recent months, Gore has gone missing, disappearing for a day here, a weekend there, behind opaque no comment from his press office. Once, it turned out later, he was vacationing with his wife. Another time, he was mountain climbing with his son. Still another time, he was attending to the health of an a-yet-unidentified friend.

These vanishings have both bothered the news media that Gore reluctantly promised this week not to go cover-to cover again. "I will err on the side of openness and full access as much as possible," he said.

Here's an amazing glimpse into the power of the human mind to wish away unpleasant realities.

As every modern president has discovered, there is no privacy for the chief executive, and precious little for the man one step away from winning the highest office.

And of course, Clinton's battle for re-election has put him in the same situation that Gore has been in, the man who is at least as old as Shakespeare. The Bard's Henry V wanders anonymously among the troops on the eve of the Battle of Agincourt. Later Mark Twain imagined a prince who renounced his kingdom dressed as a pauper. Hollywood brought the fantasy to life not long ago. Less lovely was the rumor recycled in an FBI agent's arrest of a White House life. He suggested that President Clinton was hiding under a blanket in the basement of the White House, living on the side of openness and full access as much as possible, "he said.

Here's an amazing glimpse into the power of the human mind to wish away unpleasant realities.

Hog waste research could cut back pollution and create energy

William Aldous
Daily Egyptian reporter

Scientists have noticed that nutrients are going into the Gulf of Mexico via the Mississippi River, causing a loss of oxygen in the water. These toxic "死区" of dead ocean are the driving force behind research being conducted by an SIUC professor. James Blackburn, associate professor of mechanical engineering, received a $200,000 grant from the Environmental Protection Agency for one of three interconnected projects concerning hog waste. Blackburn's hog waste projects not only have the potential to benefit the environment, but hog farmers as well.

Blackburn's project grabbed the attention of the EPA in that it can decrease the amount of disease-causing bacteria in feedlot run off, improving the health of the hog population.

The second project deals with the feedlot made from the soil dusting process that is used to fertilize specialty designed crop fields. The third project takes samples off of feedlot to be analyzed for disease-causing bacteria. "After two seasons, we will notice the liquid waste which comes off the feedlot for nutrient materials to check and see how much pollution is generated with our stuff versus for existing stuff," Blackburn said.

Blackburn said, "Water is losing its fertilizer, it's very confident the feedlot performed will have minimal amounts of pathogens.

"We are almost sure that the product has a very low level of disease causing bacteria. We need to prove that, not just looking at the literature, we are almost sure that is made true," he said.

Either of those, one of the benefits would be a decrease in pathogens, put into corn fields when compared to the center fertilizing in use. The long list of potential benefits to hog farmers include odor reduction, first for buildings, the decrease of pathogens and a better fertilizer product.

"We have come up with a system which is very efficient and effective. But in particular, it's a system that will pay for soil in energy, saved over times," Blackburn said.

"All of this is still in the research stage. To measure the agronomic potential of the system, Blackburn sought out Ed Vana, associate professor in plant, soil, and general agriculture, "Once he got the process developed, he needed to take it to the next stage and that is to evaluate what it works in the soil. That's when I got involved," Vana said.

Vana will be examining how the plants take up nutrients and the total yield of grain grown. So far, it is too early to see if the agronomic benefits look like what Vana and Blackburn has worked on could be a system for projects commercial with many benefits. He is concerned about the problems with problems in commercialization of the treatment plants and potential costs and pollution generated by the chemical industry.

Bush pushes for bipartisan tone in Washington with big fund-raiser

WASHINGTON - Gus George W. Bush speaks for a more bipartisan tone in Washington during a recent fundraising Republican fund-raisers yesterday. But earlier in the day, the governor was heading off criticism from his Democratic challenger about the post-Kerry's financial 10-week.

Campaigning in Connecticut, Vice President Al Gore said the Republicans' financial association with the National Rifle Association does raise the question: "How close are they? Who does he always do exactly what the NRA says he should do?"

Asked whether he was troubled by having a top NRA official as campaign chairman, Bush said, "No, I know what I believe. I support reasonable laws to keep guns out of the hands of people who shouldn't have them. I believe we can enforce the current law."

Wednesday's dinner raised $21.3 million for the Republican National Committee, easily the biggest one-night fund-raisers for any party. Co-chairman Warner Noriega, who presided over the dinner, was on a guest list that featured a dozen Republican senators.

The dinner included a few days at President

Clinton and Gore. He described what he said would be Gore's "last official day" speaking in California, the New York state that is running against Republican Senator Bob Dole for Senate in New York state.

For his first visit to the capital since all but wrapping up the GOP nomination, Bush stressed the importance of creating a "new mood in Washington."

The dinner capped a day in which Bush met with Democratic Sen. Ben Kerrey of Nebraska to discuss Social Security policy, with both politicians speaking with Kaiser Foundation Investigator Bruce Merson and appear with his wife, Lauson, on a panel of Republican women leaders.

Bush addressed an alight group of Republican lawmakers at the gala, including Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi and Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill. Also scheduled to attend were retiring able Democratic lawmakers were Kent Layman, campaign spokewoman, said that's a sign that Bush is serious about working with Democrats.

Hughes said that Bush had a "very frank, very forthright, very good discussion" with Franks, who was in town to see Clinton and other state officials.

Later in a news conference, he said he and the governor had discussed the "major direction" of US-Roman relations. "We want to see a stable, a very, very good discussion," Bush said.

Also Wednesday, Bush and his wife, Laura, were keynote speakers at the third annual Republican Women's Leadership Forum, an event hosted by Attorney General Alberto Gonzales, R-Texas, and Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash., in a talk show-style discussion with teachers, or leaders and students.

Bush said he would demonstrate the "soft legacy of low opposition" as president.

In an interview with Belo Broadcasting, Bush contrasted his stance on the Confederate flag controversy in South Carolina with that of Senator McCain. The Arizona senator last week called for the flag to be removed from atop South Carolina Capitol, and criticized himself for not saying so during the primary campaign.

I told the truth," said Bush, who has continued to call for the flag as a local issue. "I'm comfortable with the position I took. That's the kind of campaign I'm trying to take one position and change it.
Some relationships start with people you've never even met

DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Kyle Moeller is in love with his girlfriend, but she's never met his parents.

Moeller, a freshman in arts and sciences who lives in Southern California, started missing his girlfriend after his profile appeared on an Internet dating service.

"We started talking, and we kept it going from there," he said.

After a month of instant messaging and e-mailing, they began calling each other.

"It's not just because we can see each other about a month later when we first started talking," he said.

Though they meet on a regular basis in person, they are always there for each other.

"I just talk like she's part of me," he said.

University students psychology, people who are apt to form Internet relationships can usually express their "real self" more accurately and readily online, making it easier to communicate with someone over the Internet than in person.

Moeller has no problem being his "real self" with his girlfriend. He said they can talk to each other about anything that they have in common and talk to each other from their different perspectives.

"I just talk to her like she's part of me," he said.

Moeller's research shows that relationships over the Internet develop much more quickly than traditional relationships and that those serious relationships are more likely to last than those developed in person.

"There was never a moment that was happy or upset, we are always there for each other," he said.

"That was the sweetest thing anything ever has done for me," he said.

Even though they cannot see each other, that does not stop Moeller, and Moeller, from doing the romantic things many couples do.

They send photos with their own phone and forward each other on a regular basis both online and through postal mail.

Moeller said they both just need to get to see each other.

"We're just going to keep it going," he said.

The only opposition comes to Moeller's relationship with his girlfriend.

"It's not too bad because we've done a lot of stuff together," he said.

"I recommend you just let her be," he said.

SAINT CLOUD, Minn. — Two non-profit groups are defending a junior at Saint Cloud University whose school officials chastised for making what they considered an analogy demeaning to minorities.

Christopher Monson, student services chairman of the university's student government, was quoted in the "University Chronicle" as saying that restricting credit card companies from campus would be like "not allowing blacks on campus." Monson is drafting proposals designed to address student complaints about the number of soliciters on campus.

Monson's companion angered many people on campus, including President Suzanne R. Williams, who called the comment "demeaning and totally inappropriate."

The university made clear in the quote to determine the circumstances and to take whatever action is necessary to stem racial insults such as these," she wrote in an e-mail message distributed university-wide.

Monson believes administrators have overreacted. While he하실 administration blamed the university, he has been told to avoid diversity training and threatened with the loss of his student-government post.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education and the American Council of Trustees and Alumni, two groups dedicated to academic freedom and free speech, are backing Monson. "It is bad enough to have a university president unable to follow the simple logic of an analogy," said Charles B. Kow, a history professor at the University of Pennsylvania and president of the foundation said in a prepared statement.

"It is a scandal, however, that the president of a public university, an institution bound by the First Amendment to the state and federal constitutions, neither recognizes nor responds to the clear violation of the rule of law, including the essential rights of freedom of speech and the press," it said.

"Spring Break Monday" for faculty holiday

The University Calendar Committee recommended to interim Chancellor John Jackson that "Spring Break Monday" be retained as the designated holiday for the 2002-2003 academic year.

The recommendation came after feedback from faculty members showed overall support for keeping the spring break holiday more so than other suggested designated days.

Other days suggested were Veterans Day, Memorial Day, Good Friday and the summer holiday, but a faculty members can chosen.

Jackson still has to approve the holiday for the 2001-2002 school year.

No of Miss. junior wins $30,000 scholarship

No, she didn't have to offer any final answers, and she still won $30,000. The University of Missouri junior Maria Chatelain said when Chancellor Richard Wallace interrupted her religious studies class to tell her she was the recipient of the Harry S. Truman Scholarship, worth $30,000. The scholarship is for college juniors who are interested in careers dealing with public service.

"The interview was intense," Chatelain said. "It was a 20-minute Q-and-A session about yourself, your application and your policy proposal." Chatelain was one of three students nominated from the Missouri campus. She offered a proposal dealing with multicultural education and diversity initiatives for the Chicago Public Schools.

Chatelain said she plans to use the money to pursue a master's degree in American studies and would like to teach history. In addition, she said the wants to get a doctorate in religious studies and work to reform education and promote diversity initiatives. Chatelain plans to live and study in Los him in the fall.

Activists protest Nike sweatshop labor

NEW YORK - Shopping at Nike's Manhattan store on Tuesday was complicated by a protest staged inside and outside by about 100 activists pushing the athletic apparel giant to stop using sweatshop labor.

College students, clergy and members of the Union of Needletrades, Industrial and Textile Employees led the late-afternoon demonstration in response to a UNITE study that reports that Nike continues to use sweatshop labor in Asia. The report states that a survey of Union Nissan employees found "serious labor abuses, including low wages, abusive treatment and excessively work hours." Employers, mostly commonly complained of having to work long hours — often as many as 72 in a week — for wages ranging from $33-49 a month.

"The deplorable conditions in Nike factories are Nike's fault," the report stated. "In a global economy with no rules that protect workers, it is companies such as Nike who direct the global sweatshop in industries such as clothing and footwear."

Nike's founder, Phil Knight, has said his company raised the minimum working age of its subcontractors to 18, awarded races and helped establish safety improvements in partnering manufacturing plants.

No of the company's protest leaders were enough to improve Tuesday's protestors, who entered the Manhattan store prospective for Nike's founder, Phil Knight, has said his company raised the minimum working age of its subcontractors to 18, awarded races and helped establish safety improvements in partnering manufacturing plants...
Clinton helps dedicate Ark Law School

Charles Darwin
Washington Post reporter

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - President Clinton was in Little Rock Thursday, helping dedicate a law school to his former gubernatorial chief counsel, a native of Little Rock who is now a federal judge in civil rights cases.

Judge Susan Webber, who served 10 years in Arkansas' governor's re- markedly liberal administration, went on to become a federal judge. She is also a native of Little Rock.

Webber helped to dedicate the new law school Thursday afternoon, joining Clinton and other dignitaries. The event was capped by a speech by Clinton, who praised Webber for her work in civil rights cases.

The new law school, which is to be called the University of Arkansas Law School, is located in the old state capital building in Little Rock. The building was originally designed as a bank, but was later converted into a state office building.

Clinton said that the new law school would help to train lawyers to represent the poor and the underprivileged in Arkansas.

Newcomers Park's special quirks at Wrigley

Teddy Greenstein
Chicago Tribune

When Chicago Cubs rookie Scott Downs tossed the second April 15 at Wrigley Field of the season, the sun was shining, the temperature was in the 70s and the building in right field was a short-sleeve shirt.

The wind rolled in and winter returned.

"I've never seen anything like it," he said. It was a 20-degree temperature drop. You know that big, tall building in right field? It disappeared.

The top of it was gone.

Downs chose not to add a layer or long sleeves under his uniform. He also resisted changing his pitching strategy, but with the wind suddenly blowing in toward home plate, it was straight but with the wind suddenly sweeping away the grass, it was gone.

That was always a big adjustment, to get your hand in the right spot and let the wind do its work. And I was a bit caught off guard.

The wind was blowing straight out for the first two innings and then it completely changed," he said. "I was trying to make it all the way down, but in the back of my mind I'm thinking: You can get away with a fastball."

For the 24-year-old Downs, the game served as a good lesson. At Wrigley Field he'll be working with a faster wind, and he should take advantage of it.

Downs threw seven solid innings that day, beating the Marlins 4-2. Entering Tuesday's game against Houston, the Cubs had won only one game since, but they should get a boost beginning Friday, when they open their long homestand.

"I think we'll have better weather, make, the infield the way it will be in the summer months, when the wind tends to howl and blowing routine fly balls into souvenirs."

Girardi, who learned how to call games in the minor leagues with the Cubs from 1989 to 1992, said he tells pitchers to throw the ball at the strike zone when the wind blows out.

"You have to have fewer walkers and you have to understand that solo home runs are not going to beat you," he said. "It's the two-run and three-run homers that will." The wind also makes it trickier for outfielders, who say the conditions can change from one minute to the next.

First-base coach Billy Williams, who spent the majority of his 17-year Hall of Fame career playing the outfield at Wrigley, told outfielders to check the flag, the final poker card in almost every pitch.

"When the wind's coming off the [windshield], it's a little harder," Williams said. "That's why it's always a good idea to look at the flag."

Even if the wind is calm, there's little chance the fans in the bleachers will be.

"I think we'll have better weather. The fans won't be as loud, play his games at Sec Taylor Stadium in Des Moines. The fans won't be as loud, play his games at Sec Taylor Stadium in Des Moines."

Alas, the Bleacher Bums won't have Buck to kick around anymore. The 39-year-old was demoted to Class AAA Iowa Towns to sit for extra room for third baseman Willie Greene.

For the time being, Buck will play his games at Svc Taylor Stadium in Des Moines. The fans won't be as loud, and the wind won't be as strong. Another thing is for certain: Buck won't be as happy.

But I had to go away and make sure I was able to," he said. "Now I know, I have 81 games there and I like it. And I'm pretty happy about it."

Downs is trying to make the most of a good night's rest, he also has learned to benefit from Wrigley's thick grass, which many players believe makes the infield the sloppiest in the National League.

"From a visitor's standpoint, I didn't utilize it as well as I should have," he said. "Now I know, I have 81 games there and I like it. And I'm pretty happy about it."

New York

John Starks still a Knicks backer

John Starks misses being a Knick so much that he would consider returning to the team next season for a veteran minimum salary.

"Oh yeah, there are thoughts of coming back," said Starks, who was at the Garden for Wednesday night's 84-83 victory. "Hopefully during the offseason, we can come back and make it happen as well as other teams. But New York will be my first choice to come back here and play."

The Garden fans want Starks back. Late in last night's game, Starks was shown on the big screen wearing a Knicks love for the Knicks. Starks would have joined the Knicks earlier this month as a free agent. Last month, the Bulls released Starks after an independent arbitrator ruled that the team and the player could mutually agree to terminate Starks' contract. However, the arbitrator refused to make his ruling retroactive to March 1, allowing the Bulls to make a playoff move.

Still, GM Scott Layden called Starks about joining the Knicks for the final seven games of the regular season and Starks said yes.

"I kind of said you permanently just because of the amount of wanting to come back and play," said Starks, who was traded from Golden State to Chicago this season before spending the last few weeks resting his knee in Oklahoma. "You could find me to go out of work and make sure I was able to play and it didn't respond the way I wanted it to."

The Knicks could sign Starks, who will enter his 11th season, for the $1 million salary-exempt.

Used to be on the DL.

The All-American dream

After earning All-American honors last year, Brad Bowers wants it again

Christine Bolin
Daily Egyptian reporter

Brad Bowers has a long-term goal to achieve before he ever sets his foot on a collegiate track, and field team.

He wants to become a conference champion in the long and triple jump, qualify for the NCAA Nationals again, earn All-American awards for the second year in a row, and make it to the Olympic trials.

But one thing is preventing him from doing so—Injuries.

For the past three meets, Bowers, the Saluki's top long and triple jumper, has been hobbled with a pulled groin, causing him to return side-lined from competing.

“Injuries are nothing new to me since last season,” the senior from Marion said. “I just have to deal with it and step up even more.”

With last three more meets left in the Salukis’ season, including this weekend's Drake Relays, Bowers is running out of time to peak the type of success he enjoyed in his junior year. After two solid seasons as a Saluki, Bowers emerged in the 1999 indoor season, earning himself All-American honors in the long jump at the NCAA Indoor Championships, where he finished 11th overall.

However, in the summer after the 1999 indoor season, injuries began to take their toll on Bowers.

For months, Bowers experienced pains in his lower back. Wright said Bowers must have a solid meet before the Olympic trials. He was heisted and injury-free halfway into the outdoor season until April 8 at the All Sport Relays, where he pulled a groin muscle.

Ever since, Bowers has been out of action. He has kept busy in regards to lifting weights and not jumping as much. He said it felt weird not being able to compete, but thinks his extra weightlifting will benefit him once he starts competing again.

“I have been lifting more than I normally would,” Bowers said. “I am going to come back a lot stronger.”

When asked how he feels about the possibility of making Olympic Trials, which he has been working towards, Bowers said, "I am working towards the Olympic Trials, but it’s only a dream."

One last chance

Men's tennis try to salvage season

Andy Egerer
DAILY EAGLER REPORTER

There's just a whimper of hope left.

After scoring its worst record since 1997, the SIU men's tennis team will try to turn its further misery into success this weekend in conference play.

The Salukis (1-1, 0-0) will face the University of Missouri in Columbia, Mo., today. The Salukis lost the last meeting against the Panthers 4-3 on April 14.

No. 2 singles player Valentin Epure will not be healthy enough to play in the tournament, as he is still feeling the effects of a sprained ankle. Epure brings a solid addition to the line-up, winning nearly 75 percent of his matches.

Unfortunately, this is the most damaging injury he's had since joining the Salukis' men's tennis coach Brad Donnell. When you lose someone who consistently wins, it's just a killer.

In the last meeting, the Salukis lost the double points, which made the difference in the match. They need to come out and gain momentum early by winning the double points, and hope it can carry into singles play.

The team will get No. 3 seed going into the tournament. Winning the first match will guarantee SIU's advancement in only two games.

That unpleasantry memory is now long forgotten, and the Salukis are pleased to be playing better as a team.

Junior third baseman Chris Miller said, "Not that I'm comparing, but it's nice to pick it up when we're getting close to the tournament."

Creighton is led offensively by junior pitcher Blake Black who has won the Heisman in 1972, said his decision to return to school in 1993 helped put him in contention for induction into the hall of fame. Players who played their last game in 1992 last name has not been considered for induction.

Although Rodgers finished his college career in the 1970's, he said he headed back to school to serve as an assistant and help his son.

"I think we're going to get up there and get a sweep," SIU men's tennis coach Brad Donnell said. "I think we're starting to roll and we've got to take it to them and play our game."
Women's tennis takes No. 3 seed into MVC tournament

Andy Ewerks
Daily Egyptian reporter

SIU women's tennis coach Jule Auld said she is tired of finishing in fifth place every year. She said she wants to try and make the difference from finishing in the usual fifth spot and playing for the conference championship. The team has finished fifth the last four seasons.

"We cannot be thinking, "we have played Illinois State, we can beat them again," Auld said. "We have had a great season, but the rest is history. I think the girls know that and I think that is the big difference from last year.

Last season's fifth-place team was dominated by freshmen last season, but now has the added experience that could make the difference from finishing in the usual fifth spot and playing for the conference championship. The team has finished fifth the last four seasons.

No. 1 player Simona Petrutiu has been on a week of her own, finishing the regular season by garnering the MVC Player of the Week award.

The No. 1 doubles team of Petrutiu and Pamela Flore enter the tournament leading the conference with a 16-1 record. The duo has won their first nine doubles matches.

The MVC softball team, which was in eighth place two days ago, still has a chance at winning the Valley title

Carly Cunney
Daily Egyptian reporter

With only four Missouri Valley Conference weekends remaining in the regular season, the SIU softball team still has intentions of winning the Valley crown.

The story line seemed unlikely a few days ago when the Salukis were sitting down in eighth place, but with the strong amount of parity in the league this year, only a few games separate a first-place finish from a mid-place finish.

The Salukis close out the regular season with a pair of MVC doubleheaders, opening with first-place Creighton University Saturday before playing last place Drake University in Des Moines. So, a Sunday. Both twin bills start at noon.

SIU baseball at home this weekend against Bradley University

The SIU baseball team will try to extend its two-game winning streak in this weekend's home doubleheaders versus Bradley University at Atchison Field.

The Salukis (17-24, 6-14) have lost seven of their last 11 games and are at the bottom of the Missouri Valley Conference standings.

The Braves (22-30, 12-15) are in third place in the MVC and will look to gain more ground in the conference. The Braves are three out of four games from Illinois State University last weekend in Normal. Scheduled to play for the Salukis in game one is right-handed pitcher John Allen, who has a 5-4 record and is unlisted fifth in the conference with a 3.97 ERA. Allen will face lefty Steve Ehrle, whose record is 5-3 and has an ERA of 4.24.

Senior lefty Saluki left-hander Fort (1-7, 7.01) will face right-hander Craig Hafley (4-3, 3.94). Game two is scheduled for right-handers Charles Balf (1-2, 7.80) and right-hander Bud Till (6-3, 2.23). SIU right-hander Billy Werth (1-3, 7.40) will likely face righty David Hoffman (4-4, 5.00) in game three.

Right-hander Stu Friends (1-0) is averaging .459 in his last 12 games and is 6-3 in his five career last Sunday against Indiana State University. The last Saluki to hit for the doubles play was Brad Holleman on March 17, 1990.
