Nixon accepts nod; 580 arrested near convention hall

By Walter R. Meana
AP Political Writer
MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — President Nixon accepted Republican renomination Wednesday night by urging Americans of all political faiths to unite as a new majority and reject “the policies of those who whine and whimper about our frustrations and call on us to turn inward.”

“Let us not turn away from greatness.” Nixon proclaimed the cheers of a national convention hall ringed by police and barricades to ward off demonstrators who roamed nearby streets.

The roving bands of youths damaged or immobilized scores of cars, broke windows, set trash fires in the streets, and caused multiple traffic jams.

Police fought back with crowd-control gas and arrested about 580 demonstrators. Some injuries were reported on both sides.

After delegates ratified his choice of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew for the GOP No. 2 spot.

Nixon openly supported the disenchantment of Democrats and sharply attacked opponent George McGovern’s proposals and philosophy, calling them dangerous to stability at home and abroad.

Nixon defended his Vietnam policies, claiming great progress toward ending the war, and pledged anew to seek a settlement that “will not stain the honor of the United States.”

He displayed no new developments in the search for “an honorable peace.”

The President never mentioned McGovern by name in his prepared remarks, but he directed salvo after salvo of criticism at “our opponents.”

He said the Democratic platform “promises everything to everybody” but would require a budget that would bring a 50 per cent increase in taxes and would mean that “wage earners would be working more for the government than they would for themselves.”

Dr. Don Knapp, SIU Health Service physician, has been named acting chief of staff for Health Service physicians, Sam McVay, acting assistant Health Service director, disclosed Wednesday.

Knapp, who has been at SIU two years, was elected by the physician staff at a meeting Tuesday. The Benton physician practiced in Robinson before coming to SIU.

McVay said he and Knapp will be the “first team” operation of the Health Service. McVay said it was his understanding when hired that a medical chief of staff and a business administrator, himself, would run the Health facility.

McVay, who is not a physician, came to SIU Aug. 14. He was appointed by the Board of Trustees last Friday as acting assistant director. The appointment changed his title from Health Service director and was made after several board members expressed the opinion that a medical administrator should be in charge of the Health Service as opposed to a non-medical administrator.

McVay said it was the intent of the Health Service to name a chief of staff or an executive physicians committee. He said earlier that there is a need for cooperation between the business and medical operations at the Health Service.

“We have begun immediately some intense planning for the Health Service in the future,” McVay said. The team work concept dividing business and professional medical aspects of operating the service will be a step in realizing “medical autonomy” he added.

“Physicians are in a position to evaluate themselves on an on-going basis,” McVay continued. This is one reason why a physician was needed as “captain of the health team,” he said.

Knapp and McVay will meet to plan future Health Service program changes and actions.

“We will be re-opening the Minor Care Clinic this fall,” McVay said. The clinic is located east of Washington and was established for east campus dwellers.

He and Knapp also plan to review admission procedures to streamline Health Service appointments.

“We will take a general look at the entire program, but we are particularly concerned about space,” he said.

The addition of two physicians to the Health Service as “first team” is one reason why adequate facilities and space are a prime concern, McVay said.

Appointments of Dr. Peter O’Dwyer and Dr. William Swaney were officially approved by the Board of Trustees last Friday. O’Dwyer’s tentative salary is $30,000 per year. Swaney, who work on a 30 per cent time basis, will be paid $8,000 annually.

McVay said he and Knapp are interested in “working with the University and other sources” to clarify all Health Service procedures. He said the University community, particularly as they relate to services offered at the satellite Minor Care Clinic.

Any plans under consideration will be in line with “SIU’s overall goals for the Health Service, McVay said. He expects to announce program revisions and additions in the near future.

Association for Education in Journalism (AEJ) convention delegates Wednesday passed a resolution criticizing a Supreme Court decision that denies newsmen the right to refuse to disclose confidential sources.

Except for one objection, the entire body of delegates expressed “grave concern over the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in which the court, by a five to four vote, failed to recognize as constitutionally protected the right of a newsman to hold in confidence information or its sources.”

In an ensuing statement, the AEJ endorsed the principle of “newsman’s privilege” and urged Congress and additional state legislatures to pass “newsman’s privilege” legislation “to undo the harm done by the Supreme Court.” This, the AEJ stated, is “to prevent further tampering with the news-gathering process.”

A constitutional change in membership requirements and several other resolutions were passed on the convention floor in a general expression of the convention ground to a halt. The convention ended Wednesday.

The changes in membership requirements was approved

Directory info due for faculty

SIU faculty and staff members have been asked to advise the personnel office by Sept. 8 of any personal data changes they want included in the upcoming campus directory.

A stepped-up production schedule has been put into motion to get the 1972-73 directory off the presses and delivered by Oct. 18.

Bad Credit, management systems director in the Information Processing Center said any changes in address, telephone number, highest degree held, marital status or other information should be reported in order for the book to be up to date under the next production deadline.

This year's directory will include three lines of information for each listing, instead of the abbreviated one-line entries in the 1971-72 book.

The caption, “Watered gas,” beneath the photo of the rain-filled Flooded 3 House on Page 4 of the Daily

A majority of the AEJ delegates voted to support any increase in second class mailing rates since such action would “force many

In other efforts, the AEJ joined with its colleagues in the professional media in asking for more accurate, balanced, and fair and full coverage of the political campaigns of 1972. The AEJ also encouraged the National media associations and journalists towards press for strengthening of laws on both the federal and state level to provide greater access of the public and the media to public records, information and meetings.

In a resolution directed to Congress and the White House, the

AEJ urged for adequate funding for public broadcasting television, the “provision of such funding not to be contingent upon programming of public television stations, singly or in concert.”

Courtesties were extended by convention delegates to Howard R.

man and assistant chairman of the convention program committee for

AEJ, and also to the SIU faculty and staff who were hosting the national campaign on this campus.

In other actions, the AEJ heard committee reports from the Jourand the ad hoc committee on international cooperation.

Beginning next year, AEJ members will be provided with a which all AEJ members and a short biographical summary of each will

As Aug. 10, AEJ has accumulated more than 1,000

regular members and more than 200 student

A survey done by the CATV ad recommended that AEJ should be more aware of cable communication development patterns, problems and relationship of these to all phases of teaching and

The CATV ad hoc committee also reached a consensus that AEJ

Letter to the Editor

Support for Derge's actions

To the Daily Egyptian:

I, for one, defend President Derge's present posture relative to the University governance structure. President Derge has both written and stated publicly that he will listen to the various constituents. Further, he has said that he will use the input as a part of his decision making process. I believe him. He is the accountable officer of this University as defined by the legal framework which controls our operation. Therefore, I assume he will be judged accordingly by the Board of Trustees. Naturally, he has the board's support; it would be odd if he didn't since they appointed him. However, in my judgment, I also believe that the board would not, and will not, support President Derge should he prove incompetent or unwise in the trust given him.

We have had many administrative processes here at SIU during my years as a faculty member. This is a new effort, and I think we should give President Derge and his staff time to get their programs underway. Some faculty appear to have fasted to the conclusion that the administration has already failed. Well, I'll wait a while before making judgments; but I'll also strive to make the system work, both as a teacher and as a member of various faculty committees.

In the Daily Egyptian of August 17, one of my colleagues mentioned strike possibilities in terms of the governance question and inferred that faculty lacked "guts" in terms of organizing. He does not speak for me—I have plenty of "guts." Enough, I might say, to point out that I will never be a part of faculty strike. Further, my "guts" include stating that the AAUP will never be allowed to use "collective bargaining" in my behalf in terms of salary, tenure or anything else. I also have the "guts" to speak out to President Derge on any matter—for or against. Finally, I appreciate my colleague not including me when he interprets faculty "guts" in matters concerning what faculty will and won't do. I'll interpret my own "intestinal fortitude!"

Two Jeffersons?

To the Daily Egyptian:

Particularly fascinating was Leonard Levy's speech to the Association for Education in Journalism about freedom of the press and what great libertarians the Jeffersonians were.

According to the Daily Egyptian's report, "Levy presented 'unshakable evidence' that the Jeffersonians had set the highest standards of freedom. Freedom which justifies political opposition and the absolute freedom of the press."

Here are a few words from Leonard Levy's book on the subject, "The Legacy of Suppression."

"...many of the Jeffersonians, most notably Jefferson himself, behaved when in power in ways that belied their free libertarian sentiments of 1788. Jefferson persuaded the Democratic Congress to authorize...the most repressive and unconstitutional legislation ever enacted by Congress in time of peace. When in power...he experimented with censorship and condoned the prosecution of his critics...Practiced once reenacted by Jefferson as shocking betrayals of natural and constitutional rights suddenly seemed innocent, even necessary and salutary, when the government was in his hands...he tended to stretch his political powers as he stretched his mind in intellectual matters, leaving his conscience behind him."

It doesn't sound quite like the same Levy. Perhaps there are really two Jeffersons. Maybe there's a real one and a false one. Perhaps the press (the truth of whose opinion can't be proved) will let us know!

Why do kids go bad?

An Editor's Outlook

By Joslin Lloyd Jones
Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Genes and chromosomes are tricky and even in the best bloodlines they can create more than mere blemishes but with crashing disappointments. There is always the possibility that the chance of conception will result in normally dormant characteristics harnessed down by an ancestral highway or tavern doxy. In such cases, this is not the fault of the parents. There is such a thing as moral idiocy. What is truly tragic, however, is the problem child who didn’t have to be a problem.

Recently, Dr. Richard H. Blum of Stanford University’s Institute for Public Policy Analysis published some conclusions following a 15-year study of the drug users among the children of white middle-class families. Here were children who had “advantages.” Why did they go sour?

Dr. Blum’s findings indicated that in the hands of some parents “advantages” can be disadvantages in raising a psychologically healthy child. “The well-to-do,” he says, “have a higher risk than the well-to-do.”

So, first of all, Dr. Blum claims to have found a correlation between drugs and adolescents who got too much too soon.

Second, there’s religiosity. “God-fearing, church-attending families,” he says, “are low risk.”

Third, parents who are political liberals will have more drug-involved children than political conservatives. Not, of course, that politics has anything to do with it, except liberalism and tolerance of deviation behavior often go together.

Fourth, parents who abuse alcohol or who are consigned to their own drug use are more likely to have children who get into trouble both ways.

Fifth, parents who are contemptuous of authority, who sneer at cops and boast of what they can get away with often have high-risk children.

Finally, general permissiveness—the attitude that childhood wilfulness and naughtiness are either cute or incurable—leads children to the pill bottle or the needle.

Blum surveyed only intact middle-class and upper-class San Francisco area families. He asserts that where families are split by divorce or separation the risk increases.

“The family,” he says, “is the only way we know to produce good people. We have no invention to replace it and if it’s falling apart we’d better attend to it.”

Peers, that is, other kids hanging around the drive-in, become important. Blum adds, when the family abandons its control over companions and allows them to become the primary influence.

“Those who are not immunized by standards which the family helps evolve will fall into these short-range peer activities, including drug involvement,” he concludes.

In a perceptive article in a recent issue of The Wisconsin State Journal, a magazine a student touched on a companion problem—overstimulation at an early age that blunts the pleasure of simple things and leads to a search for ever-stronger kicks.

The grandchild of the kid who spent an hour on his belly watching the wonders of a pollywog is now drowned in stout-ear ups, tickled with porno and endlessly hither and yon. There is no time to watch pollywogs or skip stones or dissect abandoned wasp’s nests. There is little quiet reading to develop insight and healthy imagination. There is, instead, a restless search for more exotic diversions.

We may be in trouble because we now have the second hardly raised generation in succession. The fault lies not only in the fathers and mothers, but in the grandfathers and grandparents.

For the grandfathers and grandparents today are largely of the depression generation. They knew incomes and evictions and poverty. And so when things got better they went overboard giving their children material things. It is not remarkable that the son of the first kid on the block to have a high school hot rod should be the first kid on the block to try cocaine.

There is reaction, of course, and that’s healthy. Many young “Jesus people” however weird and overheated they may be, are rejecting simultaneously dead-end “lifestyles” based on drugs and promiscuity and also the sterile philosophies of their parents.

And the fashionable theory that permissiveness prevents the trauma of frustration is being increasingly challenged in respectable circles. Dr. Fitzhugh Dodson, in his book “How to Parent,” says: “Children need and want discipline. Every time they misbehave they’re saying, ‘Help me—show me how far I can go—don’t let me hurt myself.’”

Parents who cannot stand as admirable examples are rarely effective teachers. And parents who are not effective teachers must let the kids hurt themselves.

“Well, thank you, right kindly, Senator. And I want to say I was mighty pleased when you mentioned my courage in your acceptance speech to the convention. Like I said to my Cornelia, ‘He may be a pointy-headed intellectual who don’t know how to park his bicycle straight, but he sure is a fine judge of human character’.”

“Well, I meant it, Governor. Anyone can see you’re a man with the courage of his convictions, whatever they may be. And you’re certainly not a quitter. You’re not a quitter, are you?”

“Now there you go, Senator, buttering me up. I know how hard you been working to unify all us Democrats for the campaign. And I don’t mind saying I’ve been downright impressed by your impassioned plea.”

“You have?”

“Like I said to my Cornelia, ‘That fellaw’s right. Sometimes a man’s got to put party unity above personal ambition. Maybe this year I ought to sit this one out.’”

“I wouldn’t want you to make any hasty decisions, Governor.”

Ellsberg wiretap issue goes to Supreme court

WASHINGTON (AP)—Attorneys for Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo asked the Supreme Court on Wednesday to rule on a wiretapping issue in the Pentagon Papers trial. The FBI had said it would not be brought to trial in California on charges of espionage, conspiracy and obstruction of justice, but the FBI said it would do so.

Ellsberg's lawyer, David Byrne, said the Pentagon Papers is an important part of the Ellsberg story. Byrne, who refuted the notion that the Pentagon Papers would be used to support a "bad program," said that Ellsberg's story is about the creation of a "bad program" because it lacks busing of inmates to campus programs and it lacks therapeutic counseling and it lacks adequate personnel and financing.

"Basically, SIU's affiliation with Menard has gotten bogged down and entrenched in a couple of educational programs. We're just starting to see the creativity we expected to find because SIU has done such a good job of itself too," Byrne said.

He added that Ellsberg and his colleagues had interviewed over 65 inmates since the study received an OGER Grant in March, 1971.

Both Leonard and Dey agreed that the study will be the most extensive and in-depth personal research ever published in book form upon completion.

In regard to his efforts to assist inmates to the SIU campus, Leonard said, "I'm not sure how the program would work. But if it were true, it would be a great way to help our inmates."

Leonard, a penal inmate for seven years, is a doctoral candidate at San Francisco State University. He described his absence as a therapeutic counseling in the SIU-Menard relationship and suggested creation of an ambassador who could mediate and academically advise resident.

"The Menard inmates desperately need a personal link to the SIU campus if they are to gain anything more than the verbal bowel movements that go on between SIU and Menard," Leonard claimed.

SIU does provide a part-time counselor to Menard and it is mentioned that SIU has recently donated $5,000 books and provided counseling services to the Menard library.

"The SIU-Menard third major finding--a shortage of professional teachers and lack of adequate financing--caused him to comment, "The teachers dilute their material and do not spend enough time providing the self-fulfillment and achievement the inmates need."

Presently, 88 Menard inmates are taught general studies courses by graduate student teachers.

"The residents and teachers," said Leonard, "have also run into a financial bird. Not enough residents can afford the classes at Menard but afterwards, SIU abandons them and teachers cannot afford to spend overtime at the prison," he added.

Some changes are already being made to help alleviate the situation. Dey said that for the first time, an instructor can now teach one course over his normal load and he is prepared to do so. Also, Dey said the SIU Board of Trustees recently approved an inmate Benefit Fund providing a $10 per cent reduction in fees charged Menard inmates.

"Let us hope many graduate assistants at Menard but we have the cream of the crop to teach them," Dey said.

Though Leonard's accusations were refuted by Dey the two additional facts that in light of recent prison disorders and the need for general prison reform the SIU-Menard program is in need of improvement.

"The SIU-Menard program has been a success," said Leonard's book. Dey concluded: "It is still a professional research job.

Councilmen absent from city session

By Monroe Walker
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Two councilmen seats and the city mayor's chair were empty during Carbondale's City Council meeting Tuesday night when councilmen George Karres and Clark Vineyard failed to show up.

Kearns' business assistant, Al Westell, said he is "out of the state on vacation and will be back in the office on Monday."

Vineyard could not be reached for comment.

The contract between the City of Carbondale and the legal firm of Firich and Lockwood at 301 W. College expired Monday night leaving the city attorney's position vacant.

City manager Carroll J. Fry said "that he signed a new contract because the city's business was taking too much of the firm's time."

He said that Brockton Lockwood, former acting city attorney, "had done a fine job," but the city needs a full-time attorney to handle the legal responsibilities of the city's business.

"All resolutions, ordinances and city documents must be approved by the city's legal counsel," he said, adding that he hoped to fill the position within the week.

Right now, he said, "I'm concerned as to whether or not the members present at this council meeting represent a quorum."

City Clerk Martha Leighty said the Mayor was a voting member of the council and that only two councilmen plus the Mayor are necessary to constitute a quorum.

"We have a five member council," she said, "and three of them constitute a quorum."

Study reported to AEJ reveals barriers to environmental reporting

By Bernard F. Whales
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Despite an increase in coverage, the environmental crisis is still given inadequate attention by the media. Researchers reported Wednesday to the mass communication and society division of the Association for Education in Journalism (AEJ).

Peter Sandman of Ohio State and David Rubin of New York University reported the media were slow in catching on to environmental problems although press coverage increased 32 per cent between 1966 and 1970.

In their study, Sandman and Rubin interviewed newsmen involved in environmental reporting, traced publication of a pesticide press release in the San Francisco Bay Area, and studied news coverage of a nuclear power plant sitting.

They discovered 12 "barriers" to effective coverage of environmental problems:

- Approximately 68 per cent of environmental news originated with governmental sources. Newsmen reported that these governmental reports were usually not released to the press until after a crisis had occurred.
- News media tend to distrust environmental information received from conservation groups, such as the Sierra Club or Zero Population Growth. Newsmen said they were hesitant to use this information just because the groups often were just "pushing their pet projects."
- Although the research indicated the business community is the principal source of environmental pollution, business firms were reluctant to give pollution news to the media. Newsmen reported that it was very difficult to receive environmental news from business companies.
- Newsmen themselves seemed to be a barrier to reporting of environmental news. They were found to rely away from this type of news because it cannot often be related to a "hard news peg."
- News media also serve as a barrier to the reporting of environmental news communications and society division. Crawford said there is a need for universities to train "communicationists" who are knowledgeable of the over population crisis. Four universities, Crawford said, already have such programs and more specialists are needed to handle publicity for population control programs.

Women in the field of journalism education are poorly represented professionally but the prospects for women in television news are not as bad as is generally believed, according to research papers presented Wednesday.

These papers were presented as part of the convention of the Association for Education in Journalism (AEJ) which is being held at SIU this week.

Vernon Stone, of the University of Wisconsin, presented the paper on "Attitudes Toward Television Newswomen." Co-authored by two students, Jill Gesler and Barbara Delf, the paper surveyed university students, professors, news directors, small-town parents and fourth and fifth grade students concerning their attitudes toward women in journalism.

The study showed that all groups felt that gives comparable ability, women could handle news jobs as well as men. The survey of TV news directors, 98 per cent said women could handle the job as well as men for off-the-air field reporting. For newscasting the figure was 44 per cent.

Although the study showed that often a third or more of the groups had no preference as to the sex of the reporter for different kinds of stories, when a preference was given it was most often a man.

However, the reason given for these preferences were not because a man makes a more believable reporter, as is often thought to be the case, Stone said. Rather, the two major reasons for preferring a male reporter were that viewers were accustomed to seeing a man and so liked it or that they preferred the sound of a male voice.

Discussing this point, Stone said he had run into criticism of women broadcast reporters who try to imitate the sound of a male voice.

He said this criticism could be applied to men as well as women. The paper presented by Carol E. Okurop concerned the status of women in journalism education. It is co-authored by Ramon R. Rush and Sandra W. Ernst of Kansas State University.

In her study, Ms. Okurop found that women make up only 11 per cent of the membership of AEJ and that women are poorly represented on committees and other leadership bodies in the group.

Okurop outlined a similar situation for articles published in Journalism Quarterly written by women. She said a small proportion of women are invited to write articles or reviews; most of the work by women in the journal is concerned with general research and is something they have voluntarily submitted to the journal.

Ms. Okurop said that based on an information from journalism schools from 1969-72, at least one woman was on the staff at 86 per cent of the schools. However, she said, these women were clustered at the lower faculty ranks.

Most of the women contacted in the survey said they had no female models during their post-graduate study. Fifty-seven per cent said they felt they had to do more to earn the respect of their colleagues.

Of the doctoral graduates, 46 per cent said they thought there was sex discrimination in the area of promotions. Among the recommendations at the end of the paper, Ms. Okurop called for the formation of an AEJ Committee to study the problems of women in journalism.

The two presentations were followed by criticism of the methodology and findings of the papers by Joyce Patterson, Universities of Missouri, and Ervin Atwood, SIU.

There is no concerted, conscious effort or plan by the government to conceal the truth from the people, according to George Reedy, who served as U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense under President Lyndon Johnson's administration.

In an address to members in a discussion on "Government Pressures on Reporters and the Media," Reedy, president of the National Association for Education in Journalism on Tuesday at the University of Missouri, said.

Elaborating on his statement, Reedy admitted that there may be instances when five or four officials may gather to try to keep an individual thing quiet, but they

"Most politicians are honest," he said, "although they aren't. In some instances, you don't see so to the reporters and the public."

In his opinion, the main problem is that all political leaders have very strong points of view and live in an adversary world where they constantly look for those who can help them do what they think is right for the country.

"They are crusaders who look at everything in terms of how it can be used to further their cause," he said. "But they don't exempt themselves from what they truly feel is right for the country, he said.

Another member of the panel, Theodore F. Kopp, director of the Washington office of the Radio Television News Directors Association, commented that he thought that all politicians feel they must solve is not necessarily how to keep newsmen in the dark but how to keep them off balance and confused.

"The confusion is real," he said, "but sometimes politicians create more confusion than is necessary."

When the defense department says one thing, and the department another, the politician must make his own judgment, so it important that he be guided enough to cover all angles in Washington.

R. Fisher, a member of the panel and dean of journalism at the University of Missouri, remarked that he felt that freedom of the press was not as important as was once thought.

"People are best served in a climate of benevolent anarchy when it comes to the government and the press," he said.

Fisher discarded the idea that there exists a "loose-jerk," or automatic, adversary relation between the press, government, and the media.

"The job of the press," he said, "is to understand its news sources and impart that understanding to the public. This automatic adversary relation was not for one understanding. In many instances the best way to serve the interests of the public may be to transmit the thoughts of the government directly, so nine-tenths of the relationship between the press and the government is cooperation. But it's important to understand this as an adversary relation that makes democracy work.

"If we (newsmen) approach government with a "loose-jerk" reaction as adversaries, we can't blame them for treating us as such. But if a reporter goes in as a fierce, independent and fast as the successive of his readers or viewers, he deserves the same treatment. If he is refused, then he becomes an adversary," he said.

Kopp said he also advocated an adversary relation, but not of the "loose-jerk" automatic type.

"The real question, as I see it," he said, "is should there or should not be an adversary relation between the press and government at all. And the answer is yes. Only it should happen 80 percent of the time, not just 10. A reporter must give the government position, but he must also present the opposite opinion. Just because a reporter speaks out against one side, does not necessarily mean he supports the other side. Often this is not understood."

Reedy agreed that a certain amount of adversary relation is inevitable between press and government, because the newsman sees things differently from the politician.

"The newsman can't take it upon himself to decide what is good for the country," he said. "The gap between his kind of thinking and that of the politician can't be bridged. Some of the dulllest newspapers ever produced would result if there were 100 percent cooperation between press and government, would be suspicious of any newsman highly praised by government officials for cooperation.

When asked whether or not the government has the right or responsibility to control news and information, Kopp responded that he did not think the government has the right to control news, but does have a certain responsibility in the area.

"I am a former LBJ aide," for example, he said, "has been a great source of news privately to newsman in Washington. I hold briefings that are off the record but at least give the reporters the proper perspective on the news.

But said that there should be government control of information, but not in the way one would assume.

"The first responsibility of the government is to control information," he said, "because keeping the gates valves open and giving the public access to information—on declassifying information that needs declassifying."

He said, however, that there is real danger in allowing the government to actually manage the news.

"There are rare situations," he said, "when national security at stake and the government should ask and be given the cooperation of the press in managing the news, but to have the press go by rules established by the government is to invite an ineffective mass media system. Once we begin to accept proposals that information can and should be controlled, we are undermining our own integrity. We should abide by no rules and print information whenever we can, we must answer only to the people we serve—the American public," he said.

Reedy acknowledged these opinions, but added that the question of the government's right to control news is actually an academic one.

"The government will try to control news regardless," he said. "The question is, what do you mean by news? The official government position has a right to be reported when and as effectively as they want, but another area is all the factors that went into that position. We can't compel a man to lay open his mind to us, but we can and should track down these factors," he said.

The Nonacademic Employees Council adopted a new constitution Wednesday afternoon and changed its name to the Civil Service Employees Council of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

Don Gladden, council chairman, said the name change "more readily identifies the constituents of the council, and we feel that all of us are civil service workers."

He said that under the new constitution, each of the seven areas containing the council's constituents will nominate and elect its own representatives.

"Under the old constitution," Gladden said, "council members were elected at large. There will still be 14 members on the council but the new constitution is based on a larger area."

Also, under the new constitution, he said, a council member who misses two consecutive committee meetings will lose his seat. He added that under the old constitution council members were allowed three consecutive unexcused absences before expulsion from the council.

The council meeting lasted little more than an hour and was a continuation of the Aug. 2 meeting.

The next council meeting will be at 1 p.m. Thursday in the General Classrooms Building, room 203.

Admiral says shipyards are mismanaged

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice Adm. Alan D. Rickover, head of the Navy's Atomic Energy Commission, said American shipyards are poorly managed and may lose money because of their mistakes.

Monger said, the Russians are expanding an "already far superior" shipbuilding capability. In one case, they are ready to test-launch a submarine, he said.

Referring to the feeble yards, Rickover said they have "often called the attention of upper command and Navy officials to what is going on and we have seen little result."

Rickover said he has given Navy officials examples of over-time abuses that have gone on for years. He estimated the Navy could "save at least $50 million a year on overtime alone in the face of tight controls."

Furthermore, Rickover said, "I constantly receive reports of gross situations in which workers are idle and their supervisors are taking no action to prevent it—despite the fact supervisors have contributed and have been party to the baffling."

There are signs some Navy officials, Rickover said, "recognize the importance of overtime and productivity exist and have existed for a long time. However, I am not optimistic that any lasting actions will be taken. Too often these things cause a ripple but actions are short lived."

The Soviets, meanwhile, "have four pass-through five nuclear submarine building yards," he said, and turned out over 10 such vessels last year, including a number of new design ships.

"In the same year we produced four, none of them new designs," he added.

HEIKYAYDIE—Bobby Fischer moved nearer to the world chess title Wednesday when champion Boris Spassky repeated a move three times, creating a draw.

Chess experts were bewildered, because Spassky appeared to have an edge to win the 15th game, resumed after being adjourned after the 14th move Tuesday. Spassky himself seemed surprised when Fischer claimed a draw.

Under the rules of chess, repeating the same move three times results in a draw, which counts half a point.

The draw gave Fischer a total of 8 points, putting him four points in the way toward the title and preserving his three-point lead. Tangemans is 80 percent of the 121 points he needs.

With only seven points, Spassky, has the formidable task of amassing five points in the remaining seven games of the match. He needs 12 points to retain the title.

With each win counting a point, Spassky must defeat Fischer in three games and draw in the other four. Yet so far, he has beaten Fischer only twice in this championship series.

In addition, Fischer forfeited the second game to Spassky in a dispute over the use of television and movie cameras in the playing hall.

Some thought the champion might be playing, backing up a Tuesday statement by his second, Efim Geller, that Fischer aides could have concealed electronic devices on the stage to interfere with the champion's play.

Among other charges, Geller suggested that the lighting—a special system installed on U.S. demand—might have been tampered with.

After his fourth move, Spassky looked searchingly up at the lights, reminiscent of Geller's contention that the champion's "unusual slackening of concentration" might be caused by interference. Spassky looked lustily around him, slamming forward. He normally sits poky-stiff.

Fischer preceded the punctual Spassky on stage Wednesday afternoon for the first time in the series.

Referee Lothar Schmid had asked the challenger's aides to endeavor to get him to the hall on time. He acceded to Geller's contention that Fischer's presence there was "unnatural unsteadily and "deliberately aimed at exercising pressure on the opponent, unbalancing him and perhaps stirring him lose his fighting spirit."

Area history ripe with blood, crime

The Flatheads fighting the Regulators. Sounds like the two gangs that always got into fights behind the mill shop after the Friday night high school dance.

Hell, they were gangs all right, but they fought over more than just petty Sue’s honor.

The Flatheads and Regulators met quite possibly have been the first attempts at organized crime in the United States. And it has happened right here in Southern Illinois in the early 1800s.

For anyone wishing to study the history of crime in Southern Illinois, the place to start is with the tales of Cave-in-Rock.

A list of newly-elected Association for Education in Journalism (AEJ) officers was released Wednesday during an executive committee meeting at the AEJ 5th national convention at SIU.

A new president-elect, Bruce Worthy from the University of Kentucky, was named to succeed Noel Coppie beginning August 73. Coppie is the president-elect for the term 1972-73.

Two new members elected to serve on the six-member Journali sm Council for a three-year term. They are John Mitchell from the University of Colorado and Warren Agee from the University of Georgia.

Three members elected to the Professional Freedom and Responsibility Committee will serve a three-year term beginning immediately. They are James Smith, Florida; John Hubenau, Columbia; and Leslie Mueller, Iowa.

The present base salary for teachers being hired by SIU workers is $5,300.

The strike in District 9, which began May 14, has affected literally 1,500 laborers and solicitors who are working on those projects.

The strike, which has continued through last contract, which ran for three years, has recently expired. The expired contract will not go into effect.

The workers have a new contract which will run for a year and a half, and will take effect July 1.

Chicago papers have 'shaped up,' editor comments

The Chicago newspapers have 'shaped up' in terms of news content, editing and attitude since the birth of the Chicago Journalism Review four years ago, according to Ron Dorfman, CJR editor.

Dorfman made these comments about the CJR during a panel discussion Tuesday on news media criticism and the journalism classroom as part of the annual convention of the Association of Education in Journalism which is here this week.

Also on the panel were William B. Blankenburg, associate professor at the University of Wisconsin, and Loyal Gould, chairman of the journalism department at Wichita State University.

Although Dorfman said there had been some change in the Chicago dailies as compared with their performance four years ago, he was far from praising them.

When asked which newspaper Dorfman would recommend be read with critics, Blankenburg said Dorfman puffed a few minutes and then said, "The Chicago Tribune is the only one which even pretends to be a newspaper in terms of covering the news. But then the only thing worth reading is Rayok, so you have to get the Daily News now."

Concerning classroom criticism of the press, Blankenburg said teachers should serve as examples by criticizing their own work before their classes. Gould agreed that students must develop a critical attitude toward other journals and must also be encouraged to pursue it in their work.

Blankenburg acknowledged the objections often raised to student criticism of the journal because students are not fully qualified to judge other journalistic work.

"If we can ask them to write papers critical of the journal, because students are not fully qualified to judge other journalistic work," Blankenburg said, "and we can't ask them to write papers critical of their work because students are not fully qualified to judge other journalistic work."

Telephone company proposes new service

General Telephone has proposed a selective calling service which would allow many Illinois telephone users to subscribe to a list and receive phone calls only from subscribers on their list. The service would be available only in certain areas which have been preempted by placement of the service.

Villa Ridge exchanges would be able to use the new plan soon after approval by the ICC.

Existing facilities in surrounding areas will be used to serve customers enrolled in the new service under conditions designated to each customer.

The proposal was filed Aug. 19, with the Illinois Commerce Commission (ICC) by Illinois Bell Telephone.

The new plan would replace Illinois Bell's Community Content (now known as "U-25"), which is being gradually phased out.

Blankenburg said those with telephones in the Carbondale and Villa Ridge exchanges would be able to use the new plan soon after approval by the ICC.

Chicago White Sox win on Allen blast.

A newly formed Construction Commission in Springfield checks state projects to make sure money isn't being wasted, Bretscher said.

There appears to be some question as to who should do the actual construction work.

Boydston would like to see what he termed a "turn key operation." His plan would involve taking bids from companies for large projects such as the extension of the West stands and the building of new East stands.

"If we worked within the University on some of the smaller renovation projects, we could save quite a bit of money," Boydston said.

"We don't need to hire an outside architect for painting, installing lighting and replacing lockers," he said.

The main renovation projects include:
- Adding lockers on steel enclosed seating section on the east side of the stadium; the renovation and addition of more seats to the west stands; and a new communications center.
- The communications center, according to Boydston, would ideally have three levels. One level would be for the press, a second level would be for radio, television and scouting, and a third level would be a meeting room.

Most people with problems with the installation of the AstroTurf field continue.

Monsanto Co., developers of the synthetic surface, are holding off the project until SIU agrees to sign a contract to pay an additional $6000 for extra work that may be caused by a labor strike.

The end zone areas of the field have not been covered with the necessary asphalt base yet.

Black Hawks sue Hull; Hull sues Black Hawks.

McDaniel in the seventh inning, was only the fourth ever to sail into the White Sox Park centerfield bleachers, a clout of some 400 feet. The others were hit by Hank Greenberg, Jimmy Foxx and Alex Johnson.

Allen's blow, coming as the Sox led 3-2, gave him 33 home runs and 91 runs batted in, both league-leading totals.

Alvarado's bases-loaded single off Mel Stottlemyre, 12-15, in the third inning gave the White Sox a 2-4 lead. Mike Andrews' RBI single made it 3-1 for Chicago in the fifth.

 Sox win on Allen blast.
