Search for AIDS link continues

By Candace Samolinski
Special Assignment Writer

An SIUC researcher said nothing positive can come from investigating the theory that AIDS is linked to the polio vaccine — it only provides a way of placing blame.

John Caster, assistant professor in medical education at SIUC said unless a significant plan is developed to use the results, money and time is being wasted that could be spent better on other projects.

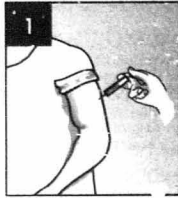

But Tom Beasley, a geneticist who studied at the University of Illinois and has researched DNA in monkeys and humans, said researchers could gain valuable information and insight into AIDS by looking at the theory.

No theory on the origin of the AIDS virus has been accepted, and the most recent idea tying AIDS to the polio vaccine has been dismissed by the medical community.

SIUC tries to keep up with key HIV testing

By Candace Samolinski
Special Assignment Writer

SIUC is behind many other Illinois universities in HIV testing, but it may make strides within the next year to catch up.

"We are in the process of changing the procedure dealing with HIV testing," said Mary Pohlman, medical chief of staff at the SIUC Health Services. "Right now we don't draw the blood for the test here."

"This will be the major change in the procedure," she said. "We will draw the blood here and send it off to a laboratory for testing."

Pohlman said this will keep students from having to go to Carbondale Memorial Hospital to have the blood drawn. This type of testing will be done only through doctor's orders and is confidential, but not anonymous.

Illinois State University, the University of Illinois and University of Chicago student health services also offer anonymous testing.

Wayne Erickson, director of ISU Student Health Services, said the university offers HIV testing to all students on campus.

"We offer anonymous HIV testing to anyone on campus," he said. "We assign a code number to the student and conduct a pre-counseling session, draw

House to view $1.3 billion high-speed train plan

By Jeremy Finley
Politics Writer

A high-speed train system designed to offer faster transportation for passengers in selected areas including Illinois is expected to be in service by the end of the decade, a state transportation official said.

A $1.3 billion package aimed at funding a nationwide high-speed rail program including the Chicago-St. Louis area will be introduced today to the House of Representatives today by administration officials.

The package will distribute the funds for studies and beginning plans for five high-speed rail corridor programs, said Illinois Department of Transportation spokeswoman Martha Schiebel.

David Carle, press secretary for Sen. Paul Simon, D-Makanda, said two-thirds to three-fourths of the funds will be used for construction of the trains that could be patterned after a similar model in Sweden.

"The Swedish tilt train system, called the X200, already uses these models that can go as fast as they can because they can lean into corners smoothly and very fast," he said. "This summer it is supposed to be tested in Illinois."

One of the five routes designated is between St. Louis, Springfield, Chicago and Detroit areas, Schiebel said.

Transportation Secretary Federico Pena announced the plan Wednesday but officially will present the program to the House of Representatives today. The plan proposes using the over $1 billion for five years if states and private companies provide substantial financial support.

The competition among states was intense, but Illinois had a head start because U.S. Department of Transportation named the Illinois corridor as the leading one in the Midwest, said Carle.

Schiebel said the cost for the Illinois corridor plan is estimated to cost between $350 million and $800 million. A study is currently being done to find out the exact cost of the program, along with safety factors and the speed of the train.

If the plan is approved, complicated matching-fund formulas will allow the government to spend as much as 50 percent of total public funds, including state and local tax money and some other federal programs but

'Women have combat skills'

Official to ask for lift of ban in the military

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Defense Secretary Les Aspin will tell the military services to allow women to fly in combat aircraft and also will seek places for women on most Navy combat ships, where they are now barred, Pentagon officials said.

The decision to allow women to fly Air Force and Navy fighters, bombers and other combat aircraft — such as Army helicopter gunships — will be announced by Aspin today, defense officials said. Congress repealed the ban on women in combat cockpits in 1991, but the Pentagon has yet to act on the change in legislation.

Defense officials said Aspin also will ask Congress to end its more than four-decade-old ban on women on Navy warships, although Aspin is likely to continue to keep women from serving on submarines.

Women now serve on a variety of combat support vessels but are prohibited from assignment to destroyers, aircraft carriers and other fighting vessels.

In addition, officials said, Aspin will ask the Army and Marine Corps to justify the continuing exclusion of women from ground infantry units, although they indicated that Aspin had not yet decided whether women should serve in those roles.

"I think it's reasonable to open up opportunities to people who are hard working and have all the skills," a defense official said Tuesday night. Aspin's decision was first reported in Wednesday's editions of The New York Times.

An administration official pointed out that President Clinton as a candidate had approved "the general proposition" of lifting restrictions against women serving in combat roles in the military. The official said that Clinton "has approved moving forward on this front" but has also raised "some specific concerns" about how the action will be implemented that he did not outline Tuesday night.

The decision marks a major social milestone for a military that has long resisted efforts to open combat roles to women.

As recently as last week, Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Merrill A. McPeak commented publicly that were he given the choice between flying with a well-qualified woman and a less-qualified man, he would pick the latter.

But several factors have worked against the continuing exclusion of women from combat roles, most notably the 1991 Persian Gulf War, in which the distinction between combat and noncombat duty was often blurred. A U.S. servicewoman serving on a helicopter was shot down and captured; others died when an Iraqi Scud missile slammed into a U.S. military barracks.

Congressional action to roll back the cockpit ban was accompanied

High speed rail on the way

High speed rail systems are planned for these routes:

- St. Louis-Chicago-Detroit
- Miami-Orlando-Tampa
- San Diego-Los Angeles-San Francisco-Sacramento
- Portland, Ore.-Seattle, Wash.-Vancouver, Canada
- Washington D.C.-Richmond, Va.-Raleigh, N.C.-Charlotte, S.C.

The National Football League will get a chance to see what a Saluki is made of, as two teams signed Saluki running back Yonel Jourdain and quarterback Scott Gabbert as free agents.

Jourdain got his calling from the Buffalo Bills on Tuesday, while Gabbert got his from the Cleveland Browns on Wednesday.

Saluki head football coach Bob Smith said he could not be happier for his players and he hopes it all works out for them.

"I feel that they (Jourdain and Gabbert) are two of the finest representatives in Saluki athletics that this university will ever have," Smith said.

Jourdain said he is excited about his chance to play, pro football.

"I'm just going to go to camp and give them 100 percent and take it from there," he said. "I guess they looked at films of me, and found they run a lot of same type backfield

The 6-foot, 205-pound Saluki was a monster in the backfield, leading SIUC with 790 yards rushing, despite fighting a knee injury.

Selection to national team latest achievement for Saluki runner

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

Saluki runner Bernard Henry, one of the leading Missouri Valley Conference athletes in the 800 meters, returned to his native West Indies last weekend to compete in a meet featuring his country's best athletes.

Henry won the 400 meters in 48.9 and the 800 meters in 1:55, a showing that has earned him a chance to compete for the St. Lucia National Team in the World Championships in Stuttgart, Germany.

"I was really excited to see my family and friends," he said.

Last weekend was the first time Henry has been able to return home in four years.

Henry, a senior in mechanical engineering technology from the island nation of St. Lucia, has had to overcome the death of his father when he was very young and the difficulties of adapting to living and competing in America to achieve his level of performance.

Henry said the death of his father was hard on his mother, Clive.

"It was really tough on mom because there were four of us, and she had to take care of us all," he said.

Henry said that his mother was very supportive of his competing in the United States.

"She was very supportive throughout," he said.

Henry says he keeps in touch with his family once a month, but he had some trouble when starting out here.

"I was pretty homesick at first, until I met some friends from back home in different colleges in the U.S.," he said. "I would keep in touch with them over the phone and they would tell me about everything that's changed at home."

Henry said support from his family and high school friends also helped him overcome his homesickness.

"I got a lot of support from my mother, my high school friends, and my older brother," he said.

He added that he has a good relationship with the others on the team.

Henry said that the biggest difference between his native culture and American culture is the advancement of technology and thinking.

"(America) is so developed and advanced in thinking," he said.

Henry said that he came to America because he would have the chance to gain an education on an athletic scholarship, and he came to SIUC because he knew there were other athletes from the Caribbean on the team.

Henry said his goals for the future include returning home to work in the power industry or in manufacturing.

When asked if he planned on competing in track after graduation, Henry said he will compete as long as he continues to improve.

Support from friends, family help Saluki sprinter adapt to competition in America

By Jeff McIntire
Sports Writer

Saluki sprinter Crystalla Constantinou has adapted to living and competing in America and has become one of SIUC's top sprinters through the support she has received from those close to her.

Constantinou, a senior in her culture from Nicosia, Cyprus, who has qualified provisionally for the NCAA's in the 100 meters and the 200 meters, first came to the United States four years ago to compete in track after hearing about SIUC from a friend.

"A friend of mine was recruited to come to this school, so I thought (SIUC) was the best place to combine academics with athletics," she said. "I knew that Don DeNoon was a good coach and that he helps international students a lot."

Constantinou said her family was supportive of her intentions to compete in America.

"They were there for me emotionally," she said. "They were the ones who told me to go for it."

Constantinou said she keeps in touch with her family at least once a week.

"I'm very close to my family. They support me a lot in track and field," she said.

Constantinou said that it was not easy adapting to competing in America, but the support of many people made it easier for her.

"It was very hard at the beginning to adjust to the coaching system and the competitions every weekend," she said.

"My coach, my boyfriend, and my parents have always supported me and pushed me," she said. "My teammates have always treated me as an equal and helped me adjust to competing in America."

She said that the biggest cultural difference between her native culture and American culture is in

Salukis ready for MVC title charge

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

Coming down the stretch, the SIUC softball team appears ready to make things happen in the Missouri Valley Conference when it takes on Indiana State in Carbondale on Friday.

The Salukis are 9-3 in the league and rank No. 2 in the MVC, behind preseason favorite Drake, which stands at the top of the standings with an 11-1 record.

Saluki head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said there is still a chance for the Salukis to come out on top.

"We will need to win our last six conference games in order to get a share of the title," she said. "Drake is playing with a lot of confidence right now, and they got the players to get the job done."

One of the first MVC opponents the Salukis will have to tackle in winding up play is Indiana State.

In a make-up doubleheader from an April 13 rainout, the two teams will get their rematch today, after SIUC took a game from ISU at the Western Illinois Tournament. The Salukis won 4-2, and gave the Sycamores a loss that cost them a share of the tourney title.

Brechtelsbauer said her team is ready to make a run in the MVC, and has played beyond her expectations this season.

"The entire year I think the difference in our team has been chemistry, because they get along well and enjoy the team's success as well as their own," she said. "They are hungry to win, and have been the most coachable team I

Valvano loses cancer battle

Zapnews

Former North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano lost his 10-month battle with bone cancer Wednesday morning.

The 47-year-old Valvano passed away at Duke University Medical Center, at about 10:45 a.m. (E). A sign that Valvano had taken a turn for the worse came last month, when he re-entered the medical center for a 10-day stay that ended April 3.

Valvano had been diagnosed with cancer last June, but it had already spread. The former coach said he knew from the outset that his chances were slim, and that he would "need a miracle" to live.

Valvano compiled a 195-101 record in nine years at North Carolina State. He led the Wolfpack to the 1983 NCAA title.

HOSTAGES HELD BY COSTA RICAN NATIONALS — A group of four gunmen holding more than 20 people hostage at Costa Rica's Supreme Court is headed by two Costa Rican nationals, contrary to earlier speculation, Security Minister Luis Fishman told newsmen Tuesday. He identified them as Guillermo and Gilberto Fallas and said their act had nothing to do with trying to free narcotics traffickers from jail but was "an ordinary criminal act." He suspected the other two members of the self-styled "death squad" also are Costa Ricans.

TAIWAN, CHINA BRIDGING RELATIONS GAP — Taiwan and China concluded unprecedented talks Wednesday with an agreement to sign four joint documents Thursday to bridge the gap in relations. A spokesman for the Taiwanese delegation said the talks broke down Thursday but they later agreed to continue talking and agreed to resolve the most contentious point — the urgent need for further discussion on the issue of protection of Taiwanese investments in China. Taiwan's investments in mainland China amount to more than $9 billion.

U.S. MISSION TO SOMALIA EFFECTIVELY ENDS — The U.S. military operation to end starvation and restore hope in Somalia effectively came to an end Wednesday, as the American forces turned over their last regional command to the United Nations. DE student leaders selected for news, advertising posts

By Tina Davis
General Assignment Writer

The Daily Egyptian has selected the student editors in chief, student advertising manager and student ad production manager for the 1993 summer and fall semesters.

Davies

Chris Davies, a junior in English from Springfield, was selected as student editor for the summer semester.

Carlock

Teri Lynn Carlock, a junior in journalism from Murphysboro, was selected for the fall semester.

Tinsley

To be selected as editor in chief, a student must have a 3.0 GPA in the major and a 2.5 overall and must have worked at the DE for a semester. Applicants also are interviewed formerly by the DE Policy and Review Board.

Wanda Brandon, faculty managing editor, said Davies and Carlock presented themselves a professional way before the board.

"They were knowledgeable and concerned about social issues," Brandon said. "I think they will both do an outstanding job."

Carlock said ever since she started at the DE her main goal was to one day become editor.

"It hasn't seemed that long, but I've been here for five semesters and now it's my turn to prove what I can do as editor," Carlock said.

In the future, Carlock said she plans to improve communication in the newsroom as well as quality of the newspaper.

"Our job is to communicate to the public, and the people on our staff need to talk and communicate with each other in order to do their job well," Carlock said. "So I'll concentrate on that area first."

Davies is the first African American editor in chief of the DE. "I'm proud to represent African Americans on this paper and I encourage more minorities to apply for the position on the DE staff," Davies said.

Brian Gross, student editor, said Carlock and Davies will provide strong leadership for the newspaper during the next year.

"They both have the determination and experience to continue the quality and tradition of the Daily Egyptian," he said.

Kelly Tinsley, a senior in speech communication from Carbondale, was selected as student ad manager for summer and fall.

Teri Hepperly, a senior in elementary education from Springfield, will be ad production manager.

To be selected for student ad manager, the student has to submit three letters of recommendation and schedule a formal interview with the advertising manager.

Sherri Allen, professional advertising manager, said Tinsley was the obvious choice.

"She's dedicated, she has sales expertise and she works well in customer service," Allen said.

Tinsley said her new job will be a great experience.

"I want to stay in the area of my major so I can build up my resume, and this job is to my advantage," Tinsley said.

Hepperly said she appreciates getting the job because she was selected even though it has nothing to do with her major.

"I just hope to learn as ad production manager and do as well as the other managers have," Hepperly said.

Student editor for summer '93 plans changes

By Tina Davis
General Assignment Writer

It is not unusual that Chris Davies was appointed student editor of the Daily Egyptian for his hard work and leadership. What is unique is that he is the first African-American hired for the job.

Davies, a junior in English from Springfield, will be editor this summer.

Walter B. Jaehnig, director of the School of Journalism, said Davies earned his position in his own right and not because of his color.

"He impressed the (DE policy and review) board with excellent answers and good ideas," Jaehnig said. "He was articulate in everything he said."

Wanda Brandon, faculty managing editor, said at the DE people from all backgrounds can advance based on their credentials.

Davies says he plans to make a few changes.

"I plan to open lines of communication with all minority organizations on campus to ensure that their concerns are equally important," Davies said.

"I am currently the investigating coordinator, and because of that I've gained interest in in-depth stories," he said. "I would like to bring in more in-depth coverage on campus issues such as minority relations and administration involvement in student affairs."

NAFTA must protect labor, environment

AS PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON RESUMES negotiations with Mexican officials about the North American Free Trade Agreement, he must reinforce his campaign stance to couple it with provisions that protect U.S. workers and the environment.

The pact if ratified, would eliminate almost all trade barriers between the United States, Canada and Mexico. In doing so, some of the most notable benefits are the expected boon to the U.S. economy and a greater trading status for Mexico.

These benefits, however, cannot be justified at the expense of an agreement that has no side agreements that will protect the exploitation of poor and uneducated Mexican workers, dislocate U.S. workers and contribute to pollution of the environment.

FROM A LABOR STANDPOINT, many big corporations stand to gain as they move south of the border for cheaper labor and lower production costs.

Not only would this result in the dislocation of U.S. workers but the exploitation of Mexican workers as U.S. manufacturers provide Mexican workers with minimal or no benefits in such areas as health care and pensions.

These companies would also profit by doing business in a nation where there are virtually no penalty or work-site safety regulations. Lack of these regulations would hurt both U.S. and Mexican workers.

U.S. workers that would be hit the hardest are those in the textile and apparel industries, makers of inexpensive glassware and the fruit and vegetable growers and producers.

NOT ONLY DOES NAFTA FAIL to provide adequate provisions for U.S. and Mexican workers as it caters to big businesses, but there are also environmental risks.

Because Mexico's lax environmental regulations contrast the more stringent U.S. regulations, U.S. plants will be operating under Mexico's lax environmental guidelines.

More pollutants will be a result in both countries for industrial pollutants do not stop at national borders.

Although Mexico has made much progress in regulating environmental standards, the United States must work to ensure that Mexico moves ahead in complying with basic environmental rules.

FOR NAFTA TO BE THE ECONOMIC boom that President Bush had envisioned when he introduced the proposal, negotiators must insist that there be compromises addressing these concerns.

Mexico must respect the rights of workers to a safe workplace and independent unions. A training assistance program for displaced workers should also be included to help those who have lost their jobs because of NAFTA.

In addition, humanitarian concerns demand that there be a safeguard against the exploitation of Mexican workers and environmental rules must be taken into account.

Congress must make sure these compromises are included because any of the economic benefits that could be derived from the agreement are overshadowed by the high costs to workers and the environment.

Worth it or not, USG elections always controversial, hassling

We made it through another Undergraduate Student Government election.

This was one way pretty tame compared to some others I've been through — gee, DE reporters have had breakdowns trying to straighten out some of these messes.

But reporting an election is nothing compared to having to edit it — this is serious business. One presidential candidate, Brad Cole, even received death threats.

At first Cole told me a USG election was not worth that kind of hassle. Later he came to his senses, though, and tried to persuade me not to run a story that could hurt his election chances — this was his life we were talking about.

The death threats also led Cole to turn in the name of a DE reporter, whom police called in for questioning. The police immediately knew the reporter's voice was not the same as the one making the threats. Maybe it was harder for Cole to know this because of the stress.

Here's a behind-the-scenes look at other interesting things that went on during the campaign and after the DE ran a story on Cole's transfer of $450 in student fees to reimburse him for travel expenses to Houston:

■ At the first USG "debate," Cole told a DE photographer not to take a picture of him, to use an official University photo instead.

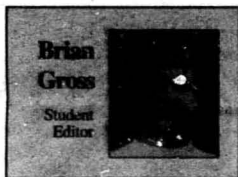

■ Cole came over to the DE two nights before the travel money story ran and looked over the front page flat. He said he wanted to see what the DE was going to say about him.

■ The Alliance Party asked to reprint the Gus Bode that ran with the story. The DE said no.

■ Cole accused the DE of conspiring with the Alliance Party to sabotage his campaign.

■ Cole expected a story before the election on the wonderful gift he was presenting to the University in the name of the Class of 1993. The gift was a sculpture, but no one could seem to explain to me if the class even wanted to give it as a gift. No one asked me.

■ The morning following a story on an investigation of Cole, a caller who refused to give his name said

Brian Gross
Student Editor

the story was biased and he would "take action" against the DE.

■ Anna Lundsteen, chairwoman of the USG Committee for Internal Affairs, and Petros Koutsopanagos paid me a visit to complain about the stories two days after the election. Something about that group scares me — the CIA.

■ After he lost the election, Cole returned a letter I sent him introducing myself as DE editor at the beginning of the spring. It was marked with constructive criticisms: "All things considered, I am very disappointed in the DE, and I feel that you, as editor, have let the student body down. I hope you can live with your decisions."

After calming down and realizing that Cole was not threatening my life, I realized that if the paper and the government are supposed to be natural adversaries, we are getting good experience. This was my fourth USG election, and they seem to get more fun each year.

Some other memorable elections: ■ In the spring of 1990, many incumbents lost, including the president. The night the USG senate was to ratify results, the new president was impeached. The judicial board eventually wiped out the election results because of campaign violations, and USG had a new election in the fall.

■ In the spring of 1992, the date of the election still was disputed as late as April, and USG had no election commissioner until the spring, even though the constitution calls for the appointment of a commissioner in October. The senate ignored it or forgot it, and it was left up to the president to pick someone to run the election.

I have to credit USG where it is due. An election commissioner was appointed on time this year and an election date was set on time.

Amazing — USG can follow its own constitution. Cole said he did more in his first months as president than the past three administrations. Yeah, well, he had a hard act to follow.

Before the 1992 election, Cole was charged with violating campaign spending limits (he went $200 over the $250 limit but said the money was spent on the party, not himself). Does Cole have some attraction to the number 450?

The election commission refused to let Cole run, but the administration stepped in to force Cole's return. No wonder Cole has such a good working relationship with the administration.

Cole won the election with 1,325 of 20,000 students voting. I still can't understand why more students weren't interested.

I hate to see Cole go. He had some really good ideas to improve the election process. Last fall, USG rewrote parts of its constitution, leaving more of the process open to interpretation by its leaders.

USG probably was just trying to make the rules a little easier to follow, perhaps because it had so much trouble following the rules in the past. I mean, those petty election rules can get on your nerves: limits on posters, no campaigning by the polling booths, spending limits.

Cole said the rules don't belong in the constitution because they result in petty violations. Good, get rid of the petty rules so we can get straight to violating the really big rules.

Cole didn't have to worry about such violations this year. USG simply raised the spending limits from $250 to $350.

Usually I wouldn't waste this much space on USG, and judging by how low voter turnout usually is, many others don't waste their time on USG either.

Don't cry for Cole. He's learned a lot here at SIUC and has a great career ahead of him as a politician.

He made an innocent mistake last year and made another one this year. But not even the administration could help him overcome the conspiracy against him: 1,800 students voted for the Alliance Party; 700 supported Cole.

Conservative anti-drug stance built an oppressive police state

In viewing the past decade people must wonder to where their fourth amendment rights have vanished.

These constitutional guarantees have been slashed and gutted to accommodate the past two administrations' drug war. They convinced the populace that the "scourge of drugs" was the real problem with this country. The machinery Reagan initiated and Bush built upon has as its basis the notion that drugs cause crime.

No data can support this claim, suggesting that the relationship is possibly related but not directly. It is no wonder where criminals are, drugs are found. When separate phenomena are grouped into a common category they cannot help but become intertwined.

When any substance in demand is prohibited, a lucrative black market will arise attracting less-than-respectable individuals.

Aside from these disjointed notions and premises, the drug war is counter-productive. These laws prosecute the young, experimental risk-takers and taint the lens through which these people are viewed.

Today, society's answer is to send offenders to prison where they are miserable but alive.

To accommodate increasing drug arrests, courts are working nights, prisons are being erected, more tax dollars diverted, and in turn more career criminals created. To accomplish this civil war, law enforcement has seen the restraints governing its procedures on fourth amendment rights substantially lifted.

Legislators need to question why smoking marijuana is criminal when consuming coffee, tobacco or alcohol is legal. The next years are going to be crucial. It is time for new answers and radical change.

First, legislation should be enacted that would let law enforcement get back to serving and protecting rather than seizing and persecuting.

In addition, it is time to question the unproductiveness of these laws or any laws for that matter that unhandcuff the police. The ultra-conservatives have used anti-drug legislation to build an oppressive police state. — Jon P. Soderstrom, senior, administration of justice

Coverage of abortions unfair to most students

The administration, the USG, and the GPSC have decided to raise our insurance fees.

This, on top of recent housing and tuition increases, makes Joseph Yusko, University risk manager, sound very removed from us students when he tells us "What's $20..."

He puts partial blame for the increase in claims on the Pyramid Apartment fires.

Since that was a freak occurrence, will fees go down next year?

Well, how can we decrease the number of claims to prevent any further fee increases?

It would be difficult to prevent things like the fire, but those things don't occur often. (A credible insurance company would be prepared for such incidences.)

How about getting rid of any elective procedures covered by our insurance. There's only one, abortion, but if it were gone certainly claims would decrease.

Why was abortion even added if the number of claims had already increased due to the fire?

Wasn't a fee increase foreseeable? Or did abortion claims force that on?

Abortion coverage forces: 1.) those students morally opposed to abortion to now fund it;

2.) all students to now pay for an elective procedure (Why not vasectomies, sex changes, or other plastic surgeries?);

3.) all students to now pay for the irresponsibility of others.

This is why several of us have decided to request that the University offer an insurance plan that excludes all elective procedures.

We need your support to show the administration we mean business.

Outside companies are already willing to deal with us.

If you are interested in abortion-neutral insurance, please call 529-2261.

The bigger the response, the more convincing to the administration. — Anthony Grahame, graduate student, biological sciences

President should remove self as an obstacle for radio station

WIDB was given seven standards last year to meet in order to become an over-the-air station, and they met them.

So what's the problem? His name is John C. Guyon, our university president. The final decision is his whether WIDB goes over the public airwaves.

All legal strings are tied down and WIDB is ready to go, but Guyon isn't. He doesn't want to upset WPSD-TV in Paducah, Ky., about a signal disturbance. What signal disturbance? WIDB is within all FCC regulations. He also doesn't want to upset WCIL Radio in Carbondale.

Whose side is he on? I thought he was SIUC's president. He is supposed to be for the students, just like WIDB is for the students.

Allowing WIDB to go on the air would provide a real world opportunity for the students. If other universities can have an over-the-air station run by students, why can't SIUC? Money, FCC regulations, and community support are not the questions here.

Dr. Guyon, give WIDB the OK because you're the only obstacle in the way of providing one hell of an opportunity for your students. WIDB did, and is continuing to do, its job.

It's time for you, John C. Guyon, to give them a break and support your own university. — Michael J. Carver, junior, radio and television

Quotas not necessary for society

I'm writing to say NAY to the editor's commentary regarding "more black managers in baseball".

Why should there be quotas in sports or anything else? Minorities make up over 70 percent of baseball, football, and basketball players. So are they victims anymore?

So what reasoning do we employ demanding the front office, managers, etc. be black? First of all, isn't it an insult to the intelligence and talent of minorities to think they can't make it on their own?

Why are there all those hiring quotas, and whole departments — such as the Minority Engineering Program — devoted to minorities?

Couldn't the money be used to help all Americans in their math or science, so they could excel in technical programs? Isn't it unAmerican to fund Seymour Bryson's salary for just the benefit of one race?

There would be a shock-wave on campus if our Director of Affirmative Action announced a mandatory emergency program training white kids to excel at basketball to end the embarrassing racial imbalance. Yet this is what we are doing in academia.

Now we have Roland Burris screaming for multiculturalism classes (what is that really?) and Mr. Bryson adding his voice.

They are opportunists who are interested in social engineering. They have no business indoctrinating students.

We do not need quotas or social classes. We need the funding that would be saved and maybe there would be a topnotch debate team again. And maybe the culture of victimhood would end and we could think of ourselves as Americans again. — L. Yousef, Carbondale

Reno criticized for deaths

Zapnews

The House Judiciary Committee opened hearings Wednesday into the 31-day standoff in Waco, Texas that led to the deaths of more than 80 people at the Branch Davidian compound.

In her opening statement, Attorney General Janet Reno said after weeks of deliberations with FBI officials, she concluded that cult leader David Koresh would never surrender voluntarily. And Reno said she thought the passage of time "had increased the likelihood of incidents" that could endanger children in the compound.

Michigan congressman John Conyers engaged in a heated exchange with Reno during the morning session. Conyers was highly critical of Reno's decision to approve an effort by federal agents to bring the Waco standoff to a conclusion. Conyers accused Reno of not answering his questions, and Reno insisted that she had—and invited the Michigan Democrat to meet with her at her office to discuss his concerns. Conyers accepted the offer.

Koresh and an estimated 85 of his disciples are believed to have died in a fire that broke out hours after the FBI began using tear gas in an attempt to force their surrender.

Analysts criticize policy decisions of first 100 days

The Washington Post

Bill Clinton had been president for just a few days when he stood in the middle of the Oval Office, telling two longtime aides about the desk he had chosen and the famous Childe Hassam "Flag Day" painting he had selected to hang on one wall.

He was 46 years old and the 42nd president of the United States, the goal of a lifetime realized with his inauguration on the steps of the U.S. Capitol. "Can you believe this?" he suddenly declared, then threw back his head and laughed with delight.

Now, it is nearly 100 days later. In that time, a critical defining period for his presidency—Clinton has been breathlessly busy, plunging into the most ambitious agenda of any president since Lyndon Johnson.

The former Arkansas governor has proposed to reverse the nation's spending priorities after 12 years of Republican rule from defense programs to domestic ones. He wants to raise income taxes on the well-to-do and energy taxes on everyone. He has lifted federal restrictions on abortion. He has vowed to sign the biodiversity treaty President Bush rejected last year. He plans to submit legislation soon to change the way college educations can be paid for and federal campaigns can be financed. While downplaying foreign affairs, he has pledged to help rebuild the shattered Russian economy as well as the American one. Next month, he promises to deliver a proposal to overhaul the nation's health-care system.

He has done all this with a style never before seen in the White House.

Yet the nation's first baby boomer president surely must be approaching the traditional 100-days' marker with the feeling that he is aging fast. While there has been promise in his first few months in office, there also have been problems and peril.

What they saw as White House hubris has united Senate Republicans, who last week scuttled the stimulus package Clinton had called a pillar of his economic program; the Republicans promise death-by-filibuster for campaign finance and other presidential proposals ahead. Clinton's attempt to lift the ban on homosexuals in the military has contributed to serious strains with the Pentagon for the new commander-in-chief. He has abandoned a series of campaign promises—to enact a middle-class tax cut, to reduce the deficit by half, to ease restrictions on Haitian refugees, to protect Bosnians from Serb aggression—and raised questions about whether he is too quick to cut a deal.

Police Blotter

SIUC Police who arrested two students on alcohol related charges Monday found one suspect already was being sought for arrest.

Police arrested Jermaine C. Gray, 18, and Melvin Owusu, 18, both residents of Mae Smith Hall, at 10:42 p.m. Monday on charges of underage possession of alcohol.

A background check found that Gray was wanted on a Williamson County warrant for failing to appear in Williamson County Court.

Gray was taken to Jackson County Jail, and Owusu was released on his own recognizance and given a court date of May 10.

SIUC Police arrested a University employee Monday for allegedly stealing several items of audio-visual equipment from Morris Library.

Police arrested Richard King, 30, of Dewell, after King allegedly took a camcorder, a battery pack, a tripod and two VCRs from Morris Library.

King was charged with theft of more than $300 and released on his own recognizance. A court date has been set for King on May 17.

AIDS virus was explored because monkey viruses, such as Simian Immunodeficiency Virus, were present in the polio vaccine.

A 1992 Rolling Stone magazine article publicized the theory, and public interest prompted the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology in Philadelphia to conduct an investigation into its validity.

In a October 1992 press release from the institute, an independent advisory committee of scientists announced "the chance of a connection to be unlikely, but not impossible.

The committee was established last April and began to study the 35-year-old polio vaccine developed by Hilary Koprowski, which was used in an experimental manner in the 1950s in the area formerly known as the Belgian Congo in Africa, what is today Zaire. The vaccine was administered through a mouth spray.

"In my opinion the possibility of a connection between the polio vaccine and the AIDS virus was not looked at close enough," said Beasley, who has specialized DNA genetics. "It would be relatively easy to look the medical records of the people who received the original vaccine."

The committee chose to take a route different from the one mentioned by Beasley. They reviewed the probability of successful transmission in each step of the theory but did not examine the medical records of vaccine recipients.

From this review several conclusions were reached:

- the possible presence of SIV or related particles in the vaccine could not be discounted, but was probably extremely low;
- the chance of oral transmission resulting in HIV infection is rare;
- a retrovirus similar to HIV-1 has never been identified in monkeys and the possible evolution of SIV to HIV-1 would be a process measurable in decades or centuries.

In response to these findings Caster said the investigation was accurate but did not rule out the possibility of a connection between monkey viruses and HIV infection.

"As far as I know no one has shown infection by swallowing, there have been a few cases of transmission of HIV through oral sex," he said.

"SIV and HIV-1 are not closely related. The ability to prove a negative connection is small if not impossible all you can say is that it is highly unlikely."

Beasley said researchers have found monkey viruses that mimic T-cell leukemia and HIV-2 and the probability of finding a virus similar to HIV-1 is high.

"In the research I have done you can gather human DNA and DNA from monkeys and find they are closely related 99 percent of the time," Beasley said. "In fact unless you do very specific tests you can hardly tell them apart."

If the committee found the connection to be unlikely the question remains-why did Koprowski send a letter in 1961 to the House Health and Safety Subcommittee claiming possible complications in the use of monkey kidneys to culture the polio vaccine.

Barbara Neuby, of the SIUC political science department, said like any profession, doctors cover for each other's mistakes.

"To find certain commonsensical procedures were not followed and to find existing evidence that may prove foul-play points a finger of blame and intent," she said. "Under the law this is liability they may have to defend themselves in court about what they may or may not have done."

Tom Curtis reported in the article in "Rolling Stone" Koprowski's polio vaccine was not the only one grown in monkey kidneys.

Jonas Salk, whose polio vaccine was licensed in the United States in 1961, also used monkey kidneys to create his vaccination.

In 1991 several strains of SIV are determined to have characteristics similar to HIV-2. The HIV-2 virus is common in West Africa.

"It is almost impossible to examine every monkey virus to see if similarities to HIV-1 exist," Caster said. "In my opinion the reasoning for proving this hypothesis is to place blame.

"I don't know what can be gained from proving or disproving this theory other than learning more about the origin," he said. "That may be beneficial in the long run but we have to ask ourselves if more important questions can be answered with the time and money spent on this research."

Beasley said valuable insight into the AIDS virus could be obtained by conducting this type of study.

"In my opinion nothing can be concluded without conducting research," he said. "If we learn more about the AIDS virus we may be able to deal with it on a different level."

Faster transportation is not the only purpose of the train, she said. The trains are designed to give trains better competition with air and highway travel.

The high-speed corridor plan is similar to a train system already in use in France, Schiebel said. The train system through France runs 185 mph, and the Illinois system is expected to run 125 mph.

Schiebel said because of the speed of the train, safety is a major key in the study and although the same tracks used for trains are expected to be used, overpasses may have to be created to eliminate the chance for collision.

Schiebel said if the program works, the existing trains would have include the high-speed trains in their schedules.

The Illinois corridor was designated under 1991 legislation authorized by Simon that was added to the 1991 highway bill directing DOT to designate up to five high-speed rail corridors nationwide.

'Brady Bunch' actor spinning in '70s time warp

By Andy Graham
Entertainment Writer

Like Jerry Mathers, who portrayed the "Beaver" on the 1960s television series "Leave It To Beaver," many actors struggle against being typecast into specific roles that they may never outlive.

But Barry Williams, who played Greg on "The Brady Bunch," is one actor who is trying to keep his typecast image alive.

A performance based on hype, total irrelevance and curiosity, Williams covered much ground without any conviction Tuesday night when he spoke to a sold-out crowd in the Student Center Ballrooms.

Williams was welcomed enthusiastically to the stage by 1,000 yelling "Brady Bunch" fans, while music from the series played on the P.A.

Full of charisma and at times arrogance, Williams entertained the large crowd, occasionally pulling out an unknown fact and manipulating it with a bad joke.

Williams began his speech by

Williams

supposedly setting the record straight, "I am Barry Williams, not Greg Brady."

This was met with uncertainty from the crowd, who continued to yell "Greg" after this announcement.

The digging up of Brady dirt began immediately, Williams spoke of his relationships with various cast members and the relationships between other members of the cast.

Williams' first order of business was talking about his alleged relationship with Florence Henderson, who played his mother on the show. "Florence Henderson and I only had sex once," he said. "Unfortunately, she was not actually there at the time."

He was more sincere when documenting his relationship with Maureen McCormick, who played Marsha.

He called the relationship, a typical teen-age Hollywood romance, shaky at best.

"The Brady Bunch" was an innovative television series for its time period.

Williams said the series was the first to deal with a blended family, a second marriage family with step-children.

Other ground-breaking features of the show included allowing the parents to share a bed and that the cast actually sang the theme song.

A large portion of the show was devoted to talking about the musical aspect of the "The Brady Bunch," and all of the different musical projects the cast was involved in.

Barry Williams, who played Greg Brady on 'groovy' Brady choreography secrets. Williams talked to a sold-out audience in the shows about 1,000 SIUC students some Student Center Ballrooms Tuesday evening.

Fully clad in hippy garb consisting of a long, fringed coat, plaid bell-bottoms, a butterfly collared shirt and sunglasses, Williams re-emerged on the stage after a brief recess to teach audience member the secrets to "Brady" choreography.

Audience members swarmed the stage to participate in the lesson.

Following his speech, Williams signed autographs on posters and copies of his book, "Growing Up Brady: I Was A Teen-Age Greg" for over an hour.

Pink Floyd celebrates 20 years of 'Dark Side'

The Washington Post

It was 20 years ago that Pink Floyd's "Dark Side of the Moon" went to No. 1 on the Billboard album chart. It stayed there only a week.

"I thought it was a good record," recalls Roger Waters, the British band's songwriter and bassist. "It happened to strike a certain chord at a certain time with lots of people."

Still, Waters and Pink Floyd had no particular commercial expectations for "Dark Side of the Moon," based on the fact that none of their seven previous albums had so much as dented the Top 40 in the United States. "We'd have danced naked around the Lincoln Memorial if we'd thought it would sell records," Waters says. And that was not in Capitol's marketing plan, because there was no marketing plan.

This album did not need one. Though its stay at the top was brief, "Dark Side" hung around on the Top 200 chart for a while longer — well, actually, for 724 consecutive weeks (740 weeks altogether). It did not drop off until July 13, 1988.

That 14-year stretch is considered one of pop music's untouchable records (the next longest run: Johnny Mathis's Greatest Hits" at 490 weeks).

While "Dark Side of the Moon" was charting, disco, punk and new wave all came and went. As did Waters, who left Pink Floyd in 1983, later sued the other members to keep them from using the name Pink Floyd, and remains harshly critical of their subsequent work.

Now Capitol has released a limited-edition commemorative edition of "Dark Side" — in a box, containing a newly remastered holographic picture CD, a color booklet and postcards. "Dark Side of the Moon" was released on March 31, 1973, its first notes striking that certain chord actually bouncing back and forth between an E minor and A major on "Breathe In the Air." As Waters puts it, "it's gone on striking chords with people." It's become something of a rite of passage for generations of rock fans, and it still sells more than 1 million copies every year.

Before "Dark Side," the band still operated in the shadow of singer-writer Syd Barrett — who, along with Waters, keyboardist Rick Wright and drummer Nick Mason, was a student at Cambridge University, where Pink Floyd coalesced in the mid-'60s. (The band took its name from two American blues singers, Pink Anderson and Floyd Council.) With their electronic rock and mind-expanding light shows, Pink Floyd became the darling of the London underground, but Barrett lost his mind to drugs and left in 1968, replaced by guitarist-singer David Gilmour.

Recorded at Abbey Road Studios, the album came together over a nine-month period, and as it developed, "it sounded special," Waters recalls.

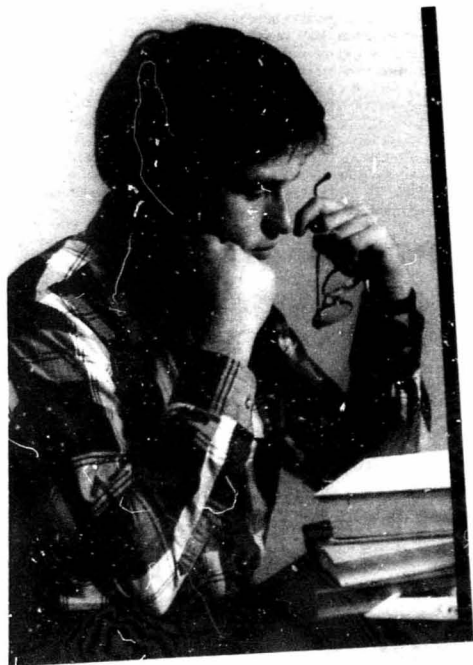

The album's only Grammy went to Alan Parsons for "Best Engineered Album of 1973"; it launched his own recording career with the Alan Parsons Project.

It looked good too, with its now-famous cover, by the Hipgnosis design firm, showing white light refracting into a rainbow prism, homage to the old light shows (it made Rolling Stone's list of the 100 greatest album covers of all time).

There also was a downside to "Dark Side." Though its records had never sold particularly well, Pink Floyd had built a loyal cult following through its mind-bending performances, which attracted reverential audiences. But with the success of "Dark Side," the audience changed in character. Instead of listening, it began demanding the group's first and only hit single, "Money."

"That's why after 1977 I refused to play stadiums," says Waters, "because the larger the audience, the whole thing becomes more about commerce and less about communication, music, human feelings and values."

Seniors enjoy golden years with high levels of intimacy

Newsday

Years ago, the common belief was that older adults would spend most of their golden years in rocking chairs. Today, thought has it that they are more likely to be spending that time of life in bed — and not just sleeping.

As older adults live longer, exercise more and eat better, they also are experiencing a heightened level of sexual activity. A new national survey, "The Janus Report on Sexual Behavior" polled 3,260 adults and found that among people 65 or older, 53 percent of the men and 41 percent of the women reported that they were having a "reasonably active" sex life.

In interviews, the respondents also said, in some ways, the experience was more gratifying than when they were younger because lovemaking is less hurried, there is no worry about pregnancy and, after years of marriage, they found greater intimacy with their partners.

Lovemaking may occur only once a week now, says the report, "but the desire and ability to have satisfying sex remain an important element of (the couples') life together."

Indeed, experts say if you have always enjoyed sex, there is no reason to stop once you are in your 60s, 70s or 80s. "Certain stereotypes of aging remain strong, and the disappearance of sexuality is one of them," says Dr. Gene Cohen, acting director of the National Institute on Aging, in Gaithersburg, Md. "But it's a myth. Aging itself does not explain a significant change in sexual behavior."

According to doctors, older adults can experience both diminishing sexual interest and sexual response. But physiological changes due to aging (such as the inability to attain an erection, inability to achieve orgasm, vaginal dryness), can be successfully treated with medication.

an impression on the team and getting on its developmental squad.

"Yonel's abilities are so diverse because he can catch and run with the ball well, while also being able to block and return kicks," he said. "He's got good strength and speed and the ability to learn the system."

Jourdain said he won't know until after he attends camp what the Bills will decide, but knows that it is a long process and he can be cut at any time.

Gabbert, who reports to his camp with the Browns over the same time period as Jourdain, said he is excited about the opportunity to play with the pros.

"I'll go up there for physicals and some practice, and then I get to go home and wait for them to tell me when I can come back," he said.

Gabbert is going as a quarterback to a team whose quarterbacks are Bernie Kosar and Vinnie Testeverde.

Gabbert said he is going to make the best of his chances, and he knows what he is up against.

"I think as a rookie quarterback, you just have to go in there and learn what you can," he said. "They have three quarterbacks coming back, but I think I could make the third spot, or possibly have them keep a fourth."

Smith said Gabbert's chances should not be counted out.

"He's got Kosar and Testeverde in front of him, but Scott may surprise a lot of people," he said.

Gabbert passed for 2,463 yards in his senior season, which is more than any quarterback in SIUC history, and holds career records in completion percentage at 55.9 and touchdowns with 37.

have had because they are all eager to learn."

The Salukis will make a quick trip to play St. Louis University in a doubleheader today.

The Billikens are 11-19 this season, and have won six of their last 10 games, while hitting .208 this season.

Junior shortstop/pitcher Mikki McPherson posts a .422 batting average for SLU with 27 hits and five doubles, while compiling a 9-5 record on the mound with 29 strikeouts in 99 innings.

Senior hurler Angie Mick leads SIUC with 12 wins and 58 strikeouts, and senior leftfielder Karrie Irvin has had the hot bat with a .462 batting average that ranks her No.10 in NCAA Division I batting.

Irvin has hit safely in 19 of her last 24 starts.

SIUC leads the series with SLU 6-1 going into today's games, which start at 3 p.m.

by creation of a presidential commission to study whether women should be allowed in combat roles.

The commission recommended last fall that women should be allowed to serve on most Navy warships but not in combat aviation roles, a compromise position that infuriated advocates of expanded military opportunities for women.

Aspin supported the 1991 legislation and in that respect his decision to lift the combat aviation ban follows directly from his earlier positions.

But officials said he was motivated to act now because of confusion over inconsistent policies in the Air Force and Navy with regard to women in combat and because the Clinton administration is eager to move on from the controversy over lifting the ban on gays in the military.

"It gets you away from worrying about homosexuals," said an Air Force official familiar with the plan.

The official said that "I don't think (giving women combat roles is) controversial at all. I think its time has come."

blood and perform post-counseling session where we reveal the results to them."

Physicians and nurses at SIUC Health Services have recently taken the examination to determine whether they are qualified to perform the pre- and post-counseling required by the state before drawing blood for an HIV test.

"The student health insurance does not have a preventive mode to allow informational HIV testing," said Jake Baggott, director of SIUC student health insurance. "Currently students must go to a physician at Health Services and talk to them about their concerns regarding HIV."

"The physician will classify them either as at risk or not at risk," he said. "If they are thought to be at risk they will be referred for HIV testing."

Baggott said students will have to pay the $5 visit fee but the testing will not have a charge.

Both Baggott and Pohlman said students who wish to have HIV testing done as an informational measure will be referred to Jackson County Health Department, where testing is done free of charge.

Many students who do not have transportation cannot get to Jackson County Health Department.

"I think Health Services should provide services students are interested in," said Jennifer Blankenship a senior in university studies. "HIV is a big issue for all students and it seems inconvenient to go to Jackson County Health Department to have a test."

"If I think I am at risk I don't think it should be for a doctor to decide," she said. "I don't have a car and it isn't easy to ask people for rides."

Terry Fischer, a senior in advanced technical studies and a member of Gays Lesbians Bisexuals and Friends, said a service on campus would be helpful.

"Not being able to get the test at Health Services has prevented me from getting it so far," he said. "If I could get the test done on campus with the same confidentiality as at the Jackson County Health Department I would have done it already."

"I do not have a car, and besides, I have heard that you practically have to prove you are at risk to get a test at the Jackson County Health Department," he said. "I know someone who went there to get one and he had to go through a lot of circles and finally admit he was high risk."

Kevin Rathert, a graduate student in political science, said he went to the Jackson County Health Department to receive HIV testing and met with little resistance.

"All I did was to go in and ask for an STD screening which includes HIV testing," he said. "It wasn't too inconvenient, but that was one year ago. They did everything by number so it was anonymous."

Steve Edfors of the SIUC Wellness Center said anonymity is important to anyone who wants HIV testing.

"Anonymity is one of the safety nets of testing," he said. "The fear of bad consequences has reduced but not disappeared."

Edfors said the possibilities of losing a job, being kicked out of an apartment or getting dropped from an insurance policy are real.

"A problem with anonymity is the chance of people getting tested and finding they are negative and going out and practicing unsafe behavior," he said. "In turn they will get retested. This is an abuse of the system."

Edfors said he is unsure how to eliminate this type of abuse, but believes continued AIDS education will help increase understanding.

Brad Cole, Undergraduate Student President, said he doubts anyone will be refused from being tested at Health Services.

"If somebody wants a test the doctor will most likely allow it," he said. "This procedure seems to be a formality."

family values. "I think Greeks are more family oriented than Americans," she said.

Nacolia Moore, one of Constantinou's closest friends, said Constantinou is dedicated and a good friend.

"She's very dedicated and she gets the job done. I'll miss her a lot when she goes back to Cyprus, but hopefully we'll both be here next year to train and spend time together," Moore said.

"She's the best friend anyone can have. She has her priorities straight both on the track and in the classroom."

Constantinou goes home every summer to compete for the Cypriot National Team, and she gets to compete with many of the same athletes every year.

"I really enjoy competing at home. It's a lot of fun," she said.

DeNoon said that Constantinou has been SIUC's top sprinter for four years now and that she has the potential to be one of the Salukis' most prominent conference athletes.

"She's been a good example for other athletes to follow and a good student," DeNoon said. "She has a lot of talent and she's very dedicated."

Constantinou said her goals for the future include helping the team whenever she can while working on her master's degree in horticulture, and then returning home to open a gardening center.
