U.S. troops invade Granada

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — Hundreds of U.S. Marines and paratroopers invaded the island of Grenada in a lightning air assault Tuesday, under orders to protect American residents and "restore democracy" in the tiny island nation.

Two American military men were killed in the invasion, according to U.S. officials. The sources said 25-30 of the number of Americans wounded.

President Reagan called the swift operation "a success" in its initial stages. But armed Grenadian resistance continued through the day, and casualties were high.

Sen. Charles Percy said President Reagan made the right move by sending the troops to Grenada, but U.S. Rep. Paul Simon said he feared the move might not be successful. "It's a judgment about the invasion," he said.

The invasion began at 3:00 a.m. EDT. U.S. authorities said 1,000 American soldiers were in Grenada Wednesday morning. There were seen at around the Point Salines airport. Thirty Soviet advisers and 600 Cubans were captured in the invasion, U.S. officials said. There was no immediate word of any 1,200-member Grenadian armed forces.

Reagan said the 1,900 Marines and Army Ranger paratroopers, who were later backed up by 300 troops from six Caribbean islands, seized the two main airports on the mountainous, 21-mile-long island.

Many students who make up the majority of the estimated 1,000 Americans who were reported unharmed, although pinned down by the continuing fighting.

U.S. forces had circled the St. George's Medical College, apparently drawing fire from Grenadian snipers. American student Mark Carpenter reported by ham radio.

"Shoot on sight" was the order given over the radio. "There's fire all around them," Carpenter said in a broadcast monitored by The Associated Press.

The invasion, coming just two days after a deadly bomb attack on Marines in Lebanon, stirred new unease about foreign U.S. military operations among some in Washington, particularly Democrat congressmen.

The Soviet Union demanded that U.S. forces withdraw immediately from Grenada. The British government expressed reservations about the attack. And medical school officials and another American ham operator on the island insisted U.S. citizens had been in no danger from Grenada's new authorities.

The resort island has been under Marxist sway since a coup in 1979. But the new government has been under pressure to achieve a "successful" peace plan. The new "Revolutionary Military Council" was headed by Gen. Hudson Austin.

The U.S. administration said the island, 1,500 miles southeast of Miami, posed a strategic threat to the United States because Soviet diesel aircraft might eventually use the airport at Point Salines as a launching pad for missiles being extended by a Cuban work force.

Reagan, appearing at a White House news conference, said the joint operation had been mounted at the request Sunday of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States. But a senior State Department official in Washington, who declined to be identified, said decision to invade was made in the "middle of last week."

Troops from the islands of Jamaica, Barbados, Dominica, St. Vincent, Antigua and St. Lucia took part in the assault. Reagan said:

Hazardous waste dump hearing set

By Karen Terry

Two committees of a task force formed to address the problem of hazardous waste will hold public hearings Wednesday in Student Center Ballroom A.

The administrative process and enforcement committees will hear testimony by representatives of the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency, the Illinois Department of Natural Resources, the Illinois Farm Bureau, and other industries related to hazardous waste.

The public will be invited to comment on the hearings.

The task force has studied one aspect of hazardous waste management, including transboundary waste import, awareness, economics, land disposal, and in situ waste recovery.

The goals of the task force are to develop state policies for the handling of hazardous waste, Owen said. The committees meeting in the Student Center this week will then discuss ways to improve administration and enforcement of polices. The only one held in Southern Illinois, Owen said.

Marines told to 'shoot to kill'

BEIRUT (AP) — U.S. Marines said to have been bunched Tuesday and told to "shoot to kill" those who approached after three trucks that officials feared might be filled with explosives drove nearby.

The Pentagon said the death toll reached 150, with 1,900 Marines killed in the bombing at a French command seconds after the attack on the American consulate in Vietnam. The force had been sent to protect Americans in the region.

"We are part of a multinational force that arrived in Beirut 13 months ago to help the Lebanese government restore order in the war-torn country," said Col. Timothy Geraghty, a Marine command representative in Beirut.

About 300 Marine troops arrived at the camp to replace their fallen comrades and the Marine commandant, Gen. Paul X. Kelley, arrived in Lebanon to inspect the scene of the attack.

Kelley said he thought the attack was aimed at the military rather than the civilians, "but the agencies involved in the investigation thought it had been aimed at the Marines."
Anguished families get news of Beirut Marine casualties

By the Associated Press

Uniformed officers brought "traumatic" to the doors of more Americans on Tuesday as they delivered news of Marines killed in Lebanon. But many relatives waited for a third day without word of their servicemen.

Although the delay from Sunday's terrorist attack on the U.S. garrison at the Beirut airport rose past 200, only a fraction of the families had been publicly identified and friends and family of the rest could only wait and pray.

Military officials said identifying the bodies in the mangled barracks building was slow and tedious, partly because many weren't wearing dog tags on the weekend and many records were destroyed in the blast.

But many families got the news they didn't want to hear. Shortly after noon, Tuesday, two Marines appeared at the Burlington, N.C., home of Pvt. Johnny Copeland, who had left for Beirut last May on his 18th birthday.

"We're just so emotionally upset right now we can't think," said the victim's father, Donald Copeland.

"Are you here because my son is dead?" San Pedro asked. When the Marine nodded, acknowledging that Lance Cpl. Guillermo San Pedro Jr. had died, the father screamed as his wife, Edilia, cried and held their two younger sons.

Orlando and Jonice Valore of Sicklivel, Pa., awaited word on their two Marine Corps sons - one who was wounded in Beirut and the other who may be fighting in Grenada.

They were told that Pvt. Terrance Valore, 22, was hospitalized with extensive injuries after a Marine was injured by a car bomb recently in Grenada. The second Marine, Mike Valore, 35, was assigned to the task force reportedly involved in Grenada.

In tiny Machias, Maine, Eliza Kilbourn was told her son, David, 20, was injured in the Beirut and she awaited word on whether he was hospitalized. But last month, the government said he was made out alive. The messengers who told her about David's broken ribs and cuts didn't know she had two sons in Beirut, she said.

For hundreds of other families there was still hope, even clouded by fear.

"I get so nervous when the telephone rings, wondering what I'm going to hear," said Michelle Calvert in Wichita, Kans., who was awaiting word on her husband.

Meanwhile, the count of the dead in Sunday's explosion at the Marine headquarters rose to 241. The bodies of 197 already were undergoing processing and identification in Frankfurt, Germany. They will be flown to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware but no date has been set.

Secretary of State George Shultz told a news conference that security in Beirut was no less strict, because the Marines were on an operating airfield.

"Naturally you make decisions that involve some sort of balance between security risks on one hand and what it takes for an aircraft to operate on the other," Shultz said. "I think that certainly in the light of this terrible tragedy that situation has been emphasized on security will have to be heightened very significantly."

The secretary's news conference also came after American landings on the Beirut airport in the biggest increase since May, the government reported Tuesday. However, inflation for the first three quarters of the year was still at the slowest pace in a decade.

Both private and government economists said the recent pickup in prices was no cause for alarm. But White House spokesman Larry Speakes injected a note of caution.

Try jumping off a mountain.

Rappelling - descending a precipice by rope and the seat of your pants. It's the fastest way down. Except for free fall.

Army ROTC students learn to lead. To manage people and handle equipment. Then, as active Army or Reserve officers, they take on more instant responsibility than is available in most other jobs right out of college.

If you're looking for the challenge of leadership, in college and after, look into Army ROTC. Besides, we might let you be the first to jump.
Elimination of 66 classes expected

By Phillip Fiorini

Despite opposition, the elimination of more than half of the courses in the General Studies program is expected to go into effect as recommended by a report from the General Studies Advisory Council.

Larry McDougle, council chairman, said he doesn't envision "much of a change" from the original recommendation released last month calling for the elimination of 66 of the 120 courses in the five subject areas.

"The ultimate goal is coming to a workable consensus so the departments are satisfied and the goals of the council are met," said McDougle.

McDougle said the council is now meeting only with departments where the report recommends a new course within the department to replace an eliminated course in General Studies. Suggestions were made that courses be dropped, but he said the council doesn't object to having some courses taught as departmental courses.

Departments opposing the recommendations have argued that their faculty feel what they're doing with General Studies courses is important, McDougle said. He added that "futility shouldn't apologize for this."

But the council had to ask how much math and English the University should be requiring, he said. He said the English Department perceived a reduction in the emphasis placed on writing skills in General Studies.

Despite some differences in opinion, the council is expected to have its final report to provide enough time to get changes into the 1985 undergraduate catalog. Leonard Shepard, associate vice president for academic affairs, will review that report.

The council was careful not to jeopardize the agreement SIU-C has with Illinois community colleges, he said. Any junior college transfer with an associate degree automatically meets the University's General Studies requirements.

The council also refrained from tampering with the University's Capstone Program, which pertains to students who have completed an occupational or technical associate degree. Here, the number of hours required is reduced from 45 to 30 allowing students to finish their studies in two years.

McDougle said there is a national trend "swinging back to the basics" in terms of providing a curriculum of courses emphasizing what "university education is all about."

"University people realize something must be done to strengthen our program. Most are supportive of the concept."

Both Dixon and Percy stressed that the invasion is not American unilateral action and is being carried out at the request of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and the governments of Jamaica and Barbados.

Percy's press aid, Alan Safrin, said the senator flew to Washington, D.C., early this morning at the request of the president. Percy and the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee met with Shultz and Wurzburger Monday afternoon to further study the situation, Safrin said.

"There have been three vehicles spotted driving around the area. There are suspicions that they could contain explosives," said Marine Capt. Wayne Jones. Officials gave no further information about the trucks, but the Marines remained on alert throughout the day.

Another marine spokesman, Maj. Robert Jordan, said anyone approaching the gate to the camp would be shot. "Anyone who comes up there is going to be dead," Jordan told reporters. "It will be a shoot-to-kill situation."

Marine guards took over the front line of battle in the British Embassy, crouching with guns leveled at those who ventured nearby. The U.S. Embassy has had temporary clientele since terrorists blew up a the American Embassy April 18, killing 17 Americans and 22 others.

John Stewart said the "extra precautions" were ordered because "of a warning of a potential threat... Some sort of indirect, indefinite threat received by somebody from somebody."

An anonymous bomb threat was also phoned to Beirut International Airport Tuesday morning. But a 10 a.m. deadline passed with no explosion and airport officials, used to frequent bomb threats, did not close the terminal.

The primary reason for the invasion, Reagan said, was to protect approximately 1,000 Americans stranded on the island following a coup last week in which one leftist government was replaced by another from farther to the left.

Notice the similarity between this situation and the hostage drama in Iran. Americans are trapped following a change in regime in Grenada before the Reagan administration had reason to believe that destabilizing elements were in the area.

It is en vee ol, to allow that kind of bloodshed to occur again.

The lesson of Iran was ignored. Now the United States is en­ tangle able to its vital long-term interests in the area.

That sounds remarkably similar to the goals established for the U.S. Marines in Lebanon. We saw the results this weekend of a six­ month-long effort to attain those goals — hundreds of U.S. soldiers dead or wounded, and no end in sight.

In another case, the Philippines, the U.S. government has been so ineffective in its attempt to slaughter the most dangerous enemy it has faced — the Japanese who were in control of the Philippines before the war — that the only rational thing to do now is to give up the search and punish the guilty officials who are responsible for the situation.

It is very risky to 500 -to. to.

What does this all mean? That as a peacekeeping force, the Marines are not worth the paper they are written on. The next generation of diplomats is not being educated to produce diplomats of the right stuff, but is instead being educated to produce terrorists, to realize that our presence won't achieve peace, but will lead to a situation that is even more dangerous.

Joseph Nye, a professor at Harvard University, has said that the U.S. is in a strategic transition. We need to alter the way we think about our role in the world.

Congressman Paul Simon fears that if the Marines are withdrawn from Lebanon, the current efforts of the troops that died in the terrible attack of Oct. 22 would have been in vain. Believe their deaths have been a great meaning, that they did not die in vain. Their tragic ways show, to us, that as a peacekeeping force, the Marines are not wielding a great mission by merely sitting in Beirut. It is not a matter of giving up to terrorists, but of realizing that we must keep in mind its vital long-term ob­ jectives and functions as a political institution and for no other reason.

Grenada ploy is very risky

THE U.S. INVASION of Grenada on Tuesday morning may have been a less a matter of "no choice," as President Reagan phrased it, than of a choice made too late.

The press release was signed by the secretary general, General Perez de Cuellar, who declared that "the assembly of nations has decided to intervene in Grenada in order to free the island and to allow its people to determine their own future."

Let's look at the situation in the Middle East.

In those cases, the U.N. has presented a way for states to resolve some of these crises.

The deaths of those Marines may be remembered as a cowardly attack on a peacekeeping mission by the barbaric terrorists that control the Middle East. But remember, terrorists cannot intimidate the strongest nation on Earth.

Terrorists can't intimidate the best

By now, I'm sure everyone has heard about the barbaric deed that took place in Lebanon this weekend. I am deeply surprised and shocked by it.

To know that a group of terrorists could get together and plot the cowardly murder of innocent sleeping men makes me sick. The Marines in Lebanon are there strictly as a symbol of U.S. support in the midst of the Mideast. Being a Marine myself, I feel helpless that I can't do anything about it. I'm no Macho John Wayne type. But when one of my brothers dies, I feel it. I feel it in a different way than most. I believe that whoever is responsible for this deed, a deed comparable to Pearl Harbor back in 1941, rots in hell. Or better yet, turn the Marines loose on the snipers and other terrorists that harass them, as Kenai did with his deep-sea fishing—let the fallen Marines families.

Talented secretaries general are given little to work with

The public often seen the U.N. as a political power that fails to live up to expectations. But the reason for failure is usually in the robustness of the great powers of the world, be they the UN's chief elected official any real discretionary funding or troops on loan for anything but the most circ­ umstantial purposes (at least since the 1960 Congo crises.)

Beyond those handicaps, the U.N. suffers from two flaws.

First, it has been built with a mechanism for renewing itself or changing the guard. It is to many ways a very democratic institution but with the same kind of stagnation that stultifies non­ democratic countries. Even the elections that bring it new leadership are carefully guarded by the big-power veto. Talented secretaries general are given little to work with and are expected to produce a lot when crisis arrives.

Secretariat staffing is hampered by geographic quotas under which member nations expect to get their share of civil service posts but are often understandably reluctant to send their best government servants to work in New York or Geneva rather than back home in Rangoon or Washington.

Despite these hazards, the organization has produced some remarkable executives in key posts — many of them career civil servants. But most of these have felt a growing sense of frustration as the assembly of nations has gradually descended from its postwar usefulness to a stale­ state. The U.N.'s practical, non­ political efforts in aviation, weather, trade, agricultural research, education, monument preservation — help to make the planet work. But its efforts as war cessation and prevention are stymied.

For two years, Secretary General Perez de Cuellar has complained that the super­powers are floundering in solving some present day stalemates. In the U.N., the U.S. is playing a direct peace role in, for instance, the reconciliation in Cambodia (Golan Heights, Namibia). In the conflict that Russia has become, the U.S. stands as the back­bone of the super powers (Central America).

In such cases, outside "fixers" such as the U.N. are the only ones that can help.

In Cyprus and the Mideast, the U.N. is playing the role of the boy with his finger in the dike. It may be saving NATO from getting swamped in a collision between NATO members Turkey and Greece.

U.N. stockpiles ideas in push for peace

TO SEE the forest as well as the trees is a necessity for political institutions and for no organization is it more im­ portant than for the United Nations.

While dealing with day-to-day emergencies, and a world in business, the U.N. must keep in mind its vital long-term ob­ jectives and functions as a symbol of humanity's determination to build a better world. The Secretary General, the chief executive and administrative officer of the U.N., has the particular obligation to keep the general shape of the forest in view at all times while ensuring that the individual branches grow in the right direction.

For instance, or it may be prevention. As we speak stalemates between their allies — Israel and Syria. Perez de Cuellar was a key negotiator in the Afghanistan crisis before becoming the Secretary General. And he still follows the almost forgotten peace bargain closely.

AS PEREZ de Cuellar looks out on the world from his 38th floor office, he sees stalemate on all horizons. But like his floor, he seems to have lost his bearings.

In the recent 38th assembly of nations, the Secretary General and his aides have presented a stockpile of ideas on how to make progress beyond such political dif­ ferences. But most of these ideas involve a prime prerequisite — the ability of each nation to concede its weaknesses for a better and more united future. At present, Washington and Moscow can help mediators resolve some of these issues.
Bars meet rock video demand

By Lisa Nichols
Staff Writer

Rock videos—the new music sensation which has rapidly gained popularity—seem to have found its niche for the "under 35 crowd." Videos are seen via the cable Music Television station, MTV, in about 15 million homes, according to a recent report in People magazine. But subscribers to MTV, the only station that runs videos 24 hours a day, are unavailable to most cable subscribers.

But the demand for the popular entertainment form is being met by several local bars, thanks to a new videodisk satellite system. Channel 1 was the first bar to convert to rock video as its primary source of entertainment, according to Suzanne Immen, who owns and operates the business along with her husband, Dennis.

Prior to the switch to video last December, Immen said that she had a disc jockey to spin records. The switch to rock videos was made, Immen said, "because the husband felt that videos were the wave of the future."

"When we switched, we were the only place in the area that had video, even though it wasn't even available in St. Louis," Immen said. "I don't want to be left behind because I believe entertainment will replace bands in bars. As far as we're concerned, just look at our entertainment a step further."

Immen's videodisk system format includes a program coordinator who decides what videos to play. The coordinator selects from the videos offered on MTV and other stations the Satellite picks up. He also uses video tapes which can be purchased for home video systems.

Channel 1 is equipped with one large screen and two bar monitors. Immen said that the system is very expensive, but that it is worth the expense. "If it wasn't profitable, why would other bars follow suit and switch to the video system?" Immen asked.

Coo-Coo's and T.J.'s Watering Hole are among the other bars to jump on the video bandwagon. T.J.'s is divided into a large bar and wall of video monitors. Live mid-September, live bands performed in both bars. Now, while the large bar continues to offer live entertainment, the small video room is offered with a large screen video system with five monitors, and MTV exclusively every night, with the exception of football on Mondays.

Harry Kirk, owner of T.J.'s, said that the switch was made to have something "new and different instead of the same old bands all of the same old music." Kirk said that the videos have been, "a lot more successful than the bands in that respect.

"By not having to hire bands, we've already paid for their equipment," he said. "We haven't had any drop in business because of the change. In fact, we've had more business because of it. It's been drawing really good crowds.

Some patrons of T.J.'s agreed that the decision to switch to the rock video format was a good one.

Paul Hessler, a senior in microbiology, said, "I like the videos better than live bands because they aren't as loud—you can still talk to your friends. Plus, I like to hear a variety of bands and find out what they look like."

Mike Boesch, a senior in radio and television, agreed, saying, "I definitely like T.J.'s better with MTV. You can still hear the bands in the big bar, if you want. But MTV is a different sort of entertainment. You can see and hear your favorite bands."

David Remegar, a senior in agriculture economics, said that he, too, likes the videos because "they are something different and offer a wider variety of music than just one band."

Audiences everywhere seem to agree with the St. Louis students who enjoy MTV, which was launched two years ago by Warner Communications and the American Express Company. With its 24-hour music video format, MTV has taken the place of radio listening for many of its target audience of viewers under the age of 30.

MTV has also been credited with bringing new life to the recording industry which suffered a decline in revenues during a four-year slump from 1979 to 1982.

Bar owners and the entertainers themselves sometimes go to great personal expense to tape a video and have it shown on MTV for free. Many pay their record sales. Others consider their video not only an art form, but great advertising.

It was reported that Michael Jackson, who obtained videos for "Beat It" cost him about $100,000 to make. Jackson's record company, CBS, paid over $75,000 to make the video for "Billie Jean." But the video might have been the major reason that Jackson's "Thriller" LP has become the best-selling album in CBS/Epic history.

Most entertainers have not had the overwhelming success that Jackson had with his videos. But new groups such as Duran Duran, The Fixx, Eurythmics, Flock of Seagulls, U2 and the Stray Cats have turned to video to create and gain a following in the U.S.

Cancellation of Shryock show due to Actor's Equity dispute

By Terry Levecke
Sports Writer

Shryock Auditorium had a pretty good running record in contrast to the Arena when comparing box office returns. But Shryock Auditorium's third performance of "Country Matters: Selected Seductions by Shakespeare" was another story.

"Country Matters" was the second show in the Auditorium's general seating. The first show was a multimedia production of "Country Matters," which was presented with a large cast and full set.

This cancellation was not confined to Carbondale, and it was not the fault of the actors. Shryock management or lack of ticket sales. This time the Actors' Equity Union stepped in and shut down the tour over contractual disputes.

The controversy was a major cast change in the tape. Lee Meriwether and Roy Dotrice replaced Michael Learned and Roscoe Lee Burt. The union is presently being represented by assistant director Brad Faughn, some presenters never writing to these changes.

When the show opened last week in California, Faughn said, two presenters refused to honor their contracts because of the cast changes. This left the company with two dates for which the actors and actresses didn't get paid.

Actors getting paid makes the Actor's Equity union very unhappy, Faughn said. Even though three of the people offered to continue the tour for living and travel expenses, the union shut down the entire tour. Shryock Auditorium has booked a substitute Shakespearean production at 8 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 4. "The Country Wives of Windsor" will be performed by John Houseman's Theatre Company, the official touring company of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

The production will be presented with a large cast and full set.

Sexual harassment is the focus for "Country Matters." Two of the holdovers for "Country Matters" may use those tickets for "The Merry Wives of Windsor" or may obtain a refund from the Shryock Auditorium Box Office between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m.

Stephen King freaks can rest assured that the movie version of "The Dead Zone," is just as frightening as his novel, or comes in as a pretty close second.

In screen adaptations of Stephen King novel, unrealistic amounts of blood and gore are needed to keep a scare. In the movie version of "The Dead Zone," the author's tactics--making his fans' blood run cold with the eerie and unnatural power of second sight--is as vivid as the book.

In this chilling Paramount Pictures release that is purely appropriate and seasonal for Halloween, three tales are combined into one singularly disturbing movie.

Christopher Walken stars in the movie as a docile schoolteacher, Johnny, who after a near fatal accident, gains sensory perception that makes him capable of seeing the future.

Walken has starred in such films as "The Dogs of War" and "The Deerhunter." Walken once again delights his followers with a regrettably weak portrayal of a ruined man in "The Dead Zone." "The Dead Zone" focuses on the psychological kernel of extra-sensory perception, rather than what many people would consider an insightful benefit to their ordinary lives. Johnny's ability "to feel" literally draws the life out of those around him.

Martin Sheen also gave a powerful performance as an insane politician who may one day rule the world with a Hitler-like control. Possibly to draw a larger audience, director David Cronenberg chose "The Shining" for emphasizing a tangled love affair in "The Dead Zone."

His rather melodramatic aspect of the movie between Johnny and Sarah (Brooke Adams) detracted from what could be a clever and lengthy episode of Rod Sterling's Night Gallery.

The fine acting job of all the performers, especially Walken, make Johnny's slowly deteriorating world become a realistic living hell. The uneasiness that emotes from the town and landscape in "The Dead Zone" is created through effective camera work of the New England town.

Special effects fans won't be disappointed as Stephen King's unmatched and demonic imagination on paper comes to life on the screen.

With just enough blood to keep the movie rated "R," this Don De LaLaurie production doesn't push the film to the edge of reality, as in other movie remakes of previous King novels -- "The Shining" in particular.

Trips aimed in all directions

By Tony M. Stada
Student Writer

New York, Acapulco and Steamboat Springs, Colo., are three trips offered this fall by the Student Programming Council to relax and recuperate from the hustle and bustle of school.

The New York trip is scheduled during the Christmas break. It departs from Carbondale Friday, Nov. 18, and arrives in New York City Saturday. The trip returns from New York Saturday, Dec. 17, and arrives in Carbondale Sunday. The package includes round-trip jet travel to New York, seven nights of accommodations at the Astotel Ritz Hotel, hotel and service taxes, transfers between the hotel and airport, and a ticket for a cruise of Acapulco Bay.

Before Nov. 1, the Acapulco trip costs $429. On Nov. 1 and after, the trip will cost $449. A $190 deposit is required reserved at the time of sign-up. Final payment is due Dec. 2.

Eileen Kruger, chairperson of the travel committee, gave several reasons for choosing Acapulco as this year's big "sun trip." "We thought Acapulco would be a good choice because it's somewhere different. SPC has never sponsored a trip to the Mexican Riviera," she said. "Acapulco's location guarantees that the weather will be hot and sunny. Also, the extra-favorable dollar-to-peso exchange rates make Mexico a bargain hunter's delight."

A birth certificate, Mexican passport, Mexican identification card or a passport is required to obtain a free tourist card for entry into Mexico. One copy is kept and after entrance into Mexico, and the other copy must be returned to Immigration upon departure.

The outer Christmas break trip includes six nights in Steamboats Springs, Colo. The package includes accommodations at "Wymber Run Condominiums from Saturday, Jan. 7 to Friday, Jan. 13, five day lift tickets; daily parties, Christmas day happy hours; and a Steamboat Village discount coupon book. Transportation is not included in the package, but car pooling is being organized by SPC. Driving time to Steamboat from Carbondale is approximately 24 hours.

The cost of the ski trip in October is $219 and increases to $299 in November. A $75 deposit is required at the time of sign-up. Also, $150 must be paid by Oct. 28. Final payment is due Nov. 18.

SUIC and other college students will be going together to Steamboat. National Collegiate Week starts Saturday, Jan. 7, and a variety of activities are planned for the week.

Steamboat Springs is located approximately 5½ hours northeast of Denver. The resort is on Mt. Werner, which claims the second largest vertical drop in Colorado. Seven hundred acres of ski trails with runs as long as an acre are found at Steamboat. The resort has 16 lifts, 73 runs and beginning, intermediate and expert slopes.

All three trips require a nominal damage deposit, refundable after the trip. The trips are open to anyone wanting to travel.

Tickets on ‘Gold Pond’ on sale

Tickets are now on sale for the Stage Company's next production, "On Golden Pond." Performances are scheduled for Nov. 11, 13, 17, 19 and 20. Progressed tickets are $9.50, $10.50 and $11.50. The show begins at 8 p.m. Patrons and patrons may pick up their tickets this week if they have not already done so.

The box office will be open to season coupon holders and the general public Oct. 31.

Box office hours are from 4 to 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and from 1 to 4 p.m. on Saturday. The box office will also be open one hour before each performance.

Peace Corps opens office
Recruiter tries to end myths

By Jennifer Phillips
Staff Writer

For Mark Kromer, being a Peace Corps recruiter means more than sitting among optimistic posters and brochures in his small office and handing out applications to curious students.

Besides trying to spread word of the Peace Corps office that opened on-campus in September, he's looking for "scarce-skill graduates" and, with today's job situation, they're not easy to find.

The demand in the United States for technical-skills jobs in forestry, public health, industrial arts, science and math education and engineering, for example, creates a scarcity of the same jobs in Peace Corps locations, he said.

Kromer, 30, a graduate student in zoology, spent two years as a country school teacher in Swaziland, Africa after graduating from SIU-C in 1975 with a science education degree.

Although most students interested in the Peace Corps specialize in liberal arts areas, where there are few positions, Kromer encourages "anyone to drop by, even if they are remotely interested."

"There are a lot of non-technical things that volunteers can do," he said. "Such as teach English, organize c-sops, and even teach people how to use sewing machines. Americans take a lot of things for granted."

Kromer said his job is to explain the application process and dispel myths about the Peace Corps.

Volunteers, who must be at least 18-years-old, work for two years in their host countries. Applications are sent to the headquarters in Chicago and, after an interview by phone or in person, the names are sent to the Washington, D.C. office. Two names are nominated for each position.

Before selecting a volunteer, the Peace Corps looks at the person's motivation behind applying, whether he is intent on going overseas and how adaptable he will be in a "semi­rough environment."

"Can you go two years without electricity and haul your own water?" Kromer asked. "Are you flexible and adaptable?"

Volunteers are also trained for six weeks in the language, local customs and the job to be done.

Kromer said he also hopes to dispel myths people have about the Peace Corps.

"For one, you don't have to stay two years," he said. "You are a volunteer. It's not like being in the Army. Now, if it doesn't seem like you will be willing to stay the two years, you might not be selected in the first place."

Another myth is that volunteers don't get paid, he said. Along with a monthly living allowance of $200 to $400, depending on the area's standard of living, housing is usually supplied and a $400 readjustment allowance paid upon coming home.

That readjustment rate ac-

University Housing has opened rooms in Lentz, Grinnell and Trueblood Halls for studying from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Dining room five in Lentz Hall, the Westmore Room in Trueblood Hall, and the Oak Room in Grinnell Hall will be open on a three-week trial basis. Following the trial, representatives of the Undergraduate Student Organization and University Housing will meet to discuss the feasibility of keeping the study areas open for the remainder of the semester.

The rooms were opened as a result of a request by the USO in an effort to create more study space on campus.

Supporters hope Peltier gains freedom in new legal hearing

By Jay Schmitz
Student Writer

After six and a half years in prison, Leonard Peltier may finally be on the road back to freedom according to his supporters.

In 1977, Peltier was convicted of the murders of two FBI agents involved in a shootout on June 26, 1976, on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota.

Now, the 8th U.S. Circuit Court in St. Louis is hearing oral arguments on behalf of Peltier, asking for a new trial. Peltier's attorney said to the public that he may not get a fair trial in South Dakota and that his convictions and two consecutive life sentences were the result of evidence fabricated by the FBI.

Peltier is not standing alone in his fight for freedom. On Oct. 12, Columbus Day, there were 25 demonstrations on his behalf around the country, including one at the Federal Building in Carbondale.

Dave Baker, one of the local demonstration organizers and a member of the Leonard Peltier Support Group, said that Columbus Day was chosen as the day for the demonstrations because it has been declared by the United Nations as International Day of Solidarity for the U.S. Indian. People, which includes Native Americans.

The big thing these demonstrations are to keep the public informed about how to help Peltier. Peltier, Leonard, and Kathy Singorelli, Baker's wife, and another member of the Peltier Support Group. She said Peltier was the victim of a conspiracy to cover up the fact the FBI men had no legal reason to be on the reservation.

"The FBI was fighting a secret war against the American Indian Movement, of which Leonard is a member," she said.

A cold rainy day limited the crowd at the Carbondale demonstration to 30 people, Baker said. However, the weather was of no concern to at least one demonstrator. "It doesn't really matter," he said about the weather. "It kinda tells people we're not out here just for fun."

One of the speakers at the rally was Jim Roberts, a local attorney who is assisting Peltier's lawyers in this case.

After seven years of litigation, Roberts said, "Now is our chance to take the offensive." The lawyer told the demonstrators that the defense has affidavits contradicting testimony at the first trial. Roberts said that some evidence indicating an FBI cover-up came from the FBI's own files, obtained through the Freedom of Information Act.

Support for Peltier's cause is increasing in several circles. Baker said a group of Carbondale people, including volunteers and there are usually Americans, are helping. He said, "There are cases of isolation but mostly you work in villages and rural areas."

Anyone interested in more information about the Peace Corps may visit Kromer from 10 a.m. to noon Mondays and Wednesdays, or on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, or by appointment, at 490 S. 11th St.

Dave White grows pumpkins on his Murphysboro farm and decorates them with cartoon faces.

By Debra Colburn
Staff Writer

If Linus and Sally see the Great Pumpkin this year, it may be smaller due to the summer's heat and drought.

Pumpkins are made up mostly of water, according to Irvin Hillyer, professor of plant and soil science and a vegetable crops specialist. And after the dry weather this past summer, he predicts a reduction in size for this season's crop.

"In the past we've had real whoppers," David White of White's Frandon Farms said. Pumpkins ranging in size from cantaloupes to big basketballs are available now and, around Thanksgiving, White expects some of the bigger ones that can be used for decorations.

To get the best use from pumpkins, White said faces can be drawn on them, then later they can be cut up for cooking. None of the pumpkins White sells are decorated in the same way, he said, though he does sell plain pumpkins.

Pumpkins can weigh from 4 to 200 pounds. The larger pumpkins such as the Mastifton Pie Pumpkin, is used only for shows, said Hillyer.

Pumpkins aren't picked, but rather cut off the vine with the stem remaining. They are cured for 10 days at temperatures in the 80s to seal up cuts in the stems that, if left open, would cause rotting, Hillyer said.

They can be stored up to three months at temperatures in the 60s. The warmer-than-normal temperatures prevent mold injury.

The batter usually used for pumpkin pie filling is really a mixture of pumpkin flesh and squash flesh. True pumpkin flesh would be too watery and true squash flesh too dry, Hillyer said.

The best time to plant pumpkins is in the spring after the soil has warmed up and the chance of a frost is low. Typically, five pumpkins per vine can be expected if the seeds are planted in sandy soil with adequate water and fertilizer, Hillyer said.

Hillyer said many people think pumpkins are made up of water. According to him, most of water. According to him, most of the pumpkins 12 feet away from the seed is only a bruised arm. About 50 sheriff's deputies and state policemen converged on the scene after Deputy Joe Lee rammed a police car, which the gunman had commandeered at a roadblock earlier, knocking the car onto the shoulder of interstate 55.

The hostage, Beverly Petrolia, 33, of Norco, suffered only a bruised arm. About 50 sheriff's deputies and state policemen converged on the scene after Deputy Joe Lee rammed a police car, which the gunman had commandeered at a roadblock earlier, knocking the car onto the shoulder of interstate 55.

Gunman killed while holding woman hostage

PANCHATOULA, La. (AP) — A police sharpshooter killed a suspected bank robber as he held a gun to a woman hostage's head at a roadblock after a 40-mile chase through three parishes, authorities said.

Elton J. Woods, 26, of Metairie was fatally shot in the hand and face Monday by a deputy who had killed the man from a nearby roadside ditch.

"It looked like he was going to kill the girl," said Tangipahoa Parish Chief Deputy John Dahmer.

White said he plants his pumpkins 12 feet away from other plants. His 60-foot hill. Until then turn orange, he said, they look like a field of watermelons.

Dan McGuire, of McGuire's Orchard and Market said the pumpkins used for cooking are of a different breed than the jack-o'-lantern type. Cookies, cakes, breads and soups, along with pies are some of the dishes that can be made from pumpkins.

McGuire said people consider color, shape and size when choosing a pumpkin. Sometimes their pick pumpkins using the adage "the bigger the better."

"We're having trouble getting as many big ones as we need," he said. He expects at least a 7,000-ton crop this year.

Black community issues highlight second meet
By Patrick Williams

The second of what is planned as a series of meetings of Carbondale's black community will be held at 4 p.m. Wednesday at the Forts C. Hayes Center. At the meeting, people attended a similar meeting last week to discuss problems facing blacks in Carbondale.

At the first community meeting, outlining Carbondale's blacks and getting a common voice to speak to city government, was one of the needs stressed.

"If the city wants to keep the name 'All American City' it should be developing programs," to help the underprivileged, said Abdul Haq, coordinator of the Youth Program.

To convince the city to make a commitment to its black community, the group generally agreed that a representative is needed to attend city meetings.

The community needs a single organization to represent it, one man said.

And one place that representation is particularly needed is before the park district. Speaking on a member of the steering committee that organized the meeting, said he pointed out that Evergreen Park near Carbondale Reservoir is being renovated, while Alksa Park on the northeast side is suffering from a lack of attention.

Getting blacks on local government boards can help change policies, but they should represent low-income families as well as middle income, Madlyn S. Goodin said. The community needs to realize that people earning less than $8,000 per year can represent it as well as those earning above $20,000 per year.

To get that representation, the black community itself has to organize itself, Doris Weaver, steering committee member said.

When the neighborhood does get organized, the group said, they should go before the City Council to recognize problems facing blacks.

They’ve never made a clear, stated position on some of the problems in the northeast," Goodin said.

GPSC to hear proposal on sports fee increase
By John Stewart

The Graduate and Professional Student Council will hear University administrators speak about restructuring the Affirmative Action Office and a proposed athletics fee increase at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the Student Center Mississippi Room.

Thomas Bush, assistant to the president, will speak about the Affirmative Action Office. All agreed that a philosophy instructor Elizabeth Eames advocated evaluation of the current proposals for restructuring the office. She and GPSC President Ann Greesley had previously addressed President Albert Somit for delay before consideration of affirmative action officer candidates. The delay will last until Somit returns from a Far East trip.

Proposals for changes in the Affirmative Action Office’s structure and purpose will also be discussed. Both affirmative action officers, Richard Hayes and Mary Helen Moore, have taken on new positions with SIUC since last year.

Police arrest 3 men suspected in forgery ring

Three Carbondale men suspected of being involved in a forgery ring, which has ob­ tained several thousand dollars merchandise from local businesses this semester, have been arrested by Carbondale police.

Zachery K. Shaw, 20, remained in Jackson County jail Tuesday under $10,000 bond charged with forgery. He was arrested Oct. 19, police said.

An SIU-C sophomore in criminal justice, Ernest D. Moore, 21, was arrested Sunday and charged with forgery. He remained in jail Tuesday under $5,000 bond.

Also arrested and charged with deceptive practices was Ralph Johnson Jr., 20, police said.

Police said they anticipate more arrests.

The group of "college-aged people" apparently steal checks and make false student identification cards to match the names on the checks, according to police. They check for about $500 or $600 are written for merchandise such as televisions, video equipment and clothing.

Communicating with teachers may alleviate stress, tension

By Jeff Hild

Students having trouble coping with their workload may be able to alleviate some of the stress and tension by communicating with the person trying to get the information over to them, the instructor.

A career counseling workshop, "Communicating More Effectively With Instructors," focused on two aspects of effective communication.

As Jim Scales, counseling psychology professor, said, "There is a tendency when a student leaves a class to treat the instructor like a vending machine. They leave class, study the material on their own, and if they have a problem, they go and talk to the instructor.

"One part of the workshop explains that there's nothing wrong with going to get help from the instructor," Scales said.

"Another part of the workshop is just plain old communication skills," Scales said. "This is learning to communicate with instructors without upsetting them, he said.

Scales said there is a right way and a wrong way to seek information. The workshop helps students negotiate effectively with an instructor.

What is an appropriate way to approach an instructor to let him know that you, as a student, have a problem?

Scales said one wrong way to get the help needed is by going up to a instructor and saying, "in effect, "I need some help with this, can you help me now?"

The instructor may say no because he has an hour's worth to do in class or to a meeting. The student doesn't understand, gets upset, and now there are some bad vibes between the instructor and the student.

Scales said:

"This situation can lead to any number of things. Scales said, such as an assumption that good grades will result because the instructor doesn't like the student.

"The most significant person for a student is the instructor," Scales said. "That's the person the student will deal with for more hours in a given week than anyone else, in terms of academic achievement."

Communicating with an instructor becomes more significant as the student gets closer to the senior year, Scales said.

"The majority of students haven't had any kind of work experience at all," he said, "and in writing a resume, when looking for references, the only people they have been exposed to are professors and deans."

"They would be the persons a student goes to for a character reference," Scales said. "And if there was a number of hours with that instructor especially if it was in the student's major, to do that, the student would have to communicate with that instructor. So, communicating with professors becomes more and more significant as the closer the student is to graduating."

Scales said professors may also know who has the jobs, but, "If they know your name, you have a communication problem, I doubt they will refer you to a friend for a job."

Affirmative action changes proposed

By Anse Flaaxa
Staff Writer

President Albert Somit has delayed the appointment of an Affirmative Action Officer in the SIU-C until at least Nov. 15, when a list of proposals for changes to the Affirmative Action Office structure is expected to be ready for his consideration.

The list, containing 13 possible changes in two areas of Affirmative Action procedure, was drawn up by six University employees and one alumni group leader. It was a result of concern over the status of the office arising during a recent Women's Caucus meeting, according to Joanne Paine, associate professor in political science.

Paine, one of the authors of the proposals, said she did not believe many people had considered possible alternatives to either the University's current position or the structure of the office.

"The alternatives we are talking about could enhance the work that is already being done in the area," Paine said. The list of proposals has already been sent to several organizations for response. Paine said, "We wanted to get some feel about what the attitudes might be among the specific classes of people the proposals would affect," she said.

Rebecca Rehwalt, assistant to Somit, said the search committee is making preliminary inquiries on the eligibility of candidates who have filed applications. The deadline for filing applications for the post was Oct. 15.

"They're independent things that are happening at the same time," Rehwalt said regarding the search and the list of proposals. "If something is changed, it will be at the suggestion of the search committee." Somit, who returned to his office Monday from a month-long tour of the Far East, was unavailable for comment.

Rehwalt said that if a major change in eligibility requirements were to be made, applicants would be informed if needed, a new search would be conducted.

Elizabeth Eames, professor of philosophy, said she would like to see the office operate more independently from the president's office.

"If the Affirmative Action Office is to be left up to the central administration," Rehwalt said concern arose when it was learned that the minimum requirement for the post is a master's degree or equivalent experience.

The job requirements were set to produce the largest pool of applicants, Rehwalt said. "At this time anyway with a master's degree or above is certainly encouraged to apply."

Other alternatives include changing the number of officers from one to two or more and establishing procedures to determine who would be considered relevant evidence to show discrimination.

Mayors note growing hunger crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — The hunger crisis in America is growing worse and the cities are taking "extraordinary efforts" to feed the needy, the U.S. Conference of Mayors reported today.

The mayors, in a report, said the nation's largest cities have not yet reached the hungry, who are still suffering the effects of high unemployment, dead centers of federal jobs, and rising prices of ordinary necessities — food, shelter and energy — stemming from the 1981-82 recession.

"The problem of hunger is increasing continuously now in cities, despite recent reports and indications of an economic recovery which continue to be unconfirmed," the conference said after the annual meeting of its executive committee.

"And the gap between the demand for assistance and local policy and the ability to produce make it necessary to meet that demand continues to widen," said the report, based on a survey of cities.

The mayors said the task of caring for the hardest-hit victims of the recession is placing a severe drain on the cities' resources and their ability to cope with other problems.

Hunger is a problem created by other problems — chiefly joblessness, which has remained near record levels in the last year and is not expected to decrease substantially in the near future," the report said.

The unemployment rate was 9.3 percent in September, a big rise over the 7.7 percent in December 1982 figure of 10.8 percent, the highest in four decades. But it is still well ahead of the 7.5 percent level before the recession began in the summer of 1981.

The mayors said the hunger problem in the cities "has been exacerbated, clearly, by the recent drastic cuts in federal benefits and the high cost of basic necessities, such as food, shelter and energy."

The report was prepared for the United States Conference of City Human Services Officials among its findings:

"Since January, the emergency food hotline in Detroit has received more than 40,000 calls for assistance."

A similar hotline service in Philadelphia resulted in emergency food supplies going to more than 10,000 families during one weekend last winter.

A food bank in New York City, which is to begin full operation this fall, is expected to provide more than 2,000 people over the next two years.

Local food banks in Seattle distributed 1.7 million bags of food last year, an increase of 156 percent over the previous yeas and nearly 300 percent over 1980, but "there are still many people in need of emergency food services who are not receiving the assistance they need."
Simon to recommend changes in higher education statutes

By Karen Terry
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Paul Simon of Makanda will recommend "very substantial changes" in higher education every third year, next month when he proposes legislation to redesign the Higher Education Act, Simon press aide David Carle said today.

Carle said three recommendations made recently on a national task force on teacher merit pay, which Simon chaired, may be included in the act.

Simon will propose a federally-funded scholarship program for talented high school students who want to become teachers. The task force report suggested that states could donate to each congressional district - be made available to the top 5 percent of high school graduating classes, regardless of financial need.

In exchange for each year of scholarship help, at least a recommended $5,000 a year - students would be required to teach for two years or repay the money at the prevailing interest rate if they choose other professions.

Simon will also introduce legislation to establish summer institutes for teachers, beginning in 1985, Carle said. Carle said Simon originally intended to incorporate the summer institutes program into the Higher Education Act, which also contains statutes governing federal financial aid programs. A talented teacher fellowship program, another task force recommendation, also will be proposed by Simon, beginning in 1985, teachers from each congressional district would be selected to receive a one-year paid leave of absence from their schools, and it is expected that the recipients could demonstrate how they would improve their teaching performances.

The task force report suggests that the fellowships be awarded for a stipulation that the teachers will return to the same school to teach for at least three years after the one-year sabbatical.

Details of changes to the so-called Hallowe'en Act - being worked out, Carle said, and it is still uncertain whether the teachers will return to the same school to teach for at least three years after the one-year sabbatical.

Westbury defends liquor ban

By Paula J. Finlay
Staff Writer

Critics of an ordinance banning liquor licenses on South Illinois Avenue were countered Monday night by Mayor Neil Dillard, who said that she is not ready to "unscramble" the progress made by the ban.

In recent weeks, several City Council committee members have agreed that so-called Halloween ordinance, which bans issuance of any new liquor licenses on South Illinois Avenue, needs to be re-examined.

But the mayor said Monday that the ban has been "working very well" and charged that council members "nobody responsible." The council took exception to the ban Monday night and passed an ordinance removing the restriction from motel and hotels that have a minimum of 100 rooms and a public restaurant and are located on South Illinois Avenue between Walnut Street and Grand Avenue. Under the conference center, to be built by developer Stu Hoye, will qualify for a liquor license under the new ordinance.

Commissioner Keith Tuthorn voted against the ordinance, saying that the measure was unfair because it favored Hoye.

"People would like to see a liquor business and not just one, Tuthorn said.

The issue came up again as the Emergency Management and liquor commission after its regular meeting to provide for the Class A license of the Great Escape, 609 S.

Jim Winfree wants to open a package liquor store with a drive-up window at 615 S. Illinois, the site of the Texaco gas station and convenience store on gas station. Guice Strong, Winfree's attorney, said the Paso Robles Transfer of license and later transfer an appraisal of the two parcels.

Winfree said Monday night was that the county assessor says it's worth $19,925. The county assessor says it's worth $26,010, and the city assessor Ratter said.

The city's liquor code, too, has a number of values attached to it. Ratter said that the parcel with storage sheds was worth $12,500, and the city records for $22,000, and the city records appraise it at $15,000.

Land exchange agreed upon but property value questioned

By Patrick Williams
Staff Writer

About the only certainties concerning a land exchange agreement presented to the City Council Monday night was that the council wanted the exchange and it felt it was in the "public interest.

Neither the city, county nor owner Hugh McGowan can agree on a dollar value of the parcel of property he is trying to exchange for surplus city property on the north side of Carbondale.

McGowan's land is part of the tract the city needs to build the downtown parking garage that is part of the City Center project. He is willing to trade it for a "fee of city land at the corner of Marion and Jackson streets."

"Pick one," acting City Manager Scott Ratter said of a group of appraisals of the values of the two parcels.

McGowan paid $35,000 for his property, located near the corner of Walnut Street and 5th Avenue. He now says it's worth $19,925. The county assessor says it's worth $7,000. Ratter said.

The city's property, too, has a number of values attached to it. Ratter said that the parcel with storage sheds was worth $12,500, and the city records for $22,000, and the city records appraise it at $15,000.

The request was approved. Winfree to drop

The council approved two Halloween booths for Children's Hospital West. The committee will meet next week, and it is expected that the official Fair Days logo from the books.

Erickson said the skill levels of the two teams were wider than the score indicated. Again, wet weather made a good running game impossible. Anthony said the Sabres managed to skirt the mud to score late in the second half for a 2-0 victory.

The ruggers closed the weekend against Pittsburgh, in a game that Erickson said could have been a battle for the Med Bowl. Both teams are anxious to make a running attack pay off and restored to kicking the ball for yardage. The match nearly turned from a running game to a mud bath, Erickson said. "Pittsburgh was a very dirty-playing team. The referee was lax in calling late hits and dangerous plays."

We [USC] play a fierce style game. We're used in intelligent aggression. Taking late hits and getting our fingers continuously kicked off the ball was making tempers flare and was frustrating us. Pittsburgh used its talented kicker to put two field goals through the uprights, and second half in the game to blank USC 3-0.

"This year's team is young," Erickson said. "We were just starting to put all the facets of our game together and really click. We were one of the stronger teams at the tournament.

The ruggers will be in action game winner Pete Vuckovic when they play host to a club from Evansville, Ind., at the rugby pitch behind Abyss Martin field.

to the Salukis, with 14 scholarships, having 1A Tuba in its 1B Tuba is allowed 98 scholarships.

Kidd said that for the last three or four years, the recommendation of allowing 25 scholarships to a team has been brought up at the conference meeting. It has been voted down, though, by the same schools each year, Kidd said.

"That's going to catch us up to us soon," Kidd said. "Some of the presidents in our league have it fixed in their heads that Eastern's going to still get in the playoffs. That's fine, but when you make the playoffs you need depth in order to win. In the playoffs, you're going after the best week after week. As far as any advice that Kidd offered the Saluki squad, he said that life at the top is tough. "Everybody is going to be after the top team that much more," Kidd said. "Opposing coaches are going to use Southern's No. 1 ranking as ammunition to try their teams up for the game."

White Sox' Hoyt nabs AL Cy Young Award

NEW YORK (AP) - LaMarr Hoyt, the barrel-bellied Chicago White Sox pitcher, received 17 votes and was named the winner of the Cy Young Award in the American League on Sunday.

The previously unheralded Hoyt, who has won 35 games over the past three seasons, led the White Sox second-half sweep of the World Series. Hoyt, who finished second with nine first-place votes and 38 points.

The ballots were cast by two members of the Baseball Writers Association of America from each American League city. Voting took place before the American League playoffs and World Series.

Hoyt won the opening game of playoffs 2-1 over Baltimore. The White Sox only won in the post season.

Dewey LaMarr Hoyt - he prefers his second name - is a self-styled "blue-collar" pitcher who was widely ignored until Chicago's surge to baseball's second half of the 1982 season. Despite a league-leading 19 victories for the third-place team in 1982 he didn't get a single first-place vote for the Cy Young Award, which went to 18-0 Chicago's Hoyt, who received 17 votes.

Malaysian soccer team undefeated

After four rounds have been completed in the international soccer tournament under the auspices by the International Student Union of the University of Illinois, the Malaysian team has a firm grip on first place in Group 1, while Africa and Venezuela are tied for the lead in Group II.

In Saturday's games, the United States edged Palestine 2-1 and Pakistan claimed a goal from Japan. In a first-place showdown, Venezuela defeated Indonesia 4-0. Africa fought a 0-0 deadlock.

Saluki Boosters to meet Thursday

The Saluki Booster Club's weekly meeting is scheduled for Thursday in the Morrison's Cafeteria, for Booster Club members and those who wish to attend. This week's guest speakers will be Saluki football coach Ray Dempsey and quarterback Rick Johnson. The agenda also includes reports from a booster and women coaches whose sports are in season.

After Saturday's football game against New Mexico State, the Boosters will host a post-game party at the Egyptian Sports Center. Guests will be served later in the evening by the coaching staff. Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Booster Club may send $10 to the Saluki Boosters, Box 1382, Carbondale.
Mayors declare football support

Mayor Helen Westberg Monday issued a proclamation declaring Saturday to be "Support the No. 1 Salukis Week" and urged Carbondale residents to come out to support the football game Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at Saluki Stadium. Westberg urged residents to attend the game and support the Salukis, both on the field and in the stands. She said the proclamation was a way of showing appreciation for the Salukis' successful season and to encourage residents to attend the game. She said, "We're really proud of the Salukis and we're glad to be a part of this," and added, "We hope everyone will come out and support our team." She also said the Salukis' success this season has made them a source of pride for the city.

Ruggers nab fifth at regional tournament

The SIU-C Women's Rugby Club placed a respectable fifth among 18 teams last weekend in the Midwest Union Rugby Championships at a water­marked Michigan State University.

Five members of the club were chosen to compete for a spot on the Midwest Select­Side team, representing eight states. Selected were Shannon Mauldin, screw­head; MariaERCson, fullback; Coral Cavo­to, fly half, and Anita Westberg, center. Representing the club was P.J. Jordan, hooker, and the opener against Milwaukee, SIU-C gained the momentum on the field.

The team pinned Milwaukee behind its 22-meter line the entire match. Pouring rain and slick turf marred scoring dif­ficulties for both teams.

"I'm very happy with the way we played," said the club's spokesperson. "Our defense was very good, as the team pushed the Milwaukee pack over the line to put four points on the board."

The next match played the national champion, Iowa City, against SIU-C and was the hardest-fought game of the weekend, Jordan said. The women's team kept the game close from the beginning, allowing SIU-C to gain an eventual 10-10 tie.

A tight second half followed, with both teams trying for a goal and counter attacking. A blocked SIU-C kick near the goal line allowed Iowa to break up the ping pong momentum and jump on a lead of 10-0. headset added two points with a field goal kick, and SIU-C left the field at halftime with a 10-10 tie.

A second tight second half followed, with both teams attacking and counter-attacking. A blocked SIU-C kick near the goal line allowed Iowa to break up the ping pong momentum and jump on a lead of 10-0. headset added two points with a field goal kick, and SIU-C left the field at halftime with a 10-10 tie.

The Saluki club faced Michigan State in its third game. Michigan State has a storied season and seemingly un­motivated half, as the Salukis were able to capitalize on this threat to the SIU-C ruggers.
