Note from Alaska
I am teaching eighth grade at Ladd Air Force Base, Fairbanks, Alaska. We return to the States in June of this year and will drive down the Alcan.

Our last summer was spent in touring Alaska from Circle City and Fort Yukon on the north to Valdez, Anchorage and Seward on the south. One big thrill was seeing the midnight sun on June 21, the longest day of the year, from the closest point to the Arctic Circle, Fort Yukon. Our plane made its customary dip for sightseers as we went over the exact location of the Arctic Circle.

Alaska is a fabulous country and a land of contrast. This winter has been rather mild, with the lowest temperature of only -44 being registered, and this only for a short time. Certainly a far cry from the rather lengthy dips of -60 and below registered in 1955. We have enjoyed our Alaskan tour immensely and will leave with many wonderful memories of “the last frontier.”

Finally my alumni dues!

I am enclosing my check for $4.00 for one year. My card for this year (1957) says paid until December 12, 1957. Why in December I do not know. Do you not have a definite date when most alumni pay their dues? If so, I shall be glad to adjust my time to such a time and pay any difference due. It must mean a “lot” of bookkeeping to take care of us just anytime.

The Richland County alumni meeting October 29 was a most interesting one. The idea behind the film “The People’s University” is in itself dramatic; the pictures are amazingly fine, both in point of selected subject and photography. The comments of Dr. William Horrell are fitting withal but very modest.

Mr. King seems to be a happy and enthusiastic field representative.

Interest in Camping Program
Please change our address .

We are very interested in receiving the January issue of the Southern Alumnus as we are hoping to take advantage of the summer camping at Little Grassy and wish to know the rates.

I am now out of training as a field agent for the Treasury Department’s Internal Revenue Service and like my work very much.

Article Brings Responses
At long last I find an opening to start working at my own Christmas card list. I just wanted to tell you how much I appreciated the space devoted to my Christmas card business. I have had several responses which are evidently a direct result. Perhaps I’ll even have the pleasure of hearing from people I’ve lost track of.

Last week a call came from Lt. G. C. DeNeal, ’55, who is stationed at Ellington and expects to be for perhaps another year. He was disappointed not to have known about the alumni dinner last summer. When he came to get his Christmas cards, we had quite a good visit—getting acquainted and reminiscing about Carbondale days.

It is good to follow the developments and happenings at Southern through the Southern Alumnus.

Received our copy of the Alumnus today which reminded us to get a change of address to you.

On December 15 I was promoted by the Sherwin-Williams Company from their branch in Mount Vernon to branch manager at Alton. My wife (Evelyn Mullins, ex ’52) and our three children moved here in January.

Keep up the good work. Happy to see the article on Gene Howey (January Alumnus). It was of special interest to me since I was stationed there during my sojourn in the USMC.

Appreciates SIU Faculty Interest
We (my wife and I) wish to thank you and Mr. Odaniell for the concern and thoughtfulness which you demonstrated on the night of the tornado, December 18.

Several of us teachers here (Gorham) were discussing the things you and other instructors from SIU had done. We feel that it is this interest in former students and in the community that makes many of the instructors of SIU really great, and also has been instrumental in the University’s growing good name.

Editor’s note: This letter was received by an SIU faculty member who is also a Southern alumnus.
The Rehabilitation Institute, created only last July and headed by Guy Renzaglia, has perhaps the most complex responsibilities. At a Rehabilitation Center on the campus, student counselors find their only opportunity outside of large metropolitan areas to gain practical experience in working with the handicapped—children, adults, and senior citizens as well as college students. Here they can study the problems of the deaf, the blind, the paraplegics—in short, the adjustment problems of people of all ages afflicted with physical and emotional handicaps.

Besides turning out technicians for clearly defined positions in hospitals, special schools, sanitariums, prisons and other institutions, this agency provides schooling for administrators who work not directly with the handicapped, but with communities and other groups in their behalf. Such personnel are in demand by organizations like the Red Cross, Tuberculosis Association, Easter Seal charities, et cetera.

This Institute also has started scheduling consultations and workshops for in-service rehabilitation workers. The Federal Government has awarded more than $100,000 in grants primarily for this purpose, and Institute staffers travel regularly to hospitals and sanitariums in Chicago and elsewhere in the state to conduct training sessions.

Approved at the same time as the Rehabilitation and Latin American Institutes, the Labor Institute has not as yet been activated. It will serve students and employees in labor and industrial relations.

Other universities active in this field have a varying extent of involvement. The famous School for Workers at the University of Wisconsin centers its efforts on practical instruction for local and regional union officials. Within the Institute of Management and Labor at Rutgers—which is divided into separate sections for research, labor, management and the general public—degrees are conferred on both the college and graduate levels.

Several courses in progress under the Division of Technical and Adult Education are among those which would apply for enrollees of the Labor Institute. Apprentice bricklayers, carpenters and plumbers are now pursuing training programs of from three to five years duration which were outlined by joint labor-management committees. A special course within the Division instructs labor union secretaries about the filing requirements of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Thus, the institutes at Southern have important obligations which can be met without imposing heavily on the University budget. In most cases, they have only one faculty member, the director, who reports to the Vice President for Instruction. However, outside experts are usually willing to contribute their services to an institute through teaching or consultation without pay, as adjunct professors. Too, the institutes have little need for special courses of instruction not already listed in the University catalog. They are, to a large degree, coordinating agencies which extract from the total University program any instructional offerings, research findings or available services which might improve the effectiveness of personnel in special areas of endeavor.

Viewed another way, the institutes are somewhat like testing laboratories on the periphery of the University for education in fields which are bidding to achieve the status level of traditional academic departments.

A report from the Educational Policies Commission of the National Education Association last year, referring to colleges, universities and institutes indiscriminately, accurately summed up the rationale for the institutes on Southern’s campus:

“Every decade has witnessed a significant increase in the number of occupations which look to higher education for their trained personnel. Each new educational program based on one of these occupations has had to win an academic place for itself, often against the opposition of established fields and always by an experimental evolution. Yet, significantly, no profession that has turned over to the University the responsibility for preparing its future members has ever revoked this mandate. Not only has the education provided been ordinarily of a higher caliber and given in shorter time than the occupation would secure by other means, but, by study of the occupation, higher education has contributed to its development.”
In this age of the Explorer and Sputnik, it is vital that we understand the problems of those who will help carry out the plans of the scientific experts. Labor unions have long been a controversial issue. Are we setting a special standard to judge them? We hope you will read with an open mind this article written by an expert in the field. We invite your comments.

In 1957 the civilian labor force averaged about 67 million persons. Of this group, perhaps 17 million were members of unions. These figures suggest that roughly one out of four in the labor force is unionized. While this statement is accurate, it also is misleading. The labor force includes businessmen, farmers, professional workers and the like who are not ordinarily found in unions. When allowance is made for persons such as the above and for domestics, casual workers and others, it is more accurate to say that only about one-third of those usually considered eligible for union membership have been organized.

Even though a minority of all workers are in unions, the labor movement in this country has aroused much interest and controversy. Some look at unions as the champion of workers and a bulwark of democracy in industrial relations; others look at unions as undemocratic, dictatorially led, leeches on the working class. Many lack sufficient knowledge to reach an informed judgment.

Programs Vary Widely

One reason for the difficulty in arriving at an informed opinion is the great differences in the composition, policies, and activities of the many organizations that comprise the labor movement in the United States. The 17 million members referred to earlier are in nearly 80,000 local unions. These may have only a handful of members or may have 50,000. A local may include members who are working for one employer only or in other instances members may work for many employers. Almost all locals are affiliated with a national union, such as the mine workers, carpenters, or auto workers. The local may be almost completely autonomous of the national union with which it is affiliated, or it may be controlled rather closely.

The policies and programs of the nationals also vary widely. Most of them, about 140 of the 200 recognized unions, are affiliated with one federation—the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. The federation has little authority over the affiliated nationals but may expel them if their policies or activities are too far out of line with those of the federation.

Generally workers in transportation, mining, manufacturing, construction, communications and printing are well organized. Unions are relatively weak and ineffective among office and clerical workers and agriculture and white collar type employment such as teaching, nursing and the like. Speaking in terms of geographic areas, agriculturally dominated areas, the South and much of the Midwest have been weakly organized, while the west coast, northern Atlantic and Great Lakes areas have had a relatively high degree of unionization.

Because of the wide variety of situations noted above, it is difficult to discuss and analyze the labor movement. A person can point to examples to prove almost anything he wishes. The problem in any such discussion is to try to examine and develop that which is representative or typical.

Public attitudes toward unions, shown by the handling of labor news in the press, by the type of legislation enacted and the nature of court rulings handed down, have been relatively unfriendly during most of our history. From the time unions began to develop in the United States, around 1800, until the 1930's our public policy can be described as varying from outright opposition to unions to, at best, an attitude of grudging toleration.

Unfriendliness Not Directed at Workers

It is interesting to note that our unfriendliness was directed much more at unions than at working people. During the period when we either were opposing or giving no support to unions we saw the beginnings and some development of child labor legislation, laws regulating hours of work, workmen's compensation laws, a few minimum wage laws, industrial and mine safety legislation, et cetera. This tendency to oppose unions while planting the seeds of many kinds of protective labor legislation reveals much. The average law-maker, newspaper publisher, or non-unionized citizen (while willing to create some degree of legislative protection for the economically weak in our society) usually has not accepted the idea that unions are needed to represent and protect the interests of their members and of other workers. If this were not the case we in the United States would not have witnessed the clearly contradictory behavior of refusing any significant encouragement to unions while trying to protect by law the interests of working people.

There was one period of about 15 years following 1932 when various facets of labor legislation were in general agreement. During that period clear-cut backing was given to unions and at the same time various types of legislation favorable to workers were enacted at state and national levels. For the first time it was recognized that unions could and did offer some of the protection that might otherwise have to be accorded by legislation.

Rapid Growth Brings Resentment and Doubt

The rapid growth of unions and the enormous increase in their economic power between 1933 and 1947 helped to bring an end to the short-lived period of legislative and judicial encouragement of unionism and collective bargaining. Probably the prime factor underlying the resurgence of criticism and opposition was the resentment of certain economic groups who saw their position threatened by the growth of powerful unions. Business groups found themselves facing knowledgeable and formidable opponents at the bargaining table and in the political arena. White collar and professional groups found that the economic position of organized labor improved greatly when contrasted with the pre-World War II economic condition of non-manual workers. Farmers and the public were told (by business and financial interests and the press) that the high wage policies of unions were the primary cause of high prices. All of these factors served to build doubt about and resentment toward the growing power of unions. Most persons or groups can find reasons to oppose that which threatens their real or fancied best interests.

Organized labor gave several convenient excuses for opponents to voice their opposition. No group is apt to fight another group publicly on the basis of "we are likely to be hurt by the actions of this new power-bloc." Rather it will be argued that "the actions of this new power-bloc threaten the welfare of the public." Thus, the critics of unions have argued that public welfare is being threatened by unions. The labor trouble of the World War II and post-war periods furnished a basis for much criticism. Recently the hearings of the McClellan Committee revealed distressing, but far from typical, examples of racketeering and corruption, and gave rise to much criticism and to calls for laws to enforce a clean-up. Stories of undemocratic and dictatorial practices in unions are widespread and repeated frequently.

All of these instances of misbehavior, frequently expanded out of all proportion to reality, are used as a basis for demands by the critics of unionism for more rigidly controlling labor legislation. It is doubtful, however, if the type of laws that are likely to be pushed in the coming months will help significantly (or are even designed) to meet the problems of corruption, lack of democracy, and the like. In post-war years many states—18 by the end of 1957—have enacted "right-to-work" laws. These will be pushed in other states and there is considerable discussion currently about a federal "right-to-work" bill.

Enactment of such laws in other states or passage of a federal right-to-work law will be an unfortunate event. The laws have little to do with the right of a worker to a job. They are simply measures to prohibit the union shop or any other kind of union security clause. Such legislation clearly is misnamed. It should be called accurately anti-union-shop legislation. Certainly the laws will not touch in any way some of the abuses, found in some unions, that should be eliminated. Right-to-work laws will not ensure greater participation by members in the activities of their unions, nor will any other law of which the writer can conceive. Graft or corruption is outside the law already and new legislation probably is not the most fruitful approach to this matter. The same situation applies to the widely publicized but non-typical violence that occurs from time to time when labor disputes erupt.

Must Serve Interests of the Public

Obviously, any institution as big and powerful as the trade union movement in the United States is of importance to the public. Its shortcomings should not be glossed over. It must serve reasonably well the interests of the public or else be subject to legislative controls to keep its behavior in line with social welfare. Certainly there is need for a great body of labor legislation. First, because a majority of all workers are not in unions and may not be for a long time, there is need of much protective legislation. Child labor regulations, minimum wage, hours, safety and social security measures, to name a few, must be continued and improved. As to unions, we should continue legislatively to recognize the right to organize and to bargain collectively with as much freedom as is commensurate with public welfare. However, further legislation to prevent or punish dishonesty, racketeering and any other serious abuse of unions or union officials seems to the writer to be unnecessary unless present legislation is proved (after sincere application) to be inadequate.

On the other hand, we should try to be as open-minded with regard to unions as toward other social institutions; it is not defensible to use different standards to judge different groups. The issue of democracy and member participation is a case in point. Unions do not arouse the necessary amount of interest among their members to develop the degree of participation among members that would be desirable. Frequently they are criticized for this. Yet corporations, churches, the body politic, professional societies and other institutional groups fall far short of the widespread member or owner participation that would be desirable. These groups are not subject to the same public criticism for these shortcomings that unions are. The public, the press, and lawmakers are inclined to be more critical of unions than of other groups with similar shortcomings.

Unions Judged by Different Standards

The public is not likely to sanction major restrictive controls on doctors if an abortionist is exposed. Nor does an ambulance-chasing or otherwise dishonest or unethical lawyer arouse the same degree of public indignation that a dishonest union official does. A business firm that is successful and shows excellent profits is considered “successful” while a union that successfully negotiates a wage increase may be labeled by the public as “irresponsible” and feeding the fires of inflation. The yardstick of public opinion is a rubber one; all institutions in our society are not judged by the same standard.

Obviously “two wrongs do not add up to one right.” If corporations are not democratically operated, this does not excuse the typical situation in a union where a minority of members are likely to participate and carry on the activities of the organization. But we must realize that many shortcomings of the public cannot be eliminated by statute. Laws cannot ensure member-participation in a union, or corporation or political body. Laws can require that members be accorded the right to participate if they wish. But the constitutions and by-laws of most unions allow this at the present. The failure is not in the absence of a certain right, but in the exercise of an existing but underutilized right.

Many of the problems of unions arise from the relatively slight activity of members. Graft and corruption are more likely to develop in such a climate. Domination of policies by a minority sprigs from the same source. Many union leaders are aware of the situation and try to encourage more member activity. In addition to regular scheduling and announcing of meetings, a great variety of ideas have been tried, such as door prizes, free refreshments after meetings, refunding a part of dues to those who attend, or educational or entertainment activities in conjunction with the session. All of these fall short of the mark of widespread member participation. One of the serious needs of unions today is a method of arousing an interest among members that will make a majority of them active and participating persons. This has proven much more difficult than putting a man-made satellite in an orbit.

Public Needs to Know Unions

In the United States today the public needs to learn the nature of unions, their policies and goals. They should remember that trade unions such as we have today in the United States have been a casualty of dictatorships wherever that political plague has flourished. Dictators have recognized unions as institutions helping to establish political and industrial democracy and for that reason have fought free trade unions. If the American public recognized this and the framework within which unions must operate, there might be less readiness to curb unions and their activities. Probably the critical public attitude toward unions that was commented on earlier arises in good part from a lack of understanding of the operations of the great majority of unions in the nation—those that rarely figure in the headlines, or even a news story.

Also, members of unions need to be involved in educational programs. The membership needs to understand the structure and functioning of the group of which they are a part and the importance of membership interest and activity if unions are to continue to exist and become more effective as one of the mainstays of our democracy. Many unions are making an attempt to educate their members to be better informed unionists and citizens of their community. Some organizations are working alone, others are cooperating with colleges and universities. Even with the hundreds of conferences and short courses offered each year, only the surface of the need has been scratched. However, the effort serves clearly to point the direction which much union effort should take in the future.

PLAN YOUR VACATION NOW

Reservations are coming in for the Alumni Family Camp at Little Grassy Lake. Why not plan your vacation now and join the other alumni sometime this summer between August 17 and September 13.

Reservations, due July 1, will be handled on a first come first served basis. They should be accompanied by the price of one day’s camping rate per person ($5.50) and checks should be made payable to the SIU Alumni Association.

Available for Alumni Association members only, reservations will not be accepted for less than one five-day week. The week runs Monday through Friday. The rate for children between the ages of three and twelve is $4.50 per day and for those under three, $2.50.

While no formal program will be set up, you and your family can swim, hike, go boating, play baseball, volleyball, horseshoes, use the rifle range, go horseback riding, play badminton, practice archery, fish, study nature, take part in group singing or go on cookouts.

FLASH

From the favorable comments received, the first annual Alumni Club Officers’ Workshop held Saturday, February 22, on Southern’s campus, was quite successful. More than 80 persons participated, including not only club officers, but members of the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association, a representative of the SIU Board of Trustees and staff members. Of the 34 alumni clubs, 15 were represented. The workshop was held just before press time but a complete story (including a number of photos) will appear in the May issue.
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Goffrey Hughes is a "natural" for his assignment as executive director of Southern Illinois, Inc., a position he assumed a little over six years ago. For Mr. Hughes is dedicated to "building an industrial economy in Southern Illinois," the goal of SII.

Sometimes referred to as an "eternal optimist," he feels that manufacturing prospects in the area have never been brighter. He also feels that Little Egypt's basic industry, coal mining, is staging a comeback. He points out with pride the fact that many people in Southern Illinois stay in the area, holding fast to a belief in her economic recovery, rather than seeking greener pastures elsewhere.

Like another well-known Illinoisan, Hughes was born in a two-room log house. He attended a rural grade school and went to high school in Christopher. He received his bachelor of education degree from Southern in 1927 and later spent two summer sessions doing graduate work at the University of Illinois.

Mr. Hughes taught in a rural school from 1923 to 1925. In 1926 he was principal of Washington Elementary School in Christopher. He transferred to the principalship of Lincoln Junior High School in Christopher, where he served until 1930. He taught history and government courses in Christopher Community High School from 1931 to 1934. In 1935 Hughes was made principal of that high school and he served in that capacity until 1939 when he became superintendent of the Franklin County schools. Re-elected twice, he served that office 12 years.

During his tenure he was active in Chamber of Commerce affairs at Benton and served as the Chamber's president. It was during this tenure that he was appointed director of Southern Illinois, Inc. After serving on the board for three years, he was appointed, in 1951, executive director.

Mr. Hughes is a member of the SIU Foundation, the Board of Directors of the Bank of Christopher, the Baptist Church, Lions Club and the Masonic Lodge. He is past president of the Southern Division of Illinois Education Association and a past vice-president of the Illinois Association of County Superintendents. He is now serving as a director of the board of the Bald Knob Christian Foundation, Inc., and is active in many area promotional offices. He is a former member of the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association.

Mr. Hughes is married to the former Martha Stierwalt, ex '29, who is employed in the Placement Office at SIU. He and his wife have two daughters. The older, Martha Carol Hughes Cross, was graduated from Southern in 1954. Her husband, Bud Dean Cross, was graduated in 1953. The other daughter, Rosemary, is a senior at Community High School in Carbondale.

At press time, Mr. Hughes had been nominated by State Representative Bert Baker (D-Benton) as superintendent of the Illinois Division of Industrial Planning and Development. In his wire to Governor William G. Stratton, Baker said, "I believe that he has done such a fine job in his present position that he would be the most logical person for superintendent of the division."

DIRECTS MISSOURI BAR

The executive director of the Missouri Bar is a Southern alumnus. He is Wade F. Baker, '41. Appointed last October 1, prior to that Baker served as associate director.

Except for service in the Army in 1951-52, he was assistant secretary and counsel of the Illinois State Bar Association from April, 1946, to June, 1957, when he received the appointment as associate executive director of the Missouri Bar.
Born in Jackson County, he lived on a farm southeast of Carbondale until 1931 when he moved "to town." He lived in Carbondale until 1946. Entering the Army in 1942 as a private, he emerged in 1946 with the rank of major. While in service he was awarded the Bronze Star for meritorious service and received the five battle stars for participating in the military operations in the European theater.

Baker received his law degree from Lincoln College of Law in 1950. He was admitted to the Illinois Bar on June 19 of that year and admitted to the Missouri Bar on September 20, 1957.

Baker is a member of the Methodist Church in Jefferson City, Mo., where he and his wife and five-year-old daughter, Denise Ann, live on Route Two. He is also a member of the American Bar Association and belongs to the Masonic Lodge in Carbondale.

ATTORNEY-ADVISER TO FTC CHAIRMAN

William H. Cook, who attended Southern from 1938 to 1940, is attorney-adviser to the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. He was appointed last October.

Mr. Cook joined the Commission in April, 1954, and served first as an investigator for the Washington, D.C., field office. A year later he was assigned to compliance work in the General Counsel's office. He has been particularly active in anti-monopoly work.

Basic duty of the Federal Trade Commission is to protect and preserve our competitive free enterprise system. Specifically, the Commission was established to protect business and the public against unfair methods of competition and to prevent practices which would lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

The Commission has extensive advisory and regulatory functions. The advisory functions are exercised through reports to Congress and to the President and by recommendations for legislation. In addition, the Commission publishes trade practice rules and provides consultative services to small businessmen in regard to the antitrust laws. It also exercises quasi-judicial functions through the issuance of cease and desist orders which are injunctive in nature and prohibitive of acts of conduct in the future.

Cook's work consists primarily of assisting the Chairman of the Commission, both in a legal and administrative manner, in carrying out the mandates as outlined by Congress.

After joining the Commission back in 1954, Mr. Cook was loaned during the summer to the U.S. Senate Committee on Banking and Currency as an investigator in its study of the Federal Housing Administration. He also has worked on special reports which the FTC has submitted to Congress in connection with proposed legislation.

During World War II, Cook rose from a private to first lieutenant. Following the war, he engaged in private law practice in Charleston, Ill., and later was a partner in a laundry and dry cleaning business in Carbondale.

He attended public schools in Carbondale, went to Southern two years, and received his law degree from Washington University School of Law in 1947. A member of Kappa Alpha and Delta Theta Phi fraternities and the American and Federal Bar Associations, Mr. Cook lives in Washington, D.C., at 3707 Woodley Rd., N.W.

NAMED COMMISSIONER OF GENERAL SERVICES Administration's Transportation and Public Utilities Service in January, Samuel J. Scott, '34, of Metropolis is shown in an interview with President Dwight D. Eisenhower. As commissioner, Scott is responsible for the GSA Service which provides federal agencies with advice and assistance in traffic and utility matters and which represents the Government in rate cases brought before federal and state regulatory bodies.
After losing eight of their first 12 games, SIU’s cagers made a great comeback during the last half of the season to win six of its next seven games, moving into contention for the number two spot in the Interstate Conference standings.

(As the Alumnus went to press, Southern was in a four-way fight with Northern Illinois, Eastern Illinois and Normal for second.)

SIU began the changing tide of victories by beating Austin Peay State (Tenn.), 89-71, at Carbondale January 25. The Salukis then tripped Central Michigan, 68-59, and Eastern Michigan, 67-62, in away games; nosed out Eastern Illinois, 74-66; lost to Northern Illinois, 96-83; turned back a fine Beloit College quintet, 74-66; and dumped Illinois Normal, 77-75, in a double overtime thriller before losing a 65-59 heartbreaker to undefeated Western Illinois on February 15.

The loss to Western was SIU’s first home defeat in nine games, dating back to the 1956-57 season. The Salukis played brilliantly until the last seven minutes of the game, losing it at the free throw line. They were ahead of Western or had her tied until the last 60 seconds of the game.

Two SIU freshmen, Tom McGreal, 6-6, Rantoul, and Bill Roberts, 6-4, Monticello, have played key roles in Southern's improvement. Both forwards, the two have shown that they not only have great potential, but can play some excellent basketball now.

Also moving into the varsity limelight is Garrison Newsom, a 5-11 junior from Shawneetown, who was a star on the undefeated (in regular season) Shawneetown High School team four years ago.

Newsom has been averaging better than 15 points a game since breaking into the lineup and has been the chief ball-handler. Sammy Duane, senior from Galatia, has made valuable contributions by his cool, aggressive style of play. He turned defeat into victory by stealing the ball and driving for a basket in an important game against Eastern Illinois in early February.

Gene Sams, 5-10 guard from Albion, who was bothered by a throat infection in midseason, has returned to the lineup. Another varsity guard who has seen considerable action is Jim Lazenby, 5-11, Pinckneyville.

SIU’s co-captains, Seymour Bryson, Quincy, and Warren Talley, Pinckneyville, have been the mainstays as Southern has moved into the top division of the IIAC. Bryson leads the team in points and rebounds, while Talley is a defensive specialist.

Duane, Talley and Whitlock, who missed most of the season because of a knee injury, are the only seniors on the squad.

Wrestling

Southern’s wrestling team emerged from its first six meets undefeated and with the championship trophy in the 11-team Wheaton tournament held February 14-15.

At the end of the first half of the season, two SIU wrestlers, Captain Lee Grubbs, Overland, Mo., and Durward (Deke) Edwards, Southern’s blind wrestler, were undefeated. The two won championships at the Wheaton meet, each winning three straight matches in advancing to the finals.

In dual meets, the SIU matmen defeated Great Lakes, Eastern Illinois, Illinois Normal, Ritenour YMCA of St. Louis and Central Michigan.

Gymnastics

Southern’s very much improved gymnastic team lost three of its first seven meets, but two of those were to Western Illinois, eighth place finisher at the NCAA finals last year, and one to the University of Illinois, currently regarded as the nation’s top gymnastic team.

No one person has stood out on the gymnastic team, with the main feature being the overall balance. An SIU gymnast might win first in an event in one meet, only to be moved down to third by his own teammates in his next test. Many of the top men are freshmen.

Swimming

Despite the loss of a dozen key men by injury and scholastic ineligibility in early January, SIU’s swim-

DEMAND FOR ENGINEERING PERSONNEL FROM SIU INCREASES

According to the U.S. Office of Education, college students majoring in engineering in the United States and Territories increased by more than 20,000 last fall. The latest in a series of surveys disclosed that enrollments in various fields of engineering last fall totalled 297,077, compared with 277,052 a year ago.

These figures show a climb of 131,440 in engineering enrollments since 1951. The year—lowest for such enrollments since the surveys were started in 1949—engineering attracted only 165,637 students. This survey was conducted by the American Society for Engineering Education and the Office of Education and covered 221 institutions offering engineering degrees, of which 134 have graduate engineering programs. Both undergraduate and graduate enrollments were up last fall, compared with a year ago. Those studying for their first engineering degree increased from 251,121 to 268,761, those studying for their master’s degree from 22,529 to 24,136, and those studying for their doctorate, from 3,402 to 4,180.

Engineering degrees, also covered by the survey, totalled 37,039 for the academic year 1956-57. This was 10,036 more than the low year of 1953-54 but 21,091 fewer than 1949-50, the highest year in engineering graduations since the surveys were started. According to the Office of Education, the large number of engineering graduates that year was largely due to the financial assistance available to veterans.

Despite the fact that Southern has no engineering school, last year her Placement Service received 2,155 requests for personnel with engineering background. According to Dr. Roy Bryant, ’30, director of Placement Service, the figure in 1956 was 577, in 1955 it was 434. This gives you some idea of the urgent need and demand for men in engineering fields.

At the present time, there are 315 SIU students majoring in applied science (pre-engineering), 109 majoring in industrial science (industrial supervision) and 104 in industrial education (teaching).

AT THE CITY DESK OF THE CHINA POST are Dr. H. R. Long (l.) and William Lee, night city editor. Visiting professor of journalism at the National Political University in Taipei, Taiwan, Long is chairman of the Department of Journalism at SIU and is on leave this year. One night each week he works at the Post, daily English-language newspaper, to familiarize Chinese staff with American techniques of news gathering and editing. He also conducts an SIU extension course for Chinese journalists. Dr. Long will return to SIU in September.
Increasing Interest in Life Memberships Shown

In addition to those listed below who have paid their life membership in full, 200 are paying installments on regular life memberships, eight on family life memberships.

Don’t wait until your present membership in the Alumni Association expires to join the increasing number of lifetime members. The money you have paid for the current year will be applied on your life membership.

Class
Alumni Day is Saturday, June 14. Classes ending in three and eight and the class of 1957 will be holding reunions.

All classes ending in “three” and “eight” will be holding reunions on June 14. Be sure to put this date on your calendar and make your return to SIU a “must.” In addition to the usual five-year reunions, the class of 1957 will observe its first anniversary of graduation. We are particularly interested at this time in news of the anniversary classes. Tell us what you are doing so we can include the news in the next issue.

A GLINT IN THE SUN

Taking as his theme the eternal verities of life and death, with the unchanging visions, problems, stirrings of man and his nobility in defeat, Wesley Walton, ex '54, has written A Glint in the Sun. His first volume of poems, it was published by Pageant Press of New York.

The volume presages a bright future for this 23-year-old writer from Anna. In reviewing A Glint in the Sun, Pageant says, "Every so often a volume of verse by an unheralded poet is published which makes the most case-hardened and cynical critic sit up and take notice. It is a rare event and a happy one when such a young poet appears with unique style, a personal affinity to language and imagery, and an excitingly new mode of perception."

In the volume are poems for everyone. Short epigrams cut to the heart of matters "like a keen knife; dramatic monologues and dialogues give insight into fascinating psychologies; and personal lyrics reveal the moods and loves of a true poet."

Walton lives in Anna, the town founded by his great-great-grandfather and named after the founder's wife. He is engaged in the century-old family tradition of farming.

On January 6, Russell S. Grady died of a heart attack. A native of Carbondale, Mr. Grady taught at the University of Kentucky College of Commerce in Lexington. He received his master's degree in education from the University of Illinois in 1945 and had been on the University of Kentucky faculty for seven years. Survivors include the wife, the former Helen Blanchard, ex '42, the father and a half-brother.
A dress designed by Linda Walters of Walden has been chosen as the official uniform of the student nurses at Southern. She won a year's free tuition in a contest sponsored by the Department of Nursing. Miss Walters is a freshman in the department. The dress she designed was chosen for its originality and adaptability for street and hospital wear, according to Miss Virginia Harrison, department chairman. It is a golfer type dress, has a pointed collar, roll-up sleeves, action back, set-in belt and reinforced pockets. The blouse will be buttoned and the five-gore skirt will be gripper fastened. No decision has been made concerning the color. Students will begin wearing them next October, Miss Harrison said.

Bill Eidson of Alton and Richard Hunsaker of New Athens tied for the “Service to Southern” award in the men’s division. Eidson holds a Roscoe Pulliam Memorial Alumni Scholarship. Winner of the “Service to Southern” award in the women’s division was Sandra Unger of Hoopeston. These awards were made at the annual Theta Xi Variety Show last month. Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity took top honors at the show with a skit entitled “Conflict.” Judy Sirles, freshman from Alto Pass, with her acrobatic dance, won the individual act.

Dr. Hobart Osburn, associate professor of psychology, has received a $24,000 grant to investigate new ways of analyzing personality tests. The award came from the National Institute of Mental Health. Dr. Osburn began his studies five years ago when he was a civilian psychologist for the Army’s Personnel Research Branch. His objective is to obtain more information from tests of personality, attitude and performance than is now available. He is using SIU students for his investigation.

Dr. Gunther Wiegand has been elected to membership in the Mont Pelerin Society, an international body of leading philosophers, economists, historians and other students of public affairs. Purpose of the society, which includes members from 250 European, American and Latin American scholars, is to study economic and moral causes of the present “crisis of western civilization.” Born in Germany, Wiegand is a specialist in the history of monetary policy. He held positions in international business for 15 years before entering the education field. He is associate professor of psychology at Southern.

Another former college president will join Southern’s staff spring quarter when Dr. Lloyd Morey, former head of the University of Illinois, will come to Carbondale to serve as visiting professor in the School of Business. This brings the total of former college heads now on the SIU campus to five. Chosen to chairmen Southern’s new Department of Forestry next June is Dr. Neil Hosley. Hosley was formerly head of the forestry department at the University of Connecticut and he is now at Montana State University.

Joining the SIU staff April 1 will be Kenneth R. Miller, president of the Ohio Mechanics Institute, Cincinnati, O. He will serve as administrative assistant to the President, Dr. D. W. Morris. Normally, colleges and universities have fewer students in the winter than in the fall and Southern has been losing about five per cent of her enrollment between the two quarters. This year, however, it is a different story. Southern lost only two and one-half per cent of its students. Total resident student population numbers 7,892.

Two compositions by Will Gay Bottje, assistant professor of music, were selected by the Dallas (Tex.) Public Library for performance during the American Composers’ Conference held last month in Dallas. Bottje’s “Concertino for Piccolo and Orchestra” was performed by the Dallas Symphony Orchestra on February 9 and his “Quintet for Flute and Strings” was played the following day. A native of Grand Rapids, Mich., Bottje was graduated from the Juilliard School of Music and studied composition with Nadia Boulanger and Henk Badings while in Europe on a Fulbright grant in 1952–53. He received the first doctor of musical arts degree ever awarded by the Eastman School of Music. Bottje won the Thor Johnson brass composition contest in 1955 and his “Concertino for Piccolo and Orchestra” was chosen one of the outstanding regional compositions of 1957 at the University of Alabama Composition Symposium.
