Southern Illinois University and the City of Carbondale were the recipients of the State's highest awards for service to the handicapped when the Governor's Committee on the Handicapped Awards were bestowed for the first time in mid-October.

The governor's committee held its first annual banquet at Southern Illinois University and honored both the University and the City for work on behalf of handicapped persons, particularly for their efforts to remove architectural barriers.

Southern Illinois University, according to Silas P. Singh, an executive member of the governor's committee and coordinator of Specialized Student Services at SIU, has long been recognized for campus improvements designed to help the handicapped. Recognition for the City has been more recent, he said. "Carbondale has probably done more for the handicapped than any other city its size in the United States," Singh said.

SIU's School of Law has a clinic program different from any other law school in the County. It's giving 30 third-year law students and 10 administration of justice graduate students the opportunity to obtain experience in their future careers and to learn from each other. For the complete story, see page 2.

Edward J. Schmidlein was voted 1975's Great Teacher by alumni ballot. An "un-dry" accounting teacher, he has acquired quite a few tricks of the trade over the years. For a glimpse at who he is and some personal comments on his style of working "with the world's best inventory," turn to page 5.

Community Ambassadors come in all sorts of sizes. Some are short and some are tall. Some are young and some are—not so young. They all however are extremely dedicated—all working long hours, without pay, for Southern Illinois University and for their community. If you'd like to know who's doing what, the article is on page 6.

On the cover: October 25, the day the clowns came to town. Alumni, students, children enjoyed the parade, the game, the fun of it all . . . these are just some of the many faces of Homecoming, 1975.

A revolutionary prison legal aid program is in full swing at Southern Illinois University School of Law. Under the direction of Robert Dreher, 30 third-year law students, 10 administration of justice graduate students and four clinical staff attorneys are working to provide extra-legal service to prison inmates in and near southern Illinois.

Officially called Institutional Legal Aid (ILA), the multi-purpose program, funded by an Illinois Law Enforcement Commission grant of over half a million dollars, is geared at educating students about problems inmates experience in prison and at providing legal counseling to inmates with social or psychological problems.

"There are 51 different types of cases the students can handle." According to ILA Director Robert Dreher, "These include divorce, fraud, grievances, medical treatment programs, workman's compensation, estates, probation, welfare, parole denial, adoption and refund of bail."

"The agency handles more divorce cases than anything else, with child custody problems and financial affairs also ranking high on the case list." Gary Smith, ILS administrative assistant, continued, "The ILS staff also has been involved in efforts to improve conditions within the penal system itself.

"I don't believe the public really cares about the dehumanizing conditions that exist in the prisons. Since they don't care, the legislature won't change laws to better the situation. The responsibility is therefore on the legal system to pressure the legislature into taking action," Smith stressed.

It's important to remember that a program can be revolutionary and not be the tool of rebels. In many cases the ILS personnel are trying to see to it that the rights guaranteed to the prisoner by the court are given to him. "Under the eyes of the law every man is granted the right of protection," Smith elaborated, "He should be able to exist in the penal system without having to question his safety. It's not that way now but we have and are going to come up with guidelines that will make personnel working in the prisons protect offenders against homosexual gang raids and stabbings."

In addition to working for the betterment of the prison
“We believe our services can help to relieve tensions and anxieties of inmates, thus reducing the number of prison rule violations by frustrated inmates.”
"Another aspect of our program is that it enables the inmates to have experience in utilizing the services of 'the establishment' in solving problems."

System in general, the program helps the inmates on a one to one basis with legal problems which formerly, due to a shortage of personnel, remained unsolved.

"Our theory is that clients have legal problems that are magnified due to psychological or social problems. The pressures of a wife wanting a divorce could create hostilities and anxieties. We believe our services can help to relieve tensions and anxieties of inmates, thus reducing the number of prison rule violations by frustrated inmates," Dreher said.

"Another aspect of our program is that it enables the inmates to have experience in utilizing the services of 'the establishment' in solving their problems, rather than resorting to law violations to gain their ends. Thus, they are indirectly learning that 'the establishment' can work for them," Dreher said. "The basis for the clinic program is our belief that inmates are as entitled to legal guidance as any person."

Administration of justice and law students working with the program seem to gain satisfaction by being able to help the inmates, "I can help the inmate by giving him a chance to get out of a marriage, getting him a divorce." Mike Nesbitt, an administration of justice graduate student continued, "I can look into his 'good time' (the period of time served without any behavioral problems), and make sure it is recorded.

Describing law student benefits of the program, Art Redgrave, a third year law student, said, "We have the opportunity of sampling a real cross section of cases and getting practical experience in the delivery of those cases."

"As a third year law student, I have the opportunity to utilize the theories I've learned in my first two years in law, under the 711 rule of the Illinois Supreme Court which enables me to represent clients in court," Bill Schwartz said.

"It's a solid program," Dreher emphasized. "Students visit prisons regularly to see their clients, getting further information regarding their cases and keeping their clients informed of the case's progress. The students are continually supervised by the staff attorneys who see to it that all legal procedures are followed and that the students get all the help and guidance they need. From the students standpoint, the administration of justice students, many of whom will work in prisons during their careers as wardens and administrators, become familiar with legal problems and procedures. Law students gain not only practical experience, in handling cases so they are more familiar with prisons and have more practical experience when they graduate, but as future leaders in their communities and as future judges and legislators they are knowledgeable of the problems of criminal justice and can better serve their community and state."

The concept of administration of justice and law students working together is what makes this clinic program unique. According to Dreher, "Most schools of law have clinical programs but only five others have prison oriented ones and ours is the only one that covers both the legal and social/psychological problems."

In addition to gaining this practical experience, student counselors who participate in the program are given field credit from the University. Students handle over 90 per cent of the case load, according to ILS administrators.

"Presently we have over 900 cases in the office which have developed since the grant became operative the first of February. That averages out to approximately 110 cases developing per month," Dreher said.

The program reportedly serves a potential of over 3,000 inmates who are incarcerated in correctional institutions at Menard, Vienna and Vandalia, plus the East St. Louis Work Release Center and the House of Glass (Southern Illinois Work Release Center) in Carbondale. This number could vastly increase if the ILS administrators' hopes of incorporating the federal penitentiary in Marion into the program are realized.

Hopes, ambitions, dedicated staff, enthusiastic students are all important links to the success of the program but the ILS has an additional advantage of having three staff members who are ex-offenders. Reportedly, these ex-offenders, two of whom have served time in some of the prisons the ILS is dealing with, can provide student counselors with the expertise needed to counsel inmates.

One ex-offender working on the program described the ILS as a service that, "Gives the inmates hope. It gives them the representation in the courts that they deserve. Ultimately, it gives the prisoners some representation and some voice in the policies that will govern the future administration in Illinois prisons."
In physical stature he's not a big man but just the same Edward J. Schmidlein is 1975's Great Teacher. The alumni of Southern Illinois University voted Dr. Schmidlein the award and after spending less than a quarter of an hour with the professor of accountancy, it's easy to see why. His friendly, open manner and warm smile make him an extremely likeable person. His obvious dedication make him a great teacher.

A CPA, gone teacher, he claims he left the business world for a teaching post so he could "Work with the best inventory in the world—people. I derive a great satisfaction from seeing students fulfill their potential. If they try, it doesn't bother me when they can't understand all the concepts the first time through. After all, in the introductory course, I would say on the average, two-thirds to three-fourths of the students are not going into accounting as a career. They are going into some other aspect of business—marketing or management—and need to understand accounting but not produce it," Schmidlein said.

"I adopt the attitude towards the beginning class of helping students to consume accounting and understand it rather than trying to force them into producing it," he said in a voice that still bears a trace of accent derived from his New York origins.

Just as the students have a responsibility of being prepared, Schmidlein makes demands on himself, "I'm enthusiastic about the subjects I teach and do a lot of hard work preparing. You've got to know the material. I don't use extensive lecture notes but rather a general outline I can expand on as the class begins. If some humorous anecdote occurs to me, I tell it.

"A classroom shouldn't be like a morgue. If a student says something funny, I laugh. I don't plan jokes. There aren't any notes written in the margins of my notes to 'stop and tell this one,' but if I think of one, I tell it. It all boils down to, learning shouldn't be a chore. It may be hard work but it should be bearable hard work," Schmidlein explained.

Class discussion of articles from current newspapers and magazines and relating the material to the world and to his students' future lives, are two effective techniques Schmidlein employs to liven up the classes. "I try to bring a copy of an article to class and though usually one or two students may have already read it, they may not have understood it fully. But by class discussion they gain a better understanding of what the article meant. I take things from Business Week, Forbes, Fortune magazine and of course, the Wall Street Journal. It may seem like a lot of reading, going through all the trade publications, but I consider it necessary." Schmidlein continued, "It goes along with my philosophy of being as prepared for class as possible."

The alumni of Southern Illinois University were not the first people to recognize Dr. Schmidlein's teaching expertise. He received the Standard Oil Outstanding Teacher, College of Business in 1969; the Most Outstanding College of Business Instructor in 1970; Best Lecturer, College of Business in 1972 and 1973; and the M.B.A. Association Faculty Award in 1974. Commenting on receiving the Alumni Great Teacher Award, Schmidlein said, "It would be false modesty to say I didn't think I was considered a good teacher by my students but there's a difference between being a good teacher and being selected as Great Teacher for the University. To paraphrase the words of Neil Armstrong, It was 'a giant step forward.' The receipt of the award has made me very thankful to the former students who voted for me, many of whom have either phoned or written to offer congratulations. I would also like to thank my wife, Lee Anne, for her many constructive comments and her constant advocacy."
Community Ambassadors Program... It’s Working

Serving as liaisons between their communities and Southern Illinois University, 20 enthusiastic Community Ambassadors are working long hours, without pay, for the betterment of their University and city, alike.

The upshot from three charter ambassadors to 20 came about over the summer and plans for further expansion are underway. “We need 12 to 15 more ambassadors in the northern areas and in the smaller local communities. Originally we were forced to bypass some of these less-populated towns in an effort to reach out to as many people as possible, as quickly as possible,” Boyd Butler of area services explained.

Accepting a community ambassadorship is a commitment to hard work. They spend long hours on the phone talking with area high school students who have expressed an interest in attending SIU. Fielding questions about University procedures, on and off campus housing, admission, curriculums, student work and the whole gamut of who’s, what’s, when’s and why’s. Any questions they receive are relayed to the area services personnel who in turn work with the proper offices on campus and return a written reply to the individual regarding his or her question.

Living in their ambassadorship community, they have an inside track into what issues are creating “talk” in their locale. These comments, negative and positive, are reported back to area services. Thus, the University can keep abreast of the various pulse beats of surrounding communities. Besides being spokespeople for their cities or towns, they can get answers for individuals, too.

One situation which recently presented itself to West Frankfort’s ambassador, Madge Presley, involved a local housing problem. Two students from her community rented an apartment last spring with the understanding that they would move in this fall. Over the summer, however, their landlord rented the apartment to someone else and gave the girls another apartment in the same building. This latter apartment had previously been the home of a Doberman pinscher who had left his distinctive mark on the premises. The walls were scratched; the bed was odor-ridden, stained and full of dog hair. While attempting to clean the apartment, the students bumped the air-conditioner, knocking it out of the window. Their landlord asked them to pay the $200 to replace it. The girls told Madge who relayed the problem to area services. “We contacted housing officials on campus and the next thing we heard, the landlord had dropped the request for the money, was having the apartment painted and had purchased a new bed for the West Frankfort lessors,” Butler said.

In addition to solving housing, admissions and student financial aid problems, ambassadors can help you arrange and schedule programs for community, church, school and/or club meetings.

Chosen by area services personnel and Assistant Director Jay King of the Alumni Office, these individuals have proven their loyalty to the University in the past, through dedicated service. “Some of them are presently holding positions in an alumni club. Many of them have been active in SIU alumni clubs in the past. We couldn’t have chosen a better group of people to work with,” Butler concluded, “but then we had some fairly stiff criteria. We went with winners.”

The winning line-up includes: Mr. Calvin Agee of Centralia; Mr. William, ’71, and Mrs. Melinda, ’72, Duggan of Olney; Dr. Cleo Carter, ’46, MS ’49, Marion; Mr. Maurice Clark, ’38, MS ’53, Metropolis; Mrs. Mildred Dial, ’68, Chester; Mrs. Margaret Edwards, McLeansboro; Mrs. Jean Ibendahl, Tamaroa; Mr. Lon McHaney, ’56, MS ’71, Mt. Vernon; Ms. Virginia Marmaduke, ex ’33, of Pinckneyville and Ms. Cecilia Muckelory, ’61, MS ’71, Jonesboro.

Mrs. Madge Presley, ex ’42, in West Frankfort; Mrs. Lois Ratz, ex ’50, in Red Bud; Dr. Robert Raver, ’51, MS ’56, Ph.D. ’73, of Salem; Mr. Oliver Shoaff, ’48, Mt. Carmel; Mr. Jack Simmons, ’50, MS ’55, of Harrisburg; Mr. James Throgmorton, ’52, Vienna; Mr. Stephen Ward ’72, MBA ’74, Fairfield; Mr. Marion Webb, ’56, MS ’63, Nashville; Mrs. Mae R. Winkler in Mound City and Mr. Walter B. Young, Jr., ex ’45, Carmi, are also serving as community ambassadors.

The Southern Illinois University Alumni Association as well as the University are proud of these individuals and appreciate the work they have done and are continuing to accomplish.

Smile, you’re on candid camera. Junior seems to want to run and play but the more experienced picnicers know it’s wise to sit for a while after consuming large quantities of food. Food and drink was the name of the game at the Chicago Area Picnic, held in August. The youngers and the olders turned out in mass to eat, drink and be merry.

Versatility is the name of the food game in the Student Center these days. Featuring Italian and Mexican cuisine, management is trying their darnest to put their best menu forward in an effort to please the students.

Pizza and Italian beef sandwiches are served daily in the Big Muddy Room in the Student Center. "The pizza is fresh, too. We buy pre-made shells but fix the topping right before the customer. Whether the students want cheese, sausage, burger, or pepperoni, we can please them. And if someone wants something just a little special, we offer a 'Saluki Special,' that's a deluxe pizza with plenty of onions, peppers and mushrooms on it," Robert Underwood explained.

Admitting he might be a bit prejudice, Underwood said, "This is the best thing that's ever happened to the Big Muddy Room. Pizza is a universal dish. It's accepted as a snack and a one course meal. The students are reacting favorably. We also have re-wired the sound system, which has improved the acoustics for jukebox music and live entertainment is provided every Wednesday and Friday afternoon and on some Saturday and Sunday nights."

Upstairs in the cafeteria, the Mexican food is reportedly doing quite a business. "Even though we've started offering four other entrees instead of the traditional three, the tacos, tamales with chili, enchiladas and burritos have really pleased a surprising number of faculty, staff and students."

The clientele is good and steady in the cafeteria. "We serve in the neighborhood of 1,600 people per day during a six-and-a-half hour period," Underwood said. "We are presently close to offering any kind of service imaginable. More is being done now than ever before. Yet, anything is possible as far as future plans for versatility. We just want to get as much variety as possible for the students. With the ice cream, the Mexican Food and the pizza, we're making big strides."

With the coming of the early 60's, white socks, loafers, tight levis, tricycle races, button down collars and mohair sweaters came to SIU as they did to many other universities. Southern, however, also got an ice cream stand.

The stand, which was conveniently located in the Oasis of the Student Center, gave way to novelty ice cream products when the Center was renovated in 1970. It was then that the single, double, and triple decker ice cream cones which had dotted the campus for years vanished.

Brought back by popular demand, ice cream cones are again available on Southern Illinois University's campus.

"The standards, chocolate, strawberry and vanilla are always offered and," Robert Underwood, resident general manager of food service, added "usually we have a sherbert and a 'daily special', too." Underwood describes the business of selling ice cream cones as good and expects things to really pick up now that fall semester is in full swing and the Oasis is open longer hours than during summer session.

As in times gone by, one's rights are still a big issue on campus. There are different students at SIU these days and they, like the thousands before them, have the opportunity of pursuing their inalienable right, if happiness is indeed an ice cream cone from "ye ole ice cream shoppe."

half of Beggs, Horton said, "His willingness to take on additional responsibilities at such short notice is an indication of the willingness of people here at SIU to give of themselves for the welfare of the University."

In his new position Beggs is responsible for academic planning in Horton's office until a permanent appointment to the position is made. He is also heading University Programs—headed by Serfass before his death—while a review of that unit is being conducted by the academic vice president's office.

Beggs is meanwhile continuing to devote part of his time to his duties as associate dean of the College of Education.

According to Horton, Beggs has requested that he not be considered for the permanent post of assistant vice president for academic affairs. A search committee is currently seeking candidates for the position.

Grant Continues Study

A chemist at SIU has received a $6,000 grant from the Gulf Oil Foundation to continue study of the removal of sulfur from fossil fuels.

Gerard V. Smith, professor in the department of chemistry and biochemistry is studying hydrodesulfurization—the removal of organic sulfurful compounds from coal or oil by use of a catalyst.

"We're trying to learn how sulfur-containing molecules interact on the surface of the catalyst," Smith said. "The more we learn about the process, the more we can improve it."

Smith has been studying hydrodesulfurization for about three years.

Grads Find 'Major' Jobs

A mail survey of radio-television graduates of SIU shows that more than 60 per cent of them are working in their chosen field, a success figure almost double that of similar programs elsewhere, according to the chairman of the SIU department of radio and television.

Charles Lynch said he checked out 854 persons who were graduates from the department from the time it was formed in 1951 through June 1974.

Of those, 543 are now working in broadcasting-related fields. No employment information was available on 179 of the graduates and 132 others were found to be in professions outside of broadcasting.

"The percentage of our graduates in the field is almost double that of radio and television departments at other universities," Lynch said. "Most schools find that only about 35 per cent of their R-TV students actually go into the broadcasting field."

Lynch said the survey showed SIU graduates working in broadcasting-related operations ranging from the offices of Mary Tyler Moore's MTM and Norman Lear's Tandem Productions to the CBS radio network, Midwest Family Stations and the Leo Burnett Co., Inc., advertising agency.

Lesar Receives Senate Commendation

Hiram H. Lesar, dean of the SIU School of Law (center), receives a resolution of commendation passed by the Illinois Senate. The resolution expresses the appreciation of the members of the Senate for the work Lesar did as interim president of SIU between March and December of 1974. Making the presentation is David Elder '50, staff assistant to the Senate Education Committee (right) and Alumni Board of Directors member. George R. Mace, SIU vice president for University relations, looks on.
good reputation with employers, who call us constantly for job applicants, and with students, who come here for training," Lynch said.

There are 514 radio-television students enrolled at SIU this fall, 60 more than last year. "We’re growing by ‘leaps and bounds’," said Lynch.

Have Sled, Will Slide

To most people, riding a sled down snow-covered hills is kid stuff.

But a professor at SIU rides his with utter seriousness—all the way to the 1976 Winter Olympics, he hopes.

Richard M. Sanders, a professor in the SIU Rehabilitation Institute, has been named to the four-man 1976 U.S. Olympic luge team. The luge (pronounced lOO-zh) is a 48-inch-long metal-and-fabric sled, ridden in competition down a bobsled run which has been partly iced to boost speed.

Top-notch luge riders often reach speeds of more than 90 miles per hour.

In spite of his sledding skills, Sanders doesn’t have years of experience in luge competition. In fact, he and his family first tried their collective hand at it in 1973, after watching televised coverage of “the luge” from the 1972 winter games in Japan.

“It looked like something we could do, and it wasn’t as expensive as sports car racing, which I had quit because of cost,” Sanders said.

The whole family—Sanders, his wife, Barbara, and children, Deborah and Edward—went to the Lake Placid, N.Y., bobsled run to try their luck at luge.

With more than passing success. In his first competition—the American National Championship—Sanders finished second, behind the then-national champion. Barbara finished third in the women’s division, while Edward and Deborah dominated junior competition, garnering gold and silver medals, respectively.

“We’ve been going back ever since," Sanders said. And they’ve been winning ever since: Sanders’ number four position on the luge team is behind three prior Olympic competitors, while Edwards holds the current American Athletic Union junior gold medal, and Deborah has the current Junior Olympic gold medal.

Kilmstra Honored

A SIU zoologist has been appointed to a national advisory committee to the Secretary of the Interior.

Willard D. Kilmstra, director of the SIU Cooperative Wildlife Research Laboratory, has been appointed to a two-year term on the nine-member Fish and Wildlife and Parks Natural Sciences Advisory Committee. Kilmstra said he expects the committee will be asked for policy advice in areas such as people management and park use, interaction between people and wildlife, and management of refuges and similar facilities.

The Search Goes On

A nationwide search for a computing center director at SIU has been announced by President Warren W. Brandt. The 11-member search committee has reportedly begun the hunt for the Thomas D. Purcell replacement.

Purcell, one of the original developers of electronic computing systems at SIU, requested reassignment to a new position as associate director of the University’s institutional research office. The move was effective October 1 and William G. Miller, coordinator of management information systems at the University, has been appointed acting computing center director until a successor to Purcell is found.

George Mace, vice president for University relations and acting vice president for administration and campus treasurer, said, “It’s difficult to find an appropriate measure for the contributions Purcell has made to the University’s developments in data processing. He was a member of the team that set up SIU’s original computing center in an old cafeteria building in 1957. He was instrumental in shaping the University’s ‘total information system’ design in the early 1960’s as well as the subsequent organization of a third-generation-equipped Data Processing and Computing Center in the Wham Building in the mid 1960’s.

“He’s seen us advance from the keypunch cards used in the 1950’s to the sophisticated IBM system SIU now employs for management, research and teaching missions of every variety,” Mace concluded.

In his new position, Purcell will be working on special programs. The office is responsible for dozens of data-gathering and analysis tasks related to University operations.
THE OPENING GAME of the important 1976 basketball season is only a few days away and coach Paul Lambert has noted progress the team has made.

"We have completely changed our offense," Lambert said. "In the past we relied on a mobile post man and our offense was inside-oriented. Without a center the size of Joe Meriweather, we will become an outside-oriented team," Lambert said.

(Meriweather has done well in early games with the Houston Rockets of the National Basketball Association. He was the subject of a pre-season sketch on the Rockets in a recent issue of Sports Illustrated.)

Of course, pre-season all-American Mike Glenn has sparkled in early workouts. The 6-3 junior guard from Rome, Ga., is considered by many to be the finest outside shooter in collegiate basketball.

Joining Glenn in the starting lineup will be returnee Corky Abrams, who has grown an inch to 6-8, and probably three freshmen.

Those freshmen are talented, but all first-year players need time to develop. Unfortunately, with the early-season schedule including such powers as UCLA, Michigan, Princeton, Creighton and the likes all on the road, Lambert will have to give his new players their baptism under fire.

Al Williams, a skinny 6-8 forward has been the most impressive of the group. He is an excellent perimeter shooter and surprisingly good passer.

Rounding out the starting five will probably be Richard Ford, the outstanding player in the Alabama state tournament last year as well as Gary Wilson, the leading scorer and rebounder in the Georgia high school all-star game the past August.

"The enthusiasm in practice has been excellent," Lambert said. "This group is an easy bunch to work with. On weekends they like to take home films of past years' games and study the various offenses and defenses."

Season ticket sales are near an all-time record as fans want to take advantage of the attractive home schedule which includes appearances by all of the Missouri Valley Conference teams as well as Louisville, Evansville, St. Louis, Chicago Circle, Virginia Commonwealth and Culver-Stockton.

In most pre-season polls, the Salukis are pegged for fourth place in the Valley. The consensus of the pre-season picks have Wichita State as the favorite followed by Drake, Bradley, SIU, West Texas State, New Mexico State and Tulsa. Glenn has been figured to battle Wichita State's 6-10 Robert Elmore and Bradley's Mike Davis for player of the year honors.

"We have the depth we need for the Valley schedule," Lambert said. "This is as rugged a league as there is in America. In fact, not since 1948 has a team finished the Valley round robin schedule with an unbeaten mark. It looks much the same this season."

For ticket information for Southern Illinois home games, contact the athletic ticket office at the SIU Arena, Carbondale, Ill. 62901 or phone 618-453-5319.

The basketball game against Wichita scheduled to be held on January 10 at the SIU Arena has been declared the Alumni Appreciation Day game. All alumni association members are invited to pick up a free reserved ticket at the door. The game starts at 7:35 p.m. Try to be there!

THE SPEED, DEPTH AND EXPERIENCE of the Southern Illinois swimming team could be the most frightening thing to hit the water since "Jaws."
World champion Jorge Delgado and all-Americans Dave Swenson and Mike Salerno plus three very talented freshmen are sure to lead the Salukis to improvement over last season's 17th national ranking. "This should be Southern Illinois' best year ever," said Saluki coach Bob Steele. "We have a lot of quality and experience in every event. The kids are coming off their best summer of workouts."

Steele's anticipation of a good year is contagious around the campus. Jorge Delgado gained national publicity at the Pan American Games in Mexico City this October winning a gold medal in the 200-meter freestyle while taking two bronze medals in the butterfly.

"Delgado is a super team man who can swim anything," said Steele who was named Ecuadorian national coach at Mexico City. "And he's a valuable recruiting asset."

The Salukis did not recruit in great numbers, but "We don't look for numbers to fill positions," Steele said of his recruiting procedure, "It's whether they can place in the nationals that counts."

Jorge Jaramillo, another Latin American placed 10th in the 200-meter butterfly at the World Championships coming out of a two-year retirement to swim his best times ever.

Greg Porter of Hinsdale (Central) won 10 state prep championships and could be a national finalist in the butterfly and individual medley.

Brian Gadeken of Spokane, Wash., will be right behind all-American Dave Swenson in the distance freestyle despite a crowd of sound veterans in that area.

All of last season's squad returns intact except for the loss of senior diver Steve Ruddell. Sophomore Brian Kirmse will handle those duties single-handedly. Following a summer when the talk of the town was a great white shark, this could be the year of the Saluki.

BEGINNING HIS 20TH year at Southern Illinois, Bill Meade looks forward to his coaching duties as enthusiastically as ever. "I really look forward to practice each day. It is really an enjoyable experience working with these kids." "These kids are some talented freshmen recruits of which Meade will blend with some outstanding upperclassmen to form this years squad.

The new freshmen include Rick Adams from Louisville, the reigning Kentucky state high school champion in all-around; Scott McBroom the all-around state champion from Rochester, Pa.; Arlington Hts. (Hersey) graduate Kevin Muenz, whose performance in the Illinois state championships earned him a second place in the and Phil Savage, Silver Spring, Md., whom Meade considers a 'sleeper' and a real find. "I believe two or three international performers are going to develop from these freshmen," states Meade.

Talented returnees from last year's team include Jon Hallberg, Tony Hanson, Steve Shepard, Gary Wallace and Kim Wall and Morris Levin.

Look for Southern Illinois to continue their excellence in gymnastics circles. They started with a big bang at the National Compulsory Meet, the Salukis took seven out of a possible eight first place finishes. In combining a wealth of talent with a highly respected and knowledgeable coach, the Salukis will remain a source of pride for all alumni.

THE LAST DAYS OF NOVEMBER mark the completion of the women's fall sports season.

Having the most successful season of any sport was field hockey. The first team can boast of a 10-2-1 record, with Helen "Hockey" Meyer as high scorer. SIU is again regarded as a strong contender in the Midwest Field Hockey Tournament, which will be held Nov. 15-16.

Long hard practice and a whole team effort brought the women's tennis team a fine reward as they tied with Western Illinois University for the runner-up position in the State Tournament. SIU was only two points behind the U of I who won the tournament.

Cross Country, a sport relatively new in the program, has been readily accepted by the SIU women. The cross country team currently has a 2-2 dual record and a 4th place at the WIU Invitational.

Next issue: women's badminton, basketball, gymnastics and swimming.
