Giving Back To A University She Loves

Lucy Sloan feels special pride belonging to a family that has contributed for more than 100 years to the growth and health of Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, and the surrounding region.

For generations her family graduated from Southern, starting with her maternal grandparents, Lucy Patten Barrow and J.W. Barrow, who each received two-year teaching certificates in 1898 from Southern Illinois Normal University (SINU).

According to Sloan, her paternal grandparents, W.O. Brown and his wife, Clara, arrived in Carbondale in 1914 when her grandfather was recruited by President Henry Shryock to establish a rural student teaching program—the first such offering in the nation. Brown Hall on campus is named for him.

“All of his (W.O. Brown) sons went to SIU, including my father, Leo Brown,” says Sloan. Leo graduated from University High School and earned his bachelor’s degree in education in 1932. After medical school at the University of Illinois, he returned to Carbondale and married Mary Brown, Lucy and J.W. Barrow’s daughter.

The Browns became an influential couple in the Carbondale community. Leo teamed with Mary’s father and her brother, Jack Barrow ’49, all physicians, to establish Carbondale Memorial Hospital and the Carbondale Clinic.

Mary was an active member of the community, becoming the first woman president of the hospital board and serving as president of the American Association of University Women. “My mother was president of every major organization in the area and was responsible for organizing the Shagbark Girl Scout Council,” says Sloan.

Leo was the first secretary of the Southern Illinois University Independent Board of Trustees in 1948 and served as its chair in 1950-51. In addition, he served as president of the SIU Alumni Association and received the Alumni Achievement Award in 1958. His brother, Martin Van Brown ’25 was also a member of the SIU Board of Trustees.

There are two endowed scholarships at the SIU Foundation the family supports. The Leo J. Brown Scholarship was established in 1986 and is given annually to upper division undergraduates in teacher education who have a financial need.

To honor her grandparents, Sloan established the Dr. and Mrs. J.W. Barrow and Mr. and Mrs. W.O. Brown Women of Promise Scholarship Fund which helps female students at Southern who have a record of leadership and service to their school and community.

“Lucy’s support and the support of her family throughout the years are shining examples of how alumni and those associated with SIU can give back to the University. We are very appreciative of this legacy of support to the University and the Foundation,” said Rickey McCurry, vice chancellor and chief executive officer of the Foundation.

“I love SIU and Carbondale and so did my grandparents,” said Sloan when the scholarship was announced in 1999. “I want to pay tribute to their accomplishments and help SIU students.”

Sloan, a member of the Illinois Board of Higher Education since 1993 and president of the Illinois Lincoln Excellence in Public Service Series, graduated from DePauw University as did her mother, Mary, and sister, Mary Alice Kimmel, who also earned a master’s degree from SIUC in 1993.

From the beginning, however, virtually the entire family became Life Members of the SIU Alumni Association, including Sloan’s brother, Jerry ’71, M.S. ’72, his wife, Norma ’64, and their daughter, Diane Brown ’77. “Our roots are here,” smiles Sloan.

FEATURES

Journalism With No Spin

When she was in Iraq as the Washington Post's bureau chief, Jackie Spinner covered the news in the same manner she had used since her days as a reporter at the Daily Egyptian. She seeks the truth and leaves all personal feelings at the door. "I have no agenda and am in pursuit of nothing other than the truth," she says.

Trading Beaches For Business

For the Southern students who are willing to give up a week on the beach, the SIU Alumni Association's award-winning Extern Program provides valuable training and often immediate benefits. Since 1984, the program, coordinated by the SIU Alumni Association, the Student Alumni Council, and Southern's colleges, has given students a unique opportunity during Spring Break and resulted in 38 percent of the participants receiving job or internship offers.

Abe's First Captain

When Abe Martin revived baseball at the University in 1947, he turned to a 30-year-old war veteran to serve as his first team captain. Enrolling at SINU in 1935, Benny Dunn would not return to campus until 11 years later to finish his degree. A stint in the military - and a harrowing experience as a prisoner of war working on the infamous Railway of Death in Burma - had delayed his collegiate career by more than a decade.

The Fall Heard 'Round The World

After Southern cheerleader Kristi Yamaoka fell from atop a 15-foot pyramid of Saluki cheerleaders, a hushed crowd at the St. Louis Savvis Center and a national television audience on CBS held its collective breath to see if she was seriously injured. As EMTs took her off the floor, the Saluki Pep Band began playing the school's fight song. To everyone's surprise, the fallen cheerleader began to cheer and move her arms in a familiar routine.
When I first saw Jackie Spinner, little did I know that she would one day be immersed in the dangerous and stressful job as a war correspondent in Iraq. While working at SIU Athletics in 1991, a student quietly walked into our Sports Information office that summer to introduce herself. "Hi, I'm Jackie Spinner, the new sports editor of the Daily Egyptian," she announced. "You'll probably be seeing a lot of me around here."

And see her we did for a semester, although Spinner didn't cool her heels in sports for long. She soon became managing editor of the DE, and it was evident early on that determination and drive were working diligently beneath the surface in this polite—and quite serious—young woman.

Greg Scott, a former colleague of Spinners who wrote this issue's cover story, remembers his first impressions of the dynamo with whom he worked at the student newspaper in 1989. "She was a reporter then—one of many—but she certainly stood out," Scott recalls. "Jackie put together an investigative team to report on the overcrowding problems in the Carbondale bars at the time, and the series of stories certainly stirred things up."

Bar owners, upset with the coverage, began to pull advertising. As you will read in Scott's story, the DE eventually shrank to 12 pages because of the lack of ads.

"The reporting, however, was fair, honest, and tough," Scott says. "We all stood behind Jackie on this issue, because she was right about the problem and it needed to be reported. It was good journalism, and she had the guts to do it."

Spinner has progressed from the DE to eventually serving as chief of the Washington Post bureau in Baghdad. Her recent book, "Tell Them I Didn't Cry," details scenes she witnessed while covering the war in Baghdad, Fallujah, Kurdistan, and Abu Ghraib.

If there is one thing Spinner wants you to know, it is that her news stories are based on facts. There is no bias or personal agenda lurking inside this Saluki, although she admits readers have become skeptical of mainstream press.

"The American media are in this position with the public because we care more about being first—and about scoops—than we do about being right," Spinner told Southern graduates at the 2005 spring commencement ceremonies.

"Get it right! That is something I learned right here at SIU during my days at the Daily Egyptian, and it is something I have carried with me all the way to the Washington Post."

I hope you enjoy our profile of a courageous and talented graduate who continues to "get it right" while she makes us all proud. Enjoy your magazine.
Kowalczyk Thanks Alumni For Their Help

I want to thank Southern Illinois University alumni everywhere for all they’ve given Peg and me during my tenure in Saluki Athletics. Support, help, appreciation, friendship, selflessness, acceptance, openness, understanding, and love—it has been overwhelming.

We leave Southern with heavy hearts because of the friendships we’ve made and the successes we’ve shared, but we also are excited by the new opportunities and challenges facing us. Saluki Athletics’ success is attributable not only to the dedication and hard work of the student-athletes, coaches, and athletics administration, but also to the support of southern Illinoians, alumni, students, and the University community. You have been amazing, and for that reason we have full confidence that Saluki Athletics and the University will continue to thrive.

Again, thank you. Peg and I leave with more wonderful memories than we deserve, and we will cherish and hold them near to our hearts. We have been truly blessed. Southern will always be special to us, and we will always be proud to call ourselves Salukis.

CASA Grad Presented Life Membership

Recently the CASA Alumni Constituent Society Board of Directors passed a unanimous motion to award one SIU Alumni Association Life Membership at the spring graduation each year, beginning with the May 2006 commencement ceremony.

This year Shauna Nicolay, a graduate of Dental Hygiene, was randomly selected from the graduates attending the commencement ceremony. After the degrees were conferred, and the students walked across the platform, I have a short speech welcoming the new grads to the Alumni family, encouraging them to join the SIU Alumni Association. At that time, I asked Shauna to stand and announced that she had won a Life Membership. Needless to say, this went over quite well with all the graduates and their families and friends.

I met with Shauna and her parents after the recessional and gave her a Life Membership pin. Her parents took pictures of her receiving it, and her mother commented that they had been talking about a membership with the Association, and although interested, money was tight (as is common for new grads), and Shauna just could not have afforded the membership at this time.

The challenge for our Society now will be to engage Shauna with the college as a graduate and alumnus. We hope this will be a start to a new CASA tradition at SIUC.

Harbaugh’s – The Place To Go For Breakfast

Already an enormously popular weekend breakfast spot, Harbaugh's Café offers a special incentive for SIU Alumni Association members. When members order one entree they will get the second at half price if it is of equal or lesser value. Owner Laura Harbaugh ’94 says the café’s motto, “Have breakfast or lunch with a twist,” is meant to convey that her menu is a little different than typical breakfast or lunch fare.

Breakfast is available all day and features a variety of skillets, frittatas, omelets and pancakes not to mention stuffed French toast and biscuits and gravy. Lunch specials include homemade soups, distinctive sandwiches, salads, and daily specials. Specialty coffees, lattes and espresso are also on the menu.

The café is open Monday through Saturday, 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. and Sunday from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. and is located in Carbondale at 9018 South Illinois Avenue.

McLeod Summer Playhouse Performs Broadway Hits

SIU Alumni Association members can enjoy a discount on tickets to the two blockbuster Broadway shows left in the 2006 McLeod Summer Playhouse season. A longtime benefit partner of the Association, Southern’s McLeod Theater offers members a 20 percent discount on tickets for adults and seniors.

Andrew Lloyd Weber’s long running musical, Cats, will be performed July 7, 8, 14 and 15 at 7:30 p.m. and at 2 p.m. on July 9 and 16. Beauty and the Beast, a musical based on the Disney classic, will open July 27 with additional shows on July 28, 29 and 31 at 7:30 p.m. and July 30 at 2 p.m.

Campus Renovation Plans Receive Board Approval

Renovation and revitalization plans spelled out in “Saluki Way” took a major step to becoming reality, when the Southern Illinois University Board of Trustees recently approved financial support for the opening phase of the plan. This Fall, each SIUC student will pay $232.95 more per semester for various student fees, and new student tuition will increase by 9.4 percent. The measures passed in a 7-2 vote, with Board of Trustee Samuel Goldman (a retired professor who lives in Carbondale) and Tequia Hicks, (student trustee), voting no. Both voiced concern over students’ ability to financially support such a plan.

The Board heard overwhelming support of “Saluki Way,” including remarks from SIU Alumni Association President Sheri Hunter. “We have to keep progress moving ahead,” Hunter explained. “While projects such as the New Student Health Center is finished and the Wall & Grand Apartments and Morris Library renovations are in progress, additional construction, renovation, and relocation of facilities must take place to enable Southern to recruit and better serve students.”

Former SIU Alumni Association President Rick Reynolds told the Board that the idea of higher fees for such improvement isn’t a new concept and he realizes students rarely see the long-range benefits attached to such projects.

“I paid fees for the SIU Student Center when I was in school, yet didn’t even see the facility until years after it was completed,” he pointed out as an example. “But even though I didn’t actually get to use it as a student, I know my contributions helped fund the facility and assist in the improvement of our University.”

Alumni Association board member Wes Wilkins agreed, comparing the proposed fees to one decades earlier when the Student Recreation Center was on the drawing board. “I never used it as a student, but every generation must make an investment in their University,” Wilkins said. “For my generation, it was the Student Recreation Center.”

Board Chairman Roger Tedrick said more than 100 letters arrived in support for “Saluki Way” prior to the meeting. In addition to a new football stadium and other athletic renovations, he stressed that academics will play a prominent role in the first phase of the ambitious plan.

Top Teachers Honored At Southern

Eight University faculty members will receive cash grants and professional development accounts through the University’s “Excellence Through Commitment Awards Program” as rewards for superior teaching.

This year’s top teachers, selected by each college, were: John Crelling, College of Science; Jon Davey, College of Applied Sciences and Arts; Kristine Kranenburg, College of Mass Communication and Media Arts; John Nicklow, College of Engineering; John Preece, College of Agriculture; Ruth Anne Refeldt, College of Education and Human Services; Anthony Steinbock, College of Liberal Arts; and Raymond Wacker, College of Business and Administration.

The Excellence Program reflects Chancellor Walter Wendler’s intention to foster creative, scholarly and teaching excellence as outlined in Southern at 150: Building Excellence Through Commitment. The blueprint for the development of the University by the time it celebrates its 150th anniversary in 2019. College-level winners each receive $3,000 outright plus a matching amount through the Office of Research and Development to support professional activities during the next fiscal year.

Here is a recap of the ten teacher recipients:

- Crelling, a full professor who joined the geology department in 1977, teaches courses in physical geography, environmental geology, igneous petrology, geology for mining engineers, coal geology, coal petrology, and the petrology of industrial carbons. In 1996, he created the nation’s first course in forensic geology, a course that serves as a model for 12 other universities that now have courses of their own. Recently, he created courses in terrain analysis and planetary geology.

- Davey, a full professor, has taught all the school’s architecture history courses for more than a quarter of a century. He started the University’s first computer-aided design courses and teaches the corporate office interior design studio, which produced the Morris Browsing Room in Morris Library and the College of Applied Sciences and Arts’ new conference room.

- Kranenburg was an assistant professor in the School of Journalism since 2001 and a former advertising professional in...
Chicago, teaches advertising copywriting, visual literacy, and advertising campaigns. She serves as academic adviser for the Saluki Advertising Agency and the campus chapter of the American Advertising Federation. In addition, she mentors a McNair Scholar and is Kellogg Hall's faculty associate.

- Nicklow, an associate professor of civil engineering since 2003, came to Southern in 1998 and specializes in hydraulic and hydrologic systems analysis and the application of evolutionary algorithms in water resources engineering. He has written textbooks on collection systems design and treatment plant hydraulics and has another on urban hydrologic systems design in the works. He previously received outstanding teaching awards from the engineering college in 1999 and 2001 and was one of four faculty members honored nationally in 2002 for teaching excellence by the American Society of Civil Engineers.

- Preece, hired in 1980, became a full professor in what is now the Department of Plant, Soil and Agricultural Sciences in 1990. A horticulturist by training, he teaches general horticulture, plant propagation, and plant growth and development and has co-written two editions of an introductory horticulture textbook. He is a four-time winner of his department's teaching award and has twice received the college award for outstanding teaching. The National Association of Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture also have cited him for teaching excellence.

- Rehfeldt, associate professor in the University's Rehabilitation Institute, has won that unit's teacher of the year award four times since joining the faculty six years ago. She teaches group experimental and single-subject research design, behavioral assessment and observation methods, basic practices in rehabilitation, community-based employment for persons with disabilities, and a seminar in philosophical readings. She also supervises the institute's undergraduate applied behavior analysis research group for advanced undergraduates.

- Steinbock joined the philosophy faculty in 1995, becoming a full professor four years later. He specializes in contemporary German and French philosophy, classical phenomenology, the philosophy of religion and social ontology. He previously won a college interdisciplinary teaching award and three university awards geared toward enhancing undergraduate instruction.

- Wacker, the college's Emerson Electric/Charles Groennert Teaching Excellence Professor and an associate professor in the School of Accountancy, joined the business faculty in 1989. He teaches taxation, international business policy, business ethics, and managerial and financial accounting. This is the fourth time his college has recognized his teaching expertise.

Byrne Top Female Pilot For Second Consecutive Year

The awards keep coming for SIUC sophomore Jennifer Byrne. Featured in the September 2005 issue of Southern Alumni, Byrne earned the distinction of top female collegiate pilot honors for a second consecutive year at the National Intercollegiate Flying Association competition in May.

Byrne's effort led Southern to a fifth-place finish in the national competition. Twenty-eight teams competed in the Safety and Flight Evaluation Conference at The Ohio State University's OSU Airport in Columbus, Ohio. The University of North Dakota won the event, with defending champion Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Prescott, Ariz., finishing second. Western Michigan University was third, and the U.S. Air Force Academy was fourth.

The event featured 413 competing students and more than 100 aircraft.

An Algonquin native, Byrne is the first SIU student to win top female pilot honors twice. She also received the Candi Kubeck Award, which is presented to the top scoring female contestant. The $500 award is presented in memory of Candalyn "Candi" Kubeck, the captain aboard ValuJet Flight 592, which crashed in the Florida Everglades in May 1996.

Suarez, Tichenor Are Sturgis Award Recipients

Two long-time Southern Illinois University Carbondale employees are winners of the 2006 Lindell W. Sturgis Memorial Award. Carmen Suarez, coordinator for diversity and equity, is the recipient of the Sturgis Memorial Public Service Award, and Jak Tichenor, WSIU-TV host/producer, is recipient of the Sturgis Memorial Professional Achievement Award.

SIU President Glenn Poshard and SIUC Chancellor Walter Wendler presented the awards recently. The Sturgis Award, given annually by the SIU Board of Trustees since 1980, recognizes SIUC employees for public service unrelated to their jobs. It carries a $750 cash prize and is named after a Metropolis native who served on the SIU Board for more than 30 years. Sturgis chaired the board from 1969 until his retirement in 1971. He died in 1972.

Suarez holds two degrees from SIUC, a bachelor's degree in history (1980) and a master's degree in medieval history (1983). She is working on a doctoral degree in higher education administration. She served as assistant dean for career services at SIUC's School of Law before taking the position as coordinator for diversity and equity in 2004.

Tichenor began his career at Southern in 1981. He started as a producer/announcer at WSIU-FM and transitioned from radio to television in 1989. Today, he hosts several television series on WSIU-TV, including Illinois' Lawmakers, a show produced in Springfield when the Illinois Legislature is in session. He also produces documentaries for the station.

Over the years, Tichenor has also taught, mentored, and tutored hundreds of radio-television students. He holds two degrees from SIUC, a bachelor's degree in radio-television (1979) and a master's degree in public visual communications (1989).
Southern Graduates Receive Alumni Achievement Awards

Southern Illinois University Carbondale's spring commencement exercises were May 12-13, as 3,015 candidates for undergraduate degrees, 350 candidates for master's degrees, 117 candidates for law degrees, and 41 candidates for doctoral degrees were saluted by the University.

Highlights of the weekend included presentations to various Southern graduates who received Alumni Achievement Awards as part of individual college and school ceremonies. These honorees were also the commencement speakers unless otherwise noted below.

The alumni honored were:
- College of Agricultural Sciences – Larry Fischer '68, vice president for instruction at John Wood Community College in Quincy. Fischer, who grew up on a grain and livestock farm east of Quincy, served as director of agriculture at John Wood Community College for 26 years and became vice president for instruction four years ago. Fischer serves on the SIU Alumni Association board of directors and on the Illinois Council for Food and Agriculture Research, based in Urbana. He traveled extensively and studied in Japan, Taiwan, and western European countries involved with the 1992 General Agreement on Trade and Tariff.

- College of Applied Sciences and Arts – Jay Rud '83, one of three chief pilots for American Airlines in Chicago.

  He became an American Airlines pilot at age 23 and became captain at age 29. He led crews of Fokker F-100s and Boeing 727s on flights throughout the United States, Canada, and Mexico. Rud subsequently earned a promotion to pilot/check airman in recognition of his technical expertise. In that role, he taught newly hired first officers and upgraded captains. In 2002, he began piloting Boeing 767s to Europe, the Caribbean and Hawaii, and now supervises approximately 1,600 American Airlines pilots at O'Hare International Airport.

- College of Business and Administration – James Tally '65, M.E. '71, Ph.D. '77, president/CEO of Children's Healthcare of Atlanta.

  The College of Business and Administration named Tally its Executive of the Year in 2004. He is a member of the college's advisory board. As president/CEO of Children's Healthcare of Atlanta, Tally oversaw the merger of Egleston Children's Health Care System and Scott Rite Children's Medical Center in February 1998. Child magazine ranks Children's Healthcare as one of the nation's top 10 children's hospitals. U.S. News & World Report ranks it among the top pediatric hospitals, and Children's is the first and only pediatric health care system in the nation to rank among FORTUNE magazine's "100 Best" employers.

- College of Education and Human Services – Arthur "Andy" Horne Ph.D. '71, Distinguished Research Professor, University of Georgia.

  Horne has been at the University of Georgia since 1989, where he served as department head for the counseling psychology program for four years and director of training for the program for eight years. He also served as coordinator of a certificate program in marriage and family therapy for 13 years.

  He has co-authored five books and co-edited five, and served on editorial boards of seven journals. For the past 10 years, Horne has conducted the Bully Project in Athens, Ga., through which he worked with schools in several states and wrote four books on bullying, as well as several research and educational publications.

  The commencement speaker for the College of Education and Human Services was Henry Scherich, Ph.D. '75, president/CEO of Measurement Inc. in Durham, N.C. He founded Measurement Inc. in the basement of his Durham home in 1980. Today, the firm, which is totally employee-owned, boasts 4,000 employees in 14 offices across the United States. It is a full-service educational testing company that provides development and scoring of achievement exams for students in kindergarten through college and professional levels through state departments of education, local school districts and other educational agencies.

- College of Engineering – Howard Lo '84, M.S. '86, CEO of Mastersoft Inc. in San Carlos, Calif.

  Lo, who was born in Hong Kong, immigrated to the United States with his parents at the age of six. He is a veteran of aerospace and commercial-emerging technologies with experience working for General Dynamics (now Lockheed Martin), where he won an Extraordinary Achievement Award for creating a series of computer aircraft analysis technologies. Lo founded Mastersoft Inc., a business process software company, in 1997.

- Graduate School – Edward Light J.D. '81, Winnebago County assistant public defender.

  Based out of Rockford, Light is the recipient of the Alumni Achievement Award. The commencement speaker was Dr. Marsha Ryan J.D. '87, a past president of the SIU Foundation Board, who also serves as campaign chair for SIUC's first comprehensive capital campaign, "Opportunity Through Excellence."

- College Liberal Arts – Buzz Spector '72, professor and chair of the art department at Cornell University.

  Spector is an artist and writer whose studio practice includes drawing, print and papermaking as well as photography and installation. His work has been exhibited in the United States and internationally, including such museums and galleries as the Art Institute of Chicago, Los Angeles County Museum of Art, Museum of Contemporary...
Saluki Alumni Abound At Springfield Television Station

by Marianne Lawrence

When Tim Mathis '91 arrived in Springfield, Ill., to begin his new job as general manager of WICS-TV and its sister station, WICD-TV in Champaign, he was surprised to learn that he would have a supporting cast of Salukis.

It was good news for Mathis, himself a product of Southern Illinois University Carbondale's award-winning radio and television program. "I have not run into anyone in the industry who has received the quality of education you can get from Southern. It is just the best education available."

Mathis is effusive about his University experience, naming specific classes in sales and management, ratings, law and journalism that have made a difference in his career advancement.

"Leo Gher's class on sales and management was right on target and exactly what I ran into when I began my career. I left SIU with a working knowledge on how to read ratings. Here I was a 22-year-old and knew more about ratings than people who had been in the industry many years," says Mathis.

His colleagues couldn't agree more. "You always know what it takes to make it in this business," says Julie Staley '88. "SIU gave us that foundation and the hands-on experience to make it in a highly competitive industry." Staley a 20-year television broadcasting veteran, is the recipient of numerous media awards.

Her former SIU classmate, Joe Crain '88 moved into the television world in 2004 after a long career as a radio personality in Springfield. He is the weekend weathercaster and does general assignment reporting and news spots for the WICS.

A Life Member of the SIU Alumni Association, Crain is an active member of the Prairie Capital Chapter, taking part in basketball road trips to Peoria, Bloomington and St. Louis and also has attended the football tailgates in Carbondale. "I've made a lot of friends through this group."

Crain concurs with others on the quality of the education he received in Carbondale. "The day an SIU graduate starts a job with any television or radio station they know what to do – there's no learning on the job."

Mary Klebe has worked at the station for 20 years as a sales associate, a position she took shortly after getting her SIU degree in journalism in 1984. "One of my instructors at SIU told me about the job," she recalls.

When Klebe thinks about Southern she remembers her favorite sandwiches at Booby's and when her husband, Bob, comes to Southern Illinois to hunt or fish, he occasionally brings one home with him. She's hoping one of her two kids will enroll at Southern, which would assure her of a few more subs from Booby's.

Although Kathy Smith graduated in 1982 with degree from the College of Technical Careers, trained as a court reporter, she is part of the WICS team. She performs her job as close caption specialist from her home and is appreciative of the education she received at Southern. "I wouldn't be where I am today without it," says Smith.

She still uses her court reporting skills while working with CART (Communication Access Realtime Translation), which uses similar equipment to provide instant translation of the spoken word to people with hearing disabilities. Smith uses the technology at conferences, meetings and churches.

Maira Ansara '01, who has been with the Champaign station for three years, worked as an anchor, reporter and photographer for WSIU-TV's River Region newscasts during her undergraduate years at Southern. "You can learn things in the classroom, but in the real world it is entirely different," she says. "I loved SIU and the opportunities it gave me."

Staley, a Life Member of the SIU Alumni Association, sums up feelings for her fellow Salukis. "It seems like there is an instant bond or kinship when you discover a co-worker is an SIU alum. Even though you didn't graduate together, you still know many of the same instructors, staff or students and you always know what it takes to make it in this business."
Imagine a place where car bombings are an everyday occurrence. The danger of mortar attacks lingers, and gunfire can be heard in the distance. You awake each morning primed for a kidnapper’s grasp, knowing that regardless of how careful you are, the way you walk or talk could lead a perpetrator to your door.

Some are fortunate enough to cheat death and survive such life-threatening situations. But the blood on your shoes and dead bodies you pass on the streets each day makes you realize that many aren’t as lucky. You take nothing for granted, as any false move could seal your fate on earth.

Many observers question if the media is dramatizing the ongoing struggle in Iraq. But this is reality. This is America at War. And this was the daily scenario Jackie Spinner faced each day.

The Middle East may have seemed a world away from her hometown of Decatur, Ill., but Spinner, a Washington Post reporter, asked—actually begged—her editors to travel to Iraq and provide media coverage for the American people. She volunteered to enter some of the most dangerous situations in which a journalist had ever been placed. The SIU Alumni Association life member was lured in by the most compelling story of our time and ready to literally risk life and limb to carry the truth back to the United States.

"Iraq is the most compelling story in the World," Spinner says. "Journalists have an obligation to be there."

"I have been accused of being brave. I call it an accusation because I'm not a risk taker. I'm a person who dodges out of an airplane. But I did go to Iraq to get shot at and receive an adrenaline rush from living another day. It's not about bravery; it's a mission of purpose."

While Spinner enjoys returning to her alma mater and sharing experiences with students who follow in her footsteps, she isn’t one to covet attention—especially when she’s in pursuit of a story.

"I cover the stage; I'm not on stage," she says. "I have no agenda and am in pursuit of nothing other than the truth. Journalism is still about getting it right and being objective. It's about a mission much larger than any of us. That is why you'll never hear me disclose my politics or even say whether or not I'm for or against something. It doesn't matter, and it shouldn't matter. It's about telling our readers what I saw and getting the story right."

But Spinner, who doesn’t even read the Washington Post editorial page, says Americans question media objectivity. She received criticism during her stay in Iraq; readers doubted her honesty. While Spinner admits that some media have created doubt in the American public by valuing their agendas over accuracy, she says news should be consumed with an open mind.

"Many people want the media to reaffirm their previously held beliefs; they don't want to learn," she says. "That is the political aspect of society; it can be frustrating. People can't have dialogue anymore. As opposed to respectfully disagreeing, they refer to you as 'idiot mainstream media.'"
The Journey to Iraq

With no foreign reporting experience on her resume, Spinner knew convincing Washington Post editors to send her to Iraq was a tough sell. Her reputation had been shaped by her work for a daily in Spokane, Wash., and her reporting on the O.J. Simpson trial. She had a fascination with the Middle East, and the Post had a policy of sending young reporters overseas to cover stories that weren’t already assigned to more senior reporters.

They reminded me that I volunteered to go to Iraq, and that is true. I begged to go. But I didn’t want sorrow. I just wanted our readers to believe me because I’m describing the scene as accurately as possible.”

Tell Them I Didn’t Cry

The family she left behind

After eventually convincing Washington Post editors to send her to Iraq, Spinner realized the assignment was even more difficult: informing her family about the assignment.

Spinner says learning of her daughter’s destination was a surprise.

“IT felt self-indulgent, and I didn’t want sorrow. I just wanted our readers to believe me because I’m describing the scene as accurately as possible.”

“Some days were more difficult than others. Especially after I would hear about something horrible occurring in Iraq. It was just more of the same. It was hard to talk to her. Spinner says, “My editors encouraged me to get the interview.”

“Harmonia provided Spinner with background information regarding the scandal, but due to legalities, wanted to keep the conversations private. Spinner urged Harmonia to receive credit for her lawyer to take her story public. Harmonia’s lawyer obliged as photos of the soldier giving a thumbs-up in front of an Iraqi corpse were already being circulated.

While Jackie called and wrote her daughter, Spinner couldn’t believe she was going.

“I don’t know what it would have been like. That is what sustained me.”

“Jackie initially thought it was going to be 2 to 4 months. She assured me that it would be sooner.”

“Some days were more difficult than others. Especially after I would hear about something horrible occurring in Iraq. It was just more of the same. It was hard to talk to her.”

While Spinner kept in close contact with her twin sister and book co-author, Jenny, during her tenure in the Middle East, Donna Spinner says her daughters share a special relationship.

“She reminded me that I volunteered to go to Iraq, and that is true. I begged to go. But I didn’t want sorrow. I just wanted our readers to believe me because I’m describing the scene as accurately as possible.”

Spinner says learning of her daughter’s destination was a surprise.

“When I asked what I could do from a higher power to cope with her daughter’s destination was a surprise. She’s the one of the ideals our American soldiers have pledged to defend: freedom of the press.”

sister Jenny via email and phone. Donna says the twins share a special relationship.

"Jaddy and Jenny know each other better than any other two people I know. It is a very close relationship," Donna says. "They were in close communication before the conflict, and they understand each other. Obviously, Jackie wasn't going to call her mother as many times as her twin sister.

"I always tried to be supportive. But like any parent, I am concerned for the safety and happiness of my children. I was worried about the safety of all three of my children. However, I understand that Jackie's job takes her to dangerous places, and I just pray that God takes care of her wherever she goes."

Jenny, who looked for her sister's byline in the Post daily to ensure that she was alive, supported her sister's decision, but admits that it was difficult.

"I initially wanted to be selfish and come up with several excuses for her not to go. I was angry at Jackie for risking her life by taking this assignment but never told her that," Jenny says. "I told her she had my support. I supported her professionally, not personally."

In an excerpt from Tell Them I Didn't Cry, Jenny further explains her emotions regarding Jackie's decision.

"I was furious at my sister not just for going to Iraq, but for wanting to. What was she thinking? What career move could possibly be worth death? I argued with her for days, furious arguments in which I denounced her. "But, Jenny," she said. To that I answered: "Because I never said those things to her directly. I said them to the sky. I said them to her face, back at us in the mirror.

"There's a certain responsibility in being a twin that I've come to accept over the years: your love must be unconditional and selfless. When everyone else fails your twin, you must be there. So I swallowed my dread and sang into the mouthpiece of the telephone. "I'm happy for you! What an honor!" It would take months before I understood why she wanted to go, why she needed to go, and why, eventually, I wanted to be there, too.

"Jackie prepared to board her plane and depart on her trip to Iraq in March of 2004. Jenny wondered if she would ever see her sister again. Jackie was headed to a war zone that Jenny couldn't visualize. The two of them had shared so many experiences, but Jackie was embarking on one of the most dangerous assignments any reporter could encounter. Before her sister left, Jenny had one last thing to say. "Jackie, I thought, I have to be careful and didn't know how else to say it. "I love you so much. Please come back to me.""

ADJUSTING TO LIFE IN IRAQ

An extended family awaited Spinner in Iraq. The Washington Post Iraq bureau was comprised of more than 40 staff members, including bodyguards, maids, cooks, drivers, translators, and Iraqi writers who covered stories and took notes for Spinner in areas too dangerous for foreign journalists to venture. The bureau had been established in April 2003 by Rajiv Chandrasekar, the Post's Baghdad chief, and is the largest of the newspaper's 20 foreign bureaus worldwide.

Spinner forged friendships with Iraqi staff, often baking cookies and preparing meals, which also served as a stress reliever for her. She says the Post had to trust the people they hired, fearing they may leak their location to insurgents. Therefore, most were family members, neighbors, or former colleagues.

Her relationships made the adjustment to the Middle East much easier. "My family has always supported my decisions, and they are so important in my life. It would have been like falling into a black hole if I hadn't replaced them somehow," Spinner says. "I connected with the Iraqi people. It was dangerous for them to be seen with Americans. I owe them everything they did for me, my friends, my brothers, and sisters.

Spinner's adjustment to Iraq also meant shedding American habits. Bureau members educated her on manners that could tip off insurgents. For instance, she was instructed to no longer drink water directly from a bottle, walk too fast, or smile too much publicly in the midst of struggling Iraqis. The transformation was even more dramatic for women.

"The stuff I taught me to wear long skirts that covered my head and how to carry my purse on the crook of my arm just like my grandmother would. On the street, I was not supposed to laugh or look a man in the eye, lest he think I was a flirting whore."

I disapproved into my Iraqi identity, even adopting an Irish name that the translator would use to summon me when we were outside. I was a homemaker, housewife and damh, and would explain why I could not communicate if the insurgents ever kidnapped our car. When I wore my rehram, I never told people on the street that I worked for The Washington Post. In some instances, I kept completely silent or spoke in a fake accent, and adhered to pointers Iraqis had given me.

Her participation in the military in a bureaucratic manner was a real eye-opener. She wore in Iraq.

In June of 2004, just three months into her tenure in Baghdad, Spinner had vanished. She was killed on a mission to an awaiting vehicle. Her driver, who she insisted her driver deliver a message to the Post, was killed, too. Spinner then returned to the bureau in a military capacity and wrote her story about the detainers' prison release. And she had no designs on heading back to her homeland.

"I called my editor and begged him to let me stay in Iraq," she says. The kidnapping attempt wasn't Spinner's only brush with danger. While embedded with Marines in Fallujah, shots were fired in her direction and she narrowly escaped a rocket attack that came within inches of the barrack she shared with the troops. In Tell Them I Didn't Cry, Spinner describes a mortar attack on the Sheraton, the bureau's location in Iraq. The first mortar sailed over their heads. We barely glanced up. It seemed too far away. Pfft.

She continued to work. Then a near miss blew up. That was late, I said, the words barely out of my mouth before a large crash and flash of explosion over us. We looked at one another.
er for a split second, a collective recognition on each of our faces. We were going to die together.

Spinner admits to feeling vulnerable at times, but stayed focused on the task at hand.

"You can't dwell on things you narrowly missed," she says. "I've talked to soldiers about it. You have to be sharp and prepared for any situation that could occur."

A LIGHTER SIDE

Although she was working in a volatile environment, Spinner enjoyed a lighter side of Iraq. She particularly points to a reality show the Iraqis had developed.

"The Iraqis produced a home improvement program. An Iraqi television news crew would select a house that had been bombed and rebuild it," she says. "They also love Oprah and Friends in Iraq."

Spinner's sense of humor is displayed while writing about a female staff member walking in on her in the bathroom after she had taken a shower:

I was looking in the mirror trying to determine if my butt was still in shape after not running for months. She just stared. "Um Mohammed, please get out!" I implored, as I tried to cover myself with my hands. She continued to look. "Niice, Jackie," she said before backing out and closing the door. Great, I thought, knowing how much Um Mohammed wanted to fatten me up. That meant my butt was bigger!

But the Iraqi staff always exhibited support. During the holidays, Spinner was able to communicate with her mother via Web cam. Donna Spinner watched as her daughter and Iraqi staff members decorated their Christmas tree and sang "We Wish You A Merry Christmas" to her.

"That was fascinating and special," Donna recalls. "It was comforting to see the amount of fun and enjoyment they had together decorating the tree. Various ones talked to me as well. At that moment, I thanked God for this technology we take for granted so often."

Spinner addresses a question during a lecture for The Paul Simon Public Policy Institute in February.

When Spinner became bureau chief, she recalls another fond moment shared with her staff. The Bureau kept a swing in its backyard and this setting became a backdrop for Spinner's first order as boss.

"I invited everyone to swing for five minutes. They were to look at the sky and forget where they were. We were happy and still alive," she says. "I told our two lunch-time cooks they were first and we did this every day. They thought I was crazy."

"I saw them smiling in a way they hadn't the whole time I was there. That made me feel good."

READJUSTING TO AMERICA

Spinner admits to feeling some guilt about leaving her friends at the Post bureau. While her return home allowed her to appreciate the freedoms she had to relinquish in Iraq, adjusting to her homeland has taken time.

"I really felt disconnected from American society and was angry a lot," she says. "While driving down a highway, I would imagine myself in a convoy. I was really jumpy as well. But I do feel safe here."

In Tell Them I Didn't Cry, Spinner elaborates on her post-war experience:

I curled up in a ball, fighting nightmares of insurgents chasing me with swords. I jumped when the toaster popped, when a door slammed unexpectedly, when a fork rattled to the ceramic floor of the kitchen. Helicopters nearly undid me; at the sound of the swirling blade, my pulse raced and I started to sweat. I knew this was simply post-war trauma, but I still wanted it to make sense, to understand what was happening to me.

Donna Spinner says she hasn't noticed any change in Jackie, but believes her daughter takes comfort in interviewing military men and women. "It makes Jackie realize she's not the only one dealing with these things. She realizes her experiences are identical to military personnel who return to the States," she says. "I don't see a difference in her. But when I read accounts of what Jackie went through, it was an eye opener."

Spinner has no regrets. The Washington Post has since appointed her as its military affairs writer. This assignment may take her back to Iraq and Afghanistan, where she will write about military culture.

"I had some close calls, and I know how much my family worried. At some point it appears to be selfish, and I've told my family that I would consult with them before returning to the Middle East," Spinner says.

"But if my editor at The Post called and said, 'We need you on a plane to Baghdad,' I would go without hesitation."
The SIUC Theater Department celebrated the 40th anniversary of McLeod Theater this spring. A year-long celebration, which included career panel discussions and readings of plays written by alumni, culminated with a Gala extravaganza weekend, April 7-8.

The SIU Alumni Association sponsored a wine reception prior to McLeod Theater's 40th Anniversary Gala Dinner Celebration, April 8, in the SIU Student Center Ballrooms. More than 100 alumni nationwide gathered on campus to reminisce about McLeod and participate in the celebration.

Among those present for the weekend were Anne McLeod Koletzke, daughter of Archibald McLeod for whom the theater was named; Marilyn Bartels, who appeared in McLeod's inaugural production of A Long Day's Journey Into Night in 1966; Peter Michael Goetz, a 1967 SIU theater graduate and successful Hollywood actor who joined Bartels in the initial production; and Shirlene Holmes, a playwright in Atlanta.

Doris Rottschalk, president-elect of the Alumni Association and a member of the anniversary planning committee, delivered a speech during the dinner program. Rottschalk encouraged alumni to support theater scholarship opportunities for students and advance the institution by joining the Alumni Association. She also reminded the audience that the Association's scope goes beyond athletics, and the organization strives to support theater and arts as well.

A highlight of the dinner was a tribute to Dr. Christian Moe, who dedicated 40 years of his life to SIUC's theater department, serving as a faculty member from 1958-98 and department chair from 1989-1997. Moe, now a professor emeritus, was presented with a lifetime achievement award by David Rush, present chair of the theater department playwriting program.

The evening continued at McLeod Theater where guests enjoyed "Forty Years in 40 Minutes," a review of excerpts from past productions performed by SIUC theater students and alumni. Goetz, whose career has spanned television, film, and Broadway, delivered the keynote address, warmly thanking Moe and Southern for his recruitment to the University and guidance early in his career.

In order to attend the Theater Department Gala, the well-known actor took a night off from his performance at the Tyrone-Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis. During his 40-year career, it is the first performance he has ever missed.

Goetz spent the remainder of the evening mingling with fellow alumni at the anniversary cake-and-champagne party in the McLeod lobby, sponsored by the SIU Alumni Association.
Every spring break, college students across the country race to exotic locations and beachside resorts for a week full of fun in the sun. Students often use this week to get away from the worries of homework and the classroom.

But since 1984, the Extern Program, coordinated by the SIU Alumni Association, the Student Alumni Council, and Southern's colleges, has given students a unique opportunity during spring break.

"There is a difference between learning these applications in the classroom and gaining hands-on experience in the real world," says Eric Vinyard, a senior in mechanical engineering technology. "Being an extern broadened my knowledge of the engineering field." Vinyard was one of 17 Southern students to extern at Boeing in St. Louis.

The award-winning Extern Program caters to the career interests of students by matching them with a sponsor in their chosen field during spring break. Students are required to submit an application and complete an interview process. In March, 152 students completed externships at 108 companies. Externs were hosted in 17 different states.

Vinyard and Michelle Puzey, a junior studying mechanical engineering, both decided to extern at Boeing, citing the abundance of knowledge gained during the one-week period. "Just being able to talk to people in the aerospace industry is a big plus," Puzey says.

Networking with industry contacts is also a large part of the program. Over the last three years, 38 percent of the participants have received job or internship offers. "Obviously, this is a good week to make contacts in the industry," Vinyard says. "It's also a good opportunity to see applications of what we've been spending four years learning at Southern."

Like Vinyard, Andrew Beer, a junior studying music business, aspired to gain additional knowledge in his chosen field, but he also participated for another reason.

"I clearly wanted to receive some job experience, but wanted to make sure that this is what I want to do when I graduate," says Beer, who externed with Jazz at the Bistro in St. Louis. "The Extern Program helps students not only gain experience, but also refine their career choices. With a year left in school, I thought this experience would assist me in working on some of my weaknesses and would make me more marketable when I begin my job search later."

HIGH EXPECTATIONS FOR SOUTHERN EXTERNS

During this weeklong experience, sponsors have high expectations for Southern externs. Students are required to exhibit professionalism and typically work full shifts, and par-
Students have the opportunity not only to participate in work-related duties under the guidance of appropriate personnel.

Donning professional business attire, Vinyard and Puzey's first day at Boeing began with a Monday morning orientation meeting at 7 a.m. After splitting 18 students into their individual sponsor groups, Vinyard and Puzey met with their own team that would accompany them for the rest of the week. Their sponsors immediately swept them off to separate buildings at the Boeing complex to begin their weeklong experience.

They began training with their personal team, and then it was off to their first session. After an hour-long lunch break, they received additional training from Boeing sponsors and employees. Their workday concluded at 4 p.m.

Sponsors Reap Benefits

Students aren't the only ones benefiting from the Extern Program. Sponsors often say they profit just as much from the program as the students.

"Well, everybody likes to talk about what they do," laughs Dan McGeehan, an engineer at Boeing and a sponsor for this year's program. "But we got to enjoy and learn from this, too."

Sponsors also spend time with students in other important areas of the job search process, such as resume building. Students have the opportunity not only to enhance their resume skills, but also to find out from employers just what they need to have on their resumes. Job market preparation is a large part of the Extern Program.

"If we can help them take away some of the nervousness or uncertainty about their future, that's good," McGeehan says. "They should know that they can do this job."

For more information on sponsoring an extern, call Tuesday Ashner in the SIU Alumni Association office at (618) 453-2408.

9-11 Tragedy Leads SIU Aviation Grad To Write Children’s Books

by Pam Mellskog

Southern Illinois University alumnus Mark Hoog flies for a living as a captain with United Airlines. But multiple crashes during the industry’s darkest hours on Sept. 11, 2001, prompted him to moonlight as a children’s book author.

The Niwot, Colo., native recently debuted “Your Song” (Sunflower Publishing, $16.95) and has five more books scheduled to be published by 2007. Each book is part of the “Growing Field Adventure” series, highlighting a “leadership seed” from self-confidence and inner strength to responsibility and determination.

The main idea grew from an unlikely place—Hoog’s experience of attending the funeral of his friend and fellow pilot, Jeff Dahl, who died flying United Airlines Flight 93, the terrorist-attacked plane that nose-dived into a Pennsylvania field.

Airline brass asked the SIU aviation graduate to deliver the bad news to Dahl’s wife and son just hours after the tragedy. At the funeral later that week, the grieving Hoog listened to Dahl’s son, Matt, then 13, deliver an unforgettable eulogy.

“Matt said what he remembered the most about his dad is that he read to him,” the 37-year-old Hoog says. The boy then paused before opening a Dr. Seuss book and reading it — cover-to-cover — to the assembled mourners.

“When he closed the book, he looked up and said, ‘Goodnight, Dad,’” Hoog recalls. “More than anything else in my life, that showed me the power of reading to your kid. But I wondered, ‘Who’s going to be that voice of value for him now?’”

Consciously and often subconsciously, Hoog stewed on that question for three years. Then in a two-month flurry of creativity, he composed each of the six books in 15-minute sittings.

One came to him as he killed time at the LaGuardia Airport terminal. Inspiration hit again during a shower. “I turned the water off, threw on a towel and went straight to the den (computer),” he says. The first book opens with a busy scene on the streets of Walden, a namesake town for American philosopher Henry David Thoreau’s flagship work—one of Hoog’s favorite classics.

To infuse the text with some living color, he has teamed up with illustrator Robert Aukerman, who developed a playful series of cartoonish characters on the pages. After the first press run last fall, chain book stores nationwide have been selling out.

Hoog, who also launched a nonprofit Children’s Leadership Institute in 2005 to encourage personal growth in kids, earned a bachelor’s degree in Aviation Management at Southern in 1990 and now lives in Fort Collins, Colo., with his wife and three children.

Twenty-five Southern Illinois University Carbondale students recently received Distinguished Senior Awards. The Southern Illinois University Alumni Association and Student Alumni Council presented the awards during the annual spring “Super Student Honors Dinner.”

The award is presented annually to 25 students who enrich the University and Carbondale community through their service activities. In order to qualify for the honor, students must complete a lengthy application process, earn a minimum grade point average of 3.0, and receive positive recommendations from University and community officials.

Chancellor Walter Wendler and his wife, Mary, the SIU Alumni Association and Student Alumni Council host the awards banquet. Student recipients received recognition plaques, Saluki “puppy” statues, SIUC license plate frames, SIU alumni T-shirts, and a first-year membership in the SIU Alumni Association.

The recipients were as follows:

- Illinois
  - Alto Pass: Joshua Boone, mathematics. Academic achievements include a 3.9 grade point average; six semesters on the College of Science Dean’s List; SIUC Chancellor’s Scholarship; Undergraduate Research Award, fall 2003; and 14th National McNair Scholars Research Conference presenter for the short story “Welcome to Alto Pass,” which Boone wrote for the University Honors Program.
  - Bartlett: Patrick Maloney, physiology. The Best Four Years Of My Life
Snyder Exhibits Leadership, Loyalty and Commitment

by Nicky Jacobs

When Adam Snyder is asked to describe himself in one word, he responds by saying "determined."

As one of Southern Illinois University Carbondale's 25 Most Distinguished Senior Award recipients, he proved himself to be just that. The honor is bestowed on graduating seniors who have enriched the University through their active involvement in various facets of campus life in addition to being high achievers in the classroom.

Chancellor Walter Wendler, the SIU Alumni Association, and Student Alumni Council honored recipients at a special dinner. An honors graduate in May, Snyder earned a bachelor's degree in marketing, was on the National Dean's List, and was a member of Gamma Beta Phi Honor Society.

"I have been fortunate to learn from great professors who have a vast knowledge of the business world," Snyder says. "Their knowledge and expertise has allowed me to learn the critical steps to become successful once I graduate.

"I have had the distinct privilege of attending this University, and I wouldn't trade my experiences for anything."

A key member of the Saluki baseball team, Snyder maintained a 3.5 grade point average, while pitching for the Salukis, Snyder impressed the coaching staff with his sportsmanship and intensity for the game.

"During the past four years, Adam Snyder has been exemplary as a student-athlete here. He is conscientious academically, and he is a warrior on the ball field," says Saluki Baseball Coach Dan Callahan. "Adam has an unyielding competitive nature, yet he does so with dignity.

"I have two daughters who make me proud. But I'll say that if I had a son, or even a son-in-law, I'd want him to emulate Adam Snyder."

Snyder has been honored many times for these attributes. Saluki athletics has presented him with the Abe Martin Award for Leadership, Loyalty and Commitment, the Mundo Spirit Award, and he has earned Academic All-Missouri Valley honors, and the MVC Commissioners Award for Academic Excellence. He was also the baseball representative for the Student Athletic Advisory Committee at the University.

"As a baseball player, I'm presented with an opportunity to strive for excellence as an athlete. I have been able to use my competitive drive both on the field and in the classroom," Snyder says. "Budgeting my time between academics and baseball has not been easy. But in the end, I find it rewarding and gratifying that I have done well in both."

Snyder says participating in activities beyond athletics has been rewarding, too.

"Not only have I been fortunate enough to attend one of the best business schools in the nation, but I have also been able to become part of the Carbondale community," Snyder says. "I think looking at the bigger picture is something everyone should do, and I'm glad I learned this at a young age."

Snyder says volunteer activities in the community have helped him round out his overall college experience. His favorite programs are Toys for Tots and Santa's Shoebox. Both help provide gifts to underprivileged children during the holiday seasons.

"It gives me a sense of enjoyment and pride knowing that you have a chance to impact the lives of young children," he says. "It's worthwhile knowing that those gifts are going to kids who really appreciate them. Some of them just wanted a pair of shoes, and helping them by granting their wish is awesome."

The Special Olympics is another event Snyder enjoys immensely.

"As a Saluki baseball player, there have been numerous opportunities to help with the community and the young kids who may be future SIU students. The kids think it's really neat to be out there with college players, and I'm just happy to be able to give them the opportunity."

Snyder now hopes to receive a job at a major sporting goods retailer. He is looking into options at Nike and Under Armour, but says he is open to other possibilities that may come his way.

"I feel my accomplishments and achievements as a student-athlete have allowed me to prepare for the future; I feel comfortable entering the 'real world','" he says. "The Distinguished Senior Award appropriately tops off my experience at Southern Illinois University. I consider my time at Southern to be the best four years of my life."

Excitement and pure bewilderment flooded Jeffrey Jaynes' emotions when he received his Super Student Scholarship award notification. "I thought it was a rejection notice," he now says. "I figured if I had won, they would have notified me already, so it was surprising to open the letter and see the word 'Congratulations!' on the first line. I called my parents and they were ecstatic. My instructors were also happy, but oddly enough, most of them expected it. In fact, my advisor said he never doubted that I would win the scholarship."

The Super Student Scholarship, valued at $500, honors two outstanding students who have enriched the University with their involvement in various facets of campus life. Student Alumni Council, the student chapter of the SIU Alumni Association, raises funds to support the scholarships.

Jaynes, a junior majoring in aviation flight and management, was recognized at a dinner co-hosted by SIUC Chancellor Walter Wendler, the SIU Alumni Association, and Student Alumni Council in April. When he arrived at the Student Center Ballrooms for the occasion, Jaynes says the prestige of the event finally hit him. "I was so excited to be honored as one of only two students at the University to receive this award. After finding his designated table, he discovered a pleasant surprise.

"My Mom and I were really excited when we got ready to sit down at the dinner," Jaynes says. "We were surprised to find the Chancellor and Mrs. Wendler, and the Associate Dean of my college and his wife at our table."

Jaynes' academic prowess afforded him an opportunity to select some of the premier aviation schools in the country. He considered Embry Riddle Aeronautical University, Purdue University, and the University of North Dakota. But he says Southern stood out in his mind.

"SIU offered an atmosphere that was exactly what I needed to get ahead," Jaynes says. "The University not only supplied me with a course to get my wings, but also with an intensive management degree taught by individuals who had spent time in the aviation field. This was perhaps the biggest draw for me."

As president of the University's Aviation Management Society (AMS), Jaynes leads a student group that is dedicated to showcase the aviation industry.
Southern Track
Athletes To Nationals

At press time, Southern throwers Amarachi Ukabam, Mark Milleville and Brittany Riley combined to win four regional titles and had advanced to the 2006 NCAA National Championships held recently in Sacramento, Calif. Results of their action will appear in next issue of Saluki Pride.

Ukabam successfully defended her 2005 title in the shot put at the NCAA Mideast Regional Championships, throwing 58-11.50 to break her own Mideast Regional record, along with the school and Missouri Valley Conference all-time best. She then threw a career-best in the discus to set a new SIU and MVC record.

Milleville threw 212-01 in the men's hammer to automatically qualify himself for the NCAA National Championships.

Riley threw 209-03 to break a new regional record and take the women's hammer title.

Runners Ty Davis and Anthony Acklin also made the trip to California with qualifying marks in their respective events. Davis set a new Saluki record in the women's 800-meter run. She ran 2:06.31 in the finals to finish fourth and break a three-year-old record. Acklin advanced in the 110 hurdles in a time of 13.69, the second-best time of his career.

As a team, Southern women's track and field team landed on both the U.S. Track and Field and Cross Country Coaches Association and the Trackwire polls after a sixth-place finish at the Mideast Regional Meet.

Softball Dawgs Play In Fourth Straight NCAA Regional

For the fourth year in a row, the Saluki softball team earned a spot in the NCAA Tournament. Southern was one of three teams selected from the Missouri Valley Conference and was sent to the Evanston, Ill., regional.

As third seed in the Valley Tournament, Southern received the NCAA bid despite losing two straight games in the league competition. The 2006 Salukis finished with a record of 35-13 (15-6 MVC).

The Salukis lost the NCAA Tournament opener 4-0 to host Northwestern, but came back to take the second game with a 2-1 win over Cal-Santa Barbara. The squad was then eliminated with a 5-4 loss to Notre Dame.

Katie Louis paced the team on offense with a team-best .329 average, nine homers and 35 RBI. Cassidy Scoggins led the way on the hill with a 26-12 record and a strong 1.098 ERA. She fanned 240 and walked only 34 in 225.1 innings.

For Louis and fellow seniors Christina Andrews, Samantha Carter, and Lauren Roney, the loss was their last game as a Saluki. This class has been to four consecutive NCAA Tournaments, something that no group before them was able to do.

“It's hard when you lose kids that for four years got you to something that you've never been before,” says head coach Kerri Blaylock. “And I'm not a coach that is off on a pedestal somewhere. I get to know my kids and get really close to them — it's a hard time when they leave.”
Baseball Salukis End Season On Low Note

A disappointing performance at the end of the season prevented the Saluki baseball team from enjoying a stellar year. With just two weeks left in the regular season, Southern sat a half-game out of first place in the Valley standings — and a game up on the loss side. The Dawgs, however, were swept at home by eventual league champion University of Evansville and went on to lose seven of their last eight games to finish the 2006 season at 33-25. They finished fifth in the league and lost two straight in the Valley Tournament.

"The Evansville series epitomized how the last three weeks of our season played out," says head coach Dan Callahan. "There was much uncertainty as to which team was going to show up to the ballpark down the stretch — we certainly picked a bad time to go down in flames.”

There were some bright spots, however, as freshman Scott Elmendorf paced the team in hitting (.353), while Grant Gerrard (.344, 55 RBI, 15 SB) and Kevin Koski (.300, 13 SB) also were among the league leaders. On the mound, Dusty Baker and Jordan Powell led the team with six wins each (Baker also had six saves), while Tyler Norrick and Adam Snyder added five wins each.

Norrick and Gerrard, both draft picks in 2005 who returned for their senior season, improved their draft status considerably in June. After being chosen in the 17th-round by Toronto last year, Norrick went to the St. Louis Cardinals in the sixth round (196th pick overall) in 2006. Gerrard (16th, Seattle), who went a round earlier than Norrick a year ago, was then selected in the seventh round by the Texas Rangers (208th pick overall).

"I'm really excited about the opportunity the Cardinals have given me," Norrick says. "My four years at SIU were probably some of the best of my life and took my game to the next level.”

Gerrard, the club's only first-team Valley recipient this season, says he was hoping to be drafted as high as he was. "I was told I had a good chance of being drafted anywhere between the fifth and 10th rounds, so it was great that it happened when it did.”

Lambert Salukis Have Reunion

Players, coaches, and support staff who were at Southern during the Paul Lambert years of Saluki Basketball recently held a reunion in Carbondale. Those attending were, top row from left: Mike Hessick, Stan Powles, Steve Wilson, Mack Turner, Mel Hughlett, Joe C. Meriweather, Dan Kieszowski, Charles Moore, Dave Monfort, Alvin Hendricks, and Felton Chinn. Middle row: Coach Max Brownlee, Mike Glenn, Billy Perkins, Greg Starrick, Barry Smith, Pete Kaha, Perry Hines, Tom Harris, John Marker, Kenny Sund, Don Portugal, Mark Stephenson, and Tim Ricci. Front row: Lloyd Haines, Tony Gualdoni, Mark Sharf, John Garrett, Coach George Iubelt, Coach Herman Williams, Carol Lambert Spence, Coach Paul Henry, Larry Mayol, Dan Orman, Robert Siegworth, and Mike McCormick. Lambert coached SIU from 1970-78, boasting a record of 126-84. His 1976-77 team made it to the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament and produced a 22-7 record.
Barbecue And Basketball

Perry Hines, who played basketball at Southern in the mid-1970s, continues to serve up tasty treats for BBQ aficionados.

by Paul Povse

Perry “P.T.” Hines has fashioned a respectable life for himself: two college degrees, three sons, and a wife of 22 years, a small business with a steady following, and an active role in his church. But when he recounts his personal history, a faint theme of regret and paths not taken peeks through.

Perhaps not unlike anyone who has lived 54 years, he has adapted and grown 54 years, he has adapted and matured along the way.

“I know I could get a restaurant,” Hines says while sitting outside his walk-up barbecue stand on Taylor Avenue in Springfield, Ill. “But I wouldn’t have this, a place where I can work outside, stay outdoors. One guy offered me a chance—he’d put up the money, but I decided not to. I wish I had.”

This is where barbecue and basketball—the twin pillars of Hines’ life—converge.

“It would have been a big restaurant,” he reflects, “but all I could think about was will it go or will it not? It’s like that last jump shot. You have to take it; you can’t think about it.”

So Hines, formerly owner of—and now “consultant” to—P.T’s Bar-B-Q, dug in roots right on the spot where he first set up shop beneath a tent 10 years ago. Here he now cooks his trademark pulled pork, barbecued chicken, ribs, rib tips, etc., generally spritzed with his sweetly robust sauce.

These days, Hines is on the job about three days a week, allowing nephew Lavell Johnson, 39, and oldest son Perry Jr., 21, to run the business out of the green and white stand, which retains some vestiges of a former life as a Sno-ball Express. (Every once in a while, he says, smiling, somebody comes up and asks for a Sno-ball.)

Hines lives in Decatur with his wife, Dorothy, a special education teacher at Decatur Eisenhower High School, and together they raise sons Spencer, 9, and Harrison, 8. He is involved in the First Church of God in Christ. And still, after all these years, there is that muse whose name is basketball.

“It’s been my whole life, just about,” says Hines, who plays two to three times a week at the Decatur YMCA. “I played yesterday. Can’t you see how I’m walking?” He points to creaky knees.

Still A Love For The Game

The only son of Navy man Booker T. Hines and his wife, Esther, Perry and his two sisters moved from Oakland to San Diego and finally back to Decatur, where he shot baskets by himself, hours on end, in a schoolyard or the back yard. “I’d play outside in the winter, cut the fingers off one glove to keep playing in the cold. I’d put the other glove on the register to keep it warm.”

What hooked young Hines on basketball was the excitement of it, to hear the ball going into the chain net. “I made up other players in my mind to play against, like Walt Frazier,” he says.

Timely that he should mention Frazier, because Hines, after two years at Lake Land College in Mattoon, landed at the NBA Hall of Famer’s alma mater, Southern Illinois University Carbondale, in the mid-1970s.

To this day, Hines ranks 12th all-time among Salukis in percentage of free throws made (82 of 102). Here again, a wisp of regret slips into his conversation. “I should have been up higher,” he says pointing to the list of free throw marksmen in the record book. “I didn’t shoot enough of them.

“I was a flashy player. A lot of times I did too much fancy stuff and was ahead of my time. I had a fade-away jumper, but they’d stop practice and have me go straight up. I did a lot of no-look passes, which was a no-no—not that they were bad passes.”

In 1975, his senior year, Southern competed in the National Invitation Tournament in New York. But again...

“We’d have won more games if I had been the kind of player they wanted me to be, as opposed to the kind I wanted to be,” he says.

Hines returned to Carbondale recently to attend a reunion of players who were coached by Paul Lambert. Speaking of his late coach, the former Saluki now realizes “what Coach Lambert was trying to instill in me and what he did instill in me after I got out—when I coached at Eisenhower—really helped as I matured. It was the fundamentals of the game and how to play the offense. It was too bad I didn’t learn that until after I left.”

One other pang lingers in regard to playing in the NIT and losing to Pittsburgh.

“The only thing that stopped us (from making the NCAA field) was that the NCAA tournament took in only 32 teams as opposed to 64 today. We’d beaten Michigan by 20 points, but had been in New York for a week and lost our focus. We played in those Converse All-Stars, and I wore (only) one pair of socks. At halftime, I had blisters on my feet.”

Hines finished one semester short of graduating from SIU, later earning his bachelor’s degree in children/family/counseling at Sangamon State University. He earned a master’s degree in special education from Illinois State University in 1995.

He has coached freshman and sophomore basketball at Eisenhower and worked with kids with behavior disorders. Someday, he says, he’d like to coach his son, Spencer, whom he calls “my shooter.”
The Road To BBQ

Hines initially took over his father's barbecue business primarily because that's what Dad wanted. They ran BT & PT's Seafood Palace ("we had things like frog legs") in Decatur until 1990. When a friend asked Hines to sell barbecue under a tent as part of the opening of a new car lot in Springfield in late '95, he ended up staying put on Taylor Avenue.

His late father taught him the art of barbecuing, which he continues step by step, the same way he was taught. "There is no quick way," he says. "You take your time and can't rush it. It takes three hours to cook a rib."

Approximately 100 pounds of ribs and chicken are delivered daily - sometimes twice a day - to P.T.'s. He cooks in four hulking roasters ("the key is hickory wood under the charcoal") as the meat simmers and gets tossed and basted all day long.

Just before the ribs, chicken, or pork are handed to the customer, Hines unleashes the coup de grace: his sauce that he plans to market in Springfield and Decatur stores sometime this year. The secret sauce uses fruit juices as a main ingredient.

"You don't put the sauce on while cooking," Hines says firmly.

Coming Back To Southern

Hines and many teammates from Lambert's coaching era, including former NBA players Mike Glenn and Joe C. Meriweather, enjoyed the reunion in January. It was his first trip back to Southern in almost 30 years, although he has contributed to its basketball program.

While at the banquet in Carbondale, Hines was able to smile and enjoy countless old clippings and media guides that adorned tables at the event. He gazed at the images of himself, a small forward (a mere 6-2) shown in his maroon and white No. 24 Salukis uniform.

The reunion was rich in stories about who was quick and who among them could lift the weights used by today's players. "I might not have been the brightest star among the Salukis, but I had the biggest 'Afro,'" he says with a smile.

Before leaving for the reunion weekend, Hines had mused that he might be one of the few former players attending who would not be drinking. "God has worked some miracles in my life," he explains. "God entered my life, and it changed me. I don't even go out to the clubs."

The only sauce Hines has tasted in the last 10 years is the one he now applies to his food.

Paul Kowalczyk, who guided the resurgence of Saluki Athletics during the past six years, was recently named director of athletics at Colorado State. He replaces Mark Driscoll, who resigned to return to the banking business.

Before arriving in Carbondale, Kowalczyk was an associate athletics director at Northwestern and worked at Kansas State, Portland State, Youngstown State, and Kent State. The 48-year-old Ohio native leaves behind a legacy of accomplishment at Southern.

“Paul is a man of integrity and tremendous character, and he breeds that character into the programs and the student-athletes,” SIUC Chancellor Walter Wendler says. “He moved SIUC’s programs ahead on all fronts.”

Kowalczyk took the reigns at Southern in 2000, facing a host of challenges, including a budget crisis, under-performing revenue sports, and deteriorating facilities. It didn’t take him long to change the culture in Lingle Hall. Winning teams, facility improvements, and financial stability became hallmarks of the Kowalczyk era, which officially ended on May 5, his last day on the job.

He oversaw a remarkable turnaround in both the men’s basketball and football programs. The men’s basketball program is one of only 16 in the nation to advance to the NCAA Tournament each of the last five seasons. Kowalczyk hired two of the most successful basketball coaches in school history – Matt Painter and current head coach Chris Lowery.

“Paul came into our program and made it something special,” Lowery says. “He did that with his work ethic and his ability to do the right thing. It is really unique when a person always seems to make the right decisions.”

A once struggling Saluki football team has now captured three straight Gateway Conference championships and made three straight NCAA-I-AA Playoff appearances. In 2005, the Salukis won their first playoff game since 1983. Kowalczyk laid the groundwork for that success in 2001 when he hired the relatively unknown Jerry Kill, who rebuilt the program into a national powerhouse and won national coach-of-the-year honors in 2004.

“Paul has set his legacy here and done a fantastic job of getting us where we need to be,” Kill says, “and it’s our job to take it one step further. If we don’t, then he will be disappointed. In my opinion, he will also be remembered for hiring good people.”

Part of the whole process was raising funds, and Kowalczyk recognized the need for a fund-raising mechanism to defray scholarship costs. Thus, the new Saluki Athletic Scholarship Fund was born in 2003. The SASF has been a huge success, already topping $500,000 annually in scholarship money.

Facility improvements were another highlight of Kowalczyk’s time at Southern. Thanks to a generous gift from alumnus Pete Wittmann, a new $3.4 million academic and training center opened on Oct. 1, 2005. Softball’s Charlotte West Stadium opened in the spring of 2003 and has already hosted one Missouri Valley Conference championship. “Saluki Way” is slated to include funding for a new football stadium and a renovation of the 42-year-old SIU Arena.

While Kowalczyk and his wife, Peg, are excited about the new challenges, the job change was not an easy decision.

“It’s been an amazing run, fulfilling personally and professionally,” Kowalczyk says. “The worst part about leaving here is certainly all the people within the department and the Saluki fans. What we’ve built, I think, is pretty special, and I certainly want to see that continue. I don’t want this to be the golden age of Saluki Athletics. I want this to be a beginning of sorts.

“I think the biggest challenge at Southern was changing the culture. It was very negative when I walked in and nobody felt Saluki Athletics would get back up on its legs and be successful.”

But success certainly followed, and Kowalczyk takes pride that he is leaving the position much better than he found it.

“When some of the ‘Saluki Way’ projects are completed, I’ll be back here for the ribbon-cutting,” he says with a smile. “I’ll take great pride in seeing those dreams realized for the SIU campus.”

At press time, Associate Athletics Director Kathy Jones is serving as interim AD until the new director arrives. Wendler hopes to name a new AD this summer.

WHEN ABE MARTIN REVIVED SIU BASEBALL IN 1947,
HE TURNED TO A 30-YEAR-OLD FORMER PRISONER OF WAR
TO PROVIDE LEADERSHIP AND STABILITY DURING THAT INAUGURAL SEASON.
In 1935, Benjamin “Benny” Dunn strolled onto the campus at Southern Illinois University like many other wide-eyed freshmen. Growing up in nearby Gorham, Ill., the 18-year-old aspired to play baseball, receive an education, and become a teacher.

Dunn would eventually accomplish all three objectives, but the road to those goals proved anything but straight. The arrival of World War II – punctuated by years held as a prisoner of war in southeast Asia – would delay his college degree for more than a decade.

When Dunn first came to Southern, he brought with him a passion for baseball. As was the case during that era, coal mines and most small communities in southern Illinois had competitive baseball teams—Gorham usually had one of the best. The new student knew, however, that the University had dropped the sport in 1924 and that any baseball during his college days would consist of action with the rural squads.

After two years studying history at Southern, Dunn decided to leave school and teach the subject to earn some extra money. “You could get a teaching certificate back in those days after only two years of school, so that is what I did,” he says. “I wasn’t making much, but that was OK at the time. I was teaching, coaching, and playing some baseball—not a bad life for a kid in his early 20s—but then the war came along.”

Dunn, who would serve his country in the Army as part of a field artillery unit in Southeast Asia, was captured in March 1942 and remained a POW until he was liberated in August 1945. (See accompanying story.) After surviving that horrendous experience, he returned to the states and immediately decided to resume his college education.

Eleven years after he first enrolled at Southern, Dunn was walking the campus again as a 29-year-old junior. “I wanted to play baseball so bad I could hardly stand it,” Dunn recalls. “But of course I recalled that SIU didn’t sponsor the sport, so I figured I’d have to play for some town team again.”

Glenn “Abe” Martin was about to change all of that, and Dunn would be a key part of the process.

The Return of SIU Baseball

Martin, although now synonymous with Saluki Baseball, was coaching football and basketball at the time. He surprised many at the University when he announced plans in 1946 to soon give up his basketball duties and bring back baseball after a 22-year hiatus.

“Reviving baseball at Southern was something I really wanted to do,” a 90-year-old Martin said during an interview in 1996 a year before his death. “It was really my favorite sport. I played with an independent team in Fairfield from the time I was 14, and I loved the game.”

Martin said it was not difficult getting baseball started again, as “we had so many young men that had just returned from the service who wanted to play.”

None more than a well-traveled catcher from Gorham.

“I was thrilled when I heard we were going to field a college team that first year I was back,” Dunn says, “but suddenly something happened that put all of that on hold for a bit. During pre-season drills in 1946, Abe was hitting infield during practice and popped a ball up between home and first base. For some reason, he raced down the line trying to catch the ball himself and slammed into our first baseman.”

Their new coach was hurt, sidelined with a shattered jaw and broken nose. A stay in the hospital followed, and the inaugural season was in temporary limbo. With its leader on the disabled list, the Abe Martin Era of SIU Baseball would have to wait.

When it finally began in 1947, Martin asked his 30-year-old senior catcher to serve as his very first team captain.

“That was an honor,” the gregarious 89-year-old Dunn says with a wide grin. “I had taken a course in baseball under Abe in 1946, and he had been impressed with my knowledge of the game and the reports that I had turned into him—in fact, he used some of that material in his coaching for a few years.

“I may have taken a long road to get to that point, but to be Abe Martin’s first captain was something I always took great pride in. He was a wonderful man who helped out more young people than we’ll ever know about—he would do anything for you.”

Due to inclement weather and no home field of their own (home games were played at Murphysboro’s Riverside Park), the Maroons’ return to collegiate baseball produced only nine games.
that first season. With SIU Hall of Famer Bill O’Brien earning team MVP honors, the squad fashioned a 3-6 record, recording wins over Evansville, Eastern Illinois, and Arkansas State. “We also played and competed well in exhibition games against several minor league teams in the area,” Dunn says. “It was great fun, even if I did just get to play college ball that one year.”

As soon as the foundation for SIU Baseball was firmly set in place, Dunn saw a diploma in his hand and sensed an urgency to “get on with the rest of my life.”

RETURNING TO HIS ROOTS
Following his graduation at Southern, Dunn returned to Gorham to teach American history and coach baseball and basketball. As was the case when he was growing up there, the small community continued to produce outstanding baseball talent.

“We had several players come out of the area who played professional baseball,” Dunn recalls. “There were plenty of fine athletes, but one stood out above the rest—Gary Geiger.”

Geiger, from nearby Sand Ridge, was a standout player for Dunn’s high school teams in the early 1950s. Drafted in 1954 by the St. Louis Cardinals, Geiger fashioned a 12-year career in the Major Leagues with his proud high school coach following his every step.

“I saw him play in the big leagues at various places around the country,” Dunn says with a smile. “He had come a long way from those days in Gorham where I used to give him a ride home each day after practice. I even had to talk him out of quitting high school once, but it sure made us all proud once he got to the Majors.”

Although he enjoyed his teaching and coaching duties, Dunn realized he could accomplish more with additional education. He returned to Southern, earned a Master’s degree in educational administration in 1953 and became Superintendent of Schools in Gorham. The career educator followed with stints as a superintendent in the Illinois school districts at Newman and Anna, before retiring to his present home in Murphysboro years ago.

He and his late wife, Johanna, raised two sons who graduated from Eastern Illinois University when the family resided in nearby Newman. When retirement beckoned, however, there was only one place the SIU Alumni Association member wanted to be.

“Coming back to this area was certainly like coming home to me, and it just made a lot of sense to retire here,” Dunn explains. “For instance, when I have something wrong or need blood work done, I go to the V.A. Hospital in Marion. I often ask the nurses and others there what their background is, and usually they have ties to SIU. That always makes me proud to see people who attended the University who are in the work force doing good things.”

Dunn, who was a competitive swimmer in the Senior Olympics until he was in his mid-80s, is also proud he can still attend a few events in Carbondale. “I don’t get out much.” Dunn says, “but I do go to some Saluki baseball games, alumni events, and an occasional basketball game. I’ve had three hip joint replacements that have slowed me down a bit, but I guess I do pretty well for being almost 90 years old.”

A nine-decade journey has taken Dunn from Gorham to SIU to the jungles of Burma and back, a winding road that eventually returned him to his roots.

“You can travel all over the world—which I have—but you should never really lose sight of where you came from,” he says with a smile. “I guess I could have ended up in a number of places, but being right here in southern Illinois is where I want to be.”
In March 1942, Benny Dunn's life changed forever. While serving in the Army as part of a field artillery unit during World War II, Dunn was captured by the Japanese on the island of Java and held as a prisoner of war. For more than three years he would endure hardships—and find inner strength—he never knew existed.

"We were moved around to various prison camps," Dunn still clearly recalls. "First I was in Thailand, and then was sent to Burma. That is when things became the worst."

That is when the railroad work began.

Desiring to create a more convenient route from Burma to Thailand for moving troops and raw materials, the Japanese began construction of two railway lines. The railway would lessen Japan's reliance on sea transport as the only means of supplying Burma once the country was under their control by June 1942. Shipping on the long sea voyage around Singapore was prone to submarine attack once the allies were fully operational around India.

Sixty-one thousand Allied prisoners-of-war and over 200,000 Asian natives were forced to build the Burma-Thai Railway, stretching 250 miles between mountains, rivers, and through jungles. More than half would die before the task was completed, leading most to refer to the project as the "Death Railway." This would be Dunn's life for countless days ahead, as he would eventually have a hand in constructing 57 miles of that infamous stretch of rails.

"The Death Railway was constructed without any machines—period," Dunn points out. "It was all done with slave labor and hand tools. Conditions were horrible, and if you got real sick and could no longer work, you were often left for dead. The temperature was nearly 100 degrees each day, the monsoon season made it difficult to work, and the treatment was deplorable. It seems like the Japanese always had us walking—some days we walked more than 30 miles."

And when Dunn survived a day's labor, he was rewarded by a return to the POW camp at night to forage for food, boil some drinking water, and remove the rats and scorpions from his tent before he went to sleep. When he was awakened before daybreak, it would all begin again like a bad dream.

Dunn was one of the fortunate ones who survived the ordeal, but that resilience was tempered by physical and mental trauma. He weighed less than 100 pounds at one point after contracting malaria and amoebic dysentery near the end of his stint on the railroad.

"When I got sick, they sent me to another prison camp 12 miles away. I was there to either get strong enough to work again or die—my captors really didn't care which. Slowly I was able to get my strength back, going through garbage each day left by the Japanese to find some food. I also had a Dutch doctor show me what plants in the jungle could be consumed and which were poisonous."

Through it all, Dunn found a way to keep hope alive.

"I soon realized that the only way to survive was to become part of a clan," he says. "There was a small group of guys I became close to, and we looked out for one another and kept each other sane. If you didn't have people pushing you to survive, it was easy to give up."

"You can just shut down and die if you quit caring—most people don't like to think about that as an option. Many POWs died due to physical ailments, but plenty also passed away because they just simply gave up."

When the railroad was completed, Dunn was sent to a prison camp at the infamous River Kwai and held there until his unit was liberated in August 1945. He was soon taken to the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., and he began to transcribe volumes of notes from his bed.

"The Japanese would not let us write anything down, but as soon as I was liberated, I started making detailed notes of what happened," Dunn recalls. "It was all etched indelibly in my mind."

For years the notes lay dormant, but when Dunn retired three decades ago, he decided to write a book about his experiences. The result was The Bamboo Express, published in 1979 by Chicago's Adams Press. Perhaps part therapeutic, the publication also serves as a historical bequest from the two-degree SIU alums. "I thought people needed to know what really happened over there," he says. "We should take real pride in the sacrifices made by this country and its Allies."

Dunn continues to do his part in keeping the memory of those heroes alive. He has long met with a group of POWs at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Marion who gather with a counselor each month to discuss what is on their minds.

"It's a small group now—only four or five of us are left," he says. "But it is important to me to be there each month and just talk with them. We all share something pretty special."

Greater Michigan Dinner Party

The Greater Michigan Chapter of the SIU Alumni Association hosted their annual dinner party in February at Dave & Buster's Restaurant, in Utica, Mich. Fifty-two alumni enjoyed dinner and watched Salukis play Louisiana-Lafayette in the ESPN Bracket Buster game that evening.

University representatives in attendance were Paul Sarvela, dean of the College of Applied Science & Arts; Jack Greer, chair of the Automotive Technology department; Mike Behrmann, associate professor in Automotive Technology; and Michael Ellis, constituent development officer for Southern's College of Applied Science & Arts.

Union County Alumni Dinner With Coach Kill

Alumni, friends and Saluki fans from Jackson, Johnson, and Williamson Counties in southern Illinois showed up to pay tribute to Coach Kill and his seniors. One of those seniors, Philip Doyle, is shown at left with Bob Fombelle of Great Boars of Fire.

George Welborn, President of the Union County Alumni Chapter, and Ed Buerger, Executive Director of the SIU Alumni Association, encouraged attendees to take an active role in support of the University's long range plans. Coach Kill introduced his seniors in attendance and spoke about his passion for Southern.

Broadway ‘Wicked’ In Chicago

Eighty alumni and guests enjoyed attending a sold-out production of “Wicked” in April at the Oriental Theatre in Chicago. Everyone enjoyed hors d'oeuvres and dessert prior to the show. A good time was had by all who witnessed an entertaining performance and mingled with fellow alumni in a social setting.

SIU Alumni Member Night With The Symphony

One hundred seventy-one alumni members enjoyed SIU Alumni Member Night with the Southern Illinois Symphony Orchestra in February. Alumni members began the evening by attending a pre-concert dinner in the Old Main Room of the SIU Student Center and later watched a performance of “Broadway Pops” at Shryock Auditorium.

They were welcomed by Doris Rottschalk, President-Elect of the SIU Alumni Association, who expressed the importance of supporting cultural events on campus. Fellow national board members attending the event were Steve Falat and Dede Itttner. Ed Benyas, conductor for the symphony, and his wife Kara, also visited with guests during dinner.

University dignitaries who joined alumni members for dinner included SIU President Glenn Poshard; Vice Chancellor Larry Dietz, and former SIUC Chancellor John Guyon. Student Alumni Council members Rebecca Chocoua, Oksana Parylo, and Lena Stange joined Association staff in greeting and mingling with guests.

SIU Class Ring Ceremony

The SIU Alumni Association and Student Alumni Council hosted the fourth SIU Class Ring Presentation Ceremony on April 7 in Ballroom B of the SIU Student Center. SIUC Chancellor Walter Wendler addressed the recipients and their families, and presented class rings to 30 students and alumni.

Sheri Hunter, President of the SIU Alumni Association, served as emcee of the program. Anna Gorges, president of the Student Alumni Council, provided a student's perspective on the significance of the ring to undergraduates and alumni.

Two Alumni Join Board of Directors

Arthur Aikman Ph.D '65 and Barry Smith '80 were recently elected to the SIU Alumni Association Board of Directors. Aikman, a Carbondale resident, and Smith, a Decatur resident, will serve four-year terms.

A life member of the SIU Alumni Association, Aikman is an annuitant representative of the SURS Board of Trustees. He has more than 40 years of service in education, having served as a professor emeritus in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at Southern. Prior to joining the faculty here, Aikman was a teacher, principal, and superintendent in the Illinois public schools of Loda, Onarga, Cisna Park, and East Lynn.

A World War II and Korean War Veteran, Aikman received the Lindall W. Sturgis Award in 1986, the only honor presented by SIU's Board of Trustees. He served as a committee member of Southern at 150 in 2002-03, which developed the University's long-range plans for achievement of excellence through the year 2019.

Aikman, and his wife Sammye, are longtime participants in alumni events. Their sons, Robert and William, are also SIU graduates.

Smith, also a life member of the Alumni Association, is a Senior Vice President for Regions Bank, heading retail banking for Illinois and Western Kentucky. He formerly served as retail area sales manager for Regions in Carbondale. He is also a former manager for Kroger West.

A four-year basketball letterman at Southern, Smith's wife Amy, is also a 1980 graduate of the University. She was a member of the Marching Salukis.
Three SACers Honored With SIU Class Rings

Three members of the Student Alumni Council (SAC), the student chapter of the SIU Alumni Association, were presented with the Official SIU Class Ring. This year’s honorees were Anna Gorges, a senior from Bloomington, majoring in Zoology and Food & Nutrition; and Georgeta and Flaviu Hodis, who are both doctoral students from Romania. Georgeta earned a master’s in applied linguistics from the University in 2004, and Flaviu received his master’s in mathematics in 2003.

The rings were presented during the SIU Alumni Association’s national board of directors meeting on April 29. Each SACer was cited for their many hours of service in support of the Association, and the University and Carbondale communities. Their participation ranges from assisting in hosting alumni member appreciation events on campus, to co-hosting programs with SIUC Chancellor Walter Wendler, and participating in community clean-up projects. They also coordinate programs to honor their peers on campus.

Saluki Baseball In St. Louis

Ninety alumni and friends attended a pre-game social prior to the Saluki baseball game against St. Louis University at GCS Ballpark in Sauget. On a cool and windy day, teams used wooden bats (as opposed to the customary aluminum bats), even Pyro.

Southern defeated St. Louis to send SIU fans home happy.

Alumni Member Baseball Game

One hundred twenty-five SIU alumni members attended a pre-game tailgate in April at Abe Martin Field. The group enjoyed lunch prior to Southern’s game against Creighton. Saluki Head Baseball Coach Dan Callahan visited with members in the Association tailgate tent.

After lunch, alumni members watched their team lose a hard-fought 2-1 game to the Bluejays. However, the Dawgs did rebound the next day to beat Creighton, thus winning two of three games from their nationally ranked conference rivals.

Alumni Member Softball Game

One hundred SIU alumni members gathered for a pre-game tailgate in April at Charlotte West Stadium – Rochman Field on campus.

The group enjoyed lunch prior to Southern’s game against Creighton. Saluki Head Softball Coach Kerri Blaylock visited with members in the Association tailgate tent. After lunch, alumni members watched the Salukis split a doubleheader against the Bluejays.

Banquet Honors Student Alumni Council Members

Student Alumni Council (SAC), the student chapter of the Southern Illinois University Alumni Association, honored six students for outstanding service to the organization.

SAC is a service-oriented organization that participates in programs enhancing the University and Carbondale communities. Members received the following awards during the organization’s annual spring banquet:

- Brandon Coleman – Outstanding SACer of the Year
  Coleman, a sophomore majoring in cinema, received this honor for earning the highest number of points. Members earn points for their hours of service to the Alumni Association, and Carbondale University communities.

- Brock Navarro – Most Social SACer
  Navarro, a sophomore in interior design, was recognized for making all members feel welcome during meetings and programs. He also plans social activities for the group.

- Danielle Lee – Most Dependable
  Lee, a senior in zoology, was honored for never-ending support to fellow SACers and the organization’s advisor.

- Taheera Randolph – Most Entertaining, Most Motivated, and Service to Community Award
  Randolph, a junior in integrated marketing communications/advertising, was cited for exhibiting a positive attitude and motivating her fellow SAC members. She also received recognition for the substantial number of hours she contributed to the Carbondale community.

- Timasha Udugama – Most Outstanding Student Leader, Most Outstanding Officer, and Most Valuable SACer
  Udugama, a sophomore in physiology, was honored for serving as a strong ambassador for SAC and fostering its growth. His dependability and involvement in myriad activities were also cited.

- Oksana Parylo – Service to SIU Alumni Association and SIU Award and Outstanding Newbie Award
  Parylo, a graduate student in education management, was honored for working the most amount of service to campus entities, including New Student Programs, SIU Alumni Association, Saluki Athletics, Special Events and Projects, Student Recreation Center, Student Affairs, and University Career Services.

- Anna Gorges, and Danielle Lee.

Williamson County Chapter Revitalization

Association Director Argus Tong met with SIUC alumna Kari Sanders ‘93 in May to discuss plans to revitalize the Williamson County Alumni Chapter of the SIU Alumni Association.

Efforts are focused on planning the Williamson County Awards Banquet in the fall to recognize high school scholarship recipients. The scholarships are funded by contributions from Williamson County alumni and friends. They are awarded to deserving seniors who will be attending Southern Illinois University.

To participate in the chapter or more information about the scholarships, please contact Argus Tong at (618) 453-2408.
Nominations Sought For Service To Southern Award

Nominations are being accepted for the Service to Southern Illinois Award. Nominees should be individuals who have provided outstanding service in the southern Illinois community. The application deadline is September 1.

Applications are available online at: http://www.siu alumni.com/programs.htm. The recipient will be honored along with Jackson County scholarship recipients at the Jackson County Alumni Chapter’s Awards Banquet in November. For more information, contact Kitty Mabus, Jackson County Chapter president, at mabus@siu.edu, or the SIU Alumni Association at (618) 453-2408.

'Under the Stars' Night At The MUNY

SIU alumni, family, and friends will have a night out at the MUNY in St. Louis—America's largest and oldest outdoor musical theatre—on Saturday, July 15.

Activities begin with a backstage tour at 6:15 p.m., followed by dinner at 7 p.m., at the Culver Pavilion. A performance of The Wizard of Oz begins at 8:15 p.m. This information has been listed online at www.siualumni.com, so please call (618) 453-2408 as soon as possible to see if space is still available.

Greater Michigan Alumni Picnic

The Greater Michigan Chapter of the SIU Alumni Association will be hosting its 7th Annual Detroit Picnic on July 29. All alumni, friends and families are invited to attend. The picnic will be held from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m. (EST) at the Kensington Metro Park Area (North Hickory Ridge, Site H) in Brighton, MI. For more information, please contact Chapter President Dale Hall at (586) 421-0595 or mossieoak@sbcglobal.net.

SIU Alumni Clubs In Atlanta and Phoenix

Efforts are ongoing to establish alumni clubs in the Atlanta and Phoenix area. Alumni chapters and clubs are essential in assisting the Association's efforts to establish an SIU presence in major metropolitan areas nationally, encourage participation in University activities, and facilitate involvement and camaraderie among all Salukis.

There are more than 2,600 alumni in the greater Atlanta and Phoenix areas. The Atlanta Club is currently led by Jim Dennis '94, jimjdennis@yahoo.com, and Matt '91, JD'94, and Laine Liss '91, lawliss@comcast.net.

Dave Barger '93, davebarger@cox.net is initiating efforts for the Phoenix Club. To be involved or to be notified of the club activities, please contact the club representatives.

Alumni Activities In Chicago

The SIU Alumni Association is seeking new volunteers to spearhead alumni activities in Chicagoland. There are more than 30,000 alumni in the Chicago area, and volunteers are needed to assist with the coordination of sporting, cultural, and social activities.

Meet SIU President Glenn Poshard At Lincoln Event

SIU President Glenn Poshard will be the special guest at a reception hosted by the SIU Alumni Association on Thursday, July 13, in Springfield.

The reception will be held at the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Museum and will include hors d'oeuvres, an evening at the museum, and an opportunity to meet President Poshard. Because of Museum capacity, attendance to this event is limited. Cost is $35 per person. For more information please call the SIU Alumni Association at (618) 453-2408.
GE Exec Fondly Remembers SIU

by Colin Low ’85, M.B.A. ’87

My college days at Southern Illinois University are some of the most momentous ones in my life, especially since it was the first time I had lived outside of my home country, Singapore.

Every day was a totally new life experience. One prominent event included courting my girlfriend, then fiancé, and now wife, Evelyn Koong, who was from Carbondale. We both went through our undergraduate programs at the College of Business and Administration and continued on to complete our MBAs at Southern as well. Today, we have a son, Ethan, who resides with us in Singapore.

My time in Carbondale also provided me with a set of American parents, David and Rachel Barlett, who still live in Carbondale, were my host family. They were my best teachers of American culture, history, values, and lifestyles. We still keep in close touch with my American mom and dad!

My most memorable professors included Dr. Charles Hindersman (Vice-Chancellor, Finance), Dr. Uma Sekaran, Dr. John Schmmerhorn, Dr. William Vicars, and Dean Thomas Gutteridge. I have “elephant memories” of them and many others. Each of these professors shaped my thinking processes in fundamental areas of business as well as in my personal life.

I had considerable personal time with all my professors, especially during graduate school when I worked both as a teaching and graduate assistant. Most importantly, it was the values and beliefs that were imbued in me through these professors from my varied interaction with them. My college life from 1983 to 1987 provided me with the essential building blocks for my current career.

I elected to work on my MBA program after being awarded a scholarship by the College of Business and Administration. Dr. Hindersman provided me the opportunity to work in a finance environment as a graduate assistant in the Office of the Comptroller right on beautiful Campus Lake.

I was pretty active in graduate school, serving on the University Graduate Council as one of two student representatives being “the voice of graduate students on campus” concerning campus and academic issues.

Dean Gutteridge at one time sponsored a memorable trip for me to represent SIUC at an International Technology Symposium at Stanford University in California. These multi-faceted events at college gave me the credibility and work experience to be later selected to work as one of two international students in Governor James Thompson’s Executive Office as an analyst in Springfield, Ill., the home of Abraham Lincoln.

I worked for three years in the governor’s office, and it proved to be the quickest introduction for me as an international student to American politics and the challenge of running the financial affairs of the State of Illinois. The job took me statewide and gave me personal perspectives to see how things were done in the big picture and then to zoom in to the detail level of business, politics, and day-to-day lives of individuals.

My time at SIU provided me with many fond memories, but more importantly, it was the foundation for my personal, family, and working life! Although I’m a Saluki far away from Carbondale, it’s always close in mind and thoughts!

(Editor’s Note: In 2005 Low was appointed president of General Electric – Singapore, Philippines and Vietnam. He was formerly managing director and general manager for Southeast Asia, GE Transportation – Aircraft Engines. He joined GE Aircraft Engines in 1999 as director of marketing and sales for the South Asia Pacific Region.)

The Fall Heard 'Round the World

hen Kristi Yamaoka talks about her fall last spring from atop a 15-foot pyramid of Saluki cheerleaders, it's not hard to understand why she suddenly began to cheer as EMTs wheeled her out of the St. Louis Savvis Center strapped to a stretcher.

"There is nothing that makes me more proud than being out on the floor wearing the SIU uniform. I love SIU," says the sophomore from Springfield, Ill., whose show of amazing school spirit was captured on national television during Southern's dramatic Missouri Valley Conference tournament championship win over Bradley.

After minutes of hushed silence in the packed basketball facility, emergency personnel were ready to take Yamaoka to a waiting ambulance. As they prepared to take her off the floor, the Saluki Pep Band began playing, and the fallen cheerleader moved her arms in a familiar routine to the school's fight song. "It was just an automatic reaction when I heard the fight song and the people clapping. I just wanted to make sure everybody knew I was OK."

Yamaoka has little specific recollection of exactly what happened during the well-rehearsed stunt her squad was performing—something they had done at games throughout the season. "My first thought when I fell was, gosh, this is so embarrassing." But what seemed to bother her most was the silence that had enveloped the enormous arena. "It's the exact opposite of what we (cheerleaders) try to get," she says emphatically.

Her injuries from the fall included a fractured vertebra, a concussion, and bruised lung. Yamaoka recalls the waning moments of the championship game. "We were all doing so well. I felt like I had distracted the basketball team, my cheerleading squad, the audience, and fans."

Yamaoka is grateful for not having more serious injuries and for the special attention she received from medical personnel, her fellow cheerleaders, her coach, and her family who were at her side in the St. Louis hospital. During those hours she was unaware that she had become an overnight celebrity and was about to get some serious attention.

An Overnight Sensation

Her first clue came when hospital personnel asked if they could place her on their VIP list because there were about 30 camera crews waiting outside the hospital to get her story. Fudge and flowers arrived from network stars Katie Couric and Soledad O'Brien, a get well call came from the President George W. Bush (who told her he had also been a cheerleader), and cards, e-mail and Facebook messages are still arriving.

Yamaoka has stayed cool and collected under the media glare after her accident. Her mother, Candace Keller, admits to being a nervous wreck and was worried about the press conference scheduled the day they left the hospital. "I didn't think she should do it since she wasn't feeling real well, but she stood up there and talked to everyone and was relaxed."

Her daughter is now recognized everywhere she goes—even in the Los Angeles Airport, according to Keller. She says when Kristi went with family members to a sports bar in Springfield to watch the Salukis' round one game in the NCAA tournament, people began to crowd around to talk to her. "Pretty soon even the media showed up."

Keller wants to say a special "thank you" to SIU alumni in Springfield and nationwide who have given her daughter enormous support. Both mother and daughter are amazed at the far reaching notoriety she has received. "A former Japanese exchange student who stayed with my sister's family sent a newspaper clipping from his hometown newspaper with a story and Kristi's picture," relates Keller.

Following a press conference at the hospital, Yamaoka, her doctor, sister Erin, who recently graduated from the University of Illinois, and two friends boarded a plane for New York and her scheduled appearance on the Today Show.

She describes the attentive flight attendants, limo rides in New York, her doctor's interview with Couric and get-occupational and rehabilitation therapy." But then with a major in physiology and minor in psychology, she also mentions pre-med, pre-physical therapy, or pre-pharmacy.

Always a tiny bundle of energy, Yamaoka was only 3 years old when she was enrolled in a gymnastics class to harness some of that boundless energy. She fell in love with the sport saying, "It was all I ever wanted to do." She was a competitive gymnast until an injury ended her career, which she calls a real blow.

When her coach and gymnastics teacher eventually opened her own gym in Springfield, she hired Yamaoka to help coach, which filled the hole she had felt in her life. Cheerleaders also competed from the gym and when one could not participate at the last minute, Yamaoka quickly learned the routine and filled in at the competition. The team won, and she was hooked.

Although Yamaoka was on her high school dance team, she didn't try out for cheerleading until arriving at SIU and she can't say enough about her cheerleading squad at Southern. "They're such a well-rounded group of students."

Unable to participate in the spring tryouts, she is grateful that her spot on the squad was held for her until fall. Her experience has made her more aware of safety concerns, and she hopes she can be an advocate of safer conditions not only for her Saluki squad, but for all cheerleaders. "We had one small accident, and I don't want it to ruin things for everyone. That's why I want to be an advocate for safer cheerleading so we can continue."

During the summer Yamaoka plans to lay low, take care of herself and spend time with her close-knit family, including her stepfather, Mike Howie, a huge Saluki sports fan who frequently attends SIU basketball games. But more than anything else, she is anxious to return to campus next fall.

"I'm doing great; I'll be back out there cheering for SIU!"

Art Chicago, and the Palazzo Falconieri in Rome, Italy.

He co-founded WhiteWalls, a magazine of writings by artists, in Chicago in 1978 and served as the publication's editor until 1987. He has since written extensively on topics in contemporary art and culture, contributing reviews and essays to a number of publications.

- College of Mass Communication and Media Arts – William Livek ’76, co-CEO of Simmons Market Research.
- Livek has more than 29 years of experience in the media and marketing information industries in the sales and marketing areas.

In 1992, he co-founded Simmons' parent company with Bill Engel, his business partner of 27 years, Symmetrical Resources, which bought Simmons Market Research Bureau in 1998. Previously, Livek served as president and CEO of ADcom Information Systems Inc., which electronically measured local cable television viewing for the purpose of allowing advertisers and agencies to use the power of "highly targeted television" more effectively. In the 1980s and early 90s, he was president and CEO of Birch Scarborough Research.

David NewMyer, faculty advisor for the Aviation Management Society, nominated Jaynes for the Super Student Scholarship. NewMyer says Jaynes was more than qualified for the award because of his excellent work as an Aviation Management Society officer and member, his academic credentials, and his overall experience.

to its members. The Society organizes seminars conducted by industry professionals, invites guest speakers to weekly meetings, and visits with aviation industry organizations.

He says his AMS membership is one of the most rewarding experiences of his life.

"AMS has aided in my leadership skills greatly. I've established valuable relationships in the field and it has provided me with insight on how to conduct myself in a professional manner," he says. "It helped me understand that being an executive is a tough task."

The organization coordinates a charity fly-in and pancake breakfast for students and community members to visit the airport and watch aircraft fly in during the day. Funds generated from the pancake breakfast are donated to a charitable cause. Last year the society donated to the hurricane relief funds and Habitat for Humanity.

"The reaction of young children always light up when they see airplanes and they can take a ride for the first time," Jaynes says. "It also gives me a sense of accomplishment and a good feeling knowing that I am helping contribute to a worthwhile cause."

David NewMyer, faculty advisor for the Aviation Management Society, nominated Jaynes for the Super Student Scholarship. NewMyer says Jaynes was more than qualified for the award because of his excellent work as an Aviation Management Society officer and member, his academic credentials, and his overall experience.

"Dr. NewMyer opened my eyes because he says learning about the field goes beyond reading a book," Jaynes says. "You have to research, memorize, and be adaptable. In other words, you have to be a college student. I really enjoy learning from him."

Jaynes' peers also highly recommended him for the award. Nate Brown, president of the Undergraduate Student Government, attested to Jaynes' commitment as a USG senator. Brown says he placed his full faith and trust behind him.

Jaynes says his experience in USG is invaluable.

"Someone is always going to oppose you. It is your job to either bypass that person or get them to see your viewpoint," he says. "I have had my patience tested, my understanding pushed to its limits, but still I try to give back the best I can. I am dedicated to the cause, and I owe it to the people who elected me to do a good job and support them in any way I can."

After college Jaynes says he will embark on the long road to becoming a pilot. He plans to become a flight instructor for a short time while building his experience. He aspires to get a job flying chartered aircraft or perhaps a cargo route until he can earn enough hours to receive a position with an airline unit.

"My dream job is to be a pilot and administrator for a major airline," he says. "There aren't many jobs like this available so it will be difficult—but I've always had high hopes."

1940s

R. Dale Kittle ’49 writes that he is still involved in theater in Key West, Fla., and that he would love to have attended the McLeod Theatre 40th Anniversary Celebration last April. Kittle retired in 1984 from Chicago City Colleges. He was at Southern when Dr. McLeod came in 1948 and says he has “many, many fond memories of SIU.”

1950s

Michael Patrick ’56, M.A. ’57 has written a book examining the contributions of African-Americans in exploring and settling the American West. The Black West in Story and Song was published in February. Patrick retired as professor emeritus of English and folklore at the University of Missouri-Rolla and taught Alabama folklore and Southern folklore at the University of South Alabama-Baldwin County for five years. He lives in Fairhope, Ala.

Moody Honored For Lighting Design Work

James Moody ’67 was honored with the Distinguished Achievement Award in Lighting Design at the United States Institute for Technology conference in March, adding to the many awards he has received for his work in theater, television, film, and concerts.

Moody has also returned to Southern to work with McLeod Theater productions and share his professional expertise with students. A pioneer in concert stage lighting, Moody has designed and toured with Rod Stewart, Linda Ronstadt, the Eagles, Dolly Parton, and the Beach Boys, to name a few. His television work included serving as original lighting director for television’s “The Don Kirshner Rock Concert” and director of photography for “Wheel of Fortune” and “Jeopardy.”

Moody earned a master’s degree in technical theater/lighting from UCLA and later served as an assistant to Jules Fisher, an influential Broadway designer. He has published more than 50 articles, and his book, Concert Lighting: Techniques, Art and Business, is a guide for other lighting designers and students.

35th Reunion Brings Salukis Together Again

Several SIU alumni met for their 35th reunion during last year’s football season. The group enjoyed seeing the Salukis defeat Youngstown State, and then followed that up with a social event. The group met and became friends during the late 1960’s while attending Southern, and has been getting together every five years starting with the 25th anniversary. Everyone is looking forward to “SIU Reunion 2010.”

1960s

John Gracen Brown ’61, M.S. ’62 has donated a copy of his most recent book of poetry titled The Return to Southern’s Morris Library. Brown lives in Martinsburg, W.V.

Frederick Golub M.S. ’65 was recently honored for outstanding service to Bergen Community College in Paramus, N.J., where he served on the faculty and as a counselor and advisor for 37 years. College President Dr. Judith Winn presented the plaque to Golub.

Harold Lee Milner ’68 is elected chair of the board of directors for the Network Knowledge Public Television Stations WSEC in Springfield, WQEC in Quincy, and WMEC in Macomb. Milner spent 25 years in communication leadership positions with the Illinois State Board of Education, retiring in 2003. He is now communications and public affairs consultant and lobbyist, as well as a communications associate with the Central Illinois Community Blood Center. His daughter, Leanne, is a 2003 graduate of SIUC's radio-television program.

Dennis Donham, M.S. '68, Ph.D. '77 has published a book of poetry, A Fly in Time that includes a poem about Carbondale. Other topics are related to his experiences in Nepal and India, his family, and encounters with Paul McCartney and George S. McGovern. Retired from academia, Donham writes that he enjoys reading, working out, walking, and writing.

1970s

Suzanne Kias McCafferty '71 has retired after a 34-year career as a teacher. After teaching high school math the last 24 years in Glen Ellyn, Ill., she has moved to Clarksville, Tenn.

S. Sharon Doyle-Norris '72 lives in Brownsville, Tenn., and is semi-retired. Through her business, Nutbush Heritage Productions Inc., she helped initiate West Tennessee music tourism, sponsoring music festivals and area tours from 1991 to 2003. She is married to Lionel Norris. She wrote Black America Series, Haywood County Tennessee, and contributed to several Tennessee history books.

Jock Olson '72 recently was inducted into the PGA of America's Golf Professional Hall of Fame in Port St. Lucie, Fla. Olson, who was named 2002 National Golf Professional of the Year, is head golf professional at Interlachen Country Club in Edina, Minn. He will celebrate his 30th year as a golf professional on July 1. In addition, he and his wife, Cherie '73, met while SIU students, will note their 34th wedding anniversary this year. They are life members of the SIU Alumni Association.

Don Wayne Davis '74, M.S. '87 has been named head golf professional at Kokopelli Golf Club in Marion, Ill. Davis was formerly a high school and community college teacher and consultant for the Illinois State Board of Education.

He lives in Benton, Ill., with his wife, Donna, a daughter, and two sons.

Daniel Herzog M.A. '77 lives in Newark, N.J., where he was recently honored by Community Access Unlimited (CAU) with the Geller Award, given to volunteers who make a notable impact in their community. Herzog, a licensed social worker in the state of New Jersey, was a caseworker from 1982 to 1995 for the New Jersey Division of Developmental Disabilities.

Bill Striegel '78, M.S. '80 and his wife, Claudia '78, live in Normal, Ill. He is the regional seed treatment technical development representative for Bayer CropScience.

Michael Fellner '79 is an Emmy Award-winning technical supervisor in the television industry. He has worked in the Los Angeles area for more than 20 years.

1980s

Bob Beck '83 recently received the annual media award from the Wyoming Governors Council on Impaired Driving for his work as news director of Wyoming Public Radio, a position he has held for 18 years. He was recognized for investigating and reporting on the challenges associated with preventing impaired driving in Wyoming.

Frank Klingberg's contributions to the political science and international studies programs at Southern Illinois University have been well-documented since his arrival in 1946. A permanently endowed professorship was established in Klingberg's name in 2004. He started and sponsored an International Relations Club and a highly successful on-campus Model United Nations program with students from Southern and nearby schools participating.

In addition, Klingberg has established a legacy of accepted political theories and many of his students have held prominent teaching and political positions around the world.

The emeritus political science professor and his wife Leota, are Life Members of the SIU Alumni Association. Still active in their 90s, the Klingbergs share a passion for the University's political science and international studies programs and are strong supporters of the Paul Simon Public Policy Institute.

"We have no more enthusiastic supporters than the Klingbergs," Mike Lawrence, director of the Paul Simon Public Policy Institute, says. "We treasure their friendship and always look forward to having them participate in our events."

Recently Klingberg contributed a personal collection of 1,700 of his political journals to the Institute of Philosophy and Law in Yekaterinburg, Russia, the largest city in eastern Russia.

Stephen Shulman, associate professor of political science and first recipient of the Frank L. Klingberg Endowed Professorship, says "Russian television and newspaper reporters covered the presentation, which was made by U.S. General Consul John Stepanchuk."

Shulman says the collection, which includes 15 political science journals, is outstanding. "Some of the top journals in political science/international relations are represented - including American Political Science Review, Political Science Quarterly, International Studies Quarterly, World Politics, International Security, and Foreign Affairs, with the oldest volumes going back to 1936."

Klingberg credits Shulman for finding a home for his collection and then finding a way to get the journal collection to Russia. "I was quite surprised that they wanted it, but there are lots of Russian students who read English and I'm sure the journals will be used for their research."

Anonymous donors, including some of Klingberg's former students, helped establish the $250,000 professorship permanently. Shulman, who will hold the professorship for five years, plans to focus on the concept of nationalism in the Ukraine and plans to bring in outside speakers and create a cash prize for top students in the introduction to international relations course.

Klingberg is happy that Shulman was the first chosen, saying "he will continue and build on things that I used to do, especially the Model United Nations program." Students in the program become experts on a country, learning all they can about its history, culture, resources and politics. Then they participate in conferences where they advocate their country's positions.

For their devotion to the students of Southern Illinois University and contributions to the political science field worldwide, the SIU Alumni Association proudly salutes Frank and Leota Klingberg.
Graduation – Southern Style

Southern Illinois University Carbondale’s spring commencement exercises were held May 12-13, as 3,015 candidates for undergraduate degrees, 350 candidates for master’s degrees, 117 candidates for law degrees, and 41 candidates for doctoral degrees enjoyed a time to reflect and celebrate. Here are just a few of those scenes, captured by SIUC Media & Communication Resources photographers Steve Buhman and Russell Bailey.
