SOUTHERN STUDENT DESCRIBES LIFE IN LE CAMP FRANCAIS

By KENNETH CARROLL

Tucked away amid the five hundred lakes of Crow Wing county lies Inwood, the new home of the Camp Francais. Upon arriving at Inwood one must forget his native language and live in a new manner, with French as his basic language. If he should also know Spanish or German in addition to French, that is advantageous, for you will find many who like to lapse into these languages for relaxation from the habitual French.

Uncensored Nonsense

By JOHN J. WHITEHEAD

No tires and maybe no gasoline are keeping vacationists in their own back yards this summer. No more sightseeing trips out West; no more bathing in the Gulf of Mexico; Uncle Sam has stopped all that. Unless something pops up this year these husbands will spend their two weeks at home—something like, maybe, firing the front porch machine guns on the more fortunate, eyes might get time off enough to see a movie or two. Finally a dreadful two weeks, the weary state will begin a search for something close to home, but not too close. That is where Orient comes in.

Orient, in this case, does not mean the Far East, but the Near West. The little town of 950 is located in a clearing about four miles northwest of West Frankfort. The town is spread over a miniature mountain range that offers almost of scenic beauty for the automobile tourist. Those vacationists who want to rough it can pitch a tent on the side of any hill. Tent pickers should keep in mind that obnoxious and mosquitoes are omnipresent. For those tourists of the higher income bracket, Orient offers two luxurious hotels and the near future a lovely apartment building.

Orient has much to offer to tourists. Its population represents a cross of every country on the globe, thus giving the benefits of a world wide tour. Customs and traditions of the old country are still present, including everything up to the odors of garlic and foreign cooking. The educated person who can speak more than the English language, one hardly has trouble to finding someone who can speak the same language in a misunderstanding way.

The town's business district is like any other's, only there isn't as much of it. It includes four saloons, one restaurant, one postoffice, one hardware store, one movie, and four grocery stores. In case the tourist wants to bring a vacuum cleaner along, there is plenty of electricity. The town also has a water system. Do not depend too much on the water, though. It is about as dependable as the weather. The dump will break down right in the middle of a shave, or dish washing. It wouldn't be a bad idea to include paper dishes, and an electric razor in your camping outfit.

Orient has a colorful history. At one time it was a notorious wild open place. Where every man was armed to the teeth and carried his own dice. The crap games would go unpoliced in the middle of the street. The only law that existed was the survival of the fittest. At any time the headlines might read "SEVEN SHOT IN CRAP GAME". Things have changed considerably—the crap games have moved inside. There are three bullet holes in the door of one of the saloons, which gives the only evidence that the town was once wild and regular. Ask these people to tell you the story of how those bullet holes got there, and you will hear three blood curdling tales that will make your hair stand on end.

If you are seeking quiet and peace, come to Orient. The only complaint is that it is almost impossible to predict where your fellow students and professors will have come from. This year, the group was larger than any year, but it still included people from such places as Paris, Madrid, New York City, Canada, and Mexico. Students live in cabins about the lakes, two or three to a cabin. One cabin served as headquarters and was equipped with recording sets and everything else that one could record his voice or listen to his favorite French compositions, both modern and classic. My cabin was quite interesting since the Spanish professor, a royalist priest from Madrid, and a student from Paris, France gave it variety and color.

Informal Classes

All classes were very informal with professors as well as students wearing shorts and sandals on the warmer days. Your classroom might be anything from a shady pine grove to a sunbaked porch. The most interesting part was that you could get so much attention could be given individual weaknesses. One mispronounced syllable was often the source of hours of afternoon work with your tutor. Even with such attention to the fine details you seldom found the details that when they began outlining procedures was gained by trying at least one picnic or excursion weekly. The sale day, however, was July 14, Bastille Day. Classes were cancelled and a true celebration began. The citizens came from a broad district and were glad to greet from nearby resorts who had come to join us in our festivity.

Knowledge of Gallic French

Life as a whole developed a conversational and informal French that was almost impossible to learn from classroom study. An example of this might be seen in the first breakfast I had at Inwood, Belgium's scholarship student, I took the orders of the others at my table. All went smoothly through the fruit juices at once, but when they began talking about what they wanted their eggs I had to resort to a combination of careful guesswork and literal translation, for my classes had offered far too many things for me to remember scrambled eggs. As days and weeks passed you grew accustomed to ordering your meals, playing various sports, and living with French as your language. The end of camp each of us was hoping to return to this land of lakes and fun that had become in a few weeks our French home for the summer.

callion with the outside world are two party lines, which are always busy. The town's natives are more interesting than the buck. Fishermen can have all the bad luck they want in the creeks that surround the town, and vacationists who send post cards playing various sports, and living with French as your language. The end of camp each of us was hoping to return to this land of lakes and fun that had become in a few weeks our French home for the summer.

A person's handwriting may be an index to his character. Certainly a study of it can be fascinating. Unfortunately, some of the fellows whose letters are used in these columns fail to realize that it is almost impossible to read their long, involved addresses, after they have been generally snuffed up in transit. Sometimes it's necessary to guess at the smudged address which is risky business when one considers all the places a letter could stray. Why don't you fellows put your addresses somewhere inside your letter? Then when your address is printed in these columns, your friends who write to you cannot fail to reach you.

A very interesting letter was recently received from Corp. Marvin Knowlen of the 6th Cavalry, Personnel Office, Fort Clark, Texas. He writes: "My knowledge and experience in public speaking has helped me immeasurably. I spend a great deal of my time away from the reservation on speaking tours, civilian programs, and Radio presentations. There is a large amount of work yet to be done in this field, and a great need for the establishment of a better relation between civilians of all races and the Negro Soldier. The small amount of work I have done has had tremendous effect.

I expect to travel and broadcast very soon for the Eighth Corps Area in an effort to encourage the selling of War Bonds. My experience with Poland Hays and over W. S. T. L. of the University of Iowa got credit for this honor."

BOHRAD FAMILY LOOKING FORWARD TO YEAR'S STAY IN CARBONDALE

Artist Will Sketch For Obelisk and Paint Local Scenes For Exhibition

By MARY LOU HAMPTON

Aaron Bohrod, noted American painter, who will be artist in residence at Southern Illinois Normal University next year, is very much interested in the "jelly-joints" and the "colored" part of Carbondale, Burnett H. Shroyck, head of the Art Department, wrote after the arrival here with the Bohrods in Chicago last week.

Mr. Shroyck reports that Mr. Bohrod is quite excited about coming to Carbondale, and is very happy about the neon signs in town. "The deepness and richness of the quality of his paintings of common street scenes, which are the subject of some of his most famous works, will be greatly enhanced by these bits of added color."

The Bohrod Family

The other two members of the Bohrod family, Mrs. Colored and Mark, will probably also become well known to the S.I.N.U. student body. Mrs. Bohrod, a teacher in the Chicago public school system, has been granted a year's leave of absence, and plans to add college courses to her regular job in Carbondale. Mark, the artist's youngest son, is responsible for one of Bohrod's famous still-life paintings—a group of toys arranged by Mark himself—will be enrolled in the Albany Training School.

Mr. Shroyck described the Bohrod apartment as very attractive and simple and functional. The studio is the front parlor of an old Victorian flat. Pictures are stacked on tables and in the corners, and the place is very workable in a workmanlike clutter. The living room has several of his own paintings, one given him by one of the Boyer brothers, and a lithograph by Roulet.

The dining room, according to Mr. Shroyck, is more like a library, with books and some very interesting sculpture. Bohrod has one piece by Edgair Britton, and another, a leaning dinosaur, by Mark Bohrod.

Bohrod to Have Studio Here

Mr. Shroyck plans to have a part of the Art Department space partitioned off for Mr. Bohrod's studio in Carbondale. He will bring several oils and water colors with him, and as he paints there will be new ones of Carbondale, Southern Illinois, and college scenes for everyone to see. His latest painting, on which he is

SPIRITS OUTCLASS CARTER'S ACES 13-6 IN SLUGFEST LAST THURSDAY

The Spirits of '76 made it three games down and two to go last Thursday, July 30, as they outclassed the Carter's Aces for the third time to take the game, 13 to 6. It was the Aces' third loss as against only one victory in their struggle against the defending champions.

Milosevich was quickly driven off the mound, by the slugging Spirits, and Soeteber was rushed to his aid. It was Milosevich's second loss of the campaign, as McCreight was gathering his second victory.

Spirits Have Slugged

The Spirits made a slugfest out of the afternoon's entertainment as Milosevich was battered off the mound. A total of twelve runs crossed the plate in the early innings for the Seventy-sixers; three runs in the first, five runs in the second, and four runs in the third.

Foehner Singles

In the second inning, which proved to hold the biggest rally of the game, Foehner led off the inning with a single. McClellan walked. Foehner later scored as Milosevich tried to pitch him off second, but with no one to cover the base the ball went out to center field, which Lettich's inability to pick up the pellet allowed the run to come in. McClellan moved to second on the play.

Carriers followed with a single to give to McClellan, with the second run of the inning. Cramer's double placed runners on second and third and McCleight's single brought in two more runs. Mitchell drove in McCleight as he grounded a triple out to left-center, but the rally ended as Glodich rushed out to Soeteber at third.

The rally apparently continued to the fourth as Foehner reached first on an infield hit. McClellan also reached first as his grounder to Sebastian turned out to be an unsuccessful play. Soeteber came in to third. Foehner later scored on Carruthers' by to center, while Martin's and Cramer's two singles brought in McClellan. Martin later scored on Pigg's error in center, and Cramer also came in as McCreight doubled.

Spirits Get Last Run in Fifth

The Spirits' last run was a result of unnecessary effort in the fifth. Carruthers led off with a sharp single to left, and scored as Mitchell, last man to bat in the inning, sent out the second single of the fifth frame.

The Carter's Aces led off the scoring of the game, Stewart's single combined with the singles of the bats of Sebastian and Pigg along with Foehner's error allowed three runs to the first half of the first inning.

The Aces scored three more runs in the fifth. Stewart led off the second rally of Carter's by virtue of a triple to right. Sebastian walked and took third as Milosevich doubled. Moake's triple, the second of McCleight in the inning, drove in the last two runs of the Carter's Aces.

The Spirits took little time in equaling the total of three runs compiled by the Aces in the first half of the first inning. The powerful punch of the Spirits' stars again started the game before the end of the last half of the first. Martin's double, Cramer's terrific home run (which went all the way out to the wall in left), and McCleight's double drove in all three runs.

The heavy hitting of the day for the Spirits was placed in the hands of Cramer, who socked out a double and a home run; McCleight, who slashed out two doubles; Martin, who banged out the fourth double for the Spirits; and Mitchell, who helped to bring in McCleight in the second. The Carter's Aces got at their extra-base hits in the fifth. Stewart and Moake both tripled, and Milosevich connected with a double.

technicalities of flying. I am now receiving instruction on instrument flying, cross-country, and night flying. One really has to "be on the ball" during this type of flying. "Being on the ball" is an expression very common to the Air Corps, originating from the little ball in the planes gyroscope compass, which the pilot must continuously keep centered to keep the plane in level flight. And we always thought college students had a monopoly on fitting slang expressions!

Hunt in Pursuit Squad

First Lieutenant John H. Hunt writes: "I have been moving around the country since I left old Southern. You see, I am in Pursuit (Fighters) and it doesn't take us long to get around. Just got back from a trip to the West coast which indeed was quite enjoyable. I think my outfit has flown about every fighter that Uncle Sam puts out except the P-43 of which only a few were made. SPIRITS SWEEP CARTER'S ACES WITH ONE-HIT PITCHING OF FLIGOR, 5 TO 2

Jean Fligor held the Aces to only one hit yesterday, as the Spirits of '76 swept away the game from the tottering representatives of Carter's Aces, 5 to 2.

Carter took an early lead in the last half of the first, but it proved short-lived and the Spirits brought in their winning runs in a three-run sixth. Stewart led off the game for the Aces as he reached first on a base on balls. Moake, on what was really a sacrifice hit, also got to first as Fligor attempted to throw out Stewart walking down to second. Milosevich walked, and the bases were loaded. Roy Lettich then brought in the Aces' first run. It was a squeeze butt down the third base line and Stewart scored standing up.

VOICE OF S.I.N.U.

So it must be today with those of us who must earn a living. If we spend our time studying the culture of yesterday we will have none left to be building a culture of today—a culture which includes functional objects and practical-minded men and women who will utilize them to keep America in the forefront of usefulness which the pioneers instituted.
