The social society put on a program of considerable merit last Friday. With the central theme that of contrasting the music and architecture of the ninth and twenty-first centuries, with that of the twentieth century, the entertainment opened with a talk by Hans Knipper, author of "Etudes in Harmony," by Tennyson. Margaret Hill followed her with an illustrated lecture on the selection of the following day, and by Harley Bailey, who sang a selection from a Masquer opera, and J.C. Wiblok, who gave several popular numbers, effectively contrasted the music of the two centuries.

Junior High School Will Present Play, "Rumpelstiltskin"

To finance a banquet in honor of their basketball team, the eighth grade of the Allyn Junior High School will present a play of the Rumpelstiltskin type in the Assembly room on Saturday afternoon. The play, which will be given in the Assembly assembly room will be ten cents per ticket.

Rumpelstiltskin, one of the oldest tales in European folklore, is the quaint story of a miller who tells the king that his daughter can spin gold out of straw. Rumpelstiltskin, an elf, comes to the miller's aid, performs the miracles, and then after Margot becomes queen demands the young woman for his reward. After various complications are smoothed out, the story ends happily, of course.

Among the books new to the college library is a copy of Edward S. Nindie's biography, entitled George Whitefield, Prophet-Precacher. Although the book is not entirely new (it was published by the Abingdon Press) it merits a few words. As a life of Whitefield it is rather good; but as a biographical work it is very defective and the lives and virtues are the weightiest.

The greatest fault is the biased standpoint from which the author views his subject. The result is that the impartial historian would look advance at the work; even the honest and careful reader is likely to be incensed at the prejudiced standpoint. Nindie says everything but that Whitefield was living in paradise—to the free thinker the book is repugnant; the unbiased reader of history is likely to be repelled by the author's letting his religion enter into his work. A historian should never take the opportunity to make a case for religion in a biography.

Of the virtues, there are several—this volume contains the first full biography of Whitefield. All the facts of his life from his turbulent childhood to his maturity are treated with a thoroughness that is reason to shorten and highly readable.

Stanley Vestal's Sitting Bull, Champion of the Sioux, A Biography, published by Houghton-Mifflin Company, in 1932 is a life of Sitting Bull is the first full biography of one of the most widely known Indian figures. The book has a rather full treatment of his early life, a rather revealing period since as a young man he was a leader among the Sioux. The early period has received little treatment here, largely because there are no existing records—his first contacts with white men coming after he was fifty years old. Even accounts described by relatives may not be in his life are based on military reports.

Vestal took a new line of procedure—he systematically questioned all persons who knew Sitting Bull or had witnessed any of his exploits. These accounts were synthesized and made into a story. Among these who were, quizzed, were the names of Julius Standing Bear, of Minneapolis, and Mrs. One Bull Brown stands out in the memory of the Sioux largely because of their perniciousness.

Although this book directly solves the problems of Dinsky, the lovable heroine of Flowering Wilderness, by finding for her a happy ending, deals mainly with the sensational affair of Claire, Dinsky's older sister, who returns to the life of a whore after an unfortunate marriage to a scout. Claire becomes involved in a scandal and is dragged through the courts.

The Forsays are again present in this book; it has the familiar "fairy tale" pictures which Galsworthy does so well. We meet here a Fleur who is older and kinder than she was at the White Mountain—although she is still as beautiful.

One More River forms an almost ideal conclusion to the long saga of the Forsays, because it leaves them with their problems solved, and their lives all happily adjusted.

Nebraska University made its formal a "fairy tale" and the lads and lasses even wore gingham and overalls.

The Maroons lost the game on a free throw after Broman fouled him. Playing a careful, close-guarding defense, the Maroons managed to keep two points ahead of the Alumni throughout the first period.

The first team, upon entering the game, was cold and allowed the woodsmen to climb within one point of the score 14-13. Campbell, Illinois, had a long shot to put his team ahead, and Holder and Davison added four points to the Maroons' score. The Maroons finally won on a scoring spree and tallied five points before the half and could drop in another one of his long shots.

Holding and Davison added two more baskets for Shurtleff, and then Holder joined in the scoring rally, raising the score to 29-20. Charity baskets by Holder and Davison ended the Southwestern game, and Davison was the scorer of the Pioneers' last basket, and the game ended 31-22.

Holding, the leading scorer for the victors, while Captain Menzie led his team in points garnered.

Playing a careful, close-guarding defense, the Maroons managed to keep two points ahead of the Alumni throughout the first period.

The first team, upon entering the game, was cold and allowed the woodsmen to climb within one point of the score 14-13. Campbell, Illinois, had a long shot to put his team ahead, and Holder and Davison added four points to the Maroons' score. The Maroons finally won on a scoring spree and tallied five points before the half and could drop in another one of his long shots.

Holding, the leading scorer for the victors, while Captain Menzie led his team in points garnered.

A considerable increase in points. Blackwood, whose sensational rise from nowhere to the top rungs of the scoring ladder in the American League last week was heartily applause, is still near the top of that ladder. Hale who led the scoring in the National League last week with 83 points is now in fifth place, as the other scorers made heavy gains. Hale's team won last week. Supplanting Hale as the highest point man in the National League is North. Of unusual interest is the three-way tie between Paredes, B. Moore, and Springer, teammates, all of whom have 83 points.
