Your Home in 1876

By GILBERT VAUGHN

Another of this series continues calls Gallatin County. It was the formal residence of the first settler in the southwestern part of the Territory of Utah, John B. Ford. The story of the early history of the county is well known, and the present-day residents are proud of their pioneer heritage.

The talk of the town was the building of the first school in the county. The school was built in 1874 and was supported by the community. The building was a log structure, with a small room for the teacher and a larger room for the students.

Thanks to the efforts of the NYA, many college students have been able to continue their education and contribute to the community. The NYA has helped to bridge the gap between students and opportunities, making higher education accessible to a wider range of students.

The NYA has had a significant impact on the community, and the residents are grateful for the opportunities it has provided. The NYA has helped to foster a sense of community and to encourage the growth of local businesses.
