According to Dr. Joseph Mirando, who is heading the project which is being conducted in cooperation with the Chicago pharmaceutical company, individuals volunteering for inoculation are not being used as "guinea pigs."

"The vaccine has been tested and is safe," he said. "We simply are attempting to test its effectiveness in the consolidated community that we want to vaccinate."

The Richman, director of the health service, said the pharmaceutical company will make small blood samples taken from the volunteers when the vaccine is given and also 2 weeks later. This will show whether the volunteers would receive the inoculation without danger. The vaccine will be available to all students, he said.

An IBM 650 computer unit is moved from Southern Illinois University's Computing Center to the new Data Processing and Computing Center which combines all electronic data-processing activities on the campus. Located in the former cafeteria building, the Center will go into full operation next spring when new magnetic tape and card computers are installed. Then the old computer, shown on lease for the past five years, will be "retired." The Center will have capacity to handle many complex research instructional and administrative chores.

Considerable concern has been voiced by students in the University concerning the high rate of $135 per term to be charged at Saluki Hall, the newly privatized men’s dormitory on South University Street near Mill. A group of students have expressed their intention to impose a “friendly picket” at the new building.

While the rate of $132 per term is approximately $50 per term higher than the average rate in off-campus housing and would amount to an enormous precedent in housing costs, there is the other side of the coin which cannot be examined. In attempting to determine the fairness of the higher rate, it appears desirable to try to estimate the cost of construction, and whatever kind of return the owners of Saluki Hall expect to make on their investment. Such information is not of a public nature, and a spokesman for Saluki Enterprises refused to make any comments, understandably, to comment. Consequently, after consultation with property owners, builders, accountants, realtors and other professionals, the following estimate of yearly return has been worked out.

Capital Investment $225,000

A City of Bloomington Building Permit (which, incidentally, was not obtained until this investigation began) shows the estimated cost of the building at $110,000. This figure is low, according to professionals consulted. In many cases, estimations are off as much as $50,000.

Yearly Income $225,000

Incomes (assuming full occupancy 98%) for three 12-month periods

Operating Expenses

Operating Expenses (including utilities and supplies, insurance and upkeep, and janitor, manager and resident fellow salaries) $13,000.00

Total Est. Yearly Expense $257,500.00

Result of Figure $225,955.00

The figure of $225,955 represents a return of slightly more than 10 per cent on an investment of $225,000. That, according to investors and realtors, is not much of a fair return on a real estate investment, although it is considerably more than one would receive from, say, government bonds.

The important thing is, after all, whether or not the higher priced housing will be worth the extra dollars. The University receives an average of $40 per term per occupant in the Small Group Housing buildings. Saluki’s sleeping is by dormitory, and the houses are located far from most campus buildings and considerable distance from town. Saluki Hall will house two to three times as many students and will be in operation year round.

In conclusion, the university administration believes that the extra dollars will be worth the extra dollars. The University receives an average of $40 per term per occupant in the Small Group Housing buildings. Saluki’s sleeping is by dormitory, and the houses are located far from most campus buildings and considerable distance from town. Saluki Hall will house two to three times as many students and will be in operation year round.

The dormitory is located both close to campus and close to downtown Carbondale. Not valuing the worth of “extras,” it is obvious that the dormitory will offer a higher class of room for which, no doubt, many Southern students will be willing and able to pay.

Still unanswered, however, is the point of paramount importance, is the question of what kind of a pattern a rate of $135 per term in any housing could start. Saluki Hall may be worth that much. Far too many of the present off-campus rooms are not yet worth $50 to $60 per term. This much less than present average of about $50, and far from an average rate of $90, which, while in 1970 the $135 is indeed higher and not a little doubt simply too high for a large portion of Southern students, in almost all cases, the dormitory will be far more desirable, will be something of the sort with which we are all familiar, in increasing numbers, and, we hope that property owners will rise worth higher rate before they raise their prices.

Defends Fee Increase

Editor: “Southern Will Not Suffer Without Increased Fees,” was the subject of much attention of the students in the freshman and sophomore classes. Southern, for the benefit of those interested in promoting a bigger and better sports program for Southern.

There have been several high sounding letters written most recently. One such letter was written to the trustees by a student at Southern, expressing his belief that the trustees were being unfair to the students who are against spending a little more, even voluntarily, in order to better the school is, in his opinion, a “white elephant” and is being sincere in their beliefs. Many of them would not attend Southern if they were denied admission to athletic events. If a small additional charge were made, the students would manage to dig deep in order to attend the big games and would not object to spending a little more for an extra experience.

I believe there are many students who would sign up for the Southern sports program, if in fact, the school spirit that often results from a winning team is a noteworthy outcome may actually carry over to classroom life. I would rather have to look forward to next year, than to spend an additional charge for the benefit of the school.

Grinnel on Center

Editor: “I have a serious gripe regarding the University Center, as do many other students here. It is a frequent and far from perfect, in many ways. I must be in the construction of the building, but not the management.

I admit the center cost a lot of money for construction, but I don’t see why the students and the faculty have to suffer by paying ridiculous prices for food and drink.

I understand the building’s main purpose was to provide a place where students can come and have time to enjoy the company of other students. But I have been there, and I feel that the center’s construction has been an embarrassment to the students and the teachers.

I think a lot of students are not happy with the center, and I believe that we should have a voice in the construction of the building, and I believe that the students should be more involved in the management of the center.

I believe that the students should have a voice in the construction of the building, and I believe that the students should be more involved in the management of the center.

Editor: “Many off-campus students feel left out. Many of the students who live off-campus feel left out of the fun and excitement of campus life. Something should be done about it. We want to be involved.”

Five titles in a new "Crosscurrents - Modern Critics" series of books on modern world literature edited by Southern Illinois University's research professor Dr. Harry T. Moore will appear in February, were announced Dec. 10 by the University Press.

The books, hardbound and uniform in format, will appear at a rate of three a year after this issue, offering a representative selection of world literature.

Moore is an authority on D. H. Lawrence and other contemporary writers. Last Saturday he appeared on GBS nationally televised program, "Accent." During the half-hour show, Moore discussed the life and writings of Lawrence with host John Ciardi.

His own volume, "The World of Lawrence Dartell," will be among the five titles to be initially published. It is offered as the "free book-week examination" of Darrell's writings.

Another title due in February is "Samuel Beckett: The Language of Self," by Frederick J. Hallman, professor of modern literature and vice-chairman of the Division of Humanities at the University of California.

"Willa Cather's Gift of Sympathy" by Edward and Lillian Bloom, offers a penetrating look into this important American novelist. "Michael Lomonov," by Michigan University's John Mears, Jr., offers an insight into the world of a man who influenced the prose of Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoievsky, Chekhov, and Pushkin.
