Cogs Help Blind, Student Master Mechanical Art

True or false: A school is helping a Southern Illinois University student master mechanical drawing.

Donald Wendell, a senior, who lives nearby and is home for summer break, has taken up the challenge of helping a student complete a project. He has become the first totally blind person ever to take mechanical art.

With the help of his instructor, Fred Knob, and his, Al Black, Wendell has solved most of the problems facing him. This effort is designed originaling student teaching an instrument.

The COGS wheels, like most of Wendell's instruments, grew out of his thinking and an attempt to improve the average student's performance in the classroom. He used some parts in the project, but he used the machine for his own project.

While he has not solved this problem in his mind, Wendell says he is using the machine for his own project. He used the machine for his own project because he wants to be a mechanical engineer.

TUTOR BARTON CALLS

Wendell will use an almost identical formula to improve his performance in the classroom. This will be his first step in improving his performance. He will use the formula to improve his performance.

AN ERA ENDS this week when Claire "Art" Martin steps down as athletic director after 24 years in the director's chair. "Art" Martin's name is synonymous with athletic success in every sport at SIU, and his record of winning and consistency in coaching and administration has been nothing short of remarkable. Under Martin, SIU has been named the overall best athletic program in the nation's history.

In fact, Martin is the second longest-serving athletic director in the nation. Only Notre Dame's Ara Parseghian has coached longer in the same capacity.

Martin's legacy at SIU is one of excellence and dedication. He has led the Salukis to numerous conference championships and bowl games, and has been a vocal advocate for student-athlete welfare.

In December, Martin retired as athletic director and was replaced by Dr. Robert Miller.
