College Training Has More Value Than Earning Power Alone

Do you go to college so that you may be qualified for a white-collar job, or do you go there so that you may be considered an asset among your friends? University of Texas President Homer F. Rainey makes it clear that college education should be more than job-training. He says, "If a growing number of employers require that their employees graduate from an accredited college, we may be justified in reducing our college enrollments to meet some of the demands of the business community. But in the main we are justified in continuing to educate our students to meet the demands of the business community and to meet the demands of society."

The democratic alternative," President Rainey continues, "is to admit all youth to high school. I applaud those who seek to extend the opportunity of education to all young people. But if we seek to extend the opportunity of education to all young people, I believe we should do so for the purpose of meeting the demands of the business community."

The World Federal Plan

A few years ago, a plan to place the entire world at one table was presented to the United Nations. He believed that such a plan would definitely aid in increasing international understanding and cooperation. He said, "The World Federal Plan is a practical and feasible solution to the problems that face our world today. It is a plan that can be implemented in a relatively short time and at a relatively small cost."

The Value of Higher Education

The value of higher education is not measured by the amount of money one earns, but by the opportunities it opens up to one. College education is more than just getting a job. It is an investment in one's future. It is a way to become a better person, to think critically, and to contribute to society.

Toward Saturday Classes

Some time ago, the faculty and administration of the college decided to offer some classes on Saturdays. These classes are open to anyone who would like to attend. The purpose of these classes is to provide an opportunity for people to continue their education even if they are unable to attend classes during the week.

PROOF FUTURE MASTICATION
BY FRANCIS MACDONALD

The proof of future mastigation is something that can only be determined through careful observation and analysis. It is a process that involves several stages, and it is only through these stages that one can truly understand the nature of future mastigation.

First, there is the preparation stage, which involves gathering all the necessary materials and setting up the equipment. This stage is important, as it provides the foundation for the rest of the process.

Next, there is the execution stage, where the actual mastigation takes place. This is the stage where the true artistry and skill come into play, as the individual mastigates the future.

Finally, there is the evaluation stage, where the result of the mastigation is assessed and the process is refined for future use.

In short, the proof of future mastigation is an intricate process that requires careful attention to detail and a strong commitment from all involved.
