Institute for Reading Opens on Monday

Five-day Conference Includes Lectures by Daniel and Lovell

Initiated by the Southern Illinois University and the Illinois State Teachers Association, a growing demand of a widespread interest in reading has brought about the first annual Reading Laboratory for Teachers, which opened June 22 and continues through June 26.

Featuring during the five-day course are two hundred and fifty teachers from all parts of the state. This problem-solving laboratory is of great value in the study of all phases of reading and is designed for the training and development of teachers who have their own reading laboratories.

Dr. W. H. Arnett, the University's professor of reading, arranged the program for the laboratory, which follows the same general lines as that of the previous year. The sessions will cover various aspects of reading, including the reading of children, the reading of adults, and the reading of books.

The topics for the laboratory are:

1. The reading of children
2. The reading of adults
3. The reading of books

The sessions will be held daily from 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon. Attendance is free and all are invited.

The presidency of the President of the United States has been a matter of political controversy. The current president, who is the head of state and government, is elected by the electoral college, which consists of representatives from each state. There are 538 electoral votes distributed among the states, with each state's number of votes equaling the total number of representatives and senators it has in Congress. The candidate who receives a majority of electoral votes is declared the winner. If no candidate receives a majority, the House of Representatives selects the president from the two candidates who received the most electoral votes.

The vice president of the United States is elected together with the president on the same ticket. The vice president serves as the president of the Senate and as a member of the cabinet. They also assume the presidency if the president dies, resigns, or is removed from office.

The relationship between the president and the vice president is important, as they are often in close proximity and may need to collaborate on important decisions. The president and vice president are typically members of the same political party, and they are chosen to work together and represent the interests of the party in the White House.

The president and vice president are also responsible for ensuring the proper functioning of the government. They oversee the executive branch, which includes the departments that carry out federal laws and policies. The president and vice president are also responsible for ensuring that the government is transparent and accountable to the people.
