Bigger Than Homecoming

FRED SEMENTS

Have you ever noticed how much more you can do when you're home than when you're away? A fellow-teen man may smoke everything from cigarettes to alligator toadstools, and still get the public's woes off his back. He can walk down the street with a cigar clenched in his mouth while he still looks like a conservative. He might even go to see a movie on the campus, and be asked if he's a student. You never know what they might think of him.

But there is one thing that definitely changes when you're away from home. It's your eating habits. On the campus, you might find yourself eating at a cafeteria, where the food is terrible, and the only thing that makes it bearable is the company. But when you're home, you can have your own food, and enjoy it with your family. You might even find yourself cooking your own meals, which can be a fun and rewarding experience. And you might even find yourself eating at a good restaurant, which can be a treat.

A week ago, I wrote a column titled, "If I Were a Student," in which I described what it's like to be a student on campus. I mentioned how much more fun it is to be a student, and how much more freedom you have. But I also mentioned how much more responsibility you have, and how much more difficult it is to manage.

I think that's why I'm excited to be home. I can have my own food, and enjoy it with my family. I can have my own freedom, and enjoy it with my family. And I can have my own responsibility, and enjoy it with my family. It's a great feeling to be home.

In looking around the campus, we have discovered one place where a great opportunity could be made which would help Southern Illinois students to concentrate on their studies. Why not institute the stipend for the student-athletes in the University of Southern Illinois? Praise and Energy of Students

In the development of the nation's educational system, it is essential to provide facilities that will encourage and support student success. The housing office plays a vital role in fulfilling this goal.

The office provides guidance in the selection of housing options, assists in the search for available space, and offers ongoing support and resources for students who may need assistance. They work closely with the resident hall directors to ensure a positive living environment.

By offering a wide range of services, the housing office empowers students to make informed decisions about their living arrangements. This is critical because living arrangements can significantly impact academic performance and overall well-being.

Therefore, the housing office continues to be an essential component of the academic community. They are dedicated to creating a supportive and inclusive environment that fosters student success and personal growth.

Thank you for your commitment to the students of this institution.
