Wheeler Library is attempting to serve our school so that the greatest good to the greatest number may result. But it is impossible for the librarians alone to obtain this result without the best team work, the most efficient co-operation, of the entire student body.

Personal advantage must frequently be subordinated to the welfare of the group. This is none the less true in the library than in any other phase of your school life. You may greatly enjoy a conversation with someone in the library, you may be greatly helped by discussing a lesson with someone, but your advantage is the disadvantage of every one near you.

The same in true of special assignments in the library. If a class is referred to a certain book, every member of that class has a right to find that book in the library during library hours. For convenience, such books are placed on special reserve shelves. Of course, when the library is closed, there is no reason for keeping the books shut up, if someone needs them, so reserve books may be taken out at three-thirty to be returned the next morning at eight-fifteen. Books not on reserve may be taken out at any time during the day and kept for two weeks. If the two weeks is not sufficient, the charge may be renewed.

If a student fails to return a reserve book promptly, at eight-fifteen the morning after it is charged, the other members of the class are inconvenienced. If the offense is repeated, the student forfeits the privilege of taking reserve books from the library. Because the supply of books is limited and the classes are large no one student is allowed to take more than one book from any one reserve.

You must co-operate with your fellow student. It is equally important that you cooperate with the librarian in keeping the machinery of the library in smooth running order. Return your newspaper or magazine to the place you found it in its appointed place in the racks. Return the book that is not charged to you to the truck, never to the stacks, you may make a mistake. Never leave a dictionary or encyclopaedia open on the tables. Such carelessness may result in a torn page. Your thoughtfulness in these small matters saves time for the librarian that she can well employ in making the library of still greater use to you.

A book should never be taken from the library unless its card has been signed in the presence of the librarian. Most books carry their cards in a pocket inside the back cover. If you find one there, the librarian will write out a temporary charge. This card should be left in the library when the book is returned, having on it the signature of the person who took the book. If anyone takes a book without leaving the card with his name on it, it is because he is either careless or dishonest. In either case it is poor team work. Good sports always play fair. Let’s be good sports in the library.

Miss Creal, in sewing class, asked: “Where does wool come from?”

Ethel Keith answered: “From sheep, pigs and cows.”

James H. Heron of New York City, an author and lecturer of national reputation, spoke in Carbondale under the auspices of the Rotary Club April 6th. On Thursday morning in company with several local Rotarians he visited chapel and gave an inspiring address to the student body. In his brief address he gave two or three of his own poems, one of which follows:

WHEN
When in the silence of the night,
When darkness hags the world so tight,
When all is hushed and quiet and sleep
Then haunting memories round me creep;
And find the man who never knew;
When I can meet him face to face;
And there commune with ME spaced
When I can take myself in hand
And measure up just where I stand;
When I can gaze into my heart
And see my worth upon life’s chart;
When I can look back, o’er the road
And count the times I’ve shrirked my load
And estimate the hours I’ve spent
On things that were not permanent;
When I can realize the source
Of spending wastefully my time;
When I can call things by the name
I ought to, and accept the blame;
When I can place where it belongs
The reason for my countless wrongs;
When I can pile in one great heap
My faults, the harvest I shall reap;
Then knowing what I am I can say
From this time onward, from today,
I’ll work and serve and will to win
To mould a better man within;
So when I turn the searchlight on
The faults I had will all be gone.
And there shall stand revealed to me,
The man, God meant that I should be.

JAMES H. HERON.

The following is the foot ball schedule as arranged by Coach McAndrew for the coming season:

October 11—Normal vs. Shurtleff, Home.
October 21—Normal vs. McKendree, Away.
October 28—Normal vs. Cape Girardeau, Away.
December 4—Normal vs. McKendree, Home.
December 11—Normal vs. Cape Girardeau, Home.
December 18—Normal vs. Charleston, Home.

The schedule provides for four games at home and two away. It will be noted that Cape Girardeau is to play here on Armistice day, which falls on Friday this year.

Our team is a promising one, indeed, and we feel certain that the big husky fellows shall make an excellent record.

UNIVERSITY HIGH DEFEATS HERRIN

In a fast and well played game, University high school defeated Herrin high school at Normal University Union on Wednesday. The visiting team played with the services of their star football guard, I'cmson, but Pete Smith who took his place was a good fast performer. The game started fast and four minutes were played before Lollar sank a basket for two points. Scots came right back and tied the matter up by scoring a nice one from near the middle floor. The affair was tied at four all when the two teams counted again. Rude then made it six for the home folks. And this time Clem knotted the count. Rade then made another one and the remainder of the game the U. High boys were never headed. Though during this half the lads with the big H kept close. The first twenty minutes of play ended 16-16 in Carbondale's favor.

Beginning the last half the locals began to hit the old loop and soon had a comfortable lead. Rude's eye was particularly good and he was hitting them from everywhere. Lollar had an excellent evening, too. And even Allen added a couple of nice ones from a middle distance. The boys who played for Carbondale are all of high school standing though some of them were members of the Normal team.

TENNIS COURTS TO BE ASSIGNED WEDNESDAY

All students who wish to play tennis will meet in the gymnasium between 12:45 and 1:15 Wednesday to sign up for courts. There are four courts and there will be twenty-five, fifty minutes beginning at 8:15 in the morning and continuing from there on with the class periods. People who wish to play together should arrange their fourths and then it is only necessary for one of the four to come to the meeting. There are four possible playing periods. Forty-eight numbers will be placed in a hat and the individual drawing number one will be given first choice of court and hours. Unavoidable conflicts if any will be adjusted.

Each person who plays must pay a fee of fifty cents. This will be a prerequisite to obtaining a number. All will observe the following rules: Oak may play on any court such times as that court is not assigned to anyone else. Positively no one allowed on the courts without tennis shoes. Violation of this latter rule will forfeit all rights to play tennis at all.

The Track Meet of the Illinois Intercollegiate Athletic Association will be held at James Millikin University on May 27 and 28. At the same time the Conference golf and tennis tournaments will be run off. There will be an open non-division tennis tournament for women.

THE SITUATION OF PUBLIC EDUCATION IN ILLINOIS

The safety and very life of the state depend on an intelligent body of voters and upon the ability and good citizenship of the good citizen. Public schools cannot function without funds. While costs have increased at least one and a half of the years, school funds have increased at least thirty-three per cent. Schools are now plunging into debt for running expenses alone at the rate of some $12,000,000 per year. And education is not being carried on effectively. Three-fourths of the schools of the state are using underpaid teachers, 16,000 children are being taught in basements, 100,000 children are being taught in rooms not suited for school purposes, and over 15,000 children are being taught in rooms actually condemned as unfit for use.

This condition is not improving. It is not even standing still. It is rapidly becoming worse. An increase in the state distributive fund sufficient to prevent the schools from going further into debt is the least anyone dares to ask. This means an increase from the present $20,000,000 to $30,000,000, a difference of $10,000,000, is even less than the amount by which the schools are running behind in spite of all moneys. All public educational bodies in the state are united in their demand for a $20,000,000 distributive fund for the schools. Illinois from $4,950,000 to $9,900,000. To save its schools Illinois can and must increase its state fund from $5,000,000 to $20,000,000.

PRACTICAL JOKES

AT THE S. I. N. U.

Located thirty feet northwest of the Main Building is the greatest example of a practical joke at the school. Made of the whitest marble it is as inviting as an oasis in a desert; but alas! Like many an oasis it is only a mirage, a snare and a delusion. I refer to the fountain which has never run, in the memory of the oldest student.

It is truly pitiful to see new students filled with confidence in everything connected with this great institution, and having a desire to drink at this beautiful fountain, approach and struggle with the lever for five minutes only to turn away disappointed. More fond desirers have been rudely dashed to naught here than anywhere else in the school.

But the disappointments of the freshman do not end when the fountain has played its joke. When he goes to the Socrates Society he will be given the important position of stagehand and have to manipulate the curtain. There is a small pulley which is supposed to slide the curtain. This pulley is a nice piece of metal, it looks mechanical, but it won't slide the curtain.

If the young classman is optimistic he will have high hopes of seeing a curtain really slide as soon as he joins Soot and Fret and takes part in a play given in the Auditorium. But the curtain slides no better there than in the hall dedicated to Socrates.

Fresmen are not the only victims of practical jokes. The Juniors and Seniors of the bookkeeping class are hopeful of long days of rest when Mr. Bryant says “Now we will do all the work during the two hours of recitation, there will be no outside work.” When he said this a look of joy stole over Mabel Hall’s face and Whitney Wilson looked happy. Yet, before the week was ended Mabel was struggling lamps into Anthony Hall in order to be able to finish her work and Whitney was declaring that her disposition would not be changed if she had to stay up until midnight in order to get a trial balance.

Mr. Warren plays a joke on the trusting members of his Geometry class when he tells them how easy Gnomelife is and how any student of average intelligence can get the assignment in forty-five minutes. Earl Smith declares that it is amazing how many students below the level of average intelligence get into Geometry classes.

The student who sharpens his pencil.

The student who can’t get a magazine to suit her.

The student who knocks your hat on the floor.

The student who starts uptight during school hour.

The student who jumps up every time the phone rings.

The student who takes your chair while you are looking in the dictionary.

The student who opens the window when it’s zero, and the wind blows all of your papers on the floor.

The girl who always comes in for a friendly chat when you have an exam next hour.

A PSALM OF LATIN.

Tell us not, ohignon classes,
Latin is our only theme.

For the student works who passes,
Yet their grades aren’t what they dream.

Latin is real, Latin’s earnest,
And the credit is not our aim.

‘Weak thou art to One return!’
Is oft spoken to the lame.

Not the work nor even the credit,
Is our only pleasure here.

But to use that Latin later,
In the future far or near.

Terms are long and lessons puzzling,
With their awful conjugations,
And those tricky old declensions,
And with Rules our brains are busting.

In this school’s broad field of knowledge,
In this mighty field of language,
Be not like a lazy student.

But be diligent and prudent.

Trust no cramming, however sappy,
Learn your lesson day by day.

Work—Work for your chance doth dwindle.

Learn your Latin while you may.

Lives of graduates still remind us,
We can make our record true.

And departing leave behind us Honors we shall never rue.

NOW THEN

Now then, the frog pond and mosquito hatchery, generally known as Lake Hideaway, seems to be a general nuisance, and I hope that you will put an advertisement in the paper, so Dr. Caldwell will condemn same and cause some good man to come and haul all the green water away and leave nothing but a dry hole, so it won’t be injurious to our health. Don’t you know?

Yours,
Zoath Skaggs.

Now then, it would make things much lighter, if every girl in Anthony Hall should provide herself with a lantern. And, too, when it’s cloudy, care should be exercised to see that every one is in the hall, even though it is seven-thirty.

Yours by force,
Anthony Hall Visitors.

Now then, the art editors of the Obelisk staff, placed the picture of a large hog right in the midst of a group of Normal Juniors, to keep us from getting homesick. I can’t see why the Art editors should commit such a “hoggish” art during the spring term. This is no live stock show even though we do look it.

Yours sincerely,
MARY AND RUTH.

Now then, the winter term closed just before Easter and I have conferred the following degrees on:

Earl Taylor, F. B. M. (Papa’s baby boy.)
Gay Hogg, M. K. (Master Key.)
Emma Scott, F. T. (Fortune Teller.)
Earl Smith, U. F. A. (Unasked for Advice.)

Lodge Grant, L. B. (Long Boy.)
Florence Huffman, H. G. (Happy Girl.)
Mary Wiggins, M. H. (Man Hater.)
Bad Doelin, V. P. (Very Fast.)
Llew Keith, M. H. (Man Hater.)

If there are any more degrees to be awarded, I shall notify you in due time. Get me?

Sincerely yours,
Lodge Grant.

BOYS!

Records that perhaps another,
Trying hard to do this work,
A disheartened failing scholar,
Beating—then shall never shrink.

Let us then be up and doing.
With a mind for every task.
Still achieving, still pursuing.
Learn our lessons to the last.

A LIBRARY FOR EVERY SCHOOL.

"In the past we have thought relatively too much about teaching people how to read and not enough about getting them to read after they learn how.

"To develop the 'reading habit' in each pupil should be one of the chief aims of every teacher. Train any child so he likes to read, so he is a real book-worm, and he will educate himself if he never goes to school another day. Moreover, if a school has a good library it should aid greatly in educating the older people whose school days are over, but whose learning days should never be over. The saying of Thomas Carlyle, the true university of these days is a collection of books cannot be too often repeated." Illinois Pupils' Reading Circle.

HOW TO FIND TIME TO LEARN.

Every student should have time for learning and yet not sacrifice any of his really important school activities.

Most of the students in this and other schools can be divided into two groups: a very large group whose members loaf too much and at the expense of good school work; and a comparatively small group whose members loaf not at all or at least not enough.

In this latter group are found mainly the students who are working their way through school. They rush from their classes to their work; they rush through their meals; they rush through the preparation of their lessons; they sleep less than they should and necessarily have to forego most of the social, religious, literary, athletic, musical and other classes of student activities.

These students are generally self-reliant, independent lot who are learning in a hard school some lessons that spell sure success for them in later life, and who command our admiration as well as our sympathy.

It is hoped that even these industrious students may find herein some suggestions that will help them to use their time more advantageously (impossible as it may sound) and to find time for things other than just work and lessons.

Every student should try to get all the worth while things possible out of school.

First of all, he should do good school work. He should take advantage of the fine literary organizations with their cultural and social opportunities. He should help out with the class organizations, the Obelisk and the Egyptian. He ought to have time for amusement, for social activities. He should realize that the making of friends is one of the biggest things in his school experience and finally he should have time for plain and fancy loafing, for rest and relaxation from the strenuous activities of school life.

The writer of this article believes that the secret of finding time for these multifarious activities lies in planning and in a schedule of work and play.

Most students do not know how to study effectively. They waste fully half the time they spend at the preparation of lessons. There is a little book of forty-four pages in the library with which every student in school should be familiar. This book is "How to Study Effectively," by Dr. G. M. Whipple, one of our foremost psychologists.

Observance of the suggestions in this thin little volume will enable every student to do better studying and to approach a maximum of results with a minimum of effort.

Then a schedule of activities should be made and adhered to pretty rigidly. At some of the boarding houses, the students have set hours for study and heavy is the punishment visited upon the loafer who is not only unwilling to work but who prevents others from observing study hours.

Each student should desire all around development but if he cannot find time for all the school activities, he certainly should not sacrifice those most important.

With such planning and such schedules, and with some approach to scientific studying, every student will get what he should get out of school life, and the whole of his school days will be to him "a thing of beauty and joy forever," and not the uneasy remembrance of neglected opportunities.

A TEACHER'S HABITS.

We think that he's a good teacher, though he doesn't teach by rote.

He makes us think he'd make a preacher.

As he reaches into his coat, he gets his hands all dusty.

As on the board he makes a note, but his hands are never rusty.

Perhaps he reaches into his coat.

As he reaches into his coat, we can see a look of regret.

And his hand, it almost seems to float.

As he draws out the same white kerchief.

THE ADVENTURES OF ANN

Ann Miller was a mischievous little girl with dancing blue eyes, light hair and a good complexion. She had an elder sister who was very dignified and just the opposite to Ann. Mary and her father had sent Ann away to school and they were spending their summer at a sea shore.

The school to which Ann was sent was a school just for girls and she was very severe madam was at the head of the school. Of course this school had a "tattle tale," who always told on the pupils. She was very old fashioned and stupid and was always near the teacher. Everyone disliked her.

One morning when the girls assembled in the dining room for breakfast, Ann had failed to make her appearance. Matilda, of course, noticed her absence and told the teacher. After they were seated, Madam began to offer up the prayer and was interrupted by Ann bounding into the room. Ann sat down in disgrace after making a grimace at Matilda. She sat there for a minute but she couldn't stand it any longer so she took her spoon and, taking a large plum from her dessert, put the plum in the spoon and she chucked it at Matilda. Instead of hitting her, it struck Madam in the face, just as she was ending her prayer by saying, "Let us all be thankful for that which we are about to receive."

Matilda with a horrified face, pointed to Ann and she was sent to her room. While Ann was eating at her window, she looked at the great stone wall which separated her school from the boys' academy. She heard the shouts of the boys playing football. How she longed to be among them like all the others! She saw her handkerchief, a bright idea came to her, so she scrambled down the wall on the boys' side, which was against Madam's rules, and slipped into the boys' gymnasium. She found a suit which fit her and she put it on and pulled her cap over her eyes and slipped out and ran into the gymnasium. Suddenly she fell and did not get up. The boys ran to her and when her cap fell off they recognized her. She was not hurt but quickly got up, gave the captain arowdy look and walked to the wall and climbed over.

Madam was holding class. She happened to look out of the window and saw a pair of legs in striped socks disappear up the post. She went to Ann's room and found her trying to put on a jersey sweater over her head. Ann's appearance was very humorous, her hair was hanging down over her eyes; her face was very dirty and altogether she shocked Madam so badly that Ann was sent to her father in disgrace.

Ann was glad to get away from school, she had a fine time at the sea shore. She rode bicycles, danced, went swimming and enjoyed herself immensely. She renewed her acquaintance with the captain who had just got out of school. But her father objected to her going with Jack. Ann was entirely too young to he argued, so these young people took the matter into their own hands and got married. When her father heard of her disappearance he called the police, and started after her in his car. After he had gone three miles, his engine got hot and he stopped at a house which was just built for water. His surprise was great when the door opened and his daughter led him into the kitchen where she was baking biscuits. This was her first meal, and Jack was helping her. While the naughty couple were trying to reconcile the father, the biscuits burned. Never-the-less, after her father had gone they sat down to eat. Ann started to pour his coffee after they had eaten a while, and when she took up his cup she found three biscuits hidden under his cup. She promptly made him eat them.

THE FOURTH HOUR CLASS.

Now in that fourth hour class Ann's stomach always aches. When I smell those delicious cakes which mother always bakes, and also come the scent of beans, and I know just what it means. To sit before a steaming table and eat till I'm no longer able.

There I sit in solemn bliss, Waiting for the signal to dismiss; Watching the clock hands steal around, Dazing in the monotonous buzzing sound. To sit and watch those pneumatic clocks. For I'm far away from school. As the bare and the tortoise in that memorable race; And then as if sensing a similar defect.

Forges suddenly ahead, on its circular beat. My attentions divided twist clock and trees. As they sway majestically in the breeze. I watch the squirrels in the branches frisk.

My mind is blank where the lessons are concerned. I don't much care if they're never learned; I long for freedom from every care, Not some historical plot laid bare. The balmy atmosphere of spring

The inevitable idle's fever doth bring. So I'm sure you readily see Why the fourth hour class is so dear for me.

Othel Eaton.

TELLS DOMESTIC SCIENCE CLUB OF "VITAMINE"

Taking up one of the relatively unexplored fields of physiological science as well as domestic science, Dr. Dela Caldwell, in her talk before the Domestic Science and Home Culture Club discussed "Elements of Food," and particularly "Vitamine." This is a class of necessary elements of food and one which is new and unknown for the most part. It is necessary for growth, health and well-being, comparable to the live germ of a plant, an intangible class of elements. Dr. Caldwell's talk was highly instructive and interesting.

The clubs met at the home of Mrs. John Y. Stotler yesterday afternoon. About sixty were present and the Domestic Science Club entertained the Home Cultural Club, each member of the former bringing a guest. Mrs. Ralph Thompson gave a piano solo.

Dr. Caldwell was presented a beautiful corsage of Richmond roses, following her talk.—Carbondale Free Press.

THE ROBIN

The robin has a real black head and slate colored wings. Its breast is a reddish orange and it has yellow feet and back. It also has a streaked throat.

It usually builds its nest near some house or in a nook about some building. She makes it out of grasses, paper or horse hair, but she makes it mainly of mud. To make it smooth she tills up her feathers and turns round and round inside the nest. She does not make it very high from the ground. Robins do not always build their nests alike. Some of them take pretty flowers and weave them in and out leaving the tops of the flowers on the outside.

The robin eats earth worms, cut worms, grubs and insects. He gets his food either from plants or under the surface of the earth.

A REVELATION.

I've found the biggest liar
That's on this moving sphere;
She's told ten thousand lies a day
And, trillions in a year.

I'd asked her for the truth
And believed she was sincere;
She'd thereby convinced me
I'd never had a peer.

My beauty knew no equal
My smile was unsurpassed,
She vowed I'd be forever charming,
And youth would always last.

The year book called for pictures,
I had one made—as alas!
Now the best liar and fraud and cheat
Is my own looking glass.

I look into my mirror now
But I know not what I see,
I shuffle or two dozen prints
And moan aloud, "O, Lord, that's me."

My heart grows weak and weary
My head whirls round in space;
It's grief to view those pictures,
It's hard to own that face.

That hidous wart upon my nose
I didn't know that took;
And heaven forbid that I ever smile
If that's the way I look!

These proofs cry out the awful truth,
"I'm you! I'm you! You can't deny."
Be brave, dear soul, and bear your eyes
Till you're relieved on high.

Handsome Mr. Max

I think I'll write a story
A story of worthy facts,
And 'twill be a story of our handsome Mr. Max.

Oft we speak his honor
And loud we sing his praise,
Yet no one else has mentioned
The mustache he doth raise.

It may grow up some day,
Have patience, Mac, have patience,
At least we say, "We hope so."
As once was said by Lenz.

It's microscopic yet,
And sweet unaided eyes,
But 'tis comforting to think
Time may increase its size.

How dignified he'll look
When once he grows the eyebrow,
But he'll be older then,
Much more than he is now.

When once it's stiff and bristly
We wouldn't forg our life,
Altho we think he's grand,
We wouldn't be his wife.

But go on and raise it, Max,
And please don't think us rash
For trying to be funny
About your little mustache.

—Seged.

A DAY WITH NATURE

Did you ever spend a day with nature? A day under the blue sky with no thoughts of work. A day from the toil of the farm and factory, and away from the battle of the city. If you have not let us go for a ramble in the woods on this fine June morning. The air is fresh and sweet and the sky is of purest blue. One can even smell the fresh odor of the grass and leaves. The birds sing merrily as they go about their work. Their work is a pleasure while our work is a task. See those crows sailing slowly along, far above the tree tops? Hear the ripple of the water in yonder brook? Wait! Don't hurry for we are going to enjoy nature and one can not do so if he hurries. See the little minnows floating slowly along. They do not hurry, until we bother them.

This old road that we are following was once a lumber road. If it is not, it was. If the giant trees that have been hauled out it would we not have a history? Even now there remains some old, rotten, moss-covered stumps.

That brook once flowed where we are walking. One can see the effect of its action on that giant houlder. How many ages did it take to wash away the soil and make this valley? It is small, but it is mighty. Slowly but surely it washed away the soil and made the cliff you see over by that bend. There it has erected a maple and made a dam across its bed but what does it care. It goes around it.

Shall we rest by these flowers? See how happily the bees buzz around them. Look, see that humming bird, Ah! there it goes. It seems to be a flower for it has such pretty colors.

Farther there is a bright colored butterfly. Look on the north side of that bank and you will find the delicate maiden hair fern, which is more beautiful than any floral fern, try to transplant it into a house and it will die for it loves the shady woods.

As it is just noon we will eat our lunch by this spring. The outdoor air certainly gives one an appetite. One does not need a fine dinner for a sandwich which would please any king after a day's tramp.

The shadows are lengthening so we must be going on. Did you ever see more wild roses than there are on that hill? That willow thicket is the "Great Springs" from which the branch is fed. Did you ever hear the story about these large beds of watercress? One year when there was a very cold winter the people of an Indian village which was a little farther up the branch, thought that there would be no more summers. The maiden of the spring, Miss Water, heard of this and caused the watercress to grow here to remind the people that spring would come again. So ever after in winter the green watercress lies hidden under the ice. To tell us that spring will come again. The sun is sinking so we must return as soon as we see the old village. The old oak tree by that stone was their council tree and the stone their chief's throne, is the story told by old settlers.
