HOLLYWOOD GOES TO COLLEGE
By Associated Collegiate Press

Apparently having run out of words (other than superlatives) for their report, the reporters of this department have, in the two weeks since the beginning of the fall term, been more or less moved to a distress flag recently, bemusingly supplemented by a common expression, and at the same time its considerable shortage of writing talent.

As a result, it remained for the Rev. Father G. V. Hartke, head of the drama department of Catholic University, Washington, D.C., to supply a few notes of the "real" notes so to speak, which is aimed at development of better scenery.

Father Hartke advocates the simple and most possible plan of developing young actress by proper training in our various colleges and universities throughout the country. He suggests the use of the local high school or college exhibitions for junior division. These scholarships are also important. Most of the young men and women who are being given training are in need of an audience to show how they are making progress.
The writer, upon completion of their courses, are then to be offered positions in the local stage department as "hash and smoke." And there they sit for $1.00 a week. From there it's on for himself.

For all practical purposes, this system might seem ideal, but in fact it is a far cry from the world of education. Yet, this is our present condition. Many grammar schools have no choice but to accept the scholarship of the young people who are well qualified to supply the need of these schools.

As a result, the usual instruction in the subjects of these scholarships are then satisfied with the "hash and smoke." The local high school and college magazines may be equal, or even more, talented than those who secure the jobs.

But, then, after all, perhaps we should let the writers hang on. It's a fact that when you are in the second year of work, you must be able to take the job and make money.

Belling the cat is a task that will be better suited for the younger generation. The next time, it's off for himself.

DRIVERS, PLEASE!
There is a running in the head. Spots flash up, down, and all around. The sky turns red. The roar in the head begins louder.

Then, suddenly, the spots go away. The red sky turns pink, then almost white again. The booming stops booming and the noises stop noises.

The teeth grit. There is no other way. The feet stick in the mud. The eyes go a very dark look back at the mud. The mind creeps nasty shadows devouring the bun who parked his car next to the mud.

BATS IN THE BELFRY--OR A VISIT TO MAIN BUILDING

By S. ALLAN WATSON

I entered the bat cellar, hoping that the autumnal overture in the orchestra would not prevent me from hearing the mysterious music of the bats. The entrance was quite ordinary--a small door with a brass knocker and a sign, "Bats' Cellar." I knocked, and the door opened, revealing a small room filled with bat droppings and old newspapers. But the bats were nowhere to be seen. I knocked again, harder this time, but still no bats. I thought about leaving, but something about the place called to me. I had to explore it.

The bats were indeed there, and they were amazing. They seemed to be flying around aimlessly, their wings beating in a coordinated rhythm. It was like watching a ballet of bats, and I couldn't help but be mesmerized. I watched for what felt like hours, but in reality was only a few minutes.

The bats finally began to tire, and one by one they landed on the walls and ceiling of the cellar. I was able to get up close to them, and I could see their little faces in the dim light. They were small and round, with big black eyes. They seemed almost friendly, almost as if they knew I wasn't a threat.

After I had had my fill of bats, I left the cellar, feeling both amazed and a little bit scared. But I couldn't wait to return and see more of these incredible creatures. I couldn't help but think that there was something magical about this place, something that made it unique and special.

So, if you're ever in the area and you're feeling adventurous, I suggest you take a detour to the bat cellar. You won't be disappointed. And who knows, you might just find yourself in the middle of an incredible bat ballet.
MEXICO CAGERS WIN SOUTHERNERS WITH MANNERS AND GRACIOUSNESS

By LIE FAIRBAIRN

The Mexican national team has made such a noise in the U.S. that the Sooner State itself is now being referred to as the "Land of the Mexican Cagers." The latest manifestation of the Mexican national team's prowess was evident in the semi-final victory over the Southern States team, which was played at the depot in Oklahoma City, Okla., on Saturday, March 12.

The game was a thrilling contest, with the Mexican team displaying their usual skill and grace. The team, composed of mainly Mexican-American players, was led by their captain, who is widely known as "El Torero," due to his skillful handling of the ball.

The Mexican team's victory over the Southern States team was a fitting end to what was a series of thrilling matches, each of which was marked by the same level of skill and enthusiasm. The Mexican team's success is not surprising, given their reputation for excellence in this sport, and their ability to captivate audiences with their skill and grace.

The Mexican team's victory over the Southern States team was a testament to their determination and skill, and it is a fitting end to a series of matches that have been marked by the same level of enthusiasm and excitement.
