Ben Watkins Discovers Formula For Glazing Pottery With Glass

A new use for old glass bottles and chipped glasses has recently been discovered by Ben Watkins, acting chief of the art department at Southern Illinois University.

By a simple process of grinding and melting, Ben Watkins has found that by mixing ground glass with water, it can be used to coat the surface of pottery, and if properly applied, it will give the desired result.

This new process is similar to that for firing, which was discovered by Watkins, who is also the acting art director at the school.

The method is based on the use of old glass bottles and chipped glasses, which are ground up and mixed with water to form a smooth paste.

The new process has been tested and found to be successful in producing pottery with a smooth, glass-like finish.

Mid-Term Transfer Not Approved For New Program

A new program for the transfer of students from Southern Illinois University to New York University has been approved by the administration.

The program, which was approved by the administration, will allow students to transfer to New York University for the fall term of 1948.

The program will be offered to students who have completed their first year at Southern Illinois University and have a minimum GPA of 3.0.

They will be able to transfer up to 30 credits, and the program will be offered on a first-come, first-served basis.

Library

The library will be open from 9:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. on weekdays and from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. on weekends.

The library will be closed on the following days: Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year's Day.

New Research Department Established at Southern Illinois University

The new research department has been established at Southern Illinois University to focus on the development of new and improved processes in the field of pottery manufacturing.

The department will be headed by Dr. John Smith, a renowned expert in the field of pottery manufacturing.

The department will conduct research on new and improved methods of pottery manufacturing, as well as the development of new materials and equipment.

The department will also work on the development of new and improved processes for the production of pottery, with the goal of reducing costs and improving quality.

The department will be housed in the new research building, which will be completed in the next few months.
THANKS, NOT GRIEVES!

If you've already written one or two term papers or if you're in the midst of doing research reports, you've probably read for what seemed hours at the library. It's not always easy, but if you can get yourself interested in your work, you can get your book and all like humans who've grumbled about it, keeping and doing research reports. "Why don't we work out a system so we can get all our needed information easily?" You may ask, "Why can't the library be more . . . organized?"

In most libraries, books are shelved according to size or subject. The big ones are put in one section and the small ones in another. The mail you now have at the new library is being checked and you are pondering the one you would have if the libraries had been more uniform. Is this not 74,600 volumes, by the way? That's a good idea if you were allowed library service all at once. For example, you have more universality in the- open to graduate students only. The poor undergraduate, I'm sure, is going to have to put his reference books through departments when he wants that information.

As you go stand on first look and then at the main desk, just turn your back on your camping equipment along.
