Success of Sanitation Campaign Is Student Responsibility

The aim of the student health and safety group to achieve the clean-up campaign launched by this paper, which has the support of five prominent organizations—the faculty, the American Legion, the National Student Association, and the Student Council—will come true.

Therefore, we all realize that only the individual students of S. I. U. can make the project as completely successful as it can be. Recently three outstanding members of our Student Council were appointed to the sanitation committee, which will give the campaign in securing the cooperation of the local proprietors of eating places in adhering to the seven-point program which has been outlined. All of us have at different times discussed with other students the various unethical conditions of various eating places patronized by Southern's students.

We have all wished that the proprietors and patrons of these establishments would be a little more careful. However, we as well as the proprietors and employees have been careless and lax in our standards.

At last some of the more progressive groups at Southern have started to take an active interest and support in bringing sanitation in our community up to a good standard. Students' first duty is not to let their egos, ambitions, and other conditions of life hinder the success of the campaign. Therefore, we urge all of us, as members of Southern's student body and as citizens of the community to cooperate and stimulate public opinion to favor this campaign. Student cooperation for the drive to secure more sanitary conditions around S. I. U. cannot be overemphasized.

Students should patronize only those establishments where health and safety policies have been adopted. They should avoid those places that do not meet the new standards and those who are listed on Southern's Honor Roll.

TOUCHING STONES

by STEVE KRUPFALL

We are in a time when music has become a vital part of our daily lives. The power of music to evoke emotions and express feelings is something that transcends language and culture. In "Touching Stones," a new musical work being premiered at S. I. U., the composer explores the theme of connection and the power of music to heal.

The piece is based on the idea of "touch stones," which are stones touched by a person in a moment of crisis or distress. The musician uses this concept to create a piece that is both personal and universal, touching on issues of love, loss, and resilience.

The performance will feature a diverse ensemble of musicians, including a string quartet, a choir, and a soloist. The work will be accompanied by visuals created by local artists, bringing a multidisciplinary approach to the piece.

The concert will take place at 7:30 p.m. on November 22 at the Shively Memorial Auditorium. Tickets are available at the door and online through the S. I. U. Arts Department. For more information, visit the website or contact the box office.

EYES and EARS
by MARY SOBIESKI

In the little town of Easton, Maine, where I live, there is a little boy who has a special talent. He can predict the weather.

When I was a child, my mother used to say, "If it snows tomorrow, be sure to wear your warmest clothes." And it always did.

Now, this little boy can do the same thing. He can look at the clouds and tell you what will happen the next day.

But not just any clouds. These are special clouds that bring snow. And when he looks at them, he knows exactly how much snow will fall.

It's not just a matter of predicting the weather. This little boy has a special connection to the universe. He can feel the energy of the stars and planets as they move through the sky.

And when he looks at the clouds, he sees not just a sky, but a canvas of potential. He can see the patterns that will become the storms of tomorrow.

So listen, little boy, when you look at the sky, know that you are not just seeing the clouds, but the future. And when you predict the weather, remember that you are part of a mystery that spans the universe.

For it is in the stars, in the sky, that we can find the answers to our questions.

Make Study of Giant City Park

Joseph V. Ryan writes in the Official Gazette:

The State news of the Giant City Park, with its 665 acres, is of exceptional interest to the state. The park, located near the Illinois-Illinois line, is 35 miles east of Chicago and 145 miles west of St. Louis.

The park is open to the public daily from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. The park is divided into two sections: the southern section, which contains the museum, and the northern section, which contains the grounds for recreation.

The museum houses a collection of artifacts from the prehistoric period to the present, including Native American artifacts, early European settlement items, and modern-day pieces.

The grounds for recreation include a lake, a picnic area, a bandstand, and a playground.

The park is maintained by the Illinois Department of Natural Resources and is open to the public free of charge.

MODERN ADVERTISING

Makes Life Much Brighter

Can you imagine life without advertising, the colorful, stimulating billboards that catch your eye as you drive down the street? Without the funny, catchy jingles that fill your ears every morning and evening? Without the delicious-looking food and products that are advertised on television and in magazines?

Life without advertising is like a world without color. Imagine a world where everything is black and white, where there is no variety or choice. It's a world where your life is dull and uninteresting.

But life with advertising is different. With advertising, life is colorful and vibrant. It's a world filled with choices and possibilities. It's a world where you can choose what you want to eat, what car you want to drive, and where you want to travel.

So the next time you see a billboard or hear an advertisement, take a moment to appreciate the beauty of life with advertising. It's a gift that we should never take for granted.

OLD AS THE NILE

BY BRAD BROUILLETTE.

The Nile of the Old East Nile is only a legend in the minds of many, but the Nile of the Southern High School is a reality. Students take pride in their school and its traditions. It is a source of great joy to many students that the school has been in existence for so long. The Nile is a symbol of unity and strength among the students. It is a place where they can come together and enjoy each other's company.
